[= (22) Evergetis [7], ed. lines 288–314]: Then we order that a person who does not make confession should be excommunicated from the Lord God until, coming to his senses and thinking of higher things, he confesses all his faulty and harmful habits. Thus it would be necessary also to expel such a person from the monastery and cut him off like a rotten limb, and as a wound that is hard to heal or completely incurable to remove him and cast him away, but the uncertainty of the future and the expectation that perhaps one day he may come to his senses held us back from this purpose. However for him to be liable to the penalty of excommunication is very useful since it is very effective. Indeed, what benefit does he obtain from remaining at the monastery? What benefit comes from not making confession or rather does not harm and ruin follow and a continued practice of evil and everything

whatsoever that brings destruction to the soul? So then, as it is impossible for someone who is sick or has wounds to return to health when he hides these from the doctor, so it is much more difficult for the person who does not make confession ever to gain health of soul. The divine Basil is witness of this when he speaks as follows “If a monk is going to show proper progress and come into a state of life in accordance with the command of the Lord, he must keep no stirring of his soul hidden, but offer to his superior all the secrets of his heart stripped bare.”¹⁰

So then, by acting in this way, my brothers, we will not only be rescued from our own faults but we will be more secure later on; for the author of The Ladder says “Stripes that are exposed will not become worse,” and again, “A soul that thinks about confession is held back by it from sinning as if by a rein.”¹¹ So the revelation of one’s own faults is very useful. In future let us all run eagerly to it. Therefore we prescribe that confession should be held like this, by the superior himself clearly and by as many as seem to him to be suitable people to hear thoughts. [p. 28]

53. (Concerning the first confession)

[= (22) Evergetis [7], ed. lines 314–17]: The first and great confession which we should make when casting off the hair of this world must be offered to the superior alone and not to anyone else so that he can know everyone himself and mix the medicine suitable for each one. But if, on the other hand, the superior should wish to urge some of the most devout priests to receive [confession] of thoughts, let those who cast off the hair of this world disclose their thoughts to them.

54. (Concerning the confession to the superior)

All who belong to the brotherhood are to confess their personal thoughts to the superior, as I have stated, both at the time of their renunciation [of the world] and during their struggle and training after their renunciation, and they are not to have as recipients of their personal thoughts any others who are either solitaries or reside in other monasteries, but they are to lay bare all their own faults only to the superior, from whom they will also receive the remedies that are appropriate and suitable. They [should also confess] to those to whom the superior himself may entrust the matter, as I have indicated. They should not, however, go to any other person for the purpose of confession, nor shall they acclaim him as a spiritual father for themselves [anyone] except their own superior. For I abhor this altogether as a cause of outrage.

[= (22) Evergetis [15], lines 749–59]: But if, on the other hand, there should be someone who is obdurate and disobedient, who follows his own will and does not wish to make confession to his superior but would acknowledge someone else and not this man as his spiritual father and would endeavor to confide his personal thoughts to him, he should be put out far away from our flock. He should be chased out at once, receiving neither mercy nor pity, but as someone who removes himself by his own evil—O eyes of “God who behold all things” (cf. Sir. 15:18)—evil and very dangerous decisions, let him be utterly rejected from the monastery and counted a stranger to our group and community, our way of life and fellowship, as being the cause of dissension and discord and all other kinds of instability, disorder, and serious harm. Let these things be so.

55. (Concerning those who come to be tonsured)

[= (22) Evergetis [37], lines 1123–26]: I must speak also in fuller detail about those who come to the monastery for the purpose of being tonsured. [p. 29] If they are distinguished people or are people known to you for a long time and have a close knowledge of the monastery's way of life and character, they should be tonsured within a period of six months, if perhaps they themselves ask for this and are accepted.

56. (Concerning the change of clothing of the novices and their clothes)

[= (22) Evergetis [37], ed. lines 1127–34]: But if they are common and unknown, after an interval of seven days after their arrival here they should assume the novice's rags and put on the monastic headdress, and they should be appointed to appropriate tasks according to their abilities and observed to see if they carry out these with perseverance and humility. If they persevere in this attitude until the completion of three years, then they should be enrolled among the brothers by being tonsured and should receive the pledge of the divine and angelic habit, that is to say, the cloak. But if they perhaps appear to have grown tired, grumbling and negligent, let them divest themselves of their black clothes and clothe themselves with the clothing of the world and return to the world which they loved. For those who renounce it in accord with God's will become altogether strangers to "worldly passions" (Tit. 2:12) and their own.

57. (Concerning not seeking offerings from those who renounce [the world])

[= (22) Evergetis [37], ed. lines 1137–43]: Then those who have been judged worthy to be accepted should not be put under any compulsion concerning a renunciation and an entrance offering, as if [such gifts] were legal. For one must not traffic in the grace of God or sell it for money, lest anyone causes shame thereby and inflicts a reproach on those among us who have been tonsured without payment, and lest that evil and accursed expression is introduced, that is, mine and yours and greater and smaller, and that the one who has made an offering is thought to be more important than the one who has not. May it not happen, may that not happen among you ever. For the so-called renunciation destroys the blessed submission.

58. (Concerning the voluntary offering)

[= (22) Evergetis [37], ed. lines 1143–56]: But if, however, the one who is to be tonsured himself willingly chooses to offer something to God, it should be accepted in the following way. If the thing that is being offered and dedicated to God is movable, he who is going to be tonsured, when entering into the holy sanctuary bare-headed [p. 30], shall make a deposition of this on top of the holy and sacred altar with his own hands. But if it should happen to be immovable or animate, he shall set forth a document of grant and dedication to God through the intercessions of our supremely holy Mistress, the Mother of God, and having entered into the holy sanctuary, as I have stated, he shall set down this [document] on the awesome and holy and mystical and divine table. For that is freely chosen and not forced, being the action of a pious mind in the category of almsgiving and doing good, and in exchange for God's recompense is to atone for his sins, and moreover that we might speak the truth, is brought as an offering to God and his mother.

For a so-called renunciation and an entrance offering are one thing and the gift another, whether an act of almsgiving or an offering; for the former has within it the repayment of expectation and, like some necessity that has to be bought for the body, is paid in advance for some agreements and exchanges perhaps stated, but the other is offered freely with heavenly hopes and recompenses.

Therefore the person who offers must not suppose that he has any preference over the rest of the brothers because of this, but should be treated in the same way as every one and according to the rule of the monastery then in force.

59. (Concerning those who will attempt to seek the return of the dedication).

[= (22) Evergetis [37], ed. lines 1156–61]: If someone who has made an offering is ever tempted by demons—there are many such examples of fickleness—and desires to leave the monastery and wishes to take his offering and what he had dedicated to God away with him, that should not be given him, whatever it happens to be. For what has once been consecrated to God must not be taken away, and he who takes it away is sacrilegious and everyone knows the sort of punishment that committing sacrilege brings, even if we do not say it.

60. (Concerning the monks who come from another monastery)

[= (32) Mamas [22]]: But so much concerning those who are tonsured in the monastery. One should, however, consider also those who come from a different [monastery] for the purpose of making a beginning in it. Let him, therefore, who has been chosen by the monastery to be admitted as a monk, be ordered to observe its regimen, and after the passage of six months in it, let the present rule be read to him personally. If, indeed, he is obviously pleased, with all [p. 31] [the things] that are written in it, let the priest in the narthex, as I said, say “Blessed [is our God]” as well as the trisagion; and in the church let the monk bow down and present his head uncovered to the superior. The latter, as he makes the sign of the precious cross over it, reverently says the following, “May the grace of the all-Holy Spirit, brother, through the prayers of our fathers, grant you power and strength to complete well and pleasingly to God the beginning which you made for the edification and salvation of your soul.” Thereupon let the superior give him the kiss in the Lord and successively likewise all the brothers. Let him, however, make a prostration to the brothers, saying, “Pray for me, fathers and brothers, that God may grant me perseverance; for, behold, I have made a beginning in this holy monastery,” and, after the brothers have answered, “May God grant you, brother, perseverance in every good work,” he shall be enrolled in the brotherhood. Then, let glory be offered to God and let the dismissal follow, after the customary prayer has been said. For in no other way shall anyone be numbered among the brothers of our monastery unless, along with the confession, this ceremony takes place in exactly the same way.

61. (Concerning the table and food)

[= (22) Evergetis [9], ed. lines 325–37]: It should be the right time now to mention the table and food and the other things that are disposed by nature to maintain the body. For as we are made up of two parts, I mean soul and body, so also are the activities of the monastery. The whole daily divine office expressed in the singing of psalms could reasonably be thought of as the soul of the monastery, whereas the monastery itself and all the things that benefit our bodies could be considered its body. So then, since with God's help we have said enough already about its soul, it is right that we should also speak about matters which concern its body, by prescribing the diet and setting out for you more precisely all the other things that secure a more lasting continuance of the monastery, as it is necessary for the one who wishes the condition of the cenobitic community to improve to be no less concerned about these things. So then, these things also should be said and should of course be imparted to my fathers and brothers.

After the dismissal of the sacred and divine mystery [of the Eucharist], as they are all coming out of the church and sitting together in the narthex, the refectory semantron is sounded, as is customary [p. 32] and the priest who performed the service leading . . . [Gap in text, cf. (22) Evergetis [9], ed. lines 340–48]: [you should make obeisance to the superior and then, beginning to recite audibly the customary psalm, walk to the refectory, that is the superior and all those without exception who have been instructed to sit down at the table during the first sitting. Then entering the refectory and completing the appointed psalm and the short prayer that accompanies it, you should sit down in the order laid down by the superior and gratefully partake of what has been set before you.]

62. (Concerning the brothers who are absent from the thanksgiving)

[Missing chapter; cf. (22) Evergetis [9], ed. lines 348–51]: [Then anyone who was late for the psalm and the thanksgiving should be reported by the refectorian to the superior, and he should enquire the reason for his lateness and grant him pardon if it seems reasonable, but if not, he is to perform as many genuflections as the superior wishes.]

63. (Concerning the reading at the refectory)

[Gap in text; cf. (22) Evergetis [9], ed. lines 352–56]: [Moreover, the traditional reading must take place during the sittings in the customary way, with no one making a noise or causing a disturbance or destroying the benefit which comes from that with worldly conversations and idle chatter. The superior only may speak sparingly if he wishes and perhaps the one asked by him may answer similarly in a few] brief phrases.

[= (22) Evergetis [9], ed. lines 357–63]: But if someone causes a disturbance or is disturbed, is noisy or causes a noise, and ruins the reading by untimely and improper conversation, he is to be silenced by the refectorian. But if, something I hope does not happen, when he silences him the noisy person pays no attention, he is to be removed from the refectory even if he is unwilling and subjected to the penalty of going without his food or made to learn self-control in another way as the superior wishes.

All, then, shall sit down at the table in accordance with the order that has been determined by the superior.

64. (Concerning those who seek seats of honor)

[= (22) Evergetis [9], ed. lines 364–80]: We absolutely refuse even to hear that someone of his own accord seeks a loftier seat or the honor therefrom. For how could this be acceptable, that men who are living according to God’s will should quarrel at all about seating, like those who are keen to show themselves in a worldly way superior to the rest in this, as those who are excited by glory that is vain and hated by God? For “Everyone that is proud in heart is an abomination to the Lord” (Prov. 16:5), says Holy Scripture “and the Lord rejects the proud, but he gives grace to the humble” (Prov. 3:34). So this will not happen among you, it will not. For if you are in your right mind, you would never choose this, to be an abomination to the Lord rather than to receive favor from him and have him near you, as those who are of a contrite heart (Ps. 34:18), or, to speak truly, to be his dwelling and beloved of him. [p. 33] But if any of you is found causing annoyance in this matter, putting forward as an excuse perhaps age or sphere of work, and does not abide by the command of the superior, nor is satisfied with the place allocated to him, I command in the Lord that he be allocated the last place and be taught to leave to the world the habits of the world. But if, something that is in every way detestable and undignified, he still disagrees and objects, persisting after the second and third admonition in being incorrigible, he shall not sit down at all but, standing up, shall perform some service.

65. (Concerning those who ought to be preferentially seated)

[= (32) Mamas [36], ed. lines 23–31]: But those who have been entrusted with these two great offices, [namely,] the steward and the ecclesiarch, shall sit ahead of all of them, and after them the priests according to their rank of seniority, and after the latter, in turn, the deacons, unless, the superior should prefer some who are advanced in years or old age, worthy of respect and honor, to sit ahead of the latter, the deacons, that is. After they are seated, however, there shall not be for the others a preference in respect to seating but thereafter the seating will be assigned suitably to each at the discretion of the superior.

66. (Concerning supper and missing the prayers)

[= (22) Evergetis [9], ed. lines 420–21]: But at the time of supper also, if someone who wishes to have supper arrives after grace, he will incur the same penalty [Gap in text; cf. (22) Evergetis [9], ed. lines 421–23]: [as he who was late at the midday meal, if of course he does not have a reasonable excuse when he is asked. The one, however, who because of abstinence does not come to the supper incurs no blame.]

67. Concerning the regimen of the holy Lent

[Gap in text; cf. (22) Evergetis [10], ed. lines 438–44]: [But that is not the procedure during the holy fast days and especially during the first and greatest fast, on the first day of which, that is Monday of the first week, the liturgy should not be celebrated nor should care be taken with the table or food. However on the other days of the same week attention should be paid to the table, and whoever chooses should partake of food. This will be composed of legumes soaked in water and perhaps some fresh vegetables and fruits, and the drink will be hot water flavored with cumin. That is apart from Friday.]

[= (22) Evergetis [10], ed. lines 445–52]: Again, [on this day] you should eat two dishes of food cooked with sesame oil, and drink wine distributed in the customary measure because of the feast of the great martyr St. Theodore,¹² which the superior must celebrate and give you a refreshment. You should carry out the first week of the great and holy Lent in that way.

68. (Concerning the Saturdays and Sundays of the holy Lent and [the appropriate] food)

[= (22) Evergetis [10], lines 453–55]: On all Saturdays and Sundays of the same holy fast three [p. 34] cooked dishes containing sesame oil should be set out for you and for your drink the customary measure of wine should be distributed. You must eat supper on these [days], as is the custom of the monastery.

69. (Concerning the Wednesday of the Great Canon)

[= (22) Evergetis [10], ed. lines 456–63]: Also on Wednesday and on the Thursday of the great canon [you shall be] without supper, but on Friday a refreshment must be given to the chanters on account of the Akathistos hymn. On Tuesdays and on the other Thursdays of the holy Lent let [the food] be as follows: boiled beans and almaia and fruits and a brewed beverage. These are for those whose bodies are strong, but for those who are weaker let there be cooked food with sesame oil and olive oil and wine given with the customary measure and let these be served in one meal. Mondays and Wednesdays and Fridays, however, you should not partake of anything cooked nor wine but only boiled beans and some small fruits, if there are any, and raw vegetables and hot water flavored with cumin.

70. (Concerning the [feasts] of [St. John] the Forerunner and of the holy Forty Martyrs)

[= (22) Evergetis [10], ed. lines 463–78]: But if the commemoration of the discovery of the precious head of [St. John] the Forerunner or the remembrance of the Forty Saints¹³ happens to fall on one of these days, then the fast should be broken and you should eat three dishes with olive oil and take wine measured out with the customary measure, but not fish.

You should take care to celebrate one of these feasts when it falls on one of the days of the first week, and you should have as refreshment not that of the aforementioned days, but only wine of the customary measure and gruel. But then, on all the other days of this holy Lent you will not be allowed to eat fish at all, unless, perhaps, some refreshment is sent you by someone, then the fast should be broken on this occasion because of this special treat lest we be seen by men to fast (Matt. 6:16), lest we happen also to offend him who gives the refreshment, perchance on the very day of Palm Sunday.

71. (Concerning Palm Sunday and the [feast of the] Annunciation)

[= (22) Evergetis [10], ed. lines 480–92]: When that bright and holy feast, or the salvation-bringing feast of the Annunciation falls, you should celebrate it as splendidly as possible, on each of the two [feasts], partaking of fish provided by the monastery and drinking wine of the customary measure. We will eat fish during this holy feast of the Annunciation, [p. 35] as has been said, if it does not fall during the great holy week. For at that time we will use for food only vegetables and legumes that have been cooked with olive oil on account of the feast, since for three days of that week—that is Monday, Tuesday, and Wednesday—we must eat just as on Wednesdays and Fridays of the rest of the weeks—and be content with legumes, fresh vegetables, fruits that happen to be on hand, and hot water flavored with honey or cumin.

72. (Concerning the [feast of the] Annunciation, if it occurs during Holy Week).

[cf. (22) Evergetis [10], ed. lines 492–501]: If this aforementioned holy feast of the Annunciation falls on those days, whether on Holy Thursday, or Good Friday, or on Holy Saturday itself, we shall not partake of fish but of legumes and cooked vegetables containing olive oil and we shall drink wine with the customary measure, and we shall do whatever is appropriate for the feast.

On Holy Thursday your eating will be as on the days of Lent that are free from fasting in the matter of both dishes and wine; but on Good Friday one must neither cook nor take thought of the table nor eat at all, but it is appropriate that all continue fasting. On Holy Saturday let there be a collation only in the narthex after the dismissal of the divine consecration [of the Eucharist], which must be celebrated around the third or fourth watch of the night.

73. (Concerning the Great Sunday [of Easter])

The entire office of the great and brilliant holy Sunday shall be performed in accordance with the prescription of the [liturgical] typikon.

[= (22) Evergetis [10], ed. lines 503–5]: In this manner the diet for the great and holy period of Lent must be kept, though care should be shown to the sick at the discretion of the superior.

74. (Concerning the Week of Renovation)

During the Week of Renovation¹⁴ one must indispensably eat cheese and eggs and milk every day and must partake of wine.

75. (Concerning the Week of St. Thomas)

Beginning with Monday of [the Week] of the holy apostle Thomas,¹⁵ on Wednesdays [p. 36] and Fridays and Tuesdays, I mean, one must abstain equally from cheese and eggs and milk, but it is appropriate to eat olive oil and to drink wine but not to eat fish. According to the Rule which we have received from Palestine, after the entire last week of Pentecost, that is, during [the week of] the Holy Spirit, as well as during the Week of Renovation, we ought to partake of cheese and milk and wine.

76. (Concerning the fasts of the Holy Apostles and the Nativity of Christ).

[= (22) Evergetis [10], ed. lines 509–19]: I must say also concerning the fast of the Holy Apostles¹⁶ that on all the Mondays and Wednesdays and Fridays we do not sing the psalm “God is the Lord.” (Ps. 117 [118]:27) For this reason, after the completion of the whole office of the day, both of the hours and vespers, just as the church’s typikon expounds, you should be summoned to the refectory at the seventh hour in accordance with the rule laid down above. For on these [days] one must partake neither of any cooked food nor of olive oil nor of wine but of cooked legumes and raw vegetables and perhaps fruits that are available at the time and water.

On Tuesdays and Thursdays, of course, you shall eat two dishes cooked with olive oil and you shall each drink wine with the customary measure. Also the customary supper should be set out for you, a small piece of bread and very few olives or fruits that are in season will be served, and let wine be drunk with the smaller measure. Likewise also on Saturdays and Sundays. On these [days] we shall eat three cooked dishes at dinner.

The fast of the holy Nativity of Christ¹⁷ shall be similar to the fast of the Holy Apostles regarding food and drink.

77. (Concerning the three fast days of the week and their breaking)

So much concerning fasting during the three illustrious and holy fasts. Concerning, however, fasting on every Wednesday and Friday of the other weeks, as prescribed by the divine canons, the fathers in Palestine decided that fasting must consist of total abstinence from wine and olive oil. They also decided that fasting on Monday must be equal to that of [Wednesday and Friday]. Let us also conform to the same thing, following our holy fathers. I ordain, however, that when a feast of the Lord occurs, either the feast of the Twelve Apostles, or of the great teachers or any of the great fathers, on which vigils occur or the Polyeleos is sung, it is right that all fast be broken on whichever of the aforesaid three days of the week a celebration of the [feast] of the aforesaid [saints] should happen to occur. You are also permitted through the entire [p. 37] twelve-day period [of Christmastide] to eat cheese and milk and eggs and to partake of wine every day.

78. (Concerning Artzibourios and the week of Cheesefare)

[= (32) Mamas [19], ed. lines 6–12]: But a specific thing which I almost bypassed, must be committed to writing because it is necessary and it separates us from the loathsome tradition of the Artzibourians.¹⁸ Since in the week before the Meatfare week the Artzibourians received the tradition to eat nothing else except bread and water, we, in order that we may be differentiated from their heresy, unhesitatingly eat both cheese and eggs throughout the entire week, and we likewise observe this, during the entire week of Cheesefare because of another heresy.¹⁹

79. (Concerning the fact that all are to come to the refectory)

[= (32) Mamas [19], ed. lines 12–18]: Both our brethren who take care of the vineyards and the gardens, as well as all the other ministrants, ought without fail to come also to the refectory each day, and in common to enjoy the bounties of God and thank his goodness in order that the name “brotherhood” may not be just a name, but that it may become a reality through deeds.

80. (Concerning the steward and his selection)

[cf. (22) Evergetis [13], ed. lines 605–8]: It is fitting to add a steward to the monastery so that the superior may have him as a helper in all things and a most reliable fellow-combatant for the support of the brothers and the care of the monastery. He must be appointed in the following way. After consulting with the brothers as to who is the one who is superior to the others in conduct, manners, character, intellect and discipline so as to be “faithful and wise” (cf. Luke 12:42), as the sacred gospel says somewhere, surpassing the others, as I said, the superior shall install this [brother].

81. (Concerning the installation of the steward)

[= (22) Evergetis [13], ed. lines 610–23]: His installation shall proceed in the following way. After the dismissal from matins and the customary prayer said by the priest, a trisagion should be said by all [p. 38] and the one chosen and preferred should make three full genuflections in front of and near the holy sanctuary; then he should reverently kiss the holy, divine, and revered icons of our Lord God and Savior Jesus Christ and of the most holy Mistress the Mother of God. After that he should perform the proper obeisance to the superior and then he shall bow his head uncovered, and he [the superior] making over it the sign of the venerable cross should reverently say as follows, “The grace of the all-Holy Spirit, my brother, through the fervent intercessions of our wholly pure Mistress, the Mother of God, and through the prayers of our holy and God-bearing fathers, is installing you steward of our venerable monastery.” Then when he has given him the kiss in the name of the Lord, he sets him in front of the holy screen. Thus let all the brotherhood approach him and let all, without exception, kiss him, and after the kiss glory should be given to God and the dismissal should follow after the usual prayer of the priest. If, however, he who is appointed to the office of steward is also an ordained priest, he would be even more acceptable.²⁰

82. (Concerning the superior and the steward)

Let the superior forego all other necessary duties and go out to visit along with the appointed steward all the dependencies of the monastery so as to investigate them even more precisely and to inspect them and to note them down in writing. The aforesaid steward, in fact, is to supervise all the [monastic] officials and hired laborers and to give to each one the appropriate living allowance.

83. (Concerning the harvest and the brothers sent [to gather the crops])

At the time of harvest and vintage other brothers, too, must be sent to the dependencies so that the steward may have them as his co-workers and assistants and fellow-laborers for the effort and endeavor of gathering the crops, but also as truthful witnesses for the exact [quantity] of the crops that have been collected. The quantity of each kind must be recorded and brought to the superior, and he shall note them down in an accurate written record. At the appropriate time [p. 39] he shall examine the revenues that have been collected and deposited.

84. (Concerning the steward, that he is not to do anything without the knowledge of the superior)

For the steward shall not have the power to do anything without the knowledge as well as the judgment and will of the superior, but he is to follow all his footsteps and wishes, just as Solomon says somewhere, “Do all things with counsel” (Prov. 31:3). But even the sacred gospel itself says,

THIRTEENTH CENTURY

“I have come down from heaven not to do my own will, but the will of my Father who sent me” (John 6:38).

85. (Concerning the superintendents of the dependencies)

For it is not my wish that the superintendents of the dependencies have under their authority the revenues of the estates, but [only] the agricultural tools and all the materials. Their fair living allowance and that of the brothers who till the soil will be given to them by the steward. He shall also deliver to them the monies needed for other justified and reasonable expenses and he shall note these down in writing, and afterwards at the appropriate time he shall give a clear account of them. For it is not my wish that those who serve [the monastery] be examined and investigated for the outlay of any trifling thing except in the presence of the superior. Even the shepherds shall not be investigated by the steward and the man in charge of the flocks alone, but they, too, shall be [examined] just as I have indicated above.

86. (Concerning the steward who is on duty in the monastery)

There must also be in the monastery another steward, who in every way is on a par with the first steward in virtue, for the supervision and stimulation of all the officials. He must also have charge of all the strangers and brothers who visit and must take care of the ill, as I have indicated above, and the revenues that are collected from whatsoever source must be investigated and examined with his knowledge. He must deliver to each one of the [monastic officials] the things that are necessary for the brotherhood, as the author of Acts says somewhere that “distribution was made to each as any had need” (Acts 4:35). But when the superior is absent or even [p. 40] when he is resting in his cell, he himself will keep the entire brotherhood in order. Those who are sluggish in entering the church for the singing of the psalms, those who talk idly or do nothing or do any other thing that is improper and unprofitable, he will admonish and correct in a brotherly manner and in love. He will persuade them to go to their cells and to attend to their prayers, to do manual labor, and in addition to these, not to resort to insults against one another or wranglings. For he who does this shall be subjected to seclusion. But if he does not repent and does not ask for forgiveness with a contrite heart, he shall be punished most severely so as to learn the expression “Bless and forgive me, brother.”

87. (Concerning those who have some acquisitions in the monastery)

[= (22) Evergetis [22], ed. lines 899–904]: Those who acquire some possessions contrary to the rule of the monastery, even so much as an obol or a piece of fruit, without the knowledge of the superior, will be liable to punishment. But the person who purloins something from the monastery and does not confess it and make amends will be expelled completely.

[= (32) Mamas [34], ed. lines 16–21]: It will not be possible for you to have domestics who render services, but each shall serve himself, the young one him who is advanced [in age], and the stronger one him who is weaker, as the superior orders. For thus the Master’s commandment will be fulfilled and the law of love will be observed unimpaired.

All these things the aforesaid steward shall do in accordance with the order of the superior, without dispute, but in full accord with the superior’s judgment and wish.

88. (Concerning the two stewards and if they are removed from their office)

[= (22) Evergetis [13], ed. lines 644–58]: What follows I did not wish to commit to writing. For it should not be necessary to remove from his position and rank someone who has previously been selected for it, if, in fact, they remained unchanged and completely unmoved in their adherence to what is good, but that is impossible, for we often change and alter, such is human nature, and when we are thought worthy of honor we become weaker with regard to the performance of good deeds, whether it is through giving way to laziness, as in most cases, since authority has a habit of weakening those who have been elevated to it whenever they ought to continue with the struggle and their diligence even more, or because we feign virtue at the start through the desire for authority and the hope of its attainment, and then when we have gained it, we immediately find ourselves being precisely and truly what we were before. For these reasons the matter must be committed to writing [p. 41] and punishment given as strongly as possible.

89. (Concerning the stewards and the serious pursuit [of their duties])

[= (2) Evergetis [14], ed. lines 661–63]: So if the stewards continue unchanged and immutable, properly maintaining virtue and love for the brothers, on account of which they were thought worthy of this rank, they will not be removed from this office but remain firm.

90. (Concerning those who administer the office of steward deceitfully)

[= (22) Evergetis [14], ed. lines 664–75]: But if time proves them to be unqualified and unsuitable, either because they have carried out their office in a careless and indifferent manner or because they have been doing favors for their friends and relatives or have been appropriating some of the monastery's property or have shown themselves to be trouble makers and unruly, or opposing the regulations of the superior, or betraying or subjecting the monastery's property to anyone's control, or on the other hand have been disregarding any of the instructions in the rule and the typikon and following their own wishes, or clearly been involved in bodily passions or even have become unreasonably attached to someone in preference to the rest of the community and therefore have been proved as unsuitable for the guiding of souls, they are to be expelled, then others should be found, who abound in all goodness and are superior to them in virtue and are unimpeachable. These will be preferred to the others in every way and will be promoted to the former's office.

If, on the other hand, they do not succumb [to evil] while performing their service and are approved by God and the father [superior] and the brotherhood, they will hear, “Well done, good and faithful servant; you have been faithful over a little, I will set you over much” (Matt. 25:21).

91. (Concerning the installations of the officials)

Let the installations of all the officials, that is, the ecclesiarch, the cellarer, the treasurers, the provisioner and the rest be carried out in the following way. After the dismissal of matins and the customary prayer of the priest, a trisagion having been said by all, let him who has been selected for any office whatsoever make three deep genuflections in front of and near the sanctuary. [p. 42] Then let him reverently kiss the divine and sacred and venerable icons of our Lord Jesus Christ and the Mother of God and, in turn, let him again make a prostration in front of the holy screen and likewise to each choir. Then let him with his own hand take the keys from the supremely holy Mother of God and bow his neck to the superior, and let the superior bless him and make the sign of the venerable cross over him as he says the following: “The grace of the all-Holy Spirit, brother, through the prayers of our fathers, strengthen you well and, as it pleases the Holy Spirit, may you perform the service which has been assigned to you.”

THIRTEENTH CENTURY

After this, having taken his stand in front of the sanctuary, let him make a common prostration to the brothers, gently appealing to them as follows: “Pray for me, fathers and brothers, to execute well and in a manner pleasing to God the service to which I have been appointed.” As all the brothers say, “God strengthen you, brother,” let the dismissal take place.

92. (Concerning the offices that do not have keys)

[= (22) Evergetis [29], ed. lines 978–80]: However for the installations which do not involve keys, the kissing of the divine icon and the blessing of the superior along with the trisagion will be sufficient for the installation.

[= (22) Evergetis [32], ed. lines 1012–18]: Naturally it is just to leave unchanged those who have been appointed to each of the offices while they are performing them in a careful and devout manner, until the superior sees fit to remove them. But those who neglect or despise them and perhaps even behave deceitfully in them should be removed and others appointed. If one of these people were to appropriate something, anything at all, he will be answerable to our Lord Jesus Christ and his pure Mother, from whom in fact he received his office, promising to carry out his office eagerly and without deceit.

93. (Concerning the installation of the ecclesiarch)

After the installation of the ecclesiarch, all the things of the church shall be handed over to him in writing.

94. (Concerning the sacred offerings and the divine vessels)

[= (32) Mamas [37]]: Since, the monastery had need of sacred vessels, divine offerings and books [p. 43] for the glory of God and the illumination of those who practice asceticism in it, as many things as were necessary were dedicated to it by the grace of Christ and through the intercessions of the supremely holy Mother of God. All the silver vessels and revered icons and liturgical cloths and many books and bronze items that are seen, and an inventory of these has been made by us, signed by my own hand. Concerning these furthermore, I prescribe that they be absolutely both inalienable and irremovable. He who shall dare to remove from them anything of whatever kind shall be considered sacrilegious and along with Judas shall be referred to eternal punishments, and before the [punishments] may he also inherit [Judas'] noose.

But may no one, my Christ, whether potentate or magistrate or anyone of those in the monastery, whether superior or subordinate, even think of removing or alienating any of the offerings or of the books in it, either large or small, or any other thing whatsoever. Instead let there be more eagerness to make additions and further dedications for the glory of God and for their own considerable benefit.

34. MACHAIRAS

95. (Concerning the superior, that he is to inspect the things of the church during the holy week of Renovation)

Likewise, the superior must during the Renovation week, on whatever day he wishes, check over all the things of the church, having in hand the inventory, and just as all things were handed over to the ecclesiarch . . .

96. (Concerning the cellarer and his appointment)

[Missing chapter; cf. (32) Mamas [11]]

97. (Concerning the superior, that he is to go into the storehouse and make an inspection)

. . . lest somehow he try to entice you because you are rather weak and you succumb to the ill-will of the Evil One, run quickly to confession. For the honest confession will make your forgiveness complete, justly granting [you] the latter by the superior.

Do not deprive any brothers of their rights because of prejudice or in repayment for an injury. [p. 44]

98. (Concerning the fact that the cellarer is not to do anything without the knowledge of the superior)

Apply every effort, therefore, to do nothing, even as much as the smallest thing, without the knowledge and judgment of the superior. For if anyone of you shall do any such thing and, despite admonition and warning, does not restrain himself from such an undertaking, he shall be subjected to the appropriate penalty.

99. (Concerning him who operates the storeroom treacherously and deceitfully)

Neither will the cellarer have in his power to waste the things of the monastery on his friends and relatives nor to appropriate from the things that have been brought to him so much as an obol. For if he does this, he shall not partake of the divine body and blood, but he shall also be removed from his office and another who is better than he in virtue will be appointed in his place. The superior and the steward must examine precisely the food and drink of the brothers so as to make a decision in the case of each [brother] according to his relative weakness.

100. (Concerning the treasurer and the things in the treasury)

Two treasurers must be appointed by the superior. Of these, one will be in charge of all the income of the monastery and will record in detail both the revenues and the expenditures, not simply thus, but in accordance with the example that will be cited.

There shall be a money-box deposited in the treasury of the monastery, in which will be put all the monies that come to the monastery from whatsoever source, secured with keys and seals. There shall also be a piece of paper which will serve as a record of deposits and that, too, will be stored in the money-box. In this [piece of paper] all the aforesaid monies will be recorded in detail. From these, the treasurer will take each month whatever is necessary for the monastery's expenses and will spend these in accordance with the superior's order.

THIRTEENTH CENTURY

101. (Concerning the rendering of account after the passage of two months)

After the completion of the month, both the superior and the preeminent monks will sit down together in a designated place, [p. 45] and the money-box will be set up in the middle and will be opened by him who holds its key. Then, the record of deposits will be brought out first, and after it has been read, it will make known the monies that had been previously given to the treasurer for expenditure. Then, the treasurer will present a clear and distinct [record of] the expenditure of these [monies], but he shall also make absolutely clear all the monies that have been collected by him from whatsoever transactions during the same months. He shall present the recording of them, which indicates what and from where, from whom and at what time the monies were collected, and thus both the monies that have been collected and those that have been spent during the same months, being clearly discerned, will be recorded in the deposit record very clearly. After the recording, the paper containing the deposit record will again be stored away in the money-box, and likewise the monies that have come to the monastery either from gifts or from other quarters. The treasurer, however, will take, in turn, from the money-box other specified nomismata for the expenses of the month that has started.

Then, the money-box shall again be closed and, after it has been sealed by the aforesaid brothers, it will be stored away in the customary place. Thus, all income and expenditures having been declared and made quite clear and evident, there will be no cause of scandal left against him who has been entrusted with this office or against anyone else.

Therefore, I enjoin in the Holy Spirit that neither he who after me will succeed to the office of superior nor he who is next in rank, I mean the steward, nor anyone else whosoever, is to take for himself out of the money-box even one single nomisma, neither a greater nor a smaller [amount], because, as I have stated, everything ought to be openly collected and spent.

102. (Concerning the garments and every giving and taking by the monks)

All the garments, indeed, of the brotherhood, any clothes and cloaks and *apostolika*²¹ and the rest, shall be kept appropriately by the treasurer and shall be duly distributed to those brothers who need them at whatever times the superior should choose. The purchase, however, of these [garments] shall be made by the [superior] himself or another brother who has clearly been approved for possessing experience sufficient for such matters.

[= (22) Evergetis [25], ed. lines 930–35]: I prescribe such things to be bought at the appropriate times, and it is good to take care of your old garments as much as you can and use them. For only a use that is necessary should be sought, and a surplus should be hated as being of the devil. We give the same instruction also in the case of cloaks and vests and shoes, and [p. 46] in short, all necessities.

103. (Concerning the giving [back] of old [garments] and receiving new ones)

[= (22) Evergetis [25], ed. lines 935–38]: Whenever there should be a pressing need for anyone to receive a new item of these articles, he must bring the old one of course to the storehouse and hand this over and receive another one with the knowledge of the superior. For otherwise, if old garments are not brought back, I do not permit new ones to be given out. These shall be the duties of the treasurer.

104. (Concerning the other treasurer)

Let, however, the other [treasurer] have his own separate workshop, which is also called a treasury. In the latter he shall keep very carefully and safely all the more massive equipment of the monastery which happens to be stored in there,—agricultural tools, things made of metal and other things necessary for the monastery—receiving them with a written document and again giving them out to the attendants who need them for agricultural and other services of the monastery in order that he may have knowledge of what sort of and how many of the serviceable tools are given to each of the attendants. It shall [also] be the task of the aforesaid treasurer to supervise the coppersmiths of the monastery.

105. (Concerning the superintendent of provisions and the superintendent of the storehouse and the travelers)

It is also necessary for me to mention the other offices, such as [those of] the superintendent of provisions and the superintendent of the storehouse and, of course, the superintendents of the dependencies.²² First of all, they are to have the fear of God and to do everything in accordance with the superior's order. In receiving and dispensing, they must give out everything in measure and take in everything in measure, as the sacred gospel says somewhere that "the measure you give will be the measure you get" (Matt. 7:2). Keep doing in accordance with the custom which you have received from me and which is traditional from the beginning, and it will be well with you.

If, however, one of you acts contrary to the judgment of the superior and appropriates the things that have been entrusted to him, he shall be accountable to our Lord Jesus Christ and to the pure Mother of God, from whom indeed he has received his office, [p. 47] having promised to administer his office readily and without deceit. But also the superior shall expel him from his office and shall by all means appoint another in his place, and to him who administers his office deceitfully a penalty shall be given, consisting of bread and water according to the degree of his trespass.

106. (Concerning [the fact that] food is to be the same [for all])

[= (22) Evergetis [26], ed. lines 941–43]: On these matters I instruct you, my fathers and brothers, that you should all have the same food and drink.

107. (Concerning the ill and their diet)

[= (22) Evergetis [26], ed. lines 947–51]: For in every way you should only help and take care of those who are clearly afflicted with illness, as much as you can, and for this reason perhaps need better food and drink to sustain their weak and wearied bodies. For I think that this shows discernment and preserves the conscience of everyone else free of offense.

108. (Concerning the fact that the ill are not to grumble for excessive food)

[= (22) Evergetis [41], ed. lines 1259–68]: Our sick brothers emboldened by this should not cast off self-restraint by seeking for extra things and things which perhaps they have never even heard of much less seen and eaten, but they should restrain and control them- selves, being satisfied only with those things which the circumstance of the season and the resources of the monastery provide for them. For if we command that they be cared for because of the [divine] commandment, yet we do not allow them to give themselves airs but live in a more restrained manner, and as monks ought, so that they may receive from God the reward of their endurance, which the deprivation of their desires and the unpleasantness of their sickness is going to secure for them.

109. (Concerning those who are going to be superintendents of the dependencies)

[= (22) Evergetis [34], ed. lines 1063–67]: Since, by the ineffable providence of God and of the pure Mother of God who gave birth to him without [human] seed, we have gained possession of some immovable property for the monastery, just as [p. 48] I have said above, the superior must have concern for them also, and he should be as careful as he can as to what sort of brothers are sent to have the oversight of them, that is they should always be reverent and discreet, and elderly if possible, unaffected by passions that are caused by the attacks of Belial (cf. II Cor. 6:15).

110. (Concerning the fact that a layman is not to be made superintendent of the dependencies)

I do not permit any layman to be entrusted with such an office apart from the tillers of the soil and those who tend the animals.

111. (Concerning the estates that involve [the risk of] spiritual harm)

If, however, there should be a piece of property that is not near the monastery but involves [the risk of] spiritual harm, I permit this to be given by agreement or exchange for another that is closer, the monastery collecting the sum of revenue that belongs to it. It is my wish, however, that such properties as are closer [to the monastery] be altogether inalienable and indefeasible, never to be taken away or alienated at all by anyone, except for those [properties] that involve [the risk of] spiritual harm, although these, too, Christ-loving people and I have purchased and acquired with many toils and expenses for the nourishment and preservation of our brothers who practice asceticism. He who shall give up possession of or shall take away any of these [properties] on any pretext whatsoever shall certainly be subjected to the charge of sacrilege and shall be liable to the legal punishment for this, apart from spiritual harm.

112. (Concerning the baker and the brothers [who assist him])

Now the discussion must proceed to other matters and I must speak also concerning these matters to the best of my ability, concerning our brothers, that is, who toil in the bake-house. They must celebrate the entire office and must not be engaged in futile conversations, for this usually happens at gatherings. I direct, however, that a gift of wine, the customarily given measure, be given to those who toil. [p. 49]

113. (Concerning the cobbler, the carpenter, and the rest of the manual workers)

[= (22) Evergetis [21], ed. lines 877–83]: But I must speak also of those who are engaged in manual tasks, the cobbler, the carpenters and the smiths. Some of the more simple brothers should not gather without the superior's knowledge and should not engage in vain chattering and then turn to disgraceful talk —for “by a multitude of words,” he says, “thou shalt not escape sin” (Prov. 10:19)—they should not reject the admonition of the superior. For we instruct him to do this in love and persuade them to give up topics which harm the soul, and discuss matters from Holy Scripture that help the soul.

114. (Concerning the disciplinary official)

It is fitting, therefore, that a disciplinary official be attached to the monastery, also, who assembles the brothers to go into the church and sing the psalms. He shall arise before the doxology of matins, and while the lamplighter has already begun to strike the heavy [semantron], he shall go off to the cell of the superior and to that of each of the brothers, and calling out loudly the phrase, “Father, bless” he shall arouse all for the performance of the midnight office.

While matins is being sung, he will go out of the church twice, after the six psalms and the sixth ode, and will enter the cells of the brothers and will awaken whomsoever he will find sleeping, perhaps from indolence or from the hardship resulting from their duties, and will bring them to the holy church. He will do this once also during the mystery [of the Eucharist] and at vespers and compline. But he himself also at every service ought to post in the left choir those who are going to start [the singing].

He will closely watch the brothers very frequently at every hour, if possible, and will admonish and correct them in a brotherly manner and in love whenever they sit together without good reason or are chattering idly or doing nothing or doing something else that is improper and unprofitable, and will persuade them to go to their own cells and to attend earnestly to their prayer and to their handiwork. He will do these things throughout the whole year.

During the readings that take place at matins and the [canonical] hours during the holy and great Lent, he ought to rise from his own seat and make three genuflections in front of the holy sanctuary bareheaded and to go through the brothers one by one and awaken whomsoever he should find sleeping and not alert and listening to the reading, and persuade him [p. 50] who has been awakened from sleep to rise and make in the middle of the holy church three prostrations and one each to the two choirs and thus, after he has taken his seat, to attend more carefully to the reading.

115. (Concerning the fact that the monastery is to be altogether inaccessible to women)

The monastery shall be altogether inaccessible to women and not even for the sake of worship must they enter in all eternity.

Meat shall never be eaten at all in this [monastery].

Nor may lay boys be accepted for the study of the sacred scriptures, only those who have grown a beard or those who have the first growth of beard on their cheeks. In order to understand the [liturgical] office of the church, let the boys who wish to become monks be placed in a special cell of the monastery and taught the sacred psalter and all the rest of the office, and thus let them enter and be accepted. They shall, however, neither be brought in for the sake of carrying water or another service, nor will they work as servants.

THIRTEENTH CENTURY

116. (Concerning hospitality to guests [who are] monks)

Since we acknowledge hospitality as a most royal gate to virtue, usually born of love—the first of virtues—it is my wish that, just as it was practiced up to now, it be extended again to monks who are entertained as guests in the holy monastery, from whatsoever place they may be. The monastery [should] accept all and impart to them a proportionate [share] of the food of the day that the brothers are eating. If anyone of these [guests] is a notable man, traveling for the sake of venerating the life-receiving tomb [of Christ], he is to be embraced and accepted at the common table and nourished equally with the brothers and be entertained as a guest for three whole days.

117. (Concerning the magistrates who visit)

Even if magistrates from the region should visit at the time when the brothers are eating dry food, the rule of the cenobitic community must be observed, but the visitor must be entertained differently. Let him be seated with the superior and let him eat with him without criticism and be accorded appropriate honor. [p. 51]

118. (Concerning the poor who visit)

[cf. (22) Evergetis [38], ed. line 1185]: The poor, our brothers, who come to the gate quite frequently, since it is impossible for all to be brought inside the monastery, shall be received only in the hospice which is outside the monastery. The guestmaster shall supply bread to each one and food from the table, that they may be comforted. For I prefer that not even one be turned away from the gate hungry, but that in accordance with the custom that has been prescribed from the beginning, all be refreshed with food and beneficence as much as possible, unless perhaps it should happen to be a woman.

119. (Concerning the fact that alms should not be given to women who approach [the gate of the monastery])

[= (22) Evergetis [38], ed. lines 1185–88]: For they should not receive a share, not that we hate our fellow human beings, certainly not, but we fear harm from that quarter, in case if a habit was generally accepted they would visit the gate more frequently and would be found to be the cause of evil rather than good to the brothers. I enjoin in the Holy Spirit that the superior and the steward and the guestmaster observe this restriction.

The matters of hospitality and almsgiving shall always be observed in this manner. But I must turn my discussion to the things that benefit the brothers.

120. (An added remark to the superior)

Let the superior be permitted at whatever time he should choose to enter into the cells of the brothers and search closely lest someone is doing handiwork without the [superior's] wish and judgment, whether he has things, when closely inspected, that are called margounia ["baskets"] in the vernacular, or any other possessions, even trifles. If he should find these things, let them be taken away. He is either to burn them with fire or to distribute them to the poor; and he is to give the owner appropriate counsel and restrain him from such an undertaking thereafter, seeing that he is doing things that are contrary to the rule of the monastery. Basil the Great takes up this very thing and expressly says as follows: "If anyone possesses anything in the monastery or outside the monastery, let him be excommunicated."²³

34. MACHAIRAS

(Canons of Basil the Great)²⁴

121. It seems to me necessary to mention also some other canons of our great father himself, Basil, which have been set forth for those who have undertaken the solitary life. [p. 52]

122. He who has become aware of a brother who contemplates a departure from the monastery and has either communicated with or has given his consent to him and has not reported his plans, must be excommunicated from the church for one week and [subsist] on bread and water.

123. If anyone goes out without the blessing of the superior, let him make a hundred prostrations and eat dry food for three days.

124. If anyone, while eating at table, talks idly or out of inattentiveness does something that is not pleasing, let him arise and intone, as is customary, "Have mercy on me, O God," and ask for forgiveness.

125. If anyone eats without having received the blessing, let him make fifty prostrations.

126. If anyone is absent from the first [seating at] the table, let him remain without food until the evening.

127. If anyone is not on time for the prayer at compline, let him make the customary obeisance and sing the entire office and make fifty prostrations.

128. If anyone after the prostration is found conversing or being alone with someone, let him make fifty prostrations.

129. If anyone of the brothers, apart from the officials and the steward, enters into the kitchen inopportunately, speaking idly and giving orders, let him make thirty prostrations.

130. If anyone, without permission or absolute necessity, enters into the cell of another or sleeps [in it] or starts doing handiwork, let him be banished from the church and the refectory for three days and eat dry food.

131. If anyone is found writing to anyone or receiving a letter without the permission of the superior, let him eat dry food for three days. Likewise, both he who receives and he who gives out [something], apart from the steward, must be excommunicated.

THIRTEENTH CENTURY

132. If one of the tillers of the soil or the gardeners or the vine-dressers or the shepherds take any fruits whatsoever and eat them without their having been blessed, [he] must make fifty prostrations and eat dry food for five days.

133. If anyone without the permission and blessing of the superior shall open a vein or cut his hair²⁵ or put on a garment or shoes, let him make fifty prostrations. [p. 53]

134. If anyone takes a fruit from a tree without the consent of the guard or the gardener, let him make twenty-five prostrations.

135. (Concerning all the officials)

Both the officials and those in charge of all the other necessary [services] ought to attend to them carefully in order that they may not fall under the charge of negligence.

136. (Concerning the relatives of the brothers who visit)

The visiting relatives of the brothers in the monastery must be announced to the superior by the gatekeeper. First of all, they must be asked to see the superior, then by his permission to see their relatives, in accordance with [what] the superior's wish will provide and the examination of the visitor will show. Let him, however, who does not abide by this rule and goes forth to meet his kinsman without the knowledge of the superior remain in seclusion for three days [on a regimen] of bread and water, in order that he may "not think of himself more highly than he ought to think" (Rom. 12:3).

137. (Concerning the canons of St. Basil)

Having found and recognized that these things tend to benefit the brotherhood, I have collected them from the canons of Basil the Great, as I have stated above, and had them recorded along with other matters.

138. (Concerning the above canons and decrees)

Accordingly, both the decrees and canons that have been transmitted to us from our fathers have been included in these chapters. If my spiritual flock should observe them, then "their light shall break forth as the morning and their health shall speedily spring forth" (Is. 58:8). If, on the other hand, it should turn away and reject the paternal injunctions, it will set aside everything and obtain the wages of disobedience. But may it not happen so in the case of my brothers, may it not, O Lord my God, nor may the terrible beast tear them apart. But just as until now you have kept them in your holy name, so also until the end preserve them in order that [p. 54] they may keep doing your will, and surely your will is that they walk in the footsteps of your sacred injunctions.

139. (Concerning the reasons for which these things were written)

The reasons that prompted me to write these things in the present rule are not few, and my fathers and brothers in Christ are not ignorant of them, I believe. Yet a further [reason], indeed, is the danger of silence that hangs over me, as the divine scriptures instruct me. For he says: "Woe to him that gives his neighbor to drink the thick lees of wine” (Hab. 2:15). If the superintendent of souls is called a “watchman” by Ezekiel—which he is both in fact and in name—how could I have escaped the sword threatened through [him] and the full payment for the blood of the flock—what blood this, surely, is!—if I had not set forth everything openly? For he says: “Son of man, I have made you a watchman to my people. If you see the sword coming up and you warn them, you are innocent; but if not, their blood will be required at your hands” (cf. Ezek. 33:6–9).

All these things have made the exposition of the rule necessary for me in order that, by contemplating it every day like a model of behavior, as it were, my fathers and brothers may mold their own life on it and renew in themselves the ordinances of our present rule and may keep preserving them inviolate and may present their conscience pure before the tribunal of the impartial Judge, through the intercessions of our supremely holy Mistress, the Mother of God, and through the prayers of our elders and fathers. May you be saved and magnified and have peace, and may you become enviable in the eyes of all for your good and dignified conduct all the days of your life.

140. (Concerning him who receives the leadership [of the monastery])

For, behold, by the providence of God, I am also leaving behind to you, my flock, a superior, the ordained monk and disciple of mine, lord Joachim, who after my departure from life is going to assume the entire leadership of the monastery. [He is] a man [p. 55] who is of attested virtue and piety and is adorned with understanding and learning and a spiritual way of life and the rest of the good qualities, and “has worked hard with me” (Rom. 16:6), as you also know, for the establishment of the monastery and for all the things that are under [its authority]. But may he, after he has received the sphragis as the superior by the most holy bishop of Tamasia and primate at the time,²⁶ govern the monastery and give rest to the flock in a place of verdure and refreshment (cf. Ps. 22 [23]:2).

141. Concerning the brothers, that they are to confess to the superior)

[= (22) Evergetis [15], ed. lines 737–49]: I plainly instruct you all, my brothers, that after my departure from the world, you hurry to confide to him all the stirrings of your souls and confess the thoughts that harm your souls, so that he may form an idea of the quality of your attitude and relationship with him. By thoughts we mean not those that have been confessed by you, unless someone, perhaps, should willingly choose [to do this], but those that trouble you day by day and hour by hour. For it is not possible, no, it is not possible, being human, not to think something wicked. Do not put off something that is good, a thing you should not do, but run to it with all eagerness and speed, so that you may all be “one” (John 17:21), “being of the same mind” (Phil. 2:2), thinking the same thing, shepherded and guided by one and the same shepherd, attached and bound to one another like a chain of gold, and “fitted together into one body” (Eph. 4:16) under one head, as the holy apostle says, with the Spirit as the master builder.

142. Concerning the fact that the brothers must have all goodwill and honor for the superior)

[= (22) Evergetis [16], ed. lines 763–71]: You should reserve, I beg you, for your superior

all honor, all reverence, all unwavering submission, and all obedience as has been said by one of the divine fathers. For he says, “For if those caring for you are going to render account on your behalf, how will we not be submissive to them in everything, obey them, and serve them as the other parts of the body do the head.” The divine and great apostle Paul speaks as follows in his letter to the Hebrews; “Obey your leaders and submit to them; for they are keeping watch over your souls, as men who will have to give account” (Heb. 13:17). [p. 56]

143. (Concerning the fact that they are to have love for one another and concord)

[= (22) Evergetis [16], ed. lines 772–83]: Also maintain love, peace, and harmony in your dealings with one another, burn with a tender affection for one another, supporting one another, “instructing, comforting, and forbearing one another, stirring up one another to love and good works”²⁷ and, to put it simply, exerting yourselves strongly to establish whatever is good, praiseworthy, virtuous or brings salvation. For Our Lord Jesus Christ says, “This is my commandment, that you love one another as I have loved you” (John 15:12), and elsewhere, “By this all men will know that you are my disciples, if you have love for one another” (John 13:35). Do you see whose disciples we will be by keeping these words? Do you see what glory and blessedness and exultation we are going to get by being disciples of the Master who loves mankind? So then, let us take his commands to heart with all zeal and power and enthusiasm.

144. (Instruction to him who will be the superior)

[= (22) Evergetis [17], ed. lines 785–99]: You, spiritual father and guide of this holy flock, be moderate with the brothers, gentle, protective, and in your concern maintain in everything a fatherly affection for them. I entreat you, care for them all, have concern for them all, forbear with them all, support them, instructing, advising, teaching, comforting, healing the sick, supporting the weak, encouraging the faint-hearted, restoring those who sin, forgiving “seventy times seven” (Matt. 18:22) in accordance with the word of Our Lord. For it is better that we, who are imitating the Lord himself, be judged considerate [even though] a little remiss in what we ought to do, than by maintaining utmost righteousness we be condemned as heartless and haters of our brothers. Also, to omit the rest, St. Basil says “And the superior himself, as a father caring for true children, will watch over the needs of each one and will bring them suitable healing and care as far as he can, and will support with love and fatherly affection the member who is truly weak whether physically or spiritually.”²⁸ [p. 57]

145. (Exhortation to the brothers)

[= (32) Mamas [44], ed. lines 31–33]: If then, brothers, your superior conducts himself thus, being both paternally disposed towards you and devoutly and piously tending the flock of Christ, you shall not question him or disobey him or do anything without his consent. For whoever does this shall be answerable to the pure Mother of God and he shall render an account to her if he does not repent.

146. (Frightful penalties to the superior)

[= (22) Evergetis [18], ed. lines 825–35]: But neither will the superior himself spend the wealth of the monastery in doing favors for his own relations and friends. For by acting in that way he will not be taking part in the divine mysteries “in the Holy Spirit” (Rom. 9:1). Therefore he should take care not “to fall into the hands of the living God” (Heb. 10:31). For even though we are not capable of imposing on him a penalty appropriate for making unjustifiable and unnecessary payments and bringing about changes in the affairs and property of the monastery, yet he will not escape the fearful judgment of God, which we confer upon him in writing this.

147. (To the superior who has disregarded the penalties)

[Cf. (22) Evergetis [18], lines 835–36]: But if he is seen to be so fearless and utterly shameless that he does not even fear the condemnation of God, but spends the wealth of the monastery improperly, in that case let him be questioned by the leaders of the brotherhood and, if he amends himself, let him be shown compassion. But if, on the other hand, he persists in the same ways, let him be reported to the ephoros [of the monastery], and the latter will justly do what is right and will amend what is wrong. For the superior has been appointed for the preservation of the monastery and as an “example” (I Tim. 1:16; II Tim. 1:13) for the brothers and that he may be a leading light and an example to all, and not deceitful and sacrilegious. May it not happen, O Christ the King, that such a person should ever be allowed to shepherd your flock, but rather a man who fulfills your divine commandments and is a scrupulous guardian of the rule, so as to follow himself, too, the fatherly model—just as the prevailing custom has been from the beginning—“in order that we may all be one in the Lord” (cf. Gal. 3:28).

148. (Concerning the fact that one who has been tonsured in another monastery should not receive the office of superior)

A monk from another monastery of the island shall not be appointed superior for any reason whatsoever. But we will appoint one who was nurtured and trained and tonsured in the monastery [p. 58] and knows its regulations and the traits of the brothers. For it is my wish that all those who are tonsured in our holy monastery, whether *apostolikai*²⁹ or wearers of the great habit, be appointed if they are worthy of the office of superior. I exclude, however, from the leadership those alone who neither entered the novitiate [here] nor made their obeisance to the brotherhood, even if they have resided for many years in the monastery.

If, however, it will be [impossible to find among the brothers tonsured in the monastery] an ordained monk who holds the rank of priest and is worthy of the office of superior—which I pray may not happen—in that case let those I indicated above hold the office of superior. For it is not my wish that anyone who happens to be a priest but is unworthy of the pastoral leadership and useless for the shepherding of souls should become a superior. Nor, in fact, should anyone rashly and by his own judgment pursue this [office], [= (22) Evergetis [17], ed. lines 801–3]: making a display perhaps of his seniority or his noble birth or rank or his offering of money or property, but that man should be preferred whom the superior as well as the brothers in God know as having the actual virtues. He is to have the dignity of the appointment.

THIRTEENTH CENTURY

149. (Concerning [St. John] the Forerunner and his feast days)

Furthermore, I erected a chapel very close to the monastery, towards the rising sun, which is named in honor of the venerable Forerunner and Baptist John. It is near the cell which is there and the very few trees and scant running water. Although the profound love of solitude which consumes me within, as well as the boundless love of my brothers, do not permit me to revel in the object of my desire, yet I have prescribed that the divine mystery [of the Eucharist] be performed [there] from the day of its inauguration and dedication, and that the two feasts [of St. John], I mean his birth and his beheading as well as his commemoration,³⁰ be celebrated by you splendidly in accordance with custom. These things shall be performed in eternity.

150. (And [concerning] the holy icons [of the chapel of St. John])

Besides, I have dedicated holy icons and sacred books for the glory of God and the saint, which will be recorded, according to their kind, in a special document and will be defined. [p. 59] But also in order that [the chapel] may look after the things I have indicated and may [offer] psalmody and prayers for us, I prescribe that it receive without fail the things that I have outlined in the document that bears my signature, affixed by my hand.

151. (Concerning the fact that another cell is not to be built)

I completely prohibit, from now on, the building of another cell very close to the monastery except for the aforementioned one.

152. (Concerning solitaries and their regimen)

I enjoin the following things upon those who prefer to live the life of a solitary. With the knowledge of the superior they shall build cells in more solitary places, observing the following rule. With much scrutiny, of course, let them receive late on Sunday the provisioning for five days: loaves of bread and fruits or legumes soaked in water and materials for plaited-work to combat akedia. On Saturday let them leave their cell, come into the monastery and eat the food that has been set before them equally with the brotherhood. Let them bring their handiwork to the steward of the monastery. Late on Sunday again, let them take their provisions, as they customarily do, and run a straight course to their cell. For this is the life of the true solitary, as we have received it from our fathers. I do not at all accept a solitary in any other way.

153. (A shuddering injunction)

I enjoin in the Holy Spirit that all those with you observe these rules and not sell to anyone else a living allowance, whether he happens to be a layman or a monk, or promises much and great benefit to the monastery, or gives a very large amount of money as an offering, or has toiled in the monastery for a long time and has then gone to another monastery and asks to receive a living allowance from our monastery. For this I completely forbid and reject.

154. (Concerning the commemorations of our holy fathers)

Concerning our fathers and brothers who have fallen asleep I shall say a few words. [p. 60] We must celebrate on the thirteenth of the month of December the memorials of our holy fathers, the most saintly monks Neophytos, Ignatios and Prokopios.³¹ Yes, indeed. But also on the thirteenth of each month, a night office for our aforesaid holy fathers and the divine mystery [of the Eucharist] must be performed and a treat [of an extra serving of wine], the customarily given measure, must be given to the brothers at the table.

155. (Concerning those who have dedicated properties to the monastery)
[Missing chapter]

156. ([Concerning the commemorations of others worthy of remembrance])

[= (22) Evergetis [36], ed. lines 1083–85]: Furthermore, commemorations should take place every year for all those who have accomplished for the monastery something worthy of remembrance.

157. (Concerning the commemorations of all the brothers)

[= (22) Evergetis [36], ed. lines 1085–91]: Equally [we must commemorate] all the brothers in the monastery whose names were and will be inscribed in the diptychs. In addition, whenever someone has recently died, he should be remembered during each service, and I mean during matins and the liturgy and vespers, until his commemoration on the fortieth day, during which also every day one offering will be made on his behalf. This I prescribe. In addition to this the ecclesiarch must note down the names of each of those who die in the menologion.

[= (22) Evergetis [36], ed. lines 1118–21]: We command, moreover, the priests in the monastery to consult the diptychs at every divine liturgy, so that they themselves may not bear the accusation of having forgotten and neglected them.

158. (Concerning my own judgment and the rule)

[= (32) Mamas [41], ed. lines 13–23]: The things, then, that I have previously stated have presented quite clearly the circumstances that made the composition of the present rule necessary. For these are the rule and the precise constitution for a true cenobitic monastery. May the Triune God preserve inviolable up to the end of the present world all the things that have been formulated in order that thus the flock of Christ may be called light, in accordance with the statements of the gospels (Matt. 5:14), and through it yet others also might be brought to edification. May it be a truly chosen flock of Christ and by its example be able to instruct many souls of men [p. 61] that see its correct way of life as a marvelous example.

159. (Concerning the fact that following common usage a trustee is to be elected)

Since it would be in conformity with common usage that [the monastery] acquire also trustees of my present rule, I forthwith institute these: the two greatest and loftiest, first God and [then] his undefiled Mother. From him and through him we were brought forth from non-existence into existence.

160. (Concerning the trustees: [they are to be] God and she who gave birth to him, and the emperor)

I institute as trustee him who from [God] and through [God] truly reigns, our very great and sovereign emperor³² and along with him those also who after him will be granted by God the rights to the Roman scepters in order that they may protect my fathers and brothers and look after the monastery for their soul's mercy and reward.

161. (A sworn appeal to the magistrates of the island at the time)

[= (32) Mamas [38], ed. lines 21–37]: But I adjure also those who at the time are distinguished by the magistracies of this island, by our Lord Jesus Christ and by his undefiled Mother, that if the monks should come to them and present the present regulations of the typikon and say that they are being unjustly treated by some, that they proceed against the injustice and check its impetus and rescue the flock of Christ from the hand of quite cruel men and not to ignore it but support and defend it in accordance with the dictates of law and justice, in order that thus they may procure a reward for themselves and have the divine favor because they graciously received the monks of the supremely holy Mother of God of the Mountain of Machairas and deemed them worthy of the proper assistance. For this reason, in fact, it has been prescribed that they even be commemorated.

162. (Most shuddering curses against him who shall attempt to proceed towards the annulment [of the rule])

[= (32) Mamas [41], ed. lines 23–28]: Let him, however, who shall even attempt to proceed towards the annulment of our present rule of the typikon [p. 62] in addition to not being listened to, be also alien to the hope of the Christians, I mean the undefiled body and blood, because he has wanted to overturn and violently shake this peace-loving and benevolent rule that has been established for the benefit of my fathers and brothers.

163. (Instruction to the brothers)

[= (32) Evergetis [42], ed. lines 1270–82]: So then I have stated sufficiently all the things that I wished and that are acceptable to God and to [our] ardent helper and patroness, the pure Mother of God, and which are greatly beneficial for your help. In the future it will be your concern to maintain them unbroken and unchanged always. By this I mean, to carry out completely in all the services the canonical procedure³³ handed on to you, to preserve loyalty and honor towards your superiors, to love one another, to be keen each of you “to surpass each other in humility” (Phil. 2:3; I Peter 5:5), to labor with one another in everything as the limbs of one body and “to complete what is lacking” (Col. 1:24) in one another, not to stir up quarrels nor form improper friendships or cause schisms and breakaway services, to refrain from claiming the seat of honor and worldly preferments, but look to one thing only, that is to live and conduct yourselves virtuously and breathe in nothing else, if possible, than the word of salvation and everything that is for the edification and benefit of your soul.

[= (22) Evergetis [42], ed. lines 1292–1300]: So, my children and brothers, let us in no way prefer the things that harm, and pass by those that bring salvation. For we did not abandon the world for indulgence and luxury, but for exertion and to strive as much as we could to gain the kingdom of heaven. Therefore let us force ourselves, let us force ourselves, as has been said; “for the kingdom of heaven has suffered violence, and the men of violence take it by force” (Matt. 11:12).

164. (Instruction to the superior and regulation regarding [the number of] brothers)

My statement is again directed to you, spiritual father and brother. The first thing is to follow the things that have been written and observe without obstruction the things that have been rightly and lawfully laid down by canon; and not to add to the number [of brothers] that has been prescribed until the Lord calls one of you, [my] brothers, to that blessed life. In that case you must make an addition according to the rank of him who departed, be he a cleric or someone else. [p. 63]

165. (Regulation concerning clerics)

I have prescribed that clerics, I mean [gap in text] . . .

At all events, you shall appoint them to the primary offices,³⁴ if they are competent for such an office, that they may not let anything belonging to the monastery become lost in any way out of carelessness or some other kind of neglect and so be liable to a penalty that is equal to that of sacrilege.³⁵ Every single person who does not follow this standard and rule, which leads to salvation, must be expelled, lest perhaps “a little leaven leavens the whole lump” (I Cor. 5:6). But I enjoin these things also upon those who after you will succeed to the leadership.

166. (Entreaty and appeal of the sinner Neilos to all)

[= (22) Evergetis [42], ed. lines 1305–11]: So then I, the sinner Neilos, beseech you all to “lead a life worthy of your calling” (Eph. 4:1); “present your bodies holy to the Lord” (Rom. 12:1); “love one another” (John 15:12); “run well the race that is set before you” (Heb. 12:1); “whatsoever is good, whatsoever is beloved of God, consider these things you have heard and learned from me” (cf. Phil. 4:8–9), the unworthy one. Do not fail to do these things, my brothers and beloved children. Remember your souls and do not forget my insignificance in your prayers. Do not let a stone cover my memory, O you to whom I gave birth in spirit. For “the measure you give is the measure you receive.”³⁶

167. (Concerning the fact that the present typikon is to be read three times a year)

[= (22) Evergetis [43], ed. lines 1313–18]: I instruct you to read the present typikon three times a year during your meal-times, to remind you of your instructions and for the benefit of your souls. For in that way you will be convinced about your own salvation, if you have kept well what you received from your fathers and are paying back to me in the Lord my wages for rearing you with this spiritual upbringing and instruction.

168. (A brief and concluding prayer)

[= (22) Evergetis [43], ed. lines 1318–24]: “The God of peace who called us to his eternal glory” (Heb. 13:20–21), through his great and unspeakable goodness confirm and strengthen you in his holy will through His only-begotten Son Our Lord and Savior Jesus Christ and the All-holy Life-giving Spirit, to whom belong all glory, honor, worship, [p. 64] and majesty now and always and for ever and ever, Amen. Glory to thee, our God, glory to thee.

169. (Concerning the holy monastery for women in Tamasia)

Besides, by the good pleasure of God and his Mother, who gave him birth without [human] seed [and] who cooperates with us in all respects for the things that are better and bring salvation, I have erected from its very foundations a holy monastery for women in Tamasia, and it has been made complete in all respects, in both holy and venerable icons and sacred and soul-benefiting books, as well as other divine offerings. I have set forth in writing for the nuns a precise rule for practicing asceticism. I have appointed the most honorable superior who will succeed me as trustee along with the most devout ordained monk, lord Neophytos, to supervise and guide the sacred flock of Christ and to give approval in all matters, as I have prescribed in writing.

170. (Concerning what this holy monastery must receive yearly)

I prescribe that this holy monastery and the sisters who practice asceticism in it receive yearly from our net revenues—of the totals, that is—one-eighth of a hundred; and the other two are for those who are struggling against the sacred disease³⁷ and for the rest of the poor. From this eighth, the priests of *Blachernitissa*³⁸ ought to receive yearly twenty-four nomismata, but they, too, are to have the consent of the superior; and while the male [animals] ought to be tithed, the female are not because of the wool and the cheese.

The superior at the time ought freely to bestow this small gift without hesitation and complaining, just as I have prescribed, in no way whatsoever using poverty as an excuse. For I have dedicated to the monastery sufficient revenues and acquisitions for the appropriate expenditures and food for all. If you do so, you will be confident in the hope that you loan these things to Christ, by whom you will also be repaid “a hundredfold” (Mark 10, 30; Luke 18, 30). If, [p. 65] however, anyone attempts in any way whatsoever to take away from what has been dedicated [to God], he will have the divinity fighting against him for being sacrilegious, and let him not partake of the divine sacraments.

In the month of August, on the thirteenth, in the year 6718 [= 1210 A.D.]. I, the humble monk Neilos, founder of the monastery of Machairas, bishop of Tamasia and primate, have signed at the beginning and end. 6718.³⁹

Notes on the Translation

1. The donation is problematic, for Cyprus was independent of Byzantium during this emperor’s reign, first under the usurper Isaac Komnenos (1184–91) and then, after the island’s conquest by the English king and crusader Richard I Lionheart (1189–99) in 1191, by various Latin rulers.
2. Another problematic donation. During Alexios’ reign, Cyprus was under the control of the Lusignan ruler Aimery (1194–1205).
3. In [47] below.
4. Presumably in an inventory, not preserved.
5. Feast of the Presentation of the Virgin in the Temple, November 21.
6. Feast of the birth of the Mother of God, September 8; commemoration, December 26; feast of the Purifi-

34. MACHAIRAS

- cation (i.e., the Presentation of Christ in the Temple), February 2; feast of the Annunciation, March 25.
7. Feast of the Dormition, August 15.
 8. Cf. (32) Mamas [19] and (33) Heliou Bomon [19].
 9. Cf. Pseudo-Basil, Constitutiones asceticae 12, PG 31, col. 1376 AB.
 10. Basil of Caesarea, Regulae fusius tractae 26 ([LR26]), PG 31, col. 985CD.
 11. John Klimakos, Scala Paradisi 4, PG 88, cols. 681B, 705C.
 12. Saturday of the first week in Lent.
 13. Feast of the Discovery of the Head of St. John the Forerunner, February 24; feast of the Forty Martyrs, March 9.
 14. The first week of Easter; cf. (4) Stoudios [A3].
 15. The week following the Sunday of St. Thomas, i.e., the first Sunday after Easter.
 16. Fast of the Holy Apostles, from Monday after the feast of All Saints (Sunday after Pentecost) through the vigil of the feast of Sts. Peter and Paul, June 28.
 17. Fast of the Holy Nativity, from November 15 until Christmas.
 18. See (20) Black Mountain [55] with note.
 19. The heresy of the Tetraditai.
 20. Cf. (28) Pantokrator [4].
 21. See also [148] below; according to (9) Galesios [130], the apostolikai (wearers of the habit of the apostles) were an intermediate rank between the wearers of the habit of the martyrs and the wearers of the habit of the angels (megaloschemoi).
 22. The Greek text (ed. p. 46, line 20) reads: mokeritas. The word mokerites is not found in the dictionaries; it may be a neologism, as the editor suggests (Tsiknopoulos, Kypriaka Typika, p. 23*) or a scribal error. The reference is undoubtedly to the officials who visited and supervised the dependencies and who are called stratokopoi in this chapter, metochiaroi in [85] and [109] and metochitai in [110].
 23. Cf. Pseudo-Basil, Poenae in monachos deliquentes 13, PG 31, col. 1308C.
 24. For references to the sources, see the Document Notes.
 25. Reading keirekomei for kerokomei in edition, p. 52, line 28. Although the verb keirekomeo is not found in the dictionaries, the adjective keirekomes, “one who has cut his hair,” is attested; see Demetrakos, Lexikon, s.v. keirekomes. For the rule forbidding monks to cut their hair without the superior’s permission, see Pachomios, Regula B, PG 40, col. 952B and (32) Mamas [24] and note.
 26. See [17] above.
 27. Rom. 15:14; I Thess. 4:18; Eph. 4:2; Heb. 10:24.
 28. Pseudo-Basil, Constitutiones asceticae 28, PG 31, col. 1417C.
 29. Cf. [102] above, with Document note below.
 30. Feast of the Nativity of St. John the Forerunner, June 24; feast of his beheading, August 29; commemoration, January 7.
 31. See [7], [8], and [10] above.
 32. Gap in the text here.
 33. The reading diakonia (edition, page 62, line 10) is wrong. (22) Evergetis [42], ed. line 1273 has akolouthia.
 34. For the meaning, see [81] above and (28) Pantokrator [4].
 35. Cf. (22) Evergetis [19], [32].
 36. Matt. 7:2; Mark 4:24; Luke 6:38.
 37. Hiera nosos; for which, see (28) Pantokrator, n. 84.
 38. The Church of the Holy Virgin of Blachernai in Constantinople, for which, see Janin, Geographie, vol. 3, pp. 161–71.
 39. Two appendices follow in the edition (ed. pp. 66–68); these have not been translated. Appendix A (ed. p. 66) reproduces part of [114] (ed. lines 10–23), while Appendix B (ed. pp. 67–68) copies (22) Evergetis, [33] (ed. lines 1026–58).

THIRTEENTH CENTURY

Document Notes

The manuscript's editor has transferred chapter titles from the author's index to the body of the document, enclosing them in round brackets. We have followed this convention in our translation. The first twenty chapters discussing various aspects of the foundation's constitution and history, are all original to (34) Machairas. The chapters are listed here to facilitate reference.

- [1] Meditation on death.
- [2] The founder's authority to issue this Rule.
- [3] Reason for issuance of the Rule.
- [4] Preservation of prior rule.
- [5] Plan of organization.
- [6] Preface to the foundation history.
- [7] First founders Neophytos and Ignatios.
- [8] The monk Prokopios.
- [9] Gift of the emperor Manuel I Komnenos.
- [10] Building of the oratory.
- [11] Neilos' arrival at the monastery.
- [12] His designation as Ignatios' successor.
- [13] His reluctance to accept the superiorship.
- [14] Death of Ignatios.
- [15] Construction of the church and other buildings.
- [16] The episcopal stauropegion.
- [17] Ignatios' restriction of episcopal rights.
- [18] Neilos' installation by Bishop Niketas Hagiostephanites.
- [19] Warning to future bishops.
- [20] Commemoration for respectful bishops.
- [21] Independent and self-governing status. A Group B chapter, shared with both (22) Evergetis [12] and (32) Mamas [4]; textually related provisions in (27) Kecharitomene [1], (29) Kosmosoteira [31], (30) Phoberos [33], and (33) Heliou Bomon [4].
- [22] Gift and confirmation of Emperor Isaac II Angelos. A Group A chapter.
- [23] Emperor Alexios III Angelos and his gifts. A Group A chapter. He is commemorated by name in [24] below.
- [24] First trisagion of the emperor. See also [47] below. A Group A chapter. See other provisions in (25) Fragala [C3], [C5]; (27) Kecharitomene [34], [71]; (28) Pantokrator [3]; and (33) Heliou Bomon [49].
- [25] Donors of immovable property. A Group A chapter. See the provision for their commemoration in [155] below.
- [26] Illumination of the church. A Group A chapter. See other provisions in (27) Kecharitomene [66], [68]; (28) Pantokrator [6], [29], [34]; and (48) Prodromos [10].
- [27] Feast of the entry of the Mother of God into the temple (Presentation of the Mother of God). A Group A chapter. See also the provisions for this feast in (10) Eleousa [13] and (35) Skoteine [19].
- [28] Other feasts of the Mother of God. See also the provision in (27) Kecharitomene [60].
- [29] Feast of the Dormition of the Mother of God. A Group A chapter. See also other provisions for this feast in (22) Evergetis [11]; (23) Pakourianos [11]; (27) Kecharitomene [59]; (29) Kosmosoteira [10], [29], [65]; (39) Lips [38]; (57) Bebaia Elpis [112]; and (60) Charsianeites [C14].
- [30] Introduction to the hours. A Group B chapter, shared in part with both (22) Evergetis [3] and (32) Mamas [47]; textually related provision in (33) Heliou Bomon [46].
- [31] Office of the first hour. A Group B chapter, shared with both (22) Evergetis [4] and (32) Mamas [47]; textually related provisions in (27) Kecharitomene [32], (29) Kosmosoteira [13], (30) Phoberos [9], and (33) Heliou Bomon [46]. There is a gap in the manuscript at this point (extending through part of [33]) that can be resolved by using (22) Evergetis [4], ed. lines 119–26.

34. MACHAIRAS

- [32] Disciplinary enforcement. A Group B chapter, missing from the manuscript, but cf. (22) Evergetis [4] and (32) Mamas [47]; textually related provisions in (29) Kosmosoteira [13], (30) Phoberos [9], and (33) Heliou Bomon [46]. The gap in the manuscript here cannot be restored with any confidence, but cf. (22) Evergetis [4], ed. lines 127–35.
- [33] Private recitation of the office. A Group B chapter, shared with both (22) Evergetis [4] and (32) Mamas [47]; textually related provisions in (29) Kosmosoteira [13], (30) Phoberos [9], and (33) Heliou Bomon [46]. The text of this chapter is defective; for lost content, cf. (22) Evergetis [4], ed. lines 136–39.
- [34] Omission of genuflections during Christmas and Pentecost. A Group B chapter, shared in part with both (22) Evergetis [4] and (32) Mamas [47]; textually related provisions in (27) Kecharitomene [33], (29) Kosmosoteira [13], (30) Phoberos [10], and (33) Heliou Bomon [46].
- [35] Offices of the third and sixth hours. A Group D chapter, shared with (32) Mamas [31] and (33) Heliou Bomon [31].
- [36] The Holy Eucharist. A Group B chapter, shared with both (22) Evergetis [4], [5] and (32) Mamas [32]; textually related provisions in (27) Kecharitomene [33], (29) Kosmosoteira [13], [14], (30) Phoberos [10], [11], and (33) Heliou Bomon [32].
- [37] Frequency of reception of communion. A Group B chapter, shared with both (22) Evergetis [5] and (32) Mamas [32]; textually related provisions in (27) Kecharitomene [33], (29) Kosmosoteira [14], (30) Phoberos [11], (33) Heliou Bomon [32], and (58) Menoikeion [16].
- [38] No one to abstain entirely from communion. A Group B chapter, shared with both (22) Evergetis [5] and (32) Mamas [32]; textually related provisions in (27) Kecharitomene [33], (29) Kosmosoteira [14], (30) Phoberos [11], and (33) Heliou Bomon [32].
- [39] Preparation for communion. A Group B chapter, shared with both (22) Evergetis [5] and (32) Mamas [32]; textually related provisions in (27) Kecharitomene [33], (29) Kosmosoteira [14], (30) Phoberos [11], and (33) Heliou Bomon [32].
- [40] Quality of the eucharistic bread and wine. A Group A chapter. (29) Kosmosoteira [85] and (36) Blemmydes [4] likewise show a concern about the manufacture and use of the eucharistic elements.
- [41] Specifications for the eucharistic elements. A Group A chapter.
- [42] Office of the ninth hour. A Group A chapter. See also other treatments in (22) Evergetis [6], (27) Kecharitomene [35], (29) Kosmosoteira [15], (30) Phoberos [12], (32) Mamas [47], and (33) Heliou Bomon [46].
- [43] Office of vespers. A Group A chapter. See also other treatments in (22) Evergetis [6], (27) Kecharitomene [35], (29) Kosmosoteira [15], (30) Phoberos [12], (32) Mamas [47], and (33) Heliou Bomon [46].
- [44] Office of compline. A Group A chapter. See also other treatments in (22) Evergetis [6], (27) Kecharitomene [36], (29) Kosmosoteira [15], (30) Phoberos [12], (32) Mamas [47], and (33) Heliou Bomon [46].
- [45] Summons to midnight office. A Group A chapter.
- [46] Midnight office. A Group A chapter. See also other treatments in (22) Evergetis [6], (27) Kecharitomene [38], (29) Kosmosoteira [15], (30) Phoberos [12], (32) Mamas [47], and (33) Heliou Bomon [46].
- [47] Second trisaqion of the emperor. See also [24] above. A Group A chapter.
- [48] Office of matins. A Group B chapter, shared with both (22) Evergetis [6] and (32) Mamas [47]; textually related provisions in (27) Kecharitomene [39], (29) Kosmosoteira [15], (30) Phoberos [13], and (33) Heliou Bomon [46].
- [49] No absences from the office. A Group D chapter, shared with (32) Mamas [21] and (33) Heliou Bomon [21].
- [50] Superior to offer confession. A Group C chapter, shared with (22) Evergetis [7], (29) Kosmosoteira [16], and (30) Phoberos [14]. (32) Mamas [29] and (33) Heliou Bomon [29] have different treatments.
- [51] Guidelines for confession. A Group B chapter, shared with both (22) Evergetis [7] and (32) Mamas [30]; textually related provisions in (29) Kosmosoteira [17], (30) Phoberos [14], and (33) Heliou Bomon [30].
- [52] Punishment of non-confessing monks. See also [54] below. A Group C chapter, shared with (22) Evergetis

THIRTEENTH CENTURY

- [7], (29) Kosmosoteira [17], and (30) Phoberos [14].
- [53] Confession at tonsure. A Group C chapter, shared with (22) Evergetis [7], (29) Kosmosoteira [18], and (30) Phoberos [15].
- [54] Expulsion of non-confessing monks. See also [52] above. A Group C chapter, shared only with (22) Evergetis [15]. (32) Mamas [29] and (33) Heliou Bomon [29] have different treatments.
- [55] Length of the novitiate for notables. A Group B chapter, shared with both (22) Evergetis [37] and (32) Mamas [22]; textually related provisions in (29) Kosmosoteira [55], (30) Phoberos [51], and (33) Heliou Bomon [22].
- [56] Length of the novitiate for others. A Group B chapter, shared with both (22) Evergetis [37] and (32) Mamas [22]; textually related provisions in (30) Phoberos [51] and (33) Heliou Bomon [22].
- [57] No mandatory entrance gifts. A Group B chapter, shared with both (22) Evergetis [37] and (32) Mamas [22]; textually related provisions in (29) Kosmosoteira [55], (30) Phoberos [53A], and (33) Heliou Bomon [22].
- [58] Voluntary offerings allowed. A Group B chapter, shared with both (22) Evergetis [37] and (32) Mamas [22]; textually related provisions in (29) Kosmosoteira [55], (30) Phoberos [53A], and (33) Heliou Bomon [22].
- [59] Entrance gifts cannot be reclaimed. A Group B chapter, shared with both (22) Evergetis [37] and (32) Mamas [5]; textually related provisions in (27) Kecharitomene [7], (29) Kosmosoteira [55], (30) Phoberos [53A], and (33) Heliou Bomon [5].
- [60] Acceptability of monks from other monasteries. A Group B chapter, shared with both (22) Evergetis [37] and (32) Mamas [22]; textually related provisions in (30) Phoberos [52] and (33) Heliou Bomon [22].
- [61] Importance of the diet; summons to the refectory. A Group B chapter, shared with both (22) Evergetis [9] and (32) Mamas [17]; textually related provisions in (29) Kosmosoteira [20], (30) Phoberos [20], (33) Heliou Bomon [17], and (58) Menoikeion [8].
- [62] Discipline of monks absent from meals. A Group B chapter, missing because of a gap in the manuscript, but cf. (22) Evergetis [9] and (32) Mamas [17]; textually related provisions in (27) Kecharitomene [40], (29) Kosmosoteira [21], (30) Phoberos [21], (33) Heliou Bomon [17], and (58) Menoikeion [8].
- [63] Discipline of the disorderly. A Group C chapter, shared with (22) Evergetis [9], (27) Kecharitomene [41], (29) Kosmosoteira [21], (30) Phoberos [21], and (58) Menoikeion [8]. The lost portion of this chapter that is due to the gap in the manuscript that begins at [62] can be restored by reference to (22) Evergetis [9], ed. lines 352–56; the lost portion may have been shared with (32) Mamas [17] and (33) Heliou Bomon [17].
- [64] No arguments over precedence. A Group B chapter, shared with both (22) Evergetis [9] and (32) Mamas [36]; textually related provisions in (27) Kecharitomene [42], (29) Kosmosoteira [22], (30) Phoberos [22], and (33) Heliou Bomon [35].
- [65] Order of seating at meals. A Group D chapter, shared with (32) Mamas [36] and (33) Heliou Bomon [35].
- [66] Evening meal. A Group C chapter, shared with (22) Evergetis [9], (29) Kosmosoteira [24], and (30) Phoberos [24]. There is a gap in the manuscript at this point that extends down through part of [67]. Text is restored using (22) Evergetis [9], ed. lines 421–23.
- [67] Diet for the first week of Lent. A Group B chapter, shared with both (22) Evergetis [10] and (32) Mamas [18]; textually related provisions in (27) Kecharitomene [47], (29) Kosmosoteira [25], (30) Phoberos [27], and (33) Heliou Bomon [18]. The gap in the manuscript that begins in [66] continues through the middle of this chapter; it is resolved by using (22) Evergetis [10], ed. lines 445–52.
- [68] Diet for Saturdays and Sundays in Lent. A Group B chapter, shared with both (22) Evergetis [10] and (32) Mamas [18]; textually related provisions in (27) Kecharitomene [47], (29) Kosmosoteira [26], (30) Phoberos [28], and (33) Heliou Bomon [18].
- [69] Diet for Wednesday of the Great Canon. A Group B chapter, shared with both (22) Evergetis [10] and

34. MACHAIRAS

- (32) Mamas [18]; textually related provisions in (27) Kecharitomene [47], (29) Kosmosoteira [26], (30) Phoberos [28], and (33) Heliou Bomon [18].
- [70] Diet for the feasts of St. John and the Forty Martyrs. A Group B chapter, shared with both (22) Evergetis [10] and (32) Mamas [18]; textually related provisions in (27) Kecharitomene [47], (29) Kosmosoteira [26], (30) Phoberos [28], and (33) Heliou Bomon [18].
- [71] Diet for the feast of the Annunciation. A Group B chapter, shared with both (22) Evergetis [10] and (32) Mamas [18]; textually related provisions in (27) Kecharitomene [47], (29) Kosmosoteira [27], (30) Phoberos [28], and (33) Heliou Bomon [18].
- [72] Diet for holy week. A Group B chapter, shared with both (22) Evergetis [10] and (32) Mamas [18]; textually related provisions in (27) Kecharitomene [47], (29) Kosmosoteira [27], (30) Phoberos [28], and (33) Heliou Bomon [18].
- [73] Easter service; dietary discretion for the sick. A Group B chapter, shared with both (22) Evergetis [10] and (32) Mamas [18]; textually related provisions in (27) Kecharitomene [47], (29) Kosmosoteira [28], (30) Phoberos [28], and (33) Heliou Bomon [18].
- [74] Diet for the Week of Renovation. A Group A chapter. See also other provisions in (20) Black Mountain [34], (30) Phoberos [28], and (43) Kasoulon [10].
- [75] Diet for the Week of St. Thomas and the last week of Pentecost. A Group A chapter.
- [76] Fasts of the Holy Apostles and the Nativity. A Group B chapter, shared in part with both (22) Evergetis [10] and (32) Mamas [18]; textually related provisions in (27) Kecharitomene [48], (29) Kosmosoteira [28], (30) Phoberos [29], [30], and (33) Heliou Bomon [18].
- [77] Diet for days of fasting; diet during Christmas season. A Group A chapter. See also other provisions in (20) Black Mountain [38], [45]; (27) Kecharitomene [46]; (30) Phoberos [16], [17], [19]; (32) Mamas [17]; (33) Heliou Bomon [17]; (45) Neophytos [C4]; (36) Blemmydes [11]; (39) Lips [32]; (43) Kasoulon [5], [8]; (55) Athanasios I [5]; and (58) Menoikeion [8].
- [78] Diet to spite the Artziburians. A Group D chapter, shared with (32) Mamas [19] and (33) Heliou Bomon [19]. See also other treatments of this diet in (20) Black Mountain [20], [55]; (28) Pantokrator [12]; (30) Phoberos [19]; and (36) Blemmydes [11].
- [79] Fellow-brethren to eat with other monks. A Group D chapter, shared with (32) Mamas [19] and (33) Heliou Bomon [19].
- [80] Steward's qualifications for office. A Group C chapter, shared in part with (22) Evergetis [13] and (30) Phoberos [35]. See also different provisions in (29) Kosmosoteira [32], (32) Mamas [7], and (33) Heliou Bomon [7].
- [81] Installation of the steward. A Group B chapter, shared with both (22) Evergetis [13] and (32) Mamas [7]; textually related provisions in (29) Kosmosoteira [34] and (33) Heliou Bomon [7].
- [82] Joint supervisory responsibilities of the superior and the steward. A Group A chapter.
- [83] Monks to help harvest the crops. A Group A chapter.
- [84] Steward subordinated to superior. A Group A chapter. (28) Pantokrator [64] takes the opposite approach, obliging the superior to make no administrative undertaking without consulting the stewards.
- [85] Property managers. See also [110] below. A Group A chapter.
- [86] Duties of the second steward. A Group A chapter.
- [87] No private possessions; no servants. A Group B chapter, shared with both (22) Evergetis [22], [24] and (32) Mamas [34], [35]; textually related provisions in (29) Kosmosoteira [47], (30) Phoberos [41], [43] and (33) Heliou Bomon [33], [34].
- [88] Why stewards may need to be removed from office. A Group B chapter, shared with both (22) Evergetis [13] and (32) Mamas [2]; textually related provisions in (27) Kecharitomene [13] and (33) Heliou Bomon [2].
- [89] Stewards' tenure of office. A Group B chapter, shared with both (22) Evergetis [14] and (32) Mamas [2]; textually related provisions in (27) Kecharitomene [13], (29) Kosmosoteira [41], (30) Phoberos [35], and (33) Heliou Bomon [2].

THIRTEENTH CENTURY

- [90] Justifications for removal of stewards. A Group B chapter, shared with both (22) Evergetis [14] and (32) Mamas [2]; textually related provisions in (29) Kosmosoteira [41], (30) Phoberos [35], and (33) Heliou Bomon [2].
- [91] Installation of officials. A Group A chapter. See similar provisions in (22) Evergetis [29], (27) Kecharitomene [18], (29) Kosmosoteira [35], (30) Phoberos [30], (32) Mamas [6], and (33) Heliou Bomon [6].
- [92] Installation of officials without keys; tenure of office for officials. A Group B chapter, shared with both (22) Evergetis [29], [32] and (32) Mamas [6] (investiture only); textually related provisions in (27) Kecharitomene [18], (29) Kosmosoteira [35], [38], (30) Phoberos [47], and (33) Heliou Bomon [6].
- [93] Inventory of movable property given to the ecclesiarch. See also [95] below. A Group A chapter. See similar treatments in (27) Kecharitomene [20], (32) Mamas [8], (33) Heliou Bomon [8], and (58) Menoikeion [4].
- [94] Purpose of the inventory. A Group D chapter, shared with (32) Mamas [37] and (33) Heliou Bomon [37].
- [95] Annual inventory check of movable property. See also [93] above. A Group A chapter. Part of the text is missing in a gap in the text that continues down to part of [97].
- [96] Duties of the cellarer. See also [105] below. A Group D chapter, missing, but cf. (27) Kecharitomene [23], (32) Mamas [11], and (33) Heliou Bomon [11]. The entire text is missing in a gap in the manuscript that continues down to part of [97].
- [97] Superior to inspect the storehouse. A Group A chapter. The gap in the manuscript that begins in [95] ends part way through this chapter.
- [98] Cellarer subordinated to the superior. A Group A chapter.
- [99] Removal of the cellarer. A Group A chapter.
- [100] Duties of the treasurer. A Group A chapter. See similar treatments in (27) Kecharitomene [24], (32) Mamas [10], and (33) Heliou Bomon [10].
- [101] Reconciliation of accounts every two months. A Group A chapter.
- [102] Communal wardrobe. A Group C chapter, shared in part with (22) Evergetis [25], (29) Kosmosoteira [52], and (30) Phoberos [44]. (32) Mamas [28] and (33) Heliou Bomon [28] make different provisions.
- [103] Exchange of garments. A Group C chapter, shared with (22) Evergetis [25], (29) Kosmosoteira [52], and (30) Phoberos [44].
- [104] Duties of custodian of tools. A Group A chapter. Cf. the work supervisor found in (20) Black Mountain [80].
- [105] Duties of the superintendents of provisions, the storehouse and of the dependencies. A Group A chapter. For other descriptions of the duties of provisioners, see [96] above, and (27) Kecharitomene [23], (32) Mamas [11], and (33) Heliou Bomon [11]. Officials analogous to the superintendents of dependencies are found in (9) Galesios [221], [244].
- [106] Equality in food and drink. A Group B chapter, shared with both (22) Evergetis [26] and (32) Mamas [34]; textually related provisions in (27) Kecharitomene [56], (29) Kosmosoteira [53], (30) Phoberos [45], and (33) Heliou Bomon [33].
- [107] Additional food for sick monks. A Group B chapter, shared with both (22) Evergetis [26] and (32) Mamas [34]; textually related provisions in (27) Kecharitomene [56], (29) Kosmosoteira [53], (30) Phoberos [45], and (33) Heliou Bomon [33].
- [108] Sick brothers not to demand excessive food. A Group B chapter, shared with both (22) Evergetis [41] and (32) Mamas [34]; textually related provisions in (27) Kecharitomene [57], (30) Phoberos [56], and (33) Heliou Bomon [33].
- [109] Qualifications of property administrators. A Group C chapter, shared with (22) Evergetis [34], (29) Kosmosoteira [40], and (30) Phoberos [49].
- [110] No lay property managers. See also [85] above. A Group A chapter. Laymen are permitted to serve in this capacity in (27) Kecharitomene [31].

34. MACHAIRAS

- [111] Distant estates may be alienated. A Group A chapter. Unprecedented; cf. discussion of the issue in (27) Kecharitomene [10] and in (45) Neophytos [10].
- [112] The baker and his assistants. A Group A chapter. For bakers and bakeries elsewhere in our documents, see (11) Ath. Rule [30]; (15) Constantine IX [4]; (19) Attaleiates [16], [INV 9]; (23) Pakourianos [6], [21]; (26) Luke of Messina [8]; (27) Kecharitomene, Appendix A; (28) Pantokrator [33], [45], [52]; (29) Kosmosoteira [62]; (35) Skoteine [9]; (37) Auxentios [7]; (38) Kellibara I [17]; (45) Neophytos [20]; (56) Kellibara II [2]; (57) Bebaia Elpis [145]; and (60) Charsianeites [C1]; a baker is also among the signatories to (32) Mamas.
- [113] Manual workers not to engage in idle talking. A Group B chapter, shared with both (22) Evergetis [21] and (32) Mamas [35]; textually related provisions in (29) Kosmosoteira [47], (30) Phoberos [39], (33) Heliou Bomon [34], and (58) Menoikeion [17]. See also (11) Ath. Rule [30], [31] for similar craftsmen.
- [114] Disciplinary official. A Group A chapter. See also descriptions of this official's duties in (4) Stoudios [2], [18]; (11) Ath. Rule [17]; (22) Evergetis [31]; (27) Kecharitomene [26]; (29) Kosmosoteira [37]; and (30) Phoberos [48].
- [115] Women banned from monastery; no consumption of meat; school for youths intending to become monks. A Group A chapter. The ban on women is analogous to but textually independent of those found in (22) Evergetis [39], (28) Pantokrator [18], (29) Kosmosoteira [84], (32) Mamas [27], and (33) Heliou Bomon [27]. For the ban on meat, see also (25) Fragala [B4] and (26) Luke of Messina [3]. (23) Pakourianos [31] makes a similar provision for a boy's school.
- [116] Hospitality for other monks and notables. A Group A chapter. See other provisions for hospitality in (21) Roidion [B2], [B3] and (42) Sabas [8].
- [117] Entertainment of visiting magistrates. A Group A chapter. See also (21) Roidion [B7] and (26) Luke of Messina [3], [8].
- [118] Charitable distributions. A Group C chapter, shared in part with (22) Evergetis [38], (29) Kosmosoteira [56], and (30) Phoberos [55]. (32) Mamas [13] and (33) Heliou Bomon [13] have different provisions.
- [119] Rationale for exclusion of women from almsgiving. A Group C chapter, shared with (22) Evergetis [38], (29) Kosmosoteira [56], and (30) Phoberos [55].
- [120] Superior to search cells. A Group A chapter, textually independent of but recalling (22) Evergetis [27], (27) Kecharitomene [50], (29) Kosmosoteira [53], (30) Phoberos [45], (32) Mamas [20], and (33) Heliou Bomon [20].
- [121] Introduction to the Basilian canons. Most of the following thirteen chapters, [122] through [134], are drawn from the pseudo-Basilian Poenae in monachos delinquentes, PG 31, cols. 1305–20, but from a text rather different from our edited version that incorporated elements of the Pachomian Praecepta. There is also a mostly different set of these canons in (45) Neophytos [CB1] through [CB12].
- [122] Punishment for a monk who fails to report another's plan to flee the monastery. Cf. Poenae 40, PG 31, col. 1312B; also found in (45) Neophytos [CB1].
- [123] Punishment for a departure without the superior's approval. Cf. Poenae 12, PG 31, col. 1308C; also found in (45) Neophytos [CB2].
- [124] Punishment for boorish behavior at table. Cf. Poenae 28, PG 31, col. 1309B.
- [125] Punishment for eating without receiving the blessing. Cf. Poenae 21, PG 31, col. 1309A.
- [126] Punishment for absence from dinner. Cf. Poenae 34, PG 31, col. 1309D.
- [127] Punishment for lateness at compline. Cf. Poenae 37, PG 31, col. 1312A.
- [128] Punishment for unauthorized conversation or socialization. Not found in our text of the Poenae.
- [129] Punishment for intruders in the kitchen. Cf. Poenae 52, PG 31, col. 1313A.
- [130] Punishment for entering or sleeping in another's cell. Cf. Poenae 23, PG 31, col. 1309B; also found in (45) Neophytos [CB6].
- [131] Punishment for unauthorized correspondence or distribution of monastic property. Cf. Poenae 59, PG 31, col. 1313C; also found in (22) Evergetis [22] and (45) Neophytos [CB5], [CB10].
- [132] Punishment for manual workers eating fruit before it is blessed. Not found in our text of the Poenae,

THIRTEENTH CENTURY

- but see (32) Mamas [19], (33) Heliou Bomon [19], and (43) Kasoulon [11] which refer to a similar custom, and the Pachomian Praecepta [73], [75], ed. A. Boon, Pachomiana Latina (Louvain, 1932), pp. 34–35.
- [133] Even personal services not to be administered without the superior's permission. Not found in our text of the Poenae, but (32) Mamas [24] and (33) Heliou Bomon [24] have this provision, which may be derived in part from the Pachomian Praecepta [97], ed. Boon, p. 40.
- [134] Punishment for theft of fruit from the garden. Not found in our text of the Poenae, but cf. the Pachomian Praecepta [77], ed. Boon, p. 35.
- [135] Admonition to all officials. See also [165] below. A Group A chapter. The condemnation of official carelessness recalls (22) Evergetis [32]; cf. [19].
- [136] Reception of visiting relatives. See also [116] above. A Group A chapter.
- [137] Need to observe the (Basilian) canons. A Group A chapter.
- [138] Value of the canons. A Group A chapter.
- [139] Purpose of the typikon. A Group A chapter. Cf. the discussion of the purpose of the inventory in (32) Mamas [37] and (33) Heliou Bomon [37].
- [140] Designation of a successor. A Group A chapter. See also such designations in other documents: (1) Apa Abraham [1], (10) Eleousa [11], (41) Docheiariou [4], (48) Prodromos [6], (49) Geromeri [14], (50) Gerasimos [3], and (52) Choumnos [A3].
- [141] Exclusive confession to the superior. A Group C chapter, shared with (22) Evergetis [15] and (30) Phoberos [35]. (32) Mamas [29] and (33) Heliou Bomon [29] have different treatments.
- [142] Monks' obedience to the superior. A Group C chapter, shared with (22) Evergetis [16], (27) Kecharitomene [12], (29) Kosmosoteira [43], and (30) Phoberos [36]. (32) Mamas [24] and (33) Heliou Bomon [24] have different provisions.
- [143] Monks' mutual affection for one another. A Group C chapter, shared only with (22) Evergetis [16].
- [144] Exhortation to the superior. A Group B chapter, shared with both (22) Evergetis [17] and (32) Mamas [42]; textually related provisions in (27) Kecharitomene [12], (29) Kosmosoteira [44], (30) Phoberos [36], (33) Heliou Bomon [41], and (58) Menoikeion [19].
- [145] Monks not to question superior. A Group B chapter, shared with both (22) Evergetis [18] and (32) Mamas [44]; textually related provisions in (30) Phoberos [37] and (33) Heliou Bomon [43].
- [146] Superior not to spend the monastery's wealth for friends or relatives. A Group B chapter, shared with both (22) Evergetis [18] and (32) Mamas [44]; textually related provisions in (30) Phoberos [37], and (33) Heliou Bomon [43].
- [147] Correction of the superior. A Group B chapter, shared in part with both (22) Evergetis [13] and (32) Mamas [44]; textually related provision in (33) Heliou Bomon [43].
- [148] Outside monks not eligible to become superior; hostility to privilege. A Group B chapter, shared in part with both (22) Evergetis [17] and (32) Mamas [45]; textually related provisions in (27) Kecharitomene [12], (29) Kosmosoteira [42], (30) Phoberos [36], and (33) Heliou Bomon [44].
- [149] Chapel of St. John the Baptist. A Group A chapter. See discussions of similar dependencies in (13) Ath. Rule [9] and (44) Karyes [2] ff.
- [150] Icons of the chapel of St. John. A Group A chapter. For the furnishings of other small dependencies, see (35) Skoteine [28], [42] and (44) Karyes [3].
- [151] No additional cells to be built. A Group A chapter. See similar restrictions in (13) Ath. Typikon [45], [53].
- [152] Solitaries and their regimen. A Group A chapter. The weekly regime is similar to that prescribed in (24) Christodoulos [A24].
- [153] No sales of living allowances (siteresia). A Group A chapter. These are permitted in (19) Attaleiates [30] but rejected by (27) Kecharitomene [53].
- [154] Founders' commemoration. A Group A chapter. See other provisions in (22) Evergetis [35]; (29) Kosmosoteira [7], [11], [64], [72], [91]; (30) Phoberos [50]; (32) Mamas [40]; (33) Heliou Bomon.

34. MACHAIRAS

- [155] Commemoration of donors of properties. Missing, but presumably a Group A chapter. See also [25] above.
- [156] Commemoration of other benefactors. A Group B chapter, shared with both (22) Evergetis [36] and (32) Mamas [40]; textually related provisions in (27) Kecharitomene [70] and (30) Phoberos [50].
- [157] Commemoration of departed monks. A Group B chapter, shared with both (22) Evergetis [36] and (32) Mamas [39]; textually related provisions in (27) Kecharitomene [70], (30) Phoberos [50], and (33) Heliou Bomon [39].
- [158] Divine preservation of the typikon. A Group D chapter, shared with (32) Mamas [41] and (33) Heliou Bomon [40].
- [159] Designation of heavenly trustees. A Group A chapter. See similar provisions in (10) Eleousa [18], (19) Attaleiates [7], and (57) Bebaia Elpis [13], [14], [123].
- [160] Designation of emperor as a trustee. A Group A chapter. See similar provisions in (18) Nea Gephyra [2], (38) Kellibara I [16], and (39) Lips [3]; cf. (14) Ath. Testament [5].
- [161] Exhortation to the magistrates of the island. A Group D chapter, shared with (32) Mamas [38] and (33) Heliou Bomon [38].
- [162] Curse against violators of the typikon. A Group D chapter, shared with (32) Mamas [41] and (33) Heliou Bomon [40].
- [163] Final exhortation. A Group B chapter, shared with both (22) Evergetis [42] and (32) Mamas [46]; textually related provisions in (27) Kecharitomene [78], (29) Kosmosoteira [57], (30) Phoberos [59], (33) Heliou Bomon [45], and (58) Menoikeion [20].
- [164] No addition to the number of monks. A Group A chapter. See similar scheme of replacement by attrition in (17) Nikon Metanoieite [8].
- [165] Promotion of clerics to offices; carelessness equivalent to sacrilege. See also [135] above. A Group A chapter. For the special honor accorded ordained monks, see also (35) Skoteine [14]; the condemnation of official carelessness recalls (22) Evergetis [32]; cf. [19].
- [166] Scriptural exhortations. A Group B chapter, shared with both (22) Evergetis [42] and (32) Mamas [46]; textually related provisions in (27) Kecharitomene [78], (29) Kosmosoteira [57], (30) Phoberos [59], and (33) Heliou Bomon [45], and (58) Menoikeion [20].
- [167] Reading of the typikon. A Group C chapter, shared with (22) Evergetis [43], (27) Kecharitomene [65], (29) Kosmosoteira [57], and (30) Phoberos [59]. See also different treatments in (32) Mamas [16] and (33) Heliou Bomon [16].
- [168] Scriptural blessing. A Group B chapter, shared with both (22) Evergetis [43] and (32) Mamas [46]; textually related provisions in (27) Kecharitomene [78], (30) Phoberos [59], and (33) Heliou Bomon [45].
- [169] Women's convent in Tamasia. A Group A chapter. For other double monasteries, see (27) Kecharitomene [69], [77], [79]; (31) Areia [M1], [M4], [M5], [M6]; and (54) Neilos Damilas [8].
- [170] Financial support for the convent. A Group A chapter. See the different financial arrangements made for the convent mentioned in (31) Areia [M4], [M5], [M6].

35. Skoteine [Boreine]*: Testament of Maximos for the Monastery of the Mother of God at Skoteine near Philadelphia

Date: November 1247

Translator: George Dennis

Edition employed: Manuel Gedeon, "Diatheke Maximou monachou ktitoros tes en Lydia mones Kotines (1247)," Mikrasiatika Chronika 2 (1939), 263–91 (text at 271–90), with reference to Sophronios Eustratiades, "He en Philadelpheia mone tes hyperagias Theotokou tes Koteines," Hellenika 3 (1930), 317–39, corr. A. Sigalas, EEBS 8 (1931), 377–81.

Manuscript: Vatopedi 3:106 (13th c.)¹

Other translations: Abridged French translation by Pierre Năsturel, "Recherches sur le testament de Maxime de Skoteinè (1247)," in Philadelphie et autres études (Paris, 1984), pp. 74–82.

Institutional History

The Testament is our only source for the history of this foundation. The monk Maximos, the author of this document, was the son of a charcoal burner who inherited [2] a modest private religious foundation from his father and grandfather. Năsturel ("Recherches," p. 86) conjectures that Maximos' father Gregory fled to the mountain on which he established his monastery in the first instance to escape the abuses of the tax collectors of Emperor Isaac II (1185–95), which eventually led to a successful usurpation by a local dynast, Theodore Mangaphas, in 1188.² The Testament indicates the existence of links between the family of the usurper and this monastery down to the middle of the thirteenth century.³ The foundation's original church was so small that only three persons could fit [8] into it at one time. Yet out of these beginnings our author built a substantial and prosperous foundation, a remarkable achievement for an individual of presumably modest means. He assiduously sought donations and made purchases of landed property from pious widows, clerics and monks. Some of the latter either chose or were required to make entrance gifts (prosenexeis).⁴ Though the debt is not explicitly acknowledged, he owed a great deal of his success to wealthy aristocratic neighbors. His foundation benefitted especially from the patronage of the allagator Phokas and his wife Irene;⁵ the lady Athanasia Mangaphaina, who later became a nun,⁶ was another important benefactor.

The fate of the foundation is unknown. The neighboring metropolis of Philadelphia was one of Byzantium's last strongholds in this part of Asia Minor, falling to the Ottoman Turks only in 1390. If the Skoteine monastery was still in existence at that time, it is improbable that it survived much longer. Its precise location has not yet been identified.⁷

Analysis

The Testament is essentially a detailed inventory [24] ff. of the properties and possessions of the Skoteine monastery and its five dependencies, prefaced by a foundation history [2] ff. Administrative and disciplinary matters are treated only briefly [12] ff.

A. Lives of the Monks

1. Number of Monks

As in (37) Auxentios [6] and (45) Neophytos [9], the community was divided into church monks (ekklestiastikoi) and others. The former were to enjoy [14] proper honor and precedence in “where they sit and stand, since they are obliged to pray fervently for all the others.” Before the author assumed charge of the foundation, there was [4] a community of six monks, including his father, grandfather, two uncles, and other relatives. Later, the size of the community increased [5] to at least nine monks, then, during [8] the author’s own superiorship, up to twenty. There are no instructions on the length of the novitiate or the minimum age for admission; the author himself was tonsured [7] while still a boy.

2. Liturgical Duties

The author provides [12] for the monks to participate in a morning and an evening service of daily prayer, to be led by the ecclesiarch in accordance with the prescriptions of a (liturgical) typikon that is also mentioned [24] in the inventory. The patronal feast of the Mother of God receives [19] a special regulation.

3. Manual Labor

There was a role [23] for manual labor in the lives of the monks as well, evidently including viticulture [41] and the production [23] of articles of clothing. However, the author instructs his monks that “they should not produce more than they really need,” that is, no production for the local market economy.

4. Cenobitic Life

The author strongly endorses [13] cenobitic life, rejecting solitary and kelliotic alternatives. Monks were to take meals in common, share the same food, and have no personal possessions. These are traditional Evergetian principles, but there is no use of Evergetian language.

B. Constitutional Matters

1. Independent and Self-Governing Status

Despite this monastery’s origins as a simple private religious foundation, our author was eager to claim [20] for it the status of an independent and self-governing foundation.

2. Choice of the Superior

The superior was free to transmit [20] the monastery to his successor, but not to a lay relative or to any other lay person. Future superiors were to be chosen [17] internally by “collective judgment” of the community. An outside candidate (i.e., a xenokourites) was eligible to be selected if there was no one available internally who was suitable for the foundation’s leadership. Previously, the author’s father Gregory had recruited [5] such a xenokourites to conduct the liturgical services at the foundation. This unnamed ascetic brought two disciples with him, and after ten years’ service here, moved on [8] to the superiorship of another monastery. This indicates that there was a kind of career track for a charismatic xenokourites despite the frequent sentiment against them among founders.

THIRTEENTH CENTURY

3. Other Officials

An ecclesiarch, a cellarer and a treasurer served [22] as the monastery's officials, but the ultimate authority was vested in the superior himself.

4. Patronal Privileges

There was to be [19] a solemn memorial service for the founders each evening. The foundation's chief patrons, the allagator Phokas and his wife Irene, who decorated the church and paid for the construction of the monks' cells, the refectory, the kitchen and the bakery (cf. [45]), were to be buried [9] in the monastery and were to receive a perpetual liturgical commemoration. The nun Athanasia Mangaphaina was apparently allowed [10] to remain in the buildings that she had donated to the foundation; after her death she was to be joined with her husband Mangaphas as the beneficiary of commemorative services.

C. Financial Matters

1. Endowment Properties

The foundation's monks evidently directly administered (and possibly even worked on) their landed properties, which prompted [10] the establishment of five dependencies near the most important clusters because "the brothers in Christ did not have the possibility of stopping for a place to rest." These were: St. Nicholas (probably a house church, in buildings donated by the widow of a certain Berges) [10], St. John the Merciful (paid for by Athanasia Mangaphaina) [10], St. Prokopios at Aulax (built and furnished by Irene, wife of Phokas) [11], [34], St. Constantine [35], and The Saints [41], [42]. These dependencies were well stocked with sacred vessels, vestments, and service books. The author apparently also made use of his family's background in the crafts by providing for watermills and workshops [10], [29], [34], [36], [45] as well as the more commonplace gardens [36], vineyards [40], [41], [45] cattle byres [43], [45], and olive groves [37]. The author's pride in the assets of his foundation is reflected in the detailed inventory ([24] through [45]) of landed property, consecrated offerings, and even livestock [44] included as part of this document.

2. Financial Administration

It was the superior's direct responsibility to see [16] to it that the foundation's properties were not damaged or destroyed. As in the slightly earlier (34) Machairas [82], [84], he was [21] to "administer everything in the monastery down to the tiniest detail," but the monks were to report [16] him to the metropolitan of Philadelphia if he failed to do so, for "his [the superior's] administration ought not to go unobserved." This is an implicit repudiation of the principle embodied in (22) Evergetis [18] that the superior should not be accountable to his monks for his financial administration.

D. Overall Philosophy

Our author prefers [15] an egalitarian style of leadership in which the superior was to regard himself "as of equal station to all the rest" of the monks and not to "think anyone in the monastery is more worthless than himself." Like (31) Areia [T10], our author enjoins [21] the superior to govern collaboratively "together with monks who are knowledgeable and perceptive regarding a wide variety of matters.” On the other hand, the superior was entitled [15] to expel disobedient monks after three warnings.

E. External Relations

1. Recognition of the Rights of the Metropolitan

The author enjoyed good relations with the ecclesiastical hierarchy, and is accordingly generous with the rights [20] he was willing to concede to them: the local bishop was allowed to grant [17] blessing (sphragis) and installation (cheirotomia) to the newly elected superior of the monastery, to have [20] a commemoration (anaphora) in the liturgy, and to provide [20] spiritual correction for the monks. This invites contrast to the entirely different attitude seen in the contemporary (36) Blemmydes [1]. The author also encourages [16] his monks to turn to the metropolitan of Philadelphia if their superior administered the foundation’s properties poorly; the prelate was also to help resolve other disputes between the superior and the monks. Less trusting founders of the eleventh and even the twelfth centuries (though cf. (29) Kosmosoteira [4], [41], [111]) would not have allowed such a large role for the local bishop, but by this time the perceived threat from the hierarchy may well have receded significantly.

2. Relations with the Nea Mone of Chios

The foundation enjoyed close relations with the monks of the Nea Mone, with whom this monastery shared [43] ownership of a cattle byre. That monastery’s superior had also recommended [5] this foundation’s first spiritual director.

* As this publication was going to press, we were informed by Jacques Lefort that the correct form of this monastery’s name is Boreine, not Skoteine. See further volume one of Actes de Vatopédi (forthcoming).

Notes on the Introduction

1. Possibly an autograph, but probably a contemporary copy; see Năsturel, “Recherches,” pp. 73–74.
2. For this individual, see Charles Brand, “Mankaphas, Theodore,” ODB, pp. 1286–87.
3. (35) Skoteine [10], [36], [40], [43].
4. (35) Skoteine [31], [32], [33], [38], [39].
5. (35) Skoteine [9], [38], [41], [45].
6. (35) Skoteine [10], [36], [40], [43].
7. See the observations of Năsturel, “Recherches,” pp. 82–85.

Bibliography

- Beck, Hans-Georg, Kirche und theologische Literatur im byzantinischen Reich (Munich, 1959), p. 696.
- Bompaire, Jacques, “Les catalogues de livres-manuscrits d’époque byzantine (XIe–XVe s.),” in Byzance et les Slaves, Études de Civilisation: Mélanges Ivan Dujčev (Paris, 1979), p. 67.
- Eustratiades, S., “Hagioreitikon Kodikon Semeiomata,” Gregorios ho Palamas 2 (1918), 167–88, at 167.
- Năsturel, Pierre, “Recherches sur le testament de Maxime de Skoteinë (1247),” in Philadelphie et autres études (Paris, 1984), pp. 69–100.
- Talbot, Alice-Mary, “Skoteine Monastery,” ODB, p. 1912.
- Volk, Otto, “Die byzantinischen Klosterbibliotheken von Konstantinopel, Thessalonike und Kleinasien” (Ph.D., diss., Munich, 1955), pp. 173–78.
- Volk, Robert, Gesundheitswesen und Wohltätigkeit im Spiegel der byzantinischen Klostertypika (Munich, 1983), p. 233.

THIRTEENTH CENTURY

Translation

+ I, Maximos, ordained monk and founder of [the monastery of] the most holy Mother of God of Skoteine,¹ have signed in my own hand. +

[1.] “As for man, his days are as grass; as a flower of the field, so shall he flourish” (Ps. 102 [103]:15). This was the cry of King David, God’s forefather, as he was inspired by the Holy Spirit. Reflecting on these words I came to realize how true it is that everything a man has does wither away that quickly, and that all human prosperity and domination is a lie. Indeed every man is a liar, for he spends his life wandering about to no purpose, and he conjures up what ought not to be. In truth, just like grass, the reputation of each man is a picture of vanity. The only solid thing about him is that he has been brought forth in the likeness and in the image of God. For this reason, with the lyre of the Spirit, David proclaimed that human nature “has been made a little less than the angels” (Ps. 8:6). Therefore, I too have been created in the image of God, although I have not preserved that image in its entirety and I have not maintained intact the true man within me. Now, at any rate, I want to make my situation clear to everyone, for I am afraid that the customary separation which is part of human nature will come upon me and will find my affairs in disarray.

[2.] First of all, I bequeath to all orthodox Christians the love and the pardon which is found in Christ. Then, I make the following disposition. My father was the monk, the late lord Gregory, who was a craftsman. Before my birth, he went up to the [p. 272] mountain, the one on which the monastery was founded, accompanied by his apprentices in order to collect the charcoal to be found there. As he looked about here and there at the lay of the land, he was quite pleased. He offered a prayer that if God might allow him to plant a vineyard in this place, he would build an oratory to honor the name of our most holy Mother of God and, with God’s help, he would make arrangements that the liturgy and divine service would be celebrated unceasingly. His prayer was soon transformed into fact in accord with the promise of the Gospel which states: “Every one who asks receives, and he who seeks finds, and to him who knocks it will be opened” (Matt. 7:8; Luke 11:10). He then cleared the dense woods which covered the mountain and planted a small vineyard there.

[3.] Before me my father had sired a female child, and then I was born, but death took the one who had given birth to me, earth rendering its due back to earth, and with her my older sister also died. I was then left in the care of my grandmother, who nourished me with her milk and who brought me to the light [of baptism]. My father had no more concern for the things of this life. Rather, as the saying goes, he put himself beyond the reach of all disorder and confusion,² and, observing the precept of Solomon, he sneered at “the voice of the exactor” (Job 3:18). He ascended the mountain and there he built an oratory dedicated to our all-holy Mother of God. He also constructed a cell with a fence around it. Alone there he earnestly prayed to God for the increase of the oratory erected by him.

[4.] I was just starting to grow up then and was occupied in learning my letters. At the same time my father was very much concerned about putting some educated monk in charge of that oratory and of the vineyards planted around it. In fact some monks did come, but they quickly turned around and went home because the mountain was such a wild, rugged, and inhospitable place. [p. 273] As a result my father persevered in the place by himself as though he were a winged creature, finding his comfort and consolation in God. My grandfather, the monk Niphon, came to live with him. A short time later my uncle on my father's side also went up to join them, and then another who was older. With their numbers augmented by the ties of nature, then, they came to about six monks. They still clung to their previous plan to place this small monastery under the charge of some worthy, formed monk who would see that they performed the morning and evening services of praise in the accustomed manner, as well as the divine liturgy. This indeed was what they were looking for.

[5.] For myself now, I had one day of the week free, while I spent the others in the school of grammar. My father learned that there was a certain godly man dwelling in the region of Sampson. He went and asked the advice of the late venerable lord Basil of the *Nea Mone*³ about such a man. He gave him truly excellent advice. He spoke about the man's virtue, which he could fully attest to from personal experience. My father went off there and found this man in a cell. He gave an account of his coming to him and of his journey, and explained his purpose. The holy man then agreed to his request, and accompanied him all the way to the monastery with two disciples from among the monks following him. He was very pleased with the location, which promised to be quiet and undisturbed. For the man had the greatest possible love for such complete solitude and was well aware of the benefits to be derived from it. It was for these reasons that he had lived in solitude for so many years.

[6.] This man now devoted himself to such a way of life and to meditation on the words of God. My father held him in great reverence and regarded him as on a level with the angels. In fact, as I grew older, I came to spend some time with the man and observed his virtuous conduct, his keeping vigil [p. 274], his love of God, his amazing mortification of the flesh, the fruit of his total self-control, and many other things beyond my ability to number. I myself was pricked by a divine goad. I strongly desired to be with that man and to share his daily life and, as though it were a honeycomb, to be nourished by his divine utterances.

[7.] At any rate, this holy man spoke with my father about my joining them and receiving the monastic tonsure. He did not let a day go by without giving me advice and warning me that all the pleasant things of the world were more bitter than poisonous drugs. But I had no experience of spiritual pleasure, for I was still immature. "Let the time come," I said, "when I am of age for marriage and then I shall choose the monastic tonsure." But he did not let up in his efforts to counsel me and to fill me with dread of the fearful judgment. He was persistent in urging me on. Like the falling rain he hollowed out my stony heart for the reception of his word or, to tell the truth, he shaped it like wax. So his admonitions did not, so to speak, fall upon deaf ears, but they touched my heart and soon accomplished their goal. Much later I would give abundant thanks to the Mother of the Word that I had indeed come into the possession of spiritual pleasure. On the feast of the Exaltation of the precious Cross⁴ the holy man tonsured me. When he placed the holy robe around me, I was filled with unspeakable joy as though I had been led, not into battle, but into a sort of bridal chamber. As a result, I myself entered into spiritual struggles, unlikely as this might seem, following and struggling alongside this holy man in observing the divine commandments.

THIRTEENTH CENTURY

[8.] After my tonsure, which I just recounted, this man stayed with me for two years. He was then honored by being named superior of the monastery of Kounion.⁵ He left me in charge of this monastery, which, with God's approval, began to expand. [p. 275] Each year a very large number of monks came to join us, twelve at times, then eighteen, and up to twenty.

While things were in this state, we worked toward the acquisition of immovable and animate property, inasmuch as our people were lacking the food and clothing they needed. In fact, the church which had been erected by my father was so small that it could not even accommodate three people. We set about building a more spacious divine temple. Since God, who brings everything to a good conclusion, watches over everyone, and arranges things for our benefit, did not despise our weakness and poverty, but kindly granted our requests, I collected a vast amount of material and raised up the present very beautiful church without anyone giving or handing over anything whatever for its construction.

[9.] The church, though, did not have any of the holy icons. But the allagator,⁶ lord Phokas, under God's guidance, decorated it with paintings on wood. He donated only what was essential. All the maintenance for the painters each day and other services came from the monastery and were provided by it. Most recently this same man had also given us the funds to build the refectory, as well as those for the construction of a kitchen and a bakery. May God grant him and his wife the reward due the good [servant] for, in addition to their other good deeds, they were instrumental in bringing down the water that flows into the monastery. They ought to be accorded the privilege of being commemorated unceasingly in the monastery and of being buried in it wherever they choose. This is enough now about the origins and present condition of the monastery.

[10.] Since the monastery did not have any dependency, the brothers in Christ did not have the possibility of stopping for a rest.⁷ At first I established a small oratory dedicated to our father among the saints, the bishop and miracle-worker Nicholas, in the buildings which were donated to me by the wife of the late Berges [p. 276], who gave what aid she could. We have been dwelling in that place until recently. Then in like manner the nun, lady Athanasia Mangaphaina, granted me all the buildings which belonged to her. With her help I erected a church dedicated to our holy father among the saints, John the Merciful. She also donated all her immovable property, I refer to the vineyard in Agridion⁸ and the other one in Kobena, along with the mulberry trees in it, and the workshop with the water mill right by the river, which she obtained by purchase. We made arrangements with her which are to remain in effect for the rest of her present life. After her death commemorative services ought to be held unceasingly for her, along with her former spouse, the late Mangaphas.

[11.] I also acquired another dependency at Aulax⁹ in the area around the river. With the help of the monk Hilarion, also known as Isaac, I built a fence around it. In addition, this same Isaac dedicated to the monastery one half of his share of the fields situated in the area of Epizyga which he had inherited from his parents, that is, a fourth of the entire property. His former wife's sister [donated] her entire share of the fields with his consent. However, about the various possessions of the monastery and other such matters [I shall speak] at another time.¹⁰

35. SKOTEINE

[12.] Let me first call to mind the manner in which my successor is to carry out his duties as superior, and the quality of the daily life which he and the monks under him should strive to attain. In the second place I shall put down all my prescriptions concerning the manner of performing the divine hymnody. This is what I prescribe: the semantron must not be struck nor the evening service of praise begun until the monk appointed by the superior as ecclesiarch should, while holding a copy in his hand, carefully read the typikon and carry out its prescriptions [p. 277] exactly as written. The same is to be observed in the morning service of praise. During the service itself all the brothers in Christ ought to observe silence. Nobody is allowed to speak to anyone else, no matter who they may be.

[13.] The superior ought to direct all the monks practicing asceticism in the monastery to live together in the cenobitic manner. Nobody is to be off by himself, or live by himself, or acquire things for himself. But together they are all to dine at one and the same table and to share the same food.¹¹ A common outlook, a common way of thinking, and love of the brothers should be fostered among them. There is no doubt that living by oneself cuts one off from the others. By so being cut off one is preoccupied with oneself and left to one's own devices, and this is totally incompatible with common life. One thinks about and is concerned about one's own good rather than that of another. Peace and union of minds are put aside and destroyed. On the other hand, having things in common binds together and leads to peace and, as mentioned earlier, is the cause of a complete unity of attitudes and of minds.

[14.] Those who serve in the church ought to receive proper honor in such distinctions as where they sit and stand, since they are obliged to pray fervently for all the others, to keep vigil, and to make every effort to bring about peace and tranquility.

[15.] I enjoin upon the superior that he be meek, gentle, compassionate, peaceful, and very forgiving toward everyone. He does not exalt himself above his own sheep, nor does he think of himself as anything but the most worthless man in the monastery. He must regard himself as of equal station with all the rest and frequently, if necessary, actually serve them. "I did not come," says Christ who is truth itself, "to be served but to serve, and to lay down my life for many" (Matt. 20:28; Mark 10:45). He ought to possess the gifts of giving counsel and of teaching. "He who draws forth," it is said, "what is worthy from what is worthless shall be as my mouth" (Jer. 15:19). He should be an example to all of them, and what he is obliged to teach he should first put into practice. If any member of [p. 278] the cenobitic community should take a stand against his own superior, he should be counseled and admonished. After a first, second, and third warning, as is stated [in the law], he should be expelled from the monastery as a cause of scandal (cf. Titus 3:10).

THIRTEENTH CENTURY

[16.] The superior, along with the others, ought to exercise restraint in dealing with the possessions of the monastery. He should not be remiss, lest these possessions suffer damage or destruction. But if he does act otherwise, the monks should go to the person who is metropolitan of Philadelphia at that time and inform him truthfully of the superior's actions. If indeed he does not fall back into his previous lazy ways, let him remain in his position as superior, but if he persists in what he had been doing, let him be thrown out, and another installed in his place, according to the sacred canons. If some misunderstanding should arise between the monks and the superior, let it be straightened out by the spiritual fathers from outside. If it should stretch out and cause a great deal of tension, then let it be straightened out by the bishop.

[17.] When it comes to naming a person as superior it should be done in this way. If, in the collective judgment of the other monks, the monastery is fortunate to have in it a man worthy to be superior, let him go down from the monastery to receive the sphragis and be installed by the metropolitan then in office. But if the monastery does not have among its monks a man worthy to preside over it, then let them accept a man of blameless life from some other place. This man should then have full authority, and nobody should try to stand up against him on any pretext, for no monk is allowed to hinder him in what he may want to do.

[18.] The gate of the monastery should always be open. Let the monks welcome those who come here. They should not look down on any stranger or anyone in want, but they should receive everyone kindly and honorably, extending their hospitality with whatever the monastery can provide in food and drink.

[19.] The feast of our most holy [p. 279] Mother of God¹² should be celebrated on the twenty-first of November every year without fail. It should be done very splendidly with a great display of lights. On the morrow the fare at table should be very special, and that evening there should be a solemn commemorative service for the founders.

[20.] I leave the monastery absolutely free and not subject to any person who may hold ecclesiastical office nor to any other person among the civilians. It is to regulate its own affairs free of all external interference. The superior, who has received the monastery as free, is obliged to transmit it as free to his successor. He, in turn, must so pass it on to his successor, and so on. It is not to come under the control of any secular person, a private individual, a relative, or a complete outsider. The only exception is that the most holy metropolitan of Philadelphia at the time has the right to confer the sphragis, to have the customary commemoration in the liturgy, and, when necessary, to provide a cure and a correction for souls. But as far as any other right over the monastery is concerned, it is my wish that neither he nor anyone else, no matter how illustrious they may be in their way of life or dignity, is to have any such right.

[21.] The superior indeed ought to be beyond all evil suspicion. His administration ought not to go unobserved, but together with monks who are knowledgeable and perceptive regarding a wide variety of matters, let him administer everything in the monastery down to the tiniest detail.

[22.] The affairs of the church ought to be looked after by the ecclesiarch, the provision of food by the cellarer, and matters connected with contributions and income of all kinds are to be looked after by the treasurer. In all these matters the ultimate authority should rest with the superior.

[23.] I also decree that the monks in this revered monastery should not sell any item from among the garments issued to them or [p. 280] exchange them without the knowledge of the superior. They should not produce more than they really need, for this overturns the common good order, harmony, and spiritual behavior. This suffices on this subject.

[24.] Since we are obliged to give a detailed list of the possessions and acquisitions of the monastery in the present written disposition, this is what it has.

First, what appertains to the church. An ornamented gospel lectionary for daily use. Four books each with the four gospels. Another with the gospel readings for Sundays. The Gospel according to Matthew with a commentary: first and second volumes. Another [copy of the] second volume [of the commentary] on Matthew. Another gospel with selections from John. The four gospels interpreted by [Theophylact, archbishop of] Bulgaria.¹³ The Hexameros of [St. John] Chrysostom. Another by the great Basil. Another by him. The Apostolos for daily use. The Propheteia. A Sticherarion with the new notation.¹⁴ An Oktoechos. The Parakletike with the two canons. A Synaxarion. A Heirmologion. A Kontakarion. Another book with the exaposteilaria for the whole year. The Triodion. The Pentekostarion. Two typika. A Schematologion containing [also] the complete service for funerals. Menaia for the twelve months. A book [containing the lives of the saints] for September [by Symeon Metaphrastes]. Another for the same month. Another for October. Another for half of the month of November. Another for the same month also containing the life of Saint John the Merciful. Another for the same month beginning from the fifteenth of the second book.¹⁵ Another beginning from the fifteenth of the same. Two gospel lectionaries without ornamentation. The book of [St. John] Chrysostom called "The Pearls."¹⁶ Another of the great Basil containing a commentary on the Psalms and various homilies.¹⁷ Two books of [St. Gregory Nazianzen] the Theologian. The Catecheses of [St. Theodore] the Studite.¹⁸ [John] Klimakos.¹⁹ The epistles of the holy apostle Paul with commentary. The one to the Ephesians with commentary. The Acts [of the Apostles] with commentary. Another book with the same. A book of Dorotheos also containing various chapters of Mark.²⁰ [p. 281] A book on "The Statues,"²¹ also including some discourses of [St. Gregory] the Theologian. Another book containing [John] Klimakos, the Pandektes,²² and the Ascetical Treatises of the great Basil. Another copy of [John] Klimakos. Another copy of the Pandektes. A book containing the life of the divine [St. John] Chrysostom. Another work of [St. John] Chrysostom containing various orations. A book of Barlaam.²³ Books by Saint Ephraem, two volumes. A book containing the life of Saint Mary [of Egypt] and various other writings. The Gerontikon, on paper. A Psalter with commentary. A book on paper containing various treatises including one on the revered icons. Five Psalters. A Psalter [donated by] Monomachos.²⁴ A book containing the entire service for [the monastery's patronal] feast. Another book containing canons of certain saints. Another book with the life of Saint Euthymios and certain saints. Three copies of the liturgy of [St. John] Chrysostom.²⁵ Three more [copies of the liturgy] by the great Basil. [The liturgy of the] Presanctified. Another [copy of the same liturgy].

THIRTEENTH CENTURY

[25.] Also: Seven white sets of vestments.²⁶ Another purple set. Two epitrachelia. Another one embroidered in gold.²⁷ Epimanikia embroidered in gold with [representations of] the Annunciation and the Resurrection. Two other pairs. Two pieces [of silk cloth] to cover the chalice. A gold aer.²⁸ Two silk cloths woven with gold [thread] and showing lions. Another one of gold and scarlet with a griffin in the middle. Another embroidered in gold. Another in white and gold. An inner cover for the altar.²⁹ Three altar cloths. Two pairs of candelabra. Other small ones for the entrance. Two more. Five sieves. Two lamnai for the templon. Another two for the archangels.³⁰ Three others for outside in the narthex. Another at the Sepulcher.³¹ Small metal crosses with a censer in the sacred dome. Two metal trays³² [for the kollyba]. A cauldron for the church.³³

[26.] Large icons for veneration. Five others on the templon. On the same templon, the twelve feasts, small icons for the feasts of the Lord. Two decorated images, one of Christ and one of Saint George. [p. 282] An ivory carving of the Dormition and the Nativity. Another small one of the Dormition with ornamentation. Another of [St. Michael the Archangel] the supreme commander [of the heavenly armies] fashioned in bronze.

[27.] In the dependency there is a volume of the menaion for September and October. Another one on paper comprising six months. Another for March. One for April. One for May. One for June. Another for July and August. Another for October. The Sunday gospels. An Apostolos without decoration. The Propheteia. A Sticherarion. A typikon. A Euchologion. A Psalter. A Synaxarion for six months. A Triodion. A liturgy of [St. John] Chrysostom. The monastery also has a book containing the theotokia for the whole year and the lives of the summer saints [by Symeon Metaphrastes]. In the dependency are a set of vestments and an epitrachelion.

[28.] In the dependency of Aulax are these items. A Heortologion on paper for six months. Another on parchment for the whole year. A typikon. A Psalter. An Oktoechos. A Parakletike with two canons. Another small one on paper with various canons. The Propheteia. The Apostolos. A liturgy of [St. John] Chrysostom. A set of vestments. Two silk cloths. An altar cloth and two lamnai.

[29.] These are the metal objects. Five copper pots, three large and two small. Two large standing pots. A tripod to hold cooking pots. Two basins. Four pitchers for serving wine, two of them large. One kettle. One water bucket. A copper jug. Two lamps. Three large water containers. Two cauldrons. Two table bells.³⁴ A tripod to hold cooking pots. An ironworker's shop.³⁵ Two anvils. And all the rest of the equipment for the workshop. Seventeen spades. Four axes. Seven tziera. Ten plowshares.³⁶ Four pruning hooks. Thirty old, large jars. Another thirty kettles (?).³⁷ Six storage chests. Various tables.

[30.] Items of cloth. Four pillows stuffed with cotton. Forty of wool. Four cotton quilts. One hundred heavy blankets. Four bedspreads. One rug. Two large towels. [p. 283] Sheets and face towels.

35. SKOTEINE

[31.] At various times the following fields in the region of Aulax have come into my possession. The field which has the name of Rhymos³⁸ was acquired by me by purchase from Strateges. One in the region of Kyamites for thirteen sheep. Another field in the same region purchased from Grantales³⁹ for ten sheep. Another field belonging to Pelekanos in the same region. Another field by the imperial highway was purchased. For a payment of four hyperpera I acquired the field of Lentianos, which measures about twenty modioi in the same region. The field of Mazarina below the imperial highway in the same region. Another field belonging to Mazarina by the pond. Another one belonging to her in Balanidia. A field in the region of Kyamites which came to me as a gift from the priest Agapetos. Another field in the same region was acquired by purchase from the same priest. I acquired another field from Kalamoutzes and his father for four hyperpera. I acquired another field above the thicket of thorn bushes in the same region from Arbantinos for two hyperpera.

[32.] I also acquired some fields, which go by the name of Chenolakkos, beyond Aulax from the late lector Chamelos, the son-in-law of Proximos.⁴⁰ Another field belonging to him, called Saint Eustathios, extending from the old water conduit and going up as far as Bastagos. Another field of his which is called Makres Moires. Another field of his in the same place which is called Tou Philippou. Another field by the threshing floors. Another field near the dependency of the monastery. Another field which lies below Saint Prokopios. The field near Tou Philippou was purchased by me from the father of Kaloeides.

[33.] Another field by the Makres [p. 284] Moires below the water conduit and extending above it which I acquired by purchase from the priest Alexios. I acquired other fields called Stauriou by purchase from the wife of the ironworker from the city.⁴¹ Another one of Euphemes. I purchased another field in the hollow of the water conduit in the same region from Pothos. In the same region I acquired a field from Montokiklina. I acquired another field in the same region from Maedones. In the same place another field from the same person. I acquired a field by the village of Epizyga from the monk Isaac by way of an entrance gift, just as also from his father, the monk Gregory. In the same village I also bought from Nicholas Kazanes, the son-in-law of Amirasames,⁴² some irrigated fields, about a hundred modioi, for twenty gold hyperpera.⁴³ I also bought another field which is named after Saint George from Magoules for eighteen trikephala [nomismata], and a field of about eighteen modioi from the father of Chrysochoos. By exchange with Boures the son-in-law of Amirasames⁴⁴ I acquired all the fields in the region of Epizyga belonging to him, irrigated and waterless, giving to him a certain vineyard in the region of Tazinoi. Also I acquired a field with a mill from John Charakonites. From the same person another very small field below the dependency along with the old mill. I also bought the old mill belonging to Kazanes with its enclosure.

[34.] I acquired those fields in Aulax which lie opposite the dependency on the other side of the river from the priest Agapetos Exerdiopoulos, George Tridseas and Euphemes.⁴⁵ I acquired another field, called Saint Constantine, on the other side by purchase from Kallierges. I acquired another one by purchase from Moschonas with [p. 285] the other field of the widow which is joined to that of Branias. I also acquired by purchase a field with an old mill for six hyperpera.

THIRTEENTH CENTURY

From the children of the late Monomachos I bought the houses which he had erected along the river in Aulax together with the field there near them for three hyperpera.⁴⁶ The dependency of Aulax which I erected from its foundations and in which the church of the great martyr Prokopios is also established. Along the river in Aulax I constructed three water mills with workshops.

[35.] There is another dependency of Saint Constantine. The dependency of Saint Constantine, as it stands, has its own enclosure with its vineyard, along with the rest of its territory and possessions. The waterless fields above Epizyga, which were called "Ta Kastellia," were divided into three portions. The monastery was in possession of one part, and acquired another from Kazanes for three gold hyperpera. This Kazanes, together with Charakonites and his brother, sold me the field belonging to them, called Kastella, above the dependency. So much for these matters.

[36.] Now, of all the arable land in Domenaki, that is, up to five plots, I possess, resulting from exchanges made with various related persons, one entire plot⁴⁷ for myself. I have also acquired by purchase from Tritides⁴⁸ a field right below Saint Constantine with the ruins of a mill for four gold hyperpera. In the same region I acquired a field from Mazizanes. In addition to the one plot I have in Domenaki, I have acquired one belonging to Rhomnos⁴⁹ Pegadiotes in Domenaki, that is, two kokkia, for eighteen gold hyperpera. From Kalimytos one kokkion and a half for ten gold hyperpera. From Alexios Amirasames one kokkion and a half for nine gold hyperpera, [p. 286] and from the son-in-law of Lavrentes Tzykandyles two garden plots close to the pasture for ten gold hyperpera. The monastery also acquired a workshop with a water mill by the river in Kobena from Mangaphaina. The small mill of lord Melachrenos is obliged to pay the customary fee of eight trikephala [nomismata] to the monastery each year and to do as much actual mill work in it as the monastery requires. Another water mill lower down belongs to the monastery.

[37.] In the village of Rhaos I acquired eleven olive trees by purchase from Axios. Another eleven olive trees belonging to Eudokia Kyminas are held in security by the monastery for seven gold hyperpera. The olive trees of Pyrouses Komnenos. I acquired some additional olive trees by purchase from Bastos. I acquired still more olive trees by purchase from Chazares the brother-in-law of Tourtours.⁵⁰ From Pasinales I bought fifteen olive trees for seventeen gold hyperpera, and at the same time the fifty-seven trees of Rhaos.

[38.] I acquired the field of Saint Peter by way of entrance gift from Abythianos.⁵¹ I also acquired a field in Kybaros from Kathras. In the region of Geranes I acquired another field by purchase from Hysterinos. I acquired a field in Mesotraphos from the late monk Kostomyres. In the region of Kardamon⁵² I acquired fields with all their appurtenances going under the name of Grammatike from the late monk Bartholomew Intres. Another field in the same region was donated to me by the late *sebastos*⁵³ Mytas. In the same region I acquired the field of Phoulanos by purchase. I also acquired a field which is called Kalamaritzi from Liberos. Along the river a field of about one hundred modioi was dedicated to the monastery by [p. 287] lady Irene. The salt marsh on the other side goes together with this. There is another of the holy Theologian. Another of Saint Akindynos. A field at Embole donated by Skrinas. Another field in the same place. I acquired a field of about eighty modioi from the children of Abythianos as an entrance gift. In Mesoglossion I acquired a field by purchase from the late Roseles Tyrannos, with another field which he had in Pantniza⁵⁴ in the region of Dryatos. I also purchased a field from lord Karseres.⁵⁵

35. SKOTEINE

[39.] On the mountain of Kissos there is a field where the imperial highway ascends and which extends as far as the place called Libaditzia, including everything off to the left after it comes down to the path coming from the fort and rises up toward the north. As for the other [path going] toward the threshing floor, all the arable land to the right of this belongs to the monastery. As one descends again from the imperial highway and heads toward the place where there is grazing land, and in which there are troughs, everything to the left and to the right belongs to the monastery. There, taking the path which goes off toward Kasilokome, what is down below to the left belongs to the monastery. I also acquired those fields of Boukolike as an entrance gift from the monk Niphon of Kasilokome. In the region of Melikoures another field of about ten modioi was donated to the monastery by the children of the late Komnenos. This is how these matters stand.

[40.] The boundary of the vineyards and other land about the monastery is as follows. It begins from the vineyard of Phagomodes, the one which had been sold previously by the late protoallagator Bardachlas, goes down the road to the left and comes up against the upper part of the vineyard of the monastery. From there it goes down to the possessions of the late Choneiates on a level with [p. 288] the rocks which form a border, abuts on the property of Saratzes, and comes to an end at the boundary of Kobena. From there it goes up toward the south taking in the vineyards and other lands there by the river, going on evenly to the vineyard of Karantene, of the priest Phlatoumes, also known as Akanthopates, of Botaneiotes, and of Sourmes, then it abuts on the possessions of Mangaphaina. The boundary turns and heads toward the East and comes to a stop at the vineyard of Phagomodes, which is where we began.

[41.] Within this boundary we have described lie the vineyards which were sold by the monastery: a vineyard in the region of Kobena along with some mulberry trees was donated to the monastery by the nun Mangaphaina; a field from Marzautes in which we planted a vineyard; a vineyard below the great martyr Saint Demetrios with all its appurtenances, with the houses in it, and all its territory and possessions; a vineyard in the region of the healing [waters] donated to the monastery by Tyrannina; another vineyard by the river in Aulax planted by us; another vineyard in the region of Prooikoi acquired from Mesopotamia by the revered monastery. On the whole, that is, four kokkia with [the proceeds from the sale of which] the monastery obtained some fields. In Keramareion it also has a field, and in Tria Bouna one was donated to it by the aforementioned lady Irene. At the Saints the monastery acquired a dependency from Kalambakes of blessed memory along with the vineyard around it.

[42.] These are the books in the dependency at the Saints. The gospel readings for Sundays. An Apostolos. An Euchologion. An Oktoechos. A Parakletike. A Psalter. A Triodion. The Propheteia. A Sticherarion with the old notation. A Menaion for September. Another one for September. One for October and for November. Another for March and for April. Another for May [p. 289] and for

THIRTEENTH CENTURY

June. A Sticherokathistarion. A liturgy of the divine [St. John] Chrysostom and one of the great Basil. A typikon. A Heirmologion. A Kontakarion. A Schematologion. A book called “The Pearls.” There are also in this [dependency] eight icons. A set of vestments. Sacred [vessels]. A silver communion spoon. A paten and other things.

[43.] A cattle byre in Modi was donated to the monastery by the late sebastos Mytas,⁵⁶ as well as the fields about it, which come to two thousand modioi, just as they were divided up with the monks of the Nea Mone. In the area of Heliotopos some fields were obtained by the monastery from Mangaphaina. But these must be divided up absolutely evenly with the most noble Vestiaritissa.⁵⁷

[44.] Located in the monastery are nine wagons with yokes of oxen and buffalo, fifteen spare horses, eight mares, fifteen male and female donkeys. Two saddle horses. Three hundred pigs. A hundred⁵⁸ small and large cows. Spare buffaloes. Fifty-five pack mules.⁵⁹ About five hundred sheep and the full complement of those needed to take care of them.⁶⁰ About two hundred beehives in various locations. Then there are various other material possessions which I have not recorded. But the above should suffice.

[45.] In addition, the monastery acquired from lady Irene after her husband, the allagator, lord Phokas, departed this life, three pairs of draft animals (one buffalo and the other [two] of oxen) and two wagons with iron-rimmed wheels. This same lady Irene also had a church erected for the dependency of Aulax and dedicated to the holy, great martyr Prokopios. She also had it adorned with paintings on wood. She also constructed a water mill by the river in Aulax and planted a vineyard in the same place. She deposited two silk cloths and two lammnai in the church of Saint Prokopios. The same lady also paid for the decoration of the great refectory of the monks. She also saw to the construction of the cells for the monks out in front and those out in back. She [p. 290] added to this the two sections of the field she had purchased from Hyaleas and Amiras. She also bought another field from Syritianos Angelos. Lady Irene assigned to this monastery the vineyard belonging to her which is below Saint Demetrios with its appurtenances and its cattle byre. She also arranged for the adornment of the monastery’s gospel, [with] a silk cloth and [donated] a pair of large candelabra. She also had another water mill constructed below the monastery, and she donated one hundred and forty-four hyperpera.

[46.] Therefore, now that I have made this disposition, whoever should attempt to do anything contrary to this manifest testament of mine, be he an official or a subordinate, from the highest to the least, layman or ecclesiastic, whatever rank he may hold, if such a person should be bold enough to attempt to transgress its prescriptions, whoever he may be, not only will he alienate himself from God and the Christian faith, but he will call down upon himself the curses of the three hundred and eighteen holy, God-bearing fathers, and his lot will be with that of the traitor Judas and with those who cried out “Away with him, away with him, crucify” the Son of God (cf. Matt. 27:22). I want this present, manifest testament of mine to remain firm and absolutely undisturbed for all time.

35. SKOTEINE

Written at my behest by the recording secretary of the most holy metropolitan of Philadelphia, the deacon Michael Paximades, in the presence of the witnesses listed below. In the month of November of the sixth indiction in the year 6756 [= 1247 A.D.]

+ Michael in Christ our God faithful emperor and autocrator of the Romans Doukas Angelos Komnenos Palaiologos + ⁶¹

Notes on the Translation

Editors' note: The assistance of our translator, George Dennis [GD], is gratefully acknowledged for the notes to this document.

The two editions of this text by Gedeon (= G) and Eustratiades (= E) are both deficient, quite possibly due to a faulty original manuscript. Sentences are incomplete, verbs are missing, nouns are in the wrong case, and so forth. I have employed G as the basis for the translation, but have taken readings from both and have indicated the alternate ones in the notes. Since I have not been able to see the original, the correct readings frequently cannot be determined with any certainty. [GD]

1. The term means “somber” or “plunged in obscurity”; see Năsturel, “Recherches,” p. 72, and the description of the site in [4] below.
2. Cf. Herodotus 6.35.
3. Probably the well-known monastery on the island of Chios, for which see Anthony Cutler and Alexander Kazhdan, “Nea Mone,” ODB, pp. 1446–47.
4. September 14.
5. Possibly a reference to the monastery of Kounin, for which see Janin, Géographie, vol. 2, p. 164.
6. An officer in one of the corps of the imperial guards; cf. Pseudo-Kodinos 6, 9, ed. J. Verpeaux (Paris, 1966), p. 160. [GD]
7. The text is not clear; G reads ho theòs, which makes no sense; E. has hóthen, which is adopted here. [GD]
8. This could mean “hamlet,” but here it seems to be the name of a locality. [GD]
9. tou aulakos, literally “in the hollow,” but here and later it seems to be used as a proper name indicating a specific locality. See Năsturel, “Recherches,” p. 83. [GD]
10. Reading allote as in E. [GD]
11. ton auton halon, literally, “same salt.” [GD]
12. Feast of the Presentation in the Temple or Entry into the Holy of Holies.
13. See Ch. Papaioannou, “Hen cheirographon tou hypomnematos tou archiepiskopou Boulgarias Theophylaktou eis ta 4 evangelia,” Theologia 3 (1925), 243–55.
14. neophonon. According to G, this is the modern or “new” Byzantine musical notation. The dependency at The Saints had one in the old notation, palaiophonon: see [42] below and Năsturel, “Recherches,” p. 93. [GD]
15. The text seems confused here. Perhaps the scribe has mixed up this sentence with the next, and this one should be omitted. “Second book,” i.e., the preceding one with presumably the first fourteen days of November. According to G, the Greek reads tou deuteroi, “of the second,” whereas E reads it as tou dekembriou, “of December,” which does not yield an improvement in the reading. [GD]
16. Hoi Margarites, a collection of ascetical texts by John Chrysostom. [GD]
17. Probably his Homiliae in psalmos, PG 29, 209–494. [GD]
18. See (4) Stoudios, The Studite Monastic Reform, A.
19. John Klimakos, Scala paradisi, PG 88, cols. 596–1209.
20. Dorotheos of Gaza, Doctrinae, PG 88, cols. 1611–1838, and Mark the Hermit, Opuscula, PG 65, cols. 905–1140; [GD] see also the citation of these authors in (3) Theodore Studites, Concerning Faith.

THIRTEENTH CENTURY

21. John Chrysostom, Ad populum Antiochenum, PG 49, cols. 15–222. [GD]
22. Pandecta scripturae sacrae (PG 89, 1420–1856) by the seventh-century Palestinian monk, Antiochos.
23. Barlaam and Joasaph, a prose romance of uncertain date and authorship, ed. G. R. Woodward and H. Mattingly, Barlaam and Joasaph, Loeb Classical Library, 2nd ed. (Cambridge, Mass., 1967). [GD]
24. Psalterion monomach . . .: E reads monomachen. A Monomachos (deceased) is mentioned later, see [34] below. Nästurel (“Recherches,” 92) suggests that he might have been the donor of this psalter.
25. kondakion Chrysostomikon. On this meaning of kontakion (“liturgy of St. Basil or St. John Chrysostom”), see Lampe, PGL, s.v.
26. E reads hepta, “seven,” whereas G has epises, “equal.” [GD]
27. chrysoklabarikon: “embroidered with gold thread.” See Koukoules, BBP, vol. 2.2, p. 43.
28. aer chrysos: a large veil for the chalice and paten (cf. Lampe, PGL, s.v. aer, B) woven with gold thread. On the so-called golden textiles, see Koukoules, BBP, vol. 2.2, p. 26.
29. sarkesin; most probably the katasarkion, first of the linen cloths laid on the altar. See Lampe, PGL, s.v. katasarka, and Demetrakos, Lexikon, s.v. katasarkion.
30. [missing text]
31. Apparently a representation of the sepulcher of Christ. [GD]
32. apallareai. See Demetrakos, Lexikon, s.v. apalaria / apalarea.
33. anemomiliarion: undoubtedly the same as miliarion, a large kettle for heating water; see Koukoules, BBP, vol. 2.2, p. 100.
34. G has kondai, whereas E reads konía. The reference is undoubtedly to kontion or konti, a small metal bell sounded by the superior at the refectory to announce the beginning and end of the meal. Kontia were also used in church during the liturgy and in religious processions. We are indebted for this information to Professor Constantine Pitsakes of the University of Komotini, who most kindly provided us with a copy of his recent article, “To ‘KONTION’: Nea stoicheia gia ten istoria mias amartyres(:) byzantines lexes (Actes de Saint-Pantélèemôn, ar. 7),” IB Panellenio Istoriko Synedrio, Praktika (Thessalonike, 1992), pp. 117–29.
35. komodromikón: not in the dictionaries. In Byzantine and Modern Greek komodrómos means a person who wanders about from village to village. In the demotic Greek of Cyprus it means an ironworker (so Demetrakos, Lexikon, s.v.), which makes sense here, since ironworkers may have gone from one village to another to work. Ch. Du Cange, Glossarium ad scriptores mediae et infimae Graecitatis (Lyons, 1688) also gives this meaning. [GD]
36. E reads hendeka, “eleven.” [GD]
37. tzykalinaí; tzykaline or alternatively tzykalion or tsoukalin, is another word for chytra, “kettle”; see Koukoules, BBP, vol. 2.2, p. 99.
38. For Rhymos, E reads Rome. [GD]
39. For Grantales, E reads Phrontales. Part of this sentence from “purchased” and the following sentence have been omitted by G, but have been transcribed by E. [GD]
40. E reads gambros, “son” or “brother-in-law,” whereas G has pater. The reading of E has been adopted here, since it is unlikely that the family name of the son differed from that of his father in several instances; see notes 42 and 44 below.
41. polites: in medieval Greek this most probably means a native of the city, i.e., Constantinople or possibly Philadelphia, which was the nearest large city. Komodromos, “ironworker” or “tinker,” could also have become a surname. [GD]
42. G reads pater.
43. Instead of hyperpera, G reads “fields,” here and subsequently. [GD]
44. G has pater.
45. E reads pera, on the other side; G has para, along the river. For Tridsea E has Trivea. [GD]
46. E reads thirty. [GD]
47. “Plot,” stichos, the latter denoted the “line-entry” on a tax roll or the property corresponding to it. See F.

35. SKOTEINE

Dölger, Beiträge zur Geschichte der byzantinischen Finanzverwaltung (Leipzig, 1927; repr. Hildesheim, 1960), p. 141.

48. For Tritides, E. has Tribides. Ruins of a mill, literally, a mill which has disappeared. [GD]
49. For Rhomnos E has Rhamnos. [GD]
50. Instead of syngambros “brother-in-law,” E has simply syngenes “kinsman.” [GD]
51. Abythianos. The spelling of this name follows E. [GD]
52. For Kardamon, E. has Mardymnon. G omits the name Bartholomew. [GD]
53. Instead of sebastos, E has a name, Gibestos. [GD]
54. For Pantniza, E reads Patnixa. [GD]
55. Instead of lord, E reads monk. [GD]
56. E reads geros instead of sebastos.
57. Vestiaritisse, as in E; G has <kyr> Z. viririateses. [GD]
58. E has seventy. [GD]
59. aloga sagmaria bordonia, as in E; these words are omitted in G. [GD]
60. According to G there were 1500 sheep. [GD]
61. Apparently Michael VIII Palaiologos (1259–1282); for a discussion of his problematic endorsement of this document, see Năsturel, “Recherches,” pp. 73–74.

Document Notes

- [1] Meditation on death. Among contemporary documents, see also the reflections on this subject in (34) Machairas [1], (44) Karyes [1], and (45) Neophytos [2].
- [2] Choice of the site for the monastery. The account recalls Athanasios the Athonite’s foundation at Mylopotamos in (13) Ath. Typikon [9].
- [3] Foundation of the monastery by Maximos’ father Gregory. See the contemporary (44) Karyes [2] for another example of a monastic cell designed for “two or three brothers.”
- [4] Family members who joined the monastery. For another founder with many close relatives in religious life, see (31) Areia [T12].
- [5] Recruitment of a spiritual leader. For recruitment of leaders from other monasteries elsewhere, see also (32) Mamas [1], [43]; (33) Heliou Bomon [1], [42]; (37) Auxentios [3]. (34) Machairas [148], however, effectively forbids recruitment for the superiority from external sources.
- [6] The spiritual leader’s personal qualities.
- [7] Maximos’ tonsure. An early tonsure is implied, despite disapproval expressed in (29) Kosmosoteira [3], [49], [50] and (34) Machairas [115]. (36) Blemmydes [9] ff. and (45) Neophytos [3] suggest a change in opinion on this issue, however.
- [8] Expansion of the monastery under Maximos’ direction. For the construction of another church by local subscription, see (17) Nikon Metanoieite, Foundation History.
- [9] Benefactions of Phokas the allagator. Phokas’ wife Irene was also a benefactor of the foundation; see [38], [41], and [45] below.
- [10] Foundation of the first two dependencies. Additional benefactions of Athanasia Mangaphaina are mentioned below in [36], [43], cf. [40]. [27] below may record the service books found at the dependency of St. Nicholas.
- [11] Foundation of the dependency at Aulax; bequest of Epizyga. The dependency, built [45], cf. [34] by the Lady Irene, wife of the allagator Phokas, was dedicated to St. Prokopios. There are also inventories of its movable properties [28] and landed properties [31]. Many of the foundation’s other properties were located in the vicinity, see [32], [34], and [41] below. For the bequest of Epizyga, see also [33], [35] below.
- [12] Regulation of liturgical services. Only a morning and an evening service are envisioned here; cf. provisions for the full sequence of the canonical hours in (34) Machairas [31] ff., (44) Karyes [8], [9], and (probably) (45) Neophytos [12], [C2], [C3].

THIRTEENTH CENTURY

- [13] Requirements of the cenobitic life. For the hostility to non-cenobitic forms of monasticism, see (33) Heliou Bomon [26]; for equality in food, see (22) Evergetis [26] and related documents, most recently (34) Machairas [106].
- [14] Privileges of monks serving in the church. Foreshadowed by (28) Pantokrator [4] and (34) Machairas [81], [165].
- [15] Superior's attitude towards the monks; expulsion of disobedient monks. Evergetian attitudes seen in (22) Evergetis [17] and related documents seem to influence the exhortation to the superior, while the disciplinary procedure set down in (31) Areia [T9] provides a parallel to the provision for expulsions.
- [16] Superior's obligation to care for the monastery's properties; oversight and resolution of disputes by the metropolitan of Philadelphia. See also [21] below. Honest and conscientious administration of property, an early Evergetian concern (for which see (22) Evergetis [14]), was restated most recently in (34) Machairas [90], and here applies to the superior who, as in (34) Machairas [82], [85], is personally responsible for the oversight of the endowment properties.
- [17] Internal selection of future superiors; sphragis and installation by the metropolitan. Combines the traditional reform principle of internal selection with a ready concession of episcopal rights. On the latter, see the more ambiguous treatment in (34) Machairas [9], [17], [18], [120] and the outright rejection of these rights in (38) Kellibara I [15].
- [18] Obligation of hospitality. See similar enthusiasm for this duty in (34) Machairas [116], [118] and (45) Neophytos [10], cf. [20].
- [19] Patronal feast of the Mother of God; memorial service for the founders. The feast of the Presentation is also celebrated as the patronal feast in (10) Eleousa [13] and (34) Machairas [27]. Founders are commemorated in the following thirteenth-century documents: (34) Machairas [31], [44], [150], and [154]; (37) Auxentios [13]; (39) Lips [8], [30], [52]; (40) Anargyroi [6]; and (45) Neophytos [12].
- [20] Independence of the monastery; rights of the metropolitan of Philadelphia. As in [17] above, a traditional reform institution is combined with an acknowledgement of episcopal rights. For contemporary assertions of institutional independence, see (34) Machairas [21] and (36) Blemmydes [1].
- [21] Superior to rule collaboratively. See also [16] above. The support for collaborative rule is found earlier in (31) Areia [T10]. The provision for close administrative supervision by the superior finds a parallel in (34) Machairas [82], [84], [85], [97], [98].
- [22] Duties of the ecclesiarch, the cellarer and the treasurer. See the more elaborate post-Evergetian descriptions of these positions in (32) Mamas [8], [10], [11] and in (34) Machairas [93], [100], cf. [96].
- [23] No production for the market or sale of garments. Traditional restrictions in foundations like this one and those on Mount Athos based in large part on the labor of their monks, for which see (12) Tzimiskes [15], [24] and (15) Constantine IX [2], [6]. The regulation here may be related to the sentiment against sales of annuities in kind, for which see (27) Kecharitomene [53] and (34) Machairas [153].
- [24] Inventory of books in the main church. See [27], [28], and [42] below for books at other locations and also other inventories of books in (19) Attaleiates [INV 7], [INV 12] ff.; (23) Pakourianos [33B]; (45) Neophytos [12]; (48) Prodromos [14]; (54) Neilos Damilas [INV]; and (61) Eleousa Inv. [3].
- [25] Sacred vessels and textiles in the main church. See [28] and [42], cf. [45] below for similar property at other locations and also inventories of consecrated objects in (19) Attaleiates [INV 6], [INV 8], [INV 18]; (23) Pakourianos [33B]; (27) Kecharitomene, Appendix B; (31) Areia [T11]; (48) Prodromos [14]; and (61) Eleousa Inv. [5], [6].
- [26] Icons of the main church. See [45] for icons at the dependency of St. Prokopios at Aulax and also inventories of icons in (19) Attaleiates [INV 5]; (23) Pakourianos [33B]; (48) Prodromos [14]; and (61) Eleousa Inv. [2].
- [27] Liturgical books of a(n unidentified) dependency. Probably composed when St. Nicholas [10] was the foundation's only dependency.
- [28] Inventory of movable property at the dependency of Aulax. Other properties associated with this dependency are listed in [29], [30], [31] (possibly), and [34] below.

35. SKOTEINE

- [29] Cooking vessels and tools. See also the washing and cooking utensils mentioned in (28) Pantokrator [47].
- [30] Linens and bedding materials. See also the bedding supplies mentioned in (28) Pantokrator [37].
- [31] Properties in the regions of Aulax and Kyamites. For a general discussion of the foundation's properties here and elsewhere, see Năsturel, "Recherches," pp. 85–94. Note property acquired from a priest as an entrance gift, with further examples below in [32], [33], [38], and [39].
- [32] Properties beyond Aulax. Many of these properties were evidently donated to the foundation as entrance gifts by the lector Chamelos.
- [33] Properties in Makres Moires and Epizyga. These were primarily properties the author purchased for the foundation's endowment. For the bequest of Epizyga, see also [11] above and [35] below.
- [34] Properties in Aulax at the dependency of St. Prokopios. For this dependency, see also [28] above. Note that the author claims credit for the foundation here but attributes it to the lady Irene in [45] below.
- [35] The dependency of St. Constantine. The monastery's fourth dependency, probably associated with the bequest (entrance gift) of the monk Hilarion (Isaac) discussed above in [11] and [33] and other accessions in Epizyga.
- [36] Properties in Domenaki and Kobena. Many of the properties at Kobena came to the foundation from Athanasia Mangaphaina, including a vineyard [10], [41] and the workshop and mill mentioned here; cf. [40] for the proximity of her properties to the main monastery.
- [37] Olive groves in Rhaos. For olive groves elsewhere in our documents, see (17) Nikon Metanoieite [10], (26) Luke of Messina [9], (29) Kosmosoteira [46], (39) Lips [49], (40) Anargyroi [4], and (48) Prodromos [3], [15]. Olive oil was a staple of the monastic diet, on which a great value was put: see (32) Mamas [11] and (33) Heliou Bomon [11]; it could also be developed as a commercial commodity, as is attested in (15) Constantine IX [2].
- [38] Other properties in various locations.
- [39] Description of properties along the imperial highway.
- [40] Boundary delimitation of properties around the monastery. For other boundary delimitations in our documents, see (27) Kecharitomene [80] and (57) Bebaia Elpis [145].
- [41] List of vineyards; dependency at the Saints. This is the fifth of the foundation's dependencies, apparently a pre-existing facility. See also the scattered references to vineyards in [2], [10], [33], [35], [40] above and [45] below, as well as elsewhere in our documents: (4) Stoudios [A2]; (11) Ath. Rule [30]; (13) Ath. Typikon [9], [10], [53]; (22) Evergetis, Appendix; (23) Pakourianos [32]; (27) Kecharitomene [79], Appendix A; (39) Lips [44], [47], [49]; (40) Anargyroi [4]; (45) Neophytos [10]; (48) Prodromos [3], [15]; (49) Geromeri [13]; (52) Choumnos [A17]; (54) Neilos Damilas [16]; (57) Bebaia Elpis [121], [122], [123], [124], [135], [142], [145], [159]; (58) Menoikeion [12]; and (60) Charsianeites [A6]. The increase in such references in documents of the thirteenth and fourteenth centuries is noteworthy.
- [42] Liturgical books at the dependency of the Saints. Cf. similar inventories for the main church [24], the dependency of Aulax [28], and an unnamed dependency [27].
- [43] Shared properties in Modi and Heliotopos. For the foundation's relations with the Nea Mone, see also [5] above.
- [44] List of wagons and beasts of burden. See also the list of animals in (23) Pakourianos [33C].
- [45] Benefactions of the lady Irene. For this benefactor and her husband Phokas, see also [9], [38], and [41] above.
- [46] Curse on transgressors of the Testament. For this traditional feature, see (8) John Xenos [2], (9) Galesios [246], (10) Eleousa [19], (18) Nea Gephyra [4], (19) Attaleiates [23], (22) Evergetis [12], (23) Pakourianos [18], (24) Christodoulos [B14], [C6], (27) Kecharitomene [1], (29) Kosmosoteira [31], (30) Phoberos [33], (31) Areia [T12], (32) Mamas [4], (33) Heliou Bomon [4], (37) Auxentios [2], (45) Neophytos [22], (49) Geromeri [16], and (54) Neilos Damilas [24].

36. Blemmydes: Typikon of Nikephoros Blemmydes for the Monastery of the Lord Christ-Who-Is at Ematha near Ephesos

Date: 1267¹

Translator: Joseph Munitiz

Editions employed: August Heisenberg, Nicephori Blemmydae curriculum vitae et carmina (Leipzig, 1896), pp. 93–99, rev. Ed. Kurtz, BZ 6 (1897), 394–410 (for [9], [11], [13]); Joseph A. Munitiz, Nicephori Blemmydae autobiographia sive curriculum vitae necnon epistula universalior (= Corpus Christianorum, series graeca 13) (Turnhout, 1984), pp. xxx–xxxii (for [1]); Joseph A. Munitiz, “A Missing Chapter from the Typikon of Nikephoros Blemmydes,” REB 44 (1986), 199–207, at pp. 204–5 (for [4]).

Manuscripts: Monacensis graecus 225, fols. 369v–373v (14th c.) (for [9], [11], [13]); Romanus Vallicellianus graecus 30 (olim C 4), fol. 388v–389r (14th c.) (for [1])

Other translations: English (of [4] only) in Munitiz, “Missing Chapter,” pp. 205–7.

Institutional History

The controversial Nikephoros Blemmydes, the founder of the monastery, had earlier been superior of the monastery of St. Gregory Thaumaturgos in Ephesos (from ca. 1237). He was also noteworthy in his day as a teacher, among whose students were the Nicaean Emperor Theodore II Laskaris (1254–58) and George Akropolites, father of the author of (46) Akropolites. He authored an autobiography, the Partial Account, which provides us with most of what is known about the foundation, and may have been drawn up as a kind of extended preface to the typikon itself.²

According to Munitiz (Partial Account, p. 23), Blemmydes probably began the construction of his monastery in the summer of 1241 during the brief patriarchate of Methodios II. Like most of the activities of our author, who survived no less than four assassination attempts during his life, the foundation of the monastery was controversial. His enemies charged that Blemmydes appropriated assets of the Thaumaturgos monastery for his new private monastery. In his autobiography, Blemmydes rejects the charge, asserting that he had more than ample funds to build the monastery from his own resources.³ The monastery took seven years and nine months to construct—a rare instance in which we have a precise indication of the time required to build such a foundation—during which time Blemmydes remained in his earlier post as superior of the Thaumaturgos monastery.⁴ Munitiz (Partial Account, p. 24) reckons that Blemmydes moved to the new foundation in the spring of 1249. The precise location of Blemmydes’ foundation is unknown.⁵ An unnamed emperor and patriarch are said to have confirmed the monastery’s independent status.⁶

Because one chapter [4] of the typikon quotes from Blemmydes’ Partial Account, Munitiz (Partial Account, p. 27) supposes that the typikon must date from sometime after the composition of the latter which he dates to April 1267. On the other hand, the Partial Account refers to several of the possible components of the typikon, one of which, the tract “De anima,” is dated in one of its manuscripts to March 1263. Like some other founders, Blemmydes composed a Testament at the end of his life. When Patriarch Joseph I (1266–75) came to visit him in 1268, Blemmydes sought his assent to serve as a witness to the document. This was possibly but not certainly a different document from the typikon, since several monastic typika, including (35) Skoteine, are titled testaments. In any event, only a preface is certainly preserved from Blemmydes’ Testament today.⁷ Despite Blemmydes’ precaution, Joseph I ignored the monastery’s independent status after the founder’s death and subordinated it, perhaps in 1273, to the neighboring Galesios monastery of which the patriarch himself had once been superior.⁸

36. BLEMMYDES

Analysis

Only excerpted fragments survive of this document, probably due to the fact that Blemmydes’ monastery was unable to maintain its independence after his death. Three brief tracts entitled “On Faith,” “On Virtue,” and “On the Soul” that enjoyed an independent circulation may once have been part of the typikon.⁹ The chapter on the foundation’s independence, here assigned the arbitrary chapter number [1], may actually be a fragment of the author’s Testament, the preface of which is preserved separately.¹⁰ As Munitiz (“Missing Chapter,” p. 199) has observed, sorting out all the fragments would require considerable research into their respective manuscript traditions. Inevitably the fragments present only a very incomplete picture of the foundation, though sufficient to show the author’s idiosyncratic and generally rigorist outlook on problems of monastic discipline. The possibility cannot be excluded, however, that the overall tone of the entire document was somewhat more traditional.

Like most of the earlier authors of the Evergetian tradition, our author here was disposed to reject claims of episcopal supervision [1] and to resort to appeals to canon law and patristic precedent [9], [11] to support his arguments. Other provisions, such as the institutionalization of monastic ranks [9] and even his surprising eagerness to admit children as novices [9], were foreshadowed in (34) Machairas.¹¹ Still other disciplinary regulations branch out in new directions: the discouragement of the evening meal [11], an unwillingness to dispense with fasting on feasts of the Lord or to refute heretics [11], a hostility to sung prayers [13], and a requirement that the monks conduct [13] all liturgical services while standing.

A. Lives of the Monks

1. Liturgical Duties

Blemmydes provides that the monks’ liturgical prayers should be recited [13] while standing and in a moderate tone, but not be sung. Our author considers singing to be a pleasurable practice, excusable for public performances of the liturgy “as it dispels sluggishness and drives away laziness” but unsuitable for ascetics. The author of (54) Neilos Damilas [12] was another—but less stringent—liturgical conservative in these matters. At Blemmydes’ foundation, not even the sick and the old were to sit down, except for the readings. Those who were unable to stand were to leave the church to rest lest they be seen by the rest of the congregation. Blemmydes shares [4] the concern of the author of (34) Machairas [40], [41] for the purity of the eucharistic bread.

2. Length of the Novitiate

Our author sets [9] the ordinary length of the novitiate at three years, specifically a year wearing black vestments and two wearing the cassock. Those near death could be given tonsure immediately. Citing a canonical precedent, the author was willing to admit candidates for tonsure as young as ten years of age. Moreover, his quotation from a Justinianic novel implies that parental consent would not be required for such an admission, nor could the parents reclaim custody of their child. The author claims to have trained many young candidates who turned out to be virtuous monks. Therefore, such applicants were not to be rejected on account of their educational needs, the effort to gain custody of them, or for fear of scandal. For the young the author prescribes a lengthy novitiate, wearing black vestments until age twelve, then at least seven years wearing [novice's] rags until they reached the age of twenty.

As our author was aware, there was a late antique tradition (endorsed by Basil of Caesarea in [LR 15], [LR 53]) of educating youths, particularly orphans, at monasteries with an eye towards subsequent recruitment. This tradition lay mostly dormant in the earlier Byzantine era, though (23) Pakourianos [31] shows it being observed towards the end of the eleventh century. More recently, the authors of both (34) Machairas [115] and (45) Neophytos [115] had refused to take in lay youths for instruction, although the latter had himself had become a monk [3], [4], against his parents' wishes, at age eighteen, and the former was willing to train youths to be monks. Moreover, our author's contemporary, Maximos, the author of (35) Skoteine [7], had been tonsured at a young age.

3. Diet

Blemmydes recommends [11] only a single meal at noontime, although both the Studite tradition and the more conservative documents in the Evergetian tradition provided (minimally) for two meals daily on non-fast days.¹² As in (37) Auxentios [10] and (45) Neophytos [C4], additional self-imposed dietary restrictions are encouraged. The weak were to be allowed to partake of a second meal of "whatever happens to be available," but our author reasserts his personal preference for eating "a single very frugal meal daily."

Unlike the authors of (22) Evergetis [11] and of the rest of the documents in the Evergetian tradition, Blemmydes is unwilling to allow [11] a relaxation of fasting on Wednesdays and Fridays "on the pretext of celebrating feasts of the Lord," nor for the purpose of "refuting the nonsense of heretics." The latter may refer to the Armenians (so-called "Artzibourians"), in reaction to whose dietary practices during Cheesefare and Meatfare weeks several founders of the late eleventh and early thirteenth centuries endorsed a contrary diet.¹³ Our author prescribes that the diet on Wednesday and Friday fast days should be "taken without olive oil," but drinking wine will be allowed because of scriptural endorsement. Cumin- or fennel-flavored water was to be made available [11] as well; it is identified here for the first time in our documents as an aid against flatulence.

4. Clothing

Much more explicitly than either (34) Machairas [102] or (45) Neophytos [15], our author endorses [9] the institution of gradations of monastic garb, but, like the author of (9) Galesios [130], he considers them to be a recent corruption of "ancient tradition."

B. Constitutional Matters

1. Institutional Independence

The author provides [1] for the independence of this foundation. He was most worried about the various officials of the public church system, i.e., the agents of the patriarchs, metropolitans, and bishops. Their inspectors and visitors were not to have either a general or a particular right of entry, nor was there to be any external investigation or correction of spiritual failings such as the contemporary author of (35) Skoteine [20] was willing to allow. This was an especially bold and forthright rejection of rights of the ecclesiastical hierarchy upheld by Basil II for bishops and metropolitans at the end of the tenth century and by Alexios I Komnenos for the patriarch at the end of the eleventh century.¹⁴ Most of the authors of the documents in the Evergetian tradition generally just ignore these rights of the hierarchy, probably regarding it as a potential threat to the independence of their foundations (but cf. (29) Kosmosoteira [4], [41], [111]).

2. Role of the Superior

Blemmydes forthrightly makes [1] the superior solely responsible for the care of the brotherhood “as it is he who will render an account of his leadership” to God himself.

3. Correction of the Superior

In the event that the superior should lapse into heresy, our author provides [1] that he will be admonished by “the educated members of the brotherhood”; should he persist, the emperor will order him to be tried by the (patriarchal) synod under canon law. This procedure should not be used, however, as a pretext for the superior’s unjust removal from office.

4. Patronal Privileges

The author may also have included [1] an injunction to the monks to commemorate his memory as the monastery’s founder.

Notes on the Introduction

1. For dating, see Munitiz, Partial Account, pp. 27–28.
2. Diegesis merike 2.45–49, ed. Munitiz, Autobiographia, pp. 65–67, and trans. Partial Account, pp. 116–19; for its relationship to the typikon, see Partial Account, p. 4.
3. Diegesis merike 2.46, ed. Munitiz, Autobiographia, p. 66.
4. Diegesis merike 2.48, ed. Munitiz, Autobiographia, p. 67.
5. Munitiz, Partial Account, p. 116, n. 73.
6. Dölger, Regesten, no. 1823, and Munitiz, Partial Account, p. 118, n. 78, suggest the emperor was Blemmydes’ pupil Theodore II Laskaris, who at this time would have been acting as co-ruler with his father John III Doukas Vatatzes (1222–54). The patriarch may have been Manuel II (1243–54).
7. Ed. with English translation by Browning, Prooimia, pp. 24–25.
8. Laurent, Regestes, no. 1405, based on Pachymeres, 5.2, ed. A. Failler, Georges Pachymérès, Relations historiques, vol. 2 (Paris, 1984), p. 441.
9. De anima, De fide, and De virtute et ascési; according to Stiernon, “Blemmydès,” p. 196, based on J. Iriarte, Regiae Bibliothecae Matritensis codices graeci manuscripti, vol. 1 (Madrid, 1769), pp. 197–200, their presence in the original typikon was attested by a now lost manuscript of Blemmydes’ work in the Escorial library, but cf. Munitiz, “Missing Chapter,” pp. 199–200. These tracts are also mentioned in Blemmydes’ Diegesis merike 2.75, ed. Munitiz, Autobiographia, p. 79.

THIRTEENTH CENTURY

10. For this excerpt, see Munitiz, Autobiographia, pp. xxx–xxxi, with n. 55, and Partial Account, p. 3, n. 14, and p. 116, n. 23.
11. Monastic ranks: (34) Machairas [50], [102], [148]; younger student-novices: [115].
12. (4) Stoudios [29]; (22) Evergetis [9], (29) Kosmosoteira [24], (30) Phoberos [24], and (34) Machairas [66].
13. Cf. (20) Black Mountain [90], (32) Mamas [18], (33) Heliou Bomon [19], (34) Machairas [78].
14. Basil II, Peri ton dynaton (996) (JGR 3.314); Alexios I Komnenos, De jure patriarchae (1096) (JGR 3.408).

Bibliography

- Beck, Hans-Georg, Kirche und theologische Literatur im byzantinischen Reich (Munich, 1959), p. 671.
- Bees, N., “Die Klosterregeln des Nikephoros Blemmydes in Bezug auf Pachomios Rhousanos sowie eine Inschrift aus Jenischehir,” BNJ 10 (1932–34), 115–23.
- Browning, Robert, Notes on Byzantine Prooimia (Wiener Byzantinische Studien, band 1: Supplement) (Vienna, 1966), esp. pp. 24–27.
- Macrides, Ruth, “Blemmydes, Nikephoros,” ODB, p. 296.
- Mercati, Giovanni, “Per il testamento di Blemmide,” Bessarione 23 (1917), 337–40.
- Munitiz, Joseph A., Nikephoros Blemmydes: A Partial Account (Louvain, 1988).
- , “Self-Canonization: The ‘Partial Account’ of Nikephoros Blemmydes,” in The Byzantine Saint, ed. Sergei Hackel (London, 1981), pp. 164–168.
- Ševčenko, Ihor, “Nicéphore Blemmydès, Autobiographies (1264 et 1265),” in La Civiltà bizantina dal XII al XV secolo (Rome, 1982), pp. 111–37.
- Stiernon, Daniel, “Nicéphore Blemmydès,” DS, vol. 11 (Paris, 1982), cols. 187–98.
- Volk, Robert, Gesundheitswesen und Wohltätigkeit im Spiegel der byzantinischen Klostertypika (Munich, 1983), pp. 233–36.

As noted above, the author of this typikon quotes without attribution from his own autobiographical Partial Account. In our translation, his borrowings are indicated in boldface type.

Translation

[Chapter 1:] Concerning the monastery¹ being free from anyone’s hand.

More than any other thing I have set first, and tried to ensure in preference to all else, that the sacred foundation dedicated to the Lord Christ-Who-Is should be self-governing and free from any hierarchical hand. This is the foundation for which I have taken quite excessive pains, the haunt of bears, wolves and sometimes even leopards, which I have built up by much sweat and toil into a dwelling place for holy men.² Therefore I stipulate that no loophole therein should belong to any patriarchal, [p. xxxi] metropolitan, or episcopal official, nor to anyone belonging to the administration or clerical staff of any church, not even an archimandrite or delegate, not to any visitor or inspector, whether general or particular.

As an overall principle there should never be any investigation or correction of the spiritual failings here by an outsider, but I ordain that all the care for this brotherhood should be borne solely by their leader. Let him be the one to direct the followers, to inspect their actions, to carry out any investigation, to correct any misdemeanors, as it is he who will render account of his leadership.

36. BLEMMYDES

But should he adopt some erroneous opinion through ignorance, or incur some fault of conduct that is not of mortal importance, after a first, a second and even a third remonstrance by the educated members of the brotherhood, if he does not amend, then it is just that he be judged by the synod, at the emperor's order, and brought to his senses by canon law, once the case has been referred by his fellow ascetics. However if somebody under the influence of some passion brings an unjust sentence against him, let him be sentenced to consignment in the fire of hell on the day of God's just judgment, and may the same befall anyone who deliberately tries to spoil in any way the efforts I have consecrated to the Lord.

Since it is I who have stipulated and ensured that the sacred foundation and house of contemplation be self-governing, it is necessary that at the divine ceremonies the commemoration should be made instead of "In the first place . . .³ [p. 204]

Chapter 4: The bread, wine and incense offered to God.

As for the things for the holy altar, those offered to God, [are] superior to others, I shall treat of those first. Indeed as for the breads that are provided for the Feeder of all, and are to become the body of the Master, which admits no filth of any sort, let them be as clean as possible; and let the wine be choice, as it is to be rendered into the most honored blood of the Lord. The incense should be composed out of eagle-wood and ordinary black incense, the latter being preeminent among all to be found, because the Lord, of whom the incense is a type, [consists] not of one nature but of the highest divinity and common humanity, the latter being without blemish and mixture, indeed of one composite person, he who offered himself "on your behalf, a fragrant offering" (Eph. 5:2 from Exod. 29:18) as priest, and as God received himself along with the Father and the Son.

However the incense, being a type, remains a type, whereas the bread, while on the one hand it is to be consecrated and is laid upon the altar in place of the body of the Master, and in this sense it may be called a counter-type of that body, and the wine of the blood, yet on the other hand after the most sacred and awe-inspiring invocation of the rite, and after the three-fold signing upon them of the cross, they surpass the [role of] counter-type and attain that strangest of perfections, the bread being made into the very body of the Lord beyond sense perception, and the wine mixed with water being made in a similar manner into the blood of the same Lord and God.

[= Blemmydes, Partial Account 2.66, ed. lines 7–19]: Indeed, because the wine was not neat, the pair of divine liturgists⁴ were at pains to speak accurately. They do not call it "wine," but by the expressions they used make it clear that it was the very drink to which we are accustomed, undoubtedly wine mixed with water. As the word "cup" denotes in turn two things—the content which is drunk is termed the "cup," and also the instrument itself, in which is contained the drink, is customarily called the "cup"—the two fathers divided between them these two meanings of the word: one applied the word to the content,⁵ the other to the container.⁶ Both have spoken explicitly of the bread as "bread," but they did not want to call the second of the offerings "wine" in order to forestall the impression that it was unmixed.

[= Blemmydes, Partial Account 2.64]: Since for a rational animal the most important and most appropriate of all solid foods is bread, and of the liquid foods the most beneficial for such a creature is wine, as it is transformed most quickly by the natural processes into blood, and since moreover it is well known that the generation of the blood and the development of the flesh are produced by the foodstuffs, when the Lord wanted to unite us to himself, he gave us bread to eat which he himself ate, having altered it into his own flesh. [It was] as if this bread, eaten by the Lord, digested by him, made into the body's juices, distributed once more, made into his blood, added to him, had been rendered into the flesh of the Lord himself by adventitious growth and resemblance.

[= Blemmydes, Partial Account 2.65]: But all these are nature's processes, and the creator of nature, he who gave her the power to function, cut short these multiple paths and transformed the bread, without a passage of time, [p. 205] in supernatural fashion, even before eating it, into his own flesh, not into a part of his flesh, but into its very entirety. Even after the partition of the bread, it was his good pleasure that each single part should be the whole of his flesh, and that all the parts should be one and the same flesh. That is why we receive the whole Christ in the mysteries, each can take the whole into himself, and can mingle with the whole, and dwell in Christ, and Christ in him (cf. John 6:56), even though Christ is wholly in each. He is one and the same without division in all.

[= Blemmydes, Partial Account 2.64, ed. lines 1–7]: He also provided us with the wine to drink, which he himself had drunk and in the manner in which he had drunk, obviously mixed with water and not neat. Here also, before drinking it, he changed it into his own blood in a way that is wonderful, inexpressible and divine. The One who "sustains all things by the word of his power" (cf. Heb. 1:3) can perform all things by simple authority when he so wishes, bringing some things out of non-being, and transforming other things in a way beyond our grasp. [p. 93]

Chapter 9: The candidates for the monastic life.

Those who come to the monastery with the intention of adopting the monastic life should be received, provided they are at least ten years old, on condition that they appear to have the type of character that is suitable for a life consecrated to God. The fortieth canon of the Sixth Ecumenical Council stipulates: Anyone who wishes to take upon himself the monastic yoke should not be under ten years of age.⁷ Therefore such candidates should not be sent away because of their extreme youth, nor should their own parents be allowed to drag them away by force. Nor does the civil law permit this: "We forbid," it says, "that parents remove their own children from holy monasteries when the children have chosen the monastic life."⁸

Children should be accepted and everything possible should be done for their care; anyone who teaches them to live according to Christ becomes the mouthpiece of Christ. In general, those who have learned the rudiments of the spiritual life from a tender age [p. 94] are found to be more adept than the others, just as we see happening in all other professions and branches of science. However they should be trained with great sobriety and educated to practice self-discipline in the use of food, sleep, conversation, custody of the eyes, and all else that pertains to this virtue. They should not be too forward either with one another, or with their elders, nor ever enter [another] cell. They should live apart, but should not form private groups. They should always be where they can be seen, and they should keep to themselves. They should be trained in quick understanding and in asceticism. Earlier they should have agreed to renounce completely all intercourse and contact with their parents and other relatives.

I have known many such candidates, whom I trained in this way with the help of God, reach very high grades of virtue and perfection, and an exceptional self-control, both in word and action. Even their natural impulses were restrained thanks to constant exhortations, reprimands, and all sorts of instruction. When were they ever plagued by foul language, which everyone recognizes to be a sure way of separating the user from God the Holy, and of enrolling him among the dirty demons? They were all extremely pure in speech and conduct. They were also humble, acknowledging in humility the root of all the virtues, and truthful, having learned that all falsehood comes from the Evil One (cf. John 8:44). They had been led gently and without great efforts to eschew all swearing, in pursuance of the Lord's most gentle command (cf. Matt. 5:34). They constantly showed by their deeds that they loved to obey and serve not only their tutor, but also one another. They were cut off from the world and from those of the world. They were masters of their hunger and appetite, accustomed to sleep on the ground or on hard beds superior to all pampering of the flesh. They had learned to reject in a spirit of pure poverty all preoccupation about what they were wearing. [p. 95] They had banished from among them as utterly hateful all evil-minded rivalry, which breeds enmities, but welcomed a healthy one as praiseworthy for the mutual affection it engenders—not that they competed with one another for individual progress in virtue, but rather that they urged one another on towards the good. Their mutual esteem was such that each considered his companion completely superior to himself in all respects.

36. BLEMMYDES

It is obviously a good thing for a man to take upon himself the yoke of virtue in his youth. Therefore one should conscientiously accept such youths and not turn them away because of the work required for their education and custody, nor because of the danger that may arise if one is lazy or negligent. On their innocent hearts, which are pure as fresh new writing tablets, one should inscribe with great diligence the different letters and signs that constitute salvation, out of respect for the Savior and Teacher, the one common to us all, or at least out of fear of the account to be demanded of us.

During the first period, these very young candidates should only be required to wear black, until each has passed his twelfth birthday. Then, once that preliminary training is ended, let them start wearing the [novice's] rags, unless they have given signs of being more attracted to the pleasures of the world and are not suitable to make a complete renouncement. They are to be well tested during the rags period for at least seven years. Then if they have shown that they are worthy of the monastic habit, they may elect to adopt the full garb, provided they are at least twenty years old.

As for adult candidates, who have attained mental maturity and who present themselves at the monastery, let them wear black for one year, then adopt the [novice's] rags for two more. After this three-year period, they can don the monastic habit if they so wish, provided they have shown themselves worthy of the garb.

I have laid down [p. 96] these norms on the supposition that no special danger is foreseen. When death is imminent the holy habit will be granted without delay to those who are leaving this world. The monastic garb itself, if one considers the matter objectively, allows no difference of grades, even though the speculations of recent thinkers have debased the ancient tradition on this point. Therefore if some candidates are chary of the trials involved by a complete renunciation, and are not ready to don the habit because of the vows that impose such trials, they can continue as wearers of the [novice's] rags until they have reached the appropriate grade of courage and full spiritual vigor required for the spiritual and sacred exercise undertaken in the hope of gaining the prize, and until they are fulfilling all the obligations of the vows even before they have taken them.

THIRTEENTH CENTURY

Chapter 11: The nourishment of the ascetics.

Once a day at the sixth hour the table should be punctually and appropriately prepared with every possible care for the brethren. Those who prefer, out of a sense of devout self-discipline, to refrain from the more substantial foods, should not be impeded nor disregarded in any way. Let a regime be prepared for them that will be as they wish. Hot water should also be made available for those who wish to drink it, and some cumin or fennel added.⁹ The first is good against flatulence and prevents the development of wind in the stomach; the second not only has this property, but in addition it has the virtue of making one somehow more alert. Both, when served heated to the third degree, cause no dehydration. They are most helpful, especially fennel, which can be made not only from the seeds but also from the stalks and foliage. Cold water can be harmful for people who drink it constantly, [p. 97] if they do not boast very strong stomachs.

I have learned that among the ascetics it was the custom to eat only once a day, and thus I follow the ancient norm of men who were famous in the ascetic life. However I have consideration for those who are not strong enough to do this and I give them permission to eat a second time in the evening from whatever happens to be available. As instead of long fasts a single very frugal daily meal was preferred by the early fathers, in the sense that satiety and repletion were to be avoided, I agree with this advice of the fathers, and although I impose no obligation, I approve of the monks eating one meal a day with restraint. Such a way of life drives away all self-conceit and provides the body with the strength needed for spiritual activities.

I do not agree with those people who say that occasionally Wednesday and Friday should be counted as a Saturday and Sunday from the point of view of eating well, on the pretext of celebrating the Lord's feast days and refuting the nonsense of heretics. But we who belong to God have been taught that the divine feasts are to be celebrated by the spiritual, rather than corporeal, delights. I have also heard that the fasts of the heretics occur not just on Wednesdays and Fridays, but during the whole of certain weeks during which the Wednesdays and Fridays have been specially distinguished by certain people in some mysterious manner. Among us at any rate let the nourishment on Wednesdays and Fridays continue to be taken cooked without olive oil; but the use of wine is permitted. The latter will ensure a certain bodily well-being—because what is more suitable for rejoicing the heart of man than wine? (cf. Ps. 103 [104]:15) and the apostolic rule¹⁰ concerning Wednesday and Friday will be rigorously observed without any quibbling. [p. 98]

Chapter 13: The recitation of prayers to God without sung hymns and the perfect order to be observed in the church.

Those who have dedicated themselves completely to the God who brought them into being, those who have rejected all things of the world for love of Him who has selected them out of the world, those who have chosen a life in the Lord which is superior to the world, all these should be recognized to be superior to the majority of mortals, and they should lead a life which is more lofty than the usual or the conventional. Those who are named after contemplation¹¹ and who labor in asceticism are to abandon completely all thought and endeavor for what is pleasurable, and should strive to advance straight and true towards God, given up purely and utterly to his adoration in thought, word and deed. In consequence, let them not hanker after the use of hymns and singing for their prayers, with tunes and the varieties of tones; not because such singing is always to be rejected—for it is surely to be permitted when there are celebrations in public. It is most suitable for a congregation, and especially for the weaker among them, as it dispels sluggishness and drives away laziness, and greatly contributes to arouse attention—but simply because the better is to be preferred to the good, and the more honorable to the honorable. For those who are fervent the most suitable is to strive and struggle with all the unadulterated tension of one's soul towards the Lord, without any distraction of pleasure and relying on spiritual happiness alone and on the joy of compunction. [p. 99]

In the recitation of the hymns and prayers the voice should be neither too low, as if one were on the point of expiring, nor too loud, as if one wanted to crack the vocal chords: moderation is praiseworthy everywhere and in every way. There should be no talking, even if it may seem to be very useful, at any moment during the singing and appeal to the Lord. All common chatter, that is not concerned completely with God, should also be excluded from the most holy church during the intervals. Nobody may remain seated while reciting the holy, sacred office.

It is well known that some in fact nearly all [monks], are accustomed to chant the so-called “kathismata” from a seated position, but here everyone should be standing when he recites anything holy and sacred, and nobody may sit down, except at the moment of a reading, even though he be very old or very sick. If anybody is incapable of standing, because he is old or sick or weakened by illness, he should leave the church, when he is absolutely forced to sit down, and he should take a little rest, but avoiding being seen by the congregation.

Nobody should move about in the church while the service is being performed, unless he is absolutely required to do so by the sacred ordo at the moment of the readings alone. A perfect order should be observed, both in the church and in all the holy monastery, by all members of this most holy community of ascetics and contemplatives.

Notes on the Translation

Editors' note: The translation has been slightly adapted from those previously published in order to fit the conventions of our edition.

1. The term used here is hesychasterion.
2. Cf. similar language in the Diegesis merike 2.45, ed. Munitiz, Autobiographia, p. 65.
3. End of the text for this chapter; the remainder of the page is left blank in the manuscript.
4. John Chrysostom and Basil of Caesarea.
5. Liturgy of St. Basil, ed. F. E. Brightman, Liturgies Eastern and Western (London, 1896), 405.
6. Liturgy of St. John Chrysostom, Brightman, Liturgies, p. 387.
7. C. Trull.(692), c. 40 (R&P 2.398).
8. NJ 41.
9. For cumin-flavored drinks at part of the Lenten diet, see (4) Stoudios [30]; (22) Evergetis [10]; (27) Kecharitomene [47]; (28) Pantokrator [12]; (29) Kosomosoteira [25], [26]; (30) Phoberos [28]; and (34) Machairas [67].

THIRTEENTH CENTURY

10. Cf. Constitutiones apostolorum 5.20.18; 8.47.69, ed. F. Funk, Didascalia et Constitutiones Apostolorum, vol. 1 (Paderborn, 1905), pp. 299–301, 584–85.
11. hesychia.

Document Notes

- [1] Institutional independence; no external investigations or corrections; superior to be judged by the (patriarchal) synod; commemoration of (the founder?). See the declarations of institutional independence in (22) Evergetis [12] and related documents; for similar conceptions of monastic “independence” in post-reform institutions, see (37) Auxentios [2] and (35) Skoteine [20]. (29) Kosmosoteira [4], [41], [111] actually welcomes resolutions of internal disputes by the ecclesiastical authorities while (35) Skoteine [17], [20] readily concedes to them the right to conduct spiritual investigations.
- [4] Purity of the sacramental elements, incense. (34) Machairas [40] and (59) Manuel II [9], cf. (29) Kosmosoteira [85], likewise show a sensitivity to the purity of the sacramental bread. For Blemmydes’ use of his eucharistic discourse to the Armenians (Diegesis merike 2.64–66, ed. Munitiz, Autobiographia, pp. 33–34) in this chapter, see Munitiz, Partial Account, pp. 7–8.
- [9] Age of candidates for tonsure; disciplinary rules for youths; length of the novitiate for adults; critique of the gradations of monastic garb. Basil of Caesarea, Regulae fusius tractatae 15, 53 ([LR 15], [LR 53]), PG 31, cols. 952–57, 1041–44, also encourages the education of youth within his monastery. The fact that Blemmydes had been accused of the practice of homosexuality early in his clerical career heightens the sensitivity of these provisions; see Diegesis merike 1.14, 21, ed. Munitiz, Autobiographia, pp. 9, 13, with Munitiz, Partial Account, pp. 10, 51 n. 32. For the three-year novitiate, see (22) Evergetis [37] and related documents. For the hierarchy of monastic garments, see (3) Theodore Studites [12], (4) Stoudios [A2], (9) Galesios [130], (34) Machairas [102], and (45) Neophytos [15]. A portion of this chapter (paragraphs 5, 6 and part of 7) is also cited by the sixteenth century Athonite monk Pachomios Rhousanos; see Bees, “Klosterregeln,” pp. 119–20, with Munitiz, Partial Account, p. 4, n. 15.
- [11] Dietary regulations. (55) Athanasios I [4] also rejects breaking fast days for the celebration of feasts; cf. the sympathetic discussion in (20) Black Mountain [52], [53]. For an example of a special diet to refute heretics, see (20) Black Mountain [38], [55]; (30) Phoberos [19]; (32) Mamas [19]; (33) Heliou Bomon [19]; and (34) Machairas [78]. (20) Black Mountain, (37) Auxentios [10], and (45) Neophytos [C4] also lend their approval to additional voluntary ascetic observances.
- [13] Regulation of liturgical services. (54) Neilos Damilas [12] is hostile to the influence of secular music on liturgical services. (55) Athanasios I [4] is likewise concerned with posture during services; (11) Ath. Rule [20] forbids the use of staffs and footstools in church, while (9) Galesios [139] permits the former and (22) Evergetis [4] and related documents permit the latter.

37. Auxentios: Typikon of Michael VIII Palaiologos for the Monastery of the Archangel Michael on Mount Auxentios near Chalcedon

Date: 1261–1280/81¹

Translator: George Dennis

Edition employed: Aleksei Dmitrievsky, Opisanie liturgicheskikh rykopisei, vol. 1: Typika, pt. 1 (Kiev, 1895), pp. 769–94.

Manuscript: Codex 85, nunc 79, Theological School, Halki, now in the Patriarchal Library, Istanbul (1749)

Other translations: None

Institutional History

Mount Auxentios (modern Kayisdag) was located in the Asiatic suburbs of Constantinople, about seven miles southeast of Chalcedon.² It was the site of many monastic foundations since its namesake, St. Auxentios, a fifth-century Syrian monk, took up residence in a cave on the mountain during the reign of Marcian (450–457).³

One of the later foundations was a monastery of the Holy Apostles (Sts. Peter and Paul),⁴ whose superior, Leontios Theotokites, became patriarch of Constantinople in 1189.⁵ The present typikon states [1] that Michael VIII's grandfather Alexios Palaiologos, who was the son-in-law of Alexios III Angelos (1195–1203), restored a monastery on Mount Auxentios that is usually identified with this foundation.⁶

A brief dedicatory poem addressed to the foundation's new patron, St. Michael the Archangel, indicates that the monastery was ruined during the Latin occupation of Constantinople (1204–61).⁷ The dating of the monastery's rebuilding in honor of this new patron and of the composition of the typikon is problematic. On the evidence of the typikon, both occurred after the Greek reconquest of Constantinople in 1261. While the typikon contains a number of references to Michael VIII's career up to this event, there are none to any later events, and the author's address [16] to an unnamed patriarch of Constantinople seems to presume the latter's recent restoration to his traditional see.

On June 29, 1282, Michael VIII's son, the co-emperor Andronikos II, and Patriarch John IX Bekkos (1275–82) assisted at the celebration of the feast of Sts. Peter and Paul (the previous patrons?) at the monastery.⁸ As Pargoire ("Saint-Auxence," p. 561) realized long ago, this event is the only fixed point of chronology for the monastery. Thanks to it, we know only that the monastery was in existence at that date, but not when it was rebuilt, much less when the typikon was written for it.

There is only one additional fact known about the foundation after the founder's death in 1282, namely that its superior continued to defend Michael VIII's unionist policy of reconciliation with the Roman church after it had been condemned by the Council of Blachernae in April 1283.⁹

THIRTEENTH CENTURY

We do not know when the monastery was abandoned, but it is unlikely to have survived the Turkish conquest of Chalcedon in 1350.

Analysis

A. General Characteristics

1. Utility for Understanding Imperial Patronage

Despite Michael VIII's proclamation [2] of the monastery's independent status, the typikon provides some insight on patronal rights in a more traditional imperial monastery. Some other founders of the thirteenth century, like the authors of (35) Skoteine [20] and (36) Blemmydes [1], were also applying the "independent and self-governing" status as an utilitarian overlay on various earlier forms of organization for Byzantine monasteries without necessarily making the significant structural changes of the sort that once seemed necessary, in the eleventh and twelfth centuries, for the sake of ideological consistency.

2. Influence of Earlier Typika

The emperor follows [8], [10] the trend, observable in (35) Skoteine [12], (39) Lips [30], and (45) Neophytos [12], [C4], of simply incorporating an endorsement of a liturgical typikon, (usually of St. Sabas) in lieu of detailed treatments of liturgy, diet, or both. In other respects, this document could be said to be neo-Evergetian, given the large number of usages and even a few similarities of diction shared with (22) Evergetis though there are no actual quotations.¹⁰

3. Original Contributions

In terms of its new materials, the dissonant philosophical content of this document is remarkable, and forms a striking contrast to the precedent-centered outlook of those texts drawn up in the Evergetian tradition. We are told that "slavery is a violent intrusion of tribal law into our lives" [2], that the use of counsel and persuasion is preferable to the use of force [3], that the accumulation of wealth by monasteries is morally indefensible while others live in poverty [9], that it is "not a good idea" for a superior to rule arbitrarily [9], and that generations of rulers have a continuing obligation to honor their predecessors' pious benefactions [15]. Among the monastic typika, only (22) Evergetis dares to make a similarly bold defense of its author's program, and it is arguable that no other typikon challenges so many conventional Byzantine attitudes.

B. Lives of the Monks

1. Number of Monks

There were to be [6] not more than forty monks at this foundation, including sixteen assigned to the performance of liturgy and twenty-four for other services. The latter were to be assigned at the superior's discretion to tasks both inside the monastery and outside in the fields. However, even those assigned to work outside were to attend liturgical services as much as possible, while those devoted to hymnody could also be assigned chores. The emperor rationalizes this unusually flexible deployment of monastic personnel thusly: "my majesty wants everyone to be exercised in obedience."

Aside from the superior himself, the following officials [7] of the monastery are identified: the steward, the ecclesiarch, the treasurer, the cellarer and the provisioner.

2. Liturgical Duties

The ecclesiarch was to supervise [7] the sixteen monks assigned [6] to liturgical duties. The daily and nightly psalmody was to follow [8] the Palestinian model (i.e., the liturgical typikon of St. Sabas) with the exception of the Sunday night vigils, “for it is not possible for those who have been working hard all day to spend the night singing psalms.” Perhaps the expectation that even monks dedicated to liturgical duties should perform [6] some manual labor obliged the emperor to make this concession. The patronal feast of the Archangel Michael, celebrated on November 8, was to be celebrated [14] in splendid fashion along with monks from neighboring monasteries. Memorial services [13] for departed monks were another important responsibility that the emperor interprets as a kind of intergenerational contractual responsibility of the existing monks to their predecessors. Records of those to be commemorated were kept in two sets of diptychs, one kept in the monastery’s library and the other by the ecclesiarch, presumably in the sacristy. The monks were also obliged to conduct daily and annual memorial services for the members of the Palaiologan family who had patronized the monastery over three generations.

3. Manual Labor

The twenty-four monks devoted to manual labors received [6] their assignments from the superior, but many worked [7] under the general supervision of the treasurer, who provided them with the materials needed for their work assignments and collected the products of their labor. Other agricultural laborers (some of whom may have been laymen) were under the steward’s supervision. Specific workers mentioned in the typikon include [7] cooks, bakers, farmers, gardeners, vine-dressers, cowhands, shepherds and gatekeepers. The emperor provides [7], cf. [12] for a periodic rotation of assignments, as his wife did later in (39) Lips [17]. Those undertaking heavy manual labors were to receive [7] extra allotments of clothing.

4. Length of the Novitiate

The emperor considers [12] a novitiate of six months to be sufficient to determine a candidate’s suitability for enrollment as a tonsured monk. This is a return to the short novitiate initially advocated by (22) Evergetis [37], but which had steadily fallen into disfavor during the twelfth and thirteenth centuries as succeeding founders, even those in the Evergetian tradition, generally favored longer novitiates. Also, while documents in the Evergetian tradition usually instruct the superior to test applicants by assigning them to tasks suited to their abilities, the emperor here provides that they must be “exercised in every service in the community” regardless of their rank in secular society.

5. Coexistence of Cenobitic and Hesychastic Lifestyles

Although the emperor declares [11] that living in common is “the law of nature,” and that sharing is enjoined by God himself, he was willing to allow the superior to settle a number of monks as solitaries in their own cells in so far as the monastery’s resources should permit. Thus he endorses the recent trend (cf. (34) Machairas [152] and (45) Neophytos [17]) away from the indifference or active hostility towards non-cenobitic monasticism that was a feature of the Evergetian tradition in the twelfth century. The emperor and like-minded founders of the thirteenth century were returning, therefore, to pre-Evergetian conditions of the tenth and eleventh centuries during which time a monk's elevation to the status of a solitary was seen as a deserved reward for especially virtuous living. The emperor intended that the monastery should supply the hesychast solitaries with clothing and footgear, but that they should not be allowed to be a financial burden on the foundation.

THIRTEENTH CENTURY

For the rest of the monks, the emperor bans [5] private possessions and orders that they be content with the communally provided food and clothing. He announces [7] the termination of the previous practice in this institution of paying a stipend (roga) to each monk, which he denounces as "a craze for gold" and "at variance with the monastic manner of life" (cf. the clothing and bathing allowances in (32) Mamas [28]). As usual for most documents of this era (but cf. (60) Charsianeites [B3]), there is no attempt to defend the cenobitic lifestyle as being morally superior to the alternatives. The emperor's specifications for the articles of clothing that the monastery would provide to each monk suggest [7] equal treatment for all. As in the Evergetian tradition, no new clothing was to be issued until the old items were returned.

6. Diet

The emperor refers [10] to the liturgical typikon of St. Sabas for the regulation of the monks' diet, for fast and non-fast days as well as for feasts of the Lord and those of the Mother of God. This may indicate he preferred to take a stricter approach to the interruption of fasts to celebrate feast days that was a common feature of Evergetian dietary provisions (cf. (36) Blemmydes [11]). Some of the emperor's supplementary regulations follow Evergetian usages, however, including his provision of discretionary authority for the superior to relax fasting for the old, the sick, (and here) hard laborers, and his injunction to observe silence at meals so that the readings can be heard. His encouragement of additional self-imposed dietary restrictions was in keeping with the increasingly rigorist spirit of the times.

C. Constitutional Matters

1. Independent and Self-Governing Status

The emperor proclaims [2] the independence of his monastery in a chapter that provides an updated list of threats to institutional autonomy, specifically the protectorate (ephoreia), supervision (epiteresis), and union (henosis) with another monastery (i.e., as a dependency) and all other forms of overlordship "which may [be made to] seem more respectable by being called 'solitude.'" Clearly the emperor's greatest concern was that future public officials, either of the church or the imperial government, might seize ("nationalize," to use a not inappropriate modern term) the foundation, supposedly for its own well-being.

The emperor provides a modern ideological justification for institutional independence on the grounds that "freedom ought to be greatly prized and is clearly the most important thing of all for intelligent people" while "slavery is harmful and oppressive." Joined to this ideological justification is the emperor's practical observation that "monasteries that are self-governing are more flourishing and self-sufficient than those that are subject to various individuals" who are said to siphon off their revenues and exploit the properties "as if they were their own."

2. Leadership

On the grounds that it is “customary and proper for those erecting monasteries and settling a community of monks in them to establish very capable protectors for them,” the emperor designates [16] the patriarch (unnamed) as the monastery’s guardian (epitropos). The emperor envisioned the patriarch and his successors upholding the monastery’s interests to his own successors on the imperial throne and seeing to it that none of the monastery’s properties was alienated.

For practical purposes, the monastery was to administer [2] itself under the direction of the superior and the leading monks selected for their age, learning, and piety. As a group they were to be accountable to no one except to God himself. Should the superior be remiss in fulfilling his obligations, however, these same monks were to admonish [5] him privately or, if a standoff should develop, bring the matter to the attention of the emperor for his aid in effecting a reconciliation.

In a passage that echoes some of the procedures and language found in (22) Evergetis [13], [14], the emperor provides [3] for the election of the superior “with the participation of the entire brotherhood,” provided that they can agree on one candidate. Orthodox beliefs, ordination, and modesty are included among the qualifications for office. As in (32) Mamas [1], (33) Heliou Bomon [1], and (35) Skoteine [17] (though not (34) Machairas [148]), an outside candidate (a xenokourites) was eligible for election, but such a superior must uphold the typikon without change, seeing that “it is not uncommon that a man brought in from outside, once he has assumed authority, might like to change the regulations and substitute them with those he knows from previous experience.” Should the brotherhood lack a consensus candidate, it was to refer the election to the ruling emperor, who would designate a new superior on his own.

The superior was responsible [7] for appointing the other officials of the monastery. They were to be selected on the basis of their expertise in the management of the foundation’s movable and immovable properties. As in (22) Evergetis [32], they would enjoy lifetime tenure of office—unless promoted or removed for poor work or dishonesty. The monks were not to quarrel [5] over who was assigned particular positions.

3. Style of Rule

The emperor asserts [9] that “even though the superior is allowed to do what he wants without the consent of the others, still it is not a good idea.” Therefore, the superior should govern in consultation with the monastery’s senior officials, being particularly careful in this respect regarding matters of financial administration. Elsewhere, the emperor urges [4] the superior to adopt a benevolently paternalistic style of spiritual governance, lest he “exercises his authority by force rather than by counsel and persuasion.” He takes this same approach in (38) Kellibara I [18].

4. Patronal Privileges

The emperor reserves for himself and his successors a number of important patronal privileges such as might have been seen in traditional imperial or private religious foundations. As noted above, he was to select [3] the foundation’s superior if the monks were unable to make a unanimous choice on their own. The emperor was to conduct the installation of the new superior by granting him the rod and staff of office, which are said to be symbolic of his governing functions of punishment and support, respectively. The emperor also claims [5] the right to resolve disputes between the superior and the leading monks of the community. Lastly, the emperor and his ancestors who had patronized the monastery for three generations were entitled [13] to memorial services.

5. Reading of the Typikon

Following the prevailing trend that had been established since the twelfth century to have more frequent readings of the typikon (cf. (32) Mamas [16] and (45) Neophytos [11]), the emperor insists [13] on a monthly reading of his foundation document.

D. Financial Matters

1. Financial Administration

The emperor declares [7] that it is necessary for the superior to rely on officials of proven competence to handle the monastery's financial administration "because it is too much for one man to deal adequately with such a variety of matters." Nevertheless, the superior was to take in [9] the annual (cash) revenues of the monastery (preferably in the presence of the steward, ecclesiarch and the treasurer), make payments on the monastery's fixed obligations, and be kept informed of occasional expenditures (presumably by the treasurer). The emperor warmly endorses the policy of open financial administration previously advocated by twelfth-century founders in the Evergetian tradition (cf. (27) Kecharitomene [24] and (32) Mamas [10]). There was also to be a monthly accounting of revenues and expenditures (another twelfth-century Evergetian institution) by the superior, the three officials mentioned above, and any clergy among the monks. Unlike the authors of (23) Pakourianos [26], (27) Kecharitomene [24], and (29) Kosmosoteira [94], however, the emperor did not want the superior to store up surplus money in the monastery's treasury. Any unneeded revenue was to be distributed for charitable causes instead.

The steward was to be in overall charge of property management and revenues in kind. He was responsible [7] for supervising agricultural workers, appointing (with the superior's approval) monks or laymen as property administrators, and increasing the value of the monastery's assets.

The emperor was aware that he was devoting state resources to support what was an essentially private religious foundation. He asserts [15] that "we have not emptied out vast sums from the imperial treasury, nor allocated populous villages nor fertile and fruitful fields, proving thereby that the imperial majesty rules and does what it wills" for fear that such allocations might well be canceled by one of his successors. He leaves vague, however, precisely how he made [1] "a more generous provision to supply the monks with the necessities of life" than that which his grandfather had granted the monastery at its foundation, and the inventory once included in the document as [17] is now missing. We can infer, however, that the emperor made annual cash payments from the treasury a more important component of this support than the traditional grants of landed property, and that the monks were henceforth to be self-supporting to some degree on the lands that they already had.

2. Inalienability of Property

As noted, the patriarch, in his capacity as guardian of the monastery, was to assure [16] that the foundation's properties were not alienated. The emperor seems to have been more concerned [15] about the termination of other support, most likely annual cash payments, by one of his successors. For the sake of argument, he lists and then dismisses possible alternative uses of the money. As a concluding argument, he reminds his successors of how he himself has confirmed the donations of his predecessors to ecclesiastical institutions and other beneficiaries. Therefore, he states, “we request that that principle [of intergenerational reciprocity] be observed regarding our own judgments.”

E. Overall Philosophy

1. Attitude towards Privileges

The document illustrates the emperor’s ambivalent attitude towards the recognition of aristocratic privilege in the context of monastic discipline. On the one hand, there is his requirement, unprecedented in these documents, that each novice be rotated [12] through a duty cycle in all the services of the community “no matter what sort of secular dignity or position he held.” On the other hand, one must reckon with the peculiar philosophy [4] behind his rationalization for the superior’s special treatment of monks based on their “former manner of life,” namely that “because of this, strange as it may seem, a certain wonderful equality comes from inequality, as in other matters one might find that inequality comes from equality.”

Servants and craftsmen are warned [5], on pain of expulsion, not to provide items to monks without the approval of the superior, which suggests that the emperor, even more so than the authors of (32) Mamas [34] or (34) Machairas [115], did not want to encourage the formation of servile relationships in the community. Also, in an echo of provisions in (22) Evergetis [42], the emperor warns [5] against “special friendships and company” which he thought not only cause “scandal and great suspicion” but “are harmful and destructive” in other ways.

2. Misogynist Tendency

The emperor takes [12] an even harder line than was customary in documents in the Evergetian tradition in his ban on access by women to the monastery, even for worship, whereas (29) Kosmosoteira [84], for example, permits them to enter for this purpose, and even (27) Kecharitomene [80], written for a nunnery, permits men to make carefully supervised visits for the same reason. The only exceptions the emperor would allow in his foundation were women of the imperial family. In the absence of a provision for daily charity, the exclusion of women from participation along the lines of (22) Evergetis [38] was superfluous. Women, presumably benefactors, were allowed to be commemorated [13] in the diptychs along with departed monks, yet they could not be buried within the monastery.

F. External Relations

1. Relations with the Ecclesiastical Hierarchy

The emperor carefully defines [2] the rights of the local prelate, the metropolitan of Chalcedon, and his successors: reverence due them “as shepherds and guardians of souls” (possibly but not certainly a recognition of the right of spiritual correction), commemoration (anaphora) in the liturgy, three small honoraria (kaniskia) annually, and three pounds of wax. The emperor declares, “let him [the metropolitan] be content with these gifts alone and not put pressure on the brothers to make any further donation,” but the ruler also provides that a newly elected superior should receive the sphragis from the metropolitan as well. This is about as full a concession of ecclesiastical rights as might be expected of any founder acting in a private capacity, and it may be a response to the increasing assertiveness of the patriarchate in asserting its legal and canonical prerogatives (cf. (55) Athanasios I, with discussion below in Chapter Nine).

2. Institutional Philanthropy

There were traditional charitable distributions at the gate of this monastery on such special occasions as the patronal feast of St. Michael [14] and the annual memorial service for the founder [13], which were one day apart from one another in November. The superior was also to make [7] routine donations of worn clothing to the poor. The monastery's most significant philanthropic contribution must have been a result of the emperor's return to Studite practice (see (3) Theodore Studites [21]) in ordering [9] the monastery not to store up surplus wealth. The emperor alludes to a considerable anti-monastic sentiment in some circles of Byzantine society when he asks rhetorically, "How can they [the monks] enrich themselves while others in the world are poor and worn out by the deprivation of necessities?" Therefore any surplus revenues were to be donated at the end of the year for ransoming prisoners, supporting orphans, and providing dowries for destitute maidens.

Notes on the Introduction

1. The traditional dating is "around" or "before" 1280/81: see Dmitrievsky, Opisanie, vol. 1, pt. 1, p. xcix; Gedeon, Typikon, p. 14; Janin, Géographie, vol. 2, p. 48; and I. M. Konidares, Nomike theorese ton monasteriakon typikon (Athens, 1984), p. 60; cf. Beck, KTL, p. 696. Internal evidence suggests an earlier date, however; see below, Institutional History.
2. Talbot, "Auxentios," p. 236.
3. For these foundations, see Janin, Géographie, vol. 2, pp. 44–50, and Pargoire, "Saint-Auxence."
4. For this foundation, see Janin, Géographie, vol. 2, p. 47, and Pargoire, "Saint-Auxence," pp. 448–58.
5. Pargoire, "Saint-Auxence," pp. 452–53.
6. So Janin, Géographie, vol. 2, p. 47, and Pargoire, "Saint-Auxence," pp. 453–54.
7. Papageorgiu, "Zwei Gedichte," pp. 676–77; cf. Pargoire, "Saint-Auxence," p. 454.
8. Pachymeres, 6.28, ed. A. Failler, Georges Pachymères, Relations historiques, vol. 2 (Paris, 1984), p. 633.
9. George Metochites, Historia dogmatica 1.77, ed. Angelo Mai, NPB, vol. 8, p. 102.
10. Evergetian usages: [3] election of the superior, cf. (22) Evergetis [13], [14]; [5] no "special friendships," cf. (22) Evergetis [42]; [7] lifetime tenure of office, cf. (22) Evergetis [14]; [10] dietary discretion for the sick, cf. (22) Evergetis [10]; [10] silence at meals, cf. (22) Evergetis [9]; [12] short novitiate, cf. (22) Evergetis [37]; [12] ban on admitting women, cf. (22) Evergetis [39]; [13] monthly reading of the typikon, cf. (22) Evergetis [43].

Bibliography

- Beck, Hans-Georg, Kirche und theologische Literatur im byzantinischen Reich (Munich, 1959), p. 696.
- Burgmann, L., and Magdalino, Paul, "Michael VIII on Maladministration: An Unpublished Novel of the Early Palaiologan Period," FM 6 (1984), 377–90.
- Dmitrievsky, Aleksei, Opisanie liturgicheskikh rykopiesei, vol. 1: Typika, pt. 1 (Kiev, 1895), pp. xcix–cvi.
- Geanakoplos, Deno, Emperor Michael Palaeologus and the West (1258–1282): A Study in Byzantine-Latin Relations (Cambridge, Mass., 1959).
- Gedeon, Manuel, Typikon tes epi tou bounou tou Auxentiou sebasmiias mones Michael tou archangelou (Athens, 1895).

37. AUXENTIOS

- Janin, Raymond, La géographie ecclésiastique de l'empire byzantin, vol. 2: Les églises et les monastères des grands centres byzantins (Paris, 1975), p. 48.
- , “La banlieue asiatique de Constantinople,” EO 21 (1922), 335–86; 22 (1923), 50–58, 182–98, 281–98, esp. p. 289
- Laurent, Vitalien, “La généalogie des premiers Paléologues,” Byzantion 8 (1933), 125–49.
- Papageorgiu, P. N., “Zwei iambische Gedichte saec. XIV und XIII,” BZ 8 (1899), 672–78.
- , “Zum Typikon des Michael Palaiologos,” BZ 10 (1901), 530–39. Corrections to Gedeon’s edition.
- Pargoire, Jules, “Mont Saint-Auxence, Étude historique et topographique,” ROC 8 (1903), 15–31, 240–79, 426–58, 550–76, and separately L. Clugnet and J. Pargoire, Vie de Saint Auxence. Mont Saint-Auxence, étude historique et topographique (Paris, 1904).
- Rouillard, Germaine, “La politique de Michel VIII Paléologue à l’égard des monastères,” EB 1 (1943), 73–84.
- Talbot, Alice-Mary, “Auxentios, Mount,” ODB, pp. 236–37.
- , “Michael VIII Palaiologos,” ODB, p. 1367.
- Volk, Robert, Gesundheitswesen und Wohltätigkeit im Spiegel der byzantinischen Klostertypika (Munich, 1983), pp. 236–37.

Translation

Typikon of the imperial monastery of the supreme commander [of the heavenly armies] Michael on renowned Mount Auxentios in the eparchy of Chalcedon, founded by Emperor Michael, the first of the Palaiologi

[1.] Prologue containing an expression of thanks to God on behalf of the emperor

“Be pleased to receive this prayer of thanks, and bless what we have begun, O Word of God.”

“I will give thanks to thee with my whole heart; I will recount all thy wonderful works” (Ps. 9:1). Now is the fitting time for my majesty to repeat this statement of God’s ancestor to the Lord, and to place it as a comely prologue to [p. 770] the composition of the present typikon. For he has multiplied his mercies toward me, and he has been resplendent in manifesting his wonders. Not only has he done this in former times, long ago, but up to the present, indeed every day and every hour he does even more. Each day he floods me with myriad outpourings of his ineffable great gifts. My king and my God first fashioned me as a living being and adorned me with reason. He then deemed me worthy to look upon the light of the sun. He diffused vast amounts of air for me; he poured out the flowing waters. All things, the most beautiful things on earth he has lavishly and graciously granted to me.

In the beginning this Lover of Mankind brought the world into being for the sake of man so that, as a result of the gifts he enjoys, through his sense perception by itself as well as through his higher intellectual apprehension of beings, he should sing praise to his benefactor and glorify him. In addition to other blessings he made me resplendent with earthly nobility. He decreed that I should be born of parents widely renowned for their virtuous and decorous conduct.¹ By his will we were related by blood to those famous and great emperors who preceded us. He made us prosperous with money, property, and other possessions. Through the years he brought us glory and honors in the palace one after the other. He rescued me a number of times through the ministry of the leader of the immaterial beings, Michael, whom, from God and after God, I have been fortunate to have as the vigilant guardian of my life in the midst of many dangers, many precarious and fearsome situations, some originating within [the empire] while others were due to external forces. He came to my assistance in time of war and gloriously took me to his side. Many times he led me to victory over both domestic and foreign foes. Why should I say more? If I were to enumerate these, as well as others like them, they would amount to more than the grains of sand on the seashore and the drops of rain, and they would outnumber the days of eternity. He has looked upon me with marvelous great favor, even upon me, last of all and as one untimely born (cf. I Cor. 15:8).

THIRTEENTH CENTURY

Surely he does this so that his infinite might and power may accomplish their purpose in my weakness. Even to me has he granted sufficient grace as he did to the great Paul, “the vessel of election” (Acts 9:15). He has lifted me up from the depths of my lowliness and has raised me up to my present exalted station. He has favored me with a name which is above every other earthly name (cf. Phil. 2:9). In an unexpected manner and for reasons he alone knows, he has placed in my hands the rudder of the imperial galley.² Ruling together with me up to the present he guides it and preserves it undamaged by any rolling waves or foaming surf of the world. Indeed may you continue to do your part ever more forcefully and show ever more kindness in guiding it, “King of kings, lord of lords” (I Tim. 6:15), O God.

How many tongues would I have to borrow to proclaim in worthy fashion all that the Lord has done for my soul [p. 771] since he first placed me in the imperial chariot of the ruler and autocrat? He hurled to the ground the immensely arrogant Italians, including their princes and counts.³ He dissipated the insolent power of the Persians [Turks]. He confined the Mysians [Bulgarians] to the narrow passes of the Haimos [Mountains]. Every foreign foe conspiring against the Romans he utterly crushed as [though they were] vessels of clay and “ground them to dirt” (II Kings 22:43) which the wind blows off the face of the earth.

There was the unexpected event which astounded all who heard and learned of it, that which emperors and patriarchs of old, senate and people, yearned for but were not allowed to see, I mean the recovery of the famous, the very queen of cities from Italian tyranny, its freedom and redemption from the yoke of slavery.⁴ But “Who shall tell the mighty acts of the Lord? Who shall cause all his praises to be heard?” (Ps. 105 [106]:2). This first occurred in these times when God placed the imperial scepter in our hands and without adding on new and laborious wars, without bloodshed and casualties. Now indeed this great city of Constantine, clothed like a queen in its ancient and splendid raiment, the New Jerusalem, built as a city, can utter the timely words of the psalm: “Its squares fill up, its quarters, its alleys, and its streets.”⁵ But it is not the confused accents of a half-barbarian people [that one hears], but that of the native inhabitants, all of them clearly and precisely articulating the polished Greek tongue and correctly pronouncing it.

Communities of monks and nuns adorn the convents and monasteries and dutifully run in them their course in the monastic stadium. Priests take pleasure in gathering in the holy churches and each day they offer their accustomed prayers and solemn worship to God with thanksgiving. Even greater, there presides in the illustrious temple bearing the name of God’s Wisdom not a patriarch of another race, an intruder, but a native son⁶ and of the same people, one who knows his own and in turn is known by his own.

This was indeed the way things were. Although my majesty has spoken of them in a brief and cursory way, other writers have described them in a more deserving manner and in greater detail. Every day my majesty was pondering over this, and it became a matter of intense and serious concern: How could I even briefly manage to acknowledge God's favor or even apportion some tiny recompense to him who had presented me with so many great and magnificent benefactions? Now then I knew very well that what one offers to God's genuine worshipers, he in his great goodness makes his own, and the honor shown to them is ascribed to him.

37. AUXENTIOS

My majesty called to mind the justly celebrated mountain which bears the venerable name of the holy Auxentios and which was once a [p. 772] second Pelusium, Nitria, Tabennisi, or Sketis.⁷ On that mountain dwelt men dedicated to works pleasing to God, and of whom it may be said that they take the kingdom of heaven by storm (cf. Matt. 11:12). This blessed, illustrious, venerable monastery was founded by the revered grandfather of my majesty, the late megas doux, Lord Alexios, who by the great, holy, angelic habit had changed his name to the monk Antony.⁸ In the course of time, rather, because of constant reverses and being caught up in one thing after another, the monastery found itself in straightened circumstances and, as they say, was down on its knees. I would raise it up again, restore its strength, make its beauty shine even more brightly, and make more generous provision to supply the monks with the necessities of life. At the same time, as noted, I would offer some small repayment to God and perform a small act of kindness to my ancestors, if not actually carry out a serious obligation. In any event, my majesty brought it about that this desire, which had existed somewhat sketchily in my imagination, took shape and was translated into reality. My majesty restored this revered monastery to its present condition in all respects as may be seen and with a truly understanding and loyal disposition presented it to the great leader and supreme chief of the powers above, and through him to the all-powerful and exceedingly good God.

This is what my majesty has done. Now it is for you, my champion, my helper and my protector, commander of the heavenly and incorporeal armies, to see that the affairs of the monastery improve and prosper, and to contribute to its increase each day. See that these people of yours conduct themselves in a spiritual manner pleasing to God, being honored by men and admired for their virtues in this life, while in the life to come they may dwell among the just and find their repose in the undefiled fields of paradise. May my majesty then obtain pardon for my many sins and be placed on the right side in that fearful, impartial tribunal and be raised up again with the saved by means of your leadership and by the intercession of this entire holy community to our common Lord and Savior. More than anything else this is my majesty's earnest wish and prayer. I am totally confident of obtaining this by the grace and loving kindness for men of our great God and Savior Jesus Christ. Amen. [p. 773]

[2.] The monastery is to be free and self-governing

“Let those who bear the burden of the gospel be free of the heavy yoke of slavery.”

First of all my majesty which comes from God wishes and prays that this revered monastery should remain independent and self-governing. It should be free of all [external] rule in name and in fact, whether under title of ephoreia and supervision, union with another monastery or as an epidosis, and of all other forms of lordship, which may perhaps seem more respectable by being called “solicitude.” The monastery is to administer its own affairs and is to be under the direction of the superior at the time and certain members of the spiritual brotherhood selected because of their age, way of life and, it may be, surpassing the rest in learning.⁹ They are to be held accountable to nobody except God who alone knows the hidden thoughts of men and to whom they shall render an account of their leadership and administration. But if anyone should attempt to bring any force to bear against it or try to overturn its independence, my majesty subjects such a one, whoever he might be, to the most grievous curses of the holy fathers. For freedom ought to be greatly prized and is clearly the most important thing of all for intelligent people. God himself confirms this since once he had created man, he honored him with independence. It is said in the Old Testament in which divine revelation is communicated by the great Moses, “Cast out the slave and her son, for the son of the slave shall not inherit with the son of the free woman” (Gen. 21:10; Gal. 4:30).

THIRTEENTH CENTURY

The very fact and the name of slavery is a harmful and oppressive sort of thing and is a violent intrusion of tribal law into our lives. It must then be rejected, and one must hold tightly to freedom for the stability of the monastery and for its continued progress. Monasteries that are self-governing are more flourishing and self-sufficient than those that are subject to various individuals. For these enjoy what they possess without any diminution, whereas the others receive little or nothing of their revenues. All or most of their possessions are appropriated [by their lords] as if they were their own and they distribute them as their own property. That is enough of these matters.

Let the reverence which is rightly due to bishops be granted to the incumbent hierarchs in the holy metropolis of Chalcedon as shepherds and guardians of souls. Let the customary commemoration of them be made in the church in the regular liturgical celebrations and in the customary synaptai and ekteneis. For we ought to repay them with our prayers and in return for spiritual gifts give back to them spiritual graces. Moreover, each year let them [p. 774] present to this metropolitan three small honoraria worth about one hyperperon each and no more than three pounds of wax. He indeed in his turn will be content with these gifts alone and will not put pressure on the brothers to make any further donation. But this should be sufficient about these matters, for now I wish to continue by speaking about the selection of the superior.

[3.] The choice and installation of the superior

“I apportion the choice to the monks and the installation to the rulers of the Romans.”

What does my majesty desire as far as the superior is concerned? In the first place and above all else, he should hold the correct faith in the divinity. He should be of blameless life, adorned with the dignity of the priesthood, of firm judgment, either as the result of training, which would be better, or if not, as part of his nature, so that he may discern what is good and what is not good. He should be [endowed with] modesty, gentle disposition, and appropriate zeal. His speech should be suitable. His manner should be adorned with the most noble distinction of virtue. His own manifest virtue should make him appear as a light before men (cf. Matt. 5:15–16). He should be the perfect stamp upon which the entire assembly of monks under his authority may model themselves. They may thus make excellent impressions and, closely following his example, be imprints of virtue pleasing to God. For what the depictions of the archetype are to painters, so the superior should be to the monks.¹⁰

My majesty wishes the choice of the superior to be made according to merit with the participation of the entire brotherhood. From the depths of their souls they should search out the one they want. As impartial as a stone let them conduct their scrutiny and pass on the one who shall preside over them. Let favor and friendship, which blind them in relation to the one they love, find no place here. Let any indication of ill will also be far removed. But let the truth speak out freely, and let it scrutinize and approve the deserving candidate. For it would be no small misfortune for those sitting here in judgment to bring about their own destruction by rejecting what is beneficial for souls, one of which is of the same value as this whole world (cf. Matt. 16:26; Mark 8:36).

37. AUXENTIOS

If, therefore, all the brothers agree upon one man, all choosing him with one accord, this is pleasing to God, and is also what my majesty desires. It would be a great step toward that peace which is sweeter than pure honey. But if—my majesty prays this will not happen—[the monks] take sides during the election with some of them joining forces with other brothers, each one proposing a different candidate and supporting him on the pretext of friendship or any other convincing pretext which is generally used to conceal the truth, [p. 775] the choice of the superior should then be brought to the attention of him who, with God's assistance, then wields the scepter of empire. He, [after being informed about the matter] by delegates from the entire brotherhood, shall in person, if he is present in Constantinople, or by letter should he be away on a journey, select one who is clearly outstanding for intelligence and virtue and quite capable of governing people. The man so chosen shall without any reservations accept his election, and he shall be entrusted with the authority over the monastery. For in such situations inflexibility is not without danger.

Then shall follow the customary installation by the emperor. He shall be handed by the emperor the rod and the staff of office, with the first so that as a father he may chasten those who are acting in a childish manner and by fear turn them to the straight path, and with the other he may provide support for those who have grown gray with age or who may be failing in mind and those who have grown old laboring in the field of virtue. As best he can he shall encourage them as a good shepherd and not as a hireling. He shall guide his flock toward verdant pastures with abundant water (cf. Ps. 22 [23]:2–3), and he shall drive the wolves far away, quickly and effectively warding them off (cf. John 10:11–13).

After his installation by the emperor, the superior is also obligated to receive the accustomed sphragis from the prelate then presiding over the most holy metropolis of Chalcedon. This is what my majesty wholeheartedly wishes and approves. Then each one of the monks from the first down to the last shall genuflect in the monastic fashion and shall embrace the superior. All shall thus recognize their common shepherd and without hesitation submit themselves to his commands.

These instructions apply when the superior is a native and has been found there in the house, which my majesty considers very important. But—may it not happen—it might be necessary to select the superior from outside. A brother residing in the monastery may regard the exalted dignity with such awe that he refuses the leadership for himself. For indeed there is nothing more difficult than directing souls. Or there may be no one who is qualified, not because he lacks the vigor needed to concern himself with the monastic profession or because he does not care enough about virtue and serious guidance, but because in addition to these there is something else, which belongs here, and that is the charisma of governing. A proven soldier may not automatically assume command of an army, nor does a competent oarsman, no matter how expert, make a helmsman.

THIRTEENTH CENTURY

If, therefore, we have to bring in a superior from another place, which is the second best way, we should not refuse. One must be careful, of course, to place a teacher of virtue in charge, not an exemplar of wickedness, one who will stand watch and not an enemy, a good shepherd and not a raging wolf. For not only is unalloyed virtue a major consideration in selecting a person who is to have higher authority, but also one must reject a staged appearance of a praiseworthy way of life. Such staging presents one man externally while concealing another man within. [p. 776] This man could reasonably be likened to the whitewashed sepulcher in the gospels which gives the false impression of beauty, but within is filled with clammy bodies and lets out a most disagreeable stench (cf. Mark 5:2–5; Matt. 23:27). In this connection one must therefore be on one's guard against being misled by deceptive appearances. For this can happen to those who are not very carefully on the lookout for such things. This is what happens to fish, for when their mouths are already wide open to take in food they are caught in fearful destruction.

Therefore, as said, let the superior from outside be proved. Let him produce clear assurance of his conduct and monastic way of life. For if evidence of these is lacking, [our monks] coming under his instruction will find themselves learning other things in place of what they had previously learned, and perhaps what seemed to be safe was in reality—rather because our powers of discernment fell short—destructive and unsure. A superior of this sort must sincerely hold fast to the customary order and constitution of this monastery in its entirety and without any change just as this regulatory arrangement of my majesty decrees. For it is not uncommon that a man brought in from outside, once he has assumed authority, might like to change the regulations of the monastery he is put in charge of and substitute them with those he knows from previous experience, thus overturning the ancient, established constitution.¹¹ Enough has been said about these matters.

[4.] To the Superior

“Before all else you who are superior of the monastery accept this counsel and for my sake master it.”

In the series of topics to be discussed my majesty next turns to address you directly, the superior, for there are a number of things I must say to you also. You must certainly be well aware that the governance of the monks is entrusted to you as their teacher and instructor. You have been designated from on high to shepherd the holy flock of Christ. By no means ought your position as superior be a pretext for repose, nor ought you grow slack in your spiritual, salvific labors, for which a reward many times greater is laid aside for you in the future. For if the superiorship had been presented as a prize for virtue, then all those authorities, once such authority had been conferred on them, would have a right to take their rest. But if labors commensurate with authority are also added on, and authority is nothing else than the test of virtue, then one must give proof, as on the sea of serious, straight sailing, so in the spiritual profession of salvific governance of souls. The helmsman in particular stands in need of great sobriety. For when a good helmsman slacks off even a little, he threatens the rest of the crew [p. 777] with great calamity.

Governance is in fact a single thing but becomes many-sided because of the diversity among those governed. The person who assumes such office may have to take various titles to fit each situation. Sometimes he is addressed as father, at other times as superior, at times of course as shepherd, helmsman, guide, guardian, teacher, salt, lamp, and light. As a father he ought to suffer along with those who are weak. As a person in authority he ought to be a shield to those who are under attack. As a helmsman he ought to sail over the dangerous waves. As a shepherd he ought to settle his flock in verdant pastures and provide them with the water of spiritual repose (cf. Ps 22 [23]:2–3). As a guardian he ought to give timely warning to those he guards of the approach of something harmful. As a teacher he trains those whose understanding is like that of children. As salt he seasons what is lacking in spiritual flavor with virtues, or he causes what is frivolous and starting to decay to tighten up. As a lamp and a light he shows his flock the unencumbered path of virtue. In a word he “becomes all things to all men” (I Cor. 9:22), according to the holy apostle. A superior who is bereft of these may indeed govern but it will not be in a Christian or spiritual manner, but as the nations and the flesh do. He exercises his authority by force rather than by counsel and persuasion. Such a superior does the opposite of what the leader of the apostles Peter declares: “Tend the flock of God that is your charge, overseeing it not by constraint but willingly, not for shameful gain but eagerly, not as domineering over those in your charge but being examples to your flock” (I Pet. 5:2–4).

The office of superior over the brothers has been placed in your hands. Govern therefore in accord with the apostolic precept. Confirm those who are in good condition. Raise up as best you can those who are falling. With fatherly compassion take care of all of them equally. Provide what is required for each one according to his special needs, depending on his age, his physical condition, and his former manner of life. Because of this then, strange as it may seem, a certain wonderful equality comes from inequality, as in other matters one might find that inequality stems from equality. For what kind of equality would be found in the judgment of the superior if the young and the old, the man from the city and the one from the country, the healthy and the sick, all enjoyed the same thing? You have surely heard, superior of this monastery, what the Lord said to his chief apostle: If you love me, Peter, “Tend my sheep” (John 21:16). He said this not once, but three times, repeating it more than twice. Therefore, comprehend the burden of spiritual authority. Wholeheartedly imitate the model of the apostolic shepherds and carefully tend the flock of Christ. In this way you will prepare the “special people” (cf. Tit. 2:14) for the day on which you may boast with Christ: “Behold myself and the children whom God has given to me” (Heb. 2:13). In all these matters preserve yourself blameless in every respect. [p. 778] Free yourself of every bodily kinship and become attached only to your brothers and children in Christ.

My majesty then has now delivered this address, and desires you to know that you have a strict obligation to observe the regulations affecting the entire monastic order of life, and the duties incumbent on both superiors and subjects.

[5.] Address to the Monks

“If you carefully observe, O monks, the rules in force you will be saved, to my [joy].”

The prayer of my majesty for you, my brothers in Christ is that recorded of the believers in the Acts of the Apostles: “They were of one heart and soul, and no one said that any of the things which he possessed was his own, but they had everything in common” (Acts 4:23). Let this be the model for our own community. This union of souls with one another should characterize the monastic life and should be such as to unite in their hearts those who are different in body. With harmony of mind they should race together in the monastic struggles and contests. They should delight in one another's progress and improvement, and they should be saddened by those who go back on their promises and slouch in disarray along the road of the monastic life. They appropriate nothing on earth for themselves but, as the holy apostle says, are content only with the food and clothing provided from the common store (cf. I Tim. 6:8). Let no one ever turn back because he wants more, as the dog to his own vomit (Prov. 26:11; II Pet. 2:22). Do not adopt the attitude of the wife of Lot or of the man at the plow in the gospel, who because he turned back fell short of the kingdom of heaven (cf. Gen. 19:26; Luke 9:62). For what is most important and admirable is not making vows but fulfilling one's vows to God. As much as one who worships God even before making his vows to him is worthy of rewards, by so much is he who gives the lie to his profession and promise bound to condemnation. This is also alluded to by the wise Solomon. "It is better that you should not vow than that you should vow and not pay" (Eccl. 5:4). Again: "A snare for a man are his own lips" (Prov. 6:2).

THIRTEENTH CENTURY

The renowned apostle Paul recommends obedience to your superiors. "Obey your leaders," he says, "and submit to them" (Heb. 13:17). Adding the reason, he continues as follows: "For they are keeping watch over your souls, as men who will have to give account." Listen to my Lord when he says: "I have come down from heaven, [p. 779] not to do my own will, but the will of the Father who sent me" (John 6:38). From this then learn the measure of ready obedience and follow along behind Christ, through Christ obeying your fathers in Christ. For he stated: "He who hears you hears me, and he who rejects you rejects me" (Luke 10:16).

While originally addressed to the apostles, after them [they were also intended] for all those who have received the apostolic office of teaching and who profess their manner of life. In every respect, therefore, obey your fathers either out of genuine love, like sons who love their fathers, or out of respect. As servants of Christ all of you together give constant evidence of your obedience to them. Shove disobedience so far away from you that you can barely see it. Our forefather [Adam] himself bears witness as to how great an evil it is, since he was condemned for disobedience, and as a result brought upon himself and upon you the loss of the divine paradise and a wearisome and laborious life which you provide for by the sweat of your brow.

Among the many things which are possible, it might happen that the superior is remiss in one of his obligations. For it is only the divinity that is remiss in nothing. If this occurs, let the majority remain silent and be, as the holy David said, "like a man who does not hear, and in whose mouth are no rebukes" (Ps. 37 [38]:14). But let those who are distinguished in learning, virtue, and seniority gently remind the superior of his duty to correct the matter. This ought not to be done in a quarrelsome and argumentative manner but in a kindly and friendly one. For the superior ought to accept this admonition as a grace, and he should thank those who have brought this failing to his attention. By his deeds he should correct the unfortunate mistake. But if, which my majesty prays will not be, a standoff develops between the superior and the brothers, then the matter should be brought before the man who is emperor at that time. For the sake of the good itself and for our sake, the emperor should, by himself or by one of those men who have a special, spiritual relationship with him and who are experienced in discerning spiritual matters, reconcile the separated parties and put a peaceful end to the controversy, or in some other way, relying on his holy intelligence, he shall straighten out the unfortunate occurrence.¹²

But each one of you, my brothers, should certainly not seek to go beyond the position allotted to you in the body of the community but gratefully observe its harmonious arrangement. Let nobody show any indignation toward another monk, even though he himself might have been assigned a position corresponding to that of the hand, or even to that of the foot, while another occupied a place [like that] of the tongue, or the ears, or the eyes. For God beneficently grants his favors to all according to their merits. He apportions our rank in accord with our conduct. This we learn from the distribution of the talents in the holy gospel (cf. Matt. 25:15). Let each one therefore [p. 780] willingly reckon himself among the least and give way to those above him. But if there be one who is not so wise and has an opinion he should not have and regards everyone as equal so that he, although the least, may number himself among the better; if he shall keep silence let him be pardoned, but if he continues in the same conduct, after being severely admonished, let him be cut off from the community, and let him also be expelled from the monastery, so he might not pervert the more simple and cause confusion within the community. “Bad company ruins good morals,” according to the holy apostle (I Cor. 15:33). A pestilential disease also causes injury to the persons it comes in contact with. In addition to other things affecting the community you will guard against particular friendships and company, for these not only cause scandal and great suspicion among the brothers, but they are harmful and destructive in other ways.

The servants and the experts in certain crafts should not provide anyone with anything, not even the tiniest amount, without the approval of the superior or of the steward. But if a person be apprehended doing this, first let him be admonished two or three times, then let him be punished. If he continues unabashedly in the same conduct and does not mend his ways, let him be expelled from the monastery as unable to assume the yoke of good order and ready obedience.

[6.] The Number of Monks

“The company of the monks should be fourfold ten, the number of days that my Lord fasted.”

At this point now my majesty recognizes that arrangements should be made concerning the number of monks. My majesty therefore decrees that the most revered brothers in Christ who have taken it upon themselves to lead the monastic life in this monastery shall never exceed the number of forty. Of these, now, sixteen shall continually devote themselves to the church and shall wholeheartedly concern themselves with the holy service of praise in the customary manner. The remaining twenty-four will perform all the duties of service within the monastery and in the fields. At various times they must be free for certain tasks both inside and outside the monastery, and there will be times when they will be assigned by the superior to service or work either individually or in a group, depending on the needs of the monastery and on each one’s expertise and competence. Those so assigned shall not delay, or grumble, or murmur under their breath, or dispute the decision of the superior. But they shall obey without hesitation and proclaim that which is so often sung by monks: “Bless.”

Still, my majesty does not wish those assigned to work to leave the [p. 781] liturgical services when it may not be the time for their work. But neither should those assigned to devote themselves to the hymnody in the church make use of their being occupied, perhaps even their excellence in singing psalms, as an excuse. But if the superior assigns one of them to do some chores, he shall heed the command of the superior without delay and shall readily carry out his orders. For my majesty wants everyone to be exercised in obedience. The holy, divine Akakios,¹³ the blooming and fruitful plant of the monastic meadow, is an obvious witness of the importance of obedience for the monks. Noted for his virtuous accomplishments, he specifically deserved to be called a child of obedience.

THIRTEENTH CENTURY

[7.] The appointment of officials

“Then, superior of the monastery, after inquiry make prudent appointments of officials.”

Let officials who are serious and qualified for their tasks be appointed by the superior in the accustomed fashion. They should share in the concerns and the labors of the superior. They should also have some expertise in the proper care and management of all the movable and immovable property of the monastery. It is too much for one man to deal adequately with such a variety of matters, doing his work amidst so many distractions, soon burning himself out, and not being able to get a firm grasp on anything.

First of all, then, a steward, reliable and intelligent, should be designated. He should be distinguished for his practical knowledge of many things and conduct all the material business of the monastery. He should involve himself and those under him in all aspects of the administration of affairs. They should struggle in every way to increase the assets of the monastery, secure what has not been secure, and make what is unsuitable become suitable. The steward, with the knowledge and support of the superior, shall enjoin upon the farmers and the vine-dressers the tasks belonging to their work. He shall urge on the shepherds of cattle and sheep to do better in their allotted tasks, and he shall frequently supervise and examine them. He shall select for himself monks, or otherwise laymen free of any suspicion, and, with the approval of the superior, he should place these in charge of the possessions of the monastery.

In addition to these let an ecclesiarch be appointed, well acquainted with the order of services in the church, and fervently devoted to them, a man of knowledge and virtue, watchful and sober. His vigilance and sobriety are to guide the rest in awakening and getting up so that day and night [the monks should], to speak in the manner of the psalm: “Bless God in the congregations” (Ps. 67[68]:26). [p. 782] He should apportion the time for sleep in relation to that for the holy psalter and he should determine the time for striking the wooden semantron for assembling. He shall regulate the measures of the voices for the liturgical services. He should take thought that the prayers be undistracted and undisturbed. In the psalmody he shall favor the clarity of voice which comes from slowness and he shall reject the confusion which comes from going too fast.

Together with these officials let a treasurer be appointed, trustworthy and of good reputation, to watch over and to give an account of the things entrusted to him. He shall take under his charge everything which might be useful or beneficial for the monastery, in addition to whatever else may be committed to him by the superior. Whenever the men are engaged in manual labor he shall provide them with the materials needed without even the slightest show of favoritism, and he shall receive back products of their labor. He shall make purchases as occasion demands and store what is customary and useful for the community, with the approval of the superior. Then at the time of distribution when they receive all their new things they may not find that they do not have enough inner and outer garments and shoes for the monks.

Each year they should be given one tunic, two undergarments which are worn right next to the skin and in popular parlance are usually called undershirts, every two years one vest and one cloak. They should not, however, put on any new clothing until each one has first handed in the old to the [common] store, even down to their footwear. The superior will then judge how to use these in a way which will meet some need. He may use them to clothe the poor in their nakedness or he may give them to certain monks who are burdened with heavy and laborious work. For to be furnished with extra clothing after their regular needs have been met may incline the monks to think of the love of possessions and lead them to be attached to the things of this life.

37. AUXENTIOS

Thus does my majesty wish the affairs of the monks to be administered. At the same time we put an end to the so-called allowance among them, utterly rejecting it in the belief that it has nothing to do with management, but is a craze for gold and is a practice at variance with the monastic manner of life. For with the regular possession of gold their thoughts are never at rest, and we know that its use by monks descends into abuse.

Let a cellarer also be designated, who should be responsible for the daily food and drink of the monastic company, prudent, steadfast, fair in his distributions, doing everything according to the judgment of the superior, placing the same amount of bread on the table for everyone, and wine the same in taste and amount for everyone, cooked food and not cooked according to what is required each day, the same fare in common, except that in the case of some infirmity the superior may permit that something else be served to a person.

With the above-mentioned officials should also be numbered a provisioner, who shall guard the storage room in which are kept the grains, wine, oil, and the other edibles. [p. 783] At the required time he should provide the items needed to the cellarers and those needed in the bakery for the bakers. Let him be concerned not only with dispensing foodstuffs and drink but he should also plan ahead to have a secure and continual supply. He should dispense the supplies in an appropriate manner, measuring, so to speak, the amount by the need. For extravagance and inappropriate liberality inevitably result in prodigality.

This is what has to be noted about the leading officials. Those who work at the chores assigned to them shall do so throughout their entire lives, unless they advance to a higher position, or if one should be found who does poor work or who is dishonest, without question he should be removed. Those who are always occupied in services or laboring at their tasks such as cooks, bakers, farmers, gardeners, and gatekeepers, should be replaced by others at intervals. In this way, "Bear one another's burdens" (Gal. 6:2) as the holy apostle says.

[8. Psalmody]

"Let the typikon of the monks of Palestine provide the complete order of church service."

Let the service of daily and nightly psalmody which has from old customarily been observed in the monasteries of Palestine be carried out, except for the all-night vigils on Sundays. My majesty wishes that the monks must not be compelled to overburden themselves in such matters. While they should omit nothing that is within their capabilities, at the same time they should refrain from added burdens. For it is not possible for those who have been working hard all day to spend the night singing psalms, but either by day they should rest from the work of night, or at night they should rest from the day's labor. For [this body of] earth which we carry around cannot go without rest; it cannot be active continuously but only at intervals. Prayers must therefore be offered to God from the depths of the soul according to one's strength, for praying according to one's strength is pleasing to God, who is well aware of our natural weakness, and whose rich and abundant mercy comes to us with kindness and true preference.

THIRTEENTH CENTURY

[9.] The revenues of the monastery

“Next the regulation about the revenues of the monastery, including a monthly accounting of its expenditures.”

All the usual revenues of the monastery which are collected each year must be received by the superior, along with three prominent brothers, the steward, the ecclesiarch, and the treasurer, if they are present, but if not [p. 784] then by someone else. Let the necessary payments be made by him and let them be kept informed of the expenditures. For if this is not made known, evil suspicions arise and a good deal of quibbling and murmuring against those directing the finances. This gets arguments started; factions rear their heads; accusations are made; and finally there is confusion, the terrible, dark night of dissension, and the sacrifice of the peace and quiet of the brothers. Besides, it is burdensome for one individual to be in charge of the common business without anyone else having knowledge of it. One of two things happens in such cases; either there are accusations of stealing or of contempt for the brothers, or very often both, which is an unwarranted cause of temptation to those with a weak conscience, and a not unreasonable pretext for scandal. Even though the superior, because of his authority, is allowed to do what he wants without the consent of the others, still it is not a good idea, for it causes problems for many.¹⁴ While such criticism [of the superior] often arises from suspicion rather than from truth, it is praiseworthy to avoid such suppositions, false though they may be.

My majesty commands that the accounting of revenues and of expenditures be made each month with the three prominent brothers meeting together with the superior, and in addition those who because they have ecclesiastical care and responsibility we are accustomed to call ecclesiastics. They should all receive an exact report of expenditures. In like manner my majesty commands that the superior should not be eager to store up money in the monastery. This is ascribed to the Mammon of iniquity, and it is a treasuring up not of money but of worms that do not die, not of gold but of burning fire that is not quenched (Mark 9:48). For getting involved with money even for those who carry on their lives in the world, who are all caught up in the snares of life, and who are constrained by the needs of a wife and children is forbidden as leading to eternal punishment.

Further proof of this is provided by that rich man in the holy gospel who was being fried in the insufferable fire. He had previously dismissed Lazarus as a disgusting object, but later begged for his finger to provide some relief for his burning mouth (cf. Luke 16:19–24). To those then who have renounced the world and those in the world and for this reason also the bitter ruler of this world, and who have promised to live on a higher plane and to partake of the angelic manner of life to the best of their strength, how much pardon would this practice deserve? Or what defense will those who, after their holy monastic promise, have engaged in such practices make to the implacable, fearsome judge? How can they enrich themselves while others in the world are poor and worn out by the deprivation of necessities?

For these reasons, my majesty wishes [p. 785] that at the end of each single year everything that remains in the possession of this revered monastery be given for the ransom of prisoners, for the support of orphans, for the lawful joining of destitute maidens in the bond of marriage, as the superior and the leading brothers shall determine. If things are done in this way, my majesty still trusts in God that in place of these moneys you shall receive a hundred-fold for each, my brothers in the Lord, and you shall inherit eternal life (Matt. 19:29; Mark 10:30).

37. AUXENTIOS

[10.] The diet of the monks

“The ordinances of the monasteries in Palestine form the model for the nourishment of the monks for all time.”

Since it has already been made clear¹⁵ that the Typikon of Jerusalem is also in force in this revered monastery and it has been so decreed by my majesty above, one must attend to the diet of the monks as prescribed therein. This must be strictly observed on the other days and also on Saturday, on Sunday, on the feasts of my Lord and Savior Christ, of his most pure Mother, the ever virgin and Mother of God, my Lady, and of all his genuine servants, the continual allies and helpers of my majesty. Nonetheless the superior has authority to relax the strict interpretation, and there may be occasions when he has to excuse the monks. He will give way a bit to one who appears ill. He will cheer up another who is worn out by age. He will lighten the labor of another who has worked hard in one of the public services of the monastery. So much for these matters.

When the brotherhood takes nourishment all disturbance and all noise should be far removed while they are eating or performing their services. Let strict silence be observed, so that everyone may listen with understanding and be receptive and attentive to the reading as [if it were] a full-course spiritual banquet. As bread is to the body, so to the soul is the word of the God-inspired Scripture. My Lord Christ, the bread of life which came down from heaven, confirms this thought (John 6:35–41). “[Man shall not live] by bread alone,” he says, “but by every word that proceeds from the mouth of God” (Matt. 4:4) Indeed, “let not him who eats abundantly despise him who abstains, and let not him who abstains pass judgment on him who eats,” as the holy apostle says (Rom. 14:3). But let both of them give thanks to God, the one because he has had his fill, the other because of the grace granted to him. As they leave the table, let all depart in silence. Let one go off to his own cell and his handiwork, and another to the duties incumbent upon him. The above suffices concerning the diet of the monks. [p. 786]

[11.] Solitaries and their dwellings

“The solitaries use force against what is on high; you, superior of the monastery, take care of their needs below.”

My majesty wishes the cells for the solitaries to be subject to the monastery and that they should always remain as cells for the solitaries. These should only be men eager for solitude, lovers of being alone, who have given proof of venerable conduct, of an excellent way of life, rejoicing in the simplicity of Christ. Let them not be crafty, full of guile, and keeping their disposition hidden, such as some who are found in irons and wearing sackcloth or wrapping themselves about with sheepskins, hiding as “the wolf in sheep’s clothing” according to the proverb.

For some of the solitaries in their cells it is recommended that they receive everything they need in the line of clothing and footwear from the monastery gratuitously, and without any sort of remuneration at all being accepted. As much as possible, therefore, the monastery will not be burdened by debts in their regard, nor will the solitaries be troubled at all on the part of the monastery. But the grace deriving from love will be shown to each other, and an excellent course of life and voluntary sharing. By the law of nature man is a being living in common, and by the Lord's command each one is urged to share what he has with the one who does not have (Luke 3:11). If, at any rate, these recommendations are followed, neither side will be troubled by any additional burden or scandal. It is possible for the superior to settle many monks in the solitary cells if the monastery prospers and possesses enough to be able to do this.

THIRTEENTH CENTURY

[12. Receiving laymen and women]

“Without trial let no one be tonsured. All women should be kept far from the monastery.”

My majesty is insistent that those who come from the lay state to the monastic manner of life and who have the hair they wore in the world cut off in this monastery ought not to be received straightaway and without strict probation. This is to prevent a mischievous man or one of evil ways from being received. Aided by the evil one, his very presence would introduce corruption among the brothers. This is indeed the way of Satan, to sneak evil into the good obliquely, as weeds among the wheat, as thorns among the vines, as a ravening wolf among the sheep. Just like these is a troublesome man in the spiritual assembly. [p. 787] Care must therefore be had in putting the [novice's] rags on anyone before getting to know what he is like by time and experience. Have him brought in with the brothers and let him remain, wearing his customary garments for a period of at least six months. In that amount of time a fairly good, if not complete, estimate of the man's character can be formed. He can then be clothed with the monastic habit or sent away in peace without being approved. He was hospitably received into probation; after his trial he was hospitably sent forth, but nonetheless separated from the community as a brother. The one who has been chosen must be exercised in every service in the community, no matter what sort of secular dignity or position he held. For all the precious things of the world are little or nothing compared to the magnificent poverty of Christ.

Women may not be admitted into the monastery at all in order to worship in the church or for any other reason, unless they are pious ladies who are related to the Christ-loving emperors who may succeed us in inheriting the imperial scepter, although they must leave the same day, by no means staying behind in the monastery.

[13. Commemorations]

“Let the commemorations for the blessed founders and for the monks be fervently performed.”

My majesty's blessed grandfather and grandmother, the late megas doux, Lord Alexios, who on taking the holy, angelic habit was renamed Antony the monk, and his wife, the Lady Irene Komnene, who on taking the monastic robe changed her name to Eugenia, and my majesty's revered parents, the late megas domestikos Lord Andronikos, who on taking the great, angelic habit was renamed Arsenios the monk, and my majesty's mother Lady Theodora Komnene, who after her monastic profession was called Theodosia the nun, shall receive now and in the future, as long as this revered monastery remains by the grace of God and the protection of his genuine servant, the supreme commander of the heavenly powers, the customary daily remembrance with the trisagion and the rest of the psalmody.¹⁶ On the ninth of November let the commemoration for these be celebrated together carefully and befitting the founders. Let there be candelabra with twelve candleholders and two large tapers. Let forty hyperpera be expended for these, for the purchase of wax and other necessities and for distribution. There shall also be a refreshment at table in the form of lighter bread than usual and choice wines. [p. 788] There should be distribution at the gate in the form of bread, wine, and coins as the superior shall decide and order.

A great proof of brotherly love is to hold annual commemorations for the departed. Not only ought the brothers to help and support one another while they are alive, but they ought to show similar favor to those who have died and to keep them in remembrance. This benefits the souls of the departed, as we have learned from various writings, and it is a pledge that we too shall share in the same remembrance and benefit. He who does not lie has said: "The measure you give will be the measure you get back" (Matt. 7:2; Mark 4:24).

Let the obligatory commemoration of the dead be celebrated first in connection with the funeral service for each one according to the prevailing custom, then on the third day, the ninth, and the fortieth. In the evening the commemoration should include the kollyba and the canon of the dead, and on the next day a more complete memorial service should be held with the kollyba and the liturgy.

Let two identical panels of diptychs contain the names of the brothers which have been inscribed thereon for the sake of remembrance by the various superiors or ecclesiarchs. Let one copy be kept in the library of the monastery and the other in the care of the ecclesiarch. No one will be permitted to add any other name at all to the list of brothers to be commemorated without the knowledge and approval of the superior. My majesty consents and agrees that a woman may be commemorated in the monastery, but prohibits and absolutely forbids that one be buried there.

We decree that the present typikon of my majesty be read twelve times in the year at table while the brothers are eating, that is, on the first day of each month except in November, when it should be read on the day the founders are commemorated.

[14. The patronal feast]

"Sing the hymn for the first of the feasts, the feast day of the angels, then for the strange wonder at Chonai."¹⁷

The principal feast is to be the splendid office of the supreme commander Michael and the other incorporeal powers. According to the prevailing custom this falls on the eighth of November. In the evening [before] the monks shall keep vigil all night performing the entire service harmoniously. Let candles be lit in a festive manner on the templon and [before the icons which] are to be venerated. In the middle of the nave set up four candelabra with twelve candleholders. In addition, have free-standing incense bowls giving off aromatic odors. A magnificent banquet, moreover, is to be prepared at table [p. 789] with fare corresponding to the feast, including bread lighter than the ordinary and choice wines.

On this feast too the superior ought to call the other brothers from the other monasteries.¹⁸ They ought to join together with the other psalm singers in the psalmody. In a spiritual manner they will concelebrate the holy feast with a joy pleasing to God. On this occasion, of course, they shall spend fifty hyperpera for the purchase of candles, of food, and of choice wine, and for the distribution at the gate. They shall keep all these in mind, as the superior may determine, and so do something dear to God, to the supreme commander of his immaterial forces Michael, and, speaking respectfully, also to my majesty.

THIRTEENTH CENTURY

On the sixth of September the miracle of the supreme commander Michael which took place in Chonai shall be celebrated. Not only should all the brothers present [in the monastery] come together to celebrate this feast, but also the solitaries of the monastery. On this feast twelve hyperpera should be spent on the purchase of candles, on food and wine, and on corresponding items for the distribution at the gate. These words are sufficient concerning the feasts.

[15. Allocution to future rulers]

“Princes crowned by God, listen to me and bring what I ask of you to its fulfillment.”

At this moment my words must be directed to you, Christ-loving emperors, who shall succeed and inherit the imperial scepters after us. It is our earnest request that you whom we love in Christ ought to listen to what we have to say and put it into practice, for it is just and pleasing to God. How many benefactions, therefore, my majesty has enjoyed from God through the supreme commander of his immaterial servants have already, although numerous, been rapidly summarized and written down in the preface as though on a tablet. Even in this document we have inscribed as on unerasable tablets only partial accounts, for if my majesty were to spin these out at greater length, time would fail us, and even the incentive to write. His many great gifts have enabled us to preserve undiminished what we have inherited from the blessed emperors before us and to acquire more which had not even been ours, all of which we, let it be said, with God’s help have transmitted to you. For these gifts we have offered extremely little in return to his highest power. Among these we have established the monastery [dedicated] to the leader of his immaterial ministers, adorned it properly to the best of our ability, and gathered together a company of revered monks, making provision for them to be self-sufficient. [p. 790] You too are obligated to take to yourselves this offering of ours to the divinity, to continue to foster it, and to improve it in a royal and truly fitting manner.

If then these things were begun in gratitude for God’s benefactions to me, and they have now been handed on to you, who are our successors and heirs in the imperial rule, then what we have dedicated to God is surely also to your benefit. Moreover, we have not emptied out vast sums from the imperial [treasury] for this revered monastery. We have not allocated populous villages to it, or extensive farm lands or fertile and fruitful fields, proving thereby that the imperial majesty rules and does as it wills, for in time some person might allege this as an excuse to begin to hack away at it and cause irreparable damage. But we have made thorough plans that it shall have solid possession of as much as an intelligent person might reasonably judge a fair return for a favor, or which could even be regarded as a recompense for our struggles and daily labors on behalf of Romania, those undertaken with God’s help before our imperial [accession] and those we continued after [attaining] the rule.

From the first hour, as they say, we were raised in the imperial court so as to obtain a good education, a matter not easily attainable, especially without intense and constant toil. But when we were well into our eighteenth year,¹⁹ as God furnished me with the strength—if I have to boast, according to the holy apostle, I shall boast in the Lord (cf. I Cor. 1:31), so that his works may be magnified in me—we were clothed with a tunic of scale armor, we placed an iron helmet on our head, and we bent our arm to hold a long spear, and we put a warrior’s shield over our shoulder. I was appointed as commander and at various times, with God’s help, in both East and West directed an army of many men. There were battles against the Mysians [Bulgarians] and at other times against the Triballians [Serbians], as well as against our own fellow-Romans²⁰ whose hostile machinations against us knew no bounds. At other times we clashed with the Persians [Turks] and with the haughty Latins, the tyrants, [then] ruling over Constantinople. We then returned to the palace and eagerly and loyally continued to perform the various services imposed on us. I spent nights in deliberations, especially from the time when I was designated as chief of the senate. I spent days out in the sun so that what had been approved in the council might be successfully carried out in deed. Sometimes speed was required while at other times circumstances or the season of the year compelled [us to move] slowly.

But envy, which the ancients believed followed men as shadows follow their bodies, soon appeared and pulled taut its special bow, aiming at us to shoot bitter arrows in the dark (cf. Ps. 10 [11]:2). It would quickly have done something terrible, if the Lord had not [p. 791] become my protector and my refuge (cf. II Kings 22:3). God is my help; in him I have hoped. I must, as is fitting, sing the verse of the psalm. “I have not feared the terror of the night, nor the arrow that flies by day, nor of the evil thing that walks in darkness” (Ps. 90 [91]:5–6). I had, therefore, to leave my native land, that of the Romans, I mean, and I fled to a foreign country.²¹ I entered Persian [Turkish] territory, facing many dangers along the way, it should be noted, from all of which I was rescued by God. I remained for quite a while with the ruler of the Persians.²² There I often led a contingent of our Persian enemies nobly into battle against the Attarioi [Mongols]. This people migrated from lands to the East not a long time ago. They have been raised to war, gladly shed blood, and are spirited like a herd of cattle. Borne along by the situation and yielding to necessity, I endured. What was accomplished there let others say. I feel no obligation to speak about such things myself. But I shall sum up everything by saying just one thing, and let the all-watching eye [of God] be witness to my words. During the time I spent in Persia I engaged in absolutely nothing, in word, in deed, in plot, or in attempt against the ruler of the Romans at that time, the blessed late emperor, my cousin [Theodore II Laskaris] or against the realm of the Romans. Rather, with God’s help, I intended and carried out in practice only what would benefit them. The spirit of envy soon dissipated and in a short time I left Persia and again returned to the land of the Romans, subjected myself to the ruler and again loyally performed the services he commanded. These things then happened before I became emperor.²³

What came after that as, guided by the Lord’s right hand, we attained the summit of imperial power? His might worked wondrously in me. Practically everyone who lives in these recent times, of various fortune, age, or dignity, are my most truthful witnesses in the Lord and my crown of boasting. “I did not give sleep to my eyes, nor slumber to mine eyelids, nor rest to my temples” (Ps. 131 [132]:4). I did not rest my buttocks upon the imperial bench until the time when, by a variety of actions, I had driven away from the Roman lands the lustful, greedy enemies raging with barbaric spirit and delusion, their head raised against us, their heel lifted up. They had eaten the bread of the Romans and lifted their heel against them (Ps. 40 [41]:10). Those Latins dashed out of Constantinople like the “progeny of flying asps”—for here too it is appropriate to quote the prophet (Is. 30:6)—feeding on the region near by and very close, as well as far away, inland and on the coast.²⁴ I shook [them] off as chaff from the [p. 792] threshing floor of the Romans in the summer. These men who drove my own people from their homes could find no place at all to dwell. Well done! Well done! Leading us and fighting on our behalf was the hand of God which Isaiah calls “mighty,” for the reason, I believe, that it strikes down the insolent.²⁵ With [the guidance of] God who connects bones and joints (cf. Ezek. 37:7), I made the empire strong and sound of limb. As much as was in my power I expanded its borders. Because of this it now enjoys peace, the nurse of children, within and about it, and right to the present it instills fear in all its enemies. May it always increase and grow stronger, God and Lord of mercy.

THIRTEENTH CENTURY

Since, therefore, it is I who have led the struggle on behalf of the Romans, I who because of human weakness bear the heavy burden of so many sins on my soul, for the expiation of which I have presented this small offering to God, I ask you too, God-loving emperors, to cherish it. I ask that you take care to preserve it inviolable, without making any innovations, whether in time it happens to prosper and increase or falls into decline and suffers deterioration and the last steps toward the worst. For what contribution could the monastery make to the public treasury or how could it augment the repository of imperial funds? For what nobleman’s upkeep would [its revenues] be sufficient or how would they increase the daily rations of the soldiers, or anything else of the sort? Even if there were such, it is still necessary that what has been dedicated to God be preserved in its entirety without any diminution, unless of course a person regards the charge of sacrilege as of small account, rather than harmful and dangerous to one’s soul.²⁶

Since we have assumed the imperial rule we have honored and confirmed the donations made in the chrysobulls of the revered emperors, our predecessors, to monasteries, churches, cities, rulers, and other persons in very similar terms.²⁷ With God’s help we have added to many of them. We request that that principle be observed regarding our own judgments which we have observed in dealing with those made by others. We ourselves have not wavered in observing the law which has come down to us, inasmuch as it is an excellent one and bears the profound venerability of age, and we recommend and we urge that our successors also observe it. We request that our small offering which we presented as a perfect sacrifice to God remain unaltered and unshaken, lest, as falling short of the law or as sacrificial animals which have lost their tails or ears and thus prove unacceptable, they may be disregarded by God (Lev. 22:23). Moreover, we desire this monastery which we have lit up as a lamp from the burning fervor of our heart to the supreme commander Michael, to the second and great light [p. 793] after the first and greatest light to remain forever, and such is our prayer from the depths of our soul, comforted by the oil of the good deeds of you our heirs and successors in the imperial rule, my sons as Scripture would have it. May this light, this brilliant lamp, escort my majesty and you to the tents of the just (cf. Luke 16:19) and illuminate the entrance to that most holy country, I mean the divine paradise. As “sons of the day” (I Thess. 5:5), and illuminated by the light of holy baptism as well as by our imperial anointing, may we be worthy to see that day which is not followed by night.

[16. Allocution to the Patriarch]²⁸

“Venerable excellency, Patriarch, with God’s help enforce the rule of the monastery.”

Now that my majesty has addressed all these words to the Christ-loving emperors, I direct my discourse to you who preside in the position of principal overseer, I mean the patriarchal throne of the renowned queen of cities. I place [these words] as a sort of holy confirmation upon the present document and even a most fitting conclusion to it. How many and what kind of benefactions God, the “king of kings” (I Tim. 6:15), has conferred upon my majesty, and how in return for so many good things we apportioned a small gift to him by raising up the revered monastery honored with the name of the supreme commander of the powers above, your virtuous self may learn about in detail from what we have briefly recalled in the preface and in the allocution to the emperors.

37. AUXENTIOS

Since, therefore, it is customary and proper for those erecting monasteries and settling a community of monks in them to establish, in addition to other things, very capable protectors for them, which is exactly what my majesty is doing. Indeed, knowing full well that spiritual matters must by no means be referred to those who are concerned with bodily matters, it is to your virtuous self, to whom belongs spiritual authority, and whose constant care and aim is to be concerned about the salvation of souls, that my majesty makes this request. Please recall our struggles on behalf of the Romans which we recounted in the above chapters.²⁹ As from God, from whom everything comes, it was by our strenuous labors that you without trouble were seated upon the throne of Constantinople and that you are acclaimed by all, not only your own, but by strangers and foreigners, [p. 794] specifically and by name as patriarch of Constantinople. The patriarchs who preceded you outside the queen of cities were named by some as “Patriarch of Nicaea” and by others as “Patriarch of the province of Bithynia,” just as the most devout and truly blessed emperors who ruled before us were at times called simply “alleged rulers of Romania” or at times emperors, but not of all the Romans but only of those to the East. A person might not believe what we have been saying if he had no knowledge of the driveling of the Latins, their iron, unbending neck, if he did not know the terrible raging against us of the apostates who are of the same Roman race as we, all these faithless enemies, savage beasts, all but breathing destruction against Romania.

If not for other reasons, at least for those just mentioned, accord us this favor and protect this monastery and all its possessions in accord with the present decree of guardianship of my majesty. Indeed, not only this but, if necessary, recall these matters to the various rulers who shall be the heirs and successors of my majesty. Remind them of its founding and the contributions made to have the monastery prosper, and to guard all the possessions of the monastery as absolutely inalienable down to the smallest one which in any way has been included. In short, call upon them to show constant mercy to this monastery and to keep the monks from disturbance and distraction. Living in peace and solitude, therefore, they may pray on behalf of my soul and those of the Christ-loving emperors, for your virtuous self, and for the entire assemblage of people bearing the name of Christ.

You must know that if you do not carry out these matters as set down, you shall have to render an account to my majesty in the fearful day of judgment. You will have to explain why you did not choose to carry out the most reasonable request of a religious emperor and, by the grace of Christ, an orthodox one, who has also, as noted, bestowed great favor upon you. [But if you do carry out] everything, you will receive in return from the supreme commander of the powers above a substantial reward and a gift many times larger.

THIRTEENTH CENTURY

[17. Inventory]

“Although few, nevertheless the monastery’s possessions must be listed here in detail.”

[Missing Chapter]

Notes on the Translation

Editors’ note: The assistance of our translator, George Dennis [GD], is gratefully acknowledged for the notes to this document.

1. Andronikos Palaiologos and Theodora Komnene; see [13] below and (38) Kellibara I [2].
2. A discreet allusion to the author’s successful usurpation of the throne in 1259. [GD]
3. The reference is to the battle of Pelagonia in 1259 in which Michael’s brother, the sebastokrator John Palaiologos, captured the Prince of Achaea, William II Villehardouin (1246–78), and other Latin nobles; see Deno Geanakoplos, “Greco-Latin Relations on the Eve of the Byzantine Restoration: The Battle of Pelagonia—1259,” DOP 7 (1953), 99–141, and (38) Kellibara I [7].
4. A reference to the recapture of Constantinople from the Latins by Michael’s general Alexios Strategopoulos on July 25, 1261; see also [15] below and (38) Kellibara I [8].
5. Not in the Septuagint. [GD]
6. Impossible to identify with certainty in the absence of firm evidence for dating the typikon. If an early date is proposed, this might be Arsenios Autoreianos (1261–65); if the traditional dating of the document is preferred, this might be John IX Bekkos (1275–82); see also [16] below.
7. Sites of the heroic era of Egyptian monasticism in late antiquity. [GD]
8. For Michael’s paternal grandfather, see [13] below and Pargoire, “Saint-Auxence,” p. 455.
9. For esti d’hon read esti d’hote. [GD]
10. Cf. (57) Bebaia Elpis [30].
11. Cf. (32) Mamas [43] and (33) Heliou Bomon [42].
12. See the introductions to (12) Tzimiskes, (15) Constantine IX, and (59) Manuel II for the exercise of this imperial prerogative.
13. A sixth-century monk of Asia Minor cited by John Klimakos, Scala Paradisi, PG 88, col. 720, as a model of obedience. [GD]
14. Cf. the same sentiment in (13) Ath. Typikon [16].
15. In [8] above.
16. For Michael’s family, see Alexander Kazhdan, “Palaiologos,” ODB, pp. 1557–60.
17. For this miracle by St. Michael, see A. Weyl Carr and N. P. Ševčenko, “Chonai, Miracle at,” ODB, p. 427.
18. Cf. (31) Areia [T12].
19. 1242 or 1243; cf. (38) Kellibara I [4].
20. Probably a reference to Michael II Komnenos Doukas (1230–66/68), despot of Epiros, and his uncle Theodore Doukas, the former emperor of Thessalonike (1225–30).
21. 1256; see Geanakoplos, Michael VIII, pp. 26–32.
22. Perhaps Kilij-Arslan IV (1248–65), the Seljuk sultan of Rum.
23. In 1258.
24. A reference to the recovery of Constantinople from the Latins on July 25, 1261; see also [1] above.
25. Or “upraised”: Isaiah 5:25; 9:12; 14:27 et al. [GD]
26. Cf. (22) Evergetis [19] and related documents.
27. See Rouillard, “Politique.”
28. Impossible to identify with certainty; see [1] above with note.
29. In [1] and [15] above.

Document Notes

- [1] Founder's motivations; foundation history. See also [15] below and the even more elaborate autobiographical introduction to the author's (38) Kellibara I [1] ff.
- [2] Independent status; rights of the metropolitan of Chalcedon. Among thirteenth-century documents, (34) Machairas [21], (35) Skoteine [20], (36) Blemmydes [1], (38) Kellibara I [15], (39) Lips [1], and (40) Anargyroi [3] also assert institutional independence. For the rights of the local hierarchy in documents of this century, see (34) Machairas [9], [16], [19], [20], [140]; (35) Skoteine [16], [17], [20]; (35) Blemmydes [1]; (38) Kellibara I [15]; (39) Lips [1]; and (45) Neophytos [12], [15].
- [3] Election of the superior. Cf. the language and provisions of (22) Evergetis [13], [14] and related documents; see also contemporary provisions in (38) Kellibara I [18] and (39) Lips [5]. For the eligibility of outside candidates for the superiorship, see (32) Mamas [1], (33) Heliou Bomon [1], and (35) Skoteine [17].
- [4] Exhortation to the superior. Cf. (38) Kellibara I [18]; for the form if not the content of this chapter, see (22) Evergetis [17] and related documents as well as (45) Neophytos [15]. For the rationalization of inequality, see also (39) Lips [14] and (52) Choumnos [B20].
- [5] Address to the monks: no private possessions; correction of the superior; no quarreling over positions or special friendships. Cf. similar provisions in (22) Evergetis [14], [16], [22], [42] and related documents.
- [6] Number of monks. See also discussions of limitations set in (38) Kellibara I [17], (39) Lips [4], (40) Anargyroi [6], and (45) Neophytos [9], [C16].
- [7] Officials of the monastery and their duties; communal wardrobe; equality in food and drink; lifetime tenure of office. See discussions of these officials in (34) Machairas [80], [96], [100] and in (39) Lips [24], [25]. For the communal wardrobe, see (34) Machairas [102], [103] and (39) Lips [36]. For the periodic rotation of work assignments elsewhere, see (20) Black Mountain [78] and (39) Lips [17]. For lifetime tenure of office, see (22) Evergetis [14] and related documents.
- [8] Regulation of psalmody. For the endorsement of the liturgical typikon of St. Sabas in other thirteenth-century documents, see (35) Skoteine [12], (39) Lips [30], and (45) Neophytos [12], [C4].
- [9] Financial administration. Cf. arrangements in (27) Kecharitomene [24], (32) Mamas [10], (33) Heliou Bomon [10], (34) Machairas [100], and (39) Lips [22], [23]. For the prohibition on storing up wealth, see (3) Theodore Studites [21].
- [10] Diet of the monks. For the endorsement of the liturgical typikon of St. Sabas, see [8] above with cross-references to other documents; for refectory procedures, see (22) Evergetis [9]; for the superior's dietary discretion for the sick, see (22) Evergetis [10]; for additional self-imposed dietary restrictions, see (20) Black Mountain [72], (36) Blemmydes [11], and (45) Neophytos [C4].
- [11] Relations with hesychasts. Cf. arrangements for solitaries in (24) Christodoulos [A24]. For similarly tolerant sentiments towards alternatives to cenobiticism in other thirteenth-century documents, see (34) Machairas [152] and (45) Neophytos [17] (missing).
- [12] Length of novitiate; exclusion of women except members of the imperial family. For the novitiate, see provisions in (22) Evergetis [37] and related documents. For the exclusion of women, see (22) Evergetis [38], [39] and related documents; cf. terms for the exclusion of men in (27) Kecharitomene [80].
- [13] Commemoration of the founders and departed monks; no burial of women; reading of the typikon. For these commemorations in thirteenth-century documents, see (34) Machairas [154], [157]; (35) Skoteine [9], [10]; (39) Lips [30], [52]; (40) Anargyroi [6]; and (45) Neophytos [12]. For burial restrictions elsewhere, see (27) Kecharitomene [76], (29) Kosmosoteira [86], and (60) Charsianeites [C2]; for reading of the typikon, see (22) Evergetis [43] and related documents, (39) Lips [8], (55) Athanasios I [8], (57) Bebaia Elpis [120], (58) Menoikeion [9], and (60) Charsianeites [C10].
- [14] Celebration of patronal feasts. Cf. provisions in other thirteenth-century documents: (34) Machairas [27], [29]; (35) Skoteine [19]; and (39) Lips [37], [38].
- [15] Appeal to future rulers. For other arguments against the annulment of a founder's typikon, see (39) Lips [1] and (40) Anargyroi [1].

THIRTEENTH CENTURY

- [16] Appointment of the patriarch as guardian. Cf. the much more limited patriarchal role in (29) Kosmosoteira [4], [111] as well as the broad claims for patriarchal rights of oversight in (55) Athanasios I [9].
- [17] Inventory of landed properties. Missing, but cf. other such inventories in (19) Attaleiates [INV 9], (27) Kecharitomene Appendix A, (28) Pantokrator [65], (35) Skoteine [31] ff., and (39) Lips [44] ff.

38. Kellibara I: Typikon of Michael VIII Palaiologos for the Monastery of St. Demetrios of the Palaiologoi-Kellibara in Constantinople

Date: 1282¹

Translator: George Dennis

Edition employed: Henri Grégoire, “Imperatoris Michaelis Palaeologi de vita sua,” Byzantion 29–30 (1959–60), 447–76, with text at 447–74.

Manuscript: Moscow, State Historical Museum, graecus 363, fols. 440r–447r (14th c.)

Other translations: French ([1]–[14] only) by Grégoire, “De vita sua,” pp. 448–70; French ([2]–[12] only), by Conrad Chapman, Michel Paléologue, restaurateur de l’Empire byzantin (1261–1282) (Paris, 1926), pp. 167–77; Russian, by I. G. Troitskii, Autobiographia imperatora Mikhaila Paleologa (St. Petersburg, 1885), pp. 21–43.

Institutional History

A. Prior History of the Kellibara Monastery

The older of the two institutions being joined into one foundation in this document was the Monastery of the Mother of God Acheiropoietos “not painted by human hands” (probably a reference to its patronal icon) or Kellibara. It was located at the modern Jediler, close to medieval Herakleia and to the south of the summit of Mount Latros, site of the Monastery of the Mother of God tou Stylou for which Paul the Younger wrote (7) Latros back in the tenth century.² Kellibara’s origins are unknown, but the monastery was already in existence, supposedly populated by refugee monks from Mount Sinai, before Paul began his own community on Latros ca. 920–930. Kellibara was apparently a mixed community of cenobitic monks and solitaries, like Paul’s foundation and Athanasios’ Lavra monastery on Mount Athos.³

A certain Methodios was superior of Kellibara in 1049 when he assisted in a patriarchal inquest over the property rights of Paul’s Stylos monastery.⁴ In the thirteenth century, the superiors of Kellibara and Paul’s Stylos monastery hotly disputed the right to the archimandritical authority over the monasteries of the Latros confederacy.⁵ Patriarch Manuel I Sarantenos (1216/17–22) removed this honor from Kellibara and bestowed it on Stylos, but his successor Germanos II (1223–40) annulled this decision by providing that Kellibara should reclaim the archimandritical authority after the death of the current incumbent from Stylos. Yet Stylos seems to have provided the next archimandrite anyway. There was also an active scriptorium and library at Kellibara in the thirteenth century.⁶

The despot John Palaiologos, brother of Michael VIII, is recorded [17] in the typikon as the donor of a property (location uncertain) on which the Kellibarene monks built a church and a monastic dependency. John represented the imperial government in this region of Asia Minor until his death in 1274.⁷ Janin (Géographie, vol. 2, p. 231) supposed that Kellibara fell to the

THIRTEENTH CENTURY

Turks shortly after John's death, i.e., even before the issuance of the typikon in 1282, but the neighboring Stylos monastery is attested as late as 1360.⁸

B. Prior History of the Monastery of St. Demetrios

According to the typikon itself, a church of St. Demetrios of the Palaiologoi, the newer of the two institutions united in this document, was founded [12] by Michael VIII's prominent ancestor, George Palaiologos, a general of the early Komnenian era who played a major role in Alexios I Komnenos' seizure of power in 1081.⁹ His foundation of St. Demetrios, which is not otherwise attested, probably took place in the early twelfth century after the end of his military career. The typikon charges [12] the Latin occupiers of Constantinople with razing this foundation to the ground, supposedly out of personal spite for its founder.

C. Creation of the New Unified Foundation

Unlike the foundation described in (37) Auxentios, which Michael VIII apparently endowed with public resources, the new joint foundation of St. Demetrios-Kellibara probably received its support through the device of union (henosis) with the surviving assets of the old Kellibara monastery. That monastery's monks feared [13] the Turks would soon overrun the site of their original foundation, but they retained [17] a considerable number of dependencies in Constantinople and its vicinity as well as in Prousa (Bursa) and Nicaea. Their need for resettlement coincided with the emperor's plans to add a monastery to the church of St. Demetrios, and evidently they were able to trade their remaining assets through an administrative union with St. Demetrios for a new, more secure home in the capital.

D. Subsequent History

The foundation reappears in 1315, when the ordained monk Theodore, perhaps its superior, was condemned by the patriarchal synod and deposed.¹⁰ In a much later patriarchal act of 1400, the foundation is described as an "imperial and patriarchal" monastery.¹¹ Perhaps by then the foundation had lost the independent status that is claimed for it in the present typikon [15]; it might have become a public institution even before 1315. The administrative reorganization may have led to the issuance of (56) Kellibara II by Michael VIII's son and successor Andronikos II (1282–1328), as either a replacement or supplement to the present document.

On his visit to Constantinople, perhaps in 1349, the Russian traveler Stephen of Novgorod describes the foundation as an imperial monastery and records his veneration of the body of "the holy Emperor Laskariasaf."¹² Ihor Ševčenko has suggested that this is a corrupted form of Joasaph, a possible monastic name of the deposed emperor John IV Laskaris, who may have been buried at the foundation as part of a reconciliation between the supporters of the new and the old imperial dynasties promoted by Andronikos II in 1284.¹³ The names of two of the foundation's later superiors are known, both of whom served as ambassadors for John VIII Palaiologos: Isidore, the future metropolitan of Kiev, who is attested in 1433, and a Gregory, in 1448.¹⁴ This makes it likely that the foundation survived down to the fall of Constantinople in 1453.

Majeska (Russian Travelers, p. 267) locates the site of the foundation near the sea walls "between the port of Contoscalion and the Jewish Gate at Vlanga, near the old port of Eleutherius."

38. KELLIBARA I

No remains have been identified. At Kellibara's site in southwestern Turkey, however, Wiegand uncovered considerable ruins at the turn of the century that were as imposing as those of the neighboring Stylos monastery.¹⁵

Analysis

A. Importance of the Document

Previously, this document has attracted attention in the guise of the "Autobiography" of its author, Emperor Michael VIII Palaiologos, but despite the unusually lengthy elaboration in the first eleven chapters of the personal element in the customary foundation history, this is in fact a founder's typikon, the manuscript of which abruptly terminates in the middle of [18]. It is important for its exposition of the hereditary obligations of patronage, which the emperor has acknowledged through his reconstruction of the church of St. Demetrios erected in Constantinople two centuries earlier by his ancestor George Palaiologos. This document, along with its predecessors (5) Euthymios [1] and (19) Attaleiates [12], is also useful for its illustration of the mechanism of union by which two monasteries or other religious foundations were joined—theoretically on equal terms—into one new foundation.

B. Lives of the Monks

1. Number of Monks

The emperor fixes [17] the number of monks at the principal monastery of the new foundation at thirty-six, of which fifteen were to be literate monks devoted to performance of liturgical services while the remaining twenty-one monks were to provide the necessary supportive services.

In each of the foundation's seventeen dependencies, many of which were quite small, one of the monks was also a priest, except for the two which had sub-dependencies, which must have needed more priests to handle services. The total number of monks reported to be in the dependencies is eighty-one, which added to the thirty-six at the main monastery falls twenty-one short of the one hundred thirty-eight reckoned by the emperor himself; perhaps the refugee monks from Kellibara accounted for the difference.

2. Other Disciplinary Matters

Additional information about the daily lives of the monks of this foundation at a later stage of its existence can be found in (56) Kellibara II.

C. Constitutional Matters

1. Free and Self-Governing Status

The emperor grants [15] the foundation free and self-governing status. Lest the same fate overtake the newly created foundation as the old Kellibara monastery, he takes the precaution of specifically exempting it from being joined to another monastery, a church, hospital, or home for the elderly.

2. The Protectorate

The emperor designates [16] himself as the monastery's guardian (ephoros) "so that the independence of the monastery may be maintained and it may not be subject to harassment.” He provides that his successors on the throne will inherit “the care and responsibilities of a founder,” just as he himself has done from his ancestor George Palaiologos.

3. Leadership

The emperor declares [15] the monastery’s superior “together with the rest of the community” competent to administer all the material and spiritual affairs of the foundation, subject only to the regulations in the typikon. As he did also in (37) Auxentios [4], the emperor indicates [18] his preference that the superior should rule his community by “persuasion, not force.”

The monastery’s officials, including the treasurer, the cellarer, and the baker, were to be appointed [17] by the superior. The typikon was also to govern the lives of the monks in the 17 dependencies and the two sub-dependencies subordinated to the new foundation: the emperor instructs that they too “must bring themselves into line with it in every respect.”

4. Election of the Superior

The emperor leaves [18] the choice of the superior up to the community. The text breaks off as the emperor seems to be about to provide the protector with a role in either installing the new superior or, perhaps, resolving disputed elections (cf. (37) Auxentios [3]).

5. Patronal Privileges

As benefits of his patronage, Michael VIII asserts [16] that a future emperor will receive the assistance of St. Demetrios as a mediator with the Almighty and as a protector in combat; God will also be disposed to honor his requests and favor him with salvation. The implication then is that no material privileges were to be expected, but note the protector’s possible role [18] in the election or installation of the superior.

D. Financial Matters

There is no direct discussion of financial matters in the portion of the typikon that has survived, nor is there any in (56) Kellibara II. Presumably the Kellibarene dependencies had endowed properties that made them valuable bargaining chips for the reconstitution of the Kellibara community within the framework of the union with the St. Demetrios monastery.

E. External Relations

The emperor explicitly denies [15] the patriarch any rights of overlordship over the foundation, including any right of spiritual correction that he may have conceded to the metropolitan of Chalcedon in (37) Auxentios [3]. Instead, the patriarch was to be content with liturgical commemoration (anaphora) and registration in the sacred diptychs.

Notes on the Introduction

1. Since the typikon mentions the outbreak of the Sicilian Vespers against Charles of Anjou on March 30, 1282, in [9], it must have been composed between that date and Michael VIII’s death on December 11 of that same year; see Troitskii, Autobiographia, p. 45.
2. For the location, see Janin, Géographie, vol. 2, p. 231.

38. KELLIBARA I

3. Vita S. Pauli Iunioris 8–10, ed. H. Delehaye, “Vita S. Pauli Iunioris in monte Latro,” AB 11 (1892), pp. 34–37.
4. MM 4.315–17 (1049).
5. Act of Manuel I (1222), ed. MM 4.295–98 = Laurent, Regestes, no. 1231, confirmed by John III Vatatzes, ed. MM 6.429–30 = Dölger, Regesten, no. 1712, and Act of Germanos II (n.d.), ed. MM 4.298–300 = Laurent, Regestes, no. 1295, with Janin, Géographie, vol. 2, p. 230.
6. See Janin, Géographie, vol. 2, pp. 230–31, and Volk, “Klosterbibliotheken,” pp. 163–66.
7. Pachymeres, 6.20, ed. A. Failler, Georges Pachymèrès, Relations historiques, vol. 2 (Paris, 1984), p. 591.
8. See (7) Latros Institutional History.
9. See B. Skoulatos, Les Personnages byzantins de l’Alexiade (Louvain, 1980), pp. 99–105.
10. Act of John XIII Glykys (1315), ed. MM 1.42 = Darrouzès, Regestes, no. 2053.
11. Act of Matthew I (1400), ed. MM 2.325–26 = Darrouzès, Regestes, no. 3091.
12. Majeska, Russian Travelers, p. 267.
13. I. Ševčenko, “Notes on Stephen, The Novgorodian Pilgrim to Constantinople in the XIV Century,” SF 12 (1953), 165–75, at 173–75.
14. Dölger, Regesten, nos. 3430 and 3515.
15. Th. Wiegand, Milet, vol. 3, pt. 1: Der Latmos (Berlin, 1913), pp. 25–29.

Bibliography

- Beck, Hans-Georg, Kirche und theologische Literatur im byzantinischen Reich (Munich, 1959), p. 696.
- Dmitrievsky, Aleksei, Opisanie liturgicheskikh rykopisei, vol. 1: Typika, pt. 1 (Kiev, 1895), pp. xcix–cvi.
- Janin, Raymond, La géographie ecclésiastique de l’empire byzantin, vol. 2: Les églises et les monastères des grands centres byzantins (Paris, 1975), pp. 229–32; vol. 3: Les églises et les monastères [de Constantinople], 2nd ed. (Paris, 1969), pp. 92–94.
- , “Les églises byzantines des saints militaires (Constantinople et banlieue),” EO 33 (1934), 163–80, 331–42; EO 34 (1935), 56–70.
- Majeska, George, Russian Travelers to Constantinople in the Fourteenth and Fifteenth Centuries (Washington, D.C., 1984), pp. 267–68.
- Runciman, Steven, The Sicilian Vespers (Cambridge, 1958).
- Volk, Otto, “Die byzantinischen Klosterbibliotheken von Konstantinopel, Thessalonike und Kleinasien” (Ph.D. diss., Munich, 1955), pp. 163–66.
- Volk, Robert, Gesundheitswesen und Wohltätigkeit im Spiegel der byzantinischen Klostertypika (Munich, 1983), pp. 238–43.

Translation

1. “Lord my God, I will glorify thee.” Now is the fitting time for my majesty to recite the sublime words of Isaiah: “Lord my God, I will sing hymns to thy name, for thou hast done wonderful things for me” (Is. 25:1). You have magnified your mercy toward your servant and you have been lavish with your compassion. Lord, is there even one of those things which your merciful heart had done for me that does not surpass the very notion of miracle? Right from my birth you honor me with your own hands. You create me from nothing, and you create me according to your image and likeness. Together with my soul you place within me reason and intelligence, capable of finding the noblest things and of guiding me toward knowledge of you. You honor me with free will and you order me to rule over all creatures on earth. You fashioned me, a man that is, as a sovereign nature truly in imitation of you, the only God and lord. But these benefactions are common to the entire race. Everyone partakes of them. Every human being is well aware of these and professes gratitude for these gifts and gives praise to the creator.

THIRTEENTH CENTURY

But to list what I in a special manner, apart from the others, have received from your providence, one could more easily count the grains of sand by the sea and the drops of rain than draw up such a list. For some men may boast of an illustrious family or wealth. Others may be admired because they have sired valiant sons, others because of their influence with emperors. Others have been outstanding because of their military leadership and trophies of battle. While some have been privileged to possess one of these qualities, others have sometimes possessed several. But [as] for me, why should I not speak [p. 449] the truth, for it is known to all? In talking of these matters I am not simply bragging about myself or being proud or ostentatious. I am not boasting as a man usually does, but I am doing it in the Lord so as not to hide in silence the great deeds of God. On the contrary I shall relate them fully not to praise myself but to glorify the creator. But for me God has heaped together all those things which individually would have made a person illustrious.

2. Let me begin straightaway with my parents.¹ My father can trace his family to ancestors who were related by marriage to emperors and empresses, whereas my mother traces hers directly to emperors.² From far back then God established our illustrious family and laid the foundations for my present rule. For the moment I pass over my maternal and clearly imperial ancestry. Concerning my father's side, the Palaiologos family, investigation shows that their ancient noble repute only increased with time, and that the fathers continuously handed on to their sons a greater repute than they had received. As to how the members of the family placed the prosperity to be found here below second to their concern about living in a manner pleasing to God which would lead them to inherit the life hidden in Him [God], we shall refer [the reader] to the discourses and books composed by the learned. For these give an account not only of their dignities and honors, the great influence they had with rulers, and how they accumulated vast riches, no less than of their combat in wartime, their generalship, and their valor, but they also inform us of their erection of religious houses, holy convents and monasteries, their donation of property, their aid to the poor, their concern for the infirm, and their protection of the indigent of all sorts, and all their pious deeds which bore fruit before God. By proclaiming the donor of these, at the same time they purchased goods in heaven in exchange for ephemeral and perishable ones.

3. This good reputation as well as the piety, which increased greatly, as mentioned, with the contributions of each succeeding generation, were inherited by the megas doux my grandfather and the megas domestikos my father.³ Even if their abundant hope in God and their love [of him], as well as their prominence, their glory, and their unswerving constancy in all circumstances cannot be read about in books, there may still be many people alive [p. 451] who have seen these with their own eyes, while many have also heard about them from witnesses. Thus, our account of them is not without corroboration, and what we say is by no means wide of the mark. It is not right, moreover, to make up stories on such subjects, because we have recalled them in recognition of the benefactions of God to us in the past and up to the present, and not because of some conceit or the need to triumph or show off.

38. KELLIBARA I

4. Now that I have given an account of this great and noble heritage, how much I have enriched it—this is your gift, Lord God, from your goodness and not from me—indeed how much I have enriched it the very facts proclaim. Before I had completely outgrown my infancy my uncle, the revered emperor John [III Doukas Vatatzes (1222–54)], introduced me to the palace. He had me carefully raised and instructed as though I were his own son. He was anxious that I should be well educated in all subjects and endeavors, and he seemed more loving than a father in my regard. If indeed I derived profit from being initiated by that great spirit and proved myself a worthy disciple of that master, let others judge. As for myself, from adolescence as soon as I was capable I was called to bear arms.⁴ I was judged suited for command by the emperor himself, not to mention that I was selected over those who had followed such a career for many years. I was indeed assigned to command and found myself posted to the West.⁵ With God’s help I overcame the hostile forces arrayed against us, overcoming no less the expectations of the emperor who had sent me. There was nothing that did not deserve to be recounted, and at that time the emperor listened with pleasure to reports of my achievements. Then, as though through multiplying proofs of love and desirous of attaching me to himself by all sorts of ties, he became my father-in-law by betrothing to me his own niece whom he loved as his daughter.⁶ She in turn became the mother of my children, the mother of emperors.

5. Then I was again placed in command, and again there were battles. Once more God granted me victory and complete success. At that time I was entrusted with the war against the Latins for whom, to its misfortune, the queen of cities served as a fortress.⁷ From my camp on the Asiatic side opposite the city I can say that, with God as my ally, I drove them to the last extremities. On all sides I prevented them from landing, I repelled their assaults, and I cut off their vital supply lines. All this took place [p. 453] while that man [John III Doukas Vatatzes] was still alive. We advanced “from glory to glory” (II Cor. 3:18) and from great beginnings became ever greater, with God guiding us along the path of prosperity. But when the government of the Romans passed from him to his son [Theodore II Laskaris (1254–58)] our time came to be tested by the arrows of jealousy which have tested many others.

How did God deliver us at that time and how from such oppression did “He brought me out into a wide place” (Ps. 17 [18]:19)? To put it succinctly, he saved me [by sending me] to the Persians [Turks].⁸ There he took me by my right hand and gloriously added to what he had given me. Even now one can still hear them singing the praise of our battle line as it faced the Massagetai [Tatars], its morale as it charged into battle, and its great victory over warriors who were up to then regarded as invincible. This was achieved in the midst of Persian territory, not by us but by God working through us. After this, therefore, a vast number of delegations and letters were sent to us from the emperor, recalling us to our fatherland and to our family, who were also entreating us to return. This would please the emperor as nothing else I can think of, for he knew that while I was with the Persians in body, I was (I swear by God that this is true) with him and the Romans in spirit. This would also please the dignitaries and all of ours. But since my discourse has other goals, I think I should hasten to attend to them and leave these topics.

6. Thus we returned home. “Come hear and I will tell all ye that fear God what great things he has done for my soul” (Ps. 65 [66]:16). Then came the consummation of God’s many and great benefactions; then came the conclusion of his interventions, the gold crown of the good things received from him. What transpired? After a short time the autocrat Theodore [II Laskaris] passed on, bringing his allotted span of life to a happy end.⁹ “Who shall tell the mighty acts of the Lord; who shall cause all thy praises to be heard?” (Ps. 105 [106]:2). I was raised up to be emperor of your people.¹⁰ The proof of this is clear and unambiguous. For it was not the many hands coming to assist me or their frightening weapons which elevated me above the heads of the Romans. It was not any highly persuasive speech delivered by me or by my supporters which fell upon the ears of the crowd, filled them with great hopes, and convinced them to entrust themselves to me. No, it was your right hand, Lord, which did this mighty deed. Your right hand raised me on high, and [p. 455] established me as lord of all. I did not persuade anyone, but was myself persuaded. I did not bring force to bear on anyone, but was myself forced.

THIRTEENTH CENTURY

7. This then is what happened up to the present, to select a few things from many as typical. Such have been the graces of God. There are many, I believe, who would like to write about subsequent events, but the very number of them should overcome their eagerness. For we accomplished mighty deeds in you our God, and it was you who reduced our enemies to naught. Just as I was beginning my reign I was victorious in Thessaly over those¹¹ who had been in rebellion against Roman rule for many years and who had developed more hostility to our interests than had our natural enemies. Along with them I overcame their allies who were under the command of [William II Villehardouin (1246–78)] the prince of Achaia. Who were these allies? Germans, Sicilians, Italians, some who came from Apulia, others from Iapyges [Calabria] and Brindisi. There were also some from Boeotia, Euboea, and the Peloponnesos who joined them on campaign not so much in observance of their alliance as motivated by their own ambition to set themselves up as masters, so they intended, of the situation in the region.¹² There was a large number of them, more than could be easily counted, and greater than their number was their strength. Even more [impressive] than these was their arrogance, their insolent and outrageous audacity, and more than these, their terrible hatred toward us. Trusting in you, my king and my God, I counterattacked and was victorious, and drove all of them together into bondage.

With the army under my command I then went and subjugated Akarnania, Aetolia, and the region about the gulf of Krisa.¹³ I also forced the one and the other Epiros to submit, and brought Illyria under my control. I advanced to Epidamnos [Durazzo], and then from another direction I attacked all of Phokike. I then ravaged the country of Levadia and moved against that of Kadmeia [Boeotia]. Our forces encamped in Attica and enjoyed themselves as though it were their own land. I passed through Megara and its strait. I coursed through the entire Peloponnesos, pillaging some areas and forcing the submission of others. The remnants of the tyrant’s rule in that land, those who had escaped battle and the Roman manacles, I convinced that they must of necessity prefer to fix their dwellings in the sea rather than on dry land.¹⁴ [p. 457]

I think it well to pass over the vast number of deeds effected at that time by the right hand of the most high [God] through us both in Greek lands and elsewhere. At that time in fact the Mysians [Bulgarians] in Europe tried to put us to the test, and so did the Scythians [Mongols]. The former found that we were allies, helpers, and to sum it up, saviors, whereas the latter found us to be the opposite as we defeated, scattered, and destroyed them. The Persians [Turks] also had some experience of us, for while our gaze was on the West, they decided not to keep the peace, but considered it a golden opportunity. What did they find? We destroyed them, took them captive, and made those evil men depart this life in an evil way. But there is no need to dwell on these topics. All those things must be put aside, and we must turn our attention to what came next and which it is impossible not to call to mind.

38. KELLIBARA I

8. Constantinople, the citadel of the inhabited world, the imperial capital of the Romans, had, with the permission of God, come under the control of the Latins. By God's gift it was returned to the Romans through us.¹⁵ All those who had previously attempted this, even though they made their attempts with noble enthusiasm and with faultless military skill, appeared to be shooting arrows straight up into the sky and to be attempting the impossible. All the peoples surrounding us, instead of being struck with astonishment at this and living in peace and realizing that this deed had not been accomplished by the hand of men but was a triumph of God's great power, struck by envy set themselves in motion. We attacked the Persians in the region of Karia and the sources of the Maeander and the nearby region of Phrygia. Even if we refrained from utterly exterminating these upstarts, we reduced many of them to slavery to us. In the other direction, the Bulgarians, in return for having been saved by us acted in a senseless manner by granting the Massagetai (Tatars) passage, thus allowing them to overrun the part of Thrace under our rule. They rose up themselves to join in the attack, but not many days later we gave them back sevenfold.

We purged the sea of its pirates by sending our triremes into the Aegean, where they had not been seen for many years. In this manner we liberated the islands which had been tyrannized by the tyranny [of the pirates] and at the same time we made it safe for people to sail anywhere on the sea. We brought all of Euboea, which possessed large [p. 459] land and naval forces, over to our side, except for one very small area. We won a brilliant naval victory over a huge fleet of triremes from Euboea, leaving only one ship to bring back news of the defeat.¹⁶

9. [Charles of Anjou (1266–82)] the king of Sicily who ruled over that part of the mainland opposite Sicily and who also ruled over Italy from Brindisi to Tuscany including Florence and as far as Liguria, had already made an attempt on Greek territory and had rendered assistance to the Latins in Euboea as well as to those in Thebes. He fought valiantly and without stint on behalf of the remnants of his race in the Peloponnesos, coming to their aid with a force one could not treat lightly, and dispatching his soldiers all over Greece. Twice and even three times we defeated his troops when they were all assembled together in Euboea on orders to concentrate their forces there for the purpose of recovering that place from us. Several times, moreover, we were victorious in the Peloponnesos against those who wanted to regain that land.¹⁷ One of our naval squadrons gained a victory over the rulers of Thebes and Euboea when they had assembled their armies together. Our men disembarked from the ships and engaged them in a cavalry battle, with the result that one of the rulers died and that the other one trying to escape did not, being led [instead] in chains before us.

With God as our ally we destroyed that king whom we mentioned [Charles of Anjou], as well as that force advancing toward the Illyrians with the intention not so much that they would engage large numbers in battle and would overcome all those they encountered, but that their forces were strong enough to gain a victory over ten times that number. But this army destroyed itself along the sea coast. Well inland in that region another much larger and more impressive army fell apart and was given over into our hands by God. The barbarian king grew more insane and intensified the war against us. All the hostility which a person might feel against another would be much less than that which he, outdoing his hostility, displayed against us. Although defeated at every encounter, he did not give up, and the continual disasters only made him more quarrelsome. Each new army he sent was stronger than the one before it. Surely it was God who drove him on to the fatal blow. [p. 461]

THIRTEENTH CENTURY

The result was that he sent this very last army. Most impressive it was with a large number of elite fighting men, with no expense spared, with an abundance of horses, weapons, and all the equipment for war. This army, vaunting its obvious superiority, marched inland a day's journey from the sea and began a siege of a city that was still Roman. A palisade was erected all around and the siege began. The king refused to lift the siege until God had taken his camp by siege and delivered it to us. That is what happened to his army.

As far as the rest of his forces were concerned, the Sicilians scorned them as though they did not exist. They boldly took up arms and freed themselves from slavery.¹⁸ If I were to say that their present freedom was brought about by God, and were to add that he brought it about by means of us, I would be saying only what confirms the truth. But if I were to list our other victories such as those we gained in Europe against the Triballians [Serbians], after having defeated the Bulgarians in Mysia, and in Asia against the Persians, defeated these peoples several times, my words would be transformed into a discourse much longer than the present one.

10. With the aid of the above, therefore, and with many others of the same sort God made my life a happy one. In addition he has granted me a gift of fine children, something which surpasses the prayers of all men. "Kings have come forth from me" (Gen. 17:6). Now, my God, I gaze upon my son who is emperor and upon his son also an emperor, seated upon my throne (cf. Ps. 131 [132]:11).¹⁹ The valor of the one has gained many victories, and he is concerned about the salvation of his people rather than his own life, which is indeed what I most desire, and he makes this the object of all his cares, study and labors. His son furnishes us with noble hopes that he will soon arrive at the same lofty goal.

11. There are so many proofs of the great mercy of God to me, and I owe them to the supplications of all my holy patrons, but especially to those of my great defender, I mean Demetrios [whose body] exudes scented oil. As an ambassador he is always, I am certain, presenting my case to God. I know too that from long ago and up to the present God has sent him as a shield to protect my life and the empire, and I have no doubt that he bestows his own favor on me. [p. 463] Of all the things I have done as emperor, particularly those which were truly imperial inasmuch as they affected the common good, there is not one in which when I called upon him to come he did not immediately give me the sensation of his actual presence and assistance. Because he has so often and in such significant ways come to our aid, we have continuously been mindful of him and have expressed our gratitude to the Martyr of Christ. But one thing was still lacking, and that was for us to trans-pose our good disposition into deeds and to express in a more substantial manner the great love we nourish in the depth of our heart for the divine Demetrios. In the same way as his acts of intercession, so should our thanksgiving when put into deeds “bear fruit for God” (Rom. 7:4). For whatever one does out of reverence to his servants, that veneration obviously passes on to him.

38. KELLIBARA I

12. Now then, in times long past the blessed George Palaiologos²⁰ was preeminent because of his burning religious zeal and great love of God, as well as because of his intelligence, courage, and military experience which he displayed in the conflicts and wars of that period and which earned him abundant honors from the emperor and covered him with glory. He was the first to erect from its very foundations a venerable, holy house dedicated to this Martyr of Christ inside this imperial city. This [saint whose body] exudes scented oil appears to have been the ancestral patron of the house of the Palaiologoi. But the tyranny of the Latins, directly opposed to what he had built, razed it to the ground and reduced it to fine dust so one could barely make out a few faint traces of what it had once been. With the grace of God and the aid of the divine martyr Demetrios my majesty raised up again this building which had fallen and was lying there in ruins, and with a liberal and generous hand restored it to its former splendor. We also established a monastery and settled monks therein to [perform service] pleasing to God. We allocated property to them and sources for adding to their income so they could meet their expenses and provide for the rest of their bodily needs.

What we accomplished was most praiseworthy for two reasons. We satisfied our love for the Martyr by glorifying God, which after all was what had motivated my majesty in the first place. The second result was that we renewed the memory of the blessed founder, our ancestor, which men had already consigned to oblivion. To add a third, my majesty established this new monastery which would permit [p. 465] many to come together in it to lead a religious life which would be most pleasing to God; the number of those praying for us would increase, and in return our reward and recompense would be the greater. For if a person who gives even a glass of cold water does not lose his reward, according to the truthful words of my God and Savior (Matt. 10:42), then by providing those who love the ascetical way of life with the opportunity of doing something pleasing to God and by so arranging matters that they might more conveniently attain their chosen goal, how shall this go unrewarded by him who said that the whole world is not worth as much as one soul (cf. Matt. 16:26). For these reasons, therefore, my majesty has built up again this shrine to God and to his martyr Demetrios. By the intercession of this gloriously triumphant saint may it become a veritable paradise, filled with monks who, like magnificent, ever blooming plants, every day produce in great abundance the fruit of virtue, to the glory of the one God, to the glory of the great Martyr whose name it is privileged to bear, and for the expiation of my many failings, for it should be no surprise that I too have sinned inasmuch as I am human and thus of a quickly changing or fluctuating nature.

13. My majesty has now acknowledged its gratitude to God, and has recounted God’s loving kindness toward it, faintly perhaps but as best we could. Now it is time to pass on to our real purpose, and that is to set forth for this monastery erected by us in honor of the holy martyr Demetrios in Constantinople the directives and regulations according to which you who shall run the ascetical race in it shall conduct your lives and shall administer your, that is to say, the monastery's affairs and possessions.

THIRTEENTH CENTURY

Before beginning this subject, however my majesty has decided to make one thing very clear. Let everyone know and hold for certain that with this monastery of the renowned martyr Demetrios my majesty, for reasons to be explained later, unites and makes one the very great and revered monastery of Kellibara in Asia, which in ancient times was built and was venerated under the title [of the icon] of the most holy Mother of God "not painted by human hands." As a result of this union its entire [community] is brought to settle in this one and so changes its abode. All the monks of Kellibara earnestly desired this and so beseeched my majesty. Nor was my majesty at all unwilling, [p. 467] but was most anxious to effect such an act of union between these monasteries. For I was fearful that, in addition to other difficulties, the monks of Kellibara might suffer something terrible which could easily lead them into the worst of dangers, for they were dwelling on the limits of the Roman border and exposed to all the barbarian assaults. The result is that there is no longer one monastery of Kellibara and another of the great martyr Demetrios in Constantinople, but there is only one and the same monastery from the present through all the years to follow. Even if our enemies now on the offensive should be scattered to the ends of the earth by the protection of the most holy Mother of God, and Kellibara should find itself in the middle of the Roman dominion, the [two monasteries] should not for this reason be separated or divided.

14. To achieve this my majesty declares and proclaims that its rule, which is given below, made for both monasteries will be regarded as really the rule for one monastery, and the Hagiodemetrite monks and the Kellibarene monks will be equally subject to it. From now on the latter are no different from the former, and these no different from those. My majesty orders and desires that there shall be no difference among them even in their names. But one and the same monk, whether he resides in the monastery of Kellibara or in that of St. Demetrios here, shall be considered as a Kellibarene and likewise as a Hagiodemetrite; the appellation of either monastery shall be applied to him indiscriminately. My majesty has also decreed that all their possessions are held in common, movable and immovable. This does not belong to Kellibara and this to the monastery of St. Demetrios, but everything belongs to the monastery of Kellibara and everything to that of St. Demetrios.

There shall be one superior for both, and he shall be put in charge of the two as though they were one. The same person shall be spoken of as superior of Kellibara and when necessary he shall so affix his signature, and he shall also be spoken of as superior of St. Demetrios in the same manner, and shall so sign. He shall use the name of either monastery or of both together when and in the circumstances he wishes. For these reasons indeed my majesty orders this rule which we are about to promulgate as common to these monasteries. Even if the name of one is given, for example, if I speak of the monastery of St. Demetrios, nonetheless the regulations shall be received by the monastery of Kellibara as though they were addressed to it, [p. 469] and shall carefully be observed by it, for it is not a different monastery.

May these regulations be observed by you as exactly as possible, which will benefit both of you and what you have, and may they never be neglected by anyone. Observe these so that you may stand by yourselves in all sincerity and free of danger before the great tribunal of Christ

38. KELLIBARA I

(Rom. 14:10; I Cor. 5:10), and so that my majesty may be able to justify such standing by reason of your good reputation. May this come about by the mercy of our great God and Savior himself, by the intercession of his all holy Mother, and by the entreaties of Demetrios who shed his own blood for him and to whom the aforesaid monastery erected by my majesty is for a second time dedicated.

15. The monastery ought to be free and self-governing. “Render to Caesar,” says my Christ, “the things of Caesar, and to God the things of God” (Matt. 22:21). My majesty has established this holy shrine, by the grace of God, as an abode for men who are making every effort to free themselves of the things here below and to attach themselves solely to the Powerful One. My majesty therefore consecrates it to the gloriously triumphant martyr Demetrios. Through him this monastery is further offered to God by my majesty and from now on becomes sacred property. As a result, it ought to be free from servitude here below, clearly having as lord he who is the Lord, and not acknowledging any lords on earth. Let it be self-governing and exercising authority over itself, not dependent on men. Nobody has a right to impose the yoke of constraint upon it. For this reason nobody shall exercise any lordship over it, certainly not anyone who knows and fears God. Nobody shall subject to himself either the monastery or anything belonging to it, nor shall he place it under the control or authority of another. Neither, in truth, shall he add it or join it to any person, secular or spiritual, not to a holy monastery, not to a church, not to a hospital, not to a home for the elderly, absolutely not to any one of these. But it will be itself alone and by itself for all time. It alone will be lord of itself. It will administer its own affairs, spiritual as well as temporal, by reason of its having authority over itself. It shall accept no person coming from the outside and giving orders or examining its affairs, not even the most holy patriarch then in office. The patriarch shall not have any claim whatsoever to lordship here, nor shall he enter the monastery to inquire into its affairs, not [p. 471] even in spiritual matters. He shall be content with what is due to him, that is, the commemoration and proclamation of his name in the holy diptychs. We are obliged to grant him such acknowledgment in all our holy and sacred rites.

The man who has been appointed as superior of this monastery, together with the rest of the community, shall be competent to give directions in every aspect of the administration. As their norm for what must be done, both [superior and community] have at hand the regulations given by my majesty in this tyikon, and they shall deal with small matters as well as with those of greater importance. In their desire to serve God alone they shall submit to its [prescriptions], so that their freedom may be preserved unsullied and secure. For truly it is only submission and service to God that gets rid of every form of human constraint, and makes those who practice it completely free. May you embrace it for all time and may you appear as servants of God, as by nature, so also in your mind and in every movement of your free will.

My majesty then establishes this monastery and erects it as free and subject to nobody. May it be so preserved forever, and let no one attempt to take away its dominion over itself. If anyone dares to take such a step my majesty is unable to call down curses. Instead it does offer special prayers that all men may find themselves worthy of experiencing God’s loving-kindness. Still, even if we should spare him, that person, whoever he might be (may there be no such person!) should know that he is subject to the condemnation of those who fight against God. If this does not appear to frighten him, let him be bold, let him stretch out his hand against what is sacred, let him act like a tyrant toward God by appropriating the monastery to himself and choosing to enslave it.

THIRTEENTH CENTURY

16. The ephoreia of the monastery and the person who should be its ephoros. So that the independence of the monastery may be maintained and that it may not be subject to harassment, my majesty does not refrain from taking thought and making arrangements for human protection and ephoreia of the monastery. For if all men, just as they know God and call upon his name, also feared him and dared to do nothing except what they have been commanded, perhaps it would not be necessary for us to provide help for the monastery from our resources here below, since it is surely an offering to the God of all. However, those living according to the divine laws are few, while the majority [p. 472] behave otherwise. Because there are those who would act unjustly, it is necessary for my majesty to come to this decision and to seek for some assistance from men. But who is there capable of repelling every onslaught against it? Assuredly there is none other but the emperor. God has made him more powerful than all because he has placed him over all.

The emperor therefore will be the ephoros, and with a mighty hand he will rescue it from all harm. He has endowed the monastery with a certain power to enable it to keep out of harm's way. Rather he has lent it to God from whom he received the greater power. His assistance will be effective, for he knows that these men of God will bear fruit to God. Not only that, but with this very purpose in mind the emperor will be doing the right thing by caring for it under the title of ephoros and preserving it. For if we as emperor according to the good pleasure of God have become its builder, [our son the emperor] has become by God's [grace] our heir and successor. Just as he has inherited all else, so let him inherit the care for the monastery and the responsibilities of a founder. Let him sincerely take his stand as though he were the one who first erected it. In this way he might have the great athlete of Christ, Demetrios, as his legate and intermediary to attain those other things that men stand in need of, especially an emperor, and he might have him as a protector in his combat with the foe, and he might have God himself rewarding him and bestowing gifts on him, granting his other requests, and favoring him with the salvation of his soul, which is, after all, more important and what we pray a man may attain above all else.

17. Just as my majesty believes it necessary to make regulations about the other things pertaining to the monastery, so we should do so about the actual number of monks who shall dwell in it. For the community of these monks should not be allowed to be unlimited [in size]. Since it would not be well to let it be in disarray and out of order, sometimes containing a larger number than is fitting, at other times reduced to a very small number. But the whole body must comprise a certain fixed number, so that its good order may assure that it will also be in good condition. Beings which have no limits know no moderation and do not keep themselves from doing what is not good. For [p. 473] these reasons my majesty commands that the brothers who are monks in the principal monastery shall be thirty-six, and this number should never be exceeded. Of these, fifteen should know letters and psalmody. In place of any other type of communal work, they should be occupied in performing the service in the church and shall be the church monks [choir monks]. The remaining monks, twenty-one in number, shall minister to the corporal needs of themselves and the church monks. They shall perform the tasks of treasurer, cellarer, and baker, according as the superior shall decide and shall assign each one. So much for these monks.

38. KELLIBARA I

There is the dependency near the gateway, the monastery, that is, which is called Lykos after the ancient name of the place, but which is privileged to bear the great name of my Savior Christ. In this and in its dependency of Kyriotissa my majesty decrees that there be twenty-four monks.²¹ Seven should be church monks, including three priests, so that two may celebrate the liturgy in the monastery and one in the dependency. Seventeen should perform all the services, inside and outside, carrying them out by themselves.

In the dependency which is called that of the Despot, since the dearly beloved brother of my majesty, the most fortunate despot of blessed memory, the late Lord John, had donated it to the monastery of Kellibara in memory of the parents of my majesty. The Kellibarenes have also constructed a church and a monastery on the site. In this monastery and in the dependency of Phlethra belonging to it there shall be nine monks, two of them priests. One shall sing psalms and celebrate the liturgy in honor of the Mother of God in the [church] of the Despot, and the other in honor of the great martyr George in that of Phlethra. In the dependency of Tzympa there shall be four monks, one of whom shall be a priest. In that of St. George the Kouperiototes likewise four including one priest. In that of the Theologian,²² which is within the town of Vizye, two monks, one of whom is a priest. Another monk who is a priest in the dependency of Makariotissa, which is situated near Vizye. In that of Chenolakkos two monks, one of whom is a priest. In that of Raiktor six, one of whom is a priest. In that of Tima six, one a priest. In the dependency of Patras, which is in Pylopythia, six monks, one of whom is a priest. In that of Hexapterygon within Prousa [Bursa] one monk who is a priest. In that of the Holy Trinity within [p. 474] Nicaea two monks, one of whom is a priest. In the dependency of Kabalos near Prousa three monks, one of whom is a priest. In that of Manikophagos two monks, one of them a priest. In that of St. Nicholas four monks, one of them a priest. In that of the holy Theologian three monks, one of them a priest.²³ In the one near [the place] of Manias two monks, one of whom is a priest.

My majesty orders and decrees that all those listed above are monks of this monastery of St. Demetrios-Kellibara. (Because of the union between them they should be referred to in this fashion.) All together they should total one hundred and thirty-eight monks, and they shall all owe obedience to the one superior of St. Demetrios-Kellibara, and they shall follow the one typikon of my majesty, for its prescriptions are to be observed by all our subjects both high and low. The typikon must be read to the brothers in the dependencies, and they must try to bring themselves into line with it in every respect.

18. Different men have given different definitions of the science of sciences.²⁴ But one of the blessed men inspired by God who thought and spoke the truth said. "This would undoubtedly be," he said, "to guide a man, the most complicated of beings, by virtue and a more spiritual way of life."²⁵ Persuasion, not force, is called for. This may be realized if one's words and way of life run along the same course, for when these are joined with one another they are most efficacious in persuading. Whoever is going to be the superior will need to be competent in this science and will lead men by virtue. You must, then, brothers, seek out and choose such a man as your superior, one who possesses both qualities, way of life and words. Following his teaching, you may also look to him as a model. He may readily instill in you a love of what is good and attain his goal. My majesty requires that the search and the choice of your superior is up to you and not to others. If you act in this fashion, then the one to whom God has allotted the task of piously governing the empire, the heir and successor of my majesty, and your ephoros. . . .

THIRTEENTH CENTURY

Notes on the Translation

1. See Alexander Kazhdan, "Palaiologos," ODB, pp. 1557–60, and V. Laurent, "La généalogie des premiers Paléologues," Byzantion 8 (1933), 125–49.
2. Michael's parents were Andronikos Palaiologos and Theodora Komnene; see also (37) Auxentios [1], [13]. His paternal grandfather Alexios (for whom see [3] below) married Irene, a princess of the Komnenian dynasty, while his maternal grandmother Irene was the daughter of Alexios III Angelos.
3. Michael's paternal grandfather Alexios, who was responsible for rebuilding the probable predecessor institution to the monastery for which (37) Auxentios [1] was built, and Michael's father Andronikos.
4. In 1242 or 1243 at the age of eighteen, according to (37) Auxentios [15].
5. At Vodena in 1253.
6. Theodora Doukaina Komnene Palaiologina, actually the granddaughter of John III Vatatzes' brother Isaac Doukas, and author of (39) Lips and (40) Anargyroi, who was married to the future emperor in 1253–54; see Alice-Mary Talbot, "Empress Theodora Palaiologina, Wife of Michael VIII," DOP 46 (1992), 295–303, at 295.
7. Presumably in 1253–54.
8. For Michael's flight to the Seljuk Turks, see (37) Auxentios [15].
9. On August 16, 1258.
10. He was crowned co-emperor with John IV Laskaris (1258–61) sometime after January 1, 1259.
11. An allusion to the battle of Pelagonia (1259), in which Michael's brother John Palaiologos beat a Latin coalition led by Michael II Komnenos Doukas, despot of Epiros (1230–66/68), and William II Villehardouin, prince of Achaia (1246–78); see also (37) Auxentios [1].
12. On all these people and events, see Deno Geanakoplos, Emperor Michael Palaeologus and the West (Cambridge, Mass., 1959).
13. Present-day Gulf of Itea, south of Delphi. See P. Soustal, F. Hild and J. Koder, Hellas und Thessalia, Tabula Imperii Byzantini, vol. 1 (Vienna, 1976), p. 195. Actually Michael's brother John Palaiologos marched into Thessaly after the victory at Pelagonia and his general Alexios Strategopoulos invaded Epiros, capturing Arta.
14. After the battle of Pelagonia, the despot Michael II and his son Nikephoros were forced to seek refuge with Matthew Orsini in Kephallenia.
15. On July 25, 1261, thanks to its occupation by Alexios Strategopoulos; see also (37) Auxentios [1], [15].
16. Euboea was regained for Byzantium by the Italian-born grand duke Licario, ca. 1277.
17. Conquered by Michael VIII's brother Constantine with an army of 5,000 Seljuk mercenaries.
18. Starting on March 31, 1282, with a revolt in Palermo; see Steven Runciman, The Sicilian Vespers (Cambridge, 1958).
19. Andronikos II Palaiologos, Michael VIII's son and co-emperor from 1272, and Michael IX Palaiologos, his grandson and co-emperor from 1281.
20. Michael VIII's great-great-grandfather, husband of Anna Doukaina, younger sister of Irene Doukaina, author of (27) Kecharitomenē; he is commemorated in (28) Pantokrator [8].
21. For this foundation, see Janin, Géographie, vol. 3, p. 293, and (57) Bebaia Elpis [145].
22. Either St. John the Evangelist or St. Gregory Nazianzen.
23. In this section of the manuscript a number of words are not clear or are missing.
24. See Ammonius, In Porphyrii Isagogen, ed. A. Busse, Commentaria in Aristotelem Graeca, vol. 4, pt. 3 (Berlin, 1891), p. 6, where the reference is to philosophy.
25. Quotation not identified

38. KELLIBARA I

Document Notes

The first eleven chapters of the typikon are autobiographical; cf. equivalent discussions in (37) Auxentios [1], [15]. They are listed here to facilitate reference.

- [1] The founder's indebtedness to God.
- [2] The founder's illustrious ancestry.
- [3] Piety of the founder's grandfather and father.
- [4] The founder's upbringing, military career, and marriage.
- [5] Exile among the Turks; his recall.
- [6] His elevation to the emperorship.
- [7] Early military accomplishments of his reign.
- [8] Recovery of Constantinople from the Latins.
- [9] Successful war against Charles of Anjou.
- [10] The founder's son and grandson.
- [11] His devotion to St. Demetrios.
- [12] Rebuilding of the ancestral church of George Palaiologos. For this individual, who in his day was a supporter of the reformer Leo of Chalcedon, see (28) Pantokrator [8] and P. Gautier, "L'obituaire du typikon du Pantokrator," REB 27 (1969), 254.
- [13] Declaration of the union of the two monasteries. See discussions of such unions in (5) Euthymios [1] and (19) Attaleiates [12]; our author himself forbids the imposition of a union in (37) Auxentios [2].
- [14] Terms of the union. The provisions of (19) Attaleiates [12] are similar.
- [15] Free and self-governing status. For assertions of institutional independence in other thirteenth-century documents, see (34) Machairas [21], (35) Skoteine [20], (36) Blemmydes [1], (37) Auxentios [2], (39) Lips [1], and (40) Anargyroi [1].
- [16] Role of the emperor as guardian. For a contemporary imperial guardianship, see (39) Lips [3], cf. the patriarchal guardianship in (37) Auxentios [16] and the private protectorate in (57) Bebaia Elpis [18], [19].
- [17] Number of monks; list of dependencies. See also discussions of limitations set in other thirteenth century documents in (36) Auxentios [6], (39) Lips [4], (40) Anargyroi [6], and (45) Neophytos [9], [C6]. For a similar list of dependencies intended to support a large foundation, see (28) Pantokrator [27], cf. (35) Skoteine [10], [11].
- [18] Rule by persuasion rather than by force; internal choice of the superior. For the former, see (37) Auxentios [4]; for the latter, see (37) Auxentios [3].

39. Lips: Typikon of Theodora Palaiologina for the Convent of Lips in Constantinople

Date: 1294–1301¹

Translator: Alice-Mary Talbot

Edition employed: H. Delehay, Deux typica byzantins de l'époque des Paléologues (Brussels, 1921), pp. 106–36.

Manuscript: British Library Additional 22748 (14th c.)²

Other translations: None

Institutional History

A. Prior History of the Foundation

Constantine Lips was the founder of the original monastery on the site of this foundation in the Lykos valley in west-central Constantinople.³ A frequently unreliable source indicates that a hospital (xenon) was attached.⁴ The dedication of a church named in honor of the Mother of God in June 907 was attended by Emperor Leo VI (886–912).⁵ It is not known whether the foundation housed male or female religious at this time. The founder was killed fighting the Bulgarians in 917. Nothing more is known of the monastery until its restoration in Palaiologan times.

B. Restoration and Expansion under Theodora Palaiologina

Towards the end of the thirteenth century, Theodora Palaiologina, widow of Emperor Michael VIII Palaiologos, undertook the restoration of this foundation. She contributed a second church dedicated to St. John the Forerunner which was joined to the south side of the original church erected by Constantine Lips and a twelve-bed hospital. The new church, like the middle chapel dedicated to St. Michael at the Komnenian Pantokrator monastery, was intended to serve as a mausoleum for the imperial family.

The typikon for the foundation, while professedly composed by the founder herself, was actually drawn up by an anonymous ghostwriter.⁶ The founder became a nun in her own foundation with the monastic name of Eugenia.⁷ She died in 1303, and her passing was noted in a still-unedited funeral oration by Theodore Metochites that refers to the construction of her tomb that is also mentioned [42] in the typikon.⁸ After her death, her son the former emperor Andronikos II (1282–1328), who died in 1332, was buried at the Lips foundation, as was another son, Constantine, in 1306.⁹

C. Subsequent History of the Foundation

In 1324, Irene of Brunswick, the wife of the founder's great grandson Andronikos III (1328–41), was buried at Lips.¹⁰ In the middle of the fourteenth century, a perambulatory exonarthex was built around the south and west sides to allow for additional burial sites.¹¹ The last recorded burial at Lips was of the Russian princess Anna, bride of John VIII Palaiologos, who died of the plague in Constantinople in 1417. The deacon Zosima, during his visit to Constantinople a few years later, notes Anna's burial at Lips (which he calls "Lipesi") and identifies it as an imperial convent.¹² The Russian Anonymous, writing in the second quarter of the fifteenth century, also mentions the Lips convent, so it is likely that it survived down to the Turkish conquest of Constantinople in 1453.¹³

D. The Fenari Isa Camii Mosque

The structure that housed both of the foundation's churches has survived down to our own times in modern Istanbul. Circa 1460–80, Alaeddin Ali of the Fenari family converted the south church of St. John into a mescid, a mosque without a pulpit, under the name Fenari Isa Camii, to which a minaret was added on the southwest corner.¹⁴ The tombs located in the former south church were cleared of human remains, while those in the nave, narthex, and exonarthex of the former north church were left undisturbed until they were rediscovered by Theodore Macridy in 1929. A general conflagration that swept through Constantinople in 1633 damaged the building. In 1636, the Grand Vizier Bayram Pasha restored the mescid as a regular mosque, instituting some important changes to the exterior architecture and removing the interior decoration. The former north church was put to use as a tekke for dervishes. There was another fire in the eighteenth century, perhaps in 1782. The damages were not repaired until 1847/48. A final fire damaged the structure in 1917 and left it in ruins. The Turkish Ministry of Mosques began the work of restoring the interior of the structure in 1960, and the work on the exterior was continued by the American Byzantine Institute under Arthur Megaw. In recent times the building has been returned to use as a mosque.

Analysis

A. Sources of the Typikon

Like most Palaiologan documents, this typikon is a work of diverse conceptual and ideological ancestry. Certain features of traditional (pre-reform) imperial monasteries reassert themselves here, such as the extraordinary elaboration of privileges conceded [40], [41] to members of the imperial family and the nobility who might want to join the convent. Naturally, this typikon invites comparison to (27) Kecharitomene, the only previous document in our collection written for a nunnery. There are similar treatments of many usages and institutions in these two documents.¹⁵ Many of these can also be traced back, through (27) Kecharitomene, to (22) Evergetis itself. There are, however, only a few possibly independent links to (22) Evergetis.¹⁶ In addition to their shared usages and institutions, the close organizational parallelism between the present document and (27) Kecharitomene makes it highly likely that the author had the typikon of the Komnenian nunnery, or one derived from it, at hand as this typikon was composed. Indeed, a document of the next generation, Irene Choumnaina Palaiologina's (47) Philanthropos, contains an actual quotation that can be traced back to (27) Kecharitomene, suggesting that the latter document was still circulating in Palaiologan times. The many permutations in the long history of the Evergetian reform tradition have also had a detectable impact on this document.¹⁷ Finally, the present typikon incorporates some contemporary institutions and approaches to problems.¹⁸

B. Composition of the Typikon

Talbot (“Theodora Palaiologina,” p. 299, n. 40) has established that this typikon was actually written by an anonymous “ghostwriter” rather than by the empress herself, based on verses he wrote in the margins of a manuscript of Pseudo-Dionysios the Areopagite, Vaticanus graecus 1787, folio 4v. The chapters indicated by Roman numerals in Delehaye’s edition are original to the document.¹⁹ The first six chapters observe the order, with some omissions, of the equivalent chapters in (27) Kecharitomene.²⁰ Of the twenty-one original chapters in the document, all except Chapter 20, which regulates the foundation’s hospital, have easily identifiable equivalents in (27) Kecharitomene.²¹ It is entirely possible that this typikon’s ghostwriter was utilizing a now lost intermediary document closely related to (27) Kecharitomene, if not that Komnenian typikon itself. In any event, the ghostwriter appears to have employed his model to determine the structure of his own typikon, then to have drawn up his own regulations that are textually independent of (27) Kecharitomene and frequently somewhat different in content as well. The result was a generally well-ordered and edited document which, like (37) Auxentios, can be considered an exemplar of the neo-Evergetian monasticism that was popular in various Byzantine monasteries of the Palaiologan era.

C. State of the Manuscript

There are some gaps of varying length in the text of this document as it has come down to us. There is a gap of uncertain length at the beginning [1] that may have contained important information on the constitutional status of the convent and perhaps also on the unalterability of the cenobitic life.²² There are lacunas of about three lines in [3] and in [5] as well as a brief one at the end of [4]. The lacuna in [3] may have had some important additional information on the election of the superior. There is about one folio missing in both [25] and in [27]. The former must have provided more details on the responsibilities of the steward as well as a discussion of the requirements of the cenobitic lifestyle, while the latter may have once contained an exhortation analogous to (22) Evergetis [33].

In the documentary analysis which follows in sections D–G, it is assumed that the provisions of the anonymous ghostwriter reflect the wishes of the formal author, the empress Theodora Palaiologina.

D. Lives of the Nuns

1. Number of Nuns

There were to be [4] fifty nuns at this foundation, including thirty assigned to the performance of the canonical hours and twenty for various household duties. In addition to the superior, the officials mentioned in the typikon are the steward [25], [26], the sacristan [23], the ecclesiarchissa and two assistants [24], the treasurer [22], [24], and the gatekeeper [21].

2. Liturgical Duties

The primary function of the nunnery was [4] the performance of the canonical hours by the nuns assigned to this task. The hymnody was to follow [30] the prescriptions of the liturgical typikon of St. Sabas, which this document describes as “both moderate and the royal road” (cf. (57) Bebaia Elpis [79]). The liturgy was to be celebrated [30] simultaneously in both of the foundation's churches on Sundays, four other times during the week, on feasts of the Lord, and on the feasts of major saints, just as in (32) Mamas [32], but less frequently than the daily liturgies prescribed in (22) Evergetis [5]. There are also detailed provisions for celebration of the patronal feasts, the birthday of the Mother of God [37], and the feast of St. John the Baptist [38] as well as for the illumination [39] of the churches. On the other hand, the observances [38] for feasts of the Lord and for the feast of the Dormition of the Mother of God as well as the illumination [39] of the churches during the liturgical performances were matters left to the discretion of the superior and the leading nuns.

Four priests, two for each church, were salaried [6] for the performance of the liturgies. The typikon obliges them to summon replacements if they fell sick, an indication of how important the author thought it to be that the liturgies were performed as prescribed. Ordinarily, the professional psalm-singers known as kalliphonoi, whose counterparts were also banned in (27) Kecharitomene [75], were to be excluded [39] from participation in services, except when the emperor was scheduled to attend.

3. Manual Labor

There is no specific regulation of manual labor in the document as it has come down to us, but it must have been an important part of the lives of the twenty nuns assigned [4] to household duties (cf. also [17]).

4. Length of the Novitiate

The ordinary term of the novitiate was to be [18] a year, during which time a novice would be tested [17], as in (37) Auxentios [12], by being rotated through the various duties of the convent. A mature woman, such as a widow, was allowed to serve an accelerated novitiate of six months. Girls brought up in the convent as infants or children should be examined [18] in the presence of all the nuns when they reached the age of sixteen and either tonsured or dismissed at that time. Young women wishing to join the convent were not to be tonsured [17] before reaching the age of twenty, prior to which time they should serve a novitiate of three years. Thus the typikon's provisions on this subject are even more complicated than those laid down in (27) Kecharitomene [30], probably because the present document envisions internal recruitment as an important source of supply of nuns for the convent. Nuns of a "seemly and irreproachable life" tonsured in other convents were welcome [20], but should be read the typikon and give assent to it.

5. Sacramental Life

There is no regulation of the frequency of communion, but the nuns were to have a spiritual father, to whom they were to make [11] their confessions exclusively, on the analogy of the provisions in (22) Evergetis [15] and most of the documents in the reform tradition. He was to be a virtuous monk, either cenobitic or hesychastic, who would visit the convent for three days every month. He would be boarded in some small rooms in the monastery's guest house and hear confessions in the morning in the narthex of each of the churches. Echoing (22) Evergetis [7], the typikon urges [12] the nuns to make their confessions unreservedly to him. He would also make [11] special visitations to the convent as required.

6. Cenobitic Life

The typikon's prescriptions for the cenobitic life of the community are lost in the large gaps in the text of [25] and perhaps also [2]. Elsewhere, the description [29] of refectory procedures, including the common table, a ban on secret eating, and an instruction that the nuns should keep to the prescribed seating order "so as not to quarrel over places at table," is close to the regulations found in (22) Evergetis [9]. Although we cannot be certain about the rest of the typikon's provisions for the common life of ordinary nuns, it is clear that the empress wished to exempt her daughters, granddaughters, other female relatives, and women "of distinguished families" from the obligation to participate, for all these the typikon allows [40], [41] to abstain from communal meals and be waited on by personal servants, either their own or nuns supplied by the convent.

7. Diet

Generally speaking, the liturgical typikon of St. Sabas was to be [29] authoritative for the regulation of the nuns' diet: nuns were "to eat what he permits and abstain from what he forbids," except for the elderly [34] and the sick [29] who would follow their doctor's recommendations. This typikon, like that of the empress' husband Michael VIII, author of (37) Auxentios [8], asserts [32] an Aristotelian awareness of the organic needs of human beings, and does in fact provide specific dietary guidelines: three dishes of fish, cheese, and legumes on non-fast days (Tuesdays, Thursdays, Saturdays, and Sundays); for the fast days, legumes, vegetables and seasonal shellfish (on Mondays) or vegetables and legumes only (on Wednesdays and Fridays). Moreover, unlike (36) Blemmydes [20], this typikon permits dispensations from the usual diet of the day on feasts of the Lord and other major feasts.

8. Clothing

Old garments were to be returned [36] to the storeroom and new ones distributed in April and in October. Some durable garments were to be handed out every other year, while others, along with shoes, were to be distributed annually (cf. the similar provisions in (37) Auxentios [7], (56) Kellibara II [8], and (57) Bebaia Elpis [98], [99]).

9. Bathing

Generally, nuns were to bathe [34] only four times a year, "especially if they are young," immediately before Lent and before the fasts of the Holy Apostles, the Dormition of the Mother of God, and Christmas. As in diet, elderly nuns were to follow their doctor's recommendations. There were to be no restrictions on bathing for the sick.

10. Relations with Family

The typikon advances [15] a strict interpretation of monastic law requiring the nuns to spend their entire lives within the convent, but as a concession it permits the virtuous to visit their relatives unaccompanied in times of dire necessity. Others needed to be accompanied by elderly nuns and return before sunset. Visiting relatives had to be met at the gate house in the company of "respected" nuns, but they could not enter. Entrance to the convent was generally forbidden [16] to visitors of either sex, except for the emperor and his retinue and the founder's own relatives, who were allowed to visit the churches in order to worship or to see the tombs of family members. A mother, sister, or other female relative who was “without reproach in her conduct and way of life” could visit a seriously ill nun, but the visitor could not stay in the convent overnight, even if the nun’s death was imminent. Overall, the regulation of visitations is considerably stricter than that found in (27) Kecharitomene [17].

11. Servants Permitted to Privileged Nuns

The empress’ daughters [40] and granddaughters [41] were permitted to bring their personal attendants with them on entrance to the convent. Alternately, the convent would assign nuns for their service, three for one of the founder’s daughters or two for one of her granddaughters. Other female relatives of the imperial family and women of the nobility were to be allowed [41] one attendant or one nun for their service.

12. Care of Sick Nuns

A doctor was to visit [35] the convent once a week, except during Lent when no visitors were allowed, but even then the doctor could come to treat a medical emergency. Nuns who were ill would be put [33] on a special diet as prescribed by their doctor and approved by the spiritual father. The hospital storehouse would supply salves and bandages as needed. Care was to be taken to assure that nuns were genuinely sick and not just feigning illness (cf. (56) Kellibara II [5]).

E. Constitutional Matters

1. Independent Status of the Convent

The typikon makes [1] the customary proclamation of the convent’s independence even though in many respects this institution is structured more like a traditional imperial monastery. The inclusion of treasury officials on the short list of potential threats to this independence is instructive. The typikon likewise warns against either the emperor or patriarch joining it (through henosis) or subordinating it as a dependency to another convent, both of which were common administrative practices in this era (cf. (38) Kellibara I [13], [17]).

2. The Protectorate

The typikon justifies [3] the imposition of a protectorate on the convent on the grounds that women need strong protection “inasmuch as they are accustomed to staying at home and the silence which is most appropriate to [them].” The empress’ son, the emperor Andronikos II, is nominated for the office of guardian (prostates) and protector (ephoros), to be followed in turn by his successors in perpetuity. Her husband Michael VIII, implicitly in (37) Auxentios [3]. [5] and explicitly in (38) Kellibara I [16], also endorsed the notion of a powerful imperial protectorate, even for male monasteries.

3. Selection of the Superior

The typikon provides [5] for the internal selection of the superior. She is to be chosen “amicably” from among the choir sisters (i.e., the thirty nuns devoted to hymnody) during not more than a week’s deliberations, our first indication in these documents of how long the process of selecting a superior might take. Accompanied by the oldest priest and twelve of the most worthy nuns, the superior-elect was to present [7] herself to the emperor who would give her the superior’s staff of office. On her return to the convent, the priest would conduct a ceremony marking her installation including entrusting her with the box containing the typikon.

THIRTEENTH CENTURY

4. Role of the Superior

The superior's authority was restricted in several ways. She was obliged [21] to consult with the spiritual father, who was evidently more than a confessor at this institution, in the appointment of the convent's most important officials and their discipline, should they require it. She was also to share most of her discretionary authority with the convent's "leading nuns" in such matters as relaxations of diet [32], the illumination of the churches during liturgical services [39], the celebration of feasts [38], and the lending out of documents [23]. She needed only to inform [10] them of her appointments to the convent's lesser offices. Moreover, should she behave "in a manner unworthy of the typikon," these same nuns were to report [10] her to the spiritual father. With their concurrence, he could remove her from office and designate a successor. As in (22) Evergetis [14] and its close copiers, the deposed superior was allowed to remain in the convent if she accepted the judgment. The new superior was to treat her with "appropriate kindness and respect." This may indicate that the latter was thought to have some sort of abiding property interest in lifetime maintenance in the convent.

The superior, the spiritual father, and the leading nuns were jointly to select [25] "a man or a eunuch" as the steward of the convent's properties. The typikon includes a description of his duties [25] as well as those of the sacristan [23], the ecclesiarchissa [24] who was subordinate to her, and the treasurer [24].

5. Style of Rule

The typikon stresses [27] the importance of the superior and the leading nuns reaching a consensus on the governance of the community. While they are obliged to deal considerately with the other members of the community, the typikon instructs the latter to "be content with your lot and be obedient." The efficacy of the community's prayers for themselves, the founders, and the Christian community at large were thought to be dependent on the existence of harmonious relations among the convent's inhabitants. Elsewhere, the typikon [9] orders that nuns may not leave the convent or receive anything from someone outside, even a remedy for a disease, without the superior's permission, thus endorsing the authoritarian approach to leadership also seen in (34) Machairas and (45) Neophytos, on the grounds that the superior is directly accountable for them to God on the Day of Judgment.

6. Patronal Privileges

The typikon boldly asserts [11] the empress' prerogative to order the foundation as she sees fit "for I am permitted to decree my wishes in my own affairs, especially since I happen to be a despoina by the mercy of my all-powerful God." In this spirit she claims [40] preferential admission privileges for her daughters and granddaughters. If one of her daughters chose to join the convent, she was to receive the provisions of four ordinary nuns, have her personal attendants tonsured along with her, and have three nuns selected by the superior and the leading nuns assigned to her for her service. Moreover, it was to be up to the daughter herself to decide whether she would eat at the common table with the rest of the nuns or observe the other provisions of the typikon. If she chose to live by herself "on account of ill health" and join the rest of the nuns only for church services, her personal attendants or any accompanying relative were still to be supported [41] by the monastery; otherwise a nun was to be assigned to live with her while two others attended to her household affairs. The empress' granddaughters were entitled [41] to the same privileges, but with only two of their own attendants or two nuns supplied by the convent.

These provisions far exceed the comparable regulations of the empress' distant predecessor in (27) Kecharitomene [4] in their indulgence of an extraordinarily privileged and essentially separate residence within the convent for her descendants.

The typikon also provides that the empress, her ancestors, her mother, her son the emperor and his wife, and her other children were to be [30] the beneficiaries of eucharistic offerings made on their behalf during the liturgies celebrated in the foundation. The empress asks [52] the nuns to remember her in their common and private prayers. Finally, the foundation is to serve [42] as a place of burial for herself and her family "for all of whom there are to be annual commemorations."

7. Reading and Preservation of the Typikon

As usual in independent foundations, the regulatory authority of the typikon is recognized and perpetuated by providing [8] for its being read aloud at the dinner hour, here three times a year on the two patronal feasts and at Easter. The sacristan was responsible [23] for the preservation of all paper documents that were, like the typikon (cf. [7]) kept in sealed boxes.

F. Financial Matters

1. Financial Administration

As in (27) Kecharitomene [14], it was apparently thought impractical for a cloistered nun to serve as the convent's steward. There is a provision [25], however, for an installation ceremony in which the newly chosen steward—a layman of some sort (a eunuch is suggested)—kneels before an icon of the Mother of God and receives a blessing from the spiritual father and the attendant priest. He was responsible for the appointment of property administrators for the convent's estates, the management of its fields and vineyards, the prevention of theft and damage, and for building maintenance. He was not to be resident at the convent, but to consult [26] instead with the superior in the presence of the leading nuns in the morning, departing, ordinarily, before the midday meal.

As in (27) Kecharitomene [19], [24], both the cellarer [24], here assisted by an assistant ecclesiarchissa, and the sacristan [23] were nuns. Among other responsibilities, the sacristan was to guard the foundation's reserve funds, including money donated by the founder, surplus revenues, and any subsequent bequests by benefactors. This typikon fails to endorse Michael VIII's command in (37) Auxentios [9] that his monastery should not stockpile surplus money but should donate it to charitable causes instead. The official with the title of cellarer, on the other hand, seems to have functioned both as a cellarer and as a provisioner, being primarily concerned with the supply and preparation of food and wine.

Following practices similar to but less stringent than those established by post-Evergetian institutions like (27) Kecharitomene [19], [24] and (32) Mamas [9], [10], the typikon provides [22] that both the sacristan and the cellarer were to receive a written record of the property entrusted to them and subsequently provide an accounting for it, the cellarer annually, and the sacristan at the end of her tenure of office.

THIRTEENTH CENTURY

The empress endowed her foundation with numerous landed properties in [49] and around [44] Constantinople and near Smyrna [44] in Asia Minor. Her son Andronikos II had given her many of these properties ([44] through [47]), while others came from her mother [48]. They included villages, arable land, vineyards, olive groves, mills, a fish pond, a pier, and various rental properties.

2. Inalienability of Property

As usual for foundations created after the monastic reform movement of the late eleventh century, the alienation of landed property was strictly prohibited [43]. Like (27) Kecharitomene [10], however, this document allows the foundation some flexibility with movable property. In the event that poor harvests or an enemy attack should lead to a decrease in revenues, it permits the foundation to pawn one of the sacred vessels, provided that it is redeemed after a few years or a better one is bought to replace it.

3. Entrance Gifts Not Mandatory

The typikon orders [14] that postulants are to be given “sufficient necessities” immediately so that no contribution will be required of them, “not even the usual so-called entrance gift,” i.e., prosenexis. This suggests that some other foundations expected postulants to live off their own resources, whether self-administered or turned over to the monastery, from the moment of their arrival. Here, the empress follows the traditional distinction of (22) Evergetis [37] permitting voluntary offerings, which, however, should not serve as an excuse for boasting or vanity on the part of the donor. Elsewhere in the typikon there is a record [49] of a small convent of St. George “called Trapeza” at Skoutari which the nun Tzakalina donated to Lips as her entrance gift. As in the traditional Evergetian formulation, nuns who have been tonsured could not reclaim [18] any entrance donations they may have made should they decide to leave later, or (here) be dismissed for cause.

4. Other Gifts Welcome

Unlike some earlier documents (e.g., (27) Kecharitomene [8] or (31) Areia [M10], [T6]), this typikon expresses [19] no reservations about unconditionally accepting gifts of property, money, sacred vessels, or other furnishings offered “by anyone whosoever with pious intentions.” While the particular reasons for the more critical policies of her predecessors may no longer have been relevant by the late thirteenth century, the contemporary document (46) Akropolites [7], [8] illustrates the potential extent to which conditions that benefactors might place on their donations could still make a serious and quite possibly disruptive impact on the operations of the beneficiary institution.

G. Overall Philosophy

The extent of the founder’s willingness to acquiesce [40], [41] in extraordinary privileges not only for her daughters and granddaughters but also for other noble ladies who wanted to join the monastery is unprecedented among the documents in our collection written since the monastic reform movement made the rejection of such privileges one of its most important principles. Most likely this is a revival, unconscious or otherwise, of an accepted institution of traditional religious foundations, in this case of the imperial nunnery, in which it was accepted as a matter of course that a founder-in-residence or her close relatives, would be a special case exempt from the rules applicable to others.

That said, the empress' typikon still shows the impact of the egalitarian ideology of (22) Evergetis and of cenobitical monasticism in general. It declares [18] the empress' willingness to bring up infants and children offered to the convent regardless of whether they were nobly born or not, and all would have to wait till they reached age sixteen before being offered tonsure. There is also the traditional refusal to tolerate [29] quarrels over seating or demands for better food from noble (but presumably non-imperial) nuns or those who have made large donations to the convent. The latter, in fact, are told to behave [14] as if they "had made no contribution, respecting equality of privilege (isotimia—a new technical term) and submitting to this rule [the typikon] and abiding by the commandment (kanon) which is common for all nuns." These provisions are not unnoticed, mechanical survivals from (22) Evergetis, but either original contemporary ideas (as in [14] and [18]) or (as in [29]) evidence of a creative re-use of Evergetian diction in a new context. Therefore, they need to be interpreted as evidence of the author's own heartfelt, if hardly consistent, belief in the value of monastic equality for the assurance of good order in her convent.

H. External Relations

1. Relations with the Ecclesiastical Hierarchy

The patriarch had no role in the installation of the convent's superior. Perhaps he could be more readily excluded seeing that the superior, unlike the superior of a male monastery, did not need ordination in order to hear confessions, a function handled here by the spiritual father. The typikon limits [1] the patriarch's privileges to his inclusion in the liturgical commemorations (anaphora), the customary memorial commemoration (mnemosynon), and the right of spiritual correction "if any situation should arise that required greater discernment than that possessed by the superior and the nuns' spiritual father." The last concession is significant, particularly in view of its explicit denial in (38) Kellibara I [15].

2. Institutional Philanthropy

The foundation's principal philanthropic contribution was its maintenance [50] of a hospital capable of bedding down twelve patients. The hospital was supported by revenues derived [46] from certain specially earmarked properties that Andronikos II had donated to his mother. These sufficed to pay [51] salaries for three doctors, an assistant, a nurse, a head pharmacist, two apothecaries, six attendants, a bloodletter, three servants, and a cook, as well as to pay a laundress for her services.

Notes on the Introduction

1. See Talbot, "Theodora Palaiologina," p. 299.
2. According to Talbot, "Theodora Palaiologina," p. 301: "a deluxe codex, probably the original version of the typikon"; see also Delehay, Deux typica, pp. 14–16, and Nelson and Lowden, "Palaeologina Group," pp. 65–67, with plates 9, 11, 13.
3. For Constantine Lips, see Janin, Géographie, vol. 3, p. 307, with references to sources in notes; Mango

THIRTEENTH CENTURY

- and Hawkins, "Additional Notes," pp. 299–300; and Anthony Cutler and Alexander Kazhdan, "Lips," ODB, pp. 1232–33. The sources for the original Lips foundation are especially problematic.
4. Patria Konstantinoupoleos, ed. Th. Preger, Scriptores originum Constantinopolitanarum (Leipzig, 1901; repr. New York, 1975), p. 289.
 5. See Mango and Hawkins, "Additional Notes," p. 300.
 6. Talbot, "Theodora Palaiologina," p. 299, n. 40, based on a marginal note in Vaticanus graecus 1787, fol. 4v.
 7. Talbot, "Theodora Palaiologina," p. 300, based on J. Gouillard, "Le Synodikon de l'Orthodoxie," T&M 2 (1967), p. 101.
 8. Theodore Metochites, Monodia epi te basilidi Theodora te tou basileos metri, in Codex Vindobonensis philologicus graecus 95, fol. 184v; see H. Hunger, Katalog der griechischen Handschriften der österreichischen Nationalbibliothek, pt. 1 (Vienna, 1961), p. 203 (giving fols. 179r–189r for the entire text); cf. Pachymeres, De Andronico Palaeologo, ed. I. Bekker, CSHB, vol. 2 (Bonn, 1835), p. 377.
 9. Nikephoros Gregoras, Byzantina historia, ed. L. Schopen and I. Bekker, CSHB, vol. 1 (Bonn, 1829), p. 463; Pachymeres, De Andronico Palaeologo, ed. Bekker, p. 425.
 10. John Kantakouzenos, Historiarum libri IV, ed. L. Schopen, CSHB, vol. 1 (Bonn, 1828), p. 193.
 11. See Macridy, "Monastery of Lips," pp. 267–69.
 12. Majeska, Russian Travelers, p. 309.
 13. Majeska, Russian Travelers, pp. 310–11.
 14. For the Fenari Isa Camii, see Macridy, "Monastery of Lips," pp. 253–54 and Müller-Wiener, Bildlexikon, p. 127.
 15. [14] no mandatory entrance gifts, cf. (27) Kecharitomene [7]; [15] visitation privileges, cf. (27) Kecharitomene [17]; [16] reception of visitors, cf. (27) Kecharitomene [17], [80]; [18] length of the novitiate, cf. (27) Kecharitomene [30]; [18] entrance gifts not reclaimable, cf. (27) Kecharitomene [7]; [23] treasury of stored-up money, cf. (27) Kecharitomene [24]; [23], [24] duties of the sacristan and the treasurer, cf. (27) Kecharitomene [24]; [25] external steward, cf. (27) Kecharitomene [14]; [29] special diet for the sick, cf. (27) Kecharitomene [44]; [34] frequency of bathing for the sick, cf. (27) Kecharitomene [58]; [39] psalm-singers, cf. (27) Kecharitomene [75]; [40] special privileges for relatives, cf. (27) Kecharitomene [4].
 16. [10] role of the leading nuns in removing the superior, cf. (22) Evergetis [14]; [10] respect for the deposed superior, cf. (22) Evergetis [14]; and [12] unreserved confession, cf. (22) Evergetis [15].
 17. [4] liturgical and servant monks, cf. (29) Kosmosoteira [3]; [8] less frequent reading of the typikon, cf. (32) Mamas [16]; [30] frequency of the liturgy, cf. (32) Mamas [32].
 18. [1] patriarchal privileges, cf. (37) Auxentios [3]; [3] choice of the emperor as protector, cf. (38) Kellibara I [16]; [33] precaution against feigned illness, cf. (56) Kellibara II [5]; [36] cycle for exchange of garments, cf. (37) Auxentios [7], (56) Kellibara II [8].
 19. Our cross-references, however, utilize exclusively the chapters with Arabic numerals devised by Delehaye for his edition.
 20. (39) Lips I and (27) Kecharitomene [1]; (39) Lips II and (27) Kecharitomene [3]; (39) Lips III and (27) Kecharitomene [5]; (39) Lips IV and (27) Kecharitomene [11]; (39) Lips V and (27) Kecharitomene [13]; (39) Lips VI and (27) Kecharitomene [16].
 21. For details, see the Document Notes.
 22. A conjecture based on the possibility that (27) Kecharitomene [2] as well as [1] and [3] were utilized in the document's first two original chapters.

Bibliography

- Beck, Hans-Georg, Kirche und theologische Literatur im byzantinischen Reich (Munich, 1959), p. 696.
Cutler, Anthony, and Talbot, Alice-Mary, "Lips Monastery," ODB, p. 1233.
Delehaye, H., "Le typikon du monastère de Lips à Constantinople," AB 38 (1920), 388–92.

39. LIPS

- Janin, Raymond, La géographie ecclésiastique de l'empire byzantin. vol. 2: Les églises et les monastères des grands centres byzantins (Paris, 1975); vol. 3: Les églises et les monastères [de Constantinople], 2nd ed. (Paris, 1969), pp. 307–10, 417–18.
- Krautheimer, Richard, Early Christian and Byzantine Architecture, 4th ed., rev. Slobodan Ćurčić (Harmondsworth, 1986), pp. 358–61, 423–26.
- Macridy, Theodore, “The Monastery of Lips and the Burials of the Palaeologi,” DOP 18 (1964), 253–78.
- Majeska, George, Russian Travelers to Constantinople in the Fourteenth and Fifteenth Centuries (Washington, D.C., 1984), pp. 309–12.
- Mango, Cyril, and Hawkins, Ernest J. W., “Additional Notes on the Monastery of Lips,” DOP 18 (1964), 299–315.
- Mathews, Thomas, The Byzantine Churches of Istanbul: A Photographic Survey (University Park, Pa., 1976), pp. 322–45.
- Megaw, Arthur H. S., “The Original Form of the Theotokos Church of Constantine Lips,” DOP 18 (1964), 279–98.
- Miller, Timothy, The Birth of the Hospital in the Byzantine Empire (Baltimore, Md., 1985), pp. 201–4.
- Müller-Wiener, Wolfgang, Bildlexikon zur Topographie Istanbuls (Tübingen, 1977), pp. 126–31.
- Nelson, Robert S., and Lowden, John, “The Palaeologina Group: Additional Manuscripts and New Questions,” DOP 45 (1991), 59–68.
- Talbot, Alice-Mary, “Empress Theodora Palaiologina, Wife of Michael VIII,” DOP 46 (1992), 295–303.
- Van Millingen, A., Byzantine Churches in Constantinople, Their History and Architecture (London, 1912), pp. 122–37.
- Volk, Robert, Gesundheitswesen und Wohltätigkeit im Spiegel der byzantinischen Klostertypika (Munich, 1983), pp. 244–51.

Translation

I. [Concerning the independence of the convent.]¹

I. . . . [lacuna] . . . I entrust [the convent to] our common Mother and Protectress and Mistress, and, as I know clearly from many indications, my own special Protectress and Lady, and I forbid anyone else to control anything therein. For if these nuns, who have rejected the whole world and disregard all worldly things, have promised to serve God alone, and “have taken up the cross” and chosen “to follow him throughout their life,” (cf. Matt. 16:24) and for such a purpose indeed my [plan] has proceeded, what just cause remains for anyone to assume authority, or who would be so bold and daring as to appropriate the rightful property of God and oppose him in any way? I hesitate to say this, but whoever did such a thing would be fighting against God. Therefore let no one in authority or any treasury official ever have any opportunity to remove any monastic property or transfer anything at all or take it away or give it to another [monastery]; not even the emperor or the patriarch may subordinate it or add² it to any convent, as they provide for this or that convent.

For it is my will and decree that [the convent] remain independent, [p. 107] connected to no [other monastery] in any way, attached indivisibly only to the hospital which I built nearby, and making as much provision for all the patients therein as for its own [nuns]; and if our successors in power exercise good judgment, they will certainly decide that they should respect the wishes of their predecessors, and confirm their decrees even more strongly, in the knowledge that it is inevitable that someday they, too, will die—for they are human and share in the transitory nature common to all mankind—and that, if they observe the rules laid down by their predecessors, they will provide an example for their successors to treat their decrees in the same way.

THIRTEENTH CENTURY

To the divine and ecumenical patriarch we grant this privilege alone at the convent, the mentioning of his name at the holy services, and the traditional commemoration if he attends, as well as the [right to] investigate spiritual faults and [impose] an appropriate penance, if any situation should ever rise (I certainly hope not) that required greater discernment and ability than that possessed by the superior and the nuns' spiritual father.

2. Concerning all other matters my imperial majesty will ordain and set forth a prescribed form of appropriate behavior, according to which [the nuns] should conduct themselves and manage all their own affairs, and make amends for their own benefit and salvation. I have made clear my wishes for both my contemporaries and my successors. If anyone at all should wish to act contrary to my regulations, I myself would say nothing against him, carrying out the commandment (cf. Matt. 7:1–12), and refraining from cursing him, but it is my fervent wish that nothing be changed, so that no accounting need be given for this person on the Day of Judgment. Whoever it may be, let him fear lest he make himself subject to a curse thereby and, so to speak, liable to the ultimate [punishment], or, as they say, lest he encounter horrors worse than the curse . . . [lacuna of at least one folio] . . . [p. 108]

II. [Concerning the ephoreia and protection of the monastery, and its ephoros.]

3. . . . and disputes to trouble their quiet and tranquil way of life, and especially in the case of women of a gentle and weak nature, who need strong protection, inasmuch as they are accustomed to staying at home³ and the silence which is most appropriate for women. Since then there is thus need for guardianship, we have decided that this holy convent of ours should be subject to a guardian and ephoros, and the weaker we acknowledge the nuns to be, the stronger guardian will we choose. What other man on earth could this be than the one who has received authority and power from God the only Ruler? It is clear to everyone that I mean the emperor, whom God, who is before all and above all, has placed over all men. Now, through God's favor to me, it is my son,⁴ my support and ornament, who previously ruled together with his father, the emperor,⁵ but now, as we prayed, has assumed sole power and rules alone over the Roman Empire, ably and more powerfully than I ever thought possible; together with him rules my second ornament and my consolation, his son and the heir to his power and crown;⁶ and so will the successors to the empire and inheritance forever [protect the convent]; for we entrust its ephoreia to the emperor in perpetuity. Wherefore his successors as emperor must take hold of the monastery with both hands, as they say, and defend it worthily and treat it properly, so that they may persuade the Mistress of all and Mother of God, and in addition [St. John] the Baptist of the Lord and Forerunner, to guard and maintain them in this world and preserve them from any grievous occurrence, and in the death which is to come to present them warmly to God, and entreat him not to deem them unworthy to enjoy "the kingdom prepared from the foundation of the world" (Matt. 25:34). [p. 109]

III. Concerning the requisite number of nuns.

4. After this introduction I will now make known my wishes to the women whom this present document concerns, and who understand all of my purpose herein. It is my wish that the total number of nuns come to fifty and no more, of whom thirty should concern themselves with the divine sanctuary, all of them together unceasingly rendering up to God the divine hymns and holy doxologies prescribed for monastic life, [the services] at midnight, dawn and after sunrise, at the third, sixth and ninth hour, vespers and compline. The remaining twenty should be assigned to different household duties. All [of the nuns] should be subservient to the single mind and will of their spiritual leader, [the superior], who is entrusted at all times with their protection. Her election should proceed as follows . . . [brief lacuna] . . .

IV. Concerning the election and installation of the superior and about the assignment of four priests to the convent.

5. One of the thirty choir sisters, who is preeminent in wisdom and virtue . . . [lacuna of three lines] . . . should be chosen and selected in an amicable fashion; an entire week will suffice for her election. For I do not think [the nuns] will require more time, as they are seeking a protectress for the benefit of their souls and wish to root out, even before they begin, the scandals which love to spring up from [long deliberations]. [p. 110]

6. After the election a prayer service should be conducted all night and day for them by the priests—and I ordain that the convent always have four of them, of whom two should be assigned to the old church, and the others to the new, and each of them should receive an annual salary of 12 gold pieces, 50 modioi of grain and 36 measures of wine. All of these then should celebrate the bloodless sacrifice individually and separately in the church of our Lady the Mother of God in honor of her all-holy name, in the church of my revered [St. John the] Forerunner and Baptist in his name, in the [chapel] near the old [church] dedicated to St. Irene, whose venerable relics are found in the convent, and in any one [of these churches]⁷ in the katechoumenia, in honor of the saint of the day. Since there are four priests, they should perform the above-mentioned services unceasingly; but if one of them should be absent because of illness or has some other excuse, another should be summoned as a replacement.

7. On the next day twelve of the most worthy nuns and the priest who is most distinguished by his white hair and wisdom should escort the superior-elect to the emperor, so that she may be entrusted with the staff of the superior. After she receives it, they should return immediately to the convent. After blessing the church, the priest should make the customary prayers on behalf of the emperors, and should also pray on behalf of the new superior. Then he should take the box containing this typikon, which has been placed before the icon of our Mistress and Protectress, the Mother of God, and should entrust it to [the superior] after she has knelt three times; and after making the sign of the venerable cross, he should pray for God's assistance to protect her. Finally, after partaking of the consecrated bread from the altar, he should proceed home, and the nuns and the superior should go to the refectory. I direct that on this day ten gold pieces' worth of victuals be purchased, with the addition of legumes, olive oil and other sorts of condiments from the monastic stores. [p. 111]

THIRTEENTH CENTURY

8. Then the reading of this testament of mine should be instituted: on the first day it should be read for the length of the dinner hour, and on subsequent days be read through to the end. It is my wish and command that the typikon be read aloud at least three times a year, beginning each time on a feast day;⁸ first on the feast of the birthday of the venerable [St. John the] Forerunner and Baptist,⁹ second on the salvific birthday of the eternally Virgin Mother of God,¹⁰ and third and last after the feast of the Resurrection of our Lord Jesus Christ and the closure of the feast of the enkainia.¹¹ I ask that all the nuns proclaim “Eternal be the memory of the founders” at the conclusion of each reading.

V. About the necessity of rendering honor to the superior, and how the incompetent superior is to be relieved of her position.

9. The superior will thus direct you in accordance with God’s will, and care for your souls and your salvation . . . [lacuna of two lines] . . . For this is her duty, for this she was selected and proclaimed before God and men, for whom she will have to give reckoning on the Day of Judgment; but all of you, young and middle-aged, elderly and aged, have the obligation to devote yourselves to her as to a mother, and to rely on her will and judgment. You should do nothing independently, neither leaving the convent without permission (for let me say this first), nor receiving anything from outside without asking her permission, whether a remedy for disease, or treatment for the body; nor should you do anything else (to speak once and for all) without the knowledge of the superior. [p. 112]

10. But if (and I pray this may not happen) she should appear to behave in a manner unworthy of this typikon of mine, or indeed of the monastic condition, one or two nuns [alone] should not take the opportunity to rebel against her or cause any sort of scandal for the convent, but if the witnesses are among the preeminent nuns, they should consult with each other, and make known the charges against her to their spiritual father. If, on the other hand, they are of lesser rank, they should report the facts to those of higher rank, and together with them they should refer to their spiritual father their thoughts on this matter. After he examines the charges against her, with the concurrence of the leading nuns he should remove her from the position of superior, if he deems this right, and should entrust the position to another in accordance with the aforementioned procedure. He will command the [deposed superior] to accept the decision against her, or threaten her with terrible punishment and dishonorable expulsion. If she agrees, he will instruct her successor as superior to render her the appropriate kindness and respect, so that the nuns may thereafter lead a quiet and truly spiritual life.

VI. Concerning the rule that all the nuns should have one spiritual father, and conditions for his visits to the convent.

11. This is my wish, and I bid you as a mother, so to speak, or rather I command it as your mistress.

For I am permitted to decree my wishes in my own affairs, especially since I happen to be a despoina by the mercy of my all-powerful God. It is my wish that all the nuns be subject to one spiritual father, so that they may thus appropriately be called “sisters.” He should be a man who is distinguished and known for his virtue, but it makes no difference whether he is a solitary or lives in a cenobitic monastery. [p. 113] I order that he come every month for a stay of three days and no more, and that he should reside in the small rooms assigned for this purpose in the hospital. From early morning he should sit in the part of the narthex of one of the churches to receive the confessions of each nun. If some necessity befalls a sister so that she requires his visit sooner, then he should be notified, come [to the convent], and leave as soon as he has made a proper visitation. Since the [spiritual father] is an eminent man, as we have said, he will not need advice or counsel from anyone else in order to diagnose and heal in the best way the sufferings of a soul, but the sisters will perhaps have need of instruction and counsel.

12. O daughters, mothers and sisters—for I will call you each by the name your age assigns you—or rather sisters in God, the Father and Creator of all—your spiritual father holds forth a model of Christ the Judge and Lord of us all. Therefore, just as “when we present ourselves before him, naked and laid bare,”¹² our secrets will be revealed, I mean our temptations, struggles, beliefs and deeds, so you should reveal your deeds and thoughts unreservedly before the one who is chosen for us as a model of Christ, so that you may be healed of them. As John of the Ladder says, “Faults which are publicly proclaimed do not get worse,” and again, “A soul which intends to confess is thereby checked from sin as if by a bridle.”¹³

13. Therefore you must tell him your words, deeds and plans, everything except for the so-called “secret thoughts,” which the holy fathers bid us leave unspoken.¹⁴ Thus you should receive from him the cure for your sins, that is penances and forgiveness, as if from Christ himself or one of his apostles and disciples, in the belief that “whatever he looses [on earth] shall be loosed in heaven, and whatever he binds [on earth] shall be bound in heaven” (Matt. 16:19). So many times a year should the spiritual father visit the convent. [p. 114]

VII. That in every case postulants need not offer gifts to enter the convent.

14. In any event I should indicate my wishes about postulants. My imperial majesty decrees that, in my opinion, the nuns should immediately be given sufficient necessities, so that no contribution, either large or small, need be asked each time of postulants, and not even the usual so-called “entrance gift.” If anyone wishes to make a contribution of her own accord, the offering will be accepted, but she should not therefore have any excuse for boasting and vanity, so as to act in an overweening manner towards the sisters in any way or to be excused from the prescribed way of life, but she ought to behave as if she had made no contribution, respecting equality of privilege and submitting to this rule and abiding by the commandment which is common for all nuns.

VIII. That the nuns should not go out, and how their visitors should meet with them, who and when and where.

THIRTEENTH CENTURY

15. All the nuns alike should refrain throughout their lives from leaving [the cloister], except in the case of a nun whose virtue is long proven. In the event of dire necessity, she may go to visit one of her male or female relatives, and return immediately. But if she has not proven her reliability, she should be accompanied by elderly nuns and return before sunset. If one of her relatives should wish to visit her, he should meet with her as she stands in front of the gatehouse in the company of respected nuns. After she has held sufficient conversation in their presence, she is to bid farewell [p. 115] and return with them [within the convent]. My imperial majesty enjoins this rule, making a concession to the weakness of human nature. For I am well aware that monastic law makes different provisions, separating [nuns] completely from their parents, and enjoining renunciation even of their children, let alone their siblings or other relatives or friends and acquaintances of long standing.

16. Thus the gates will be completely shut to those who approach the convent. No one except the emperor and the respectable and eminent members of the emperor's retinue are to enter the convent, except in the case of one of my relatives who wishes to see and venerate the holy churches in a pious manner, or to see the tombs of our dear departed out of love for them. If it should be one of my daughters or grandchildren or great-grandchildren, or any other kinswoman or noblewoman, she may enter, but only eunuchs or women of mature years may accompany her. If one of the nuns should be stricken with a serious illness, then she may be visited by her mother or sister or another kinswoman who has given evidence that she is without reproach in her conduct and way of life. After sending to the superior through the gatekeeper a petition to enter, she is to be admitted. After she gains entrance, she should spend the day with the ailing nun, but depart in the evening. Even if the nun's death is imminent, she should come back in the morning and depart in the evening, providing absolutely no hint of scandal for the convent, until it is clear that the patient will recover or die.

IX. How long the novice should wait before receiving the tonsure.

17. It is also the will of my imperial majesty that this rule be followed in my convent: if a woman who enters the convent to receive the tonsure is still young, and has not yet attained her twentieth year, [p. 116] [she should remain in the convent, wearing the monastic]¹⁵ habit for three years, living in exactly the same way as the nuns, being assigned to various duties, willingly switching from this duty to that one, and from that one to this, if she is so ordered by the superior. For not only do I forbid nuns who have not yet taken their final vows to beg off from duties assigned to them without her approval, but even those of advanced age and monastic career. When the three years are completed, she should be examined in the presence of all the nuns, and if she accepts the renunciation of the world with all her heart, she should immediately perform the customary rite, take off the [novice] rags and gloriously become the bride of Christ. Otherwise, excuse her and urge her to return home.

18. If she exceeds the above-mentioned age [of 20], but has no experience of life and worldly affairs, then she should wait a full year. But if she is mature or has experience of misfortune, I mean widowhood or the loss of children or some other of the woes of the world, she need spend only six months [in the convent] before being consecrated in the holy and angelic [monastic] habit. If a girl is brought to the convent during infancy or as a child (I do not care whether she is of noble or common birth), on account of some misfortune such as is wont to occur, or on the other hand because of her love for God, she should wait until her sixteenth year, and then, after being openly examined and making responses in the presence of all the nuns, she should be consecrated in the customary manner. Otherwise she should be dismissed to do as she wishes. In the case of those who do not choose to receive the tonsure, whether they came as minors or adults or were dedicated from infancy, it is possible for them to recover their property without the revenues, but not their money. As for those who are tonsured and accept obedience, they should not receive anything whatsoever if they leave or are dismissed for a fitting cause and justifiable reason. [p. 117]

X. Concerning the acceptance of gifts offered by others with pious intentions.

19. It is my will that gifts offered by anyone whosoever with pious intentions be accepted, property and money, vessels and liturgical cloths, for the adornment of the houses of God, and the memory of the donors.

XI. About receiving nuns from other convents who give evidence of a seemly and irreproachable way of life.

20. We give permission that nuns from other convents who give evidence of a seemly and irreproachable way of life should be admitted, after this typikon of mine has been read to them, and they promise to abide by the rules of conduct laid down therein.

XII. Concerning the procedure for appointment of the officials; and about the duties of the ecclesiarchissa, the sacristan, and other officials.

21. Perhaps I should speak about those nuns who are appointed to offices. Some are entrusted with the most important offices: the stewardship, responsibility for the church, the security of the treasures and sacred vessels (and I will add the guarding of the gates. For I think it is important that a gatekeeper be chosen, since I wish to keep the convent secure). The superior will appoint all these with the knowledge of the spiritual father, and, [p. 118] if they should deviate from proper conduct, together with him she will punish them, disciplining them in proportion to their offense, with the approval of the spiritual father and the knowledge of the preeminent nuns. The superior alone is responsible for the assignment of the other offices, after notifying the leading members of the convent.

22. Each of these officials ought to receive a written record of the kind and amount of goods entrusted to her, and to note the quantity and quality which she received, so that she can give an accounting and be found above reproach at the time of reckoning. As for the others, the nuns who are entrusted with the safeguarding of the [sacred] vessels and the purchase of necessary supplies

THIRTEENTH CENTURY

(it is customary to call these the sacristan and the cellarer) each of these will have two assistants under her who will know exactly what has been entrusted to them. It is my wish that both be openly assigned to their separate positions, and be granted a receipt and give a receipt in return, which includes the same information about the same matters. But the former [should do this] only once, when she receives and hands back the [vessels] entrusted to her, the other [should do this] on a yearly basis, because she receives [the provisions] annually and should dispense them annually.

23. The sacristan will have responsibility for the sacred vessels and liturgical cloths, that in good weather as many of them as necessary are warmed in the sun and exposed to the air, and that the paper documents of the convent are securely stored in boxes. With the permission of the superior and in the presence of the preeminent nuns, she should produce the necessary [document], and then ask for it back, and, after receiving it in the presence of the same nuns, she should shut it up in a basket and affix a seal. The same is true for the reserves of coins and vessels, both what is deposited now by my imperial majesty and whatever further acquisitions are made in the future, through the good will of God, out of surplus revenues or from the contributions of certain pious souls.

24. Subordinate to her will be the ecclesiarchissa, who receives her appointment from the superior; she is to ask the sacristan, however, for the vessels and for the psalters and lectionaries which are used daily, [p. 119] and also for the precious vessels and cloths which are used on the great feast days and especially on those that we order the convent to celebrate, as well as at the commemorations of the founders. She will also be in charge of their safekeeping, and their occasional issuance and return, and she will be responsible for the illumination of the churches, by both oil and candle. The sacristan will provide these services with the assistance of her two subordinates; for I wish her to have two assistants.

The cellarer will provide [the following] services: she will have beneath her an assistant ecclesiarchissa, who is privy to all her knowledge, and joins her in every action. The cellarer will be responsible for all the other administration of the interior of the convent: thus she will be concerned with what the nuns eat every day and what is served for meals, how it is prepared and portioned out, the quantity and quality of wine that is consumed, instructing the servants in detail about all of these matters.

XIII. Concerning the steward, and how the convent must be cenobitic, and that the nuns are to have no personal and private possessions, and that the typikon of St. Sabas should be followed in the convent.

25. There is to be one steward for all the convent's property, both near and far away, and he will appoint other subordinates over the estates in various locations, in accordance with his judgment, either one for each estate, or one for many. I order that he be paid a salary of 36 gold pieces, 100 annonikoi modioi of wheat and 100 of barley, and 100 measures of wine. It makes no difference whether he is a eunuch or not, but it is my wish that a man with a respectable way of life and [p. 120] irreproachable behavior be selected by the superior and the leading nuns and their spiritual father. I ordain that he be installed in the stewardship in the following manner: he is to enter the church in the presence of the spiritual father, and, accompanied by one of the priests, he is to kneel three times in front of the icon of the Mother of God; then, after receiving a blessing from the spiritual father and the attendant priest, he will henceforth bear the title of steward, and will be responsible thereafter for the monastic estates, managing fields and vineyards in a proper manner, sometimes replanting them, and demonstrating worthy consideration for all the property, supervising both the interior and exterior of [the convent] as is fitting, so that there is no damage to the roof of the church, or the roof of the living quarters, or the wall around the hospital. He is to restore all the dilapidated buildings of the convent, and not permit the appropriation or theft of land, or loss or damage of anything else, but should hang on tightly to the monastic property, and eagerly care for it like a truly “faithful and wise steward” (Luke 12:42) . . . [lacuna of perhaps one folio]

26. [He¹⁶ should] make the necessary consultations with the superior in the presence of the leading nuns and on an appointed day, and leave before the midday meal. But if he needs to consult further, he should eat in one of the rooms of the hospital, and visit her again in the afternoon, and depart before nightfall, offering no opportunity for base suspicion.

27. Now that I have discussed the election of the superior and the appointment of officials, I wish to give some advice both to those who are entrusted with offices and those who are not. Those of you in the former group know that you have the obligation to undertake your responsibilities with honesty of purpose and earnest consideration; for you should carry out the responsibilities entrusted to you, as if you had received them from Our Lady herself, the Mother of God, through the intercession of [St. John] the Forerunner and Baptist, and as if you had to render her an accounting of your stewardship. As for those of you who have been allotted the contemplative life, [you should] be content with your lot and be obedient, as the divine Paul counsels, exhorting you to “obey your leaders and submit to them,” and giving the reason, “for they [p. 121] are keeping watch over you and will give account for your souls” (Heb. 13:17). As another Father said, “If those who have charge of us will have to give an accounting for us, how should we not obey them in all affairs?”¹⁷ For the preeminent nuns, the superior herself and those who have assumed important offices must agree with one another and be concerned for the community, and all the nuns together must conduct themselves in a gentle, conciliatory, loving and peaceful manner, and in every way look to their own salvation and that of the other [nuns]; in this way you will receive a favorable response to the prayers which you have been appointed to offer up to God on your own behalf, and on behalf of the Christian community and the founders of this convent of yours, each nun regarding her own condition and condemning only herself, “considering the specks in your own eyes like logs, and overlooking the logs in the eyes of others as if they were specks” (cf. Matt. 7:3), and thus avoiding the arrogance of the Pharisees. But if someone should consider someone’s fault or passion . . . [lacuna of at least one folio] . . .

28. . . . in the words of the disciple who was dear to the heart of Christ, “God is love; and he who abides in love abides in God, and God abides in him” (I John 4:16) . . . God and the disciples of God have reckoned love of great value. For is it necessary to say that nature created man originally as a social and loving animal? Therefore, my sisters, you must pursue the highest virtue, but not overlook exalting humility, and cling fast to love with all your soul; and all the nuns in this sacred precinct should seek after the same piety since they are of the same purpose with regard to God, and especially the nuns who are involved with the holy sanctuary and the divine hymnody, inasmuch as they have been assigned to venerate the suprasubstantial and totally impassible God, and have received a pure angelic model. For the angels above sing in an inspired fashion, while the human choirs below sing in a more solemn manner, and the former sing without pause, the latter continuously, [p. 122] the former serenely, the latter purely. But may you all continually commemorate God, as the divine Basil teaches. For those of you who read or otherwise hear the phrase, “[it is more important] to mention the name of God than to breathe,”¹⁸ should remember it.

THIRTEENTH CENTURY

29. It is time then to speak of the nuns’ diet. As the holy Sabas ordains, thus I wish you to chant the psalms and thus to fast, to eat what he permits and abstain from what he forbids; and all [the nuns] should assemble at a common table, and not keep or eat anything in their cells, unless one of them on account of illness, and with the permission of the superior, should take the necessary items from the storeroom. They should eat as quietly and make as little disturbance as if there were only one nun or almost no one [present], and they should all listen attentively to the reading, as one of the nuns reads aloud whatever the ecclesiarchissa selects. No one is to ask anyone for anything. For how [would it be possible], since it is not permitted for any nun to own [anything] or to appropriate it for herself? They are to be satisfied with the common stores and the food that is set before them daily. They are to keep to the [prescribed] seating order, so as not to argue over places at table, not to ask for different food because of pride in ancestry perhaps or advanced education or supposed superior virtue, or the privilege of age, or because of a contribution of money of property, anything else which puffs up people and alienates them from God.

30. It is my wish and command that the life-bringing sacrifice of Christ be celebrated four times a week, and in both churches at the same time. But if one of the feast days of our Lord or an anniversary of one of the illustrious saints occurs, the eucharist should also be celebrated on that day, but there should [always] be regular celebration on these [four] days. For besides the sacrifices which are to be offered every Sunday and those on intervening feast days, I ordain that four [liturgies] be celebrated every week. As there are four priests, the liturgies will be celebrated without difficulty. They should consecrate eight loaves of bread each time, one for our Lord, another¹⁹ for our Lady, the eternally Virgin Mother of God, another in the name of the saint of the day, another [p. 123] on behalf of the departed nuns, another on behalf of my deceased ancestors, one for my dearly beloved son the emperor and my dearly beloved daughter-in-law, the despoina, one for all my children, and yet another for myself and my mother. Every Saturday stauria are to be offered on behalf of my deceased ancestors and children and those who will die in the future. It is my wish that all the rest of the divine hymnody be performed in accordance with the typikon of St. Sabas. For my imperial majesty approves of it as suitable for women who choose to live in a cenobitic manner, since it is both “moderate” and, as it were, the “royal road.”²⁰

31. But if zeal incites anyone to do even more than this, there is nothing to prevent it; but in the belief that it is essential for nuns to carry out the instructions of this holy teacher, I ordain that they should live in accordance with [the typikon]. If the path should seem hard to anyone, let her learn that this is “the way that leads to life” (Matt. 7:14), this is the path which carries one to eternal pleasure; for, as we have learned, “the sufferings of this present time” (cf. Rom. 8:18) are nothing compared with the blessings of the future. If it is necessary to add this, what sufferings could one endure which would be worthy of the sufferings which our Lord and Creator endured on our behalf? He shed his blood for us; let us rid ourselves of the weight of our flesh. He endured violent death; let us not avoid death, but freely choose it. “Suffer and die,” said one of the fathers, “so that you may gain a better life.” Moreover the instructions of this holy father, which are moderate in tone, will not, I think, so afflict you as to hasten you to an early death, nor will they permit you to live at ease, so as to live luxuriously here on earth, but to hear in heaven, “you in your lifetime received your good things” (Luke 16:25). But I repeat what I have already said, both spiritual and material affairs must be directed as the great Sabas ordains, and may God assist you therein.

32. Since man is an organic being and is clad in a body which has need of food and requires covering, and there is a divine law that one should not desire to die [p. 124] nor dissolve the bond of union prematurely, my majesty has deemed it necessary to discuss the needs of the nuns, I mean food and clothing and all other garments. Therefore, on so-called free days, Tuesday, Thursday, Saturday, and Sunday, two or three dishes should be served, at the discretion of the superior and the leading nuns, one fish, one cheese, and the third legumes. On Mondays, one should serve boiled legumes and fresh vegetables with olive oil and shellfish, if they are abundant and in season. On Wednesdays and Fridays, one or two dishes should be served, of fresh vegetables and legumes, unless it is a feast day of our Lord or of one of the great and holy divine apostles or of celebrated martyrs or famous hierarchs. Then perhaps they might eat fish, or at least add olive oil to their food. On feast days, the refectory table should offer more delicacies, fish and cheese and milk, if they are in season. My majesty gives these instructions for no other reason than to acquaint you with the relaxation [of discipline] which I recommend on different days, and only with regard to the increase in number of dishes. For in other respects, a change in the diet, such as eating only dry foods, eating only pure foods, eating fish and eggs and cheese, should be in accordance with the rules of the holy teacher, I mean the one from Jerusalem, about whom I have already spoken.²¹ Thus I ordain that you should obey and carry out everything according to his typikon, not only with respect to divine hymnody, but also with regard to food and drink.

33. Since our constitution is organic and our wretched flesh is afflicted by disease, my majesty has deemed it necessary to express her wishes concerning nuns who fall ill. They are not to be subject to the rules of the typikon, but are to eat and partake of such drink as is appropriate for their illness, in accordance with the instructions of the physician and the dispensation of the spiritual father when he is notified. She is to receive from the store room of the convent what belongs to the convent, [p. 125] and from the store room of the hospital salves and bandages and whatever she needs. But it is my wish that such relaxation [of discipline] be granted only in cases of genuine illness in order to regain necessary health, and not in the case of feigned illness or for excessive nourishment²² of the flesh. It is my wish that for no other reason there be the slightest deviation from this set of rules.

THIRTEENTH CENTURY

34. Furthermore in the case of nuns who are ill, there is no restriction on bathing, but they should be permitted by the superior to bathe as often as the doctor recommends, and should have as many nuns to attend them as the severity of their illness requires. Otherwise it is my wish that nuns should bathe four times a year, especially if they are young. As for elderly and aged nuns, as well as those who are ill, my majesty commands that they should follow the recommendations of the convent's physician with regard to their diet and regimen. But those who are in good health should bathe four times a year, on the eve of the Great Lent, on the eve of the fast of the holy and praiseworthy Apostles, on the eve of the fast of the Dormition of the surpassingly pure Mother of God, and on the eve of the Christmas fast.

35. A doctor should visit the convent once a week, except during Lent; for at that time the gatekeepers should securely lock the doors to him (and all other men and women from outside), unless one of the nuns should fall ill and require frequent visitation. Then he should come every day and visit his patient daily, and prescribe the food and drink appropriate for her illness, even during Lent.

XIV. Concerning the distribution of garments to the nuns.

36. Garments should be distributed to the nuns and their old ones returned on a regular basis, some annually, others at two-year intervals. [p. 126] The time for the distribution and return [of garments] is to be April and October; in April they should receive the essentials to clothe and cover the body, in October sufficient [outer clothing] to withstand the force of winter and protect them against the cold. The following are to be given out annually: two white tunics made out of remnants and a woolen cloak; three pairs of shoes, one pair looser and high enough to cover the legs²³, two protecting only the feet; every two years, a vest, headcloth and sleeveless woolen cloaks. To repeat, the former will be distributed annually, the latter after the passage of two years, and the old and worn-out clothes are to be returned to the store room.

It is not right to neglect the following instruction, since it is very important and must be carried out precisely, if [you believe] it is really necessary to celebrate festivals piously and to rejoice in a holy manner.

XV. Concerning the celebration in the convent of the Feast of the Birth of the Virgin, and concerning the Feast of the Birth of [St. John] the Forerunner, and about the candles and oil and other expenses.

37. "They must be celebrated in a spiritual manner," exhorts one of the theologian teachers; and David, the ancestor of God, says, "I have loved the beauty of thy house and the place of the tabernacle of thy glory" (Ps. 25 [26]:8-9). Therefore they must be celebrated by you in a pious and dignified manner; and let me speak first of the feast of the birthday of the Mother of God. The customary glass lamps should be removed, and silver ones should be suspended, some single lamps in the shape of pots, and others surrounded with many other small lamps, and they should all be filled with pure oil and lit; there should also be sufficient candles [p. 127] before the icons above the sanctuary, each weighing six ounces. The candelabra beneath (which some people call “skewer-lights,” but are usually called “manoualia”) should be set up in front of the aforementioned holy icon of our Lady the Mother of God which is set out for veneration. On them [should be placed] large candles weighing a litra, and around them smaller candles weighing four ounces. In all there should be 24 candelabras, of which 20 will be sufficient for the old church, and the remaining four will be for the new one. On the rest of these candelabra should be placed large candles weighing six litrai and smaller candles of six ounces. At the tombs, and wherever else appropriate, should be placed four-ounce [pieces] of aloes wood. At vespers and the nocturnal vigil and at the holy liturgy, two ounces should be added. The lamps in the sanctuary and in the apse conches and pterygia and in every part of the church should be hung up and lit after thorough cleaning.

38. On the birthday of [St. John] the honored Forerunner and Baptist exactly the same amount should be spent and the same instructions carried out. At that time in front of the gates there should be a distribution to our Christian brethren of three modioi of bread and six trachea nomismata, and sufficient gold coins for such provisions as the season requires and the superior and nuns approve. Let precisely the same preparations be made and the same amount be spent on the feast day of the divine Forerunner and Baptist.²⁴ At the feast of the Dormition of our Lady the Mother of God and at the Transfiguration of the Savior²⁵ and his birth in the flesh, and at the splendid Feast of Lights (Epiphany), and at his Resurrection from the dead, let the ceremonies be performed in accordance with the judgment of the superior and leading nuns. On the anniversaries of saints, and celebrated holy men, and famous martyrs . . . [lacuna of one line] . . . [p. 128]

XVI. That chanters should not be invited to the convent.

39. It is my command that the chanters who are called kalliphonoi not attend any of the festivals, but that only the nuns by themselves, together with the priests who are assigned to the convent, perform the singing of hymns. On the feast of the birthday of my exceedingly pure Lady the Mother of God, however, when the emperor is scheduled to attend, the kalliphonoi who have been chosen by lot are to precede him unhindered, and when the emperor departs they are to leave without any delay whatsoever.

Both these holy churches should be illuminated night and day. On the feast day of the exceedingly pure Mother of God, a lamp should shine continuously in the sanctuary, and outside there should be a large candle, such as is usually called “perpetual.” On the feast day of [St. John] the honored Forerunner and Baptist, there should be a lamp in the sanctuary, and in the church five large candles burning in a similar manner, one before the icon of the Baptist, the others over my tomb and those of my children, who are buried there. At the time of the daily matins and vespers services, and during the divine liturgy, there should be as many lamps, and large and small candles, as the superior and the leading nuns see fit; for a number appropriate to the day should be lit.

THIRTEENTH CENTURY

XVII. Concerning the procedure to be followed in the convent if one of the daughters or granddaughters or other relatives of the despoina receives the tonsure.

40. Inasmuch as the renunciation of the world and worldly affairs is an attractive prospect for all the faithful, since it gives assurance [p. 129] of future tranquillity and the resulting spiritual pleasure, all men and women desire to attain it, and hasten to arrive at the harbor of salvation from the tempest of life. The following procedure should be observed if the daughters and granddaughters whom I have by the grace of God, who is merciful and absolutely good, should ever enter the convent. In case one of my daughters (two of them are still alive)²⁶ chooses the monastic life after reaching old age, or else in agreement with her husband, it is my express command that she be granted the provisions of four nuns; and if she should require any of the nuns for her service and wish to live separately, she should be assigned three nuns selected by the superior and the leading sisters. But if her personal attendants are tonsured with her, the appropriate provisions should be given to them, too. If, on the other hand, she chooses to abide by the rules of the typikon, and eat at the common table, thanks be to God. For this is true perfection, this is dear to God, for her to be totally obedient, and for worldly vanity to be brought back to the truth, and to choose uplifting humility, continually turning over in her mind the words, "I was brought low, and the Lord delivered me" (Ps. 114 [116]:6).

41. In case she should prefer to live by herself on account of ill health, and join the other nuns only for church services, if she has her own personal attendants, the same provisions are to be given to them; otherwise she should live together with one nun of her choice, and, at her request, two additional nuns may be assigned to attend her and take care of any necessary household affairs. If one of my granddaughters [should enter the convent] two [attendants] are to be with her, either both her personal [attendants] or both [nuns] from the convent, or one her own [attendant] and the other [a nun] from the convent. Whoever is assigned to her, each of them is to receive the appropriate essentials for nuns. If one of my imperial relatives or a woman of distinguished family enters [the convent], she is to have one attendant, either her own or one of the nuns, and, unless she chooses to eat in the refectory, she is to receive daily provisions sufficient for two nuns. [p. 130]

XVIII. Concerning the manner and location of the burial of the children or grandchildren of the Despoina.²⁷

42. It is now time to be mindful of death, since there is no one "that lives and never sees death" (Ps. 88 [89]:48). First I will make clear to my family and descendants my wishes concerning my own burial. The body of my daughter²⁸ is buried to the right of the entrance to the church of [St. John] the Forerunner. My tomb and that of my honored mother²⁹ (for I cannot bear to be separated from her even after my death) should be built after the intervening door. In the future any of my children or sons-in-law, who request during their lifetime to be laid to rest here, shall be suitably buried. The same shall apply to my grandsons and granddaughters, daughters-in-law, and the husbands of granddaughters, for all of whom there are to be annual commemorations. The opposite side, on your left as you leave for the old church of the Virgin, will be totally reserved for whatever purpose desired by my son the emperor.

XIX. Inventory of property.

43. Now I shall discuss the property which has been donated. It is my wish and command that it be maintained in an inalienable manner, no matter what circumstances may befall the convent. In case (and I pray this may not happen) the revenues of the convent should be decreased because of poor harvests or foreign attack, they are not to sell any property, but should pawn one of their treasures, “making the most of the time” (cf. Eph. 5:16) as they say, with the obligation, after a period of good years, to redeem the same treasure, or a better one. [p. 131]

44. The estates which my majesty donates are as follows:

Of the estates given me [and confirmed] by chrysobull by my dearly beloved son, the most pious emperor, the property in the theme of Pergamon called Kastellon,³⁰ worth 350 gold pieces.

From the estates of Achilleion and Barys which my holy mother and I inherited from our ancestors, a portion worth 300 gold pieces. Included in this amount is the fish pond there.

In addition to these, the mill of Thermene which is from the property of the same ancestral estates; also the vineyard of Emporianos, which I purchased, and was added to the holdings of my ancestral property.

In the vicinity of the same estates, a cattle byre called Kythrina together with its holdings, i.e., a vineyard of 32 modioi, a garden of 20 modioi, a smaller garden of 10 modioi, arable land of 390 modioi, and a double mill near Anaia that operates all year round, vineyards of 145 modioi, some acquired by purchase, others through improvements and maintenance, gardens of 150 modioi, arable land of 350 modioi, and 14 houses for rent, called enoikika in the vernacular.

45. Near Kordoleon in the katepanikion of Smyrna, arable land of 500 modioi purchased from Abalantos.

In the vicinity of Philopation near Constantinople, arable land of 2000 modioi.

In addition, the buildings inside Constantinople which I acquired by purchase, that is, the houses of Batrachonites and Gabras in the Kynegoi quarter, the workshop near the gate of Kynegoi, the [house] of Chabaron near Blachernai, the [houses] at Tzochareia [near?] the Imperial Gate purchased from the Syrian pitchmaker named Mafre, the houses of John Eulogios, which are behind the Latin church of the exceedingly holy Mary, near them the houses of the magistrate [p. 132] of the stage, and the [houses] of Sampson near these, and apart from and beyond these the guard house at the Beautiful Gate.

46. [The revenues of] all these are for the convent alone; but the [revenues from the] following are for the care and treatment of the sick people in the aforementioned hospital. Out of the estates granted me by chrysobull by my dearly beloved son the emperor, [I set aside] a portion of 600 nomismata, i.e., the village called Nymphai in the vicinity of Constantinople, whose revenues from dependent peasants and arable land are 260 nomismata, two mills near Aphameia worth 32 nomismata, so that altogether the income from Nymphai and the mills of Aphameia are 292 nomismata.

THIRTEENTH CENTURY

Another village, Skoteinon, in the region of Macedonia, whose income from dependent peasants is 138 nomismata, plus 70 nomismata from four mills, and 100 nomismata from arable land of 2,600 modioi, altogether 308 nomismata from Skoteinon.

47. In addition the estates of Lachanas at Lopadion, i.e. a vineyard of 300 modioi, arable land of 860 modioi, a winter mill, a half share in another mill, and his houses. My majesty has endowed with these estates the aforesaid convent of my exceedingly pure Lady, the Mother of God, and the attached hospital, and they are to be inalienable and inseparable, as my dearly beloved son, the most pious emperor, has agreed³¹ and confirmed by his chrysubull.

48. The property donated by my honorable mother is as follows:

From the village of Hennakosia near Constantinople 95 gold pieces from dependent peasants; from the village of Plakos 66 nomismata from dependent peasants; 58 nomismata from Kalon Neron; 18 nomismata from abandoned land of these three villages amounting to 500 modioi; in the vicinity of the aforementioned village [p. 133] of Hennakosia, below the paved road, another abandoned property of 1400 modioi worth 42 nomismata; at the same village of Hennakosia a mill worth 8 nomismata; the pier there worth 10 nomismata; arable land of 700 modioi in the vicinity of Martinakion worth 28 nomismata, the revenues from the aforesaid three villages together with the aforementioned land coming altogether to 344 nomismata; in the neighborhood of St. Anne, arable land of 3000 modioi, near Empyrites at Palatitzia arable land of 200 modioi, two mills at Kamelogephyron and two other mills in the village of Apodroungarion in the theme of Selymbria.

49. The property owned by the convent inside Constantinople is as follows:

A vineyard of 125 modioi; gardens in different locations of 40 modioi; another garden of 15 modioi at Blanga; another called Dzeffre of 40 modioi; at Galata a vineyard of 112 modioi and garden of 3 modioi; also a vineyard of 237 modioi and gardens of 98 modioi; six mills reconstructed near the venerable monastery of the All-Seeing [Christ],³² and outside at the wall of the Phanar; houses of Tzochareia which were purchased by the convent from Nikolezos; two other houses at the Beautiful Gate which also came to the convent by purchase from Chrestine; 10 other houses in the region of Blachernai, as well as another house with an upper floor in the region of the Blachernai palace near the houses of Niketiates; half of the field of Diabatenos which has 112 olive trees, as well as one half of the field of Magistros which has 210 olive trees which up to the present time are owned by the same venerable convent; other olive trees at Nikomedeia conveyed to the same convent by written testament of Cheilas, the pansebastos judge of the God-guarded army;³³ the small convent of Skoutari [p. 134] of the great martyr St. George,³⁴ which is called Trapeza, which was donated to the same venerable convent as the entrance gift of the nun Tzakalina.

XX. Concerning the hospital, and its priest and other staff.

50. Since I have already said³⁵ that the hospital which is next to the convent and newly built by me is to be inseparable from the convent, I should make clear once and for all the procedures I wish to be followed therein. For I have confirmed that the estates are to be held in common by the convent and the hospital attached to it, since the superior of the convent and the steward of the monastic property should concern themselves no less for the ailing women in the hospital than for the nuns who live in the convent. It is my will and command that there should be twelve beds, plus three for the attendants, and from time to time mattresses and bedcovers for them should be distributed, as well as two shifts and one cape, and that an equal number of female applicants should be admitted in turn, to whom the following will be given annually: 30 maritime modioi of wheat and 70 gold pieces for wine, 60 for food, 18 for wood, 4 for oil, 6 for salt and flax-seed oil, 3 for the purchase of barley or for barley-water.³⁶

51. There is to be a priest to perform church services and celebrate the last rites or accompany the funeral procession. He is to be paid 12 gold pieces annually and 24 annonikoi modioi [of wheat?]. Three doctors should care for [the patients]; their pay is to be 48 nomismata, or 16 apiece; an assistant, who is to receive 12 nomismata; a nurse at 14 nomismata; a head pharmacist at 12 nomismata; six attendants receiving 10 nomismata apiece; 2 chief druggists at 12 nomismata; a blood-letter at 4 nomismata, 3 servants at 10 nomismata apiece; a cook at the same salary; and 5 nomismata to be paid to the laundress. [p. 135]

XXI. Prayer and additional hortatory advice to the nuns.

52. My sisters in God, this small portion of the wealth I have received from God I have dedicated to him and to our common Mistress, the Mother of God, in expiation of my sins in this life; and may these [gifts] be found acceptable by God the Almighty, so that he may have mercy on me at the Day of Judgment and give me a share of his blessings. May you live in God and walk in the path of virtue without stumbling, and may you mention me constantly in both your common and private prayers to God. If, incited by love for you, my imperial majesty should add a few instructions, I will not seem to do anything improper. But let no one ridicule me because I chose the easy path of exhortation, but avoided the difficult path of action. For as we have heard, blessed is "he who acts and teaches" (cf. Matt. 5:19), since he appears of the first and greater order. Nor will he who teaches be cast aside, even if he be the least, especially if his teachings are not for display and base hypocrisy, but for a divine purpose and creditable motive.

53. Therefore heed me; for I will speak solemn words. You have renounced the world, and life in the world. "You have taken up the cross" (Luke 9:23) of the Lord, and have chosen to follow him, so that at the end [of the world] you may appear perfect and inherit his kingdom. Cling fast to your purpose; for the Lord says, "No one who puts his hand to the plow and looks back is fit for the kingdom of God" (Luke 9:62). You have also heard the fate of the wife of Lot, who was fleeing from the land of Sodom, and turned to look back (Gen. 19:26). This is a symbol of the women who return to their previous sinful behavior and wicked way of life. Remember [p. 136] the blessings prepared in heaven, which “no eye has seen, nor ear heard, nor the heart of man conceived” (I Cor. 2:9). Let each nun remain in the rank to which she has been called: the superior should be vigilant for her own salvation together with that of all the nuns, “ruling with zeal” (Rom. 12:8), in the words of the holy apostle, while the rest of the nuns should remain “in submissiveness” (I Tim. 2:11), in accordance again with the same apostle, who enjoined us to “obey your leaders and submit to them” (Heb. 13:17), and all of you should cling fast to one another . . . [lacuna] . . . , each of you caring for her neighbors no less than for herself.

THIRTEENTH CENTURY

54. If thus you complete the road of life, if in this way you observe the divine commandments which have been proclaimed by God Who is free from all deceit, you will obtain the pure blessings and the ineffable . . . [lacuna] . . . , through the intercessions of my [surpassingly pure] Mistress, the Mother of God, through the supplications of [St. John] the venerable Forerunner and Baptist. May you journey in this way and be strict guardians of the divine commandments, and may you receive the blessings which have been prepared for you, through the grace and loving kindness of our Lord Jesus Christ, to whom is due all glory, honor and veneration together with his eternal Father and the all-holy, good and life-giving Spirit, now and forever more. Amen.

Notes on the Translation

Editors' note: The assistance of our translator, Alice-Mary Talbot [AMT], is gratefully acknowledged for the notes to this document. She has offered a number of amended readings of the text (ed.) based on an independent examination of the manuscript (MS.).

1. The beginning of the typikon, perhaps one folio, is missing; editor Delehaye has supplied the titles of [1] and [2]. [AMT]
2. MS. reads synkatallexei, not synkatallaxei (ed.). [AMT]
3. MS. reads oikouriai (a with iota subscript), not oikouria. [AMT]
4. Andronikos II Palaiologos (1282–1328).
5. Co-emperor from 1272 with Michael VIII Palaiologos (1259–82).
6. Michael IX Palaiologos, named co-emperor in 1281, crowned 1294/95, predeceased his father in 1320; see Alice-Mary Talbot and Anthony Cutler, “Michael IX Palaiologos,” ODB, pp. 1367–68.
7. MS. reads en d'heni tini ton; ed. omits ton. [AMT]
8. MS. reads aph'heortes, not eph'heortes. [AMT]
9. June 24; see also [38] below.
10. September 8; see also [37] below.
11. On the feast of the enkainia (lit. “inauguration”), held on the first Sunday after Easter to celebrate the beginning of a new life in Christ, see J. Phountoulis, “Enkainion anamnesis,” TEE, vol. 5, col. 324.
12. Antiochos the Monk, Homilia 48, PG 89, col. 1584A; Anastasios the Sinaite, Oratio de sacra synaxi, PG 89, col. 845B; John Damascene, De imaginibus oratio 1.3, PG 94, col. 1233C. [AMT]
13. John Klimakos, Scala Paradisi 4, PG 88, col. 681B. [AMT]
14. John Klimakos, Scala Paradisi 4, PG 88, col. 684D. [AMT]
15. Lacuna in the ms.; these words are a conjecture of ed. Delehaye. [AMT]
16. Presumably, but not certainly, the steward as discussed above in [25].
17. Unidentified quotation.
18. Cf. Gregory Nazianzen, Adv. Eunomianos, PG 36, col. 16.
19. Ms. reads heteron not heteroi. [AMT]

20. Pseudo-Basil, Constitutiones asceticae 4.2, PG 31, col. 1349B.
21. In [29] above.
22. MS. reads prothesin, not prothesin. [AMT]
23. anobolas ton podon. [AMT]
24. Feast of the Birth of the Mother of God, September 8; feast of the Birth of St. John the Baptist, June 24.
25. Feast of the Dormition of the Mother of God, August 15; feast of the Transfiguration, August 6.
26. Probably Theodora's daughters Irene and Eudokia; see Talbot, "Theodora Palaiologina," p. 299.
27. In this chapter the translator has borrowed some phrases from the translation of Macridy, "Monastery of Lips," p. 270. [AMT]
28. Probably Anna, who died sometime before 1301; see Talbot, "Theodora Palaiologina," p. 299.
29. Eudokia Angelina.
30. MS. reads Kastellon, not Kastellou. [AMT]
31. MS. reads esterxe, not esterixe. [AMT]
32. The monastery of Christos Pantepoptes, for which see Janin, Géographie, vol. 3, pp. 513–15.
33. krites tou phossatou: a military judge. See Alexander Kazhdan, "Krites tou phossatou," ODB, p. 1159.
34. For this monastery, see Janin, Géographie, vol. 2, p. 26.
35. In [1] above.
36. MS. reads ptisanes chilou (read chylou), not ptises chilou. [AMT]

Document Notes

- I. Independence of the convent. Equivalent to (27) Kecharitomene [1].
 - [1] Inalienability of the convent and its properties; reciprocity appeal to future rulers; patriarchal rights. For other assertions of institutional independence in thirteenth-century documents, see (34) Machairas [21], (35) Skoteine [20], (36) Blemmydes [1], (37) Auxentios [2], (38) Kellibara I [15], and (40) Anargyroi [3]. For the appeal to future rulers, see also (37) Auxentios [15]. For the treatment of the rights of the ecclesiastical hierarchy, see (34) Machairas [9], [16], [19], [140]; (35) Skoteine [16], [17], [20]; (36) Blemmydes [1]; (37) Auxentios [2]; (38) Kellibara I [15]; and (45) Neophytos [12], [15].
 - [2] Curse against transgressors. See the use of similar curses in these thirteenth-century documents: (34) Machairas [21], [162]; (35) Skoteine [46]; (37) Auxentios [2]; and (45) Neophytos [22].
- II. Establishment of the protectorate. Equivalent to (27) Kecharitomene [3].
 - [3] Perpetual protectorate entrusted to the emperor. For a contemporary imperial guardianship, see (38) Kellibara I [16]; cf. the patriarchal guardianship in (37) Auxentios [16] and the private protectorate in (57) Bebaia Elpis [18], [19].
- III. Number of nuns. Equivalent to (27) Kecharitomene [5].
 - [4] Division of the community into choir and household nuns. For this division in thirteenth-century documents, see (35) Skoteine [14], (37) Auxentios [6], (38) Kellibara I [17], (40) Anargyroi [6], and (45) Neophytos [9].
- IV. Election and installation of the superior; appointment of priests. Equivalent to (27) Kecharitomene [11].
 - [5] Election procedure. See also other thirteenth-century provisions in (34) Machairas [17], (35) Skoteine [17], (37) Auxentios [3], (38) Kellibara I [18], (40) Anargyroi [5], and (45) Neophytos [14].
 - [6] Number, salary, and assignments of priests. See also other provisions for convents in (27) Kecharitomene [15]; (40) Anargyroi [5]; (54) Neilos Damilas [9], [14]; and (57) Bebaia Elpis [79].
 - [7] Installation ceremony. See analogous provisions in (27) Kecharitomene [11] and (37) Auxentios [3].
 - [8] Reading of the typikon; commemoration of the founders. For the reading of the typikon in other thirteenth-century documents, see (34) Machairas [167], (37) Auxentios [13], (45) Neophytos [11]. For the founder's commemoration, see [30], [52] below and (34) Machairas [31], [44], [150], [154]; (35) Skoteine [19]; (37) Auxentios [13]; (40) Anargyroi [6]; and (45) Neophytos [12].

THIRTEENTH CENTURY

V. Necessity of obedience to the superior; removal of an unfit superior. Equivalent to (27) Kecharitomene [13].

[9] Requirement of obedience to the superior. Cf. similar provisions in (22) Evergetis [22], (32) Mamas [24], (33) Heliou Bomon [24], (52) Choumnos [B4], (57) Bebaia Elpis [9], and (60) Charsianeites [B8].

[10] Procedure for removing an unfit superior. See also (27) Kecharitomene [13] and (34) Machairas [90]; cf. (37) Auxentios [5].

VI. Role of the spiritual father. Equivalent to (27) Kecharitomene [16].

[11] Qualifications and procedures for hearing confessions. See also other provisions for convents in (27) Kecharitomene [16], (40) Anargyroi [5], (54) Neilos Damilas [9], and (57) Bebaia Elpis [111].

[12] Nuns urged to make unreserved confessions. See also (22) Evergetis [7], (29) Kosmosoteira [17], (30) Phoberos [14], (34) Machairas [52], and (57) Bebaia Elpis [109].

[13] Exception for “secret thoughts.”

VII. No mandatory entrance gifts. Equivalent to (27) Kecharitomene [7].

[14] Communal supply of necessities; entrance fees not required but voluntary offerings acceptable; donors to respect equality of privilege. See [18] below for recovery of entrance gifts in certain cases. For the treatment of these gifts, see (27) Kecharitomene [7]; (34) Machairas [57], [58]; and thirteenth-century examples in [49] below and in (35) Skoteine [31], [32], [33], [38], [39].

VIII. Nuns not to leave the premises; visitation procedures. Equivalent to (27) Kecharitomene [17].

[15] Emergency visits to see relatives; reception of visitors at the gatehouse. See also other provisions for convents in (27) Kecharitomene [17], (40) Anargyroi [5], and (57) Bebaia Elpis [72], [76]

[16] No access to the convent; exceptions for the emperor, the founder’s relatives, and female relatives of sick nuns. See also exceptions permitted in (27) Kecharitomene [80].

IX. Length of the novitiate. Equivalent to (27) Kecharitomene [30].

[17] Duration for novices under 20. (36) Blemmydes [9] likewise has a separate schedule for youths; cf. (54) Neilos Damilas [5]. For testing by rotation in various manual assignments, see also (37) Auxentios [12].

[18] Duration for novices over 20; recovery of entrance gifts. For the former, cf. the less complex provisions of (27) Kecharitomene [30]; the latter is an unprecedented provision.

X. Acceptance of pious gifts. Equivalent to (27) Kecharitomene [8].

[19] Gifts of property, money, sacred vessels, and liturgical cloths welcomed. Cf. reservations expressed and conditions imposed elsewhere in (27) Kecharitomene [8] and (31) Areia [M10], [T6].

XI. Acceptability of nuns from other convents. Equivalent to (27) Kecharitomene [54].

[20] Nuns from other convents welcomed; should be read and assent to the typikon. (45) Neophytos [C17] and (55) Athanasios I [8] make similar provisions for reading rules to newcomers.

XII. Appointment and duties of officials. Equivalent to (27) Kecharitomene [18], [19], [20], [24].

[21] Designation of authorities responsible for appointments. (27) Kecharitomene [18] and (37) Auxentios [7] are more traditional in making all appointments the prerogative of the superior; (57) Bebaia Elpis [73], on the other hand, orders the selection of officials by a general election.

[22] Officials accountable for goods received. See also similar procedures set out in (27) Kecharitomene [24], (32) Mamas [10], (33) Heliou Bomon [10], and (34) Machairas [100], [101].

[23] Duties of the sacristan. See also provisions in (27) Kecharitomene [19], (32) Mamas [9], (33) Heliou Bomon [9], and (58) Menoikeion [5].

[24] Duties of the ecclesiarchissa and the treasurer. See also provisions in (27) Kecharitomene [20], [24]; (32) Mamas [8], [10]; (33) Heliou Bomon [8], [10]; (34) Machairas [93], [100]; (37) Auxentios [7]; (38) Kellibara I [17]; (57) Bebaia Elpis [49] ff.; and (58) Menoikeion [4], [6].

XIII. The steward; dietary and liturgical requirements of the cenobitic life. Equivalent to (27) Kecharitomene [12], [14], [25], [40], [41], [42], [49], [56], [57], and [58].

[25] Selection, installation, and duties of the steward. See also other provisions for convents in (27) Kecharitomene [14], (40) Anargyroi [5], (54) Neilos Damilas [18], and (57) Bebaia Elpis [54], [55].

[26] Procedures for an official's visit. Cf. provisions for the visit of the spiritual father in [11] above.

[27] Exhortation of officials; admonition to obedience; importance of concord. See also (27) Kecharitomene [12], [25] and (57) Bebaia Elpis [127].

[28] Importance of humility; angelic model for choir sisters. See also similar discussion in (57) Bebaia Elpis [47], cf. [127].

[29] Refectory procedures; no eating in cells; maintenance of prescribed seating order. See similar provisions in (27) Kecharitomene [40], [41], [42], [49]; (34) Machairas [62], [63], [64]; (55) Athanasios I [4]; (56) Kellibara II [4]; (57) Bebaia Elpis [84], [85]; and (58) Menoikeion [8].

[30] Celebration of the liturgy; commemorative eucharistic offerings; endorsement of the liturgical typikon of St. Sabas. So also (37) Auxentios [8], (56) Kellibara II [1], (57) Bebaia Elpis [78], (58) Menoikeion [16]; cf. separate provisions in (35) Skoteine [12].

[31] More rigorous observances encouraged; defense of the typikon's requirements. For the latter, cf. (57) Bebaia Elpis [79].

[32] Summary of dietary provisions; Sabas typikon to regulate dietary matters also. So also (37) Auxentios [10], (56) Kellibara II [1], (57) Bebaia Elpis [80], [81]; cf. separate provisions in (35) Skoteine [11] and (58) Menoikeion [8].

[33] Dispensations for and care of the sick. See similar provisions in (27) Kecharitomene [56], [57]; (34) Machairas [107]; (37) Auxentios [10]; (56) Kellibara II [5]; and (57) Bebaia Elpis [82], [90], [91].

[34] Regulation of bathing for the healthy and the sick. See also provisions in (27) Kecharitomene [58], (32) Mamas [28], (33) Heliou Bomon [28], (45) Neophytos [C9], (56) Kellibara II [5], (57) Bebaia Elpis [90], [101], and (58) Menoikeion [15].

[35] Doctor's visits. See also other provisions for convents in (27) Kecharitomene [57] and (57) Bebaia Elpis [90].

XIV. Communal wardrobe. Equivalent to (27) Kecharitomene [52].

[36] Schedule of items to be distributed. See also (56) Kellibara II [7], [8] and (57) Bebaia Elpis [98], [99].

XV. Prescriptions for the celebration of feasts. Equivalent to (27) Kecharitomene [59], [60], [61], [62], and [63].

[37] Illumination for the patronal feast. See analogous provisions in (27) Kecharitomene [59], (34) Machairas [27], (37) Auxentios [14], and (57) Bebaia Elpis [112].

[38] Prescriptions for other feasts. See analogous provisions in (27) Kecharitomene [60], [61], [62], [63]; (28) Pantokrator [7]; and (34) Machairas [28].

XVI. Psalm singers banned from the convent. Equivalent to (27) Kecharitomene [66], [67], [68], and [75].

[39] Singers banned except for emperor's kalliphonoi on the patronal feast; ordinary illumination of the churches. For the former, see also (27) Kecharitomene [75]. For the latter, see also (27) Kecharitomene [66], [67], [68]; (28) Pantokrator [6], [29], [34], [53]; and (34) Machairas [26].

XVII. Special privileges for the founder's relatives. Equivalent to (27) Kecharitomene [4].

[40] Servants, additional provisions, and dispensation from cenobitic requirements for daughters and granddaughters. See also (27) Kecharitomene [4].

[41] Special privileges for sick relatives and noblewomen. See also (29) Kosmosoteira [55] and (57) Bebaia Elpis [93], [94].

XVIII. Burial provisions for the founder's relatives. Equivalent to (27) Kecharitomene [76].

[42] Location of the tombs. See (40) Anargyroi [3], and the discussions in Macridy, "Monastery of Lips," pp. 269–72, and Mango and Hawkins, “Additional Notes,” pp. 301–3. For tombs and burials elsewhere in the monastic foundation documents, see (19) Attaleiates [16]; (23) Pakourianos [2], [12]; (27) Kecharitomene [66], [76]; (28) Pantokrator [8], [29], [31], [32], [34], [44]; (29) Kosmosoteira [89], [90], [95], [107], [109]; (45) Neophytos [5], [24]; and (57) Bebaia Elpis [142].

THIRTEENTH CENTURY

XIX. Inventory of landed property. Equivalent to (27) Kecharitomene [9], Appendix A.

[43] Immovable property always inalienable; movable property can be pawned in fiscal emergencies. For conditional alienability, see also (27) Kecharitomene [9] and (34) Machairas [111], cf. [94].

[44], [45] List of donated properties. See also similar lists in the following contemporary documents: (35) Skoteine [31] ff., (37) Auxentios [17] (missing), (40) Anargyroi [4], and (57) Bebaia Elpis [121] ff.

[46] Revenues for support of the hospital: estates given the founder by Andronikos II. For the former, see also (28) Pantokrator [65].

[47] Continuation of [46].

[48] Dedications made by founder’s mother. See also the separate identification of properties donated by founders’ relatives in (28) Pantokrator [65] and (57) Bebaia Elpis [122].

[49] Donated properties located inside Constantinople.

XX. Regulations for the hospital. No equivalent in (27) Kecharitomene.

[50] Furnishings and provisions. See discussion by Miller, Birth of the Hospital, pp. 200–204 and the provisions for the hospital in (28) Pantokrator [36] ff.

[51] Hospital personnel and their salaries. See the chart of comparative salaries of personnel in this document and in (28) Pantokrator [52] in Miller, Birth of the Hospital, p. 203, Table One.

XXI. Prayer and additional hortatory advice. Equivalent to (27) Kecharitomene [78].

[52] Request for inclusion in common and private prayers. Cf. the appeals in (57) Bebaia Elpis [134], [144].

[53] Exhortation to perseverance. Cf. the language of (22) Evergetis [42] and (27) Kecharitomene [78].

[54] Final blessing. Cf. the concluding benedictions in (22) Evergetis [43], (27) Kecharitomene [78], and (57) Bebaia Elpis [133].

40. Anargyroi: Typikon of Theodora Palaiologina for the Convent of Sts. Kosmas and Damian in Constantinople

Date: 1294–1301¹

Translator: Alice-Mary Talbot

Edition employed: H. Delehay, Deux typica byzantins de l'époque des Paléologues (Brussels, 1921), pp. 136–40.

Manuscript: British Library Additional 22748 (14th c.)²

Other translations: None

Institutional History

This foundation, one of several Constantinopolitan monasteries dedicated to two brothers martyred under Diocletian (284–305) who were famous as the Anargyroi—those who rendered medical services “without charge”—is not otherwise attested outside of the present document. It is to be distinguished from a much more famous male monastery dedicated to these saints known as the Kosmidion that was located on the Golden Horn.³ The original foundation of the monastery under consideration here was due [2] to an unnamed logothetes tou dromou, who provided it with a typikon (see also [6]) and a landed endowment. It is not certain that this foundation was originally planned as a nunnery. This monastery was then ruined during the Latin occupation of Constantinople. The author Theodora Palaiologina’s plans for the restoration of the Anargyroi foundation preceded [2] those for the convent of Lips, while the actual work on the former foundation followed after the construction of the latter, probably at the very end of the thirteenth century.⁴ She re-endowed [4] Anargyroi, reconstituted now as a convent, with properties located in Constantinople and its vicinity as well as in the Thracasian theme. Though Lips and Anargyroi were independent of one another, their respective officials were to cooperate [7] on matters of mutual interest. The commemorations of the original founder and his family were also to be preserved [6].

Aran (“Anargyres,” p. 247) has attempted to identify the church of this foundation with the mosque of Atik Mustafa Camii in Istanbul, but Mathews and Hawkins (“Notes,” p. 134) have rejected this attribution.

Analysis

This document is extant as a kind of appendix to (39) Lips; our manuscript of the latter therefore is probably the working copy made for the convent of the Anargyroi. The nuns of this institution would have needed such a copy since the empress, or to be precise, her ghostwriter (for whom, see (39) Lips, B. Composition of the Typikon), contents [5] himself with cross-referencing the provisions of that document that were to be binding on the convent of the Anargyroi rather than recapitulating them.

THIRTEENTH CENTURY

A. Importance of the Document

The typikon is important for the insight it provides into the relationship of a “second founder” (here, the empress) to the original founder, as well as how new regulations might relate to a pre-existing typikon. These were sensitive matters, given how on occasion private property rights in religious institutions had been disregarded in Byzantium. In reaction, founders customarily asserted the inviolability of their testamentary provisions (including but not limited to those in their typika) up through the definitive formulation of the argument for non-interference advanced by Nicholas Kabasilas⁵ in the fourteenth century. Both the empress (through her ghostwriter here and elsewhere in the discussion below) [1] and her husband Michael VIII (in (37) Auxentios [15]) endorse the concept. The empress’ regulation, which she terms [1] a “second exposition,” is justified on the necessity of a new property endowment and a spiritual renewal (anakainesis) of the convent’s mode of life; but she is careful to preserve [6] by reference at least some of the provisions in the prior typikon (cf. (33) Heliou Bomon [51]).

B. Lives of the Nuns

1. Number of Nuns

There were to be [6] thirty nuns at this foundation, eighteen consecrated to hymnody and the remaining twelve for “general housekeeping” duties. This is a precisely scaled-down version of the size and allocations found in (39) Lips [4], with 60% of the personnel assigned to hymnody and 40% for other services. The offices were to be [5] the same as in (39) Lips.⁶

2. Liturgical Duties

The liturgy was to be celebrated [5] by two salaried priests four times a week (including Sundays) as well as on special feast days. This compares to the four priests provided for in (39) Lips [6] for the two churches in that foundation; the liturgy was celebrated five times a week at Lips.

3. Cenobitic Lifestyle

Although the empress herein sets forth [1] a rule for the nuns intended to determine their way of life, she stresses that this was not intended as a revocation of the previous founder’s typikon and instructions, since “it is not right to annul a covenant of the departed.” The observance of this earlier rule had slackened [2] along with the physical disintegration of the foundation “though it has not completely disappeared,” which implies that the document itself was extant as the empress composed her own rule. Later on in the present document, she provides [5] that the nuns of the convent of the Anargyroi should adhere to the same way of life (i.e., cenobitic monasticism) as was being followed at Lips.

Provisions in (39) *Lips*⁷ were also to govern [5] such matters as the nuns’ visitation rights, the admission of nuns tonsured elsewhere, the system for distribution of new garments and collection of the old ones, and the purchase and storage of necessary commodities.

C. Constitutional Matters

1. Independent Status

While the empress provides that this convent is to be [3] “separate and independent,” she avoids using the traditional, precise technical vocabulary that had been developed since the time of (22) Evergetis [12] to establish institutional independence. She also omits here the customary list of perceived threats to her foundation's independence, although earlier, in a damaged portion of this document, she alludes [1] to previous emperors who have appropriated (i.e., confiscated) other monastic foundations. The convent of the Anargyroi was to remain unattached to any other foundation inside or outside Constantinople, not to be joined even to Lips, which she declares "is considered mine no less than this one." Rather than being subordinated to the latter institution (as two dependencies were to the convent of the Anargyroi itself in [4]) or be united to it by henosis (as Kellibara was to St. Demetrios in (38) Kellibara I [13]), Lips and the convent of the Anargyroi were to be [7] "separate in unity."

40. ANARGYROI

2. Relationship with the Convent of Lips

The empress charts new ground here in determining the relationship between the convents of Lips and of the Anargyroi. Essentially, the two institutions were to share customs [5] and cooperate in matters of mutual interest [7] but remain functionally independent of one another, a concept that was alien even to the various founders of the twelfth centuries who drew up typika based directly or indirectly on (22) Evergetis.

3. Other Constitutional Matters

As in their spiritual life, for constitutional matters the nuns of the convent of the Anargyroi were to adopt [5] the provisions found in (39) Lips. In particular, they should choose a superior for themselves and seek out a spiritual father whose instructions they should follow when he visited the nuns in the narthex of the church. Commemorations were also to be carried out [6] as in (39) Lips [30] for the empress' ancestors and descendants, "but simply, and not with such great expense." In the spirit of respecting the wishes of the previous founder, the nuns were to preserve [6] the commemorations he had provided for himself, his parents, and all those mentioned in his typikon.

D. Financial Matters

1. Financial Administration

The empress must have expected that the convent of the Anargyroi should follow the example of Lips in its financial administration. She specifies [5] that the steward should be either a eunuch or be chosen from among "otherwise respectable men." He was to receive a salary in cash and in commodities, less generous than that provided to his counterpart in (39) Lips [25]. As in (39) Lips [26], he would not be resident in the convent, but would visit on appointed days to conduct the necessary business with the nuns. The convent was to maintain a register of accounts (cf. (39) Lips [22]).

2. Endowment Properties

The properties donated by the previous founder that had once made up the foundation's endowment had been lost [2] during the Latin conquest. Moreover, the empress claims [2] that she "took charge of a foundation in ruins." She restored [1] the convent which was about to collapse and put a wall around it for security.⁸ Then she donated [2] consecrated objects "since it had none" as well as landed properties, creating a new endowment. There is a considerably damaged inventory [4] of the endowed properties in the document. Some of these properties were located in Constantinople, while others were outside the capital, including some near Chalcedon. The empress orders [3] that all were to be considered as the “private property of this convent alone,” that is to say, that the convent of the Anargyroi’s endowment was to be separate from that of Lips.

THIRTEENTH CENTURY

E. Overall Philosophy

A note that the provisions of the previous founder for donations of alms at the gate were to be preserved [6] is the only mention of institutional philanthropy. Nothing is said of such matters as relations with the ecclesiastical hierarchy or any special privileges for the founders’ relatives.

Notes on the Introduction

1. See Talbot, “Theodora Palaiologina,” p. 299.
2. See Talbot, “Theodora Palaiologina,” p. 301.
3. For this foundation, see Janin, Géographie, vol. 3, pp. 286–89; Eurydice Lappa-Zizikas, “Un chrysobulle inconnu en faveur du monastère des Saints Anargyres de Kosmidion,” T&M 8 (1981), 255–68; and Otto Volk, “Die byzantinischen Klosterbibliotheken von Konstantinopel, Thessalonike und Kleinasien” (Ph.D., diss. Munich, 1955), pp. 59–63.
4. So Talbot, “Theodora Palaiologina,” p. 300.
5. See Ihor Ševčenko, “Nicholas Cabasilas’ ‘Anti-Zealot’ Discourse: A Reinterpretation,” DOP 11 (1957), 80–171, with the discussion below in Chapter Nine, E. Historical Context, 4.
6. Cf. (39) Lips [21] through [26].
7. (39) Lips [15], [20], [24], [36].
8. Cf. (27) Kecharitomene [73], [74], [79].

Bibliography

- Aran, Berge, “The Nunnery of the Anargyres and the Atik Mustafa Pasha Mosque,” JÖB 26 (1977), 247–53.
- Beck, Hans-Georg, Kirche und theologische Literatur im byzantinischen Reich (Munich, 1959), p. 696.
- Janin, Raymond, La géographie ecclésiastique de l’empire byzantin, vol. 3: Les églises et les monastères [de Constantinople], 2nd ed. (Paris, 1969), pp. 285–86.
- Mathews, Thomas, and Hawkins, E. J. W., “Notes on the Atik Mustafa Pasa Camii in Istanbul and Its Frescoes,” DOP 39 (1985), 125–34.
- Talbot, Alice-Mary, “Empress Theodora Palaiologina, Wife of Michael VIII,” DOP 46 (1992), 295–303, esp. 300.

Translation

[Concerning the convent of the Holy Anargyroi.]¹

[1.] (= ed. [55]) . . . different rulers have appropriated for themselves different monastic complexes, but my majesty exerted herself with regard to this convent, as no one ever before; I restored it properly when it was about to collapse, walled it all around for security, and donated gifts of property. As soon as I became involved with the convent, I decided to set forth a rule for the nuns therein concerning their way of life, and, to the best of my ability, to instruct them in fitting

40. ANARGYROI

[conduct], but not to revoke the previously ordained typikon and instructions for the convent. For may it never [p. 137] befall me (not only with regard to action or wishes of any sort in the religious sphere, but in the secular sphere as well) totally to annul or revoke anything. For I myself have heard the words of the apostle that it is not right to supersede or “annul a covenant” (Gal. 3:15, 17) of the departed; but if the divine herald [St. Paul] ordains this with respect to simple testaments, it is altogether evident that he wishes to confirm those testaments made according to God. It is not therefore for such a purpose, but for [spiritual] renewal, to tell the truth, and for a second exposition of the property and the proper course of action and mode of life.

[2.] (= ed. [56]) For the properties which were donated to the convent by the logothetes tou dromou were lost in the destruction of Constantinople (or rather of the Roman Empire), and, as if it were dead from that time until now, they have been divided up and fallen into other hands. The rule of spiritual life which he composed has been weakened with the rest, and, even though it has not completely disappeared, it has been ignored until now. For I would venture to say that the convent erected by him could [now] be recognized as a convent [only] by certain small vestiges and faint traces.²

For these reasons I decided to set down anew rules for the [convent], inasmuch as I took charge of a monastery in ruins, as I said, and contributed treasures to it, since it possessed nothing, and have donated estates. Although I have also exerted myself with regard to the convent [of Lips], which is honored with the name of my all-holy Lady and Mother of God, in the way which I have already mentioned, and have accomplished such as I have made clear, I have not altered my intentions with regard to this [convent of Sts. Kosmas and Damian], nor did the same thing happen to me which usually happens to those who become entranced with later undertakings and neglect earlier commitments. For even though I have taken responsibility for this convent, I have not cast aside that one, nor slackened my purpose with regard to it. Therefore since I have written down instructions for the convent [of Lips] as I intended, I will [now] make known my wishes with regard to this convent [of the Anargyroi].

[3.] (= ed. [57]) It is my will and command (for I give this priority) that this [convent of the Anargyroi] be separate and independent, not attached to any [convent] whatsoever, not only those inside or outside Constantinople, [p. 138] but not even the one built or rather restored by my imperial majesty [the convent of Lips], and considered mine no less than this one, and so esteemed that it was chosen for the final resting place of the body of my daughter,³ who has predeceased me, and for myself, and for my honorable mother,⁴ and absolutely all my descendants who wish it. It is also my desire that the estates and fields of this convent [of the Anargyroi] appear and be considered as the private property of this convent alone. They are as follows:

[4.] (= ed. [58]) From the . . . [lacuna] . . . located in the Thracesian theme, . . . [lacuna of at least one folio]⁵ . . . also honored with the name of my surpassingly pure Lady, the Mother of God, and the [monastery?] at Oulas, honored with the name of my Lord, Christ the Savior, which possess a chrysobull determining each of their properties; in like manner the [property] within Constantinople and in the environs which is controlled and owned up to the present time by the convent of the miracle-working saints Kosmas and Damian, i.e., a piece of arable land inside the city of 640 modioi, a vineyard of 65 modioi, a garden at Blanga with the pasturage there; outside [the city] at Philopation arable land of 1000 modioi; at Daphnoudion the estate of St. Leontios with the pasturage belonging to it, the fair and the land called the Apotheke; at Marnakiou in Chalcedon dependent peasants worth 40 nomismata, and arable land of 452 modioi, a vineyard of Ambeles of 9 modioi, another, of Aoinares, of 18 modioi; in two places at Galata a field of 30 modioi and of Barelina of 10 modioi, in which is a bathing place with poor people squatting nearby; at Charax 240 olive trees in different places, arable land of 250 modioi, and four dependent peasants worth six nomismata.

THIRTEENTH CENTURY

[5.] (= ed. [59]) I want the nuns of this convent to adhere to the same way of life [as at Lips], and thus they should choose the superior, thus they should seek out and accept a spiritual father with a pure heart, and should joyfully fulfill his instructions, as has already been laid down, when he visits the convent and [p. 139] meets with [the nuns] in the narthex. The assignment of duties should follow the same rule, but this convent should have [only] two priests, who should receive annually the same number of gold pieces and modioi of wheat and measures of wine, for celebrating in turn the holy liturgy three times a week, not counting special feast days and Sundays. Similarly the steward should be chosen from among eunuchs or otherwise respectable men, and should receive as pay 30 gold pieces, 50 modioi of wheat, 50 of barley, and 50 measures of wine. The register of accounts and the time of his visit for this purpose is to be maintained as previously indicated, as well as the excursions of the nuns and the admission of outsiders, the distribution and return of garments, the purchase and safekeeping of necessities; to sum up once and for all, it is my wish that my convents not differ from each other in any way, except in division of property and the number of nuns and certain other very minor aspects, which I will specify. In all other respects I wish the rule to be maintained without any alteration.

[6.] (= ed. [60]) What are the differences? The convent of Lips should celebrate the feast days of our Lord in a more magnificent manner, the Anargyroi more simply, and as is customary for convents everywhere. The former should celebrate a special feast twice a year, that is on the birthdays of the Mother of God and of [St. John] the Forerunner and Baptist; the latter should have a special feast day once a year, and considerably simpler, in commemoration of the holy Anargyroi.⁶ For the emperor will not visit the convent of the Anargyroi (unless he decides differently), nor many officials. The number of nuns at Lips is to be fifty, but only thirty at the Anargyroi, of whom eighteen will be responsible for the divine hymnody, the rest for the general housekeeping. It is my wish that commemorations be celebrated at Anargyroi for my ancestors and likewise for my descendants in the same manner as at Lips, but simply, and not with such great expense, but such as would not be onerous for the convent. I wish also that, in accordance with the instructions set forth by the first founder of the convent, I mean the logothetes tou dromou, commemorations be celebrated in his memory and in memory of his parents and of all those mentioned in his typikon, and that alms be given to the poor⁷ in front of the gates, according to the amount prescribed. [p. 140]

40. ANARGYROI

[7.] (= ed. [61]) I wish the two convents to differ only in these respects, and to correspond in every other way, being separate in unity, so to speak, and united but separate. For it will be possible for the superiors of the convents to consult with each other and to discuss what is fitting for the [convents] in their charge, when appropriate. No less, indeed even more so, would it be necessary for the stewards to consult about their responsibilities. It would be most profitable for them to meet with each other and to discuss their affairs. May God assist both the convents alike and lend a helping hand, so that the nuns therein may have an untroubled existence here on earth and fulfill their vows, and in the world to come may not be deprived of the blessings which have been prepared for them, to the glory of God the Father, his only-begotten Son, and the co-eternal and life-giving Spirit.

“Christ, thou didst remove an excellent vine with splendid bunches not from the dark Egyptian . . . [lacuna]” (cf. Ps. 80:8).

Notes on the Translation

Editors' note: The assistance of our translator, Alice-Mary Talbot, is gratefully acknowledged for the notes to this document.

1. The beginning of the typikon is missing; Delehaye has supplied the chapter heading.
2. Or reading móne instead of moné, and translate “could [now] be recognized only by certain small vestiges . . .”
3. Probably Anna, who died sometime before 1301; see (39) Lips [42] and Talbot, “Theodora Palaiologina,” p. 299.
4. Eudokia Angelina; see (39) Lips [42] and Talbot, “Theodora Palaiologina,” p. 295.
5. This lacuna has been proposed by the translator between fols. 66v and 67r of the ms.
6. Feast of Sts. Kosmas and Damian, November 1.
7. penesi; Delehaye omits.

Document Notes

- [1] Relationship to the prior typikon. For the preservation of certain provisions of an earlier typikon, see also (33) Heliou Bomon [51]; for the argument for non-interference in a founder's testamentary provisions, see also (37) Auxentios [15].
- [2] Fate of the foundation. For other foundations ruined during the Latin occupation of Constantinople, see (38) Kellibara I [12] and (46) Akropolites [2].
- [3] Independent status. For other assertions of institutional independence in the thirteenth century, see (34) Machairas [21]; (35) Skoteine [20]; (36) Blemmydes [1]; (37) Auxentios [2]; (38) Kellibara I [15]; and (39) Lips [1]. For the burials at Lips, see (39) Lips [42], with discussions in Macridy, “Monastery of Lips,” pp. 269–72, and Mango and Hawkins, “Additional Notes,” pp. 301–3.
- [4] Inventory of endowment properties. For contemporary inventories of this sort, see (35) Skoteine [31] ff., (37) Auxentios [17] (missing); (39) Lips [44], [45]; and (57) Bebaia Elpis [121] ff.
- [5] Administrative dispositions. See parallel provisions in (39) Lips [11], [12] (spiritual father); [22], [23], [24] (officials); [6] (number of priests); [25] (steward); [22] (accounts); [15] (visitation procedures); [36] (communal wardrobe); and [24] (procurements).
- [6] Differences with the typikon of Lips. See parallel provisions in (39) Lips [37], [38] (feasts); [39] (imperial visitations); [4] number of nuns; and [30], [42] (commemorations).

THIRTEENTH CENTURY

[7] Relationship with the convent of Lips. See similar provisions for consultations on fiscal matters in (31) Areia [M6]; the constitutional relationship between the two convents in this “union” is different from that envisioned in (38) Kellibara I [14].

CHAPTER EIGHT

Later Private Religious Foundations

“Therefore, by our Lord and Savior Jesus Christ, by the blessed hopes for which you renounced the world and the ruler of the world, do not disobey my wishes and request. For my desires are not burdensome, nor do they require any expenditure of funds, as you yourselves can calculate.” (46) Akropolites [8]

“After the election, he should go off to the most fortunate voivode, our patron, and be formally installed by him as superior.” (52) Koutloumousi [B18]

“For according to the one hundred and thirty-first novel of Justinian, the commandments of the founders have authority in their own monasteries, as long as they do not contradict the divine and holy commandments, but are in agreement with them.” (54) Neilos Damilas [8]

This chapter includes fourteen documents that illustrate the history of private religious foundations in the last centuries of the Byzantine Empire. The documents were composed principally by monks, except for (46) Akropolites and (47) Philanthropos, which have lay authorship. All were written for monasteries except for (47) Philanthropos and (54) Neilos Damilas, which regulate convents. Three, (44) Karyes, (46) Akropolites, and (48) Prodromos, regulate the affairs of monastic dependencies (metochia). Unlike their counterparts in Chapter Nine, none of the foundations for which these documents were written are described as independent foundations, except for (44) Karyes, which is included here since its monastery was a dependency and thus not “independent” in the usual sense of the term. The possibility cannot be excluded, however, that some of the other foundations may also have been independent institutions even though they are not specifically designated as such in these documents.

Chronologically, these documents range from the early twelfth through the early fifteenth centuries, thus several predate the earliest documents included in our collection in Chapter Seven, while one, (45) Neophytos, is a thirteenth-century contemporary. The majority (8) of the documents in this chapter date from the fourteenth century. (54) Neilos Damilas alone represents the fifteenth century. The documents of the fourteenth and fifteenth centuries in this chapter are the contemporaries of their independent counterparts in Chapter Nine, which follows.

The foundations for which these documents were written were dispersed throughout the provinces of the Byzantine Empire and beyond. Only two documents, (46) Akropolites and (47) Philanthropos, hail from Constantinople. There is a group of four documents from Mount Athos,¹ and three others from elsewhere in Greece.² (43) Kasoulon, while written in Greek for a Greek monastery, comes from Norman Italy. (45) Neophytos comes from thirteenth-century Frankish Cyprus and (54) Neilos Damilas comes from fifteenth-century Venetian Crete. (42) Sabas most likely comes from the Crusader Kingdom of Jerusalem in the twelfth century, while another document associated with this area, (50) Gerasimos, if it is genuine, must date from the early fourteenth century, long after the Muslim reconquest. Thus, in addition to the overwhelmingly provincial orientation of this group of documents, five of them come from outside the boundaries of the Byzantine empire itself. This is a reflection not only of the empire's diminished political authority but also of the strength of Byzantine monastic institutions elsewhere despite foreign rule.

¹ (41) Docheiariou, (44) Karyes, (48) Prodromos, and (51) Koutloumousi.

CHAPTER EIGHT

A. Typology of the Documents

Six documents are self-described testaments,³ while another six are typika.⁴ (52) Choumnos contains both a testament and a typikon. (54) Neilos Damilas, though a single document, describes itself as being both “Testament and Typikon.” It should be noted, however, that one of the testaments, (45) Neophytos, is actually structurally more like a typikon. In fact he uses the terms diatheke (testament), diataxis (rule), and typikon interchangeably. (47) Philanthropos is represented only by a sixteenth-century excerpt, while (51) Kouloumousi, like (25) Fragala in Chapter Five, is preserved in three different versions. (48) Prodromos [14] contains a brief inventory, while a lengthy one by the author of (54) Neilos Damilas is preserved separately and is translated here as an appendix to that document. (45) Neophytos incorporates twenty of the author's disciplinary canons as well as others attributed by him to Basil of Caesarea. (43) Kasoulon, which in its published text deals only with dietary matters, and (53) Meteora, a brief “table of contents”⁵ encapsulated in a hagiographical text, probably derive from longer documents now apparently lost.

B. Characteristics of Later Private Religious Foundations

There are few apparent common concerns among the authors of these documents, no doubt as much because of the great expanse of time encompassed by the texts in this chapter as the usual tendency of private founders to legislate for their foundations pretty much as they pleased with few external or traditional restraints (cf. the attitude expressed in (54) Neilos Damilas [8], as quoted above).

1. Small Size

Byzantine monasteries were rarely very large in the medieval period, and those private foundations represented here generally seem to have been smaller than their independent counterparts in the other chapters of our collection. Among those documents that indicate the size of the foundations for which they were written, (45) Neophytos [9]'s foundation is largest with fifteen to eight-

² (49) Geromeri, (52) Choumnos, and (53) Meteora.

³ (45) Neophytos, (46) Akropolites, (48) Prodromos, (49) Geromeri, (50) Gerasimos, and (51) Kouloumousi.

⁴ (41) Docheiariou, (42) Sabas, (43) Kasoulon, (44) Karyes, (47) Philanthropos, and (53) Meteora.

⁵ See Catia Galatariotou, “Byzantine Ktetorika Typika: A Comparative Study,” REB 45 (1987), 77–138, esp. 80–81.

LATER PRIVATE RELIGIOUS FOUNDATIONS

teen monks, a number greater than the founder had originally intended to permit. (52) Choumnos's monastery likely had at least a few more monks than the thirteen who are specifically mentioned in the document. Both (44) Karyes [2] and (50) Gerasimos [3] were written for tiny monasteries with no more than three to four monks each.

2. Institutionally and Ideologically Conservative

The documents written for these foundations are generally more conservative in their usages than their contemporary counterparts in the other chapters in this collection. Thus (41) Docheiariou, a testament, is closer in form and function to (1) Apa Abraham in the seventh century than to a much more nearly contemporary testament like (25) Fragala. (45) Neophytos was written about the same time as (34) Machairas, but, unlike the latter document, has only a vague association with the institutions of the monastic reform movement. Similarly, (54) Neilos Damilas, a contemporary of (60) Charsianeites, which was written for an independent foundation, is the more traditional of the two documents. The documents in this chapter are also more idiosyncratic, e.g., the peculiar structure of (52) Choumnos, the stern dietary provisions of (43) Kasoulon, and the strongly individualized character of (45) Neophytos.⁶

As might be expected from a group presumably made up of texts from more traditional private religious foundations, the majority of these documents show few traces of the influence of the Evergetian monastic reform movement. A sizable minority, however, are loosely linked to (22) Evergetis, either directly or (more likely) through various intermediaries. These exceptions are (45) Neophytos, which incorporates a fair number of important Evergetian customs, (47) Philanthropos, which actually quotes from (27) Kecharitomene or a related document in the Evergetian tradition, and (53) Meteora, which accepts some of the principles of (22) Evergetis and echoes its language. Only with (47) Philanthropos, however, is there a textual link to any of the Evergetian documents.

3. Tolerance for Alternative Forms of Monasticism

Some of the authors of our documents, including those who wrote (45) Neophytos, (47) Philanthropos, and (53) Meteora (i.e., those most under Evergetian influence) as well as (52) Choumnos [B19], [B20] and (54) Neilos Damilas [3] strongly championed the essential principles of cenobitic life, sometimes including (as in (52) Choumnos [B7]), the rejection of imposed monks (katapemptoi), but others, like the author of (51) Koutloumoussi [A9], were forced to make compromises for various reasons, such as securing patronal assistance, and the coexistence of hesychastic and cenobitic monasticism is taken for granted in (42) Sabas. The author of (45) Neophytos [17], himself a recluse, apparently envisioned friendly relations with kelliotic monks at his foundation, and for a time the author of (54) Neilos Damilas [6] allowed his nuns to live an idiorhythmic lifestyle. Even the militantly pro-cenobitic author of (53) Meteora [1] tolerated kelliotic monks already present at his foundation when he introduced the cenobitic regime.

4. Distaste for Financial Matters

The general lack of interest in financial affairs is a striking contrast to the interest in these matters

⁶ For which see Catia Galatariotou, The Making of a Saint: The Life, Times and Sanctification of Neophytos the Recluse (Cambridge, 1991).

CHAPTER EIGHT

shown by contemporary independent foundations. The author of (45) Neophytos [10] records his reluctance to acquire landed property for the monastery and disowns responsibilities for the expected consequences. The author of (52) Choumnos rejects [B11] the notion of seeking out novices who might contribute valuable entrance gifts, though he also advises [B22] his successor to take the foundation's economic well-being more seriously than he himself had done.

With varying degrees of enthusiasm, the authors of (45) Neophytos [C6], (52) Choumnos [B4], and (54) Neilos Damilas [10] all endorse the practice of manual labor by their monks. As far as other economic activities were concerned, both (47) Philanthropos [2] and (53) Meteora [4] (though not (54) Neilos Damilas [7]) display the anti-entrepreneurial bias of certain strains of medieval Byzantine monasticism that dates back to Basil of Caesarea.

5. Varying Attitudes towards the Ecclesiastical Hierarchy

(45) Neophytos [15] acknowledges the necessity of obtaining the local bishop's permission for hearing monks' confessions, and in (50) Gerasimos [4] the author seems to have enjoyed good relations with the local hierarchy. Other authors, however, show the reluctance, typical of private benefactors, to recognize the rights of the ecclesiastical hierarchy. The author of (54) Neilos Damilas ignores the rights of the ecclesiastical hierarchy completely while asserting [8] his own right to do as he pleased in legislating for his foundation.

6. Rigorist Approaches to Monastic Discipline

Rigorist observances and customs were popular among the authors of many documents. In addition to the aforementioned stringent diet favored in (43) Kasoulon and the penal canons endorsed in (45) Neophytos [CB1] ff., we find a discussion of appropriate sanctions for violent monks in (42) Sabas [5], voluntary dietary austerities in (45) Neophytos [C4], hostility to the conventions of secular music in (46) Akropolites [7] and (54) Neilos Damilas [12], a prohibition of bathing (also not explicitly permitted elsewhere) in (45) Neophytos [C9], and the punishments for those nuns who missed parts of the divine office in (54) Neilos Damilas [10].

7. Features Shared with Contemporary Independent Foundations

Liturgically, some authors, such as those of (45) Neophytos [12] and (53) Meteora [11], observe the trend noted among the thirteenth-century authors in Chapter Seven of relying on external typika. Constitutionally, the "leading monks" have important governing roles in (45) Neophytos [C11] and in (52) Choumnos [B4]. External protectors are found in (50) Gerasimos [4]; a patron is acknowledged as founder (ktetor) in (51) Koutloumousi [A4] and other benefactors receive honors in (49) Geromeri [15] and in (52) Choumnos [A18], [A20], [A26]. Institutional philanthropy, except for those foundations that were on pilgrimage routes (for which see (42) Sabas [8] and (45) Neophytos [20]), was generally not an important part of the lives of the foundations discussed in this chapter.

The broad, long-term impact of the monastic reform seems to have led even the patrons of private foundations to scale back their expectations of patronal privileges. Moreover, in the early fourteenth century, (46) Akropolites [6] shows evidence of the increasing insistence by contemporaries on linking the exercise of patronal rights to tangible assistance to the institution in question; this is the principle that led to the dispute between the author of (51) Koutloumousi and his patron later on in the same century.

LATER PRIVATE RELIGIOUS FOUNDATIONS

Two of the documents written for institutions showing the most palpable impact of the monastic reform, (47) Philanthropos and (53) Meteora, can claim a place in the Neo-Evergetian revival of the Palaiologan era, along with the documents, mostly of imperial or patriarchal authorship, written for contemporary independent institutions like (37) Auxentios, (39) Lips, (55) Athanasios I, (56) Kellibara II, (57) Bebaia Elpis, (58) Menoikeion, and (60) Charsianeites.

8. Differences with Previous Private Religious Foundations

In some respects, these later private religious foundations differed from those discussed earlier in Chapter One. Instead of relying on a single patron-owner, like the author of (19) Attaleiates in the late eleventh century, our monastic authors preferred to rely upon either a distant patron (as in (50) Gerasimos [2] and (51) Koutloumoussi) or several local ones (as in (49) Geromeri and (52) Choumnos). The monastic communities were also keen to embrace self-help, as in (49) Geromeri [2] and (51) Koutloumoussi [A4].

C. Historical Context

1. Traditional Institutions in the Era of the Monastic Reform

Were it not so institutionally and structurally conservative, (41) Docheiariou, the first document in this chapter, might well have claimed a place among its contemporaries in Chapter Six, all documents written for independent monasteries. As it is, the only trace of possible reform influence on this text is its prohibition [5] of the alienation of the foundation's property. It is easier to understand why the monastic reform had no apparent impact on the famous Jerusalem monastery for which (42) Sabas was written, apparently some time in the twelfth century during the life of the Crusader Kingdom of Jerusalem. The companion liturgical typikon for this foundation (not translated in this collection) was to gain a considerable following, initially on the periphery of the empire, as (20) Black Mountain [3] and (21) Roidion [B20] demonstrate, then in Byzantium itself in institutions with links to the Holy Land (see (24) Christodoulos [A17]), in Norman Sicily (see (26) Luke of Messina [10]), and in Frankish Cyprus (see (34) Machairas [75]). Eventually the Sabaitic liturgical typikon became in Palaiologan times the most popular guide to liturgical and dietary observances, displacing its earlier Studite and Evergetian rivals.⁷

(43) Kasoulon likewise comes from beyond the frontiers of the empire, having been composed in 1160 in southern Italy under Norman rule nearly a century after Byzantium had definitively lost control of this area. The isolation of the foundation for which it was written allowed its leaders to develop their own tradition of dietary observances that was considerably more austere than that practiced in contemporary twelfth-century monasteries in Byzantium under Evergetian influence. Here again, however, the customs embraced by a document that at first seems like the product of a backwater environment came eventually to influence developments in Byzantium itself, as (55) Athanasios I [4] illustrates (see Chapter Nine).

⁷ Among the documents in our collection, see (37) Auxentios [10]; (39) Lips [24], [29], [30], [31], [32]; (56) Kellibara II [1]; (57) Bebaia Elpis [78], [80]; (58) Menoikeion [4], [16]. For the development, see Robert Taft, "Mount Athos: A Late Chapter in the History of the Byzantine Rite," DOP 42 (1988), 179–94, esp. 189 ff.

CHAPTER EIGHT

2. Survival of Non-Cenobitic Forms of Monasticism

In Byzantium itself, traditional private religious foundations seem to have kept alive alternatives to cenobitic monasticism that had been ignored or even repressed by the mainstream reform tradition of the great independent monasteries during the twelfth century. Thus towards the end of the twelfth century we have from Mount Athos (44) Karyes, a document drawn up to govern [2] the “distinctive form of solitary life” that the founder, Sabbas the Serbian, envisioned for a dependency of a larger monastery. The example of influential foundations from outside the empire’s boundaries that were unencumbered by the reform tradition’s disdain for cenobitic alternatives (especially the Palestinian (42) Sabas [7]) may have lent support to domestic experiments, such as that envisioned in (24) Christodoulos [A24] as early as the late eleventh century. By the early thirteenth century, other founders outside the empire’s boundaries like the Cypriot author of (45) Neophytos [17] seem to have aimed at reviving a pre-reform kelliotic tradition of having carefully regulated establishments of solitary monks subordinated to a larger cenobitic institution. Even (34) Machairas [152], a contemporary Cypriot typikon for an independent monastery, lends careful endorsement to this trend.

Thus, just as institutions external to the empire came eventually to set the standard for its liturgical and dietary observances, so also many of these same institutions lent support to an attractive alternative model to the independent monasteries that were organized on an exclusively cenobitic basis. Surely the shattering of the Byzantine Empire’s political unity during the thirteenth century powerfully stimulated this development, since the great reform monasteries, whether supported by extensive landed endowments (as (28) Pantokrator or (29) Kosmosoteira were) or also by imperial subventions (as (33) Heliou Bomon and (34) Machairas were) prospered best of all under conditions of political and economic stability.

The development of an idiorhythmic form of monasticism, in which monks retain personal property, earn their own livings, and reside and eat separately from one another in their own cells, was a particular feature of Byzantine monasticism in the Palaeologan era. Much more so than kelliotic monasticism, it represented a basic repudiation of the ideals of cenobiticism, and in the post-Byzantine era it would become the predominant form of monasticism on Mount Athos.⁸

3. The Palaiologan Revival of Cenobiticism

A revival of the prestige of cenobitic monasticism had to await the reconstitution, partial though it was, of the political unity of the empire following Michael VIII Palaiologos’ recovery of Constantinople in 1261. This is reflected in our documents first by (47) Philanthropos in the first quarter of the fourteenth century, a heavily Evergetian-influenced text that appropriately owes its survival to its inclusion in a post-Byzantine collection of the mid-sixteenth century when once again cenobiticism found itself fighting for survival against idiorhythmic alternatives because of the dramatically unfavorable political circumstances of Ottoman rule. The slightly later (48) Prodromos is instructive, particularly in comparison to (44) Karyes—the late twelfth-century text mentioned above as a model of solitary life in an “independent” dependency of a larger monastery. In (48) Prodromos, the monks of the mother house of Docheiariou exercised a much tighter control of the dependency in question, which they funded and from which they received agricultural dues. Moreover, the dependency was staffed by a small community of monks rather than by a solitary as in (44) Karyes.

⁸ See below, Chapter Nine, D.6; for idiorhythmic monasticism on Mount Athos, see (59) Manuel II and Ph. Meyer, Die Haupturkunden für die Geschichte der Athosklöster (Leipzig, 1894), 57–64.

LATER PRIVATE RELIGIOUS FOUNDATIONS

These developments were paralleled by the creation or restoration of prestigious cenobitic monasteries under imperial patronage in the late thirteenth and early fourteenth centuries that were organized as independent foundations such as those for which (37) Auxentios, (38) Kellibara I, (39) Lips, and (40) Anargyroi were written (see Chapter Seven). Yet as we have seen, even (37) Auxentios [11], while proclaiming the superiority of cenobitic monasticism as being in accord with “the law of nature,” permits coexisting settlements of solitary monks.

4. The Palaiologan Patriarchal Reform Program

Beginning with the two terms of office of Athanasios I (1289–93 and 1303–1309), the patriarchs of Constantinople began to show extraordinary assertiveness both in upholding monastic discipline and curbing the prerogatives of private patrons.⁹ Among the documents in this chapter, (46) Akropolites, with its author’s tortured defense of his entitlement to patronal rights established by his father over the foundation in question, best illustrates the success the patriarchs had achieved in the last named undertaking by the first quarter of the fourteenth century.

5. Impact of the Political Fragmentation of the Byzantine World

During the balance of the fourteenth century, as the prestige and the territorial integrity of the Byzantine Empire steadily diminished, the authors of the rest of our documents in this chapter sought patronage and protection wherever they could find it. In 1339, Neilos Erichiotes, who significantly had earlier spent 31 years as an ascetic in the Holy Land,¹⁰ drew up his testament, (49) Geromeri, in which he acknowledges the patronage of members of the local nobility as well as of John II Orsini (1323–1336/7), despot of Epiros, and his wife Anna Palaiologina. In the Holy Land itself, the testament of (50) Gerasimos provides for the transmission of a small monastery said once to have been the personal property of the late Anna Anachoutlou (1341–42), ruler of Trebizond, but more recently having been supported by the author’s predecessor as superior and now entrusted to the superior of a Georgian monastery as the foundation’s administrator. Most interesting of all, (51) Koutlounousi shows its author, Chariton, a fervent believer in cenobitic monasticism, anguishing over what disciplinary concessions he should make to the appointees (katapemptoi) of his patron, the Vlach voivode John Vladislav, in order to obtain indispensable financial support. At about the same time, the author of (52) Choumnos was relying upon local members of the nobility around Thessalonike to support the cenobitic Nea Mone, apparently in the absence of a traditional landed endowment of scattered income-producing properties.

6. Cenobitic Transformations on the Periphery of the Empire

Towards the end of the fourteenth century, Athanasios the Meteorite made an attempt to reorga-

⁹ For the reform program of this patriarch, see (55) Athanasios I, with John Boojamra, Church Reform in the Late Byzantine Empire: A Study for the Patriarchate of Athanasios of Constantinople (Thessaloniki, 1982), and idem, The Church and Social Reform: The Policies of Patriarch Athanasios of Constantinople (New York, 1993).

¹⁰ For his earlier career, see Donald Nicol, The Despotate of Epiros, 1267–1479 (New York, 1984), 244.

CHAPTER EIGHT

nize his monastery of the Metamorphosis along cenobitic grounds. As noted above, he was obliged in (53) Meteora [1] to allow kelliotic monks who refused to adopt cenobiticism to remain on site, even though his Evergetian-influenced rule is informed by one of the most uncompromising visions of cenobitic life in our collection. Some decades later in the early fifteenth century in Venetian Crete, the author of (54) Neilos Damilas also successfully sponsored a transformation from an idiorhythmic to a cenobitic lifestyle for his community of nuns, though, unlike Athanasios in (53) Meteora [4], he permitted his nuns to continue to engage in commercial transactions.

41. Docheiariou: Rule of Neophytos for the Monastery of St. Michael the Archangel of Docheiariou on Mount Athos

Date: ca. 1118¹

Translator: Robert Allison

Edition employed: Nicolas Oikonomides, Actes de Docheiariou (= Archives de l’Athos 13) (Paris, 1984), 91–97, with text at 94–97.

Manuscript: Original document²

Other translations: None

Institutional History

A. Origins of the Monastery

The monastery of Docheiariou appears to date back to the early years of the eleventh century when, sometime before 1013, a foundation was dedicated to St. Nicholas at Daphne, probably by John the Treasurer or Cellarer (docheiarios), who was an official of another Athonite monastery, perhaps Xeropotamou.³ At a later date, probably between 1051 and 1056, the original location on the southwest coast of the Athonite peninsula was abandoned in favor of a new site in the interior. Towards the end of the eleventh century, the foundation was moved to a third site, on the coast, where a dependency dedicated to St. Michael was located. Circa 1083–1108, this location became the permanent home of the foundation.

B. Patronage of Neophytos

Hagiographic texts dating from the sixteenth century describe the activities of our author, the “second founder” Neophytos, crediting him with replacing the original church on the new site with a larger edifice, building a fortified enclosure with a large tower for its protection, and acquiring properties to assure the foundation an adequate income.⁴ Later, Neophytos was honored by his fellow Athonite monks by being chosen protos of the Holy Mountain. The Rule translated here confirms [2], [3] the essentials of Neophytos’ career as reported in the hagiographic tradition. Neophytos is also independently attested in a document from the Lavra monastery as superior of Docheiariou in 1108.⁵ Other documents from the monastery’s own cartulary note Neophytos’ acquisitions of landed properties in the western part of the Chalkidike.⁶

C. Subsequent History in Byzantine Times

Neophytos’ eventual successor, who apparently had not yet been identified at the time that our author drew up his Rule circa 1118, was Barnabas, who was serving as superior of Docheiariou in 1141.⁷ By then, the foundation had become one of the most important monasteries on Mount Athos. Aside from the fact that Docheiariou lost many of its properties in the Chalkidike in the turmoil that resulted from the Fourth Crusade, little else is known about the monastery until the beginning of the fourteenth century, at which time a number of documents from the foundation's cartulary begin to be preserved. By 1311, the Archangel Gabriel had joined St. Michael as a dedicatee of the foundation, which is described at that time as an imperial monastery.⁸ Oikonomides (Docheiariou, p. 13) believes that the monastery had no special relationship with the emperor, as this title usually implies, but rather that it had simply been the beneficiary of some imperial benefaction. As it had been in Neophytos's day, Docheiariou continued as a cenobitic monastery down to 1330/31, when a certain Neilos issued (48) Prodromos for one of the foundation's dependencies. By 1351–66, however, judging from an extended controversy over the personal property of a certain monk named Gregory Isbes, it appears that the idiorhythmic form of monasticism had made inroads here as elsewhere on Mount Athos.⁹ Towards the end of the fourteenth century, Docheiariou, again like the rest of Mount Athos, began to suffer from the depredations of Turkish pirates.¹⁰ Judging from various documents preserved in its cartulary, the later Palaiologan emperors, especially Manuel II Palaiologos (1391–1425), were solicitous of Docheiariou's welfare and property rights.¹¹

*D. Docheiariou under Ottoman Rule*¹²

Along with the rest of Mount Athos, Docheiariou passed under Ottoman rule, even before the fall of Thessalonike to Sultan Murad II in 1430. The Russian pilgrim Isaias of Chilandar visited the monastery in 1489. He reported that it housed one hundred twenty monks, but his identification of the foundation as a Serbian monastery suggests he confused it with the neighboring monastery of Xenophon.¹³ By the middle of the sixteenth century, the monastery was virtually deserted, and in 1560 the priest George of Adrianople, with the financial assistance of the Romanian prince Alexander and his wife Roxandra, was able to restore the monastery and reconstitute its endowment. Nearly all of the buildings currently on the site are post-Byzantine, and many date from the eighteenth century.¹⁴ During the Greek War of Independence (1821–31) Docheiariou once again lost nearly all its properties and many of its monks.

*E. The Foundation in Modern Times*¹⁵

Several important buildings were added in post-Byzantine times, including a katholikon built in the sixteenth century, a refectory erected in the late seventeenth century, and nine subsidiary chapels. There is also a library housed in the top floor of the defensive tower. With only ten idiorhythmic monks in 1980, Docheiariou ranks tenth in the hierarchy of monasteries on Mount Athos.

Analysis

Like (1) Apa Abraham nearly five hundred years earlier, this document represents the traditional private religious foundations of Byzantium in their purest form as the author employs this vehicle to transmit his monastery to his chosen successor (there is a space for his name in [4] that is left blank) just as he himself received [3] it from his uncle through a document of abdication. After the author's death, his successor is to become [5] lord and autocrat (kyrios kai autokrator) of the monastery, entitled to control all administrative affairs, properties, assets and privileges. Moreover, he is to be irremovable from office, with no exceptions noted. In return, the author obligates

41. DOCHEIARIOU

[5] his successor to perform the doxology, conduct the yearly patronal feast of St. Michael, commemorate deceased monks, care for the brothers, and preserve the “rules of the Mountain.”

A prohibition [5] on alienation of property is the only indication of influence that the ideology of the contemporary monastic reform movement may have had on our author. The monastery was not to be sold, nor any of its immovable properties alienated on any pretext “unless the greatest need requires it,” and then only after taking counsel with the entire brotherhood and gaining the approval of the protos of Mount Athos. Citing patristic and canonical precedent, the author instructs that movable furnishings of the monastery were also to be preserved, and even increased if possible.

In order to preserve the chain of private transmission, the author instructs [5] his successor to choose in turn “another exceedingly competent man” (i.e., a xenokourites) or a “worthy disciple” as his own successor, a practice that he claims is “as the divine ordinances declare and the rule of our Mountain has given as custom from the beginning.” Transmission to a lay relative, always a danger in traditional private foundations, is explicitly forbidden.

The author presupposes an unvarnished authoritarian model of leadership in ordering [6] the foundation’s monks to obey their new superior “as Christ himself.” They are not to “resist him, nor contradict him at all if possible even in the slightest matter.” Thus there is no attempt to utilize the monks, or—as in the contemporary Evergetian tradition—even a select group of them, as a useful check on the authority of the superior. Instead, the author prefers to rely [5] on the office of the protos and Athonite customs as the only restraints on his successor’s arbitrary use of his proprietary rights.

Notes on the Introduction

1. See Oikonomides, Docheiarou, p. 24.
2. Preserved at the Docheiariou monastery, presumably as dictated by the author, and signed by him; see Oikonomides, Docheiarou, p. 93.
3. For the problematic origins of the foundation, see Oikonomides, Docheiariou, pp. 3–9.
4. See discussion by Oikonomides, Docheiariou, pp. 9–10, cf. 3–4.
5. Lemerle, Lavra, pt. 1, doc. 57 (1108), p. 299.
6. Oikonomides, Docheiariou, docs. 3 (1112) and 4 (1117), pp. 60–89.
7. Lemerle, Lavra, pt. 1, doc. 61 (1141), p. 318; with Oikonomides, Docheiariou, pp. 10, 24.
8. Oikonomides, Docheiariou, doc. 11 (1311), pp. 116–19.
9. Oikonomides, Docheiariou, docs. 34, 35, 36 (all 1361), 38 (1366), pp. 205–14, 218–20.
10. Oikonomides, Docheiariou, docs. 48 (ca. 1381), 49 (1384), pp. 252–64.
11. Oikonomides, Docheiariou, docs. 52 (1409), 54 (1414), 55 (1416), pp. 269–70, 279–87.
12. S. Kadas, Mount Athos (Athens, 1979), p. 92.
13. Oikonomides, Docheiariou, p. 22.
14. Talbot and Cutler, “Docheiariou Monastery,” p. 643.
15. Kadas, Mount Athos, pp. 92–93.

Bibliography

- Ktenas, K., He en Hagio Orei Atho hiera, basilike, patriarchike kai stauropegiake Mone tou Docheiariou, hai pros to doulon ethnos hyperesia i autas (963–1921) (Athens, 1926).
- , “Ho Protos tou Hagiou Orous Atho kai he ‘Megale Mese’ e ‘Synaxis,’” EEBS 6 (1929), 233–81, esp. 253–57.

TWELFTH CENTURY

Oikonomides, Nicolas, "Hiera mone Docheiariou. Katalogos tou archeiou," Symmeikta 3 (1979), 197–263.
Papadopoulos, Stylianos, "Docheiariou, Mone," TEE, vol. 5, cols. 213–18.
Talbot, Alice-Mary, and Cutler, Anthony, "Docheiariou Monastery," ODB, pp. 642–43.

Translation

I, the worthless monk Neophytos, superior of the monastery of Docheiariou and protos of the Holy Mountain, validated this rule by my signature.

[1. Meditation on Death]

+ Death is a beneficial thing, a great collaborator working with men toward their betterment, even though perhaps it seems to be by nature the penalty for transgression. For nothing of the things given or being given to us by God is wholly without benefit, no matter how it be given. Nothing is wholly for destruction, nothing wholly for harm, even if somehow to the unintelligent and those altogether without imagination it is not perceived appropriately.

Now consider with me how the benefit is evident: for if kings, magistrates and rulers did not fear death, what outrage would they not commit? Or whom of their inferiors would they leave living? If whores and fornicators and seducers and other such evildoers did not clearly shudder at such a penalty and at the accounting for their life's conduct and at the just verdict of the incorruptible judge, when would they be converted from their wickedness? Or who, if miraculously transformed from these vices, would persevere safe from vice through the future? So the prophet spoke well concerning this and with inspiration when he said, "death is a man's relief" (Job 3:23).¹ For death is by nature nothing other than the separation of the soul from the body, and a passage from perishability to imperishability. Accordingly, since death was established for some such use, and was given us by God for our benefit, it is incumbent upon us to give careful consideration to matters related to it.

Already even old age itself, like some resounding trumpet which has taken position near us, re-echoes that such a mystery is at hand. By no means is it possible for us to evade its nets, mortals and creatures as we are and subject to change.

Therefore, the very creator and fashioner of our nature, the dispenser of life and Lord, deigned to drink this cup (cf. Matt. 26:39) through his mercy and love for us, wanting to show that death is not something to be avoided and averted, nor has it been bestowed by him for harm to our race, or for destruction of the soul.

[2. Introduction to the Rule]

Therefore, I, the worthless and most lowly monk Neophytos, having come many years ago by God's mercy to tend and govern the most noble monastery of Docheiariou, which from the beginning was founded and has been honored out of faith in the all-venerable and divine name of the archangel Michael; and having now been chosen to serve as protos on this Holy Mountain² [chosen] I think by God in accordance with his own ways, which he alone knows; I am composing the present written and signed, plain, clear and definite testament in the name of the great and almighty God Jesus Christ, the one [God] of the holy, consubstantial and life-giving Trinity, and in the name of his eternal Father and of the Holy Spirit, having prefixed by my own hand at the top of the text the sign of the precious and life-giving cross with my own name, being, by the grace of God, still in possession of mental faculties which are sound and unwavering and in every respect healthy and vigorous.

41. DOCHEIARIOU

In it I make disposition of the most holy [p. 95] and venerable monastery of Docheiariou, entrusted to me by God and my holy fathers, as the text will make clear. The text is as follows:

[3. Foundation History]

The said most venerable monastery of Docheiariou came to me in the beginning from the document of abdication of my blessed and most holy father and uncle.³ From that time to the present I possess and govern it. In it I have accomplished many labors, as the Lord who knows all hearts (cf. Acts 1:24; 15:8) recognizes, and as all men perceive who know me and who observe my zeal for every serious pursuit, even if I did nothing at all of what was perhaps owed or pleasing to the master of all. But still, what I have accomplished by the help of God and the approval and collaboration of his commander of the heavenly armies [Michael] prevails in full and manifest public view.⁴ For behold, I erected a large number of buildings and planted vineyards and constructed cells, and I added the most precious cloths, and holy silver vessels, and all-venerable icons and holy books similar to those which were already there, and I established additional movable and immovable properties and erected this most sacred and holy church of the commander of the heavenly host, Michael, from its very foundation, demolishing the former one, and I adorned it with every beauty within my power, and as such I presented it for all to see. Nevertheless, all these things are for the glory and praise of God, and not for my own vain satisfaction. With much toil and care I gathered much additional wealth as well as other kinds of material goods whose amounts and descriptions I have not been able to recount within the length of this document. I have made documents very enduring and secure, and whatever else the usefulness of this life demands.

[4. Designation of a Successor]

Accordingly, I wish and decree and will that after my departure from this life the most honorable monk lord _____⁵ shall succeed me in the rule of this monastery, whom I tonsured; whom after much consideration and profound investigation for the longest possible time I have judged to be both most competent and at the same time most worthy of such rule; and whom I am convinced will shepherd the flock of Christ as irreproachably and blamelessly as is humanly possible, and will direct and set in good order all of the affairs of the monastery just as in the present he observes me doing, or even much better; and to whom, as my successor and disciple, I address and recommend by way of counsel the following.

[5. Counsel to his Successor]

O brother in the Lord and dearest child of mine, since I left you behind as my successor by the providence of God and you are obligated after my passing to become lord and autocrat of the monastery of Docheiariou and to have control of all the affairs and properties as well as the assets and other privileges in it or having to do with it, that is, movable, immovable and animate [property]; and [since] there will never be [anyone] at all, in any period or time throughout your whole life, as long as you wish to hold this position, to remove you or intimidate you or in any way whatever threaten you or thrust you forth from it, it is necessary:

TWELFTH CENTURY

That, above every other thing, you will offer up to the Lord and to the archangel Michael in harmonious and orderly fashion the praise [doxology] which is due them. That you will observe inviolate his life-bearing commands, through which salvation is made available to men. That you perfect the virtues, as an inalienable treasure, through which the commandments are preserved. That you maintain the ordinances of the divine fathers. That you guard the rules of the Mountain.

Next, that you cherish and care for all the brothers as [you would] your own limbs, both those whom you take over after me, and those whom you yourself receive and tonsure, and that you guide them with all your zeal and power and keep them in harmonious order on the road to salvation, from both the model of your own life and [that] of the encouragement and admonition of the holy scriptures, for by this method everywhere it is shown that shepherds and teachers are from God, and they themselves are obligated to give an account of their charges.

Next, that you wholeheartedly care for all the immovable and tangible possessions, through which all men provide for the needs of their bodies, and [p. 96] completely attend to the erection of buildings, to the planting of vines, to the husbandry of fruit-bearing trees, and, to put it all simply, to everything contributing to the constitution and increase of the monastery.

In addition to this, you are also obligated to conduct yearly the joyous feast of the great commander of the heavenly host, Michael,⁶ and to commemorate unceasingly and pray for all the fathers and brothers who have labored in this monastery and then have passed away.

These [obligations you must observe] throughout your whole life. At whatever time you are on the verge of traveling out from the body and departing to the places of judgment beyond, you may not do anything unlawful against this monastery, whether perhaps to sell it off, or to alienate any of its immovable property at all, either for a favor, or for collateral⁷ or for removal⁸ unless the greatest need urgently requires it, but even then only with the authorization of the protos currently in office and the counsel of the entire brotherhood. The holy cloths and all the precious vessels which contribute to the adornment and sublime beauty of the church you must not only preserve completely inalienable, but you must be zealous to increase their number as much as it is possible to do so, just as the divine canons declare and above all the most wise Cyril.⁹

You shall transfer control of the monastery, in turn, to another exceedingly competent and zealous man, or to a worthy disciple of your own, just as the divine ordinances declare and the rule of our Mountain has given as the custom from the beginning. Only do not under any circumstances act otherwise, following [unworthy] human fashion.

But let this suffice as far as matters relating to you are concerned. This should be adequate. It is not fitting to prolong further my discourse of advice.

[6. Exhortation to the Monks]

But what of matters relating to the brothers? Shall we, then, leave these unarticulated? Should we give them over to silence? Certainly not. It is neither appropriate nor fitting. Come, then, let us offer to them some brief and most necessary exhortations in the manner of good counsel, employing requisite compassion.

O cherished brothers and spiritual children in the Lord, whom I begot in the manner of the theologian St. Paul (Phlm. 10–11; I Cor. 4:15), I give this advice to you, as to men who have elected to be saved and to walk the way of the saints, encouraging you in this above all else:

41. DOCHEIARIOU

Heed your superior and obey him as Christ himself our master. For you have, I know, a good conscience, wanting in all things to behave well. Do not resist him, nor contradict him at all if possible even in the slightest matter, since, indeed, he who resists or objects or contradicts him in any way whatever or causes him grief in some matter, or provokes him to anger, does all [these things] to God, inasmuch as he did it to the one given him by God in his stead to rule and shepherd you. To escape from the coming wrath is not possible for the sons of disobedience (cf. Col. 3:6; Rom. 11:32), since they have in fact set themselves against the ordinance of God. Demonstrating, accordingly, every obedience to the one appointed by God to be in authority over you, it is necessary for you to consider his orders outright divine law, doing and observing whatever he might tell you to do, so that by your obedience you may gain your souls (cf. Luke 21:19).

You must add to obedience both self-control toward all things and love toward each other, by wearing as a double cloak faith in God and hope, by pursuing in every way the path of our fathers who shone in discipline, and by applying yourselves to good works (cf. Tit. 3:8, 14), as you both saw and learned through my example, so that you may not be, in the Apostle's words, barren of fruit (II Pet. 1:8).

[7. Conclusion]

"Now I commend you," brethren and beloved children in the Lord, "to God and to the word of his grace, which is able to build you up and to give you an inheritance among all the sanctified" (cf. Acts 20:32). Commemorate my labors and my toil which I undertook, caring night and day for our holy monastery and for the betterment of each one of you, to the glory of our great God and Savior Jesus [p. 97] Christ and the honor of his commander, Michael, whose grace be with us all now and forever. Amen.

Notes on the Translation

Editors' note: The assistance of our translator, Robert Allison [RA], is gratefully acknowledged for the notes to this document.

1. Cf. John Chrysostom, Expositio in Ps. 110, PG 55, col. 280.
2. For Neophytos as protos of Mount Athos, see Papachryssanthou, Prôtaton, p. 133.
3. Presumably Neophytos' immediate predecessor Euthymios, founder of the monastery of St. Michael sometime in the last decades of the eleventh century; see Oikonomides, Docheiariou, p. 24.
4. Literally, "But nevertheless all the things which I have done prevail evident to all and manifest..." i.e., the fact that Neophytos' accomplishments have endured validates his supposition that he acted in accord with God's will. [RA]
5. Although the space for his name is left blank here, this would have been Neophytos' eventual successor Barnabas; see Oikonomides, Docheiariou, pp. 10, 24.
6. Feast of the Archangels Michael and Gabriel, November 8.
7. kyrosin, i.e., collateral for a loan, or perhaps confirmation for a donation received? The previous editor, Ktenas, reads instead akyrosin, "cancellation of indebtedness." [RA]
8. aphairesin, "removal," may mean disburdening the monastery of property either vacant or currently underutilized that might be expensive to maintain. [RA]
9. Cyril of Alexandria, Ep. 78 (59), PG 77, col. 364C.

TWELFTH CENTURY

Document Notes

- [1] Meditation on death. See also the reflections on this subject in (5) Euthymios [3]; (6) Rila [2]; (7) Latros Introduction; (10) Eleousa [1]; (24) Christodoulos [B1]; (25) Fragala [A6], [B6]; (30) Phoberos [1]; (34) Machairas [1]; (35) Skoteine [1]; (44) Karyes [1]; (45) Neophytos [2]; (48) Prodromos [1]; (49) Geromeri [2] ff.; (50) Gerasimos [1]; and (51) Koutloumoussi [A1], [C1].
- [2] Introduction to the Rule. For the history of the monastery of St. Michael, see Oikonomides, Docheiariou, pp. 7–11.
- [3] Foundation history. For the author's career and relationship with Docheiariou, see Oikonomides, Docheiariou, pp. 9–10.
- [4] Designation of a successor. See also the testamentary designation of successors in (1) Apa Abraham [1]; (10) Eleousa [11]; (24) Christodoulos [B3], [B5], [C1]; (25) Fragala [A7], [B7]; (45) Neophytos [16]; (48) Prodromos [6]; (49) Geromeri [14]; (50) Gerasimos [3]; and (52) Choumnos [A3]; cf. vaguer formulations in (3) Theodore Studites, (5) Euthymios [1], (13) Ath. Typikon [54], and (44) Karyes [4].
- [5] Rights and responsibilities of the successor. See similar treatments in (10) Eleousa [12]; (13) Ath. Typikon [35]; (22) Evergetis [17] and related documents; (24) Christodoulos [A19]; (25) Fragala [A10]; (37) Auxentios [4]; (38) Kellibara I [18]; (45) Neophytos [15]; (48) Prodromos [7]; (57) Bebaia Elpis [27] ff.; and (60) Charsianeites [B9].
- [6] Exhortation to the monks. See similar treatments in (3) Theodore Studites [25], [26], [27]; (7) Latros [11]; (14) Ath. Testament [20]; (22) Evergetis [16] and related documents; (24) Christodoulos [A28]; (25) Fragala [A9], [B9]; (32) Mamas [24]; (33) Heliou Bomon [24]; (37) Auxentios [5]; (39) Lips [9]; and (57) Bebaia Elpis [37] ff.
- [7] Request for liturgical commemoration. See similar testamentary requests in (1) Apa Abraham [7], (5) Euthymios [2], (6) Rila [20], (14) Ath. Testament [21], and (52) Choumnos [A22].

42. Sabas: Founder's Typikon of the Sabas Monastery near Jerusalem

Date: After 1100¹

Translator: Gianfranco Fiaccadori

Edition employed: Ed. Kurtz, BZ 3 (1894), 168–70.

Manuscript: Codex Sinaiticus 1096 (12th c.)²

Other translations: Russian, by A. Dmitrievsky, “Puteshestvie po vostoku,” TDKA (January 1890), 170–92, at 178–87; English, by L. Di Segni, in Joseph Patrich, Sabas, Leader of Palestinian Monasticism: A Comparative Study in Eastern Monasticism, Fourth to Seventh Centuries (Washington, D.C., 1995), pp. 274–75.

Institutional History

A. Foundation of the Monastery

The Great Lavra of St. Sabas, also known by its Arabic name of Mar Saba, was founded by its namesake, a Cappadocian ascetic,³ in 483 at a site nine miles southeast of Jerusalem in the generally dry Cedron River valley. His life and works are well known since he was the subject of a Life by Cyril of Skythopolis.⁴ Born in 439, Sabas became a disciple of the famous Palestinian monk Euthymios the Great, ca. 456. The Great Lavra supported one hundred fifty communal monks and seventy anchorites. During nearly fifty years as director of this monastic foundation, Sabas also founded or directed three other lavras, six cenobitic monasteries, and three philanthropic institutions.⁵ The so-called New Lavra owes its foundation in 507 to a breakaway group of Origenist monks, who controlled it until 555, shortly after the condemnation of their creed at the Council of Constantinople in 553. Subsequent foundations included the lavra Heptastomos in 512 and the lavra of Jeremias in 531. Sabas, a stalwart champion of Chalcedonian Christianity, died at the Great Lavra in 532.

B. Subsequent History of the Foundation in Medieval Times

Mar Saba survived the death of its founder and played an important part in the intellectual life of Palestine in the sixth century. The founder's biographer, Cyril of Skythopolis, took up residence in the New Lavra after the expulsion of the Origenist monks in 555, then moved to the Great Lavra in 557, where he died a short time later. John Moschos, author of the Spiritual Garden, one of the most popular works of ascetic literature, visited the monastery towards the end of the sixth century. Theodore of Sykeon was another famous visitor at this time.

The invasion of Palestine by the Sassanid king Chosroes II (591–628) in 614 provided an opportunity for Arab raiders to sack the monastery and massacre some forty-four monks, later venerated as martyrs. Yet unlike the majority of Palestinian lavras and monasteries, which never recovered from the disruptions accompanying the Persian invasion, Mar Saba was revived and went on to play an important part in the great theological controversies of the next two centuries during what is called the foundation's Golden Age, 614–843.⁶

TWELFTH CENTURY

The famous iconodule theologian John Damascene was a resident of the Lavra in the first half of the eighth century during the height of the Iconoclastic controversy. From this base, safely out of reach of the imperial authorities, John authored many polemical works against iconoclasm. His adoptive brother Kosmas the Hymnographer was also a Sabaite monk. Towards the end of the eighth century and in the early years of the ninth, Theodore the Studite looked to Palestine for both administrative and liturgical components of his own monastic reform (see above, (4) Stoudios, The Studite Monastic Reform, C). Sabaitic chants were imported for use at his Stoudios monastery in Constantinople. In the middle of the tenth century, Paul the Younger, author of (7) Latros [8], recommends the observance of rules for fasting set down in the “rule of Jerusalem,” a possible reference to an early version of the liturgical typikon of Mar Saba. Finally, the scriptorium of Mar Saba served as a center of manuscript production not only in this era but down to the eleventh and twelfth centuries.

Despite Mar Saba's intellectual achievements and influence during this era, the foundation had to contend with many serious threats to its survival. An outbreak of the plague decimated the monastery towards the end of the eighth century, and a great earthquake is reported by the author of the Life of St. Stephen the Thaumaturge, a contemporary Sabaite monk, to have led to a serious disruption of monastic life.⁷ These difficulties were followed by a massacre of the monks and the destruction of parts of the facility carried out by Bedouin raiders in 796.

The history of Mar Saba during the era of the Crusader Kingdom of Jerusalem (1099–1187) is not well known at present, yet it was most likely at this time that the surviving versions of the founder's and liturgical typika were drawn up. Earlier versions of the latter were likely in circulation on the periphery of the Byzantine Empire in the last decades of the eleventh century, judging from approving citations in such other monastic typika as (20) Black Mountain, (21) Roidion, and (24) Christodoulos (see Analysis below). After Saladin's reconquest of Jerusalem following the Battle of Hattin in 1187, there was another massacre of the monks at Mar Saba, and parts of the monastery were destroyed, though the church and tomb of St. Sabas were spared.

The prestige of Mar Saba's liturgical typikon in Byzantium itself was at its height in the thirteenth and fourteenth centuries. Yet sometime before 1440, it was abandoned by the surviving community of Greek monks, who could no longer endure the incessant raids of neighboring nomadic tribes. It stood deserted for nearly a hundred years.⁸

*C. Later History of the Foundation down to Modern Times*⁹

Life at Mar Saba may have been revived under the superior Joachim in 1540, who is said to have assembled a community of some fifty Greek monks. Another tradition has the monastery coming under Serbian control. Under Ottoman rule, Mar Saba received protective firmans from several sultans, including Suleiman I (1533 and 1537), Selim II (1568), Mehmet III (1601), and Ahmed I (1605). Selim II even permitted the monks to bear arms to defend themselves against local Muslim tribesmen. In 1623, however, burdened by debts and menaced with expropriation, the Serbians sought to sell the facility to the local Armenian Christian community. The Greek Orthodox patriarchate of Jerusalem, intervened, however, and successfully negotiated to buy Mar Saba in 1625.

42. SABAS

Frequent Bedouin raids continued to trouble the foundation under its new owners for the balance of the seventeenth century. In 1688, Dositheos, the Orthodox patriarch of Jerusalem, obtained permission from the Ottoman authorities to carry out a complete restoration of the facility. The eighteenth and the early decades of the nineteenth century, however, were also extremely troubled, marked by Bedouin incursions, pillages, and massacres. At the end of the nineteenth century, Vailhé (“Saint-Sabas,” p. 334) gloomily reported the lack of interest of the monks then resident at the foundation in scholarship or manual labor. Under the circumstances, therefore, the survival of Mar Saba down to our own times must be considered a prodigious achievement.

Surviving on the site are: the principal church of the Annunciation, dedicated by Sabas in 501 but much restored over the centuries; a church of St. Nicholas; the tomb of St. Sabas located between these two churches; a small chapel of St. John Damascene; and a refectory.¹⁰ The relics of St. Sabas, which had been taken to Venice in the Crusader era, were returned to Mar Saba by Pope Paul VI in 1965. As late as 1834, the monastery’s library had more than 1,000 manuscripts. Although many of these have since been dispersed to various European libraries, a rich collection still survives locally at the Greek patriarchate of Jerusalem.

Analysis

This brief founder’s typikon, written for a dual-nationality (Greek and Syriac) monastery, was (and remains) considerably less well known than the very famous liturgical typikon associated with this monastery that was recommended by eleven of the authors of the documents in our collection over the course of five centuries.¹¹ As one of the most famous monasteries in Christendom’s holiest destination for pilgrims, the Sabas lavra was in an ideal position for propagating its liturgical and dietary traditions. Of the three documents that represent other institutions that were apparently way-stations on the great pilgrimage route to Jerusalem or served as destinations in their own right, two, (21) Roidion [B2] and (34) Machairas [118], also endorse the Sabaitic liturgical typikon, and the third, (45) Neophytos [20], cf. [10] may have used it as well.

A. Lives of the Monks

The document does not specify the number of monks, but eunuchs and beardless youths were [1] inadmissible. A priest was specially assigned [3] for the performance of the vigil service in honor of the patron in the saint’s shrine. The community included [3], [7] both monks who lived together in the lavra and solitaries (called here hesychastai).¹² The monks were permitted [3] to leave the monastery once a month during the week for certain unspecified personal business, subject to the approval of either the superior or the ecclesiarch. The solitaries were to join [7] the community for vigils but not for the other commemorations of the saints. They were strictly forbidden to make appearances in the towns and villages. Iberians (Georgians), Syrians (Arab Christians), Franks (Latin Crusaders),¹³ presumably present in the monastery as visitors, were allowed [2] to sing the office and selected psalms, and were then to join the assembled brotherhood in the Great Church.

The discussion of violent disciplinary problems has no parallel in monastic foundation documents from Byzantium proper, though in the early twelfth century there was an increasing interest in penal discipline (cf. (34) Machairas [122] ff. and (45) Neophytos [CB1] ff.). Fighting was punished [5] with expulsion for those participants who refused to be reconciled with one another.

Those monks who got drunk, used abusive language, resorted to violence, or made (presumably disruptive) “associations and unions” were subject [6] to correction or expulsion. Monks caught cheating in their ministries were to be punished with confinement in their cells except at services and prayers.

Sexual precautions were stricter than elsewhere. In addition to the traditional (though by no means universal) exclusion [1] of eunuchs and youths from the community,¹⁴ the document denies women access to the main monastery or its principal dependency, even for prayer. Moreover, monks were generally to have no relations with women, not excluding serving as godfathers to them, or with nuns, not even for hearing their confessions.

B. Constitutional Matters

Although there is no discussion of the foundation’s own constitutional status, the denial of proprietary rights to the monks over individual cells suggests [4] a strong tendency to privatize institutional property. Monks could not bequeath to their disciples their cells either in the lavra or the dependency without the superior’s consent, nor, should they be promoted by the patriarch of Jerusalem to the rank of metropolitan, bishop, any other patriarchal office, or become the superior of another monastery, could they sell or donate them to someone else.

C. Financial Matters

A practical division of offices reserved [9] the office of superior for the Greek monks but left the offices of steward, treasurer, and the rest to be filled by Syrians since they were thought to be “more efficient and practical in their native country.”

D. External Relations

The document permits [8] seven days of hospitality to (presumably distinguished) guests, which is fairly generous compared to the three days allowed in (21) Roidion [B2] or in (34) Machairas [118]. The authors of (24) Christodoulos [A3] in the late eleventh century and of (45) Neophytos [4] in the late twelfth century must have been the beneficiaries of similar hospitality during their extended pilgrimages to the Holy Land (see also the pilgrimage plans of the superior designee in (25) Fragala [B10]). At the Sabas monastery, however, local residents and visitors coming for worship (= ordinary pilgrims?) were limited to the more usual three days of hospitality on grounds of “the large crowd of poor arriving daily.”

Notes on the Introduction

1. The dating proposed is for the final version of the text as it has come down to us, including the reference to “the Franks” in [2]. If the latter is indeed an interpolation, as Kurtz, BZ 3 (1894), p. 168, endorsed by Fiaccadori, “Proleitourgia,” p. 39, indicated in the foreword to his edition, then the base text may be considerably older.
2. See R. Taft, “Mount Athos: A Late Chapter in the History of the Byzantine Rite,” DOP 42 (1988), p. 187, n. 79. As noted in Fischer, “Typikon,” p. 307, Albert Ehrhard identified the unpublished Codex Coislinianus 295, fols. 218–52 (14th c.), entitled “Testament of the blessed and holy fathers Sabas the Great and Theodosios the Koinobiarch concerning the life of monks . . .,” as a longer version of the founder's typikon translated here, but this may only be another of the many manuscripts of the popular liturgical typikon associated with this monastery.

42. SABAS

3. See Derwas Chitty, The Desert a City: An Introduction to the Study of Egyptian and Palestinian Monasticism under the Christian Empire (Oxford, 1966), pp. 101–18; E. Hoade, “Sabas, SS.,” NCE, vol. 12 (Washington, D.C., 1967), pp. 775–76; Alexander Kazhdan and Nancy Ševčenko, “Sabas,” ODB, p. 1823; and Vailhé, “Saint-Sabas,” pp. 335–41.
4. Cyril of Skythopolis, Vita Sabae, ed. Ed. Schwartz, Kyrillos von Skythopolis (Leipzig, 1939), pp. 85–200 (= Halkin, BHG 1608); French translation by A.-J. Festugière, Les moines d'Orient, vol. 3, pt. 2: Les moines de Palestine (Paris, 1962); English translation by R. M. Price and J. Binns, Cyril of Scythopolis: Lives of the Monks of Palestine (Kalamazoo, Mich., 1991).
5. See the list in Vailhé, “Saint-Sabas,” p. 339.
6. For details, see Vailhé, “Saint-Sabas,” pp. 21–24.
7. Vita S. Stephani Sabaitae Thaumaturgi, chaps. 31, 173, AASS, vol. 3, July, pp. 516, 576.
8. Vailhé, “Saint-Sabas,” p. 171.
9. See Vailhé, “Saint-Sabas,” pp. 168–76 for details.
10. Vailhé, “Saint-Sabas,” pp. 333–34; Patrich, Sabas, pp. 68–76, 193, 283.
11. The liturgical typikon is recommended in the tenth century by (7) Latros [8]; in the eleventh century by (20) Black Mountain [3], [8], [14], [19], [21], [22], [23], [29], [31], [63], [66], [89], [92], by (21) Roidion [B20], and by (24) Christodoulos [A17], cf. [B3]; in the twelfth century by (26) Luke of Messina [10]; in the thirteenth century by (34) Machairas [75], by (37) Auxentios [10] and by (39) Lips [24], [29], [30], [31], [32]; and in the fourteenth century by (56) Kellibara II [1], by (57) Bebaia Elpis [78], [80], and by (58) Menoikeion [4], [16].
12. In the late eleventh century these appear also in (24) Christodoulos [A24] and in the thirteenth century in (34) Machairas [152] and (37) Auxentios [11].
13. (21) Roidion [B3] is another instance of the less favorable treatment accorded to Frankish pilgrims.
14. Cf. the ban on eunuchs in the twelfth century in (29) Kosmosoteira [3]; but eunuch monks were desired in the late eleventh century in (19) Attaleiates [30] and welcomed even in (29) Kosmosoteira [55] if they were large donors; youths are banned in (10) Eleousa [17] and in the twelfth century in (29) Kosmosoteira [49], but are encouraged in the thirteenth century in (36) Blemmydes [9].

Bibliography

- Beck, Hans-Georg, Kirche und theologische Literatur im byzantinischen Reich (Munich, 1959), p. 397.
- Dmitrievsky, A. Opisanie liturgicheskikh rykopisei, vol. 3: Typika, pt. 2 (Petrograd, 1917), pp. 1–508. Provides details of 135 manuscripts of the famous liturgical typikon of St. Sabas.
- Ehrhard, Albert, “Das griechische Kloster Mâr-Saba in Palästina: seine Geschichte und seine literarischen Denkmäler,” RQ 7 (1893), 32–79.
- Fiaccadori, Gianfranco, “Proleitourgia,” La Parola del Passato 44 (1989), 39–40.
- Fischer, W., “Zu dem Typikon des hl. Sabas,” BZ 8 (1899), 306–11.
- Griffith, Sidney, “Anthony David of Baghdad, Scribe and Monk of Mar Sabas: Arabic in the Monasteries of Palestine,” CH 58 (1989), 7–19.
- , “The Monks of Palestine and the Growth of Christian Literature in Arabic,” Muslim World 78 (1988), 1–28.
- Leroy, Jules, Moines et monastères du Proche-Orient (Paris, 1957), pp. 95–106.
- MacCoull, Leslie, “Sabas, Great Lavra of,” ODB, pp. 1823–24.
- Pandurski, Vasil, “Prep. Sava Osveshcheni-osnovolozhnik na Ierusalemkiya Ustav,” Godishnik na Duchovnata Akademiya Sv. Kliment Okhridski 6 (32), 11 (1956–57), 425–49.
- Papadopoulos, Chrysostomos, “Hai diataxeis tou hagiou Saba,” EP 20 (1921), 139–45.
- Patrich, Joseph, Sabas, Leader of Palestinian Monasticism: A Comparative Study in Eastern Monasticism, Fourth to Seventh Centuries (Washington, D.C., 1995). Published too late for use by the editors of this volume.

TWELFTH CENTURY

Phokylides, Ioannes, He hiera Laura Saba tou heghiasmenou (Alexandria, 1927).

Vailhé, Siméon, "Le monastère de Saint-Sabas," EO 2 (1898–99), 332–41; 3 (1899–1900), 18–28, 168–77.

Vailhé, Siméon, "Les écrivains de Mar-Saba," EO 2 (1898–99), 1–11, 33–47.

Volk, Robert, Gesundheitswesen und Wohltätigkeit im Spiegel der byzantinischen Klostertypika (Munich, 1983), pp. 60–61.

Translation

Rule, Tradition and Law of the Venerable Lavra of St. Sabas

[1.] The decrees of our holy and blessed father Sabas are to be observed: neither a eunuch nor a beardless youth shall possibly be admitted to the Lavra; nor women be allowed, for the purpose of praying, to enter the Lavra or even the dependency or, what is more, the second door of the great dependency.¹ Any monk of the Lavra who is discovered either going into a convent [p. 169] and eating, drinking and staying therein (be it for depositing something on the pretext of safekeeping, or cutting the nuns' hair, or hearing confessions), or else carrying on correspondence with a woman, or indeed having any relations whatsoever with women, or even spiritual relationships, let him be expelled from the brotherhood as a cause of scandal not only to Christians but also to Gentiles.

[2.] Nor shall it be permitted that the Iberians, or the Syrians, or the Franks celebrate a complete liturgy in their churches. Let them instead gather over there, and sing the canonical hours and selected verses from the psalms in their own language, and read the Apostle and the Gospel as well, and then go to the Great Church and take part in the divine, undefiled, and life-giving sacraments together with the whole brotherhood.

[3.] The service of the vigil at the Saint's shrine shall be performed by a priest assigned to it.² Because of the impending vigil, no one at all shall be entitled to leave the Lavra on Saturday, unless it is unavoidable and to the advantage of the common good. But let him go and attend to his task after the vigil, subject to the consent of either the superior or the ecclesiarch. Should he turn out to be absent from the subsequent vigil, let him be deprived of everything, since the whole preceding week was sufficient for him to carry out his business; which, if possible, should be [done only] once a month. Those who leave for the hermitages and those who are residing therein, as long as they do this with the will and blessing of the superior, let them receive what they need. If they left arbitrarily and without permission, let them not be admitted on their return.

[4.] Whoever by the providence of God and the will of the patriarch has been promoted metropolitan or bishop or superior of another monastery or even to a dignity of any rank in the Great Church, let him no longer have authority over his cells in the Lavra or in the dependency either simply to sell or to donate them. Let these instead be under the authority of the holy monastic community, and be granted by the superior to other worthy brethren in need of them. This must be strictly observed also in the case of those who die. No one shall have the power, without the approval and consent of the superior, to leave his own cell to his disciple.

42. SABAS

[5.] Should any dissension arise among some of the brethren, and wickedness so prevail that they beat each other and come to blows, if they are not reconciled and live again in brotherly love, let them be expelled from the monastic community as troublemakers and opponents of the commandment of Christ. In fact as the Apostle says, “The Lord’s servant must not be quarrelsome” (II Tim. 2:24).

[6.] Whoever of the brethren shall be found inebriated and using violence or showering abuse upon anyone, or associating and keeping company with others, let that one be either corrected or expelled. Likewise, whoever shall be found cheating in his ministry, let him be dismissed from it and thus punished for the sake of correction and repentance and never leave his cell except at the prescribed hours of the religious services and prayers.

[7.] As for those who want to lead a solitary life, and yet refuse either to go to church or, at the same time, to be completely isolated, we wish them to join the others only in the vigils, and be strictly excluded both from the commemorations of the saints and from any other public appearance in towns and villages [p. 170], inasmuch as contemplation profits by works rather than by words.

[8.] As for guests coming from outside, should any of them have a mind to strike roots into the Lavra, we shall offer them hospitality and rest for seven days. If they are from among those who are either living in the town or visiting as worshipers, even three days will be enough for their physical refreshment, given the large crowd of poor arriving daily.

[9.] Since in the act of the nomination of the superiors pernicious demons are accustomed to raise disagreements and divisions between the two languages (I mean between Romans and Syrians), in order to get rid of this scandal, we ordain that no Syrian should be appointed to the office of superior; but we both decide and accept that Syrians, being more efficient and practical in their native country, should be preferred for the stewardship and treasurership as well as for other ministries.

Notes on the Translation

1. Identification of these dependencies is uncertain, but see Vailhé, “Saint-Sabas,” p. 339, for a list of lavras and cenobitical monasteries associated with the foundation in the sixth century.
2. Cf. (19) Attaleiates [31], with the discussion of this passage by Fiaccadori, “Proleitourgia,” pp. 39–40.

Document Notes

- [1] Ban on eunuchs and beardless youths; no access for or relations with women. For exclusion of eunuchs and youths, see also (3) Theodore Studites [18]; (12) Tzimiskes [16]; (13) Ath. Typikon [34], [48]; (15) Constantine IX [1]; (29) Kosmosoteira [3], [49], [50]; (59) Manuel II [13], [15]; and (60) Charsianeites [C2]. For restrictions on relations with women, see also (3) Theodore Studites [9], [15], [16]; (22) Evergetis [39]; (26) Luke of Messina [3]; (29) Kosmosoteira [56], [84]; (30) Phoberos [55]; (32) Mamas [27]; (33) Heliou Bomon [27]; (34) Machairas [115]; (45) Neophytos [19]; (53) Meteora [7]; (58) Menoikeion [14]; and (60) Charsianeites [C2].
- [2] Limited liturgical privileges for non-Greek Christians. Cf. restrictions on Greek Christians in (23) Pakourianos [24].

TWELFTH CENTURY

- [3] Obligation of attendance at the Saturday vigil service. For this vigil service, see also (44) Karyes [10], [11]; cf. the critical attitude found in (20) Black Mountain [20] and (27) Kosmosoteira [11].
- [4] No proprietary rights for monks over their cells. Cf. (21) Roidion [B15], [B17] in which these previously established rights are challenged.
- [5] Punishment for fighting. See also (60) Charsianeites [B6]; cf. the prohibition of arguments over seating precedence in (22) Evergetis [9] and related documents.
- [6] Punishment for other disciplinary problems. Improper friendships and administrative corruption are also punished in (22) Evergetis [9], [42] and related documents.
- [7] Limitations on participation of solitaries in the community. Cf. the arrangements made for solitaries in (12) Tzimiskes [12], [18], [20]; (13) Ath. Typikon [37], cf. [43]; (24) Christodoulos [A24]; and (34) Machairas [152].
- [8] Limitations on hospitality to guests. See similar provisions in (21) Roidion [B2] and (60) Charsianeites [C4]; cf. (34) Machairas [118].
- [9] Reservation of the superiorship for Greeks and other offices for Syrians. Cf. the exception to the general exclusion of Greeks in (23) Pakourianos [24] for a secretary “knowing how to write and send the opinion of the superior to the rulers of the time . . .”

43. Kasoulon: Rule of Nicholas for the Monastery of St. Nicholas of Kasoulon near Otranto

Date: 1160

Translator: Timothy Miller

Edition employed: Angelo Mai and J. Cozza-Luzi, Nova patrum bibliotheca, vol. 10, pt. 2 (Rome, 1905), pp. 149–66, with text at 155–66.

Manuscript: Library of the University of Turin, Graecus 216 (ex-Royal Library Codex C III 17), fols. 173r–81v (1174)¹

Other translations: French, by E. Jeanselme and L. Oeconomos, “La règle du réfectoire du monastère de Saint-Nicolas de Casole près d’Otrante (1160),” Bulletin de la Société d’histoire de la Médecine 16 (1922), 48–58; Latin, by Cozza-Luzi, NPB, vol. 10, pt. 2, pp. 155–66.

Institutional History

The most important witness to the history of the monastery is a lengthy, but mostly unpublished, Greek manuscript in the library of the University of Turin, that includes a liturgical typikon dated to 1174, fragments of a penitential, a list of the monastery’s superiors, the dietary Rule translated here, and some other short works. The preface to the liturgical typikon cites the regulations of St. Sabas and of Stoudios as well as “the Holy Mountain” as its sources.² The Turin manuscript, begun no later than 1160, when our author Nicholas composed the dietary Rule (he was also the copyist for the liturgical typikon fourteen years later), was added to by his successors down to the fifteenth century.

*A. Foundation and Patronage of the Monastery*³

The monastery, located about a mile south of Otranto near the extreme southeastern tip of Italy, was founded in 1098/99 by the Greek monk Joseph, during the reign and under the protection of Bohemund († 1111), prince of Taranto and Antioch. A hundred years later, prayers were still being offered at the monastery for the souls of Bohemund, his wife Constance, and their son Bohemund II (1111–30). After 1130, the Norman kings of Sicily assumed responsibility for the protection of the monastery. Roger II (1130–54), his son William I (1154–60) and daughter-in-law Elvira († 1135), and his grandson Roger, Duke of Apulia († 1148) had an office of the dead performed annually in their honor at Kasoulon in recognition of their role as protectors.

As the foundation’s dietary Rule translated below indicates [1], Kasoulon served as the head monastery for a number of monastic dependencies. The Turin manuscript mentions those at Vaste, Policastro, Trulazzo, Melendugno, Alessano, Castro, and Minervino.⁴ A chapel at Vaste was still in existence at the end of the nineteenth century. Bohemund I initiated the donation of properties to Kasoulon towards the beginning of the twelfth century.⁵

TWELFTH CENTURY

B. Subsequent History

The founder Joseph governed Kasoulon for a quarter century, dying in 1124. He was succeeded by Victor (1124–52), and then by our author Nicholas (1152–74). A complete list of their successors down to 1392 is preserved in the Turin university manuscript, which can be supplemented down to 1469 from other sources, but for most of these superiors nothing beyond their names is known.⁶ The superior Nektarios (1219–35), however, composed a poem, also found in the Turin manuscript, commemorating himself and his six predecessors. During his tenure, Kasoulon was subordinated to Tancred, the Latin archbishop of Otranto, and it was obliged in 1233 to pay an annual tax and arrears for the previous eighteen years to the Roman church. In 1266, during the rule of the Angevin prince Charles of Anjou, a Roman cardinal and apostolic visitor named Randulf (possibly identical with Rudolf of Cheurières), reconsecrated the monastery's church and transferred the foundation's superior, Basil (1259–66), from Kasoulon to the directorship of another monastery, San Vito del Pitero (or possibly, Pizzo), near Taranto. Acting under papal authority, Randulf then appointed a new superior for Kasoulon, Jacob I (1266–75). The amount of the annual tax due Rome was also increased at this time.

Beginning in the late fourteenth century, Kasoulon came under the control of commendatory abbots. During the tenure of one of them, Zacharias (1438–69), many of the monastery's manuscripts were carried off by Cardinal Bessarion, first to Rome, and then later to Venice, where they were to form part of the Bibliotheca Marciana after his testamentary bequest of 1468. Surviving manuscripts traceable to Kasoulon are to be found today at Rome, Paris, Venice, and Madrid.⁷

C. Fate of the Foundation

The monastery was destroyed by the Turks after their temporary occupation of Otranto in 1480 and was never completely restored. The church only was put back in use after the departure of the Turks in 1481 and continued in service until 1804, staffed by Latin secular clergy under the archbishop of Otranto.⁸ The typon, however, fell into the hands of Zacharie Megagianni, who recorded his ownership of the future Turin University manuscript in a note dated to 1508.⁹ By the late nineteenth century, the site of the former foundation was occupied by a farm.

Analysis

This rule is concerned almost exclusively with dietary matters and as such must be considered within the broad context of similar regulations scattered throughout many of the Byzantine monastic foundation documents from (4) Stoudios in the ninth century down to (60) Charsianeites in the fifteenth century.

A. Sources and Stages of Composition

The rule incorporates several traditional observances of the monastery dating back to its foundation by the original founder Joseph at the end of the eleventh century. Among them are the prohibition [1] against the consumption of cheese and eggs and a prescription for a modest meal [13], possibly a supper connected with the feast of the Exaltation of the Cross. Joseph may also have been the "holy father" said to have been responsible [20] for the rule that after meals the monks should read (if literate), pray, or engage in manual labor in their own cells rather than socializing with one another. The repetitive treatment [16], cf. [23] of the superior's discretionary authority to permit the monks to drink wine on the Friday evening before Lazarus Saturday as well as other reiterations¹⁰ indicate that, like the contemporary (29) Kosmosoteira, this document was not composed in one sitting. The rule as we have it now may even incorporate large portions of an earlier rule by one of our author's predecessors, possibly down through [8], after which the text returns to treat many matters already discussed before.

The evolution of the monastery's dietary observances evidently continued after Nicholas of Kasoulon's authorship of this document, seeing that a scholiast rejects as being "against the tradition of the fathers" one of the rule's few dietary concessions, the provision [25] requiring the monastery's fisherman monks¹¹ to observe only Wednesdays and Fridays as fast days (i.e., not Mondays also as in [5]).

This rule, therefore, with its roots in the late eleventh century, is a product of a transitional era. The author has not quite shaken the traditional respect for the founder's wishes (however arbitrary and idiosyncratic), yet, as in the contemporary but separate Evergetian tradition, the document's custodians clearly show their willingness to elaborate, amend, and (eventually) even contradict the monastery's customary observances under the impact of increased acquaintance with patristic tradition [11], [25], canon law [9], and the practices of other monasteries [12].

B. Dietary Regulations

In his preliminary analysis of this document seventy years ago, Jeanselme ("Règle," p. 56) considered it to be an example of the tightening of "Basilian" monastic discipline under the influence of a more ascetic tradition. Within the broad context of the dietary regulations in our collection of documents, (43) Kasoulon is indeed considerably more strict than (22) Evergetis and most contemporary documents in the Evergetian tradition. In its zeal for asceticism, the rule typically exceeds even (20) Black Mountain and (30) Phoberos, the authors of which also took dietary matters very seriously and tended to come down on the rigorist side of controversial issues.

The rule's most unusual provision is the aforementioned ban [1] on the use of eggs and cheese by this monastery's monks. To be sure, many of our authors restrict the consumption of these commodities, along with fish, to days outside of periods of fasting, but none subscribe explicitly to the ban imposed here.¹²

1. Rules for Non-Fast Days

For non-fast days, the rule prescribes [5], cf. [2] legumes prepared with olive oil, vegetables, fish and wine—a conventional diet for monks—but only one dish from among any of these items (except two on Sundays [4]). This is an austere provision compared to the three cooked dishes in (28) Pantokrator [12], the two to three dishes allowed in (27) Kecharitomene [46] and (32) Mamas [17], or even the two dishes provided for in (29) Kosmosoteira [63]. There is also no provision for a regular evening meal (except on Sundays [4], during Easter season [10], and on the feast of the Exaltation of the Cross [12]), as there is in other documents of the twelfth century such as (27) Kecharitomene [46], (28) Pantokrator [11], and (32) Mamas [17].

2. Rules for Days of Fasting

The rule considers [5] Monday to be a regular day of fasting, unlike (28) Pantokrator [12] and, apparently, (27) Kecharitomene [46] and (32) Mamas [17]. Treating Monday as a fast day like Wednesday and Friday was a Palestinian observance, as (34) Machairas [77] informs us. On all three of these days the monks at Kasoulon were not allowed [2] to use any oil in the preparation of their food, nor, on Wednesdays and Fridays, have fish [6], except when feasts of the Lord occurred on these days. Wine was not allowed [2] on Wednesdays and Fridays. The generally austere (20) Black Mountain [38] restricts its monks to boiled vegetables without oil on these days, but with an additional dish of dry food, and allows for [43] a simple supper of bread and water. The considerably more generous diet on the two fast days of the week recognized by (27) Kecharitomene [46] and (32) Mamas [17] permitted two dishes of legumes cooked with olive oil and similar vegetables, though Mamas allows its monks to follow a dry food diet “for the sake of [strict adherence] to the canons.”

3. Rules for the Lenten Fast

The rule continues [2] its stern dietary provisions for fast days during the Lenten fast: no use of oil on Mondays (and, presumably, Wednesdays and Fridays), and no wine on Wednesdays and Fridays. Fish were not allowed at all during Lent. Other documents, which are more indulgent in regulating diet outside of Lent, tighten their provisions in various ways for the Lenten season.¹³ During the first week of Lent, the rule prescribes [9] an especially stringent diet of bread with soaked beans and water until Friday (see also [23]), when wine and kollyba were allowed in honor of the feast of St. Theodore. The generally more indulgent (22) Evergetis [10], however, restricts the severe diet to Monday of the first week and returns to a diet of legumes, raw vegetables and fruits, and cumin-flavored water (substituting for wine) on the other days of this week. Other typika of this era generally follow the Evergetian observances.¹⁴ (28) Pantokrator [12] makes total abstinence optional on that Monday and allows wine but “less than usual.”

The rule tightens [9] the Lenten diet for the Wednesday and Friday in the week before Palm Sunday by providing only for bread, boiled beans, raw or wild vegetables, and small nuts, washed down with water. During Holy Week, the rule orders [9] a return to the diet of the first week of Lent till Thursday evening, after which the monks were to eat nothing at all until late Saturday night just before Easter. (22) Evergetis [10], however, followed by many of the other documents in the Evergetian tradition, allows its monks to have raw fruits and vegetables on Good Friday. The stricter (20) Black Mountain [64] and (30) Phoberos [28] recommend—but do not require—total abstinence from food on the two days before Easter.

4. Dietary Dispensations for Feasts

Like most contemporary documents, the rule accepts [24] the feast of the Annunciation as a legitimate reason to break the Lenten fast.¹⁵ Its author also shares the willingness of his contemporaries to allow dispensations for the great fasts and also ordinary fast days for feasts of the Lord and those of the Mother of God [18], and for certain other feasts [3], though his list is somewhat different from theirs. His rule provides for special celebrations for the Dormition of the Mother of God [11] and for the Exaltation of the Cross [12], two popular feasts in this era. The rule does allow [22] the superior discretionary authority to provide wine to his monks on the Wednesday on which the Great Canon was being performed as well as on the Friday evening [16], [23] before Lazarus Saturday.

5. Rules for Other Fasts and Times of the Year

During the other two commonly-observed fasts of the ecclesiastical year, Holy Apostles and St. Philip, the rule provides [3], cf. [10] for one daily meal of two cooked dishes, including fish, on Tuesdays and Thursdays, but no use of oil on Wednesdays and Fridays. There is also an additional but rather mild fast [19] for the Cheesefare week; naturally the rule does not endorse the idea found in many other documents of this era that cheese should be eaten at this time in order to contradict the ascetic observances of “heretics.”¹⁶ Between Easter and the fast of the Holy Apostles, however, the monks were allowed [10] two meals daily, governed by the usual rules for fast and non-fast days of the week.

Notes on the Introduction

1. See Hoeck and Loenertz, Nikolaos-Nektarios, p. 9, n. 3; Pertusi, “Rapporti,” pp. 485–86; and Rougeris, “Ricerca,” pp. 14–15, with descriptions in Diehl, “Saint-Nicolas,” pp. 176–78, and Omont, “Saint-Nicolas,” pp. 381–83.
2. Omont, “Saint-Nicolas,” p. 382.
3. For the foundation and subsequent history of the monastery, see Hoeck and Loenertz, Nikolaos-Nektarios, pp. 9–21.
4. For the dependencies, see Diehl, “Saint-Nicolas,” p. 186, and Hoeck and Loenertz, Nikolaos-Nektarios, p. 20.
5. See Kölzer, “S. Nicola,” pp. 422–23, with confirmations by Constance (1198), Frederick II (1220–54), and Charles II of Anjou (1305).
6. Omont, “Saint-Nicolas,” pp. 384–87, has an edition of the Turin manuscript’s historical notes, but this should be used with the expanded list and revised dating in Hoeck and Loenertz, Nikolaos-Nektarios, pp. 11–16.
7. Diehl, “Saint-Nicolas,” pp. 174–75.
8. Hoeck and Loenertz, Nikolaos-Nektarios, p. 21.
9. Omont, “Saint-Nicolas,” p. 382.
10. Cf. treatments of the Lenten diet: (43) Kasoulon [2] with [9]; [3] with [10]: fasts of the Holy Apostles and St. Philip: [3] with [10]; feast of St. Theodore: [9] with [23].
11. For which see also (33) Heliou Bomon [19].
12. See the cross-references in Document Note [1] below.
13. E.g., (20) Black Mountain [57], (22) Evergetis [10], (23) Pakourianos [10], (27) Kecharitomene [47], (28) Pantokrator [12], (32) Mamas [18], and (33) Heliou Bomon.
14. (27) Kecharitomene [47], (30) Phoberos [27], [28], (32) Mamas [18], and (33) Heliou Bomon [18].
15. Cf. (22) Evergetis [10], (27) Kecharitomene [47], (28) Pantokrator [12], (29) Kosmosoteira [27], (30) Phoberos [28], (32) Mamas [18], and (33) Heliou Bomon [18].
16. Cf. (20) Black Mountain [55], [90], (28) Pantokrator [12], (30) Phoberos [19], (32) Mamas [19], and (33) Heliou Bomon [19].

Bibliography

- Aar, E., “Gli studi storici in Terra d’Otranto,” ASI, ser. 4, 6 (1880), pp. 100–114, 305–34, esp. 318–20.
- Diehl, Charles, “Le monastère de Saint-Nicolas de Casole, près d’Otrante, d’après un manuscrit inédit,” MAH 6 (1886), 173–88.
- Dmitrievsky, Aleksei, Opisanie liturgicheskikh rykopisei, vol. 1: Typika, pt. 1 (Kiev, 1895), pp. cxv–cxxi, 795–836.

TWELFTH CENTURY

- Fonseca, Cosimo, "La prima generazione normanna e le istituzioni monastiche dell'Italia meridionale," in Roberto il Guiscardo e il suo tempo (Rome, 1975), pp. 135–46.
- Gianfreda, Grazio, Monachesimo italo-greco in Otranto (Galatina, 1977).
- Guillou, André, "Grecs d'Italie du Sud et de Sicile au moyen âge: Les moines," MAH 75 (1963), 79–110; repr. Studies in Byzantine Italy (London, 1970).
- Hoeck, Johannes, and Loenertz, Raymond, Nikolaos-Nektarios von Otranto Abt von Casole (= Studia Patristica et Byzantina 11) (Ettal, 1965).
- Jeanselme, Edouard, "Le régime alimentaire des anachorètes et des moines byzantins," extract from 2^e Congrès d'Histoire de la Médecine (Evreux, 1922), 28 pp.
- Kölzer, T., "Für die Geschichte des Klosters S. Nicola di Casole," Quellen und Forschungen aus italienischen Archiven und Bibliotheken 65 (1985), 418–26.
- Minisci, Teodoro, "Riflessi studiti nel monachesimo italo-greco," OCA 153 (1958), 215–33, esp. 221–22.
- Omont, H., "Le Typicon de Saint-Nicolas de Casole, près d'Otrante," REG 3 (1890), 381–91.
- Parlangeli, A. and O., "Il monastero di San Nicola di Casole. Centro di cultura bizantina in terra d'Otranto," BBGG, n.s., 5 (1951), 30–45; rev. M. Lascaris, Byzantion 21 (1951), 255–56.
- Pertusi, A., "Rapporti tra il monachesimo italo-greco ed il monachesimo bizantino nell'alto medio evo," in Il chiesa greca in Italia dall'VII al XVI secolo, vol. 2 (Padua, 1972), pp. 473–520, esp. 485–86.
- Rougeris, P., "Ricerca bibliografica sui 'Typika' italogreci," BBGG, n.s., 27 (1973), 11–42, esp. 14–16.
- Volk, Robert, Gesundheitswesen und Wohltätigkeit im Spiegel der byzantinischen Klostertypika (Munich, 1983), pp. 221–22.

Translation

The rule concerning food and drink at the monastery of our holy father Nicholas of Kasoulon, composed by the monk Nicholas, the unworthy superior of this same monastery in the year 6668 of the eighth indiction [1160 A.D.].

Chapter 1

It should be known that from the foundation of this monastery—that is, in the year 6607, the seventh indiction [1099 A.D.]—through the agency of our most holy father and founder of this monastery of the holy father Nicholas of Kasoulon, lord Joseph, we received our first regulation, one helpful to our souls. The monks are never to eat cheese or eggs no matter where they are. They are to keep this law in the aforementioned original monastery, but also in all the dependencies which are under its authority.

Chapter 2

Moreover, we received from him the rule that we eat at all times legumes with olive oil, vegetables, and fish and that we drink wine save for those holy days set aside [for abstinence]. For on Mondays during Lent [p. 156] we give up oil, and on Wednesdays and Fridays we give up wine. During the entire holy fast, we never eat fish, unless a severe sickness in some manner afflicts one of the brothers.

43. KASOULON

Chapter 3

During the other fasts of Saint Philip and of the twelve Holy Apostles,¹ we give up olive oil on Wednesdays and Fridays, but on Tuesdays and Thursdays we eat two cooked dishes. At this time we also eat fish. During the fast of St. Philip [we eat fish] on the feast of the Entry in the Temple of the holy Mother of God² and on the feast of our holy father Nicholas;³ by feast I mean the forefeast, the feast itself, and the after-feast. During the fast of the Holy Apostles, however, [we eat fish] only on the feast of [St. John] the Forerunner at the solstice.⁴

Chapter 4

In addition to this on all the Sundays of the year, we have received the rule that we eat two cooked dishes at the midday meal, but at the evening meal nothing is cooked.

Chapter 5

It should be known that from our holy father we received this rule also: that [p. 157] we are to fast three days a week—namely, Mondays, Wednesdays, and Fridays—unless a feast of the Lord should fall on those days, or a feast of the Mother of God with an octave, or feasts of the angels, of [St. John] the Forerunner, of the twelve apostles, or of any other saint whose memory is celebrated. If the commemoration of one of these should fall on these days, then we break the fast and eat as we do on the other days of the week.

On four days of the week—that is, Sundays, Tuesdays, Thursdays, and Saturdays—we eat one cooked dish, either a legume, a vegetable with oil, or even a fish, if God makes provision for us on those days.

Chapter 6

Now, we just added that on these two days—that is, on Wednesdays and Fridays—we do not eat any fish at all, except when an important feast, one free from work, occurs on those days, or when sickness constrains a brother.

Chapter 7

It should be known that on Pentecost Sunday after the divine liturgy we do not go to the refectory, but we eat the blessed bread⁵ and have only one cup of wine in the narthex of the church. [p. 158]

After vespers, the signal for the refectory is struck, and we enter the refectory and eat what the grace of the Holy Spirit has provided for us.

Chapter 8

Similarly, on the vigil of Christ's birth and on the vigil of the holy Epiphany, if they happen to be on a Saturday or a Sunday, we sing the holy liturgy at its appointed hour. Then, we eat only the blessed bread and drink one cup of wine in the narthex of the church.

In the evening after the service of the holy baptism [of Christ], we taste of the holy water and enter the refectory [singing] the "I will extol thee, my God" (Ps. 144 [145]:1), just as we do at dinner on Pentecost Sunday. We eat if the grace of the Holy Spirit has made provision for us. There in the refectory we sing the compline.

TWELFTH CENTURY

Chapter 9

It should be known that during the first week of the holy Lenten fast, we eat bread, soaked beans, and water, and we hold to this with self-restraint and moderation until Thursday, for on Friday we eat soaked beans and kollyba, and we drink wine for the protection of St. Theodore,⁶ but [p. 159] we do not eat any vegetables during that entire week until Saturday.

From the Sunday of Orthodoxy⁷ until Palm Sunday we abstain from olive oil on Mondays, but we do drink wine. On Wednesdays and Fridays, we abstain from olive oil and wine, and eat nothing besides bread, boiled beans, raw or wild vegetables and small nuts; we drink water. On the other four days—that is, Tuesdays, Thursdays, Saturdays, and Sundays—we eat one cooked dish each day served with olive oil, and we drink wine.

During Holy Week, we observe a fast on three days—that is, on Monday, Tuesday, and Wednesday—just like the one on the four days of the first week—that is, on Monday, Tuesday, Wednesday, and Thursday. On the holy and great Thursday, however, we eat a cooked dish with olive oil and drink good wine on account of the sleepless vigil which we are about to perform in honor of the holy passion of Christ, our Savior. For, from that evening of the great Thursday [p. 160] until the late night of the holy and great Saturday we taste of nothing at all in accordance with the canon laid down at the council in Trullo.⁸ The fast lasts until about midnight on the great Saturday.

On the holy and great Saturday, in the evening after the divine liturgy, we withdraw to the refectory [singing] the “I will extol thee, my God.” Then, we eat a cooked meal with olive oil and drink wine.

After this, we say the small compline in the refectory just as we do on Holy Thursday evening, on the vigil of Christ’s Birth, and on the vigil of Epiphany. When this is done, we withdraw to our cells as each one by himself sings the required compline.

Chapter 10

It should be known that from the Radiant Sunday of Easter until the Sunday of All Saints,⁹ we eat twice each day, and we eat our food according to the custom of our monastery.

From the Sunday of All Saints until the feast of the Holy Apostles Peter and Paul¹⁰—with the exception of Saturdays, Sundays, and the festal commemorations of saints—[p. 161] we dine once according to the tradition of the holy apostles; we eat during this fast just as we do during the fast of Saint Philip the apostle. As we have already seen,¹¹ however, we eat fish during this fast on the feast of [St. John] the Forerunner at the solstice.

Chapter 11

It should be known that at the Dormition of the most holy Mother of God on the fifteenth day of August, the priest blesses the grape clusters after the divine liturgy. We eat these after eating the blessed bread in the church following the ancient tradition.

Chapter 12

[It should be known] that on the fourteenth of September on the day of the Exaltation of the venerable and life-giving Cross, we eat twice, but only beans, legumes, or some vegetable with vinegar. That day we do not eat olive oil or fish, rather we eat only bread and squash with vinegar and have wine according to the typikon of the Holy Mountain.¹²

43. KASOULON

Chapter 13

This also should be known: we all eat the same bread and drink the same wine according to the ancient tradition of our father, lord Joseph the founder honored by God. [p. 162]

Chapter 14

Each monk should sit in the refectory and have his own wine goblet before him. Each one of these should hold three servings of wine. When the superior strikes the bell, the officer of the week¹³ pronounces the blessing, and we take our first drink to the glory of the holy, consubstantial Trinity, distinct, yet undivided; the second for the intercession and assistance of the all-pure Mother of God; the third for the intercession of the holy and God-inspired fathers and for the salvation and benediction of our most holy and spiritual father—the individual's name—and of our entire august community in Christ assembled by God. The refectorian serves a fourth toast and we drink for the happy falling asleep and repose of our fathers and brothers who have departed before us and for the memory of our most holy father and brother—the individual's name—for whom we perform the service for the dead that day. Without serving, we drink the fifth toast after offering the panagia for the intercession and assistance of the all-pure Mother of God.

Chapter 15

It should be known that when we are sitting at table to eat, we do not have permission to converse or to cough without great necessity. [p. 163]

Chapter 16

It should be known that on Friday evening before Lazarus Saturday,¹⁴ if the superior so wishes, we drink wine in honor of his resurrection. This, however, must be at the superior's discretion.

Chapter 17

It should be known that from the feast of Christ's holy Birth until the octave of the holy Epiphany, we do not fast, but each day we freely eat fish and olive oil, and likewise we drink wine.

Chapter 18

It should be known that during the octaves of feasts of the Lord and of the all-holy Mother of God we do not fast, but we freely eat both fish and dishes with olive oil.

Chapter 19

During the week of the cheese fast¹⁵ we fast each day except Saturday and Sunday. [On these two days] we eat one meal with olive oil and fish until Sunday evening, at which time we sing the little compline in the refectory. Having done this, [p. 164] each goes off to his own cell as he sings his required trisagion and rests.

Chapter 20

This also should be known, that, according to the tradition we received from the holy father, whenever one of the monks rises from the table, he must not retire to the cell of some one of the brothers to converse with anyone or to seek some advice. Let each one proceed to his own cell, and if he knows his letters, let him read. If not, let him make supplication with tears for his own sins, or let him perform his own handiwork work with care in order to put to flight evil thoughts.

TWELFTH CENTURY

Chapter 21

It should be known that, if a brother is sent [to carry out] some duty, his share—whether of fish or of any other food—is to be saved for him until he returns. If it is food which spoils, it should be given to a sick or elderly brother or to whomever the cellarer wishes. In place of it, something else like it or better, if God so disposes, should be given to him when he returns.

Chapter 22

On the Wednesday evening when we wish to sing the Great Canon,¹⁶ we eat without [p. 165] oil or wine just as we do on the other Wednesdays and Fridays of the holy Lenten fast. Nevertheless, the superior may approve wine on that Wednesday on account of the labor the brothers are about to take up. On the following day, that is Thursday, we eat a meal with olive oil and drink good wine.

Chapter 23

It should be known that on the Friday of the first week and the Friday of Lazarus, wine, but only wine, may be used at the discretion of the superior. In the first instance, this is on account of the great [martyr] Theodore, in the second on account of the raising of the holy and just Lazarus.

Chapter 24

It should be known that on the vigil of the Annunciation on the twenty-fourth of March, on the twenty-fifth (the feast itself), and on the twenty-sixth, that is the after-feast, on these three days, we freely eat the food that is served with olive oil, and we drink good wine on account of the joyful feast of the Annunciation. [p. 166]

Chapter 25

It is also worthwhile to discuss the monks who are fishermen and the routine of life which they are to lead during the holy and great Lenten fast. We desire that they observe two days of the week—that is, Wednesdays and Fridays—and keep them totally free from the consumption of olive oil and fish only. On the other days, however, they may eat fish and olive oil freely and drink wine on account of the labor, the sleepless effort, and every other physical trial both day and night.

[Scholiast's note in a later hand]: It is known that this regulation [was] discontinued, thrown away and discovered to be against the tradition of the fathers.

End of the regulations

Notes on the Translation

Editors' note: The assistance of our translator, Timothy Miller [TM], is gratefully acknowledged for the notes to this document.

1. Fast of St. Philip, from November 15 until Christmas; fast of the Holy Apostles, from Monday after the feast of All Saints (Sunday after Pentecost) through the vigil of the feast of Sts. Peter and Paul, June 28.
2. Feast of the Presentation, November 21; cf. the similar provision in (27) Kecharitomene [48].
3. Feast of St. Nicholas, December 6.
4. Feast of the Birth of St. John the Baptist, June 24. This chapter is corrupt; for the restoration, cf. [10] below. [TM]
5. klaston: unconsecrated bread broken and blessed and distributed to the faithful after the divine liturgy. [TM]
6. That is, in order to enjoy the saint's protection; the feast is Saturday of the first week of Lent. [TM]
7. Orthodoxy Sunday, the first Sunday in Lent.
8. C. Trull., c. 89 (R&P 2.512).
9. The Sunday after Pentecost Sunday.
10. That is, the fast of the Holy Apostles.
11. In [3] above.
12. There is no comparable provision in (11) Ath. Rule.
13. hebdomadarios, the official in charge of the refectory for the week. [TM]
14. The Saturday before Palm Sunday.
15. The last week before the Great Lent, known as the week of "Cheesefare" but here called the week of "Cheesefast" because the monastery's strict rule of total abstinence from dairy products required the monks to abstain from cheese even during this week.
16. The Great Canon of Saint Andrew of Crete is sung on the Wednesday and Thursday of the fifth week in Lent. [TM]

Document Notes

- [1] Ban on eggs and cheese. These foods are permitted under certain circumstances by (4) Stoudios [A29], [B29], [B30]; (11) Ath. Rule [22], [24]; (20) Black Mountain [37], [R37], [38], [47], [55], [90], cf. [56]; (28) Pantokrator [12]; (30) Phoberos [19], cf. [31]; (31) Areia [T5]; (32) Mamas [17], [19]; (33) Heliou Bomon [19]; (34) Machairas [74], [75], [77], [78]; and (39) Lips [32]. (23) Pakourianos [8], (27) Kecharitomene [46], (29) Kosmosoteira [63], cf. [104], and (58) Menoikeion [8] explicitly permit cheese but do not mention eggs. This reckoning may understate the acceptability of these dietary items since some documents, e.g., (22) Evergetis, discuss diets only for periods of fasting.
- [2] Acceptable foods; general rule for the Lenten fast. See fuller regulations in [5] and [9] below with cross-references.
- [3] Rules for other fasts. See also [10] and [18] below as well as provisions in (4) Stoudios [29]; (11) Ath. Rule [23], [24]; (20) Black Mountain [38R], [54]; (22) Evergetis [10] and related documents; (23) Pakourianos [10]; (28) Pantokrator [12]; (31) Areia [T5]; (45) Neophytos [C4], (58) Menoikeion [8], and (60) Charsianeites [17].
- [4] Rules for Sunday meals. See also provisions in (20) Black Mountain [38], [47], [57]; (23) Pakourianos [8]; (27) Kecharitomene [46]; (28) Pantokrator [12]; (32) Mamas [17]; (33) Heliou Bomon [17]; (39) Lips [32]; and (58) Menoikeion [8].
- [5] Fasting three days a week; diet for other days of the week. See also [2] above. For fast days, see (7) Latros [8], (11) Ath. Rule [30], (20) Black Mountain [38], [43], (27) Kecharitomene [46], (30) Phoberos [16] ff., (32) Mamas [17], (33) Heliou Bomon [17], (34) Machairas [77], (36) Blemmydes [11], (39) Lips [32], (45) Neophytos [C4], (55) Athanasios I [5], and (58) Menoikeion [8]. For non-fast days, see the generally more generous provisions in (4) Stoudios [29], (11) Ath. Rule [22], (20) Black Mountain

TWELFTH CENTURY

- [37], (23) Pakourianos [8], (27) Kecharitomene [46], (28) Pantokrator [12], (32) Mamas [17], and (33) Heliou Bomon [17].
- [6] Exceptions to the rule of abstinence from fish on fast days. See [3] above and the general discussion of exemptions in [18] below with cross-references.
- [7] No meal on Pentecost Sunday until after vespers. See also [8] below with cross-references.
- [8] Same rule for weekend Christmas and Epiphany vigils. See also discussions in (20) Black Mountain [54] and (30) Phoberos [19].
- [9] Rules for the Lenten fast. See also [2] above and provisions in (4) Stoudios [30]; (7) Latros [5]; (11) Ath. Rule [25], [26]; (20) Black Mountain [56], [62], [63], [64], [65], [66], [67]; (22) Evergetis [10] and related documents; (23) Pakourianos [10]; (31) Areia [T5]; (44) Karyes [7]; (45) Neophytos [C4]; (57) Bebaia Elpis [82]; and (60) Charsianeites [17].
- [10] Number of meals during Easter season and during the fasts of the Holy Apostles and St. Philip. For the Easter diet, see also provisions in (4) Stoudios [29], (11) Ath. Rule [22], (20) Black Mountain [34], (30) Phoberos [28], and (34) Machairas [74]; for the fasts, see also [3] above with cross-references.
- [11] Blessing of the grape clusters on the feast of the Dormition. For this observance, see also (32) Mamas [19] and (33) Heliou Bomon [19], cf. (34) Machairas [132].
- [12] Diet for feast of the Exaltation of the Holy Cross. For this feast, especially popular during the twelfth and thirteenth centuries, see also (4) Stoudios [12], [13]; (20) Black Mountain [89]; (27) Kecharitomene [39]; (28) Pantokrator [7], [39]; (30) Phoberos [19]; (32) Mamas [19]; (33) Heliou Bomon [19]; (35) Skoteine [7]; and (45) Neophytos [5], [15].
- [13] Same bread and wine served to all.
- [14] Refectory toasts. Not attested elsewhere in the monastic foundation documents.
- [15] No conversation or coughing at meals. See also general provisions for refectory procedures in (4) Stoudios [28], (11) Ath. Rule [21], (20) Black Mountain [33], and (22) Evergetis [9] and related documents.
- [16] Drinking of wine on Friday before Lazarus Saturday (i.e., the vigil of Palm Sunday). See also [23] below and provisions in (4) Stoudios [A30] and (20) Black Mountain [61].
- [17] No fasting during Christmas season until the octave of the Epiphany. See also provisions in (4) Stoudios [29], (11) Ath. Rule [24], (23) Pakourianos [8], and (34) Machairas [77].
- [18] No fasting during octaves of feasts of the Lord and those of the Mother of God. See also [3], [6] above and provisions in (4) Stoudios [29]; (11) Ath. Rule [24]; (20) Black Mountain [38], [48]; (22) Evergetis [11] and related documents; (39) Lips [32], and (60) Charsianeites [17]. (36) Blemmydes [11] and (55) Athanasios I [5] are critical of such exemptions, however.
- [19] Diet during the week of cheese fast. See also differing provisions in (20) Black Mountain [55], (30) Phoberos [19], (28) Pantokrator [12], (32) Mamas [19], (33) Heliou Bomon [19], (34) Machairas [78], and (58) Menoikeion [8].
- [20] Monks not to socialize in cells after meals; literate monks to read, others to pray and do handiwork. For after-dinner regulations and activities, see also (4) Stoudios [26], (22) Evergetis [31], and (29) Kosmosoteira [37].
- [21] Food to be saved for monks away on duties. See (11) Ath. Rule [30] for portable lunches for workers absent from the mid-day meal as well as (22) Evergetis [9] and related documents for a second dinner sitting at which those with legitimate excuses for missing the first sitting were to be fed.
- [22] Dietary concessions during performance of the Great Canon. See also provisions in (4) Stoudios [A30], (20) Black Mountain [58], (22) Evergetis [10], (27) Kecharitomene [47], and (34) Machairas [69].
- [23] Consumption of wine on the feasts of Sts. Theodore and Lazarus. For the feast of St. Theodore, see similar provisions in (4) Stoudios [A30], (28) Pantokrator [12], (22) Evergetis [10], (32) Mamas [18], and (33) Heliou Bomon [18]. For the feast of St. Lazarus, see also [16] above with cross-references.
- [24] Dispensation from Lenten fast for the feast of the Annunciation. See similar provisions in (4) Stoudios [31] and in (22) Evergetis [10] and related documents.
- [25] Fisherman-monks' exemption from the Lenten fast. For these monks, see also (33) Heliou Bomon [19].

44. Karyes: Typikon of Sabbas the Serbian for the Kellion of St. Sabbas at Karyes on Mount Athos

Date: 1197 or 1199¹

Translator: George Dennis

Editions employed: Ph. Meyer, Die Haupturkunden für die Geschichte der Athosklöster (Leipzig, 1894), pp. 184–87; medieval Serbian original, ed. by V. Ćorović, Spisi Svetoga Save (Belgrade, 1928), pp. 5–13.

Manuscript: Modern copy of 1874 A.D.²

Other translations: None

Institutional History

This kellion was one of several that the principal Athonite monasteries established near the Protaton monastery at Karyes, the seat of the protos, the nominal leader of the Athonite community, to facilitate their business with this administrative center.³ Its founder was Sabbas the Serbian, the founder of the independent Serbian Orthodox church, who was the youngest son of King Stefan Nemanja (1166–96).⁴ Sabbas chose a monastic career for himself, and, moving to Mount Athos, lived for a time in the Panteleemon monastery and later at Vatopedi. In 1198–99, with his father’s assistance and the permission of Emperor Alexios III Angelos, he re-established the abandoned Hilandar monastery on Mount Athos as a Serbian foundation. In 1199, Sabbas drew up a founder’s typikon in Serbian that is closely based on (22) Evergetis.⁵ As noted above in the Institutional History for that document, Sabbas visited and patronized the famous reform monastery towards the end of the twelfth century. In 1219, at the instigation of the Nicaean patriarch Manuel I Sarantenos (1216–22), Sabbas became the first archbishop of the independent Serbian church.

Little is known about Hilandar’s small dependency at Karyes for which the brief typikon translated below was written, aside from what can be determined from the document itself. Originally drawn up in a medieval Serbian version that is still preserved, this document was translated into Greek at a date that cannot be determined.⁶ Our translation is from this Greek version. According to Sabbas’ biographer Domitien, a later Serbian archbishop, Nikodemos (1316–24), was subsequently honored as the (second) “founder” (ktetor) of the kellion at Karyes, thanks to his restoration of the facility.⁷ The existence of the kellion has been interpreted to prove the existence of a Serbian hesychastic tradition on Mount Athos,⁸ but Tachiaos (“Monachisme serbe,” p. 85) is rightly skeptical about drawing such a far-reaching conclusion.

Analysis

This brief document is a valuable exemplar of a typikon composed for a monastic dependency that helps to illustrate the nature of the relationship between a “mother” and “daughter” house in Byzantium.⁹ The dependency, consisting of a church and a kellion (actually a tiny monastery), was created [2] to serve as a resting place for monks sent out on assignment from Sabbas' principal lavra and monastery of Hilandar on Mount Athos dedicated to the Mother of God (cf. the origins of the dependencies in (35) Skoteine [10]). Memorial services, presumably for various benefactors, were also conducted [3] here.

A. Lives of the Monks

The “distinctive form of solitary life” devised [2] by the founder for the dependency was that which he apparently embraced for himself. In this sense it was like the chapel Neilos of Tamasia dedicated to St. John the Baptist as described in (34) Machairas [149], a contemporary document. Our author here intended to appoint [4] a housemaster (oikokyrios) who would be his successor in residence at the kellion and the only permanent resident [12], though it could accommodate [2] “two or three” brothers. The housemaster was to enjoy lifetime tenure. He, joined perhaps by such other monks as might happen to be resident there from time to time, was to perform the holy office [8], [9] and Saturday evening vigil service [10] as well as to celebrate [11] the liturgy on feasts of the Lord. These services and the dietary regulations [6], [7] were to be unalterable [12] except for “extreme unavoidable necessity,” though fasting could be moderated for the visit of a “very close friend.”

B. Constitutional Matters

The author asserts [12] the freedom (eleutheria) of the kellion and forthrightly rejects [3] any claims of authority (exousia) over it that the protos of Mount Athos or the superior and the monks of the main monastery might make. Instead, the housemaster was to have [5] “all the authority” over the kellion, which was specifically exempted [3], [13] from having its books, icons or vestments appropriated. The housemaster was also not obliged to accept any [5] unworthy or disreputable monks sent with (entrance) gifts (dora). The superior and the monks, however, were entitled to select [4] the next housemaster, and it was they who supplied [3] the kellion with such commodities as oil, incense, and candles. Although there is no discussion of the financial support of the dependency, presumably this was also a responsibility of the main monastery.

Notes on the Introduction

1. So Talbot, “Karyes,” p. 1108.
2. See discussion in Meyer, Haupturkunden, p. 275.
3. Talbot, “Karyes,” p. 1108.
4. For the founder, see Browning, “Sava of Serbia,” p. 1847, and Obolensky, Six Portraits, pp. 115–72.
5. Ph. Meyer, Die Haupturkunden für die Geschichte der Athosklöster (Leipzig, 1894), pp. 184–87; medieval Serbian original, ed. by V. Ćorović, Spisi Svetoga Save (Belgrade, 1928), pp. 14–150; see also the analysis by Branko Granić, “Disziplinarstrafbestimmungen,” pp. 646–56. For the relationship of this document to (22) Evergetis, see J. Pargoire, “Constantinople. Le monastère de l’Évergétis,” EO 10 (1907), p. 262: “La ressemblance est immense entre les deux règlements de fondation; elle est telle qu’il n’y aurait aucune exagération à dire que l’oeuvre de Sabas consista surtout à traduire en slave le texte grec de Timothée.”
6. So Meyer, Haupturkunden, p. 275; the original Serbian version is edited by Ćorović, Spisi Svetoga Save, pp. 5–13.

44. KARYES

7. Reported in Tachiaos, "Monachisme serbe," p. 84.
8. Vasić, "L'hésychasme."
9. For incidental treatments of monastic dependencies, see the following documents: in the tenth century, (13) Ath. Typikon [9], [34], [36]; in the eleventh century, (9) Galesios [144], (10) Eleousa [17], and (23) Pakourianos [2]; in the twelfth century, (28) Pantokrator [27], (29) Kosmosoteira [108], (33) Heliou Bomon, Prologue, [4], [5], [26], [37], [48], [50], [51], and (42) Sabas [1]; in the thirteenth century, (35) Skoteine [10], [11], [27], [28], [32], [33], [34], [35], [41], [42], [45] and (38) Kellibara I [17]; in the fourteenth century, (48) Prodomos [1] ff.; in the fifteenth century, (60) Charsianeites [A11], [A12], [C2] and (61) Eleousa Inv. [4], [7].

Bibliography

- Beck, Hans-Georg, Kirche und theologische Literatur im byzantinischen Reich (Munich, 1959), p. 649.
- Browning, Robert, "Sava of Serbia," ODB, p. 1847.
- Ćurčić, Slobodan, Hilandar Monastery: An Archive of Architectural Drawings, Sketches, and Photographs (Princeton, 1988).
- Granić, Branko, "Die Disziplinarstrafbestimmungen des vom hl. Sabbas, dem Erzbischof und Gründer der serbischen Autokephalkirche erlassenen Typikons des Chilandar- (Cheilantar-) Klosters," SBN 5 (1939), 646–56.
- Obolensky, Dmitri, Six Byzantine Portraits (Oxford, 1988), pp. 115–72.
- Tachiaos, A. E., "Le monachisme serbe de Saint Sava et la tradition hésychaste athonite," HZ 1 (1966), 83–89.
- Talbot, Alice-Mary, "Karyes," ODB, p. 1108.
- Talbot, Alice-Mary, and Cutler, Anthony, "Hilandar Monastery," ODB, pp. 931–32.
- Vasić, M., "L'hésychasme dans l'Église et l'art des Serbes du moyen âge," in L'art byzantin chez les Slaves. Premier recueil dédié à la mémoire de Théodore Uspenskij (Paris, 1930), pp. 110–23.

Translation

Typikon of our father among the saints, Sabbas, first archbishop of Serbia, which he wrote with his own hand, and which reads as follows.

[1.] "The fear of the Lord is the beginning of wisdom; and all that act accordingly have a good understanding" (Ps. 110 [111]:10), says the godly David. The fear of the Lord is indeed the beginning of wisdom, and correct understanding follows for all those who practice it. For this reason each person who desires to be saved ought to be eager to embark upon his struggle and to proceed along the narrow and difficult way of the Lord's commandments (cf. Matt. 7:14). For our span of life, in fact life itself, my beloved brothers, is as brief as the length of a single day.

[2.] With this in mind I too, the least of all and a sinner, journeyed to the Holy Mountain. There I saw holy men and spirits who were clothed in the flesh of virtue. I saw angels here on earth and I saw men who belonged in heaven. So, deriving my strength from God, [p. 185] I carried on the struggle to the best of my ability. I established a holy lavra and monastery¹ in the name of the most holy Mother of God, and laid solid foundations for a religious community in it. In like manner I managed to acquire a number of cells in Karyes so the monks coming from the monastery on some service would have a place to rest. In addition, there in Karyes I have set up a distinctive form of the solitary life. I constructed a kellion and a church in the name of our holy, God-bearing and sanctified father Sabbas, as a dwelling for two or three brothers (cf. Matt. 18:20), as the Lord says.

TWELFTH CENTURY

[3.] Therefore, let it be known to everyone that I issue this command that nobody, neither the protos,² the superior, nor any other of the brothers of our monastery should have any authority over this kellion of Saint Sabbas. They may not trouble the persons residing in it, nor may they appropriate any of the spices found there, nor the sacred vestments of the church, or the books, or anything else of that sort. Nor may they alienate any of these things or take them off to the monastery, or may the superior of the monastery dispose of any of it. Instead, the monastery ought to give candles, oil, and incense to that kellion for the commemorative services. The oil should amount to sixty litrai, but as far as the rest is concerned, I leave that up to the judgment and will of the superior and of the entire brotherhood of the monastery to give them a sufficient amount.

[4.] If, therefore, they observe the above prescriptions, I believe my God that they will have every good thing they may need. That person whom, after my death, I shall leave behind as housemaster³ in that same kellion shall remain in that position until his death. But after he shall have died, I order that the election of the superior for that place should be carried out in the following manner. The superior and the rest of the brothers of our holy monastery should assemble and select one of the brothers, who is God-fearing and worthy of going off to reside in that kellion, and without further ado they should send him there.

[5.] In that kellion, though, he should have all the authority, as we said, and neither the monastery or its superior may exercise any authority over matters pertaining to the kellion. Nobody shall be sent there by means of gifts⁴ who may not be worthy or who may bring disrepute upon the spiritual regime there and the daily order of service.

[6.] The brother who [p. 186] dwells there has the obligation of being extremely attentive in preserving unchanged this rule which I have laid down, namely, on Monday, Wednesday, and Friday neither olive oil or wine shall be tasted. On the five days of the week only one meal may be permitted, but on Saturday and Sunday fish and cheese may be served, and they may eat twice in the day.

[7.] In the holy and great Lent olive oil and wine may be served only on Saturday and Sunday, but during the forty days before Christmas and during the fast of the Holy Apostles⁵ they may be served on the days of the week in exactly the same way as we indicated above.

[8.] For the divine service, however, the following rules should be observed. Throughout the year, during the office of matins three kathismata should always be recited. For vespers those “To the Lord.” The hours should be sung separately, one at a time. Except that at the first hour there is also reading from the psalter, at the third, sixth, and ninth hours three kathismata should be read, one at each hour as is customary. At the beginning of each kathisma the “Come let us worship” should be recited, three prostrations should be made and at the conclusion of the alleluia another three. Likewise at the conclusion of vespers and matins when “God be with us” is said, and [at the conclusion] of the psalter and the hours and the midnight office and when the “God have mercy on us” is said, let twelve prostrations be made.

44. KARYES

[9.] The midnight office should be recited in the church. It consists of three kathismata, the intercessory canon of the Mother of God, and what remains of the psalter, for this should be completed either during the day or the night, the only point being that the entire psalter be recited each day.

[10.] On Saturday evening the office of vigil should be held with the opening antiphon, the trisagion, and the fiftieth psalm, followed by the canon of the vigil. After these one of the evangelists is read from the book of the four gospels, and matins should then begin. After the six psalms, the “God is the Lord” (Ps. 117 [118]:27) is recited, and three kathismata of the psalter; then come the psalm “Blameless” (Ps. 118 [119]:1), the *eulogetaria*⁶ or the kathismata and a reading, the antiphons, the gospel, the “Resurrection of Christ,” the fiftieth psalm, and the canons with recitation of the psalms.

[11.] Concerning the divine liturgies, as much as possible, [p. 187] it is fitting to celebrate them on the feasts of the Lord. Moreover, he who resides in the kellion should be most attentive in keeping the office of vigil, bearing in mind the Lord’s words. “Watch and pray that you may not enter into temptation” (Matt. 26:41; Mark 14:38). For you eat the fruits of your labors,⁷ and if you do these things you will be blessed.

[12.] We have written these rules for divine service and for observing the fast and for breaking it. We insist that they not be altered or done away with, with the sole exception of an extreme, unavoidable necessity or infirmity, but even then as much as possible it is proper that the monk force himself to go along with the observance. If it should happen that some very close friend should come to visit the person living in the kellion, then the fasting may be made more moderate except for Wednesday and Friday.

[13.] Concerning the freedom of the place and of that kellion, I want it sworn before our Lord Jesus Christ and before his most holy Mother that just as I have written it here, so let it remain free always. If anyone should dare in any way to disturb the occupant of the kellion or should dare to take anything from there, or alienate books or icons, or anything else found there, may such a person be anathema and be bound by the holy, life-giving and undivided Trinity, Father, Son, and Holy Spirit, and by me a sinner, and may he be unforgiven both in this age and in the next one.

Notes on the Translation

Editors' note: The assistance of our translator, George Dennis [GD], is gratefully acknowledged for the notes to this document.

1. Hilandar.
2. The nominal leader of the Athonite community resident at Karyes; see Alexander Kazhdan and Alice-Mary Talbot, "Protos," ODB, pp. 1746–47, and (48) Prodromos [4].
3. oikokyrios.
4. prosenexeis (entrance gifts) must be meant here; cf. their treatment in (22) Evergetis [37] and related documents.
5. Fast of the Holy Apostles, from Monday after the feast of All Saints (Sunday after Pentecost) through the vigil of the feast of Sts. Peter and Paul, June 28.
6. Brief verses for various liturgical days recited during orthros; each one begins: eulogetos ei kyrie. [GD]
7. The text has: "eat the labors of your fruits." [GD]

Document Notes

- [1] Meditation on the brevity of life. See also the perspectives expressed in the contemporary (34) Machairas [1] and (45) Neophytos [2].
- [2] Foundation history; number of monks. See also analogous histories in the contemporary (34) Machairas [6] ff. and (45) Neophytos [3] ff. For contemporary specifications on the number of monks, see (45) Neophytos [9], [C6].
- [3] Inalienability of property; supplies to be provided by the main monastery. For inalienability, see (32) Mamas [12], (33) Heliou Bomon [12], and (45) Neophytos [12]; cf. (34) Machairas [111], which permits certain alienations. For provisions in dependencies, see (35) Skoteine [27], [28], [42]; for support by the main monastery, see (48) Prodromos [11].
- [4] Internal selection of the next housemaster. (48) Prodromos [13] makes a similar provision for another monastic dependency.
- [5] Authority of the housemaster in the kellion; no obligation to accept monks sent with gifts. (48) Prodromos [8] restricts the supervisory authority in another monastic dependency. For rejection of "imposed guests" (katapemptoi), see (27) Kecharitomene [53], (32) Mamas [26], (33) Heliou Bomon [26], and (58) Menoikeion [11].
- [6] Daily dietary regulations. See also comparable regulations in (4) Stoudios [29]; (7) Latros [8]; (11) Ath. Rule [22], [30]; (20) Black Mountain [37], [38], [43]; (23) Pakourianos [8]; (27) Kecharitomene [46]; (28) Pantokrator [12]; (30) Phoberos [16] ff.; (32) Mamas [17]; (33) Heliou Bomon [17]; (34) Machairas [77]; (36) Blemmydes [11]; (39) Lips [32]; (45) Neophytos [C4]; (55) Athanasios I [5]; and (58) Menoikeion [8].
- [7] Restriction on the use of oil and wine in Lent. See also comparable regulations in (4) Stoudios [30]; (7) Latros [5]; (11) Ath. Rule [25], [26]; (20) Black Mountain [56]; (22) Evergetis [10] and related documents; (23) Pakourianos [10]; (31) Areia [T5]; (43) Kasoulon [2], [9]; (45) Neophytos [C4]; (57) Bebaia Elpis [82]; and (60) Charsianeites [17].
- [8] Regulations for recitation of the office. See also the provisions in (20) Black Mountain [10], [11], and [12] with cross-references to treatments in other documents.
- [9] Midnight office. See also other regulations for this office in (20) Black Mountain [15], [16], in (22) Evergetis [6] and related documents, and in (45) Neophytos [C2].
- [10] Saturday evening vigil. See also the provisions in (20) Black Mountain [18].
- [11] Celebration of the liturgy on feasts of the Lord. For vigils and liturgies in connection with these feasts, see also (20) Black Mountain [30], [32], [89]; (25) Fragala [A5]; (27) Kecharitomene [39]; (32) Mamas [32]; (33) Heliou Bomon [32]; and (34) Machairas [34].

44. KARYES

- [12] Unalterability of rules; strict observance of fasts. For the exception for infirmity, see (22) Evergetis [26] and related documents; for eating with guests, see (21) Roidion [B8], cf. [B4].
- [13] Freedom of the kellion; curse on violators. For contemporary assertions of institutional autonomy, see also (32) Mamas [4], (33) Heliou Bomon [4], (34) Machairas [21], and (35) Skoteine [20]; for curses on violators, see (32) Mamas [4], (33) Heliou Bomon [4], (35) Skoteine [46], and (45) Neophytos [22].

45. Neophytos: Testamentary Rule of Neophytos for the Hermitage of the Holy Cross near Ktima in Cyprus

Date: May 9, 1214¹

Translator: Catia Galatariotou

Edition employed: Ioannes Tsiknopoullos, Kypriaka Typika (Nicosia, 1969), pp. 71–104 (notes pp. 104–117), with corrections by K. A. Manaphes, “Paratereseis eis ta ‘Kypriaka Typika,’” Epistemonike Epeteris tes Philosophikes Scholes tou Panepistemiou Athenon 20 (1969–70), 155–68.

Manuscript: Edinburgh University, Ms. Laing 811 (autograph)

Other translations: None

Institutional History

*A. Background to the Foundation*²

The founder Neophytos provides a considerable amount of autobiographical detail in the typikon translated below (in [3] ff.). He was born to a poor family in the village of Lefkara in south central Cyprus in 1134. Fleeing marriage, he embraced [3] a monastic career at the monastery of St. John Chrysostom on Mount Koutzovendis, where he was tonsured in 1152. After six years of service there, Neophytos left [4] in 1158 for a pilgrimage to the Holy Land, but his attempt to find a suitable spiritual master there was unsuccessful. Returning to Cyprus at Paphos, he hoped to sail on to the famous monastic community on Mount Latros, but was arrested as a fugitive. After his release, he sought out a suitable site in the vicinity of Paphos to live as a solitary ascetic. In 1159, he determined [5] upon a site in the mountains, northeast of Paphos. By 1160, he had excavated a natural cave, which he dedicated to the Holy Cross.

*B. Patronage by the Bishops of Paphos*³

In 1166, Bishop Basil Kinnamos of Paphos began to take an interest in Neophytos. Four years later, Neophytos accepted [5] ordination as a priest, took on a disciple for whom Kinnamos provided a subsidy, and (probably with the bishop’s financial assistance) began the construction of a more formal monastery. In 1177, he drew up [1] his first typikon for this foundation, parts of which may be preserved in the later edition of 1214 that is translated below. Basil Kinnamos ratified [22] this first typikon, probably in 1190, as did his successor Bakchos four years later, probably in 1194. This suggests that Neophytos’ foundation may have been a diocesan monastery at this time, though the critical chapter [6] that probably would have made this determination certain is lost.

C. Neophytos' Foundation under Latin Rule

The Latin conquest of Cyprus under Richard I the Lionheart in 1191 was one of the factors that made it necessary for Neophytos to add [10] certain landed properties to the monastery's endowment for the first time. The foundation prospered during these years, gaining a dependency in 1203/1204,⁴ and playing host to pilgrims who may have come to venerate the relic of the True Cross that Neophytos had located [5] for his monastery soon after its foundation. Neophytos drew up [24] the final version of his typikon in 1214, when the holy man must have been approximately eighty years old. In addition to the typikon, Neophytos was the author of a substantial number of other literary works, not all of which have been edited.⁵ It is thought that he did not long survive the composition of his second typikon.

In his final typikon, Neophytos designates [16] his nephew Isaiah as his successor. Apparently the founder's idea of having the monastery led by a recluse was abandoned and the foundation soon became a regular cenobitic institution.⁶ The monastery fared well both under Cyprus' Lusignan rulers and during the era of Venetian rule (1489–1571). At the beginning of the sixteenth century, another monk Neophytos († 1512) conducted a restoration of the foundation and was titled the "new founder" (ktitor). Mango and Hawkins ("Hermitage," p. 129) reckon that the katholikon was built at this time too.

D. History of the Foundation under Turkish Rule⁷

After the Turkish occupation of Cyprus, the foundation lost its landed properties (1585). Its energetic superior Leontios saved it from extinction, however, obtaining a stauropegion for it from the archbishop of Cyprus ca. 1611 and a recognition of its institutional independence from the local bishop of Paphos through a synodical letter issued by Cyril Loukaris, patriarch of Constantinople, in 1631. Hard times in the middle of the seventeenth century forced the monks to sell nearly all the monastery's manuscripts to agents of the French crown; many are still in the collections of the Bibliothèque Nationale. When visited by a Russian pilgrim in 1735, the monastery reportedly had lost its records and its monks were ignorant of who their founder might have been.

This knowledge had evidently been recovered by 1756, when the founder Neophytos' relics were translated from their original resting place in the hermitage to the sixteenth-century katholikon. The typikon, evidently still preserved in the monastery's library, was published at Venice in 1779 at the expense of the steward Joannikios. The foundation suffered severely during the Greek Revolution after 1821. One of its superiors, Joachim, was impaled at Nicosia by the Turkish governor. The number of monks was reduced to ten by 1875, shortly before the British took over the administration of Cyprus in 1878.

E. Neophytos' Foundation in Modern Times

Neophytos' monastery still exists. Mango and Hawkins carried out conservation and restoration of the wall paintings of its component facilities in 1963 in collaboration with the Cyprus Department of Antiquities. The Department then undertook structural repairs to the original cave complex and erected an arcade in front of it to protect it from further deterioration.

Analysis

Neophytos' founder's typikon is a complex document, consisting of his Testament, in twenty-two chapters, followed by a twenty-third chapter consisting of twenty canons, [C1] through [C20], chiefly disciplinary in nature, twelve penal canons attributed by the author to Basil of Caesarea, [CB1] through [CB12], and a twenty-fourth chapter of the author's burial prescriptions appended at the end. Neophytos refers to an earlier version of his Testament, actually cross-referencing it in [9] and [10]. Though he also cross-references the Testament in canons [C2] and [C18], an internal inconsistency betrays the fact that the canons were actually written before the Testament,⁸ though they too seem to have been re-edited from an earlier version (cf. [C19]). There was also once a separate liturgical typikon, now lost, which is referred to for its discussion of liturgical services [12] and the regulation of diet [C4]. The text of Neophytos' surviving founder's typikon is unfortunately defective, often in critically important places: there are gaps in [5], [7], [18], [22], and [C14], while two chapters [6], [17] are missing altogether.

*A. Formal Analysis of the Typikon*1. Use of Neophytos' Previous Testament

The author indicates [1] that this document is a revision of an earlier testament written eighteen years after the foundation of his hermitage, i.e., by calculation, in 1177.⁹ He claims that "certain things shall be removed from the old one, and necessary things inserted into the new one, narrating usefully and harmoniously both a testament and a sequence of expedient things," that is to say, that the present text was intended to serve as both a testament and a founder's typikon. The only definite information provided on the content of the earlier testament is that it provided for only "a very small number of monks" [9] and that the acquisition of landed property was prohibited [10].

2. Evergetian Influences

As it now stands, the document is a kind of "junior" member of the Evergetian reform tradition by virtue of its incorporation of many institutions and principles popularized by (22) Evergetis more than a century earlier.¹⁰ These include the author's preference [9] for quality over quantity in the selection of his monks, the reading of the typikon [11], the daily celebration [12] of the liturgy, the inalienability of consecrated objects [12], the election and installation of the superior [14], the exclusion of women from charitable distributions at the gate [19], the restriction of confession to the superior or his designee [21], the prohibitions of personal property [13], [C10], [C19], secret eating [13], [C11], and unauthorized correspondence with relatives [CB5], and the inspection of the monks' cells [C11].

Like the authors of (28) Pantokrator and (31) Areia, however, our author does not quote directly from (22) Evergetis as his contemporary Neilos of Tamasia does in (34) Machairas, except perhaps in [18], cf. [11] which at least echoes the language of (22) Evergetis [38]. This is the most solid indication that our author may have been aware of the existence of (22) Evergetis or a related text. Yet the long passage of time since the famous reform typikon's creation and the continuous development of Byzantine monastic institutions since then practically assured that that there would be many differences in our author's approach to problems in the early thirteenth century. As we have seen, even in his own lifetime in the interval between 1177 and 1214, he changed his mind on the very basic matters of the size and means of support for his community.

Also noteworthy are the incorporation, particularly in the author's canons, of many distinctly non-Evergetian rigorist observances in diet [C4], bedding [C9], bathing [C9], the practice of manual labor [C6], and penal discipline [C19].

3. Juridical Quality

The author's generally very careful, and unprecedented, cross-referencing of the various texts governing his foundation can be seen as a culmination of a long trend among patrons to invest their foundation documents with the aura of binding legislation rather than letting them be seen as essentially ephemeral expressions of patronal preferences subject to revision by their successors. Fearing the latter, our author notes [22] "I have indeed known that, after the death of certain founders, some of those in the monastery dared to adulterate certain rules of the typikon and to cross out whatever they wished." Perhaps the inexorably evolutionary nature of the typika in the Evergetian tradition actually promoted a dismayingly fluid notion of the textus receptus, motivating more traditional founders like our author here to seek the security of an independent documentary foundation for their monasteries.

B. Lives of the Monks

1. Number of the Monks

The author had provided [9] for only a small number of monks in his previous typikon. Both his own monks and various lay benefactors urged him to accept an increase to from twenty to twenty-five monks (to be funded by the latter) but the author counterproposed a new limit of fifteen to eighteen monks. There is another, probably earlier treatment of this issue in the author's canons, in which he recounts [C16] his unhappy experience with raising the number of monks to fourteen, four of whom he was compelled to expel for bad behavior. His declaration here that "God does not want a multitude of monks, crawling in sin" recalls the language and principle of (22) Evergetis [23]. Instead, the number of the monks was to be kept "small."

Like (29) Kosmosoteira [3], this community was divided [9] into those monks who were responsible for the liturgical services (here called the ekkleusiastikoi, "church" monks) and those who served them (the diakonetai, "attendant" monks). Moreover, as in (34) Machairas [102], the monks here were also distinguished by their dress, as an incidental reference [15] to the "great habit" (megaloschemon) makes clear. The author himself, originally illiterate, had begun [4] his own monastic career working in the vineyards at another monastery, then after five years of study he received a promotion to a position as an assistant ecclesiarch (parekklesiarches), which shows that it was possible for an individual monk to move up in the ranks.

2. Liturgical Duties

A daily celebration of the liturgy and at least some of the canonical hours is implied in [12]. Here also the author declares that it is unnecessary to discuss the church services since these have been explained in the typikon. In his canons, he reiterates [C3] the monks' obligation to perform the canons faithfully and provides [C2] for a shortening of the midnight office in summertime.

3. Manual Labor

According to one of his canons, the author considered [C6] physical labor "useful to all" based on his personal experience. In the testament proper he instructs [15] the future recluse (anchorite) to

THIRTEENTH CENTURY

“practice simple handiwork” but not to seek “base profits.” A garden serving as a courtyard to the hermitage was to be set aside [18] as a place for the monks to practice manual labor. In another of the author’s canons, the monks were prohibited [C13] from having their own private, profit-making occupations. Specific pursuits are not mentioned, but a bakery, a kitchen, a storehouse for produce, and places for stabling animals and storing hay that formed part of the foundation suggest [20] some possibilities.

4. Reception of Postulants

Newcomers were to be read [C17] the author’s canons and accepted into the community if they demonstrated their capacity for living according to their provisions. No specific term for the novitiate is set.

5. Sacramental Life

The author prefers [21] the practice of (22) Evergetis [15] which obliged monks to confess only to their superior or his designee; he rejected the alternative tolerated in (32) Mamas [29] of allowing the monks to have another confessor “because a foreign father does not care much about foreign children.” Yet even the superior was not to hear [15] confessions until he had gained “spiritual mastery,” been tonsured with the great habit, and received the necessary permission from the local bishop. Confession was a prerequisite [21] for communion, but there are no other guidelines for its reception.

6. Cenobitic Lifestyle

Although there is no outright assertion of the superiority of the cenobitic lifestyle, the document endorses many Evergetian regulations designed for its support. According to one of the author’s canons, the monks were [C10] not to have their own money (cf. [13], [C19]) or keep personal supplies of food lest their cells “stink like taverns.” Secret eating is condemned both in the canons [C11] and in the testament [13] proper. The leading monks (rather than the superior as in the Evergetian tradition) were to inspect [C11] the monks’ cells to remove any food and surplus items. A chapter that is now missing from the manuscript of the testament originally regulated [17] the hermitage’s relations with kelliotic monks, suggesting a tolerance towards alternative forms of monastic life also seen in the contemporary (34) Machairas [152].

7. Diet

One of the author’s canons provides [C4] for a diet of uncooked food on all of the weekdays in Lent and on Mondays, Wednesdays and Fridays during ordinary weeks. As in (20) Black Mountain [72] and a generation later in (36) Blemmydes, monks were encouraged to impose more rigorous dietary observances upon themselves but were not required to do so in view of the hot climate. A full discussion of the monks’ diet is omitted [C4] in favor of a reference to the liturgical typikon. The author also implies [C13] that the monastery’s provision of food to the monks entitled it to all the products of their handicrafts. Neither the recluse [15] nor the monks [C12] were to complain about the food and drink provided to them. There is no advocacy of the Evergetian principle of equality and food and drink.

8. Clothing

Observing that virtue is the adornment of the monk, Neophytos prescribed very modest clothing for his flock: grey rather than black outer garments made of inexpensive material [C15].

9. Bathing

Rejecting the ever more lenient trend among the monasteries in the Evergetian tradition towards allowing monks to bathe on a regular basis, our author prohibits [C9] all but the sick and infirm from bathing. He thought bathing especially dangerous for young monks, considered to be like adding “fire to fire.”

10. Relations with Relatives and Other Lay Persons

Visitors, both monks and laymen, were expected [C17] on feasts of the saints and on days of commemoration. Considering his monks to be like fish out of water once they were outside the monastery, the author orders [C5] that they should not leave it except for a “most pressing need.” They were not to become unduly attached [C14] to their lay relatives, at risk of suffering [C19] excommunication.

11. Fear of Homoeroticism

The author is especially concerned to suppress homoerotic tendencies in his monks. He imports [CB6] a canon from the pseudo-Basilian Penitential that provides for the excommunication of a monk found in private with another at night. In one of his own canons, he bans [C6] “playful embraces,” particularly between younger monks. In another canon, he offers [C7] forgiveness after confession and punishment for monks led astray into “carnal sin,” but the unrepentant were to be expelled “so as not to spread the disease to the rest of the monks as well.” The author’s fear may also lay behind his ban [9] on the instruction of lay children, said (incorrectly!) to be “an indecent thing and foreign to the tradition of the fathers.”

A fear of homoeroticism was often coupled with a concern about the possibility of bestiality (cf. (30) Phoberos [58]). On this subject our author returns to the Studite-Athonite tradition in banning [19] female animals: donkeys and mules are said to be “blameworthy, indecent, and unbecoming, especially for those who are still morally unstable.”

C. Constitutional Matters

1. Constitutional Status

The essential details on the constitutional status of this foundation were lost in the gap found in the text of [22], a transcription of a confirmation of the author’s rule issued by Bishop Bakchos of Paphos. Our author, who at a low point in his monastic career needed to be released [4] from jail through the intervention of “some pious persons,” may also have received possession of his hermitage from them. After several years on his own, he was patronized [5] by one of Bakchos’ predecessors, Basil Kinnamos, who seems to have intended to make the hermitage a diocesan monastery. To confuse matters further, there are also appeals to the Byzantine emperor [8] (probably originating in the earlier version of the Testament) as well as to the Lusignan King of Cyprus, Hugh (1205–18) [7]. The latter is described as an administrator (epitropos) and a benefactor of the monastery. Our author seems to have been willing to accept patronage from any available source, yet he managed to keep his foundation essentially under his personal control.

2. Leadership

As noted above, our author acknowledges [7] Hugh, the Lusignan ruler of Cyprus, as the foundation’s administrator. The author envisioned the monarch playing a circumscribed, supportive role like that of the protectors seen in monastic typika of the twelfth century: (27) Kecharitomene [3], (28) Pantokrator [70], (32) Mamas [3], and (33) Heliou Bomon [3]. The effective ruler, as in independent foundations, would have been the superior, here titled the recluse (enkleistos), who was to be [16] the author's nephew Isaiah, then serving as the foundation's steward and evidently still a young man. The author's designation of a relative as his successor betrays the essentially private nature of the hermitage, whatever its precise legal status might have been. He felt sufficiently self-conscious about the choice to assert that he made it "not out of a feeling of family affection, but because he was raised here from a tender age and I have had great hopes for him." Isaiah was entitled to choose another successor if he himself did not wish to accept the honor.

Elsewhere in the document, the author provides [14] for the election of the recluse by the community in a chapter that echoes the procedure and language of (22) Evergetis [13]. The apparent conflict with the hereditary right of appointment implicit in [16] is not resolved. If [14] is not in fact an awkwardly integrated survival from the author's earlier Testament, he may have intended that the determination of the foundation's leader be opened up to the choice of the community eventually.

Since the recluse was necessarily cloistered [14], it was essential that he have assistance in the daily management of the hermitage. Accordingly, the author provides [9] for the appointment of a steward and a treasurer.

3. Patronal Privileges

In keeping with the spirit of the times, conditioned as it was by more than a hundred years of reform ideology, patronal privileges were relatively few. The King of Cyprus was to receive [7] perpetual commemoration in gratitude for his services as the monastery's 'administrator.' There were [12] also daily prayers in the liturgy and at matins and vespers for the emperors, other government officials, bishops, and the foundation's monks past and present.

As we have seen, our author exercises the right to choose [16] his nephew as his successor, and concedes the same right to him. Also, he makes [24] provision for his own burial in the hermitage and requests [12] the benefit of a commemorative offering at each liturgy.

4. Reading of the Typikon

In another provision that echoes the content and language of its distant Evergetian prototype, the author provides [11] for a reading of his testament and the canons three times a year "so that the reading of the rules provokes the brothers into preserving them." As noted above, the canons were also to be read [C17] to postulants for their assent before admission.

D. Financial Matters

1. Financial Administration

The only officials of the monastery mentioned [9] in the document are the steward, then the author's young nephew Isaiah [16], and the treasurer. In contrast to the administrative presuppositions of (34) Machairas [84] where the superior was intimately involved in overseeing all the financial operations of the monastery, here presumably another model applied in view of the recluse's enclosure. The author declares [10] his extreme reluctance to acquire landed property and states that he had actually forbidden such acquisitions in his first Testament. The Latin conquest, hard times, the increase in the number of monks, and the expenses of entertaining many outside visitors required a change of policy.

This suggests that previously the hermitage, like some other foundations originating during the reign of Manuel I Komnenos (e.g., (33) Heliou Bomon, Prologue), had originally been supported with annual subventions derived from external sources of patronage rather than relying in the more traditional way principally on income from its own landed properties. Donations of visiting pilgrims (see [10], [20]) may also have played a part in the financing of this monastery's activities. Be that as it may, the author later decided to acquire some arable land, a vineyard, and livestock to meet the basic needs of his monks though he declares that he should not be held responsible for the negative consequences he foresaw.

2. Inalienability of Property

Just like the author of (32) Mamas [37], our author was more concerned [12] about the protection of his foundation's movable property—the sacred vessels, books and icons—rather than for its more recently acquired landed properties. The author refers [20] to a separate inventory (not preserved) for details on the movables as well as on the thirty relics in the foundation's collection. A shorter inventory of sixteen books is appended to [12].

3. Other Sources of Income

The author's reluctance to acquire landed property is not the only way in which he displays his hesitant attitude towards increasing the foundation's income. While he wanted to build a new church dedicated to the Holy Trinity, he instructs [20] his monks to hold off on this project “so that you may not be begging and annoying certain people,” unless perchance some substantial support were to be forthcoming from either the imperial government or local officials—neither being a likely prospect under the difficult political circumstances at the time of this document's composition.

E. Overall Philosophy

There seems to have been a return in the early thirteenth century to strict disciplinary provisions with accompanying punishments (cf. (34) Machairas [122] ff.) recalling the resort to monastic confinement seen in the much earlier Studite-Athonite documents (4) Studios [25] and (11) Ath. Rule [19]. Even in (32) Mamas [24] in the twelfth century, there are unmistakable indications of the rising popularity of the pseudo-Basilian Penitential, from which our author makes citations (not always accurately) in [CB1] through [CB20]. Strictly interpreted, these had the effect of making the superior the arbitrator of all of the comings and goings of his monks and of their relations with the outside world. Of particular relevance (and irony, given the author's personal history) are the provisions punishing monks who leave the monastery without the superior's consent [CB2], help others to flee the monastery [CB3], fail to try to persuade them not to [CB1], or simply do not inform the superior of those who hoped to make an unauthorized departure [CB4]. Considering that the author himself was tracked down [4] through the efforts of the officials at the monastery of St. John Chrysostom and jailed as a fugitive, the evidence suggests that the personal freedom of individual monks was coming into question.

The author himself states [C19] that he had previously cited disciplinary canons without punishments for transgressors “so as not to make the canons burdensome,” but in this present document he instructs his successors to apply appropriate punishments. A key to the penal system was the sanction of excommunication, the terms of which the author had had inscribed [13] in the narthex of the church and which he provides should be read out each Sunday after the catechetical instruction in the liturgy, thereby visibly excluding and humiliating offenders.

F. External Relations

1. Relations with the Ecclesiastical Hierarchy

Unlike many founders, our author seems to have enjoyed cordial relations with the ecclesiastical hierarchy. Not only did he receive [5] crucial support from Basil Kinnamos, bishop of Paphos, for some four years at the beginning of his residence at the hermitage, but good relations continued during the tenure of Bishop Bakchos, who confirmed [22] his predecessor’s ratification of the Rule. Even the document itself was drawn up by a diocesan notary. Moreover, our author had accepted ordination as a priest from Bishop Basil early in his career. Accordingly, our author was willing to concede to the local bishop liturgical commemoration [12] and the right to grant permission [15] to hear confessions, minimal recognitions though these were of the hierarchy’s claims to spiritual authority over the foundation.

2. Institutional Philanthropy

The hermitage was to provide [C18] charity at the gate to beggars, except, as usual, to women (cf. [19]), on the grounds that “it is indecent and wrong for women to sit by the gate and the enclosure and look inside with dainty eyes”—the first explanation of the basis for the topos found in (22) Evergetis [38]. Nevertheless, since our author does not neglect to provide [19] a punishment for women who disregard the ban and enter the gate, it appears that there were women living in the vicinity, perhaps as tenants on the hermitage’s properties. Hospitality to visitors “who daily come and visit the hermitage on account of its fame,” perhaps to venerate the relics described in [20], is cited [10] as one of the monastery’s greatest expenses though the document provides no information on specific philanthropic provisions.

Notes on the Introduction

1. Revised second edition of a lost first edition, drawn up ca. 1177.
2. See Galatariotou, Making of a Saint, pp. 13–14; Kazhdan, “Neophytos,” p. 1454; and Mango and Hawkins, “Hermitage,” pp. 122–24.
3. Galatariotou, Making of a Saint, pp. 15–16; Laurent, “Typicon,” pp. 52–55; and Mango and Hawkins, “Hermitage,” p. 124.
4. Mango and Hawkins, “Hermitage,” p. 127, n. 25, based on a note in Codex Parisinus graecus 301, fol. 315.
5. For an exhaustive list, see Galatariotou, Making of a Saint, pp. 261–81; cf. Mango and Hawkins, “Hermitage,” p. 128.
6. Mango and Hawkins, “Hermitage,” p. 122, n. 5.
7. See Hackett, Church of Cyprus, pp. 351–54, and Mango and Hawkins, “Hermitage,” pp. 129–32.
8. Cf. [C6] and [9] on the number of monks permitted at the foundation.

45. NEOPHYTOS

9. For the chronology, see Mango and Hawkins, "Hermitage," pp. 122–26, with dating of the first Testament at p. 124.
10. (22) Evergetis [5], [9], [13], [15], [19], [22], [23], [27], [38], [43].

Biography of the Author

- Delehaye, H., "Saints de Chypre," AB 26 (1907), 161–301, esp. 274–97.
Galatariotou, Catia, The Making of a Saint: The Life, Times and Sanctification of Neophytos the Recluse (Cambridge, 1991).
———, "Eros and Thanatos: A Byzantine Hermit's Conception of Sexuality," B&MGS 13 (1990), 95–137.
Kazhdan, Alexander, "Neophytos Enkleistos," ODB, pp. 1454–55
Tsiknopoullos, I., "He thaumaste prosopikotes tou Neophytou presbyterou monachou kai enkleistou," Byzantion 37 (1967), 311–413.

Bibliography

- Beck, Hans-Georg, Kirche und theologische Literatur im byzantinischen Reich (Munich, 1959), p. 633.
Congourdeau, Marie-Hélène, "Le 'Discours sur les saintes lumières' de Néophyte le Reclus," EKEE 8 (1975–77), 113–85.
———, "L'Enkleistra dans les écrits de Néophytos le reclus," Les saints et leur sanctuaire: textes, images et monuments, Byzantina Sorbonensia 11 (Paris, 1993), pp. 137–49.
Englezakes, B., "Anekdoton Hypomnema tou hosiou Neophytou tou Enkleistou eis ten Apokalypsin," EKEE 7 (1975–77), 73–112.
Epstein, Ann Wharton, "Formulas for Salvation: A Comparison of Two Byzantine Monasteries and Their Founders," CH 50 (1981), 385–400.
———, "Phases of Construction and Decoration in the Enkleistra of St. Neophytos near Paphos on Cyprus," BS/EB 10 (1983), 71–80.
Gregory, Timothy, and Wharton, Annabel, "Cyprus," ODB, pp. 567–70.
Hackett, J., A History of the Orthodox Church of Cyprus (London, 1901), pp. 348–54.
Hackett, J., and Papaioannes, Ch., Historia tes Orthodoxou Ekklesias tes Kyprou, vol. 1 (Athens, 1923), pp. 137–46.
Hadjiioannou, I. H., Historia kai erga Neophytou presbyterou, monachou kai enkleistou (Alexandria, 1914).
Indianos, A. C., and Thomson, G. H., "Wall Paintings at St. Neophytos Monastery," KS 3 (1939), 155–224.
Laurent, V., "Le typicon monastique de Néophyte le Reclus. Nombre et dates de ses recensions," REB 7 (1949), 52–55.
Mango, Cyril, and Hawkins, Ernest J., "The Hermitage of St. Neophytus and Its Wall Paintings," DOP 20 (1966), 119–206.
Petit, Louis, "Vie et ouvrages de Néophyte le Reclus," EO 2 (1898–99), 257–68.
———, "Les ouvrages de Néophyte le Reclus," EO 2 (1898–99), 372.
Tsiknopoullos, I., The Enkleistra and Saint Neophytus (Nicosia, 1965).
———, He hiera mone tou Chrysostomou tou Koutzoubende kai ta hiera autes ktismata (Nicosia, 1959).
———, "To syngraphikon ergon tou Hagiou Neophytou," KS 22 (1958), 67–214.
Warren, F. E., The "Ritual Ordinance" of Neophytus (Westminster, 1881) (= Archaeologia 47 [1882]), pp. 1–40.
Wharton, Annabel, "Neophytos Enkleistos, Enkleistra of," ODB, p. 1455.
Volk, Robert, Gesundheitswesen und Wohltätigkeit im Spiegel der byzantinischen Klostertypika (Munich, 1983), pp. 225–27.

THIRTEENTH CENTURY

Translation

Table of arrangement of the typikon with [the help of] God.

Chapter

1. Concerning the drawing up of the Rule.
2. Concerning remembrance of death.
3. Concerning my own reflections and flight from the world.
4. Concerning what followed these and of my establishment in the hermitage and certain mysteries.
5. Concerning the construction of the hermitage and bishop Kinnamos and certain mysteries.
6. Concerning the Paphians.
7. Concerning the King of Cyprus and administrator of the present hermitage.
8. Memorandum to the emperor.
9. Concerning the number of brothers and prohibition of instruction of children.
10. Concerning poverty and the economic remedy.
11. Concerning the reading of the Rule and the canons.
12. Concerning the ecclesiastical office and the priest and the holy vessels and the books of the recluse.
13. Exhortation to the brethren and remembrance of excommunication.
14. Concerning the election of the recluse and prayer for the recluse and the hermitage.
15. Specific exhortation to the recluse.
16. Concerning my own successor and nephew, the ordained monk Isaiah.
17. Concerning the kelliotai.
18. Concerning the garden of the hermitage.
19. Concerning the hermitage's inaccessibility to women, and concerning female beasts.
20. Concerning the buildings erected at the hermitage and consecrated to God and concerning the church.
21. Concerning repentance and confession of sins in deed and thought.
22. Concerning the authorization of the Rule by bishop Kinnamos and ratification by bishop Bakchos. [p. 72] Then an excommunication against removing or adding anything to it.
23. Concerning the recluse, twenty ascetic canons to the brethren, and twelve from the epitome of canons of Basil the Great.
24. Concerning my own passing away and concerning the older hermitage and the tomb, and a final prayer for the brethren. [p. 73]

Testamentary typikon of Neophytos, priest, monk and recluse with [the help of] God. Concerning my own hermitage in the eparchy of the Paphians in the island of Cyprus, the one also called the New Sion, being a godly watch-tower through the goodwill of God. Father, bless.

+ Neophytos, worthless monk, priest and recluse of the Holy Cross, signed with my own hand at the beginning of my testamentary typikon. + + + + + + +

First Chapter: Concerning the drawing up of the Rule

The greatest of all good things is reverence for God (Rom. 3,18) and remembrance of death. Amazed by [the latter's] thieving and secret nature I, after eighteen years of my enclosure in the hermitage, made dispositions, such as the needs of those times demanded of me. But since the provider of life extended the span of my life and fifty-five years have already gone by, the need also arose for another testament. So that certain things shall be removed from the old one, and that the necessary things shall be inserted in the new one, so that they shall be found not to be extraneous and strange, but familiar and relevant, narrating usefully and harmoniously both a testament and a sequence of expedient things.

Chapter Two: Concerning remembrance of death

No mortal has escaped the arrow of death. Wherefore I certainly cannot possibly escape it either. But Christ, you who have died willingly for us, do not will that death should meet me like an arrow, but rather as if in good sleep in your grace.

But being still alive, I think it proper and useful to put in lasting form all about my circumstances, lest what happened and was said to the lazy servant who hid the talent uninvested happens to me (cf. Matt. 26:25). Since I too received this hermitage from the Lord God like a talent. For he offered it to me in a deserted state and he embellished it for me, as he willed. I again laid it upon his all-powerful [p. 74] hand, so that, both while I am alive and after I shall be gone, he shall preserve it and those dwelling in it from invisible enemies, in his grace.

Chapter Three: Concerning my own reflections and flight from the world

Having just reached the chapter bearing the same number as the Holy Trinity, it seems right to me to intimate briefly certain of my circumstances for those desiring [to know them], and thus incite the souls of certain God-lovers towards glorifying God, who not only prevented me from becoming bound under the shackle and yoke of laborious life, but who further acquainted me almost from birth with its difficulty, and with perceiving its sudden changes. For, one lamented for the loss which had suddenly come upon him, while another wailed that his child had met with untimely death. Another was afflicted by poverty because he had many children. Another, while he was rich and admired by all, suddenly fell into poverty, or, death, having suddenly come, deprived him of every happiness, and glory suddenly turned into ingloriousness, filling with wails and lamentations the house which a little while earlier was cheerful. Another fell from honor and dignity into worthlessness. Another was greatly oppressed by the cruelty of heartless tax-collectors. Yet another lamented upon the affliction which unexpectedly befell him.

But perceiving these, I thought to myself that, no doubt, I myself shall suffer the same, once I become entangled in life, and it shall be impossible to escape their difficulty. But even if one can escape such difficulty and revel in all the world's good fortune, what will his gain be since death lies ahead and, as I heard, another world awaits us?

But these thoughts and ponderings were not of my youth and boorishness but the work of certain divine grace and providence. This I artlessly assert in writing and in speech, and "God is my witness; I am telling the truth, I am not lying" (Phil. 1:8; I Tim. 2:7). For upon reflection, I was telling myself that, even if I utterly disappear from this life, God will certainly make me reappear in future life, and I shall again be found. But also, that which I shall now say, I shall truly say in the Lord: that, if some poor vagabond dressed in rags came to my father's house begging for bread, I counted his life as being enviable and blessed, and, had it been possible for me, I would have directly followed him.

THIRTEENTH CENTURY

But no one knew of these thoughts of mine, except for God who bestowed them on me. For which reason my parents earnestly wanted to join me in matrimony, [p. 75] I being then a son of eighteen years of age. For seven months earlier they had confirmed the customary contracts of marriage and the betrothal, and while they were hotly pursuing the things concerning the marriage, I was hotly pursuing ways and means of escaping. Why then, with God's most excellent goodwill and help, having departed secretly from the paternal home, I made my flight's way to the monastery of holy [St. John] Chrysostom on the mountain of Koutzovendis,¹ [believing] that place to be inaccessible to those who were bound to [try to] track me down. There is no need to tell what lamentations took place amongst parents and neighbors and acquaintances, and what searching through every eparchy of the island. I do not bear to speak extensively about how, having apprehended me, after two months, they brought me back again under the yoke, and after what fight and battle and deliberation I dissolved those marriage contracts, but this I shall briefly say, that, as the Lord wanted, so it happened.

Chapter Four: Concerning what followed these and of my establishment in the hermitage and certain mysteries

I deem it necessary also to narrate briefly what followed these, so as not to distress those who love to hear [the story], through interrupting the sequence of the narrative. It is as follows:

Having been deemed worthy of my own beloved tonsure, no bridal ornament, I believe, ever charmed any bridegroom as much, as did me the vesture of the monk's dress with [the help of] God. For I filled with kisses the tips of its cuffs, and I begged the Lord to preserve it pure and unblemished for me until the end. Because I had not been given over to even one day's studying of lessons by my parents, so that I was ignorant of even the first letters of the alphabet, I was thus permitted by Maximos the superior of the monastery to tend the vineyards at the so-called Boupai.

Having served there for five years, and having acquainted myself with the rudimentary elements of letters, and having learned with [the help of] God the Psalter by heart, I was transferred upon the command again of the aforementioned superior from there to the holy church of the divine [St. John] Chrysostom, forthwith holding the office of assistant ecclesiarch. Having clung to this service for two more years, I was greatly vexed by night and by day by love for the contemplative life, which vexed me even when I devoted myself to the services outside the monastery. But I was prevented from this by the superiors of the monastery because of tender youth. [p. 76]

Henceforward then, departing from the monastery, I arrived at the Holy Land of Jerusalem, both for the sake of worship, and in the hope of encountering in those deserts some solitary and eremitic man and follow him. For which purpose, having first searched out the region of Tiberias, even as far as the desert in which Christ blessed the loaves (cf. Matt. 14:17), and the hills of Magdala and Mount Tabor, and then, after venerating the holy and life-possessing tomb, and having searched the desert of Souka, the torrent of Saint Sabas and the regions of the Choziba and of the Jordan, searching the caves like a hunter of bees, and having failed in my aim, I was distraught.

But having spent six months there, I was told through a vision, by God's mercy, that I had to go, not in that desert, but to another place, upon which the King too, it said, shall descend and there stamp the bread. Henceforward then, departing from there, I sailed to Cyprus to the holy monastery of my holy father [St. John] Chrysostom, lest, I thought, my divine call concerning solitude is realized on the slopes of that mountain.

Because the Lord who foresees all did not will this, the heads of the monastery did not will it either, for which reason, immediately departing from there too, I arrived at the fort of Paphos, wishing to sail towards Mount Latros,² expecting to encounter on it some solitary man and serve him. But having been detected by the guards of the harbor and been seized by them as a fugitive, I was put in jail for a night and a day. They deprived me even of the two nomismata which I had for the fare. In their mistaken belief that they would find something more on me, the workers of greed even searched the very seams of my clothes. And injustice belied itself (Ps. 26 [27]:12), finding nothing more. But having been released by the guard through the mediation of some pious persons, I was at a loss, not knowing which was to be my ordained place of promise and rest.

I was forced to say all this, wishing to show how I came to possess the place of this hermitage, of which I was completely ignorant in the past. Now wishing to bypass the length of the story, I shall briefly say that instead of the renowned Latros God gave me this precipice and this smallest of caves. Which was deserted and a resting-place of various birds, but to me it appeared desirable because of the solitary nature of the place, and in hope I settled in it alone. [p. 77]

Chapter Five: Concerning the construction of the hermitage, and concerning the bishop and certain mysteries

In the year six thousand six hundred and sixty seven [= 1159 A.D.], of the seventh indiction, on the twenty-fourth of the month of June, on the birth-day of the venerable [St. John the] Forerunner, having resorted to the said cave, I was twenty-five years old, yet I searched out the solitude of the place even until the month of September. But having discovered that the place was quiet and undisturbed, I started hewing the cave and widening it, and breaking down its unsound parts, and I worked thus throughout all that year, up to and until the following September and the [feast day of the] Exaltation of the Holy Cross.³

Having also fully carved out a tomb deep inside the cave, I told myself: "You shall possess nothing more than this, even if you come to rule the whole world." I called the cave by the name of the Holy Cross, having fixed an altar for the holy rites, so as not to distance myself from the holy communion of the body and blood of Christ.

Five years having passed by, I was also aroused in a laborious search for [relics of] the Venerable Cross and, as always, he who said that "everyone who asks receives and he who seeks finds" (Matt. 7:8) was proved right. For I too found what I was looking for. Then also after some time, my unworthy mind's ear heard a certain honey-dropping strange and unusual voice, saying thrice, "Remember," that is to say "your prophesied profession in the desert," namely "Go to another place, in which the King too, descending there, shall stamp the bread." Together with this there are also certain other [things], but what need is there to reveal those too, as if my honesty would be observed from these? But let these be for the glory of God.

Moreover, after a few years, by means of a vision, I thought I was going up the mountain of Olympos, facing Lefkara [and] my native city of Amathous, as if to venerate the Cross of Christ, and lo, a voice saying to me “After fifty days” and anew for the second time “After sixty days.” [p. 78] The fulfillment of this saying still remains obscure.

THIRTEENTH CENTURY

During those years, the see of Paphos was vacant, and in the seventh year of my sojourn in the hermitage it was wedded to that blessed man Basil Kinnamos. For led by God, he showed great favor and faith towards my humbleness. He did not cease to incite me for an entire four-year period: on one hand he himself constantly visited me, and on the other, he exhorted me through his officials, until he placed me under the yoke of priesthood and persuaded me to take up a disciple to live with me, having also drawn up a sigillion for the sufficient living allowance.

Thereafter the structures of the hermitage began to be extended and adorned, and the entire length of the cliff was thoroughly hewn out for the construction of cells. In the twenty-fourth year of my enclosure, the hermitage was painted throughout, and the cliff next to it, hewn out, was consecrated as the church of the All-Holy Cross . . . [gap in text]

[Chapter Six: Concerning the Paphians] [Missing chapter]

Chapter Seven: Concerning the King of Cyprus⁴ and administrator of the present hermitage [Gap in text] . . . but also, I implore you to attend to this my holy hermitage, as an administrator after God. Whenever because of some greed wrong is committed against it by one of the more cruel persons to the affliction of the brothers, with [the help of] God vindicate this quickly, as a man having power from God, and let your reward, from God, be the salvation of your soul. Thereupon, as benefactor, as administrator and as brother, you shall also have eternal commemorative services in my holy hermitage. If for a certain most urgent need the brothers think fit to send one of them to the emperor, [p. 79] co-operate with this and speak up for the brothers so that their request shall be met, and the mercy of God shall be upon you for this favor. Amen.

Chapter Eight: Memorandum to the emperor

We often see how a stone runs headlong down until [it reaches] the plain. I too, Lord emperor, with feet moving on their own, rushed to your noble [majesty], with this present writing. For I have heard that “a king loves justice” (Ps. 98 [99]:4) and I was convinced that you too, God-guarded from above, shall not overlook my memorandum, but shall fulfill, whichever is the request of my disciples and your servants who are praying for you, who persevere in this my holy hermitage and who officiate in the church of the Venerable Cross in it. Christ, “the king of glory” (Ps. 23 [24]: 7–10), shall reward by recompense your divine rule and shall strengthen and protect and make your reign mighty for long years. Amen.

Chapter Nine: Concerning the number of brothers and prohibition of instruction of children

In my previous testamentary Rule I had regulated for a very small number of brothers. But noting this provision in the rule, not just the brothers about me but also some of the learned laymen came together and they meekly requested that the number of brothers be raised up to twenty or even twenty-five, having also precisely calculated the sum of money necessary for such a number of church and attendant monks, “lest,” they said, “some of the good people may desire to live here and, if they are held back by the rule, you shall be found to be the cause of grief and faintheartedness both to them and to us.”

45. NEOPHYTOS

I answered these by saying that I had not so regulated out of hatred for the salvation and communal living of the good and many, but because I was taught by experience, both of the cenobitic systems and of what I expressly wrote about in my sixteenth chapter, that communal living of the many and ignorant and knavish and unruly and querulous breeds much noise and scandal. If certain such good men resort here for the glory of God and their salvation and their number is raised, as you said, I myself would certainly be no obstacle to those in whom God delights. Let the number then be raised to fifteen or even eighteen. [p. 80] He who feeds and provides for the few, shall have no difficulty in feeding also the many, and especially if [they are] good. Let the most God-fearing and prudent among them be steward, and another of similar qualities, be treasurer, so that the recluse shall always remain quiet and undisturbed.

I neither agree with nor urge the instruction of lay children in the hermitage. For this is an indecent thing and strange and foreign to the tradition of the holy fathers. For which reason I too properly forbade it. "Remove not," it is said, "the old landmarks which thy fathers placed" (Prov. 22:28).

Chapter Ten: Concerning poverty and the economic remedy

I hold that of every material possession none is better than the estate of poverty, as it always accompanies holiness. For it was thus that those who shook off their own property cleaved to the apostles, as the book of their acts plainly describes (Acts 2:45). Having at all events, brethren, acquired this most precious estate of holiness, do not also acquire wealth and a pair of oxen and arable land and the disturbance of cattle, so as not, having approached the world, to lose solitude, harm greatly your soul, and place the public servants above your head. For behold, fifty-five years have gone by since this hermitage was constructed, and, possessing none of the things pertaining to life, the Lord deprived us of none of his goods.

These I had regulated fittingly and well in my first testament. But our country having fallen to the Latins⁵ and all the people having been deprived of every necessity, it was obviously natural that we would also fall into hard times, both because of the superabundance of the brothers and because of the increased expense, not simply because of our needs, but also because of the outsiders who daily come and visit the hermitage on account of its fame.⁶ But because great expense at all events needs certain income and expenditure, and the brethren with good reasons disturbed me with these, I myself submitted to their desire, that is to say to acquire a little arable land and a vineyard and moderate numbers of sheep, to serve their very basic needs. You, brethren, I implore the Lord God to preserve unharmed from their soul-harming effects, and me in His mercy to judge innocent of this action. [p. 81]

I exhort you, brethren, to hasten to be shown, with the help of God, as being disposed towards these acquisitions piously and wisely and without passion, seeing that I too, shrinking from their soul-harming effect, renounced their possession for fifty-five years. If now upon their acquisition you become enslaved to sin, let the Lord pronounce me innocent of such illness. For it is better to be dead to sin and alive to justice, than dead to justice and alive to sin. Let my witness be the Lord Christ. "What does it profit a man to gain the whole world and forfeit his own life?" (Mark 8:36). To him who has been enslaved in sin, many lands and numerous herds shall be of no benefit whatsoever. Better, it is said, "a pittance honestly earned than great gains ill gotten" (Prov. 16:8).

THIRTEENTH CENTURY

Chapter Eleven: Concerning the reading of the Rule and the canons

But in order that all these are not submerged into the depths of forgetfulness by the lethargy-prone mind, we command you, brethren, to read out this present rule and the canons thrice a year on an important day, when none of the brothers is absent. Let then the first reading be on the eighth of the month of September because of the birthday of the Mother of God, and the second on the feast of Christmas, and the third on the Annunciation of the perfectly pure Mother of God,⁷ so that the reading of the rules provokes the brothers into preserving them.

For thus God also commanded in the old times through Moses, to read frequently the law (Deut. 31: 11). As long as the law was read frequently, the wickedness of the people was also more moderate, but when the reading of the law ceased, they fell into myriads of unlawful and impious acts. Thence forward, having proceeded little by little into total forgetfulness and contempt of the law, they neither observed Passover nor offered sacrifice to God, but lived as the rest of the “Gentiles who do not possess the law” (Rom. 2:14).

But in the days of Josiah the King, a certain archpriest (called) Hilkiah, having found the book of the law in the temple of God, presented it to Josiah the King. Josiah, realizing that the law had been rejected for many years and the people were lawless, “rent his clothes” (II Kings 22:12), and begged the priests and the prophets to appease God in his and his people’s favor, and he himself, inflamed by divine zeal, destroyed “pillars” of idols and sacred groves and “altars” and every abominable rite, and Josiah the King utterly destroyed those pagan [p. 82] temples “which Solomon had” built “for Ashtoreth” and “for Chemosh” (cf. IV Kings 23:13–15), for his foreign wives, Moabites and Ammonites, and he slaughtered the priests of the idols, and “ordered all the people to keep the Passover to the Lord their God, for no such Passover had been kept” since “the Judges were ruling Israel” (IV Kings 23:21–22). There was then great displeasure in God because of the abolition of the law, and God commanded that the entire people be delivered to captivity. But appeased by the King’s zeal, he again commanded that he end in peace all the remaining time of his reign, and so it happened.

During the reign of King Jehoiakin, Nebuchadnezzar the King of Babylon and Nebuzaradan his chief minister, coming up, destroyed the city and that famous temple, and led the people to captivity in Babylon, where they were enslaved for seventy years (IV Kings 25: 8–12).

I recollected this story very briefly, wishing to show how good it is to listen to and preserve salutary laws, and that we are justly delivered to afflictions and captivities for the overstepping of commands. Of which I do not wish to say more. But I shall only briefly say the wise proverb, that “He that keeps the commandment keeps his own soul” (Prov. 19:16). I, placing my trust in the Lord, say that he who shall keep what has been laid down in this book, shall be saved with the grace and help of God. Amen.

Chapter Twelve: Concerning the ecclesiastical office and the priest and the holy vessels, and the books of the recluse

Since the typikon of the church explains about the daily church service, I consider it unnecessary to talk at length about it. But I shall briefly say this, that this command of the typikon must not be overlooked and the reading of the Psalter must not be touched on cursorily, and that you must not neglect reading the liturgical books in time, nor be lazy in reading the catechism, for the glory of God and the benefit of those desiring it.

45. NEOPHYTOS

You must observe daily during the vespers and the matins and the holy liturgy the prayers for the emperors and magistrates and bishops and for the ministers [of God] past and present. You must not neglect the services for the Saturdays and Sundays and feast days and of the great saints. [p. 83] If this is not a burden to you, present God with an offering for me too at every liturgy.

Let the officiating priest be pure and unblemished with [the help of] God, so that his sacrifice would be welcomed by God. For, if according to the divine Paul, the unworthy layman “falls under judgment” (I Cor. 11:29) for partaking of the mysteries of Christ, so much more does the sacrificer and celebrant of the body of Christ. If you carry on with [the help of] God according to our instructions, I trust that, as obedient, you shall also enjoy in greater abundance God’s protection and salvation of the soul, by Christ’s grace.

The holy vessels and the books and the holy icons, as having been consecrated to God and to the holy hermitage once and for all, no one should remove any of them, either by authority or as a gift, lest both the giver and the receiver be subjected to the curse and excommunication from the church. Beware!

There are with [the help of] God also the writings of the recluse, sixteen small and large books, of which the three larger are panegyrikai.

Two other books of many letters very beneficial to the soul, in which are also four hundred ascetic chapters and twenty-four Telonia.

A book in fifty chapters, containing also a commentary on the Song of Songs.

Another, [The book] of the Divine Sign.

Another, a commentary on the Hexaemeros in sixteen homilies.

Another, a commentary on the Psalms in twelve homilies.

Another, a commentary on the canons of the twelve feasts of the Lord.

Another [book] in twelve chapters, the notebook of the recluse, referring to [the events] of forty and fifty years and to natural phenomena.

Another [book] in twenty chapters, contains clear and concise commentaries on the Lord’s commandments in the Old and New Testaments.

Another, the book of catechetical instruction.

Another small [book] of penitential stichera.

Another, this present testamentary Rule.

Yet another, the so-called Last [Book].

Sixteen books altogether, which, being new, must not be overlooked at all events by those who love virtue and God. But having perceived that the writings are not of human wisdom or subtle verbiage but of the grace of the Holy Spirit, they shall glorify the Triune God. Amen. [p. 84]

Chapter Thirteen: Exhortation to the brethren, and remembrance of excommunication

Let us hurry, brethren, God helping, to be detected by the all-cultivating God as being clean soil, fruit-bearing and receptive of spiritual seed, so that when the summer of our life comes we shall fill our bosom with the sheaves of eternal life.

Let us know a time for fasting and a time for eating, a time for sleep and a time for waking, a time for rest and a time for labor.

Let no discord and envy, strifes and knavish rivalries settle in your midst.

THIRTEENTH CENTURY

Do not work at covert and improper errors. For God sees everything. Basil the Great commands eschewing the sin of secret eating, even that of merely licking and tasting.⁸

Having hated the grievous illness of covetousness, be healthy in poverty. For those who fell ill with that illness died while still living. As for you, acquiring no money of your own, be content with what God provides the monastery.

Let us hasten to achieve a humble spirit before God and men.

But before all these comes a sacred and pure life. Do not forget the excommunication which I have inscribed in the narthex of the church that does not permit him who has fallen into sin to dwell here, unless he quickly rises through confession and sincere repentance. For God loves the pure and uninhabited desert more than the soiled world. This excommunication must be read out every Sunday, after the reading of the catechetical instruction, without fail, so that the brothers are incited to safe-conduct, with the help of God.

Chapter Fourteen: Concerning the elections of the recluse and prayer for the recluse and the hermitage

When, brethren, the incumbent passes away and departs from this life, do not strive against each other who shall first grab the seat of the hermitage. For such wretchedness is a mark of love of glory and conceit. For he who sits in the hermitage vaingloriously and heedlessly, shall be found out to be more of a simpleton than the one who dwells in virtue outside it. Since it is not the place but the manner [of living] with [the help of] God which saves man. For if the place on its own and without the manner saved man, the angels would not have fallen from heavens, our forefathers would not have fallen from paradise, Judas would not have become a traitor from the apostolic company. [p. 85]

Although I can mention a great many examples of this sort, I shall not because I prefer above all to speak briefly. Thence I shall briefly say that, avoiding every intrigue and envy, you shall elect him who in word and deed is worthy of the life of a recluse, and, when you will have carried out the forty [days'] commemorative services for the past recluse praising God in a vigil, then, after the end of the holy liturgy, you shall bring him with [the help of] God up to the hermitage, the New Sion, and after the customary trisagion, read out to him also the prayer which I wrote for the recluse and the hermitage. You, on the one hand, must come down immediately, and let him, on the other, begin resolutely the life of enclosure, with the help of God.

I do not advise him against well-timed spiritual talk to the brethren, and especially if he is blessed with the art of speech and knowledge. Talk is better than silence. For silence only benefits its own laborer, while the word also benefits many others. Christ the Lord also taught this in deed, on some occasions habitually visiting and teaching the crowds, on other occasions spending his time on the mount in solitude and prayer. If we also do likewise, we shall reap the benefit of both.

Prayer: "Christ our God, the cause and provider of everything good through the goodwill of thy Father and the cooperation of the Holy Spirit, thou who strengthened and shed thy grace on Elijah of Tishbe in the old days and more recently upon John thy Forerunner and Baptist so that they led the solitary and eremitic life and achieved the angelic life on earth (emulating their life and following on their footsteps were Antony, Euthymios, Onouphrios and their companions). Thou, O Lord, the giver of good things, shelter, preserve, sanctify, hold steadfast and strengthen this slave of thine, too, who has forsaken everything by his own free will and chosen the life of a recluse and a solitary, so that, strengthened by thy might, he may follow in the footsteps of thy aforementioned saints and the holy men who shone forth [from the top of] pillars. By thy mercy make also this hermitage inaccessible to invisible and visible foes, through the intercessions of thy perfectly pure Mother, thy all-venerable Cross and all thy saints. Amen.”

45. NEOPHYTOS

Chapter Fifteen: Specific exhortation to the recluse

This exhortation is laid down not just for one recluse, but for each one from generation to generation.

You, brother, who have chosen the life of a recluse, acquire [p. 86] above all remembrance of death and prepare your actions for your life’s end. Acquire freedom from care, the best foundation of solitude. Live with the chanting of psalms and prayer and reading, through which many came near God.

Practice simple handiwork, not wracking your brains for base profits. Alleviate the sickness of covetousness with the medicine of poverty. Preserving meditation and mastery over your thoughts, do not engage from the beginning of [your life as] a solitary in conversation with many [people] and especially stupid ones.

Do not hear the confessions of some [of the brothers] before you acquire spiritual mastery. For this caused many to fall into the pit of perdition, as I have found out from them, and instead of uplifting others they themselves fell and instead of healing [others] they were invisibly wounded. But when you avoid passionate thoughts and pleasure-loving inclinations through the divine inclination leading to the love of God, and are tonsured in the great habit and receive the official blessing of a bishop, as the Fathers prescribe,⁹ then you shall not be lacking anything to be proclaimed a spiritual father. For they say of him who receives confessions without [having received] this blessing that neither his censure has any force nor is his release considered a release. For it is said: “What have you that you did not receive?” (I Cor. 4:7).

Have “a broken heart and a humble spirit” (cf. Ps. 50 [51]:17) before God, patience with everyone, and practice as much fasting as your strength permits.

In all your affairs appeal for help with all your heart to Christ our God, the helper of the helpless; and, brother, take courage leaning on good hopes. For it is said: “Did ever any trust in Lord and was confounded?” (Eccl. 2:10) or “Did any abide in His fear and was forsaken?” (Eccl. 2:10) and “Will God forget to pity?” (Ps. 76 [77]:9) or “Will a woman forget her child, so as not to have compassion upon the offspring of her womb? But if a woman should even forget these, yet I will not forget thee, saith the Lord” (Isaiah 49:15, 8). Even if “the gate is narrow” at the beginning for want of experience and “the road is hard” (Matt. 7:14) for our want of strength, yet with the passage of time, the “yoke is easy to bear” and “the burden” is found to be “light” (Matt. 11:30).

Staying within, “go forth” like a man to your spiritual “work and to your labor till the evening” (Ps. 103 [104]:23) of your life, so that you may say rejoicing: “How great are thy works, O Lord! In wisdom hast thou wrought them all” (Ps. 103 [104]:24) even with regard to me.

Refrain from discontent and muttering that you may not be found onerous and troublesome about your food and drink and the [p. 87] lighting up of your cell, but gratefully satisfied with what is easily available. For if self-control and contentment with little is praiseworthy in every man, it is even more so in the case of a monk leading the anchoritic and solitary life. For although I, too, many times wished to have just ten grains soaked in water during the public festival of the Exaltation of the Holy Cross, they were not given to me nor did they remember me. Yet, I reckoned that this was not done out of contempt but because of the multitude of people and because I was hidden away and not easily seen. This happened not once but at different times during public festivals, seeing that I did not touch anything softened by fire. I did not want to mention this, but mention it I did, brother, in order to incite you to patience.

THIRTEENTH CENTURY

Thus when you have finished the race well and arrived well at the end, by the grace of Christ, you will have certainly glorified by your good deeds the Father together with the Son and the Holy Spirit. He promised to glorify in turn those who glorify him (cf. John 17: 22–24).

Whosoever wishes must not come up to the upper hermitage unimpeded, so that there may not be confusion and disturbance [in the upper hermitage] as there is in the lower one; unless, of course, a few and pious men request to come up out of faith.

Chapter Sixteen: Concerning my own successor and nephew, the ordained monk and steward Isaiah Firstly I entrust this place of my holy hermitage and those settled in it to Christ my God and his undefiled Mother and his divine Cross, and then to my nephew, the ordained monk and steward Isaiah. I place the holy hermitage and all that accrues to it and the spiritual and physical protection of the brethren under his authority and power, with the help of God, not indeed out of a feeling of family affection, but because he was raised here from a tender age and I have had good hopes for him. If perhaps a malicious and envious man, motivated by the workings of the Devil, annoys and offends him, causing him to run away from here, let the “wrath of the Lord” (Zach. 7:12) be his just adversary and let him have the Lord’s Cross as his implacable enemy. Heed this warning! [p. 88]

But if he, by his own free will, departs from here in some mad thirst for fame, or if he is seen to be disposed of carelessly, neglectfully and contemptuously towards what has been imparted and entrusted to him, he himself will certainly reap the benefits of his labors, for “a man reaps what he sows” (Gal. 6:7) as both experience and the divine Paul teach. Pay attention also to what Solomon advises: “Son,” it is said, “if thou be wise for thyself, thou shalt also be wise for thy neighbor; and if thou shouldst prove wicked, then thou alone will bear the evil” (Prov. 9:12).

Let these be sufficient, child, for your safety. But if you decline the appointment, either because of your still flourishing youth, or because of your continuous ministration as steward, you do not have the strength required for the enclosure of the hermitage, elect another, with God’s goodwill, only one virtuous and greatly experienced and fittingly dignified for this service, for the sake of his own abundant good repute and salvation, and the strengthening of many, and God’s glory. Amen.

Chapter Seventeen: Concerning the kelliotai [Missing chapter]

Chapter Eighteen: Concerning the garden of the hermitage [Gap in text] . . . the deepest seasonal river cutting through the middle of this garden. Against the cells hewn on the precipice of the hermitage, the depth and the length of the ravine has been filled and covered with earth, and (the bed of) another seasonal river was forcefully cut through against the opposite side.

Whenever it overflows more violently and deviates into the garden and buries it with sand and stones and utterly covers it, who is capable of describing how much tormenting labor is required of the brethren in order to clean it up? However, because, as we have already said, it has four-fold authority from divine providence, and serves as a courtyard of the hermitage and as a place of manual labor for the brethren, let no one hinder its use in the hermitage so as not to find God as his avenger, for having hindered God's providence. [p. 89]

Chapter Nineteen: Concerning the hermitage's inaccessibility to women and concerning female beasts

Safety [from danger] and [from] the unforeseen is always good. "All things are lawful for me," it is said, "but not all things are helpful" (I Cor. 6:12) and, "let all be done decently and in order" (I Cor. 14:40). For this reason I too command that the bounds of the holy hermitage be inaccessible to any woman. If any woman, out of depravity, enters inside the outer gate, she shall fall under the punishment of feeding on dry food for forty days, and of carrying out the same number of genuflections throughout these days, so that both she is taught and she teaches others not to cross boundaries of discipline and not to overstep salvific rules. We have decreed thus, not because we loathe our fellow-human beings,¹⁰ but we wrote thus in order to preserve the discipline of the place. For it is unbefitting for the shipmaster to permit causes of scandal and shipwreck to enter the harbor. For the region of the hermitage being separate from the world and solitary, it ought to preserve also the likeness of a haven of salvation.

But together with these we also command this, that it is unbefitting to have for service in the monastery of the hermitage a female donkey or a mule. For such a thing is blameworthy and indecent and unbecoming, and supportive of "the devices of the devil" (Eph. 6:12) towards evil, and especially for those who are still morally unstable and lacking in the fear of God.

Let Christ my God, the master of all, steer also this hermitage and all those in it towards harbors of salvation by his grace. Amen.

Chapter Twenty: Concerning the buildings erected at the hermitage and consecrated to God and concerning the church

It is not unbefitting that the buildings at the monastery of the hermitage would appear to be built by God, for there was no intention on my part to build. For this reason, I had built some small enclosure against the edge of the cliff from the beginnings [of my sojourn]; this and only this existed for eleven years, and I did not wish to build anything more nor to accept cohabitation with any disciple.

However, the fifth chapter has intimated briefly about the hermitage and the hewing out of the nearby cliffs for the building of cells, and so this chapter shall briefly speak about the following buildings. These are as follows: [p. 90]

THIRTEENTH CENTURY

Far from the hermitage we laboriously built a big gate, having seats and recumbent benches, affording an adequate resting place. But having ascertained that a certain mischief and pollution had taken place therein, I said “Hateful repose, cause of hell,” and requested the brothers to demolish it to its foundations, and to rebuild another gate at some distance from it farther up, constructing neither a broad roof nor seats in it: which stands to this day with [the help of] God free from any mischief.

Then [there are] a bakery, a kitchen, a store-house, with its upper storey for putting away produce, various cells, and two more [cells] in the garden. Likewise the cells by the fountain, those of the lower floor being for stabling animals and storing hay, while those of the upper floor, for habitation. Then, the steward’s office and above it the portico with its five arches, and within these arches hewn in the precipice the refectory for midday meals.

Then, the narthex and its upper storey [which is] the sacristy. Again above this, my sanctuary and holy chapel, wherein I am sanctified by partaking of Christ’s sacraments and by the chanting of the holy hymns. Again, above the aforementioned sanctuary, [is] the new hermitage of the New Sion, the work abounding in God’s providence. And another cell, the one called the cell of [St. John] the Forerunner, hewn in the precipice.

Then again, the very great building by the seasonal river, which was very laboriously built with many arches. Upon these arches, if and when God wills it, there shall be built another church in the name of the holy and consubstantial and life-giving Trinity.¹¹ I neither agree nor urge that you begin this building while you lack the funds and are unable to meet its expenditure and costs, so that you may not be begging and annoying certain people because of lack of necessities: unless a rich and imperial right hand is extended to you by God’s guidance, or some magistrate’s support is providentially forthcoming. For holy and very great works are also in need of [great] expenditure. But if however such assistance does not materialize and your hand remains poor, you shall be satisfied with the church of the Holy and all-venerable Cross of Christ which I myself have hewn out of the cliff. So much about these.

Concerning the divine icons and the holy vessels and the precious woods of the Cross and the holy relics of martyrs and holy men, whose number is thirty, and which I embellished in longing desire and faith as well as I could, the inventory [p. 91] expands on these in greater detail. These were furnished here not through my power, but through the providence and sanction of God, in whose all-powerful hand I have entrusted piously all these and this place and those living herein.

Chapter Twenty-One: Concerning repentance and confession of sins in deed and thought

It is written that “they were baptized confessing their sins” (Matt. 3:6), and “He that covers his own ungodliness shall not prosper” (Prov. 28:13). For this reason I too exhort my brothers in Christ, those staying in the monastery of my holy hermitage from generation to generation, to confess readily their mistakes and their wretched thoughts either to the recluse father or to whosoever he shall promote [as confessor] from those here. For the fathers do not advise having as spiritual father a monk in an alien monastery, because an alien father does not care much about alien children. To triumph over sin through pure confession is proof of repentance and abstinence from evil. For he who still retains evil also hides it. Thence I command such a person not to partake in communion of the awesome sacraments of Christ. For of those enslaved in sin “no one will see the Lord” (Heb. 12:14), without repentance and confession of sins. The Lord Christ is the true witness saying “Repent, for the Kingdom of Heaven is at hand” (Matt. 4:17). Of which may he deem us worthy in his mercy.

Chapter Twenty-Two: Concerning the authorization of the Rule by Bishop Kinnamos and ratification by Bishop Bakchos [Gap in text] . . . I command that none of the superiors or of the monks, or simply any other person whosoever, shall alter or overturn something from the rules of the said recluse, or shall cause any distress to the brethren staying in the hermitage, unless he happens to be a lover of injustice and a stranger to goodness, and wishes to bring upon himself the curses of the three hundred and eighteen God-bearing holy fathers, and to be subjected by our mediocrity through the Holy Spirit to excommunication from the holy church and from communion of the holy body and blood of Christ.

Let those who ratify in deed the rules and are well-disposed towards everything concerning the hermitage [p. 92] have from God the blessing of the patriarch Abraham and the support of the Cross of Christ.

I wrote these in my own hand in the presence of many witnesses and with great confidence, and, knowing well about the said recluse, I ratified this his rule on the sixth of the month of January, of the eighth indiction.¹²

+ Basil by the mercy of God the lowly bishop of Paphos +

The copy of the signed ratification of lord Bakchos, bishop of Paphos.

Our lowliness having read the present Rule, and having ascertained the rules herein to be good and to God’s liking, I signed it in my own hand for further assurance and confirmation, in the month of May, of the twelfth indiction.¹³

+ The worthless sinful monk Bakchos and, even though unworthy, bishop of Paphos. +

This then is the testimony and signature and confirmation of the aforementioned bishops.

Then an excommunication against either removing or adding.

I, having composed this Rule of twenty-four chapters, deemed it right to secure it by means of an excommunication, so that no one shall dare to add or remove anything from it. For I have indeed known that, after the death of certain founders, some of those in the monastery dared to adulterate certain of the rules of the typikon and to cross out whatever they wished, as if they had not heard: accursed is he who “removes the ancient landmark” (cf. Prov. 23:10) and “Remove not the old landmarks which thy fathers placed” (Prov. 22:28).

I therefore write for security thus:

If someone contrives to destroy this present rule or to add or remove anything from the rules of mine laid down by me with [the help of] God, [p. 93] let him firstly fall under the above-mentioned curse, and then be excommunicated from God’s glory and the holy church and the sacraments of Christ.

THIRTEENTH CENTURY

Chapter Twenty-Three: Concerning the recluse, twenty ascetic canons for the brethren, and twelve from the epitome of canons of Basil the Great

+ Table of Twenty Ascetic Canons [C]

- Ch. 1 Concerning the purpose of the canons
- Ch. 2 Concerning the ecclesiastical office and the midnight service
- Ch. 3 Concerning the need to run quickly to church
- Ch. 4 Concerning eating dry food for three days and concerning the holy fasts
- Ch. 5 Concerning staying out of the monastery and poverty
- Ch. 6 Concerning monks playing, and that physical labor is also useful
- Ch. 7 Concerning a brother fallen into sin
- Ch. 8 Concerning grievous slavery
- Ch. 9 Concerning bath and bed
- Ch. 10 Concerning not having one's own money nor food in the cells
- Ch. 11 Concerning secret eating, and of the need to inspect the cells of the brothers
- Ch. 12 Concerning no complaints over food
- Ch. 13 Concerning self-control and handiwork
- Ch. 14 Concerning separation from secular relatives
- Ch. 15 Concerning clothing and the madness of vainglory
- Ch. 16 Concerning the number of brothers
- Ch. 17 Concerning invitations and concerning the newcomer
- Ch. 18 Concerning beggars at the outer gate
- Ch. 19 Concerning the punishments, and the recluses
- Ch. 20 Concerning love, and a summary in verse [p. 94]

+ Twenty ascetic canons of Neophytos, ordained monk and recluse, to the brethren of the hermitage

Father, bless.

[C1] Canon One: Concerning the purpose of the canons

In my desire, brothers, that you be ascetics in word and deed, I imitate the painstaking toils of painters, who, desiring to complete a drawn image, are liberal in their application of colors, and then by applying varnish¹⁴ over it, they brighten up the painted image, and bind the colors together. Just like them, I too mixed together many colors in the form of words through panegyric writings, through catechetical instructions, through epistles, through punishments, through the rule. Then, in place of varnish, I also wrote the present canons, so that, with the help and grace of Christ, we shall return again to our original beauty in God's image, from which we fell.

[C2] Canon Two: Concerning the ecclesiastical office and the midnight service

Concerning the ecclesiastical office we have already written in the twelfth chapter of the rule. But concerning the midnight service we say this, that it is unbecoming for a monk to lie [sleeping] as if dead until the striking of the semantron but one ought to have already gone to the church and be singing “At midnight I rose to give thanks to Thee” (Ps. 118 [119]: 62) and so on. During the summertime, because of the length of the day and the very short duration of the night, he who does not have the strength to sing the usual midnight service in its entirety should not miss the whole service, but he should sing at least half of it. For the half-withered is preferable to the completely dried-up, and the one-eyed is better than the entirely blind.

45. NEOPHYTOS

[C3] Canon Three: Concerning the need to quickly run into church

Once the wood [semantron] is struck, one must quickly hasten to church, in the same way that, when the wood [semantron] is sounded for meals, everybody hurries towards the refectory, lest they miss any of the food served. They are distraught if something has already been consumed and they were not there in time. Yet one ought to be far sadder if one sleeps uncaringly or in some other way neglects and does not partake in the inexhaustible food of divine doxology. But he who is truly ill or with good reason otherwise busy, is worthy of forgiveness.

[C4] Canon Four: Concerning eating dry food for three days and concerning the holy fasts

On Monday, Wednesday and Friday of each week, [p. 95] the brothers living the ascetic life in the hermitage must eat dry food, except when engaged in heavy labor or commemorating one of the great saints. But during the great and holy Lent one must eat dry food on five days of each week. Those who wish to and are capable of more [than this], shall also reap more of the fruits of goodness. But the days of fasting during the fast of Christmas and that of the Holy Apostles¹⁵ must be kept without fail according to the command of the typikon of the Church, and we demand no more than that, because of the hot weather and the length of the daytime.

[C5] Canon Five: Concerning staying out of the monastery and concerning the safety of the monks

Unless there is a most pressing need, an ascetic of the hermitage must not stay out [of the monastery], and especially in the company of laymen. For such a thing is improper and truly dangerous. But, just like a fish cannot bear to stay on dry land, fearing death, but eagerly seeks the water, likewise the true monk does not bear staying out of his cell.

[C6] Canon Six: Concerning monks playing and that physical labor is also useful Secret and unattested is the fall of two monks who playfully embrace each other, especially if they are younger [monks], as I heard from those who suffered this. But it is necessary to punish and stop those who playfully embrace thus.

We know that physical labor is useful to all. This little I myself know from experience. For one who labored wisely and harvested, shall say: “God see my humiliation and my labor” (Gen. 31:42), and forgive all my sins. He shall be confident that this shall come to pass.

[C7] Canon Seven: Concerning a brother fallen into sin

If one of the brothers is led astray to a carnal sin, which I pray may not happen, if his soul is wounded and with confession he hastens towards repentance, let him be allowed [to remain here], and let him carry out the work of the punishment relative to the sin, so as to make sure that he shall not sin again. As for the one who is not so inclined, let him be ousted from here like a diseased sheep, so as not to spread the disease to the rest of the monks as well. For it is easier to participate in evil than to partake in goodness.

THIRTEENTH CENTURY

[C8] Canon Eight: Concerning grievous slavery

Our country having been terribly enslaved to a Latin nation, and divine providence having preserved us free, we, brothers, have a duty to preserve ourselves free from sin, [p. 96] with [the help of] God, and to thank and glorify God our benefactor as he so deserves, so as to attract even more of his divine providence.

[C9] Canon Nine: Concerning bath and bed

A monk of the hermitage, and especially a young one, must not bathe and add fire to fire, except in case of illness or infirmity due to old age. Neither must a monk lie down to sleep on a bed, but on a mat, just as the angel of God enjoined godly Pachomios.¹⁶ But he who uses a bed because of illness or old age is not to be blamed.

[C10] Canon Ten: Concerning not having one's own money nor food in the cells

To have one's own money or food in one's cell is the clearest proof of covetousness and gluttony and a dissolution and transgression of community order. He who is not content with the provisions of the monastery is condemned as greedy. For the cells of the brothers must not stink like taverns, but must smell sweetly as places of prayers.

He who acquires his own silver or copper is at all events led by his increasing passion to recklessly commit sacrilege, stealing and selling and appropriating the property of the monastery. Such petty cash then also incites one to desert the monastery.

He who keeps food in his cell and is not content with what is offered in the refectory is doubly condemned, both because he was a glutton and because he became a bad example to the brothers. Such a monk must be punished, until he learns to conduct himself like a monk.

[C11] Canon Eleven: Concerning secret eating, and of the need to inspect the cells of the brothers

The gluttonous disease of secret eating caused the fall of many, and caused the first-formed himself to be utterly cast off from paradise. I therefore beseech you, brothers, not to be defeated by this passion, like the "poor man devouring in secret" (Hab. 3:14), as it is written, so that you shall enjoy the manifest delights of paradise when the time comes.

The leading monks of the hermitage must examine the cells of the brothers and, if any food or any other superfluous thing is found, they must remove it, and urge the brother not to do anything like that again. This is not simply a new rule devised by me, but one which has been laid down by the God-loving scriptures and by many of the holy fathers¹⁷ [p. 97] for the correction and safety of the more gluttonous of the brothers, in order that they shall be saved.

[C12] Canon Twelve: Concerning no complaints over food

They say "Eat, as it becometh a man, those things which are set before thee; and devour not, lest thou be hated" (Eccl. 33:16). For the true monk does not complain in the refectory nor does he say why this or that food or drink is not offered, but “gives thanks to God” (Rom. 14:6), “content with what he has” (Heb. 13:5), and they become his salvation and flesh and blood, and his spoon like a two-edged sword slaying complaining thoughts. But if they eat their fill and complain, “when their food was yet in their mouth,” they say “the indignation of God rose up against them” for their ungratefulness “and slew the fattest of them” (Ps. 77 [78]:30–31). But we have an obligation, brothers, to thank God, whether for richer or for poorer. For we did not promise God to “fatten” ourselves like pigs for “the day for slaughter” (James 5:5). Instead, we promised to walk “the straight and narrow road” (Matt. 7:14).

45. NEOPHYTOS

[C13] Canon Thirteen: Concerning self-control and handiwork

The greatest wisdom for the monk is the control of tongue and belly. For they say that “every athlete exercises self-control in all things” (I Cor. 9:25). But those who, against the advice of the superior, occupy themselves with handiwork for their own profit, have their hands truly plunged into injustice, eating the bread of the monastery and pursuing their own profit at the same time. But the holy fathers offered their handiwork at the same place as fed them with bread. For, according to Basil the Great, the ascetic must not have private occupations.¹⁸ I also give this advice to my monks in the hermitage, not to be distracted by anything outside your own monastic life, nor to get entangled in machinations, so as not, having lost the call of obedience, to reap the fruit of following one’s own devices.

[C14] Canon Fourteen: Concerning separation from secular relatives

It is improper to be attached to secular relatives . . .

[Gap in text] . . . [p. 98] relatives, so as not to appear to God that we betrayed our promises of renouncing the world.

[C15] Canon Fifteen: Concerning clothing and the madness of vainglory

I do not approve that the brothers of the hermitage wear a dark-dyed or black or double-woven outer garment, but one that is battered, grey and shabby, as befits true monks. For adornment is superfluous to the monk. For a layman in the world adorns himself, as perhaps when he is about to enter into marriage. But the monk must also adorn himself with virtue, as he too is about to enter into heavenly union.

But one must also be on his guard against the madness of vainglory. For this embellisher, being the beginning of the fall and the foremost evil, accompanies not only fine array but also squalid rags and coarse clothing.

[C16] Canon Sixteen: Concerning the number of brothers

Suffice what I wrote in the ninth chapter of my regulation as to the number of brothers, and [only] if they are found to be good. But if not, it is better for a shepherd to have ten sheep rather than fifty goats. God does not want a multitude of monks, crawling in sin.

For I once decided, following the exhortations of many, to admit certain [monks] for the sake of [their own] benefit. The number was raised to fourteen, who, instead of deriving any benefit, were harmed and their discord threw us into disarray. For four of them, getting together in bad company, held drinking sessions and secret conversations, not listening to my words of warning, were complaining, and everything that they had “said in the dark” was “proclaimed” not only “from the housetops” (Luke 12:3), but even outside the monastery due to the violence of the upheaval. Divine providence allowed none of that disorderly group of four to remain here. Whose sin may the Lord forgive, and as for me, I learnt from experience that it is a mistake to dwell with many and wicked [people]. I therefore advise that a small number [of monks], peaceful and contemplative, must remain in the monastery of the holy hermitage.

THIRTEENTH CENTURY

[C17] Canon Seventeen: Concerning invitations and concerning the newcomer

If some laymen or monks have invited a monk of the hermitage [to celebrate] feast days and commemorations of saints, [p. 99] I do not permit [the monk] to follow him who extended the invitation, so that he does not, having returned to his cell like a prisoner, stand in need of toil and trouble and many days to free his mind from the fantasy of what he heard and saw.

When some newcomer requests to be admitted in the hermitage, these canons must first be read by way of preface to him, and, if he undertakes and is capable of living according to their content, well and good, and let him be admitted, but if he stumbles, let him be ousted.

[C18] Canon Eighteen: Concerning beggars at the outer gate

I praise and urge that you do as much good as you can, to those arriving at the outer gate and begging for some of the necessities, but in no wise to women, as I have also commanded in the nineteenth chapter of my rule. For it is indecent and wrong for women to sit by the gate and the enclosure, and look around inside with dainty eyes. For the Lord loves almsgiving, as a great almsgiver [himself], but he also hates almsgiving causing sin. Therefore I too have forbidden such almsgiving without hesitation.

[C19] Canon Nineteen: Concerning the punishments and the recluses

It was necessary for us to define also the punishment, in accordance with the custom of the old canons, for those who might in future transgress. But I readily passed this by, on the one hand so as not to make the canons burdensome, and on the other so that, if the canons are kept not through force but through free will, those who keep them shall be seen to be more praiseworthy. For “He that keeps the commandments,” they say “keeps his own soul” (Prov. 19:16).

However, those who hold the office of recluse at any time shall have the authority, with [the help of] God, to punish in moderation and humaneness the transgressors. For example: Has someone stayed out? Let the cause be interrogated, and, if it is a reasonable one, let him be forgiven, but if it is unreasonable, let him be punished accordingly. Does another, having affection towards worldly relatives and having been advised, disobey? Let him be excommunicated from the church, and debarred from the refectory, until he corrects himself. Likewise, for the one having silver or copper. Likewise and for the rest of the canons, those who clearly transgress them, shall be punished with the purpose of salvation, for whose sake I myself have drawn up these canons with [the help of] God.

45. NEOPHYTOS

[C20] Canon Twenty: Concerning love

“Love” is the “wholeness of knowledge and prophecy alike” (cf. 1 Cor. 13:8–10), through which God himself, becoming a man, [p. 100] suffered death, and, having decreed love to be the sign of his teaching, he said: “By this all men will know that you are my disciples, if you have love for one another” (John 13:35).

For hatred is compared to a most wild sea, while love to a most calm haven. Which I pray, brother, you shall carry as most blissful money and purse in the bosom of your heart, so that, according to the divine commandment, you shall live in peace and “love one another” (John 13:34). For which reason I too, like a key of pure gold together with a precious seal, placed love as the end of the canons, safely keeping out the foe of love.

“Then the peace of God, which passes all understanding, will keep” (Phil. 4:7) the hearts of all of us in his grace. Amen.

+ Summary in verse.

Pay attention, brethren, to the laws of God, for “the words that I say to you I do not speak on my own authority” (John 14:10).

One, I painted an august picture of virtues.

Two, I gave counsel to chant psalms in the middle of the night.

Three, I provoked you to run willingly to church.

Four, I laid down a rule for passion-killing fasting.

Five, I forbade staying out and excessive possessions.

Six, It is bad for monks to play, and good to labor.

Seven, He who is wounded by sin should lament.

Eight, To be enslaved to sin is foreign to monks.

Nine, It is necessary to abstain from bathing and bed.

Ten, Do not usurp money or food.

Eleven, Do not eat in secret, and search the cells.

Twelve, One must thank, not moan when eating.

Thirteen, Self-control and communal labor are noble.

Fourteen, Affection for relatives turns the heart towards the world.

Fifteen, Comely clothing is a sign of conceit.

Sixteen, Better a few than a bad multitude of men.

Seventeen, It is good to flee harmful fairs.

Eighteen, It is good to give alms to those from whom no harm will accrue.

Nineteen, The recluse must punish with compassion.

Twenty, The apex of all good things is possession of love. [p. 101]

God shall preserve for those who preserve these [canons] an undecaying and eternal life. Amen.

+ A selection of benefit for those who wish it from the Epitome of Canons of Basil the Great, twelve canons. [CB]

THIRTEENTH CENTURY

[CB1] Canon One: He who knows of a brother contemplating flight from the monastery, or, having conversed with him, agrees with him and does not denounce his plans, shall be excommunicated for one week.

[CB2] [Canon] Two: If one, contrary to the superior's opinion, goes out of the monastery without the blessing and full consent of the superior, he shall remain without holy communion.

[CB3] [Canon] Three: If one conspires with another to depart from the monastery, he shall remain without holy communion.

[CB4] [Canon] Four: If one knows of a brother contemplating to depart secretly from the monastery and does not impart this to the superior, he shall be excommunicated.

[CB5] [Canon] Five: If one is found writing to someone or accepting a letter without the superior's knowledge, he shall be excommunicated.

[CB6] [Canon] Six: If one is found in the night in private with another, he shall be excommunicated.

[CB7] [Canon] Seven: If one, being in good health, remains asleep, while there is chanting of psalms at church, he shall be excommunicated.

[CB8] [Canon] Eight: If one, who has a quarrel with a brother, is about to receive holy communion, before he is reconciled with him, he shall be excommunicated.

[CB9] [Canon] Nine: If one exacts vengeance on another, chastising him over an error, he shall be excommunicated.

[CB10] [Canon] Ten: If one, without having been commanded, gives out or receives something, he shall be excommunicated.

[CB11] [Canon] Eleven: If one, contrary to the superior's opinion, sends to or receives a gift from someone, he shall be deprived of the gift [of blessed bread].

[CB12] [Canon] Twelve: If one is deprived of the gift [of blessed bread] and, being annoyed, does not accept this, he shall be excommunicated for one week.

This dozen of canons then gathered from the canons of Basil, the wise in the things of God and great illuminator and our father, was added to ours like a divine relish for embellishment inspired by God, since "the inferior is always blessed by the superior" (Heb. 7:7). Yes indeed, but also for the embellishment and salvation of such souls as choose to preserve saving commandments. Because it is said that "he that keeps the commandments keeps his soul safe" (Prov. 19:16), and that he who transgresses them shall be known. What shall he be known as? [p. 102] It is clear that he shall be known as a willing transgressor and a man contemptuous of his own salvation.

45. NEOPHYTOS

+ Next concerning a request and memorandum for release of the excommunicated.

+ By Neophytos, priest, monk and recluse to the brothers of the monastery of [St. John] Chrysostom in the Queen of Cities¹⁹ a memorandum concerning . . . [gap in text]

Chapter Twenty-Four: Concerning my own passing away, and concerning the older hermitage and the tomb, and for the brothers, and a last prayer

Father, bless.

“O incredible miracle!” it is much more fitting to say: “O incredible death.” For “death succeeds all these.” So that “even if a man should live a thousand years they are as yesterday” (cf. Ps. 89 [90]:3) to him, and even if he rules all the lands and all the seas, from all that infinite and great power, he is found to be the ruler of only one rod of earth, in which he was buried.

But I do not bear to go on philosophizing about these. But rather, having discussed some brief thoughts about the sunset of our lives, I shall end the road here.

If I then am found worthy upon that hour to be called before God—for all die upon God’s beckoning, but not all are called to ascend towards God. For how can those who came to pass all their life in impiety and uncleanness and greed, then go up to all-holy God? For “light can not consort with darkness” (II Cor. 6:14). When God-fighting kings, tyrants and men alienated from God die, does God call them to him? Will he not rather say: Away with all sinners so as not to see “the glory of the Lord?” (cf. Ps. 96 [97]:6). But concerning these also I do not wish to say more. But if, as I said earlier, I am found worthy to be called towards God and Jesus Christ our Lord, do not, brothers, weep for me profusely, for you shall be seeing nothing foreign to any mortal nature, but instead, having carried out the proper prayers for me and having glorified the all-pitying God and having sent upwards to him the customary hymns, bury my humble corpse in the tomb which I have hewn out in the cliff of the hermitage, having dressed it with the burial rags which I put together long ago and placed in a coffin made of pine, cedar and cypress wood.²⁰ Bury it that way with the mercy of God the Father and pray be with it also the grace of his only-begotten and beloved Son, who willingly suffered for us and was buried and resurrected after three days through the power of his divinity, [p. 103] and the great gift of the all-holy and life-giving Spirit. May the Triune God save it together with my soul, to its praise and glory, through the intercession of the sacrosanct Mother of God and the all-sacred Cross and all the saints.

But having destroyed the wall of the tomb in order to insert the coffin, and again rebuilding it afterwards, do not let there be a little door as there was before, but enclose it completely, and outside, where the little door stood before, paint an icon, whichever the Lord brings to your mind. Thus build up the place, so that many of the strangers will not know that a tomb lies inside it.

But do not let this complete enclosure be a cause of grief to you, nor disobey, so as not to fall into the sin of disobedience, but rather [act] so that the Lord shall furnish you with the reward of obedience. Because, just as, while alive, this frail body embraced solitude as a gift from God, likewise, having died, it chose to preserve [solitude] until the common resurrection, when “all who are in the grave shall hear the voice of the Son of God and all who hear shall come to life” (John 5:25, 28) and they “will rise to meet the Lord” (I Thess. 5:17) and venerate him.

THIRTEENTH CENTURY

But let me make this also known to you, brothers, that this older and presiding hermitage,²¹ because of the holy and august icons painted in it, maintains the full measure of a holy place of prayer. That is why certain men, having rushed once and twice to sit down in it, were unable to do so. For it seems to me that no one has so far been able to sit down in it. For if the Lord treasured it for some other use, who is he who has the power to disagree? and if some insolent man wants to simply sit down in it as if in a common cell, this is unholy and repugnant, and he shall be seen to be a foe of his own self and plotting against himself.

Last prayer for the brothers

May God the father, “who” through his only-begotten and beloved Son and our Savior Jesus Christ “called” us “in his eternal” kingdom and “glory, establish and strengthen” all of “you” (I Pet. 5:10), brothers, in his all-holy and saving will, and grant deliverance of sins, through the intercessions of the all-blameless Mother of God and the all-sacred Cross and all the saints. Amen.

+ +

+ of Neophytos, priest, monk and recluse

+ The hand of Neophytos the recluse after prefixing [his signature] has presently sealed this book, having placed his own signature as a fence. +

My present testamentary typikon with [the help of] God, [consisting] of twenty-four chapters, was written by the hand of worthless Basil, priest, teacher, and notary of the notaries of the most holy bishopric of Paphos, the son of the catechist, on the month of May the ninth, of the second indiction, in the year 6722 [= 1214 A.D.]. + + +

Notes on the Translation

1. For this foundation, see Hackett, Church of Cyprus, pp. 356–58.
2. The famous monastic settlement near Miletos, for which see (7) Latros, Institutional History.
3. Feast of the Exaltation of the Holy Cross, September 14.
4. This would have been Hugh (1205–18).
5. Cyprus was conquered from the usurper Isaac Komnenos by the crusader King Richard I the Lionheart of England in 1191.
6. Perhaps to venerate the relic of the Holy Cross mentioned above in [5]; cf. discussion of the public festival of the Exaltation of the Holy Cross in [15] below.
7. Feast of the Annunciation of the Mother of God, March 25.
8. Basil of Caesarea as quoted in John Klimakos, Scala paradisi 14, scholion 20, PG 88, col. 733C.
9. See the discussion of this issue in (28) Pantokrator [120].
10. Cf. the language of (22) Evergetis [38], ed. line 1185.
11. The monastery’s katholikon was not actually built until the early sixteenth century; see Mango and Hawkins, “Hermitage,” p. 129.
12. Probably 1190 A.D.; see Laurent, “Typicon,” p. 54, endorsed by Mango and Hawkins, “Hermitage,” p. 124, n. 13.
13. Probably 1194 A.D.
14. beronike: not in the dictionaries. The context indicates that it is here synonymous with the modern Greek berniki, “varnish.” See Demetrakos, Lexikon, s.v. berniki(on).
15. The Christmas fast or fast of St. Philip, from November 15 until Christmas; the fast of the Holy Apostles is from Monday after the feast of All Saints (Sunday after Pentecost) through the vigil of the feast of Sts. Peter and Paul, June 28.

45. NEOPHYTOS

16. See the Regula monastica ab angelo allata 32, ed. C. Butler, Lausiac History, vol. 2 (Cambridge, 1904), p. 89. On the word for “mat,” charadriou, see Lampe, PGL, s.v.
17. See (22) Evergetis [27] and related documents.
18. Cf. Basil of Caesarea, Regulae fusius tractatae 41 ([LR 41]), PG 31, col. 1021BD.
19. For this foundation, see Janin, Géographie, vol. 3, pp. 271–72.
20. See Mango and Hawkins, “Hermitage,” p. 197.
21. See Mango and Hawkins, “Hermitage,” p. 129.

Document Notes

- [1] Discussion of the need for another testament. See other examples of revisions of prior testaments in (24) Christodoulos [B], cf. [C]; (25) Fragala [B], [C], cf. [A]; and (51) Koutloumousi [B], [C], cf. [A].
- [2] Meditation on death. See also the other reflections on this subject in (5) Euthymios [3]; (6) Rila [2]; (7) Latros Introduction; (10) Eleousa [1]; (24) Christodoulos [B1]; (25) Fragala [A6], [B6]; (30) Phoberos [1]; (34) Machairas [1]; (35) Skoteine [1]; (41) Docheiarion [1]; (44) Karyes [1]; (48) Prodomos [1]; (49) Geromeri [2] ff.; (50) Gerasimos [1]; and (51) Koutloumousi [A1], [C1].
- [3], [4], [5] Founder’s autobiography. See Galatariotou, Making of a Saint, pp. 13–18, and Mango and Hawkins, “Hermitage,” pp. 122–29; cf. the accounts of contemporary foundations in (34) Machairas [6] ff. and (35) Skoteine [2] ff. For a subsequent allusion to the role of Bishop Kinnamos and his successor Bakchos, see also [22] below.
- [6] Concerning the Paphians. A missing chapter, perhaps specifying the relationship of the foundation to the local diocesan authorities; cf. [5] above and [22] below.
- [7] Designation of the king of Cyprus as trustee. See also a possibly similar arrangement suggested in (34) Machairas [147], [161], cf. [160].
- [8] Memorandum to the emperor. Perhaps, like [12] below, a holdover from the first edition of Neophytos’ Testament; see also a similarly anachronistic reference in (34) Machairas [160]. For the author’s political outlook, see Galatariotou, Making of a Saint, pp. 205–25.
- [9] Increase in the number of monks; ban on the instruction of lay children. For the number of monks, see also [C16] below and (22) Evergetis [23]; for explicit divisions of the community into church and attendant monks, see also (28) Pantokrator [19], (29) Kosmosoteira [3], (35) Skoteine [9], (37) Auxentios [6], and (39) Lips [4]. (34) Machairas [115] also forbids the instruction of lay children, but (36) Blemmydes [9] argues otherwise; even our author was evidently willing to make an exception for a close relative, for which see [16] below.
- [10] Utility and dangers of landed property. For the latter, see also (34) Machairas [111], which permits alienation of distant properties whose administration might involve the risk of “spiritual harm.”
- [11] Provision for reading the Rule and canons. See also (22) Evergetis [43] and related documents, (32) Mamas [16], (33) Heliou Bomon [17], and (58) Menoikeion [9]. For reading of the canons to postulants, see [CB17] below.
- [12] Importance of performing the office; required commemorative and liturgical observances; moral character of officiating priest; inalienability of consecrated objects; inventory of books. Cross-referenced in [C2] below. For the daily celebration of the liturgy, see (22) Evergetis [5] and related documents; for the inalienability of consecrated objects, see (22) Evergetis [19] and related documents. Mango and Hawkins, “Hermitage,” p. 128, discuss the contents of the foundation’s library; the existence of a longer inventory is noted in [20] below.
- [13] Exhortation to the monks; no secret eating, ban on personal possessions; threat of excommunication. For the ban on secret eating, see also (22) Evergetis [9], [22] and related documents. For the ban on personal possessions, see also [C10], [C19] below and (22) Evergetis [22] and related documents.
- [14] Election of the recluse. See also the original governing role of the recluse in (22) Evergetis [13].
- [15] Exhortation of the recluse. For the recommendation of manual labor, see also [18], [C6] and [C13] below; for hearing confessions, see also [21] below.
- [16] Designation of a successor. For use of a testament to designate a successor, see also (1) Apa Abraham

THIRTEENTH CENTURY

- [1]; (10) Eleousa [11]; (24) Christodoulos [B3], [B5], [C1]; (25) Fragala [A7], [B7]; (41) Docheiariou [4]; (48) Prodromos [6]; (49) Geromeri [14]; (50) Gerasimos [3]; and (52) Choumnos [A3]. Note that in (22) Evergetis [13], there is also a presumption that the steward will be advanced to the superiorship.
- [17] Relations with kelliotai. A missing chapter; cf. comparable chapters in (24) Christodoulos [A24], (34) Machairas [152], (37) Auxentios [11].
- [18] Maintenance of the hermitage's garden. For monastic gardens in other documents, see (23) Pakourianos [32]; (27) Kecharitomene [79]; (34) Machairas [22]; (35) Skoteine [36]; (39) Lips [44], [49]; (40) Anargyroi [4]; (54) Neilos Damilas [16]; (57) Bebaia Elpis [124], [145], [157], [159]; and (60) Charsianeites [C4].
- [19] Ban on women and female animals. Cross-referenced in [C18] below. For similar bans on women, see (22) Evergetis [38] and related documents, (53) Meteora [7], (58) Menoikeion [14], and (60) Charsianeites [C2]; for the fear of bestiality, see (3) Theodore Studites [5], (13) Ath. Typikon [31], and (30) Phoberos [58].
- [20] Description of new buildings at the hermitage. See discussion of these structures in Mango and Hawkins, "Hermitage," pp. 133–35. The inventory mentioned here is not preserved, but see the list of books in [12] above.
- [21] Confession exclusively to the recluse or his designee. See also [15] above, with (22) Evergetis [15] and related documents; cf. alternate arrangements tolerated in (32) Mamas [29] and (33) Heliou Bomon [29].
- [22] Episcopal confirmations of the Rule; curse on transgressors. For the role of the bishops of Paphos in the foundation of the hermitage, see also [5] above; there was probably a further discussion of their rights in [6]. For other thirteenth-century curses on transgressors, see also (35) Skoteine [46] and (37) Auxentios [2].
- [23] Introduction to the ascetic and Basilian canons. There is a mostly different set of the pseudo-Basilian canons in (34) Machairas [122] through [134].
- [C1] Purpose of the canons. For reading of the canons to the monks and to postulants, see respectively [11] above and [C17] below.
- [C2] Regulation of the midnight office. See also other regulations for this office in (20) Black Mountain [15], [16], (22) Evergetis [6] and related documents, and (44) Karyes [9].
- [C3] Prompt response to the summons to the offices. For the use of the semantron, see (4) Stoudios [2], (11) Ath. Rule [1], and (22) Evergetis [6] and related documents.
- [C4] Diet for fast days and other periods of fasting. For diets for fast days, see also (7) Latros [8]; (11) Ath. Rule [30]; (20) Black Mountain [38], [43]; (27) Kecharitomene [46]; (30) Phoberos [16] ff.; (32) Mamas [17]; (33) Heliou Bomon [17], (34) Machairas [77]; (36) Blemmydes [11]; (39) Lips [32]; (43) Kasoulon [2], [5]; (55) Athanasios I [5]; and (58) Menoikeion [8]. For the regulation of the Lenten and other fasts, see also (4) Stoudios [29], [30]; (7) Latros [5]; (11) Ath. Rule [23], [24], [25], [26]; (20) Black Mountain [38R], [54], [56], [62] ff.; (22) Evergetis [10] and related documents; (23) Pakourianos [10]; (31) Areia [T5]; (28) Pantokrator [12]; (43) Kasoulon [2], [9], [10]; (44) Karyes [7]; (57) Bebaia Elpis [82]; (58) Menoikeion [8]; and (60) Charsianeites [17].
- [C5] Only exceptional absences from the monastery permitted. See also similar provisions in (3) Theodore Studites [10], (13) Ath. Typikon [33], and (55) Athanasios I [6].
- [C6] Playful embraces banned; commendation of manual labor. For fear of homoeroticism, see also [CB6] and (possibly) [C7] and [C9] below. For manual labor, see also [15] and [18] above and [C13] below.
- [C7] Treatment of carnal sin. Possibly a reference to homoerotic behavior; see [C6] above and [CB6] below.
- [C8] Reflection on the Latin conquest. See Galatariotou, Making of a Saint, pp. 219–20, and Mango and Hawkins, "Hermitage," pp. 126–27.
- [C9] No bathing or use of beds. (30) Phoberos [46] also forbids bathing; for the use of mats in place of beds, see the Pachomian Praecepta [87], ed. A. Boon, Pachomiana Latina (Louvain, 1932), p. 38; trans. A.

45. NEOPHYTOS

- Veilleux, Pachomian Chronicles (Kalamazoo, Mich., 1981), p. 160: “For sleeping . . . one must always use the reclining seat allotted to him.” with Praecepta [88], ed. Boon, p. 39, trans. Veilleux, p. 161: “And no one shall spread anything on his reclining seat except a mat.”
- [C10] No money or food in cells. See also [13] above, [C11] and [C19] below, and (22) Evergetis [22] and related documents.
- [C11] No secret eating; inspection of the monk’s cells. See also [13] and [C10] above, [C19] below, and (22) Evergetis [22] and related documents.
- [C12] No complaints over food. In a more specific case, see also (22) Evergetis [41] and related documents.
- [C13] No pursuit of handiwork for profit. For manual labor, see also [15], [18], and [C6] above.
- [C14] Impropriety of attachment to secular relatives. See also (3) Theodore Studites [8], (13) Ath. Typikon [32], and (22) Evergetis [18] and related documents; the penalty of excommunication is prescribed for violators below in [C19].
- [C15] Clothing to be very modest. See also (3) Theodore Studites [19], (13) Ath. Typikon [33], and (57) Bebaia Elpis [104].
- [C16] Number of monks. See also the discussion of this issue in [9] above.
- [C17] Reception of postulants. See also (24) Christodoulos [A26], (34) Machairas [60], and (55) Athanasios I [8].
- [C18] Charitable distribution at the gate except for women. See also [19] above, with (22) Evergetis [38] and related documents.
- [C19] Authorization of moderate punishments. See [13] for the sanction of excommunication inscribed in the narthex of the church.
- [C20] Scriptural lesson on love; verse summary of the canons. Cf. table of contents in [23] above.
- [CB1] Punishment for not betraying a monk planning to flee. Cf. [CB4] below and Poenae 40, PG 31, col. 1312B.
- [CB2] Punishment for unauthorized departures from the monastery. Cf. Poenae 12, PG 31, col. 1308C.
- [CB3] Punishment for conspiring to leave the monastery. Cf. Poenae 14, PG 31, col. 1308C, and the author’s personal experience as a fugitive from his original monastery in [4] above.
- [CB4] Punishment for not betraying a monk planning to flee the monastery. Cf. [CB1] above and Poenae 40, PG 31, col. 1312B; also found in (34) Machairas [122].
- [CB5] Punishment for unauthorized correspondence. Cf. Poenae 59, PG 31, col. 1313C; also found in (22) Evergetis [22] and (34) Machairas [131].
- [CB6] Punishment for spending the night with another monk. Cf. Poenae 23, PG 31, col. 1309B, and [C6] and (possibly) [C7] above.
- [CB7] Punishment for sleeping during chanting of psalms. Cf. Poenae 1, PG 31, col. 1305C.
- [CB8] Punishment for those receiving communion before reconciliation. Cf. Poenae 38, PG 31, col. 1312A.
- [CB9] Punishment for those exacting vengeance. Not found in our text of the Poenae.
- [CB10] Punishment for unauthorized distributions or receipts. Cf. Poenae 49, PG 31, col. 1312D.
- [CB11] Punishment for unauthorized donation or receipt of gifts. Cf. Poenae 60, PG 31, col. 1313C.
- [CB12] Punishment for not accepting deprivation of blessed bread. Cf. Poenae 29, PG 31, col. 1309C.
- [24] Burial prescriptions and the founder’s tomb. The tomb was later reported to have miraculous powers; see discussion and description in Mango and Hawkins, “Hermitage,” pp. 129, 183–85, 197–98.

46. Akropolites: Testament of Constantine Akropolites for the Monastery of the Resurrection (Anastasis) in Constantinople

Date: 1295–1324¹

Translator: Alice-Mary Talbot

Edition employed: H. Delehay, “Constantini Acropolitae hagiographi byzantini epistularum manipulus,” AB 51 (1933), 263–84, with text at 279–84.

Manuscript: Codex Ambrosianus H. 81 sup. (14th c.)²

Other translations: None

Institutional History

*A. The First Foundation*³

The origins of this Constantinopolitan monastery are obscure. The claim that it was founded by Helen, mother of the first Christian emperor Constantine (306–337), as stated [2] in the document translated below, is surely apocryphal. It was in existence by the twelfth century, when it served as the site for the liturgical commemoration of St. Auxentios, and was noted by the Russian pilgrim Antony of Novgorod. Before his election to the patriarchate, Theodotos II (1151/52–53/54) was a monk at this monastery. During the Latin Empire of Constantinople (1204–61), the monastery was taken over by Latin canons, at least down to 1232. According to our document, the monastery church fell [2] into disrepair and was “almost completely destroyed.” If accurate, this may have happened during the last decades of Latin rule.

B. Restoration under the Patronage of the Akropolites Family

George Akropolites, who held the office of Grand Logothete (from ca. 1259–82) under Michael VIII Palaiologos, is credited [3] by our document with the restoration of this foundation.⁴ His son Constantine, our author, is anxious to claim a commensurate share of credit for the restoration, though the extent of his actual role is open to question (see below, Analysis). That Constantine bought [6] an auxiliary chapel for the monastery that he subsequently dedicated to St. Lazarus⁵ cannot be doubted, for this donation gave rise to our document. The gift may well have been associated with an undated chrysobull of Andronikos II (1282–1328), which joins the Constantinopolitan monastery of the Anastasis with its much older counterpart on Mount Galesios.⁶ Janin’s conjecture that the former was restored specifically to provide a place of refuge for monks of the latter after the Turkish conquest of Asia Minor is certainly reasonable, for the translation of the head of St. Lazarus of Galesios to Constantinople on October 25 is a Palaiologan feast.⁷

In a hortatory epistle, Constantine Akropolites exhorts the monks of an unnamed monastery to care for the sick housed in a public charitable institution (katagoge) belonging to them.⁸ The editors suggest that the monastery in question was that of the Anastasis and that the letter dates from towards the end of Akropolites’ life.

C. Subsequent History of the Foundation

In May 1324, after Constantine Akropolites' death, a monk Nicandros brought a complaint before the patriarchal synod of Isaïas (1323–32) alleging that his agreement with Makarios Tarchaniotes, superior of the Anastasis monastery, to build a church with a few monastic cells on a neighboring property belonging to that monastery had been violated by Akropolites, who ordered the demolition of these structures.⁹ The synod ordered the monastery to repay Nicandros his expenses and the rent payments he had already made in accordance with his prior agreement. In 1367, Myron, another superior of the Anastasis, stood trial before the patriarchal synod of Philotheos (1364–76).¹⁰ The last mention of the monastery is in the fifteenth century, when a meeting was held there to discuss the church unification proposals of Pope Eugenius IV (1431–47); therefore it is likely to have survived down to the fall of Constantinople in 1453.

Analysis

This document was written for a traditional private religious foundation, of which the author's father, George Akropolites (1217–82), was [3] "master" (kyrios), thanks to his role in rebuilding it from ruins after the Byzantine reoccupation of Constantinople in 1261.

The author is anxious to assert his own claim to being considered a founder (ktetor) or at least a restorer (anakainistes) of this foundation. More than half of this document ([1] through [5]) is given over to an elaborate attempt to build up the author's personal role in the reconstruction of this foundation. Since he admits [3] that he was only a child at the time, his actual role must have been minimal or non-existent. Previously when the concept of hereditary patronal rights was stronger, it would have been sufficient for the author to establish his relationship to the founder rather than (as here) make an elaborate defense of his personal contribution to the foundation's welfare.

Of his father's claim to the title of ktetor there could be no doubt. The author provides [3] interesting details of the financial accounting done for the reconstruction and notes that his father spent some 16,000 gold pieces until he decided to stop counting. The author claims [4] his father reduced his expected inheritance in view of the expectation that he would be inheriting the church from him instead. Later, his father reduced [5] the author's original inheritance of 7,000 gold pieces further in order to cover unanticipated expenses of the reconstruction. It is noteworthy that, long after the triumph of the reform movement's ideas on the inalienability of ecclesiastical property, the patronage of a church could be quantified in a sum of money thought comparable to a share in an inheritance. The father told his son to appeal to an icon of Christ in the church should he ever find himself in need. This may be taken to mean that the author considered that the foundation had an obligation to bail him out of any future financial difficulty.

The author's actual financial contribution [5] to the foundation was considerably more modest than that of his father, even on his own admission, some 1,000 gold pieces as opposed to more than 17,000 for his father. On the grounds of this expense as well as his foregone inheritance, the author considers [6] that "rightly double the [reward] of founders" was due to him. He had already buried his wife Maria in the monastery, a traditional patron's right. However, his principal concern in this document was to instruct the officials of the foundation how they were to discharge the "debt" owed to him. Specifically, the foundation was to conduct [6] commemorative services in the large church for the author, his children, and his descendants. At the chapel of St. Lazarus, a priest and two other resident clergy were to celebrate the liturgy at least three times a week, more often if the chapel should gain additional funding from other benefactors. Saturday liturgy was reserved for the author, his wife, and his mother Eudokia.

FOURTEENTH CENTURY

The author also provides [6] for the celebration of the morning and evening hymnody. Services were to be coordinated with those taking place in the main church so that they occurred simultaneously, synchronized by the ringing of the church bell. Morning services would begin [7] in the large church, then the clergy assigned to the chapel would depart to start the hymnody in the chapel “together with the public congregation.” Additionally, annual commemorations were to be performed for the patron saint, and for the author, his wife, and his mother “in accordance with the times and prosperity (of the monastery),” a note of realism born of the newly restored empire’s poverty.

The author did not want professional singers (known as kraktai or kalliphonoi) to participate [7] in these commemorative services, “for it is intended that they should sing when there is a congregation of people, but only the monks should perform the hymns of the vigil.” This restriction was to hold also on feasts of the Lord and on the feast day marking the inauguration of the chapel. Judging from other documents,¹¹ it appears that the kalliphonoi had been developing since Komnenian times as professional singing troupes. There was one associated with the imperial court in the late thirteenth century, and the growing taste for secular musical performance apparently led to similar groups being imported into some monastic communities to lend extra festivity to special feast days. But being hired troupes, founders like our author may have thought that they would not be as efficacious as monks as intercessors.

The author emphasizes [8] the supplementary nature of the present document and its applicability only to the chapel of St. Lazarus, “while all the (affairs) of the monastery should be administered and managed as has been previously ordained and regulated”—presumably in a formal typikon issued earlier by his father. Nearly two hundred years before, (27) Kecharitomene [76] explicitly recognized the validity of documents like this one in decreeing: “The commemorations for those who were glad to offer and dedicate something of their own possessions will be carried out in whatever way they decree from what is given by them, that is, as an addition (eis prostheken) to what has been decreed by us.” This document then is an example of such a prosthete. Our author asserts that “my desires are not burdensome, nor do they require any expenditure of funds, as you yourselves can calculate.” This must have been an important consideration in order for foundations to be assured that carrying out the conditions of certain benefactions did not actually cause a drain on the resources of their principal endowments.

Overall, the author stresses the contractual nature of the relationship between himself and the foundation, stating at one point, “In view of my demands, it would be sufficient to bind you with a reasonable and acceptable oath.” This is a testimony to the significantly increased institutional autonomy that even a private monastery might enjoy in Palaiologan times thanks to the generalized acceptance of once radical reform ideas on this subject. If, as this document shows, the memory of more substantial financial rights of patronage had not entirely faded from the minds of contemporary benefactors, in actual practice holders of hereditary ktetoreia found themselves reduced to the status of the outside benefactors anticipated in (27) Kecharitomene [76], entitled to only such rights as they could negotiate with the recipient foundation in exchange for their tangible assistance.

46. AKROPOLITES

Notes on the Introduction

1. The document must date from after 1295, when Constantine Akropolites' wife Maria died (so Nicol, "Prosopographical Note," pp. 252, 253), for Maria herself was deceased when it was drawn up. A decision of the patriarchal synod under Isaias (1323–32) (ed. MM 1.102–04 = Darrouzès, Regestes, no. 2110), dated to May 1324, provides a terminus ante quem, since Akropolites is mentioned in it as being deceased.
2. See description in Delehay, "Constantini Acropolitae," pp. 264–69.
3. See Janin, Géographie, vol. 3, pp. 20–21.
4. For the author's father, see Macrides, "George Akropolites," p. 49.
5. For this foundation, see Janin, Géographie, vol. 3, p. 298.
6. Dölger, Regesten, no. 2085, ed. MM 5.264–67.
7. Janin, Géographie, vol. 3, p. 21; cf. vol. 2, p. 249.
8. Dennis and Miller, "Care for the Sick," pp. 416–20, with English translation, pp. 417–21.
9. Darrouzès, Regestes, no. 2110, ed. MM 1.102–4.
10. Darrouzès, Regestes, no. 2529, ed. MM 1.490.
11. (27) Kecharitomenē [75] and (37) Lips [39]; cf. the attitude shown towards sung hymns in (36) Blemmydes [13].

Bibliography

- Beck, Hans-Georg, Kirche und theologische Literatur im byzantinischen Reich (Munich, 1959), p. 699.
- Dennis, George, and Miller, Timothy, "Constantine Akropolites: The Obligation of Monks to Care for the Sick," OCP 56 (1990), 413–29.
- Janin, Raymond, La géographie ecclésiastique de l'empire byzantin, vol. 2: Les églises et les monastères des grands centres byzantins (Paris, 1975), p. 249; vol. 3: Les églises et les monastères [de Constantinople], 2nd ed. (Paris, 1969), pp. 20–22, 298.
- Macrides, Ruth, "George Akropolites," ODB, p. 49.
- Manaphes, K. A., "Konstantinou Akropolitou logos eis ten anakainesin tou naou tes tou Kyriou hemon anastaseos diathetikos," EEBS 37 (1969–70), 459–65.
- Nicol, Donald, "Constantine Akropolites, A Prosopographical Note," DOP 19 (1965), 249–56.
- Talbot, Alice-Mary, "Akropolites, Constantine," ODB, p. 49.

Translation

A testamentary oration on the restoration of the church of the Resurrection of Our Lord.

1. What worthy offering could one make to God, who fills the heaven and earth, who has provided us with our very existence, and who was made incarnate and surrendered himself to death so that we might recover once more the well-being that we had lost on account of our transgression? How could one repay him for so many and such great blessings? Even if one were to offer himself in addition to his ostensible property (and I say "ostensible" because in truth nothing belongs to us who have been born and received mortal life), he will still fall immeasurably short in his debt; for what he has given is what he has received [from the Creator], and what payment would he need to pay off his debt? What repayment could one make equivalent to such gifts, where would he find them, from whom could he borrow them? It is in no way possible, in no way, to repay our benefactor for our blessings. Because he who is superior to us, and above all nature superior to ours [sc. nature of angels], was born in our likeness for our sake, we would not be able to repay him with deeds, nor to show our worthy gratitude with mere words. Nevertheless, [praise be to his] supremely infinite goodness, to his incomparable compassion and goodness to us, he accepts our grateful thanksgiving alone as a sufficient repayment, and presents in return a many times greater gift, and lavishes upon us the enjoyment of eternal blessings.

FOURTEENTH CENTURY

2. Thus, when I mulled over these things in my mind, I thought of the church dedicated to the Resurrection of our Lord and Savior, which was originally constructed from its very foundations by the celebrated St. Helen,¹ mother of the famous emperor Constantine, the equal of the apostles. For it was damaged by “time which subdues all,”² and was restored and consolidated again with imperial support, but after the conquest of Constantinople by the Italians it was once more reduced to ruins and almost completely destroyed, so as to have no expectation of reconstruction. Since I did not think it right to neglect it, although most everyone else equal to me, or even superior to me in rank and wealth, did not dare to lay a hand on it, [p. 280] I undertook the restoration, or rather reconstruction of this church, totally and with all my soul, and spared no expense. For many blessings have been granted to me by the bountiful right hand of God, from whom I received the greatest gift, a reputation for learning and wisdom, as others might perhaps say, although I myself would say a desirable education and a noble pursuit.

Therefore I spent a considerable sum of money to restore the fallen blocks of the holy structure, and properly braced and stabilized the roof, which was supported as it were on unstable [trusses] (so that I may say something similar to the one who said that the universe moves on an immovable foundation), and was in imminent danger of collapse; and the sight of these is the proof and my actions are unimpeachable witnesses to my words. Let me briefly describe the church or rather the present monastery.

3. I paid a salary of 1000 gold pieces, which was counted out and weighed, to the men who excavated the dirt, and cleared the area of debris, both the foundations and their surroundings. I will omit how I shared the labor of removal with my employees. But I will add another point to give greater credence to my tale. Specially assigned secretaries recorded in detail on paper the gold pieces delivered to the supervisors of the project, as is customary for those who undertake large projects. They made a monthly accounting, and after a year had passed, the expenditure was reckoned; when the supervisors stated that they had spent 16,000 gold pieces, my father [George Akropolites] said in reply: “From now on I do not want the expenses to be recorded in a ledger; for I do not give this [money] to man, I offer it to God who gave [it to me]. Thus, as if he were supervising, spend what you receive, and, as they say, ‘the experiment will show’³ how much was given and spent.” But now let me explain why I spoke as I did and how I joined my father in this notable project, and said I would be his associate in this magnificent undertaking, and how I accomplished this in a not unreasonable manner. For it is clear that he was the master of his property and whatever is and is shown (?) was accomplished by him alone. For I was still a child when this project was completed.

4. Therefore I included myself in the project, and made his purely personal undertaking common to both of us, not because I was born of him, nor because I happened to be his first-born son

(although [p. 281] this did contribute in a small way to my decision), but because he wished to bequeath to me as his first-born more than to the others. When I became involved in the project, he reduced my inheritance more than that of the others. For standing before the Lord and Savior, whose name the church bears, he spoke as follows to me—when I was devoting my time to school, as he urged, studying a general curriculum and visiting him from time to time—for he entrusted me to instructors and appointed tutors.

5. Thus once when I left my lessons and went to see him, when I learned that he was at the monastery, inspecting the progress, I was filled with concern and anxiety; for I thought that he would ask me one of his usual questions, such as: “What have you been taught this week? About whom did you learn yesterday? The day before?” He said nothing about these subjects, however, but took me by the hand and, entering the church, gazed at the icon of our God and Savior. “This is the One,” he said, “who provided being to those that exist, he who grants life to the living, the total Creator of everything. ‘He produced everything from non-being,’⁴ he also governs everything. According to the psalmist, ‘When he opens his hand, he fills every living thing with pleasure’ (Ps. 144 [145]:16). He is the One who also provided me with learning, the most honorable thing in life, which nothing on earth can equal, as one of the wise pagans testified;⁵ on account of it I became illustrious and prosperous, and I assisted most of my relatives; for I will pass over how I relieved the need even of strangers to the best of my ability. Now for the sake of these [blessings] and on account of them, I have undertaken this great project and have spent a lot of money, and am willing to spend in the future; therefore I intend to reduce your inheritance significantly. For I originally proposed to give you more; but since I need more [money], subtracting one-seventh in addition to one half of the remainder, I will bequeath the rest to you. (The sum he originally planned to give me was 7000 gold pieces.) But if you should ever be in want of necessities, God forbid, then come to this [icon], and gazing at the Lord Christ, say to him: ‘Benevolent Lord, as thou knowest well, my father spent most of my inheritance on thy church, and now I am in need and am in want of necessities. Therefore do not allow me to continue longer in miserable need, O bountiful provider.’ My dearest child, I am confident that, as a result of the ineffable mercies of this infinitely good Christ, he will not leave you unprovided for; [p. 282] but whatever you need, he will provide you with unexpected means.”

6. For these reasons I spoke as I did, and did not lie by saying that I collaborated with my father in the work; therefore, I, too, became with good reason a founder of this monastery, or rather a restorer, as I have explained; and rightly double the [reward] of founders is due to me. For when my wife [Maria Komnene Tornikina] died, I buried her body in this [monastery]. I purchased the chapel which is inserted near the large church, donating the gold pieces which the monks agreed to spend for its completion, and I want this debt [i.e., contribution] to be used for my commemorative services. For they should be performed in the large church on behalf of myself and my children and their descendants; but I also desire and wish that certain special [feast days] be celebrated there. Therefore I donated 300 gold staters and I ordered that next year the same amount be added.

The chapel which I bought and acquired should be honored with the name of the holy and miracle-working Lazarus.⁶ Therefore from now on no one should call it by any other name. As is the custom in churches named after holy men or martyrs, the name of the saint should be included in the prayer of dismissal at both morning and evening services. The divine and holy liturgy should be celebrated in this [chapel] three times a week; but if it should be necessary for the liturgy to be celebrated there more often, on account of certain people's request or some other necessity, I do not forbid it, rather I like and welcome [the idea]. But right now three should be celebrated. As for the large church, it is my pleasure and decision that all services be performed as has been previously ordained.⁷

FOURTEENTH CENTURY

The first [liturgy] should be offered to our Savior Christ on the first day [of the week], the Lord's Day, as is customary; the second on Thursday, in commemoration of the memory of St. Lazarus, after whom the church is named; and the third on Saturday, the last day of the week, on behalf of the soul of my late mother Eudokia, and on behalf of myself, Constantine, and my wife Maria. I want a priest who is a precentor to reside there, as well as two other members of the clergy, in order to offer up to God the Savior morning and evening hymns every day; and I want them to be at the same time as the [services] in the large church, and for the hymns to be sung together in both places. For the [p. 283] semantron, the holy bell, ought to awaken and assemble everyone together in the church named after the Lord.

7. Since the arrangement of the public and communal hymnodies is greatly lengthened by introductory and additional prayers and psalms, and by the reading of holy Scriptures, and especially in the stricter monasteries, among which this monastery of the Resurrection of Christ once numbered (and may it take the lead again as it did once in the past), the [monks] assembled in the large church should participate in the hymns and prayers until the beginning of the canons; and then two or three, together with the precentor—to whom the superior of the monastery would grant permission—would go to the sanctuary of St. Lazarus to perform the morning hymnody to Christ the Savior, and should finish it together with the public congregation. They should follow the same procedure at the divine liturgy. For it must be celebrated in the large church, preceded by the singing of selected verses of the Psalms and the stichera, as it is usually extended. Therefore the bloodless and salvific sacrifice should not begin in both churches at the same time, but the time should be calculated, for the reasons which I have mentioned, so that if possible neither of them finish before the other.

The annual commemoration of St. Lazarus should be celebrated forthwith and in perpetuity, and it should be celebrated solemnly and in a manner befitting God. Kraktai (to whom most people give the more euphonious name of kalliphonoi "singers with beautiful voices") should not be invited, nor should they come and enter uninvited; for when there is a congregation of people, it is intended that they should sing, but only monks should perform the hymns of vigil. The same should hold true at the dominical and important feast day of the enkainia.⁸ I do not make these statements by way of injunctions, but I am giving instructions and setting forth what seems to me a more solemn procedure. Immediately after the feast day of the saint my own commemoration should take place, that is, of my late mother, and myself, and my wife. It should be celebrated in accordance with the times and the prosperity [of the monastery]; I only beg that it not be overlooked.

8. These are the [services] I wish and desire to be performed in the church [of Lazarus] that I acquired, while all the [affairs] of the monastery should be administered and managed as has been previously ordained and regulated. Therefore, by our Lord and Savior Jesus Christ, by the blessed hopes for which you renounced the world and the ruler of the world, [p. 284] do not disobey my wishes and request. For my desires are not burdensome, nor do they require any expenditure of funds, as you yourselves can calculate. In view of my demands, it would be sufficient to bind you with a reasonable and acceptable oath. But let me add something else, much less important than what I have said, but more customary for Christians and especially for monks. Thus, may you enjoy your salvation, may you attain the promised blessings, as you maintain and strive to accomplish these things. May both you and we attain them, you who dwell in this divine enclosure, and we who take confidence in your prayers, through the intercessions of the eternally virgin Mother of God, through the supplications of the holy Constantine and Helen, the equals of the apostles, through the prayers of St. Lazarus, renowned for his asceticism, through the grace and loving kindness of our Lord God and Savior Jesus Christ, to whom is owed all glory, honor and veneration, together with his eternal Father and the all-holy and good and life-giving Spirit, now and unto everlasting ages, Amen.

46. AKROPOLITES

Notes on the Translation

1. An apocryphal attribution; see above, Institutional History.
2. Simonides, Fragm. 5 [4].5.
3. Plato, Theaet. 200e.
4. John Chrysostom, Liturgy, ed. F. E. Brightman (London, 1896), p. 369, lines 27–29; p. 384, lines 27–28.
5. Unidentified quotation.
6. The mid-eleventh century author of (9) Galesios.
7. Presumably in a formal typikon issued by the author's father George Akropolites; see also [8] below.
8. For the feast of the enkainia, see (39) Lips, n. 11.

Document Notes

- [1] Impossibility of repaying the Creator. See also the reflections on this subject in (19) Attaleiates [2], (27) Kecharitomene, Prologue, and (38) Kellibara I [1].
- [2] Prior history of the foundation. For other foundations restored in Palaiologan times after ruination during the Latin conquest of Constantinople, see (37) Auxentios, Institutional History, and (38) Kellibara I [12].
- [3] Patronage by George Akropolites. For the author's father, see Macrides, "George Akropolites," p. 49.
- [4] Origin of Constantine Akropolites' role. For inherited roles in patronage of religious institutions, see also (27) Kecharitomene [3], [80]; (28) Pantokrator [70]; (32) Mamas [3]; (35) Skoteine [7], [8]; (37) Auxentios [15]; (38) Kellibara I [16]; (39) Lips [3]; (56) Kellibara II, Institutional History; and (57) Bebaia Elpis [19], [146], [158], [159].
- [5] Reduction of Constantine's paternal inheritance. For the explicit derivation of a private profit from a religious institution, see (19) Attaleiates [24], [37].
- [6] Assertion of patronal privileges; prescriptions for commemorative liturgies. For contemporary assertions of these rights, see (37) Auxentios [13]; (39) Lips [30], [42], [52]; (57) Bebaia Elpis [113], [114], [117], [116], [119], [134], [136], [142], [149], [150], [151]; and (60) Charsianeites [C15].
- [7] Coordination of services in the church and chapel; ban on use of kraktai. For liturgical processions elsewhere, see (4) Stoudios [A2]; (28) Pantokrator [29], [31]; and (29) Kosmosoteira [103]. For analogues to the kraktai, see (27) Kecharitomene [75] and (39) Lips [39].

FOURTEENTH CENTURY

- [8] Confirmation of existing regulations; new requirements not financially burdensome; benefits of fulfillment. For respect for prior typika in other foundations, see (13) Ath. Typikon [12], [13], [18], [20], [23]; (14) Ath. Testament [3]; (15) Constantine IX, Introduction, [1], [2], [3], [6], [7], [8], [13]; (33) Heliou Bomon [51]; (34) Machairas [4]; (40) Anargyroi [1]; (59) Manuel II, Introduction; and (60) Charsianeites [A12], [B1], [C10].

47. Philanthropos: Typikon of Irene Choumnaina Palaiologina for the Convent of Christ Philanthropos in Constantinople

Date: ca. 1307¹

Translator: Alice-Mary Talbot

Edition employed: Ph. Meyer, “Bruchstücke zweier typika ktetorika,” BZ 4 (1895), 45–58, with text at 48–49.

Manuscript: Iveron codex 593 (1540 A.D.)²

Other translations: None

Institutional History

A. Foundation under the Choumnos Family

Irene Choumnaina, the daughter of the influential courtier Nikephoros Choumnos, was the founder of this convent, to which she retired under the monastic name Eulogia after the death of her husband the despot John Palaiologos, eldest son of Andronikos II and Yolanda-Irene of Montferrat, in 1307. This foundation was built into the Theodosian sea walls in the extreme easternmost part of Constantinople, on the site of an earlier monastic complex about which nothing is known. For nearly fourteen years until his death in 1322, Eulogia’s spiritual advisor was Theoleptos, metropolitan of Philadelphia. Five of his letters to her on monastic subjects are preserved. These provide useful insights into Eulogia’s suitability for leadership and various disciplinary problems in the foundation. Some ten to fifteen years after Theoleptos’ death, Eulogia acquired another spiritual advisor, a young monk whose identity is unknown. An extensive correspondence between them has been edited by Angela Hero.³

There was a companion male monastery associated with the convent also bearing a dedication to Christ Philanthropos. At the conclusion of his career, Nikephoros Choumnos retired to this monastery under the monastic name Nathaniel. In his Testament, he leaves instructions for his burial there and claims that he and his wife were responsible for building it.⁴ His wife, Eulogia’s mother, evidently retired at the same time to the convent under her daughter’s direction. Nikephoros died at the monastery in 1327, and his wife at the convent a little later. Eulogia herself died circa 1355.

*B. Subsequent History and Fate of the Foundation*⁵

The Russian pilgrim, deacon Zosima, reports the existence of the convent of Philanthropos ca. 1420. Other Russian travelers of the fourteenth and fifteenth centuries point out a famous miracle-working image of Christ. There was also a miraculous, healing fountain located under the church which flowed into a cistern on the beach outside the sea walls and then out onto the sand. Majeska (Russian Travelers, pp. 373–74) reports that this fountain was visited by local Greek Christians down to the nineteenth century even though it was then on the grounds of the sultan's palace, the construction of which surely led to the demolition of the rest of the Christian complex. Both the cistern and substructures of various monastic buildings still exist on the site. Excavations carried out by the French army of occupation in Constantinople in 1921–23 have made it possible to identify the foundations of the former church.

Analysis

This text owes its preservation to Pachomios Rhousanos, a monk of the Athonite monastery of Iveron, who in 1540 transcribed the surviving excerpt of this document along with that of (56) Kellibara II in support of his attack on the idiorhythmic monastic foundations that were popular in his own day. He was clearly looking for authoritative pro-cenobitic citations such as this document provides. His excerpts from (56) Kellibara II are concerned with related themes of monastic equality ultimately derived from the Evergetian monastic reform movement.

A. Model Typikon

The excerpt that makes up all that remains of this document here is a reworking of Empress Irene Doukaina Komnene's (27) Kecharitomene [2].⁶ Since the Komnenian empress was also the founder of an identically named male monastery of Christ Philanthropos for which she presumably wrote a typikon analogous to (27) Kecharitomene, the document represented by this excerpt here may have been an adaptation (genders changed) of that institution's lost typikon.⁷ However, Janin thought that the Komnenian and the Palaiologan foundations were entirely different foundations, located in different areas of Constantinople.⁸

In any event, this document is a valuable example of the utilization and elaboration by an author in Palaiologan times of a much older document in the Evergetian tradition. Even if there was in fact no institutional link between the Komnenian and Palaiologan monasteries of the Philanthropic Savior, there is other evidence of a renewed popularity of the Evergetian monastic usages in the late thirteenth and early fourteenth centuries. As we have seen, (37) Auxentios shares certain usages and even a few similarities of diction with (22) Evergetis. Like (47) Philanthropos, (58) Menoikeion appears to copy another document in the later Evergetian tradition, specifically (32) Mamas. Moreover, (39) Lips and (56) Kellibara II both suggest an acquaintance with Evergetian models, (27) Kecharitomene and (22) Evergetis respectively.

B. Lives of the Nuns

The author's enthusiastic endorsement [1] of cenobitic life, while actually traceable to (27) Kecharitomene [2], is credited both to "the holy and inspired fathers of old" and contemporary authorities, namely bishops, ascetics, monks and nuns, presumably including (so Trone, "Philanthropic Savior," p. 84) the author's own spiritual mentor Theoleptos, metropolitan of Philadelphia († ca. 1322) and Patriarch Athanasios I (1289–1293, 1303–1309), author of (55) Athanasios I. The essentials of the cenobitic life [2] were the common refectory, kitchen, and manual labor. Nuns were expected to devote the "appropriate amount of attention" to the communal activities of handiwork, ecclesiastical services, housekeeping duties, and reading and prayer in their cells. This suggests a common participation in these activities rather than the specialization by particular classes of nuns that was featured at other contemporary institutions, e.g., (39) Lips [4]. A nun caught practicing private crafts or cooking food in her cell was to be disciplined “no matter who she is” (i.e., regardless of social standing) and expelled if unrepentant.

The author singles out [2] for condemnation nuns having an entrepreneurial approach to their work. As in (27) Kecharitomene [2], the convent’s cenobitic constitution was not to change [3] regardless of whether the foundation became richer or poorer in the future. Her adoption of her model’s prescription [4] that the superior should oppose the nuns or vice versa should any constitutional change away from cenobiticism be proposed omits the oversight roles provided for in (27) Kecharitomene [2] for the protectress and the founder’s relatives. At the end of his excerpt, Pachomios Rhousanos appends a note that suggests that the lost text of our document continued at length in a similar vein, emphasizing the virtues of monastic poverty.⁹

Notes on the Introduction

1. See Hero, “Irene-Eulogia” (1981), p. 5.
2. See Meyer, “Bruchstücke,” p. 50.
3. Hero, Woman’s Quest, pp. 26–100, with English translation, pp. 27–101.
4. Nikephoros Choumnos, Testamentum, PG 140, cols. 1465–98, esp. 1481.
5. See Janin, Géographie, vol. 3, p. 528, and Majeska, Russian Travelers, pp. 371–74.
6. First noticed by Salaville, “Formes,” p. 46.
7. For pronoun gender changes, see Trone, “Philanthropic Savior,” p. 84.
8. Janin, Géographie, vol. 3, pp. 527–29, cf. 525–27.
9. The note may refer to a lost chapter of (47) Philanthropos based on (27) Kecharitomene [50], though that particular chapter is not in fact very long. It is also possible that Pachomios’ reference is to other lost chapters in (47) Philanthropos and/or (56) Kellibara II that were independent of those extant in the known models for these respective documents.

Bibliography

- Beck, Hans-Georg, Kirche und theologische Literatur im byzantinischen Reich (Munich, 1959), p. 647.
- Demangel, Robert, and Mamboury, E., Le quartier des Manganes et la première région de Constantinople (Paris, 1939), pp. 49–68.
- Gedeon, Manuel, Byzantinon Heortologion (Constantinople, 1899), p. 204.
- Gouillard, Jean, “Après le schisme arsénite. La correspondance du Pseudo-Jean Chilas,” Académie roumaine. Bulletin de la section historique 24 (1944), 174–211.
- Hatzidakis, G. N., and Kurtz, Ed., “Zu den Bruchstücken zweier Typika,” BZ 4 (1895), 583–84.
- Hero, Angela, “Irene-Eulogia Choumnaina Palaiologina, Abbess of the Convent of Philanthropos Soter in Constantinople,” BF 9 (1985), 119–47.
- , A Woman’s Quest for Spiritual Guidance: The Correspondence of Princess Irene Eulogia Choumnaina Palaiologina (Brookline, Mass., 1986).
- , “Theoleptos of Philadelphia (ca. 1250–1322): From Solitary to Activist,” in Twilight of Byzantium: Aspects of Cultural and Religious History in the Late Byzantine Empire, ed. Slobodan Ćurčić and Doula Mouriki (Princeton, 1991), pp. 27–38.
- , “The Life and Letters of Theoleptos of Philadelphia (Brookline, Mass., 1994).
- Janin, Raymond, La géographie ecclésiastique de l’empire byzantin, vol. 3: Les églises et les monastères [de Constantinople], 2nd ed. (Paris, 1969), pp. 527–29.
- , “Les monastères du Christ Philanthrope à Constantinople,” EB 4 (1946), 135–62.

FOURTEENTH CENTURY

- Laurent, V., "La direction spirituelle à Byzance: La correspondance d'Irène-Eulogie Choumnaina Paléologine avec son second directeur," REB 14 (1956), 48–86.
- , "Une fondation monastique de Nicéphore Choumnos," REB 12 (1954), 32–44.
- , "Une princesse byzantine au cloître. Irène-Eulogie Choumnos Paléologine, fondatrice du couvent des femmes tou Philanthropou Soterou," EO 29 (1930), 29–60.
- Majeska, George, Russian Travelers to Constantinople in the Fourteenth and Fifteenth Centuries (Washington, D.C., 1984), pp. 371–74.
- , "The Sanctification of the First Region: Urban Reorientation in Palaeologan Constantinople," Actes du XV^e Congrès international d'Études byzantines, Athènes, 1976, vol. 2 (Athens, 1981), 359–65, esp. 361–64.
- Mathews, Thomas, The Byzantine Churches of Istanbul: A Photographic Survey (University Park, Pa., 1976), pp. 200–204.
- Medico, M. H. E. del, "Essai sur Kahrié Djami au début du XII^e siècle," BZ 32 (1932), 16–48.
- Müller-Wiener, Wolfgang, Bildlexikon zur Topographie Istanbuls (Tübingen, 1977), p. 109.
- Pargoire, Jules, "Les monastères doubles chez les Byzantins," EO 9 (1906), 21–25.
- Salaville, S., "Un directeur spirituel à Byzance au début du XIV^e siècle: Théolepte de Philadelphie," in Mélanges Joseph de Ghellinck, S.J., vol. 2 (Gembloux, 1951), pp. 877–87.
- , "Formes ou méthodes de prière d'après un byzantin du XIV^e siècle, Théolepte de Philadelphie," EO 39 (1940), 1–25.
- , "Une lettre et un discours inédits de Théolepte de Philadelphie," REB 5 (1947), 101–15.
- , "La vie monastique grecque au début du XIV^e siècle d'après un discours inédit de Théolepte de Philadelphie," EB 2 (1944), 119–25.
- Ševčenko, Nancy, "Choumnos, Nikephoros," ODB, pp. 433–34.
- Sidéridès, Xenophon, "Peri tes en Konstantinoupolei mones tou Soterou tou Philanthropou," EA 17 (1897), 234–36, 250–51, 257–59, 267–68, 276–79, 291–93, 309–10, 316–19, 323–25, 341–43; EA 18 (1898), 4–6, 10–11.
- Talbot, Alice-Mary, "Choumnaina, Irene," ODB, pp. 432–33.
- Trone, Robert, "A Constantinopolitan Double Monastery of the Fourteenth Century: The Philanthropic Savior," BS/EB 10 (1983), 81–87.
- Verpeaux, J., Nicéphore Choumnos, homme d'état et humaniste byzantin (ca. 1250/1255–1327) (Paris, 1959).
- , "Notes prosopographiques sur la famille Choumnos," Byzantinoslavica 20 (1959), 252–66, esp. 260–61.

Key: As noted above, the author of this typikon utilizes a portion of (27) Kecharitomene. In our translation, the borrowings are indicated in boldface type.

Translation

[An excerpt] from the typikon of the venerable monastery of Christ the Philanthropic Savior, restored from its foundations by the pious princess Irene Laskarina Palaiologina, who took the name Eulogia after adopting the divine and angelic habit, and by her parents,¹ [the said typikon] having been expounded and issued by her.

[1.] [cf. (27) Kecharitomene [2], ed. lines 218–23]: I think it would be right that something be said more clearly and briefly next concerning the way of life of the nuns and the whole organization of life in the convent. For what will be prescribed on this matter will be compatible with what has been clearly stated and declared by the holy and inspired fathers of old, the present holy bishops and the most experienced ascetics and monks, as well as elderly nuns, who over a long period of time have assembled exact and true experience of asceticism. For they decided and laid it down that those who have renounced the world and worldly things and took refuge in the calm harbor of monastic life in accordance with God, that they should follow a cenobitic way of life and give themselves up to [a life of] submission, renouncing their own will, which the fathers termed “mortification.”

[2.] [cf. (27) Kecharitomene [2], ed. lines 226–29]: Therefore obeying these [authorities], I very much wish and desire that the nuns in the convent of my Philanthropic Savior should live in a cenobitic order and way of life and not only should they all have a common refectory, but also a common kitchen and the same handiwork. For thus [the nuns] would devote the appropriate amount of attention [to all their] common [activities], their handiwork, church services, all the [housekeeping] duties, reading [p. 49] and prayer in their cells, and all other spiritual labor, since thereby they behave like nuns and not like businesswomen and even worse than laymen. If one of the nuns should be caught doing her own private handiwork, or preparing food in her private cell, she should be severely censured and disciplined, and banished from the church and the refectory until she mends her ways, no matter who she is. If she should disobey and act insolently and not be willing to mend her ways, she is to be expelled from the convent. For a few women gathered in the name of the Lord are far superior to many who reject a life in accordance with God and the monastic and ascetic mode of conduct.²

[3.] [= (27) Kecharitomene [2], ed. lines 229–39]: Thus my majesty wishes that the rule of such a cenobitic system should always be in force in it, unchanged and unaltered and unshaken by every misfortune, perverted or changed in no way during the existence of this whole age, nor altered for any reason or pretext whatsoever, neither because of wealth or poverty, neither through scarcity or abundance, nor any other plausible reason or pretext whatsoever, but the cenobitic order and way of life should be completely preserved in every way unbroken for ever. Even if the entire income of the convent should happen to be reduced to what would be enough for two nuns, we wish them to live in the cenobitic way and conform to the rule for this way of life.

[4.] [= (27) Kecharitomene [2], ed. lines 239–48]: If a future superior wants to countermand this, the nuns have permission to speak against it, and if the nuns should attempt the opposite, she has permission to overrule them. But if she and the nuns should both be led astray, we grant permission to anyone who wishes to fight for a holy object to go to court for goodness itself and the reward for this, to seek that what we have laid down should be effective and that those chiefly responsible for the dissolution of the cenobitic way of life be expelled from the convent and not consider this a small achievement but one that is very great and brings salvation.

FOURTEENTH CENTURY

[Scribal note:] The *typika*³ of the pious rulers also had other chapters on poverty, but I omitted them because of their length.

Notes on the Translation

1. Nikephoros Choumnos and Choumnaina; see Verpeaux, “La famille Choumnos,” pp. 254–57.
2. Cf. the language of (22) Evergetis [23].
3. (47) Philanthropos and (56) Kellibara II.

Document Notes

- [1] Sources of authority for the cenobitic life. Shared in part with (27) Kecharitomene [2], (32) Mamas [5], and (33) Heliou Bomon [5].
- [2] Common refectory, kitchen, and handiwork; practice of reading and prayer in the cells but no private handiwork or cooking. Shared in part with (27) Kecharitomene [2].
- [3] Inalterability of the cenobitic life. Shared with (27) Kecharitomene [2].
- [4] Superior and nuns may prevent one another from instituting changes; outsiders may bring suit to prevent abandonment of cenobiticism. Shared with (27) Kecharitomene [2].

48. *Prodromos: Testament of Neilos*¹ for the Monastery of St. John the Forerunner (Prodromos) on Mount Athos

Date: 1330–31²

Translator: Stephen Reinert

Edition employed: Nicolas Oikonomides, Actes de Docheiariou (= Archives de l’Athos 13) (Paris, 1984), 133–38, with text at 135–38.

Manuscript: Docheiariou 101 (possible 14th-c. autograph)³

Other translations: None

Institutional History

According to the Testament translated below, the site of this foundation had originally been [2] the residence of a solitary named John, the author’s spiritual father, located in a densely wooded area of Mount Athos belonging to the Docheiariou monastery for which (41) Docheiariou had been written in the early years of the twelfth century. Our author Neilos, who joined John there, inherited [3] the improvised settlement when the latter died on a journey in Thessalonike. Neilos managed to obtain [11] from Arsenios, who is attested as superior of Docheiariou in 1287, an annual stipend (diakonia) for the support of a more permanent dependency. According to an inscription of the seventeenth or eighteenth century, this small dependency of the Docheiariou monastery was built in 1294–95 during the reign of Andronikos II Palaiologos (1282–1328).⁴

The present Testament would have been composed a generation later, in 1330–31, as the founder Neilos sought to arrange [6] the succession in favor of his own spiritual sons Daniel and Iakobos. The ruins of this foundation are to be found on Mount Athos an hour’s journey from Docheiariou towards the mountain’s administrative center at Karyes.

Analysis

This brief Testament, composed by the founder Neilos for the small monastery (monydrion) of St. John the Forerunner (Prodromos), is useful, considered along with (44) Karyes, for illuminating the relationship between a mother house (here, the Athonite monastery of Docheiariou, for which see also (41) Docheiariou) and one of its dependencies. Unlike the author of (44) Karyes [13], however, who was much more assertive of his foundation’s entitlement to non-interference from its mother house, our author here seems to have been in a weaker position, bound by prior engagements to the great monastery in exchange for its financial support.

Although this is essentially a transmissory document rather than a regulatory typikon, it incorporates several common features of the latter genre, including the foundation history [2], [3], a prohibition on alienation of property [7], prescriptions for commemorative services [9] and illumination of the church [10], and an inventory [14] of movable property. This is additional evidence for the convergence of the once very distinct testamentary and regulatory foundation documents.

FOURTEENTH CENTURY

A. Lives of the Monks

As an essentially transmissory document, the Testament has little to say about the lives of the monks. The monastery was designed [3] to house “a sufficiently large community of brothers.” They were, however, to offer [9] commemorative services (mnemosyna) and offer kollyba (on Fridays) for the emperors (perhaps in acknowledgement of imperial patronage for the mother house), for the founders (ktetores) of Docheiariou, its superior and its brotherhood, and for the author himself. Except for Neilos’ own commemoration, these were likely obligations of the mother house that passed down to its dependencies.

B. Constitutional Matters

1. Relationship with the Mother House

There seems to have been another document, or perhaps an oral understanding, between Docheiariou and Neilos permitting the latter to build this dependent monastery. The monks of Docheiariou apparently drove a hard bargain, requiring Neilos to seek [17] their approval (and that of the Athonite protos) for transmission of the monastery to his successors, to provide [9] commemorative services for themselves and their patron the emperor, and to deliver [15] a half-share (later increased to virtually all) of the monastery’s olive and wine crop.

Accordingly, the author records [4] clearing his plans for the succession with the protos of the holy mountain and the superiors of the greater monasteries; he also consulted with and obtained [17] the permission of the monks of Docheiariou. Having established [17] that the present document introduced nothing “perverse or injurious” to the interests of Docheiariou, he makes bold [16] to threaten anyone from the main monastery with “canonical penalties” and the vengeance of the patronal saint, John the Baptist, if there is any attempt to overturn his Testament.

2. Governance

The author provides [6] that the ordained monks Daniel and Iakobos, his spiritual sons, were to take joint charge of the monastery after his death. The author had himself inherited [3] the site where he was to build the present monastery from his own spiritual father John. Of the author’s successors, Daniel was to be the senior partner, but he was to govern [8] with the advice and consent of Iakobos, not arbitrarily. However, if Daniel should decline the monastery’s leadership, he was not to be allowed to take [12] any of the institution’s property with him. If he accepted, Iakobos was to succeed him as leader should he die in office. After Daniel and Iakobos, the author provides [13] that an ordained and virtuous monk should be superior, assisted by another ordained monk.

Neilos’ injunctions [7] to his successors reflect conventional concerns of private patrons as well as the traditions of the Athonite communities: they were not to appropriate anything of the foundation for themselves, have a horse or servant, or make frequent excursions away from Athos.

C. Financial Matters

The monastery was the recipient [11] of an annual stipend that Arsenios, the superior of Docheiariou, and his elders had granted for its support; the author expected that this would continue after his own death. The monastery owed [15] certain dues to Docheiariou as well, including all the produce from an olive grove and a vineyard except for a section marked off for its own use. The author also makes a donation of ten hyperpyra as a gift to Docheiariou, perhaps for memorial services for himself.

48. PRODROMOS

There is a brief inventory [14] of the monastery's movable properties, including sacred vessels, service books, and a few volumes of ascetic literature by John Klimakos, Makarios of Egypt, and Mark the Hermit.

Notes on the Introduction

1. Oikonomides, Docheiariou, p. 134, bases this attribution on the dating; Neilos "of the monastery of the Prodromos of Docheiariou" is known as the signatory of an act of the Xenophon monastery, dated to 1322.
2. Dating is based on a note on the verso of the document by an annotator made in 1785, based on a portion of the text now lost; see Oikonomides, Docheiariou, p. 134.
3. See Oikonomides, Docheiariou, p. 133.
4. See Oikonomides, Docheiariou, p. 134.

Bibliography

Ktenas, K., "Ho Protos tou Hagiou Orous Atho kai he 'megale mese' e 'synaxis,'" EEBS 6 (1929), 233–81, esp. 263–67.

Oikonomides, Nicolas, "Hiera mone Docheiariou. Katalogos tou archeiou," Symmeikta 3 (1979), 197–263.

Translation

[1.] Inasmuch as I see the end of [my] life approaching—and this [my] advanced age proclaims distinctly—I deem it necessary to make arrangements for the brothers under me and the small monastery¹ which I raised up with God[’s help], and which is honored with the name of John, the venerable and glorious Prophet, Forerunner and Baptist. But lest the ignorant be uncertain about the background of this [monastery], and whence my zeal for it originated, it is fitting that I begin by relating [these matters].

[2.] My spiritual father, that holy abba John of blessed memory, was ever content, in accord with his personal goal, to inhabit those places he might find suitable for tranquil solitude. He loved to dwell in that spot where presently the aforementioned small monastery which we built [can be] seen, and which lies within the territory of the venerable monastery of Docheiariou. At that time [the place] was harsh and cheerless, yet it was pleasing for his purpose, and indeed offered [him] everything. [He and I] dwelt there together a considerable length of time in some small makeshift cells, and we were content with what we had procured as a dwelling place.

[3.] [His] life came to an end while he was away in Thessalonike on some spiritual necessity. Thus was I left alone, yet I decided that I should not depart from this place owing to [his] paternal command [that I remain]. I began, with all [my] might, to clear the dense woods in that area, and thus to change its savagery into docility—but not without the knowledge and consent of the superior of the venerable monastery of Docheiariou, and of the entire community. So, with God[’s help], first, I raised up this church, as seen, in the name of John, the venerable and glorious Prophet, Forerunner, and Baptist. [p. 136] I built cells for a sufficiently large community of brothers, and with much labor I dug a well, and planted a vineyard and an olive grove. I provided holy icons and books for the church, each of which will be described below.² Without elaborating point by point [all that I did, suffice it to say that], with God’s assistance, I completed this small monastery, such as it appears now, from nothing.

FOURTEENTH CENTURY

[4.] Wishing to make future arrangements for [this monastery] according to my intent, I relayed and made known this [desire] to our most holy common father, the protos of the Holy Mountain,³ and he, as well as [our] most holy fathers, the superiors of the venerable monasteries there, resolved that I did not wish anything unjust or unbefitting our spiritual state. Accordingly I now make [the following] arrangements.

[5.] First of all, to all Christians I offer forth the prayers and forgiveness still owed [by me to them], and in return I implore the same [from them] for the remission of my numerous sins.

[6.] Next [I ordain that], after me, lord Daniel and lord Iakobos —among the ordained monks my beloved spiritual sons, whom from the beginning, with God’s help, I have spiritually educated— jointly take charge of the aforementioned small monastery and those belonging to it when I am gone. [I ordain] that they concern themselves, as I did, with the salvation and spiritual progress of my other spiritual children, and the betterment of the small monastery. However, should the ordained monk lord Daniel be found dwelling here, in accord with [my] paternal injunction, and conducting his life in a highly spiritual manner, consonant with monastic propriety and order, [then I enjoin that he] preside and serve as superior over my spiritual children, as have I.

[7.] Neither of my two successors should appropriate anything [for himself], nor should he have a horse, or his own servant, or anything else unbecoming and alien to the spiritual custom of the small monastery as it has always [been observed], for a spiritual settlement [such as this] has no need of these things. Nor should they make frequent excursions into the world—only once a year, and then in connection with some urgent labor, and they ought to return as quickly as possible. Nor should they have a horse, as mentioned, but only a donkey for the service of the small monastery, on account of the harshness and ruggedness of the terrain.

[8.] [Daniel] should not arbitrarily do what he wants, but should act with the advice and consent of my son lord Iakobos, and he ought to keep with him perfect peace and accord. [They] ought thus to show a profound respect for one another, as the holy apostle says (Rom. 12:10), so that the spiritual state of my other children will be preserved for the glory of God.

[9.] Let [the monks] uphold the memory of our powerful and holy masters and emperors; of the holy founders of the venerable monastery of Docheiariou; of the superior and brethren [of Docheiariou]; and of me, a sinner. Let kollyba be [offered] in their memory each Friday throughout the entire year (following the custom of the large monasteries), excepting those designated

48. PRODRAMOS

Fridays on which it is not customary (according to the tradition of the church) to commemorate the dead.

[10.] Except in [circumstances of] pressing need, lamps should be kept continually burning before the three sacred icons set out for veneration: that of the Virgin; that of the venerable [St. John the] Forerunner; and that of the Dormition of the holy Mother of God.

[11.] It was ordained by the blessed lord Arsenios,⁴ who served as superior of the venerable monastery of Docheiariou, as well as the honorable and eminent elders who were practicing [the monastic life] there at that time, that once a year they provide a stipend to our small monastery in memory of the founders of [their] monasteries, and all the monks in it. While I was alive, I used to accept this, and when I have passed away, they still ought to provide [us with this].

[12.] Concerning my spiritual son, the ordained monk lord Daniel—if as stated above, he should completely withdraw from the world and [still] be dwelling here (as I have enjoined) [when I die], then [let him] take charge and assume care for my other spiritual children, [p. 137] as well as the greater progress of the kellion.⁵ If he does not wish to remain here, as I have already spiritually enjoined, let him be fully excluded from the kellion, [and let him not] despoil anything whatsoever of the monastery's property—unless, that is, he desires to experience the educating wrath of God. But if [Daniel] assumes the spiritual direction of this small monastery of mine (as would be pleasing to God, and as I have enjoined), and if he should perish in it when he reaches the end of his life, then at his passing let the monk lord Iakobos succeed him. He should also live and conduct his life in the manner I have outlined above.

[13.] Thus I provide for the leadership of the small monastery up through my first two successors. If upon the passing of these [two] any of my spiritual children should still happen to be alive and present, then I spiritually ordain that a virtuous man who is adorned with priestly ordination as well as [devotion to] the monastic state be present in the small monastery [as its superior], and that he have [assisting him] an ordained monk.

[14.] I have dedicated to the monastery holy icons and books, each of which will be described below:

One paten and chalice; [several] silken chalice veils; two sets of vestments; one pair of eucharistic cuffs; two stoles; two podeai of gold [thread]; and two of silk; two lamnai; two candelabra for the entrance, and a censer.

[I have also dedicated to the monastery] these books:

A book containing the four Gospels and a Praxapostolos, [both] on parchment; Menaia of the twelve months in eight fascicles, also on parchment; a parchment Psalter; a parchment book by St. [. . .]; [John] Mauropous' Canons to the Virgin,⁶ on paper; a book by [Michael] Glykas;⁷ a parchment Euchologion; two Synaxaria; two parchment Parakletikai; another book of Theotokia, this on paper; two books by John Klimakos—one on paper, the other on parchment; a book having various chapters; a book by St. Makarios [of Egypt]; and another by St. Mark [the Hermit]; a book by St. Theodore of Edessa;⁸ a parchment Panegyrikon; a book of propheteiai; and a Triodion with the propheteiai.

FOURTEENTH CENTURY

[15.] Now, as I said, when I began to clear [the terrain] and build the small monastery, I also [expended] much labor and raised up a vineyard and an olive grove. Quite a few years ago I decided that after my death the small monastery should have one-half of the grapes and olives for its maintenance, and the monastery of Docheiariou should have the other half. Sometime thereafter, however, the area was devastated because of a very severe winter. There were torrential floodings, and these endangered and at length destroyed the vines and the olive-bearing trees. I set myself again to hard work, and planted another vineyard and olive grove, [these being located] towards the Megale Petra.

I now dedicate this vineyard and olive grove—the ones [located] towards the Megale Petra—to the venerable monastery of Docheiariou, except for a section of the vineyard and olive grove which I have marked off. I have decided that the kellion should have [this latter section], along with all the older vines and trees which I replanted [there].

I dedicate ten hyperpyra as a gift to the monastery of Docheiariou.

[16.] These [provisions] I set forth for my spiritual children and for the aforementioned small monastery, which I—with the [help of] God and the others—labored so hard to erect. No one in the monastery of Docheiariou, either present or future, ought [to dare to] dissolve this [Testament]. Should anyone attempt to set aside the fitting and just [provisions] which I have made through God's grace for my [spiritual children], he shall first of all experience and be educated by God's mighty wrath. He shall also be subject to the canonical penalties which the holy fathers have prescribed for those who dare [to do] such things. In addition, on the Day of Judgment, he shall have as his plaintiff the venerable [St. John the] Forerunner [himself].

[17.] As previously stated, from the very beginning I never undertook to raise up this small monastery contrary to the wishes of [my brethren], and I have not been moved to make the [provisions] which I have just now made without [their] counsel, or unreasonably. Nor do I bring forth or introduce anything perverse or injurious to this venerable monastery of Docheiariou—as someone viewing [the matter] incorrectly might suppose. Rather, I have performed this as a spiritual act which is pleasing to God himself, and which will also [redound to the benefit] of that very monastery [of Docheiariou]. [p. 138]

[Drawn up] in the presence of the virtuous and holy men who have signed their names below.⁹

Notes on the Translation

1. monydrion (“small monastery”), used interchangeably here with kellion.

2. In [14] below.

48. PRODRAMOS

3. The nominal leader of the Athonite community resident at Karyes; see Alexander Kazhdan and Alice-Mary Talbot, “Protos,” ODB, pp. 1746–47, and (44) Karyes [3].
4. Attested as superior of Docheiariou in 1287; see Oikonomides, Docheiariou, p. 25.
5. Used interchangeably here with “small monastery” (monydrion).
6. For these, see Beck, KTL, p. 556.
7. Either his Chronicle or his Ninety-Nine Responses to Scriptural Questions; see Oikonomides, Docheiariou, p. 135.
8. Subject of a hagiographical romance, possibly based on events of the eighth century; see Alexander Kazhdan, “Theodore of Edessa,” ODB, p. 2043. For the ascetic works of Pseudo-Makarios, see PG 34, cols. 401–968, and for those of Mark the Hermit, see PG 65, cols. 905–1140.
9. The last line is incomplete; the author ends the document with his signature, and there is a fragmentary reference to the indiction year.

Document Notes

- [1] Need for the Testament. See also the rationale in (45) Neophytos [1].
- [2] Prior use of the site by a solitary. See also the similar origin of another foundation in (45) Neophytos [4].
- [3] Foundation history. See also the brief foundation history for another Athonite dependency in (44) Karyes [2].
- [4] Consultation with the protos and the Athonite superiors. See also the cautious approach taken in [17] below.
- [5] Forgiveness asked of all Christians. See also the similar requests expressed in (49) Geromeri [15], (50) Gerasimos, and (51) Koutloumousi [B15].
- [6] Designation of successors. See also [12] below. For use of a testament to designate a successor, see also (1) Apa Abraham [1]; (10) Eleousa [11]; (24) Christodoulos [B3], [B5], [C1]; (25) Fragala [A7], [B7]; (41) Docheiariou [4]; (45) Neophytos [16]; (49) Geromeri [14]; (50) Gerasimos [3]; (52) Choumnos [A3]; and (60) Charsianeites [B10], [C18].
- [7] Disciplinary injunctions to successors. See similar provisions in (13) Ath. Typikon [31], [33], [34], which are themselves based on (3) Theodore Studites [6], [10], [18], [20].
- [8] Two successors to govern collaboratively. Cf. arrangements made in (50) Gerasimos [3] and (52) Choumnos [A3].
- [9] Required commemorations with offerings of kollyba. For use of kollyba elsewhere, see (4) Stoudios [A30]; (27) Kecharitomene [71]; (28) Pantokrator [8], [44], [49], [53]; (32) Mamas [39]; (33) Heliou Bomon [39]; (35) Skoteine [25]; (37) Auxentios [13]; and (43) Kasoulon [9].
- [10] Continuously burning lamps. See similar provisions for these lamps in (27) Kecharitomene [66], [68]; (28) Pantokrator [6], [29], [34]; and (34) Machairas [26].
- [11] Annual stipend from the main monastery. See the similar arrangement in (44) Karyes [3], and the payments made by the dependency to the main monastery as discussed in [15] below.
- [12] Contingent provisions for the succession. See also [6] above.
- [13] Provisions for subsequent successions. See also (50) Gerasimos [3] for a somewhat different attempt to rotate the succession to the superiorship among a founder’s disciples.
- [14] Inventory of sacred vessels and textiles; books. For the former, see also lists in (19) Attaleiates [INV 6], [INV 8], [INV 18]; (23) Pakourianos [33B]; (31) Areia [T11]; (35) Skoteine [25], [28], [42], cf. [45]; and (61) Eleousa Inv. [5], [6]. For the latter, see the lists in (19) Attaleiates [INV 7], [INV 12] ff.; (23) Pakourianos [33B]; (34) Skoteine [24], [27], [28], [42]; (54) Neilos Damilas; and (61) Eleousa Inv. [3].
- [15] Payments in cash and in kind to the main monastery. See also [11] above.
- [16] Warning to violators of the Testament. See analogous provisions in (35) Skoteine [46], (37) Auxentios [2], (45) Neophytos [22], (49) Geromeri [16], (54) Neilos Damilas [24], and (60) Charsianeites [B22].
- [17] Justification of arrangements as being in the interest of the main monastery. See also [4] above.

49. Geromeri: Testament of Neilos Erichiotes for the Monastery of the Mother of God Hodegetria in Geromeri

Date: 1337

Translator: George Dennis

Edition employed: Basiles Krapsites, Thesprotika, vol. 2 (Athens, 1972), pp. 160–68, with text at 163–67.

Manuscript: Ms. Geromeri library (19th c.)¹

Other translations: None

Institutional History

The monastery of the Mother of God Hodegetria is located above the modern town of Philiates north of Igoumenitsa in the northwestern corner of Greece near the Albanian border. The attribute may be derived from the monastery of Hodegon in Constantinople where this pious icon, allegedly painted by St. Luke, was kept. Some details of its founder Neilos Erichiotes' life are known from the brief hagiographic tract devoted to him by a monk named Job that is preserved in a sixteenth-century copy at the monastery.² Early in his monastic career, Neilos, then resident in Constantinople, suffered persecution and exile for his opposition to Emperor Michael VIII Palaiologos' church reunification policy based on agreements reached with the Roman papacy at the Second Council of Lyons in 1274. After the abandonment of the unionist policy upon the accession of Andronikos II Palaiologos (1282–1328), Neilos relocated to the Holy Land, where he lived for thirty-one years at Mount Sinai, Mount Carmel, Jericho, and a monastery near the Jordan River. Later, he moved again, this time to Greece, finally settling at Erichos near Valona in the territory of the independent despotate of Epiros. Nicol (Despotate, p. 243) estimates that Neilos founded the monastery of the Hodegetria around 1330.

The founder's Testament translated below was confirmed by the despot of Epiros, John II Orsini, in 1337, probably at the end of Neilos' life. This document is preserved only in a copy of the nineteenth century in the monastery's library. Preserved separately is a record of the intervention of Patriarch John XIV Kalekas (1334–47) in a dispute in 1336 between the monks of an unnamed monastery and the bishop of Bouthrotos and Glyky. Asdracha ("Deux actes," p. 163), has suggested that the unnamed monastery may have been that of Geromeri.³

According to Nicol (Despotate, p. 243), the present monastery church dates from a renovation in 1568, long after the fall of the Despotate of Epiros to the Ottoman Turks in 1479. At the time of its renovation, Geromeri held a patriarchal stauropegion, specifically exempting it from the authority of the metropolitan of Ioannina. However, if Asdracha's identification is correct, the monastery's patriarchal stauropegion might conceivably have dated back to as early as 1336.

Analysis

Most of this short testament is taken up by the author's confession of faith ([1] through [11]), understandable enough for an author like this one who suffered persecution and exile for his opposition to the Union of Lyons in the late 1270s (cf. [12]).⁴ One must go all the way back to (3) Theodore Studites to find another document in our collection in which a confession of faith plays such an important part, but it is noteworthy that our author's opponent, Emperor Michael VIII Palaiologos, lists "correct faith in the divinity" in (37) Auxentios [3] as one of the qualifications for election to the superiorship.

In the style of an old-fashioned founder, our author exercises [14] his right to appoint the monk Isaias as his successor and provides for his own burial at the monastery. His original disciples Gerasimos and Kallinikos were always to be welcome at the monastery even if they should leave for a time and want to come back later. Yet "unsuitable and rebellious" monks had no such right to stay but should be expelled.

The author also obliges [15] his monks to pray for the various benefactors of his foundation. Above all, these included the Despot John Angelos Doukas, better known to history as John II Orsini (1323–1336/7),⁵ despot of Epiros, and his wife the basilissa Anna Palaiologina. The author appeals to the ruling couple to provide "protection and guidance" for the monks, just as they had previously undertaken to protect him.

Locally, the nobleman John Apsaras, who donated [13] an ancient vineyard which the monks then restored, was one of the first benefactors of this foundation. By the time this document was drawn up, another member of his family, Nicholas Apsaras, appears [15] along with Aristarchos Kapandrites in the author's list of benefactors for whom the monks should offer prayers. The author entreats these local noblemen "to distribute the necessities to the monks" insofar as their own resources should permit. The traditional curse of the 318 Nicaean Fathers concludes [16] the Testament, warning off the aristocracy, priests, other ecclesiastics, monks or "anyone else" who might attempt to harm the monks or nullify the author's Testament. The despot himself⁶ confirms the provisions of the testament in a subscription.

Evidently like his counterpart the author of (35) Skoteine, our author owed the good fortune of his foundation at least in part to the patronage of supportive members of the local nobility. Here, however, Apsaras and Kapandrites seem to have become the foundation's lay protectors (ephoroi), in practice if not also in title. (58) Menoikeion, a contemporary document from an independent monastery, illustrates how a protectorate could become the functional equivalent of old-fashioned ownership (ktetoreia). Perhaps the author's attempts to build equally good relations with the rulers of Epiros were intended to prevent this from happening so readily to his foundation.

Notes on the Introduction

1. See Nicol, Despotate, p. 243.

2. Vita, ed. Krapsites, Thesprotika, vol. 2, pp. 161–62; content summarized in Nicol, Despotate, p. 244.

3. Nicol, Despotate, p. 237.

4. Nicol, Despotate, p. 244.

FOURTEENTH CENTURY

5. So Nicol, Despotate, p. 95.

6. For the identification, see Nicol, Despotate, p. 244.

Bibliography

Aravantinos, P., "Peri tou hosiou Neilou tou Erichiotou," Pandora 15 (1865), 470–74.

Asdracha, Catherine, "Deux actes inédits concernant l'Épire. La métropole de Janina et l'évêché de Bouthrotou-et-Glykéos," REB 25 (1977), 159–74, esp. 163.

Daux, Georges, "Chronique des fouilles et découvertes archéologiques en Grèce en 1958," BCH 83 (1959), 567–793, esp. 665.

Nicol, Donald M., The Despotate of Epiros, 1267–1479 (Cambridge, 1984), esp. pp. 243–44.

———, "Instabilitas Loci: The Wanderlust of Late Byzantine Monks," SCH 22 (1985), 193–202.

Philotheos (Archimandrite), "He mone Geromeriou," EA 27 (1907), 360.

Soustal, P., and Koder, J., Nikopolis und Kephallenia (= Tabula Imperii Byzantini 3) (Vienna, 1981), pp. 156–57.

Triantaphyllopoulos, Demetrios, "Archaiotetes kai Mnemeia Epeirou 1973–1974," Archaiologikon Deltion 29.2 (1973–74), 588–626, esp. 624–25.

Vasmer, Max, Die Slaven in Griechenland (Berlin, 1941), no. 150, p. 36.

Vranousis, Leandros, "Mone Geromeriou," in TEE, vol. 4 (1964), cols. 496–502.

Translation

[1.] In the beginning God made all things, and after he had done that he created man, Adam and Eve, endowing them with the divine gifts of grace and guarding them by his commandment. But owing to the envy of the devil and the inexperience of the woman—alas for our weakness—because of our forefathers who did not heed the command of their creator, from disobedience we have harvested death. Instead of being immortal we have become mortal, instead of indestructible, destructible. Like a flower of the field which blossoms today and like the grass which springs up, such is our nature. Tomorrow it withers away and vanishes as a flower and dissipates like a shadow. I am well aware that I am human, that I have fulfilled the allotted days of my life, and that I am already approaching extreme old age. Tied down by my weakness and oppressed with other infirmities, although death is not yet upon me, I have decided to make a formal profession of my religious beliefs, to make it clear to all who know me as well as to those who do not know me. I shall then briefly explain about my way of life.

[2.] I preface what I am to say with the name of the Father and the Son and the Holy Spirit, in whom I was baptized and in whom I have lived and to whom I offer pure worship, as I begin with these words. I believe in one God, Father, Son and Holy Spirit, one essence, one godhead, one majesty, made known in three hypostases, characterized by three distinct properties and by three sanctifications which come together in one lordship and godhead glorified by the seraphim. I give praise to the unborn Father, to the Son born of the Father, to the Holy Spirit proceeding from the Father, having complete existence from him, consubstantial and of the same origin as the Son and through him provided and sent to creation.

49. GEROMERI

I profess that the Father is the one origin, the one source of both. These are caused by him, equal in honor, transcending time, and without separation. I proclaim that the Holy Spirit proceeds from the Father alone. I hold wholeheartedly to the true teaching in the Gospels of Our Lord Jesus Christ that he is the only cause and sender, and I turn away from all false and illegitimate doctrines. It is proper to the Father to give birth and to send forth and not to be born or to be sent forth. It is proper to the Holy Spirit not to be born or to give birth. The three are without beginning and coeternal; this is true of the Father, true of the Son, true of the Holy Spirit. I shall describe him who is above us by using examples that are on our own level such as sun, light, ray; fountain, water, river; mind, word, spirit. The three are equal, divided and undivided, divided in hypostasis and undivided in essence, one God, triune, consubstantial, inseparable, indivisible [p. 164].

I confess that the only-begotten Son of God, the Word, came down for us and for our salvation and assumed flesh from the all-holy and virginal blood of the most holy and supremely spotless Mother of God, the ever-virgin Mary. He became that which he was not. He did not depart from his godhead, nor did he undergo change, confusion, or division, but he preserved what was characteristic of each of the converging natures safe and unchanged. Indeed, from this very unity he deified what was added, in the manner of an exchange. He remained what he was and he took on that which he was not, one Christ manifested in two natures, the divine and the human. He has two wills and two energies. He has fully realized all the natural and blameless sufferings of humanity. Then for our sake he underwent the cross and death. He rose again in three days and was taken up from earth in glory. He is seated at the right hand of God the Father. He shall come again to judge the living and the dead and to recompense each person according to his deeds.

[3.] I believe that the Holy Spirit has spoken through the prophets. I acknowledge one holy, catholic, and apostolic church, and that the remission of sins is accomplished by one holy baptism. I hope and look for the resurrection from the dead of all human nature, as well as judgment and retribution, and eternal life in the age to come. I hold to the holy symbol of faith, firmly and unshaken, nor do I accept any addition or any removal. Moreover, I embrace the seven holy ecumenical councils. I also embrace with my soul, will, mind, and speech the revered, orthodox, local synods which decreed matters of ecclesiastical discipline, expositions of sacred dogmas, and canonical regulations. Whatever they affirmed, so do I affirm, and in turn, what they rejected, so do I reject and disavow. I cast out those whom they cast out, and in turn I receive those whom they received. Those whom they anathematized I too subject to anathema.

[4.] I honor the first [ecumenical Council of Nicaea I (325)]¹ which decreed that the Son is consubstantial with the Father. I anathematize Arius and those who agree with him and abusively call the Son a creature and later [in time]. I confess that the Son of God is coeternal with the Father and without beginning, the creator of all things and not a creature, the maker not something made, the craftsman not the product, before time and not subject to time.

[5.] I revere the second [ecumenical Council of Constantinople (381)]² and I reject Makedonios, who fought against the Spirit and is hated by God, as well as his fable that the Holy Spirit is less and is subservient to the Father and the Son. I give glory and power to the Holy Spirit as being equal in divinity and glory to [the Father and the Son]. In like manner I hate and abhor the blasphemy of Apollinaris teaching that the flesh of the Lord was without a soul. I believe correctly and firmly that mind and soul dwell in it, with a rational soul and intellect.

FOURTEENTH CENTURY

[6.] I associate myself with the third [ecumenical Council of Ephesus (431)],³ and I spit out Nestorios, that Judaizer and worshiper of humanity, who divided and cut up the one Christ into two, and who asserted that he was simply a man and not God made flesh, and likewise that the holy virgin who brought forth the Lord was not the Mother of God but [only] “Mother of Christ.” I glorify the holy virgin especially and truly as Mother of God and the one Son in one hypostasis who without seed took flesh from her as our Lord Jesus Christ, true God and Son of God.

[7.] I adhere [p. 165] to the fourth [ecumenical Council of Chalcedon (451)]⁴ and I utterly reject and declare the opposite of the unfortunate Eutyches⁵ and the wicked, demonic Dioscoros, with all those who turned away from the incarnation of our Lord Jesus Christ and made up the story that he bore his flesh in imagination only and so babbled about one nature and linked suffering to the godhead. I wholeheartedly and clearly proclaim that the one Christ our God is perfect God and perfect man in two natures without confusion or division.

[8.] I revere the fifth [ecumenical Council of Constantinople (553)],⁶ condemning] the deviant Origen, Evagrius, and Didymos, who taught there is to be an end to punishment and uttered thousands of other blasphemies. I also set at naught and utterly reject Theodore of Mopsuestia, the teacher of Nestorios, with his blasphemous doctrines.

[9.] I take to heart the sixth [ecumenical Council of Constantinople (680–81)],⁷ and I loathe the heresiarchs hated by God Theodore of Pharan, Honorius, Cyrus, Peter, Pyrrhos, Sergios, Paul, as well as the deviant Makarios, his disciple Stephen, and Polychronios, the old man who thought like a child, who said that our Lord Jesus Christ even after taking flesh had one will and one energy. I confess that our Lord Jesus Christ had two natural wills and two natural energies after taking flesh, not in a division of persons but in that not one of the two natures is without a will or an energy.

[10.] I revere the seventh and final [ecumenical Council of Nicaea II (787)],⁸ and I reject those God-hating, loathsome fighters against images who claim that the uncircumscribed must be without flesh and who therefore set aside the adoration of the sacred icons. I also reject as impious and accursed those who think that it is someone else besides the Son⁹ of God who has freed us from the error of idolatry. I venerate the holy icons, and I honor and embrace them, since the honor shown them goes on to the prototype, according to the great Basil noted for his divine [learning].¹⁰ I give glory to our Lord Jesus Christ circumscribed according to his humanity, uncircumscribed according to his godhead, subject to suffering and not subject, created and uncreated, the same and also God.

[11.] In the same way I honor all the holy councils inasmuch as they agree in all sound teachings.

49. GEROMERI

But I anathematize the heresies which have appeared at various time and places, . . . barbarism and other wicked opinions, and everything uttered by the impious¹¹ to justify them, such as the blasphemies and nonsense of Simon Magus (Acts 8:9–24), of the Medenistai, the Bogomils,¹² the Chatzitzarii, the Sabellians,¹³ the Paulianists,¹⁴ and the rest of the heresies, and likewise I anathematize everything taught by atheists.

[12.] Desirous of briefly explaining my situation, I shall begin immediately. It was in fact as a child that I put on the wonderful yoke of the Lord and took up his burden which is light (Matt. 11:30). I bid farewell to everyone and fled a long distance away. I settled in a place I thought would be conducive to my salvation.¹⁵ But the sower of weeds (Matt. 13:39), our enemy the devil, spread weeds and dissension in the church trying to besmear it with new-fangled terms and herodox teachings. I cannot begin to describe how much I suffered in the way of exile and other afflictions at the hands of those whose beliefs were wicked. How many places I journeyed past, how many customs I witnessed, how many holy men also, how many regions of the earth I explored, and the benefits I derived from these, according to God's will, it is impossible to commit to writing.

[13.] Finally, some time ago I came to this very country, and with me were two monks, [p. 166] Kallinikos, who was ordained, and Gerasimos. We found this place rough, impassable, uncultivated, and not at all suitable for human habitation and settlement. By the sweat of our brow, strenuous labor, wearisome and unceasing toil, we cleaned up the place, as can be seen today. The place was made useful and suitable for the settlement of monks. There was an ancient vineyard located a bit outside the village of Geromeri, and this was given to us by the noble lord John Apsaras.¹⁶ We labored long and hard in that vineyard and made it fruitful again.

[14.] This then, is a true account of our situation. For myself now, I can see that life is soon to leave me and that death is drawing near. So that after my death there will be nothing concerning our disciples which is not properly arranged, I make the following dispositions. This body of mine, composed of earth and clay, should be given burial in this place in which, as was mentioned, we labored so much. In my place I designate the honorable monk, lord Isaias, to remain here with those chosen souls. They should owe him complete obedience, love, and honor, and should readily obey him as their superior. They should listen attentively to what he may say to them concerning their salvation and spiritual welfare. If the ordained monk Kallinikos or the monk Gerasimos should be troubled by certain thoughts and leave there and then want to come back again, let them be received since they have truly and generously labored there previously and are our disciples. But if a person seems unsuitable and wants to rebel against his own superior, let him be expelled from the monastery in dishonor, inasmuch as he did not wish to remain in the order to which he was called, according to the holy Apostle (I Cor. 7:20).

[15.] Having now disposed of these matters in this way, I assure my lords in the spirit and my sons, the pious and most noble Lord John Angelos Doukas and the most Christian basilissa,¹⁷ Lady Anna Palaiologina, of my heartfelt prayer. I beg God always to bestow his gifts on them, to grant peace to the empire and victories over its enemies, visible and invisible, and an abundance of all sorts of good things. After ruling on earth to a ripe old age, may they be found worthy of the kingdom of heaven. I pray too that their children may be protected by God and as their heirs succeed to their authority and lordship enlarging in the future “the line of their inheritance” (Deut. 32:9). I place a fitting request before their majesties to provide protection and guidance for the humble monks with me, just as, led as they were by God, they undertook to protect me.

FOURTEENTH CENTURY

To my sons, the officials of this place, the most noble kaballarios lord Nicholas Apsaras and lord Aristarchos Kapandrites I leave assurance of my prayer and pardon which I owe them. I entreat them to look reverently upon the aforementioned monks and to love them. In accord with their own resources, may they be willing to distribute the necessities to the monks, just as other religious Christians who love the monks. In turn, these monks are obliged to pray regularly in a special way for their orthodox and pious lords, for their Christ-loving army, and for all other rulers and ruled, as they have been taught by me. Moreover, I ask pardon of every orthodox Christian [p. 167] and beg the favor of their prayers, so I might have them as provision for my journey away from here. In turn, from the bottom of my soul I leave behind pardon for all Christians who have both hated and loved me.

[16.] If anyone should see fit to oppose this present plain and true Testament of mine and think to take steps to nullify it, and if he should provoke any disturbance or try to bring about any harm to our monks, whether he be of the ruling class, be enrolled among the priests, in the ecclesiastical order, or wearing the monastic habit, or anyone else, at any time whatever, may such a person never come to stand at the right hand of Christ, may he fall under the curses of the three hundred and eighteen God-bearing Fathers in Nicaea and of the other six holy and ecumenical synods, and of all the saints who have pleased God from eternity, and of myself a sinner.

[Confirmation]

The present Testament of the most holy and divine father, lord Neilos, Erichiotes, founder of the revered monastery of the most holy Mother of God Hodegetria located in the place called Geromeri, has been gladly received by my majesty, read, and thoroughly understood. It has been confirmed by the present customary bull of my majesty, for the perpetual security and eternal observance of its sacred commands and dispositions. It shall be preserved inviolate by our majesty and by our legitimate successors forever.

In the month of December, the fifth indiction, the year 6845, and from the birth of Christ 1337 [A.D.].

Notes on the Translation

Editors' note: The assistance of our translator, George Dennis [GD], is gratefully acknowledged for the notes to this document.

1. For this council and its personalities, see Aristeides Papadakis, “Nicaea, Councils of,” ODB, pp. 1464–65.
2. For this council and its personalities, see Aristeides Papadakis, “Constantinople, Councils of,” ODB, p. 512.

49. GEROMERI

3. For this council and its personalities, see Aristeides Papadakis, "Ephesus, Councils of," ODB, p. 707.
4. For this council and its personalities, see Aristeides Papadakis, "Chalcedon, Council of," ODB, p. 404.
5. Contrasted as Eutychea ton dystyche in the Greek text. [GD]
6. For this council and its personalities, see Papadakis, "Constantinople, Councils of," p. 512.
7. For this council and its personalities, see Papadakis, "Constantinople, Councils of," pp. 512–13.
8. For this council, see Papadakis, "Nicaea, Councils of," p. 1465.
9. eisin, which should read hyion; see J. Guillard, "Le Synodikon de l'orthodoxie," T&M 2 (1967), 1–316, at p. 296, line 92. [GD]
10. Basil of Caesarea, De Spiritu Sancto, 45, PG 32, col. 149C.
11. eusebon, which should read asebon. [GD]
12. See Dmitri Obolensky, "Bogomils," ODB, p. 301.
13. The text reads: Sadelianoï; for Sabellianism, see Karl-Heinz Uthemann, "Monarchianism," ODB, p. 1391. [GD]
14. Paulianistai, possibly the same as the Paulikianoi (Paulicians), for whom see Nina Garsoïan, "Paulicians," ODB, p. 1606. The other two obscure sects mentioned here, the Medenistai (lit. "nihilists") and Chatzitzarii could not be identified. Medenistai may be a scribal error for Montanistai, for whom, see T. E. Gregory, "Montanism," ODB, p. 1401.
15. Constantinople; see above, Institutional History.
16. Spelling of his name follows Nicol, Despotate, p. 244.
17. Title of the wife of the despot of Epiros; see Nicol, Despotate, p. 105, n. 84.

Document Notes

- [1] Meditation on death. See also the contemporary reflections on this subject in (50) Gerasimos [1] and in (51) Kouloumoussi [A1], [C1].
- [2] Confession of faith. See also the confessions in (3) Theodore Studites, Concerning Faith, (7) Latros [1], [2]; (10) Eleousa [2]; and in (54) Neilos Damilas [1].
- [3], [4], [5], [6], [7], [8], [9], [10] Endorsement of the seven ecumenical councils. See also earlier endorsements in (3) Theodore Studites, Concerning Faith, and (7) Latros [3].
- [11] Condemnation of heresies. See also earlier condemnations in (3) Theodore Studites, Concerning Faith, and (7) Latros [3].
- [12] Early autobiography. The holy man's Vita, ed. Kraptsites, Thesprotika, vol. 2, pp. 161–62, provides additional details of the events of his life alluded to here.
- [13] Foundation history; patronage by lord John Apsaras. For similar local patronage, see (35) Skoteine [9], [10], [45].
- [14] Founder's dispositions. For the founder's burial at his monastery in this era, see (39) Lips [42]; for burial of other relatives, see also (46) Akropolites [6] and (57) Bebaia Elpis [142]. For appointment of a successor, see the contemporary (48) Prodromos [6] and (50) Gerasimos [3]. For discussions of the rights of monks who have departed to return, see (24) Christodoulos [B6] and (48) Prodromos [12].
- [15] Prayers for the despot of Epiros and his wife; request that local officials patronize the monastery in return for prayers. For similar arrangements, see (35) Skoteine [10]; (45) Neophytos [7]; (53) Choumnos [A18], [A20], [A26]; and (58) Menoikeion [1], [16], [22].
- [16] Curse on violators; confirmation by the despot of Epiros. For use of such curses elsewhere, see (35) Skoteine [46]; (37) Auxentios [2]; (45) Neophytos [22]; (48) Prodromos [16]; (50) Gerasimos [5]; (51) Kouloumoussi [A15], [B20]; (54) Neilos Damilas [24]; and (60) Charsianeites [B22]. For a similar imperial confirmation of a private testament, see (35) Skoteine [46].

50. Gerasimos: Testament of Gerasimos for the Small Monastery of St. Euthymios in Jerusalem

Date: November 18, 1344

Translator: George Dennis

Edition employed: A. Papadopoulos-Kerameus, Analekta Hierosolymitikes Stachyologias, vol. 1 (St. Petersburg, 1894), pp. 255–57; cf. chronological notes, vol. 2 (St. Petersburg, 1894), p. 245.

Manuscript: Library, Greek Orthodox Patriarchate of Jerusalem¹

Other translations: None

Institutional History

This fourteenth-century “small monastery” (a monydrion, like the dependency for which (48) Prodromos was written) of St. Euthymios in Jerusalem is not attested outside this document, which, among other anomalies, has led Bryer and Winfield (Pontos, vol. 1, p. 127) to question the authenticity of the text translated below. Gerasimos’ Testament, does not, however, claim any connection for this foundation with the famous late antique monastery of St. Euthymios the Great, located outside of Jerusalem and definitively destroyed after 1177.² That a certain John Doukas Trichas, described as a representative of the Trapezuntine emperor, presumably Michael (1344–49), should have been willing to endorse the document in spite of the fact that it was [4] the “ancestral property” of the late Empress Anna Anachoutlou (1341–42), who had recently been deposed and strangled,³ should not, despite Bryer and Winfield’s assertion to the contrary, be surprising, for Trichas is here witnessing the second founder Gerasimos’ Testament, not approving “Anna’s deeds.”

Bryer and Winfield’s objections to the witnesses of this document are more troubling, though not insuperable, given how incomplete our knowledge is of the major personalities of the resident Christian communities in the Holy Land in the early fourteenth century. None of the witnesses are otherwise known, including the Arsenios said to have been patriarch of Jerusalem, and the Elias who signs as bishop of Bethlehem some decades before the next indication of the existence of a Greek Orthodox see at that city. However, the greatest difficulty with accepting the document’s authenticity is chronological rather than prosopographical.

If our author Gerasimos did indeed find [2] the monastery “completely in ruins and without resources” on his arrival there despite the relatively recent death of its patron Anna in 1342, there is perhaps too little time left to account for its complete restoration and the deaths of two of Gerasimos’ monastic colleagues before the present Testament was issued in 1344 unless some major calamity had intervened to reduce the monastery to ruins before Gerasimos’ arrival.

Analysis

This is a simple testament, professedly drawn up for a foundation that must have been similar in size, if not in function, to the dependencies of larger monasteries described in (44) Karyes [2] and (48) Prodromos [2].

When our author Gerasimos began the restoration of this facility, once the property of Empress Anna of Trebizond, he was accompanied [2] by two other monks at the monastery. Now, as the sole survivor among them, he designates [3] four other monks as his heirs and successors. He appoints the ordained monk Blasios as superior, but sets up a sequence of succession in which each of the other monks would in turn have a chance to become superior after the death of his predecessor. This curious order of succession, unlikely to work unless each of the four monks was younger than the one before him, recalls (48) Prodromos [6] ff., in which that document's author designates two monks as his heirs, but makes one of them superior.

None of Gerasimos' successors were to consign [4] the monastery to anyone but a Trapezuntine since it was the "ancestral property" of Empress Anna. The incumbent patriarch of Jerusalem was to continue to receive liturgical commemoration (mnemosynon). A space is left blank for the name of the foundation's administrator (epitropos) who was to be the incumbent superior of the Georgian monastery of the Life-Giving Cross. The document closes [5] with the customary curse of the 318 Fathers of the First Council of Nicaea on transgressors of Gerasimos' Testament.

Notes on the Introduction

1. See Papadopoulos-Kerameus, Analekta, vol. 1, p. 255, n. 255, for a note on this and other witnesses.
2. For this foundation, see Vailhé, "Saint Euthyme."
3. For Anna, see Miller, Trebizond, p. 49.

Bibliography

- Bryer, Anthony, and Winfield, David, The Byzantine Monuments and Topography of Pontos, vol. 1 (Washington, D.C., 1985), p. 127, with n. 24.
- Miller, W., Trebizond: The Last Greek Empire (London, 1926; rev. ed., Chicago, 1969).
- Vailhé, Siméon, "Les monastères de la Palestine: La laure et le couvent de saint Euthyme (425)," Bessarione 3 (1897–98), 209–25.
- , "Saint Euthyme le Grand," ROC 12 (1908), 183–88.

Translation

Copy and likeness of the Testament of the monk Gerasimos concerning the monastery of St. Euthymios situated within the holy city of Jerusalem, which lists his arrangements for the monastery, and which was reproduced from an old prototype. In the year 6852 [= 1344 A.D.].

[1.] According to the great Basil, the definition of philosophy consists in meditating on death.¹ But some people have paid no heed to this and have let the opportunity slip by without realizing how untimely death can be. The result is that the thief comes suddenly and snatches them away, and they leave their affairs in disorder. I too fear the uncertainty of this.² As the corn gets close to harvest, so I, while still whole and of sound mind, not compelled by any necessity or force, but freely and of my own will, wish to make proper disposition of all my affairs. First of all, I offer my prayers for our powerful and holy emperors, as well as for my most holy lord the patriarch, and likewise for all Christians, for whom I pray for love and pardon in Christ. I now make the following disposition of my affairs. [p. 256]

FOURTEENTH CENTURY

[2.] By ways known to God and by his favor, I came to the holy place in Jerusalem and dwelt in the small monastery of the great Euthymios there, which belonged to the late empress of Trebizond, the Lady Anna, Born in the Purple.³ There also was the ordained monk, the late lord Pambo, and the monk, the late lord Sophronios of Trebizond, and I remained there until their deaths. After they had paid back our common debt, I was left behind by myself. How much I labored and suffered in this small monastery, for I found it completely in ruins and without resources, let God be my witness. Then, with the mercy of God, our own labor, and the assistance of the Christians, I managed to salvage it entirely. My predecessor Sophronios from Trebizond had given two hundred aspra towards its restoration. I raised it up and built the monastery as it is seen today.

[3.] Here with me now are the ordained monk, my beloved son lord Blasios, [as well as] Kyrillos, Gennadios, and Theodoulos. I designate them as my heirs and successors. Since it is necessary that one of them be placed over the other three, I therefore appoint the ordained monk Blasios to preside over them as superior. The others should accord him prompt and ready obedience in all things just as they would to me. Moreover, since we all owe the common debt, after his death I designate next as superior my beloved son Kyrillos, after his passing Gennadios, and then Theodoulos. Their relationship to one another should be marked by love, pure and harmonious peace, unity of desire and will. No one, superior or anyone else, should be allowed to drive another away, except for a good reason or suitable cause, such as scandalous behavior or causing a disturbance. I myself in this Testament expel anyone who will not be at peace and lead a tranquil life. In harmony and in peace, then, the four should really be as one, observing of course the special honor due the superior.

[4.] I declare that none of the four should have any permission to consign this small monastery to a person of any nationality other than to someone from Trebizond, since, as mentioned above, [p. 257] it was the ancestral property of the late empress of Trebizond, Lady Anna. They should also continue to commemorate the patriarch of Jerusalem who is in office at the time. I designate as administrator for the small monastery . . .⁴ for my beloved sons whoever is superior at the time of the revered monastery of the Iberians [Georgians], which is named after the precious and life-giving cross.

[5.] These are the dispositions I make of my affairs. May whoever wishes to overturn this testamentary arrangement incur the curses of the three hundred and eighteen God-bearing fathers in Nicaea. For this reason the present testamentary regulation and disposition has been drawn up and given to my beloved sons and successors for their security and strength.

On the eighteenth of November, the twelfth indiction.

- + The doulos and apokrisiarios of our holy and mighty lord and emperor,⁵ present at the making of this Testament and in solid confirmation thereof, I subscribe, John Doukas Trichas, logothetes ton oikeiakon.⁶
- + The doulos of our powerful and holy lord and emperor, George Doukas Maniates Kourtikas.⁷
- + Arsenios,⁸ by the mercy of God, patriarch of Jerusalem.
- + The humble metropolitan of Basan, Germanos.
- + The humble sinner, Matos [metropolitan] of Gaza, hypertimos.
- + The humble bishop of Bethlehem,⁹ Elias.

Notes on the Translation

Editors' note: The assistance of our translator, George Dennis [GD], is gratefully acknowledged for the notes to this document.

1. This Platonic allusion (Phaedo, 81a) is found not in the works of Basil of Caesarea but in John Klimakos, Scala paradisi 6, PG 88, col. 797c.
2. The text has adolon, “guiltless,” which should be corrected to adelon, “uncertain.” [GD]
3. Anna Anachoutlou (1341–42).
4. A space is left blank for the name of the epitropos.
5. Michael (1344–49).
6. Logothete of the household, at this time a purely honorary title; cf. Pseudo-Codinos: Traité des Offices, ed. J. Verpeaux (Paris, 1966), index, s.v. Nothing else is known about this individual; see D. Polemis, The Doukai (London, 1968), p. 185. [GD]
7. Nothing else is known about this individual; his last name should perhaps be Kourtikes; see Polemis, Doukai, p. 139. [GD]
8. According to Bryer and Winfield, Pontos, p. 127, n. 24, a Greek Orthodox patriarch of Jerusalem with this name is otherwise unattested; cf. V. Grumel, La Chronologie (Paris, 1958), p. 452.
9. According to Bryer and Winfield, Pontos, p. 127, n. 24, this bishop occurs nearly a half century before the Greek Orthodox bishopric of Bethlehem is otherwise known to have existed.

Document Notes

- [1] Meditation on death. See also the contemporary reflections on this subject in (49) Geromeri [1] and in (51) Koutloumoussi [A1], [B14], [C1].
- [2] Restoration of the monastery. See also other restorations in this era described in (37) Auxentios [1], (38) Kellibara I [12], (40) Anargyroi [2], and (46) Akropolites [2].
- [3] Order of succession to the superiorship. Cf. arrangements for the succession in (48) Prodromos [8] and (52) Choumnos [A3].
- [4] Monastery not to be consigned to anyone not a Trapezuntine; commemoration of the patriarch of Jerusalem; designation of an administrator. For other ethnic restrictions and preferences, see (21) Roidion [B3], [B4]; (23) Pakourianos [24]; (42) Sabas [2], [9]; and (51) Koutloumoussi [B17]. For commemoration of the local patriarch, see (38) Kellibara I [15] and (39) Lips [1]; for use of administrators in a much earlier document, see (14) Ath. Testament [4], [6].
- [5] Curse on violators. For use of such curses elsewhere, see (35) Skoteine [46]; (37) Auxentios [2]; (45) Neophytos [22]; (48) Prodromos [16]; (49) Geromeri [16]; (51) Koutloumoussi [A15], [B20]; (54) Neilos Damilas [21]; and (60) Charsianeites [B22].

51. Koutloumoussi: Testaments of Chariton for the Monastery of Christ Savior of Koutloumoussi on Mount Athos

Dates: First Testament [A]: January 1–August 31, 1370 Translator: George Dennis Second Testament [B]: November 1370
Third Testament [C]: July 1378

Edition employed: Paul Lemerle, Actes de Kutlumus, 2nd ed. (= Archives de l’Athos 2²) (Paris, 1988), pp. 113–16, 117–21, 135–38; cf. notes, pp. 370–76, 384–88.

Manuscripts: First Testament: Kutlumus archives, no. 37; Second Testament: Kutlumus archives, no. II B; Third Testament: Kutlumus archives, no. 98. Illustrations in Lemerle, Kutlumus, pls. 42b–47, 53–54. All three manuscripts are 14th-c. autographs.¹

Other translations: None

Institutional History

*A. Origins of Koutloumoussi*²

The origins of the monastery of Koutloumoussi, the only Athonite foundation bearing a Turkish name, are obscure. A chrysobull professedly of Alexios I Komnenos that is preserved at the monastery today and regarded as its founder’s typikon is in fact a forgery.³ The first certain evidence of the monastery’s existence is the listing of its superior Isaias among the signatories of a document of 1169 from the Panteleemon monastery.⁴

Attempts to connect the monastery’s name with the family of Qutlumush I, founder of the dynasty of the Seljuk sultans of Rum, who perished in a revolt against Alp Arslan in 1063, remain conjectural. It is thought that perhaps one of his descendants defected to Byzantium, converted to Christianity, and concluded his life on Mount Athos where he might well have founded a monastery bearing his name, but there is no actual evidence as to who this Turkish renegade might have been or when he may have lived. Lemerle (Kutlumus, p. 5) nevertheless proposed a date in the first half of the twelfth century for the foundation of this monastery.

After a long period of obscurity, Koutloumoussi makes a reappearance in Athonite sources of the late thirteenth and early fourteenth centuries. An act of the Athonite protos Isaac donating the large property of Anapausa to Koutloumoussi in 1329 indicates that there were forty monks resident there, though much impoverished for lack of adequate resources.⁵ At this time Koutloumoussi, a small establishment, ranked low among the monasteries of Mount Athos, placed with other obscure foundations that over time tended to be absorbed by the larger monasteries.

*B. Role of the Superior Chariton*⁶

It was due to Chariton, whose tenure as superior of Koutloumoussi must date back to circa 1355–56,⁷ that the monastery achieved a solid structural and financial foundation that enabled it to survive down to our own times. He is eulogized in several documents preserved in the monastery's cartulary.⁸ As indicated in his three testaments translated below, Chariton's greatest achievement was securing the patronal assistance of John Vladislav, voivode of Wallachia (Ungrovlachia), a relationship certainly not without its problems but one which led to an enduring tradition of assistance to the monastery by the rulers of this Roumanian principality that was to survive until 1863. As a price of gaining the prince's assistance, Chariton had to allow John Vladislav to place Vlach monks in Koutloumousi under a lenient idiorhythmic lifestyle at variance with the monastery's traditional cenobiticism.

51. KOUTLOUMOUSI

Chariton himself was appointed metropolitan of Wallachia by Patriarch Philotheos in 1372, doubtless with John Vladislav's endorsement.⁹ As early as 1376 Chariton had also become protos of the Athonite community.¹⁰ Chariton claims both titles in his Third Testament of 1378. He survived an outbreak of the plague at the time of this Testament and lived to participate in the patriarchal synod of Neilos Kerameus (1380–88) in Constantinople in 1380. Lemerle (Kutlumus, p. 297) suggested that Chariton died in 1381, perhaps in Constantinople.

*C. Subsequent History of the Foundation in Byzantine Times*¹¹

During the last years of Chariton's superiorship, Koutloumousi was troubled by the raids of Turkish pirates who were able to abduct and hold for ransom many of the monastery's monks in spite of the fortification of the foundation financed by John Vladislav in the early 1370s. Koutloumousi's superior Jeremias had to be ransomed from pirates sometime before 1386.¹² In 1393, Patriarch Antony IV (1391–97) awarded Koutloumousi a patriarchal stauropoleion.¹³ In 1428, Koutloumousi was permitted to annex the neighboring monastery of Alypiou through an administrative union confirmed by Patriarch Joseph II (1416–39).¹⁴

*D. Koutloumousi under Ottoman Rule*¹⁵

Shortly after its absorption of Alypiou, Koutloumousi, like the rest of Mount Athos, was incorporated into the Ottoman Empire. For a time it appears that both Koutloumousi and Alypiou were abandoned, then circa 1475 (so Lemerle, Kutlumus, p. 20), the foundation was repopulated for a time by a group of Bulgarian monks.¹⁶ For the second half of the fifteenth century, the support of various Vlach voivodes was crucial to the survival of the monastery. They obtained for it firmans from the Turkish sultans Beyazid II (1491) and Suleiman the Magnificent (1527) ordering the protection of its properties.¹⁷ Probably in the second quarter of the sixteenth century, a Greek community of monks had re-established itself in Koutloumousi, displacing the Bulgarians (Lemerle, Kutlumus, p. 21). The monastery then entered a new period of prosperity, and by 1574, it ranked sixth among the monasteries of Mount Athos.

*E. Koutloumousi in Modern Times*¹⁸

The monastery continued to benefit from the patronage of the princes of Wallachia down to the middle of the seventeenth century, but in 1863, Prince Couza decided to confiscate all the properties in Moldavia and Wallachia previously dedicated to the support of Orthodox religious establishments on Mount Athos and elsewhere in the eastern Mediterranean.¹⁹ Koutloumousi was able to survive its losses by relying on other properties it had acquired. A few years earlier in 1856, Patriarch Cyril VII approved the return of Koutloumousi to cenobitic life.²⁰

FOURTEENTH CENTURY

Rebuilt three times after devastating fires in 1497, 1767, and 1870, Koutloumoussi remains an active cenobitic monastery on Mount Athos, populated in 1980 by some fifty-five monks.²¹

Analysis

This document is exceptionally valuable for what it reveals about the nature of the patron/client relationship in Palaiologan times. No other document in our collection illustrates so vividly the problem nearly all founders (except perhaps those of the imperial families) must have faced in raising the necessary funds to support their foundations. As this document shows, this support often had a burdensome, disruptive price in patronal privileges. Here even a patron's extension of a loan to the monastery led to expectations of patronal rights. The document is also useful for illustrating the difficulty of supporting more than one form of monasticism in a single foundation as well as the intense resistance by champions of cenobiticism like our author to proposed variations like the incorporation of imposed guests (katapemptoi) or internal monks (esomonitai) into their communities.

The document is made up of three versions of the author Chariton's Testament [A], [B], and [C]. There is a considerable amount of duplication among the versions,²² but taken together they show the unfolding and resolution of the conflict between the author and his principal patron especially well.

First Testament [A]

In this part of the document, the author identifies [A3], cf. [B2], [C3] a letter of concession from Theodosios, the Athonite protos, and Iakobos, metropolitan of Hierissos as the basis for his authority over the monastery. The award seems to have obliged (cf. technical vocabulary in [B4]) our author to improve and strengthen the monastery, much like contemporary patriarchal grants for improvement (beltiosis) and maintenance (systasis).²³ The author records [A4], cf. [B5], [C4] his efforts to fulfill the terms of the grant, including new properties and incomes obtained not only from Byzantine subjects but also from the rulers of other Christian peoples such as the Serbs and the Vlachs. When our author determined that the monastery needed to be fortified, he turned to John Vladislav, the voivode of the Vlachs, whose father Nicholas Alexander had already laid the foundations for a great tower that remained incomplete.

Persistent solicitation won [A4] the required support for the project. In exchange for his financial support of the fortification project (provided through a loan [A7]), the voivode obtained recognition as "founder" (ktetor) and then insisted [A5], cf. [B6], [B7] upon the traditional founder's right to dispatch a number of candidates (Vlachs) to be maintained at the monastery (as esomonitai or katapemptoi). He wanted [B16] his appointees to receive not only the special treatment customarily accorded notables (e.g., in (22) Evergetis [37]) but also an exemption from the requirement of observing the monastery's cenobitic lifestyle (as in (27) Kecharitomene [4]).

Our author, seeing a serious threat to the monastery's cenobitic constitution, prevented [A5] the voivode's personal representative John Neagu the vitezes from instituting these disruptive changes. After learning of Chariton's defiance, the voivode summoned [A6], cf. [B8], [B9] him before a council of his own ecclesiastical officials who accused our author of disobedience to the founder. Chariton agreed to take the dispute to the Athonite fathers for arbitration and to abide by their decision. The latter, concerned like the members of the voivode's council that Chariton risked losing future patronal benefits, urged [A8] him to exercise a "certain economy" (oikonomia) and accept the ruler's appointees under the terms previously proposed. For his part, our author makes [A9], cf. [B13] a conditional agreement to tensure two of the voivode's appointees provided additional benefits of patronage were in fact forthcoming.

As this First Testament was being written in 1370, our author has drawn up [A10], cf. [B15] a proposed compromise "written as though composed by him (the voivode) personally" that was to be dispatched to the founder for his signature. According to Lemerle (*Kutlumu*s, p. 10), it is the monastery's copy of this document, also dated to 1370, that is preserved in Koutloumousi's archives.²⁴ Among other things, the document sought to show the diversity of the foundation's endowed properties and the many contributors (besides the voivode) who had donated them. Only the newly built fortification (kastron) is recognized (see also [A15], [B15]) as having been constructed at the voivode's expense, and even for that project our author maintains that the monks contributed labor and income from other properties. Moreover, the monks had been required [A15] to deposit certain of the foundation's consecrated objects as security for the money loaned to them by the voivode.

As our author saw it, the voivode's assistance with the financing of the fortification did not provide the foundation with the means to support the Vlach appointees "especially with [their] newly devised way of life," which suggests that the idiorhythmic lifestyle was not self-sustaining and had turned out to be more expensive to support than the cenobitic. To finance the newcomers, Chariton makes bold to propose [A12], cf. [B16], [B17] that the voivode cancel the monastery's indebtedness, erect a church large enough for all the brothers "present and yet to come" as well as a refectory of corresponding size, provide additional income-producing properties for the endowment, and formally acknowledge that the Greek monks were rightfully due "honor and precedence" over the Vlachs. Chariton and the brothers were to retain the right to choose [A13], cf. [B18], [C8] their own superior, but their choice would travel to the voivode to receive confirmation of office from him as founder. On the nominee's return, the protos of the Holy Mountain would bestow the pastoral staff. Our author makes [A14], cf. [B19] suspension of the cenobitic requirements for the Vlachs dependent on the voivode's assent to these terms, while he himself reserves the right (exercised twice later in [B] and [C]) to make his own changes in the present document.

Second Testament [B]

The Second Testament, written some months later in 1370, provides [B5] more details on how the fortification project was carried out. There is the same attempt as in [A4] to emphasize the co-contributors (in addition to the voivode) to the project. The author is also much more critical of the voivode's desire to alter the cenobitic constitution [B6], cf. [A5]: "while attentive to doling out funds, he paid little heed to the strictness of our way of life." He is equally harsh with the ruler's Vlach appointees, whom he claims wanted to live in a "relaxed, loose and irregular manner, inasmuch as they are mountain folk and unaccustomed to monastic continence and discipline." The discussion [B12] of the arbitration by the Athonite fathers is more nuanced and detailed than in the First Testament [A8]. Chariton records the praise he received as a true "founder" (ktetor) of his monastery for instinctively resisting the voivode's challenge to its cenobitic constitution, yet he also preserves his colleagues' argument for expediency in making concessions in common life and diet for "one who comes from a lordly and more luxurious way of living." Moreover, the fathers reminded [B13] Chariton that the last appointee sent by the voivode to Mount Athos had in fact been unable to persevere and eventually returned to his homeland.

The provisions of the document mentioned [A10] in the First Testament as having been drawn up by Chariton for the voivode's signature appear to be incorporated in the Second Testament ([B15] through [B21]). Chariton insists [B16] that the Vlachs dispatched to his monastery be essentially self-sustaining, able "to regulate their manner of life as each is able from his own resources." The discussion of privileges to be enjoyed provides [B17] that a monk of either of the two nationalities is to "receive proper honor and reverence (i.e., preference) from his subordinates in food, drink, and seating, and, in corresponding manner, what is due to him according to the years and labors of each one." Thus this foundation appears to have been at this time a completely non-Evergatian, traditional monastic organization. In observance of traditional Byzantine piety towards the "first founder," the monastery was also to retain [B17] its name.

Third Testament [C]

By the time he composed his third version of the Testament eight years later in 1378, Chariton, weakened by the plague [C1], had become [C5] both protos of the Holy Mountain and metropolitan of the Vlachs. The contentious negotiations over the voivode's patronal rights over Koutloumousi had receded into the background. The voivode, along with his wife Anna, receives posthumous credit for rebuilding [C4] the monastery (not just the fortification), though the contributions of other benefactors are also duly noted. There is, however, no mention of any patronal rights accruing to the voivode's successor.

Chariton reiterates his earlier discussions of the basis for his authority [C3], cf. [A3], [B2], of his fund-raising activities [C4], cf. [A4], [B5], and of the procedures for the election of his successor [C8], cf. [A13], [B18]. He omits his earlier concessions that the new superior should receive confirmation from the voivode and his pastoral staff from the protos. He adds provisions for his own memorial services [C6], prayers [C10] for the emperors and other (Christian) rulers that God might "subject the foe and every enemy under their feet,"²⁵ sale [C6], [C9] of his vestments to raise money to ransom monks from the Turks, and an injunction to preserve monastic poverty [C7]. This part of the text is described as a "secret testament" (like (52) Choumnos [A3]) and a codicil (like (24) Christodoulos [C]), implicitly recognizing the earlier versions [A] and [B].

Notes on the Introduction

1. For details on these and other manuscript witnesses, see Lemerle, Kutlumis, pp. 110, 116, 134.
2. See Lemerle, Kutlumis, pp. 6–8, 292.
3. So Lemerle, Kutlumis, p. 1; ed. pp. 225–28.
4. Lemerle, Actes de Saint-Pantéléemôn, no. 8, line 57.
5. Lemerle, Kutlumis, no. 15 (1329), pp. 70–76.
6. See Lemerle, Kutlumis, pp. 8–13, 292–97.
7. He is mentioned first in Athonite documents of 1362 (see Lemerle, Kutlumis, p. 294), but his commission to maintain and improve Koutloumousi (mentioned repeatedly in the document below, [A3], [B2], and [C3]) from the Athonite protos Theodosios must date from the latter's first or second tenure of office, 1353 or 1355–56.

51. KOUTLOUMOUSI

8. Lemerle, Kutlumis, nos. 25 (1369), pp. 99–102; 27 (1369), pp. 105–6; and 28 (1369), pp. 107–9.
9. Darrouzès, Regestes, no. 2654 (1372), pp. 547–48.
10. See Lemerle, Kutlumis, p. 296.
11. See Lemerle, Kutlumis, pp. 13–19, 297.
12. Lemerle, Kutlumis, no. 38 (1386), pp. 141–44.
13. Lemerle, Kutlumis, no. 40 (1393), pp. 147–48.
14. Lemerle, Kutlumis, no. 44 (1428), pp. 154–56.
15. See Lemerle, Kutlumis, pp. 19–22, 301–3.
16. Lemerle, Kutlumis, no. 48 (1501), pp. 162–63, with discussion, p. 301.
17. French translations by P. Wittek in Lemerle, Kutlumis, Appendix IV, pp. 234–39.
18. See Kadas, Mount Athos, pp. 70–73, and Lemerle, Kutlumis, pp. 23–25.
19. Lemerle, Kutlumis, p. 23.
20. Lemerle, Kutlumis, no. 80, pp. 222–24.
21. Kadas, Mount Athos, p. 73.
22. Meditation on death: [A1], [B14], [C1]; basis for Chariton's authority: [A3], [B2], [C3]; nature of the relationship with the patron: [A4], [B5], [C4]; patron's requirements: [A5], [B6], [B7]; conflict with the patron: [A6], [B8], [B9]; arbitration by the Athonite fathers: [A7], [B10], [B11]; their recommendations: [A8], [B12]; conditional acceptance of the patron's appointees: [A9], [B13]; sources of the monastery's endowment: [A10], [A11], [B15]; Chariton's proposal: [A12], [B16], [B17]; election of the new superior: [A13], [B18], [C8]; reservation of the right to make changes in the Testament: [A14], [B19]; condemnation of transgressors: [A15], [B20]; official confirmation: [A16], [B21], [C12].
23. For a discussion of these patriarchal grants, see Emil Herman, " 'Chiese private' e diritto di fondazione negli ultimi secoli dell'impero bizantino," OCP 12 (1946), 302–21, and my own Private Religious Foundations in the Byzantine Empire (Washington, D.C., 1987), pp. 249–62.
24. Lemerle, Kutlumis, no. 26 (1370), pp. 102–5, 367–68.
25. Prayers for military success are seen also in this era in (49) Geromeri [15], cf. (57) Bebaia Elpis [6], and earlier in (19) Attaleiates [43], (23) Pakourianos [18], and (33) Heliou Bomon [47].

Bibliography

- Kadas, S., Mount Athos (Athens, 1979), pp. 69–73.
- Matanov, Hristo, "Le mont Athos et les rapports politiques dans les Balkans durant la deuxième moitié du XIV^e siècle," Études balkaniques 17 (1981), 69–100, esp. 79.
- Năsturel, P., Le Mont Athos et les Roumains, Recherches sur leurs relations du milieu du 14^e siècle à 1654 (= OCA 227) (Rome, 1986).
- Talbot, Alice-Mary, "Koutloumousiou Monastery," ODB, p. 1158.

Translation

First Testament [A]

[A1.] If man had remained in that condition in which he had been fashioned by the God of all and had kept his commandments, he would not have been given over to death, or be constrained by such a brief span of life. Things would proceed more in accord with his wishes, and no unyielding obstacle would block his path. But his transgression has made him subject to death, a cruel one at that, and one cannot even describe the turbulent mass of things lying in wait for him. Even in this state he ought to give thanks to God, for it enables him to be cognizant of his own nature and to recognize that nothing has ever happened or will happen apart from God's will. He should be humbled by the mortality of his nature and should in turn be comforted by [God's] providence.

FOURTEENTH CENTURY

[A2.] Born and raised, as I have been, in this unstable nature and having lived my life and advanced in years to the present and, although quite unworthy, having enjoyed many great gifts from Christ my Savior, fearing that my life will soon come to its end, I freely submit this present Testament of mine to those who are and who will be my fathers and brothers in the revered monastery of our Savior Jesus Christ, which is also called Koutloumousi, and which by the inscrutable judgment of God is now under my care.

[A3.] For my most holy fathers in this monastery, moved by him who disposes all things for our benefit, with the will, vote, and agreement of the then protos of the revered monasteries of this holy mountain, the ordained monk Theodosios,¹ and the all-holy metropolitan of Hierissos and of our holy mountain, lord Iakobos, have with much entreaty entrusted me with its care. This is made clear in the letter they have addressed to me. It is authenticated not only by their own signatures, but also by those of the blessed and revered lords my fathers, I mean the aforementioned protos and the all-holy metropolitan. They laid upon me the charge of doing all I should wish for it with the help of God. It was not my intention to fall asleep over suggested improvements and means of strengthening the monastery, but rather with my whole mind and body to be zealous and to get things done for the betterment of the monastery and the benefit of the brothers in it.

[A4.] On its behalf I not only appealed to prominent Romans² to support me in this endeavor, but also those of other nationalities, from whose donations I endowed this monastery with no small amount of possessions and funding, as well as a fair amount of property. Indeed, it seemed to me that this monastery should have strong fortifications constructed around it to ward off the peoples who, because of my sins, were assaulting it, and to provide security and freedom from fear for the monks practicing asceticism there. I therefore went off to the most fortunate, most valiant lord, my son, the ruler of Ungrovlachia, lord John Vladislav,³ the voivode, and explained my plans to him. I also intimated that since his father, lord Nicholas Alexander⁴ of blessed memory, himself lord of the same Ungrovlachia, had greatly cooperated in constructing the foundations for a great tower, even though its completion was left to others, he too ought to imitate his father. This would assure him of remission of his sins, good health of soul and body, and an enviable reputation among emperors and rulers, for he would not be inferior to them in his munificence and his offerings to this most holy mountain, the eye, so to speak, of the whole civilized world. All this would be his if he should choose to build fortifications in this monastery of Koutloumousi. Actually, I suggested this two and even three times and, by God's help, I convinced him to bring it to completion. But it meant that I had to put up with hardships on my many journeys, fraught with fear, as I traveled through provinces subject to many lords, as everyone knows who is aware of or has heard about that project. By dint of much hard work and suffering on my part and on that of my fathers and brothers in this monastery, as well as by the support and financial expenditure of the most fortunate voivode himself, our patron,⁵ this fortification now in view has been constructed. In this way, therefore, the construction of the fortification was accomplished with the help of God, who guides all things along the way “from non-being into being.”⁶

[A5.] The voivode then decided to bring about certain changes in the cenobitic constitution of this monastery, inasmuch as the Vlachs who were also intending to come were accustomed to a life of ease and not to the austerities of established cenobitic life, lived as God intended. In this monastery too he intended to have those customs put into practice which prevailed in the other revered monasteries. First, he entrusted the implementation of his plan to his personal official, the zupan, lord John Neagu the vitezes.⁷ In fact, he arrived at this holy mountain just as I did, for at the time I had been away in Ungrovlachia. He “turned every stone,”⁸ so to speak, but was unable to shake my resolve in this matter. This meant that he was unsuccessful, and he departed without having been able to accomplish anything. [p. 114]

[A6.] After a short time, while I was again journeying in Ungrovlachia, on my way to the most fortunate voivode, things did not go so smoothly for me. For I discovered that he was quite perturbed. He recounted what he had heard from that man the vitezes, and brought these matters to my attention again. It was clear that my views remained the same, and he realized that he would have to make a more concerted effort. To this end he summoned the most holy metropolitan of All Ungrovlachia, hypertimos, lord Hyakinthos,⁹ the honorable dikaiophylax of the illustrious imperial clergy and of the holy Great Church of God, lord Daniel Kritopoulos,¹⁰ his superior and spiritual father lord Dorotheos, the logothetes, lord Sabas, and others. Having assembled in council, they also summoned me. They devoted themselves to discussing the matters referred to them, looking at all possible aspects. On the one hand, they were accusing me of not obeying our patron and builder, who had provided so much support, and on the other advising me not to let myself be deprived of many and great things which the most fortunate voivode was determined to offer to the monastery in addition. All of these things, they said, would work out well for me if I would go along with his plans. At times they called it a matter of arrogance because, in their judgment, I did not want to follow the same course of action as the others. But I continued to argue against this reckless experiment, and I said that they must allow me to remain within the unchanging boundaries of the fathers (cf. Prov. 22:28), which had been transmitted to me as an inheritance, and that they should not attempt to alter the institutions of cenobitic life, which the holy fathers viewed as heaven on earth.

[A7.] Nonetheless, after a great deal of discussion, they too departed, having heard nothing else from me except: “For myself I do not wish to undermine those rules enacted by my most holy fathers which have come down to me, even if I should incur a greater debt, even one immensely greater than the twelve hundred ounces [of ducats] which I presently owe. But, if on returning to the holy mountain and communicating the proposed plan to the many holy and godly men whom that mountain nourishes, I should discover that they approve of it, I would also persuade my brothers and fathers in the monastery and then, although without pleasure, I too shall observe what is pleasing to the most fortunate voivode.” With this response, they went to communicate their findings to the lord who had sent them. But he was quite perturbed at not having achieved his aims and sent me away practically empty-handed. There was no thought of any obligation or of anything else that was really needed. But he gave me a rather small payment as I left, so it would not seem that he was simply dropping all concern for the monastery.

FOURTEENTH CENTURY

[A8.] I returned to the holy mountain and consulted, as I had promised, with those holy and heavenly men. After lengthy inquiry and consideration, and a thorough investigation of the proposal, they reached a solution, and addressed me: "You do well not to go ahead and boldly try this experiment simply on your own initiative. But, be assured that even those whom God has put in charge of spiritual matters often have to make use of a certain economy to allow for changes in accord with various conditions, as indeed has been done in the other, larger monasteries on this holy mountain. Those who began this practice did not do so out of bad will, but because of the anomaly of the situation. They made concessions lest, by being too rigid, they might be deprived of what was more important. You too must do as the fathers. Such condescension is the only way in which you will gain what may be needed for the souls and the bodies of the brothers."

[A9.] I yielded to these inspired words, and so persuaded my brothers, and I continued to commend the whole matter to Christ my Savior. After a short time had passed, the most reverend protopapas of Ungrovlachia, lord Michael, arrived here along with his brother, the ordained monk lord Iakobos, and others. They wanted to be tonsured and to be numbered among us, but sought to embrace the way of life approved by the most fortunate voivode. Then I, calling to mind the advice of the holy fathers, said to him that if the most fortunate voivode, our patron, should continue his support in its fullness, I myself would be prepared to do what he so eagerly desired regarding the way of life in the monastery. "But in the meantime you should enjoy every comfort until we shall have made our views clear to the voivode and arrived at a solution." This, therefore, is our situation at the moment.

[A10.] The points in question have been drawn up in chapter form in the memorandum to be presented to the most pious voivode, our patron, and written as though composed by him personally. We are sending them to him so he might confirm them by his own signature. We have also retained a copy of it here.¹¹ The points are summarized in the present testamentary set of instructions of mine and read as follows: Of the possessions presently belonging to our revered monastery, cattle byres, vineyards, sheep, yoked animals, and all the others which, by God's providence, plainly exist among us, some are gifts of the most fortunate [p. 115] despot lord John Ugleša,¹² some of his father the Caesar, some of Vulk,¹³ and some were given by Romans such as the mezas stratopedarches Astras,¹⁴ Hierakes,¹⁵ and several others. Other possessions have been acquired by the manual labor and the individual expenditures of my fathers and brothers, those who have departed to the Lord and those still living. But the newly built fortification, which one can now see, and that alone, was constructed at the expense of the most fortunate voivode. The monks too contributed their share in the form of services and hard work, as well as the income from their possessions, which meant that they suffered being deprived of necessities for a great many years now.

51. KOUTLOUMOUSI

[A11.] The construction, therefore, of the fortified enclosing wall which one sees there, and only that, as I said, is the work of the voivode. In addition, there are certain sacred objects which are deposited as security for the twelve hundred ounces [of ducats] we owe, which were spent on its construction. As far as all the rest is concerned, some income was furnished by certain God-loving men, some from the labor and individual expenditures of the brothers. But they are not sufficient for both Vlachs and Romans, especially now with their newly devised way of life.

[A12.] Because of all this, I am requesting that he remit the debt of twelve hundred ounces [of ducats] expended in the construction of the fortification. I also ask that he erect a church large enough for all the brothers, present and yet to come, as well as a refectory of corresponding size. Let him make purchases and grant ownership of possessions, vines, animals, and other things, which will enable the brothers to enjoy some rest from their labors, those who have endured so much in its construction, as well as those yet to come. By his personal agreement and signature let him grant to the Romans, those now present and those by God's grace still to come, assurance that they will be accorded due honor and precedence by the Vlachs, that they will receive special treatment in matters of food and drink and all other things, and that they will not be harassed by the Vlachs in any way at all.

[A13.] Now then, regarding the person who shall become superior after my departure from this life, I have written down my preference, namely, that he be chosen previously by myself and by my brothers and should thus take on what we may call the promotion to the office of superior. Let him then go off to the most fortunate voivode, our patron, and receive his confirmation as superior. He should return again to the holy mountain and receive from the most holy protos the pastoral staff. He should then carry out the duties of superior, according to the custom of the fathers in force.

[A14.] I have, therefore, written these things, being sound in mind and healthy in body by the great goodness of God, and I submit it to my brothers in Christ. If, by the mercy of God, I remain among the living until the time comes for me to make any needed corrections to this Testament, thanks be to him who knows all things before they come into being. But if in the meantime I should pay my debt, those who reside or who shall reside after me in this revered monastery do not have my permission to try to dissolve the cenobitic institution established so well and in such God-loving fashion by our most holy fathers, unless the above matters compiled in chapter form should finally be confirmed by our patron, the most fortunate voivode.

[A15.] If anyone listed among the brothers of the monastery shows contempt for what I have laid down, no matter who he might be, he will be judged by God as having betrayed the holy canons handed down by our fathers and those given by me who am, by a judgment known only to God, his spiritual father. Those who shall do what is just and pleasing to God shall expel him from the monastery as careless and reckless.

[A16.] All of the above has been composed and written by me, Chariton, who by God's judgment have accomplished all that was written down and who am superior of this revered monastery, presently ordained monk and spiritual father. It has been approved and confirmed by the signatures of my most holy lord and father, the protos of the revered monasteries on this holy mountain, lord Sabas,¹⁶ ordained monk, of the God-loved bishop of Hierissos and the holy mountain, lord David, and of others. In the year 6878, the eighth indiction [= 1370 A.D.].

FOURTEENTH CENTURY

+ By the mercy of God, protos of the holy mountain of Athos, the ordained monk Sabas.¹⁷

+ The humble bishop of Hierissos and of the holy mountain, David.

+ The ordained monk of Koutloumoussi, Chariton.

Second Testament [B]

[p. 117] + With my own hand I have prefixed my name, Chariton, ordained monk of Koutloumoussi.

[B1.] To that ancient tabernacle of the law, which Moses had pitched at God's command and which had been fashioned by Bezalel (cf. Exod. 35:30), many people were called upon to make offerings, and many others on their own initiative made offerings, not only of gold and silver, scarlet and linen, but also of goat hair (cf. Exod. 35:6–7), the most common thing about. To my truly divine Savior Jesus even the offering of two obols from the widow (cf. Mark 12:42; Luke 21:2) appeared greater than what the wealthy people were depositing in the vaults of the treasury. Thus it is with those who set down the first foundations, the groundwork itself, and who built churches, revered convents, and monasteries, and who expended vast sums on them. All this involved a great deal of labor and care, but the effort demanded of those who assume the charge of ancient institutions which have grown old is no less. For their aim is to raise them up to great renown. They must bring unceasing concern and unending activity to the task of successfully completing their work.

[B2.] So I, Chariton, least among ordained monks and spiritual fathers, having enjoyed many great favors and benefactions, although truly unworthy, from our Lord Jesus Christ, our God and Savior, have not managed to accomplish anything good in his sight or to pay back even in the slightest way my many debts or to honor him with rich gifts and expenditures such as men look upon as proper. Instead, I clearly understood and believed that he did not attend to extravagant gifts but to rectitude of thought, and so I offered what I could. This is how it happened. The ineffable wisdom of God which governs and orders all things, whose "judgments are as the great deep" (Ps. 35 [36]:6), in ways known to his goodness, has moved the brothers then residing in this holy, revered monastery of our Lord Jesus Christ, which is also called Koutloumoussi, so that they have, with much love and the greatest insistence, demanded that I assume the leadership over them. When I refused and objected that I was impractical and negligent, the monks did not believe they had to acquiesce, and they said they would not remain [p. 118] quiet until they achieved their aims. Indeed, they went off to the most holy protos, at that time the ordained monk lord Theodosios, as well as to the most holy metropolitan of Hierissos and of this holy mountain of ours, lord Iakobos, and they explained what they had in mind, and obtained their strong support. Motivated by divine zeal, by persuasion and entreaty, and even by censure, they convinced me to assume this position of authority. The letter, in fact, of these fathers, my lords, and of the fathers dwelling in the monastery authorizes me to carry out all that I desire in it, as anyone who wishes may learn by reading it.

51. KOUTLOUMOUSI

[B3.] Indeed, with God supporting me in bearing the yoke of this monastery, I did not think I should permit myself any relaxation. Neither should I become absorbed in the table and in sleep, as might be expected of hirelings and not of shepherds (cf. John 10:12). Nor should I compromise the affairs of the monastery in any way at all and not employ all my strength and power even to giving up my own life. But whether, as the “good and faithful servant” (Matt. 25:20–22), I made full use of the talent given to me by God, I leave to others to investigate and discuss. But, without giving offense, I might tell my story, not taking any pride myself, but simply relating the wonders of God in my regard and attributing all successful accomplishments to the right hand of the Most High and his raised arm.

[B4.] The monastery expanded from a few, mediocre brothers to a large number of good ones; from some poor beggars to those who do not lack anything now; from those who owned very little to those who now possess much; from those with little equipment to those who now have a good deal of equipment, and good equipment at that; from those not protected by walls and easy to capture to those now safe within walls and not subject to capture. To put it simply, I did not compromise on anything at all which might adversely affect the maintenance and the betterment of the monastery. Anything of that sort I would fight with all the force of my body and my soul. In fact, it was for this reason that I did not spend much time in the monastery.

Practically my whole life was spent out in the open. I had to battle against winter with its snowstorms and downpours, summer with its scorching heat. There was the fear of being taken captive by the tribes. I encountered Romans, Serbs, and Vlachs, from whom I managed to acquire no small amount of money and possessions. Were the funds for the encircling wall, now clearly to be seen, obtained without any work? As the proverb says, “Did the grain come to use already ground?”¹⁸ By no means.

[B5.] Observing how easily the monastery could be taken by the invading, godless tribes, and viewing with foreboding being taken captive, I found my whole life constrained. For the sake of the monastery I recked not of danger and raced off to the most pious and most noble lord of Ungrovlachia, lord John Vladislav, the voivode. I reminded him how his truly blessed father, also lord of Ungrovlachia, lord Nicholas, had taken very much of a leading role in the erection of the great tower, even though he did not see its completion. I intimated that he too could contribute toward it for the salvation of his soul and the forgiveness of his sins, as well as for those of his father who had passed on. It would redound to his own good fortune, praise, and glory if he should build upon the foundation laid by his father and carry to completion the work he had begun and for which he had already prepared the ground. This he could do by erecting over that area already excavated some fortifications to protect the souls dwelling there. To this end I used every means of persuasion to induce him, and I tried to win him over with apostolic and fatherly advice. I did not even hold back my tears, that very useful and most efficacious remedy. With the approval of heaven and guided by him who opens his hands and fills every creature with goodness (Ps. 103 [104]:28), his heart too was opened, and he agreed to carry out the proposal. As a result, with his support and financial contributions, and with the wearisome labors of myself and my brothers, which we endured in our many and rough journeys traveling through lands, cities, and provinces belonging to many rulers, as everyone knows, and even more by the labor of our own hands each day and by furnishing of food and drink from our estates, with God's help, the fortification now to be seen was built. I shall not even mention the contributions and payments of the monastery and the many brothers who became bored with the labor and ran away. Moreover, there were the exigencies of the debt and the harassment of the debtors which we endured in order to erect the fortification, so that we still owe a thousand aspra.

FOURTEENTH CENTURY

[B6.] Now, once the fortification had been completed, we faced another conflict, and greater struggles threatened our souls with destruction. For the above-mentioned voivode, while attentive to the funds he was doling out, paid little heed to the strictness of our way of life. Some of the Vlachs who were coming here and being tonsured wanted to live in a relaxed, loose, and irregular manner, inasmuch as they are mountain folk and unaccustomed to monastic continence and discipline. It was his intention to alter and to transform the rule legislated and defined by our holy, God-bearing, immortalized fathers, and that rule of common life [p. 119] which had been so well elaborated and observed by those founders and holy fathers of mine.

[B7.] He first raised this issue through the zupan lord Neagu, the vitezes, who was very close to him in all respects. Indeed, he arrived at the holy mountain at the same time as I was returning from those parts. He "left no stone unturned,"¹⁹ as the saying goes, trying to convince me to give in to this way of life, unusual and foreign to true monks. But God from whom all good comes was on my side, and the zupan did not succeed in shaking my resolve or in changing the position I adhered to regarding our paternal, or if you will, divine inheritance. But he departed without having achieved anything.

[B8.] This was not the end of our trials, and the afflictions did not stop here. Once again there were other trials, and again onslaughts of evil worse and more extensive than the previous ones. As I appeared for the second time before the above-mentioned most pious voivode on matters of government, I found him ill-disposed and hostile toward me, not at all civil or gentle, and I was not able to relax even a little. He was very perturbed and angry, and he railed furiously at me for not having paid any heed to what Neagu had said. Once more, he carefully communicated his views to me, and on finding that I had not changed my views and was absolutely unyielding, he thought I should be forced to face another trial, a more persuasive and respectable one.

[B9.] The voivode then summoned the most holy metropolitan of all Ungrovlachia, the hypertimos lord Hyakinthos, the then most honorable dikaiophylax of the reverend clergy of the holy Great Church of God, lord Daniel Kritopoulos, who is himself now the most holy metropolitan of Ungrovlachia, his superior and spiritual father lord Dorotheos, the logothetes lord Sabas, and others, and he referred the matter to them. After they had assembled in council, they had me join them. They began by traveling down every sort of trail as long as it might aid them in meeting the wishes of the pious voivode. At times they were entreating me and claiming that good judgment was really a lack of judgment. At other times they were accusing me of being disobedient to the wishes of the patron who had been so very generous toward me. Sometimes they turned to giving me advice so that I would not be deprived of his future benefactions. They did not even refrain from accusations and insults. They accused me of being arrogant because I did not want to live in the same way as the others.

51. KOUTLOUMOUI

[B10.] On hearing these things, I was certainly hurt. How could I not be, unless I were made of stone or iron? It was because we were in such dire straits that I had taken the road. But the boldness of the proposed plan and the fact that so many fathers had measured out their lives in the same way of life, and from whom we have received this good heritage, gave me pause. I could not bear that the report should reach the monks, even on the tips of their ears, that I might be responsible for overturning what we had of the way of the life of the fathers. These considerations held me back and did not allow me to agree with what I was hearing. For I fear the judgment of God, I told them. I have no right to overturn what was well determined by the fathers, even if I should incur a greater debt than the present one of twelve hundred ounces [of ducats]. I recalled how our great and merciful father had acted. Not even in persistent want did he compromise on any of the holy canons or yield on anything, but commended the situation of the poor monks to the father of the orphans, to him who provided for all. Nonetheless, struck as I was by so many verbal arrows, I departed from what I really believed. "I shall refer this matter," I said, "to the most holy fathers and elders who are numerous on the holy mountain. If they make the judgment that it is a matter of economy and not of dissolution, then I too, albeit reluctantly, shall go along with the pious voivode."

[B11.] Those who had been commissioned then communicated my words to the person who had sent them. He was perturbed and took it hard that he had fallen short of his goal, and he dismissed me practically empty-handed, without even a thought for our debt or any one of our basic expenses. All I received was a pittance for my journey, enough so it would not seem that he was dropping all concern for the mountain.

[B12.] When I returned to our own holy mountain, I referred the whole matter to the esteemed, prudent, and saintly old men, begging them to determine what would be pleasing to God. "You did well," I heard from them, "and you did well not to take any bold action on your own initiative which might be contrary to the way of life of the fathers, but to cling to it with all your strength. For this reason you may accurately be called founder and successor, not overturner and destroyer, of the fathers before you. This is to share the same belief and the same throne, not to set up a rival belief and a rival throne. It is characteristic, however, of correct judgment to know how to make adaptations to the times and to persons if it is to convey anything necessary or beneficial to souls or bodies. For in the same way in which we declare that it is rash and lacking in judgment to overturn the excellent way of life of the fathers, so we repeat that it is also lacking in judgment not to compromise or make concessions to one who comes from a lordly and more luxurious manner of living, who is, moreover, unaccustomed to a harsh and rugged way of life, but who has taken action on a number of expenses for things which the monastery needs, or also to make concessions to others who are weak and, in addition, [p. 120] not capable of submitting to common life and to the seasonal diet provided for their table companions. But it is necessary to employ economy concerning the matters in question, otherwise, because of their inability to deal with things, they might turn back again to where they had been, and this crime will be greater than the correction.”

FOURTEENTH CENTURY

[B13.] With these words, those noble men convinced me. They also cited the case of one who had joined them a short time previously. The most reverend protopapas, lord Melchisedek,²⁰ had come from the most fortunate voivode, had been tonsured, and enjoyed a softer way of life. But he was still unable to persevere and returned whence he had come. I too yielded to their inspired words and admitted that their decision was a good one. I gave my assent to the views of the fathers, along with the proper affirmative counsel of the brothers residing with me. Now then, the points in question, those on which I yielded somewhat to the will of the pious voivode, have been arranged in chapters and written down in the memorandum addressed to him, so he might observe them, guarantee them with his own signature, and make them firm. They will also be written by me, who have put together the above account up to this point, and which by the grace of my Lord is a truthful one.

[B14.] Since I too am a man and subject to human and physical laws, I shall inexorably and in due course submit to the punishment of death for my disobedience, according to the divine declaration. I have, therefore, while still sound and in bodily health, deemed it necessary to make arrangements for the peace of the monastic community after my death to forestall any scandals which might arise if matters were to remain unsettled. With God's help, therefore, I make the following dispositions.

[B15.] First of all, I grant to all orthodox Christians and to the brothers with me, present and future, due forgiveness, which I in turn beg from all people. Next, concerning the institution of common life I make the following regulations. The possessions we can see which presently belong to our monastery, I refer to cattle byres, vineyards, sheep, yoked animals, and all the others, come from various benefactors. Some are gifts from the most pious emperors of the Romans and of the Serbians, some from the most fortunate despot, lord John Ugleša, and from his father the Caesar, some from Vulk, some from Radochna, from the mezas stratopedarches Astras, from Hierakes. The small monastery in Thessalonike was given by Chalkaiopoulos, and the rest was given by other Serbs and Romans. But most of the possessions about us derive directly from the manual labor of my fathers and brothers, those who have gone on before us and those still around. The newly built fortification, however, which can now be seen, and that alone, has been constructed at the expense of the most fortunate voivode, and certain sacred objects are deposited as security for the debt of a thousand aspra for its construction. Nor did the monks fail to contribute to its construction. From their possessions they paid some expenses, which made things difficult for them, so that they were hard pressed for necessities. Some of the actual labor was also done directly by them with their own toil and sweat.

51. KOUTLOUMOUSI

[B16.] Now, we would ask if the most pious voivode could remit the debt of a thousand aspra which had been paid out for the construction of the fortification, and if he could erect a greater church, large enough to accommodate the Roman brothers who reside here as well as the Vlachs who will be arriving. In addition, let him also erect a refectory of corresponding size for them, and let him purchase possessions and animals, set up vineyards and other things able to bring some relief to the brothers who have labored so much in supporting the monastery. In return, I exempt and permit the Vlachs who shall come from a lordly station and who provide the monastery with sufficient funds for their comfort, as well as those among them who may be infirm, to regulate their manner of life as each is able from his own resources, without requesting the monastery for more than their customary and assigned service.

[B17.] According to the blessed Paul, with God there is “neither Jew nor Greek” (Gal. 3:28; Col. 3:11), “but in every nation anyone who fears him is acceptable to him” (Acts 10:35). I, therefore, make this disposition concerning positions of honor and precedence among the brothers. On the pretext that the monastery and its possessions are Roman, the brothers who are Roman have no license to drive away or disparage the brothers who are Vlachs, and who have brought in certain necessities, or have worked hard. On the other hand, neither shall the Vlachs sit in judgment because of the fortification constructed by our patron, and refuse to contribute payments and labor. But as one people let each receive proper honor and reverence from his subordinates in food, drink, and seating, and, in corresponding manner, in what is due²¹ to him according to the years and labors of each one, as is done in the rest of the hagioritic monasteries, who are at peace with the brothers of other nationalities living in them. Let the monastery be known as that of Koutloumousi, seeing as it was founded by the late holy founder²² of ours, and let the Vlachs accord fitting reverence and honor to the Romans who have [p. 121] labored here. In this way let them live in peace and harmony as befits saints. To this end I requested the pious voivode to issue a letter guaranteeing precedence in all things to the Romans.

[B18.] In like manner I also make this disposition about the one who shall be superior after my departure from this life. Supplication should first be offered to God by the entire brotherhood that God should grant them a superior who will maintain the dignity of the title, who will be a shepherd, not a hireling (cf. John 10:12) who betrays the calling, unstable of character, always bent over the table, and unconcerned about spiritual matters. Let the monk elected by the brothers be chosen not just for his grey hairs but for his wisdom. For God does not look at the person as men do, but is pleased by the nobility of soul and looks kindly upon the meek, the gentle, and those who observe his commandments. After the election he should go off to the most fortunate voivode, our patron, and be formally installed by him as superior. Returning here to the holy mountain, he should receive the pastoral staff from the most holy protos. He may then function as superior of the monastery according to the ancient custom of the fathers still in vigor and the rule of common life.

[B19.] Now, therefore, while still of sound mind and in good bodily health, owing to God’s forbearance, I make this disposition, and I confirm it, and I formally present it to my brothers in Christ as a fatherly inheritance and rule. If, by the mercy of God, I should remain among the living long enough to make any needed corrections in all of this, thanks be to God. But if in the meantime I should pay my obligations, those who reside or shall reside in this revered monastery after me do not have my permission to try to destroy the constitution of common life which has been clearly set forth in a God-loving manner by my holy fathers, unless those points previously composed in chapter form should receive final confirmation by the most fortunate voivode. When that has been done, such concessions are to be made only to those whom I have mentioned above.

FOURTEENTH CENTURY

[B20.] If anyone listed among the brothers in the monastery shows contempt for the dispositions I have made, whoever he may be he will be judged by God as having betrayed the holy canons handed down by our forefathers and by me who am, by judgments known only to God, his spiritual father. He shall, moreover, incur the canonical penalties and curses and by those doing what is just and pleasing to God he shall, as a reckless person, a perverter, be expelled from the monastery.

[B21.] The above was written and composed by me, who by the judgment of God, have accomplished all that was written down, I, Chariton, ordained monk, spiritual father, and superior of the revered monastery of Koutloumoussi, have confirmed and signed as guarantee in my own hand. In the month of November, the ninth indiction, the year 6879 [= 1370 A.D.].

+ I, Chariton, ordained monk of Koutloumoussi, have signed with my own hand.

Since in the pious laws it appears that a general testament and the codicil following it should be verified by the signatures and witness of noteworthy men, and so receive confirmation, I request my holy fathers, the all-holy protos and the most holy bishop of Hierissos and of the holy mountain and the most holy superiors of the revered hagioretic monasteries, both in their capacities as officials and overseers of the holy mountain and also as trustworthy witnesses, to confirm by their own signatures this Testament of mine so it will be held as firm and unchallenged by all.

+ The protos of the holy mountain of Athos, the ordained monk Sabas.²³

+ The superior of the revered and holy imperial monastery of Vatopedi, the ordained monk Joseph.

[On the verso:]

+ The present Testament was published in the month of November of the ninth indiction.

+ The humble bishop of Hierissos and of the holy mountain, David.

Third Testament [C]

[p. 135] + I, the humble metropolitan of Ungrovlachia, hypertimos, titular bishop²⁴ of Amaseia, and protos of the Holy Mountain, Chariton, have with my own hand prefixed my name.

+ In the name of the Father and of the Son and of the Holy Spirit. I, the humble metropolitan of Ungrovlachia, Chariton, hypertimos, and titular bishop of Amaseia, and protos of the Holy Mountain of Athos, publish the present testamentary document of my will and disposition executed and signed, and I do this willingly, with aforethought and freely, being sound and healthy of mind, by the grace of Christ, and able to speak without any impairment.

51. KOUTLOUMOUSI

[C1.] I am fearful of the untimely onslaught of death, for my body is in poor condition, and very painfully tested by this pestilential disease that is now among us. For since, because of the disobedience of our ancestors, we share their curse, to the earth from whence we have been taken we again return, and since we have come into being, we are subject to destruction, and . . . we are subject to death. “There is no man who shall live and who shall not see death” (Ps. 88 [89]:48), even though he boast of being crowned with diadems, even though he rejoices in the delights of wealth and fame. In this regard even such a man as that shares exactly the same nature and is subject to the same ruin.

[C2.] Fearful of the untimely onslaught of death, I have again thought it necessary to make such arrangements as I prefer of my affairs and what I wish to be done after I depart this life. If indeed I had given myself up to the possession of money or material objects or any such thing, and had devoted my energies to concern for them, whether they had accrued to me from my fathers or I had myself come to own them and be anxious about them, as everybody else, . . . I would make my disposition and, as is customary, would divide them up in the hands of my relatives and the poor, in such a way that I would have been able to dispose of them according to my mind and preference. But since involvement with these things is of absolutely no interest to me, either because of God’s commandment or because of my own negligence, in this present testamentary document of mine I shall not discuss these matters. I do, however, make arrangements concerning that with which I have been particularly occupied through my life, and which I have held in the highest regard from the time when I first came in contact with it, I mean, the revered monastery of Koutloumousi on this Holy Mountain of ours, Athos.

[C3.] This monastery was at first renowned and well regarded, with many excellent features, housing holy, God-bearing men who sang hymns and devoted themselves to God. But at the repeated request and invitation [p. 136] of those holy fathers of mine who were giving themselves to asceticism in it, and in fact also at the request of those other holy, God-bearing fathers of mine, the most holy protos, lord Theodosios Alopous, the most holy bishop of Hierissos and of the Holy Mountain, the late blessed lord Iakobos, I yielded and received this position. It was not from my own resources that the monastery acquired its present status. For how could this be, since I noted above that I had absolutely no interest in acquiring gold or silver? But it was because of my eagerness, my efforts, and my concern, which I believe to be more important for the preservation of a holy house. For money, when given for such a purpose, is often only an indication of good will, but serious effort conjoined with eagerness and holy zeal is indisputable evidence of the fear and love of God. Having received this charge, therefore, as mentioned, I sought to put my zeal to use and bring about changes leading to the greatest improvements. But I discovered that its resources were absolutely tiny, it was oppressed by great want, and it was revered only for those men I mentioned who were outstanding for virtue.

FOURTEENTH CENTURY

[C4.] Paying no heed, therefore, to old age or to illness and, as everyone knows, ignoring wintry weather and burning heat, in great haste and intent on nothing else, I departed from here on work for the monastery. I went off to the Romans, Serbians, and Bulgarians to request what was needed for its foundation and support. By my prayers and entreaties I persuaded them, with God graciously and kindly looking on what was undertaken for him. Thus I journeyed seven times to the late, blessed voivode Vladislav and his wife the lady Anna. By the providence of God, they presented me with funds for the rebuilding of the monastery. It was indeed rebuilt and beautified. They contributed to its improvement, as anyone can now clearly see, to the glory of God who disposes all things for our good. Not only that, but I was able to ransom some of the brothers from the monastery who had been taken captive and given into the hands of the godless Moslems, sometimes two, sometimes three, and once fourteen at one time. I was able to do this by going to visit the most pious and most blessed lady, Queen Elizabeth,²⁵ and others. Furthermore, I had also received a large contribution from Vulk for the governance of the monastery. It is, therefore, for this particular reason that I did not acquire, as I said, either silver or gold for myself, as all my dearest brothers in Christ Jesus, the children of my lowly self, know.

[C5.] But when, by a judgment known only to God, I entered upon the high priesthood and my service as protos, I did not lose thought of the life I had formerly led, and I remained concerned about my customary poverty. Now perhaps some might suspect that from both of these dignities and their revenues I acquired something for myself. I have gone into this in some detail so that people reading this present Testament of mine will not think I have set myself up as someone to be marveled at because of my lack of possessions. But I have done it so that they may know that my zeal for the protection of this same monastery has been so great that I took no thought for anything of my own but spent everything for its preservation. Those monks I have mentioned who are residing there should be aware of this, as well as those who later . . . and because of the labor I expended on it, and in proportion to that they should be kind enough to remember me after my departure from this earth. If as a father and counselor I may bequeath anything to them, let them receive it and guard it firmly and staunchly as beneficial and salutary to their souls.

[C6.] The enkolpion I wear I leave to my most holy lord the ecumenical patriarch. The mandyon I wear and the other vestments belonging to me I leave to the same monastery, so they may be sold to aid the captives. . . . expenses, as I may arrange concerning the obsequies and commemorations for me. I say that it was left to the decision and discretion of the brothers. . . . For I do not believe they shall neglect their obligations toward me, for they know that during my life I was always concerned about protecting their bodies and souls. For myself in particular I beg them, after my departure from this life, that each successive day up to forty days they should celebrate one liturgy for my soul.

[C7.] In like manner I beg them, call upon them, and as a father I advise them that they preserve poverty as the paternal inheritance we have received from those old monks whose memory is eternal. The monks are well aware of the benefits which derive from poverty; nonetheless there are a few points I would like to recall to their attention. If those words are true which come from the mouth of the Lord, who does not lie, namely, that “where our treasure is there will our heart be also” (Matt. 6:21; Luke 12:34): since this is indeed true, it must follow that if we gather our treasure from the things of this earth which disappear like smoke, then our heart too will roll around here below and be tied to earth and have no [p. 137] inclination at all to rise to what is above and remains forever. But if we store up our treasure there, being mindful always of God and of the rewards he has promised, there is where our heart will be also. By as much difference, therefore, as there is between spiritual and bodily things, between heavenly and earthly, by so much does storing up treasure in heaven differ from storing it up on earth. Is there any way in which monks who have made promises to deny the world and what is in the world, can then justify betraying their promises? They turn back again “to their own vomit” (II Peter 2:22), and fall again into those very things they had promised to part from. Moreover, they have to face the wrath of God because not only have they not denied themselves, according to the commandments, and taken up their cross and followed (Matt. 10:38; Luke 14:27), but on the pretext of fulfilling the Savior’s command which forbids [giving] to God . . . they strive for something . . . commandment . . . they may be deprived of eternal rewards . . . of the old monks in this monastery whose memory is eternal, and who have illuminated the way of life . . .

51. KOUTLOUMOUSI

[C8.] I make this disposition regarding the one who shall be appointed as superior after I depart this life and those who succeed him according to the instructions I give now. First, when the time is approaching for the leadership of the holy people to be bestowed in trust and the pastoral staff for the rational flock of Christ, especially the elect, to be handed over, let them beseech God that it be granted to this holy flock by him from whom comes “every good endowment and every perfect gift” (James 1:17). After an ektenes has been recited from the depths of the soul, have everyone, as by consensus, come to an agreement on one individual and choose the person they judge worthy of such service. First, he must be a disciple of the peaceful and meek Christ, proclaiming the good news of Christ’s peace to all and setting his light before everyone to declare the glory of our Father who is in heaven. He should lay claim to that marvelous possession, poverty, by which material beings seem to stand free of material needs. By means of the perfect square of virtue, as a four-horse chariot, they arrive at the innermost sanctuary of heaven, as did Elijah (4 Kings 2:11), “leaving this world before their bodies, with a certain wise madness they advance to concentrate on better things.”²⁶

[C9.] Some time ago, by a judgment known only to God, or, to speak more accurately, because of our failings, some of our brothers, alas, have been given into the hands of the godless Achemenids [Turks], and it is our duty to ransom them. Since they have labored hard on our behalf and now suffer such a fate, I state, intend, wish, and dispose that, when the time comes for me to perform my obligatory service and to pay back my loan to the earth, then let them sell my vestments, my mandyon, and the other things, which I bequeath to this monastery for such a purpose and which were given by the above. . . . Let the brothers be ransomed. These matters then are covered in what I have written.

[C10.] Now with all my soul I pray for our powerful and holy rulers and emperors that God may grant them life, many years, and every other good and salvific gift. May they subject the foe and every enemy under their feet. To all . . . Christians to whom I have been a stumbling block of scandal, I [beg forgiveness, and those by whom] I have been scandalized in turn, . . . I grant pardon.

FOURTEENTH CENTURY

[C11.] I want the present testamentary document and what is contained in it to be in force as a clear and sealed testament, as secret, as a codicil, and as whatever else the divine laws require for a document to be recognized and for the intentions of the persons making the disposition to be approved as valid. Anyone who shall attempt to take any steps to dissolve or censure this document, render it imperfect or invalid, whoever he might be, shall first draw upon himself the divine wrath and that of the saints from eternity. He shall fall from the portion of the saved, and he shall be struck down by the curses of the holy men and of myself a sinner.

[C12.] I beg my illustrious fathers on this Holy Mountain of Athos, I mean all the superiors, and in the first place my lord, brother, and fellow minister, the most holy and God-loving bishop of Hierissos and of the Holy Mountain, that with their own hands they may sign and confirm the present Testament of mine, so it may thus be authenticated.

Written in the month of July, the first indiction, the year 6886 [= 1378 A.D.].

- + The bishop of Ungrovlachia and protos, Chariton.
- + . . . brother and fellow minister [p. 138] of the humble, most holy . . .
- + The humble bishop of Hierissos and of the Holy Mountain, Isaac.
- + The superior of the revered, holy, and imperial Great Lavra, the ordained monk Kyrillos.
- + The superior of the revered, holy, and imperial great monastery of Vatopedi, the ordained monk Theodoulos.
- + The superior of the revered, holy, and imperial monastery of Iveron, the ordained monk Kallistos.
- + The superior of the sanctuary and monastery of the most holy Mother of God, Hilandar, the ordained monk Sisoje.²⁷
- + The superior of the revered, holy, and imperial monastery of Philotheos, the ordained monk Euthymios.
- + The representative²⁸ of the revered, imperial monastery of Docheiariou, the ordained monk M . . .
- + . . . the ordained monk . . . sios.

51. KOUTLOUMOUSI

Notes on the Translation

Editors' note: The assistance of our translator, George Dennis [GD], is gratefully acknowledged for the notes to this document.

1. Theodosios is attested as protos in 1353 and again in 1355–56, for whom see Papachryssanthou, Prôtaton, p. 138.
2. Byzantine Greeks.
3. John Vladislav (1364–74), for whom see Lemerle, Kutlumis, p. 9.
4. Alexander Basarab (1352–64), for whom see Lemerle, Kutlumis, pp. 9, 294.
5. ktetor, “owner,” or, as ktitor, “founder,” but as the voivode was neither, the term is translated here as “patron.” [GD]
6. John Chrysostom, Liturgia, ed. F. E. Brightman (London, 1896), p. 369, lines 27–29, and p. 384, lines 27–28.
7. For the correct name of this official and his title which designates a “knight,” see Năsturel, Mont Athos, p. 44, n. 35.
8. Cf. Zenobius, Centuria 5.63, ed. E. Leutsch and F. Schneidewin, Corpus Pseudoepigraphorum Graecorum, vol. 1 (Göttingen, 1839–51; repr. Hildesheim, 1958), p. 146.
9. Hyakinthos, previously metropolitan of Vitsina, nominated by John Vladislav’s father Alexander Basarab to Patriarch Kallistos as metropolitan of “All Ungrovlachia” in 1359; see Darrouzès, Regestes, no. 2411, pp. 338–40, ed. MM 1.383–88, and Lemerle, Kutlumis, pp. 10–11, 295, 371–72.
10. Daniel Kritopoulos, who was shortly to be appointed under the name Anthimos as metropolitan of “part of Ungrovlachia” by Patriarch Philotheos in November 1370; see Darrouzès, Regestes, no. 2593, pp. 501–2, ed. MM 1.535–36, and Lemerle, Kutlumis, pp. 11, 372.
11. See Lemerle, Kutlumis, no. 26 (1370), pp. 102–5, 367–68.
12. Jovan Uglješa (1365–71), Serbian despot of Serres.
13. Vulk Branković, for whom see Lemerle, Kutlumis, p. 386.
14. George Astras Synadenos, for whom see Lemerle, Kutlumis, p. 372.
15. According to Lemerle, Kutlumis, p. 294, Michael Hierakes, an oikeios (for which see Alexander Kazhdan, “Oikeios,” ODB, p. 1515) of Emperor John V Palaiologos.
16. Sabas, attested as protos in Athonite documents from 1368 through 1371, for whom see Papachryssanthou, Prôtaton, p. 139.
17. The signature line is in Slavic.
18. Cf. Gregory of Cyprus, Centuria 1.21, ed. Leutsch and Schneidewin, Corpus Pseudoepigraphorum Graecorum, vol. 2, p. 94.
19. Cf. Zenobius, Centuria 5.63, ed. Leutsch and Schneidewin, Corpus Pseudoepigraphorum Graecorum, vol. 1, p. 146.
20. The protopapas Michael, known at Koutloumousi under his monastic name Melchisedek, who later returned to the monastery and in 1375 had become its second-ranking official after Chariton himself; see Lemerle, Kutlumis, no. 31 (1375), p. 124, with p. 11, n. 60.
21. eisodemata, which has a technical meaning here. [GD]
22. A reference to the shadowy Koutloumousi, reputed founder of the monastery; see above, Institutional History, A.
23. The signature line is in Slavic.
24. topon epechon designates a bishop who was given a vacant or defunct see in epidosis, for which see Darrouzès, Ορφικια, pp. 470, 477 and 478, n. 1.
25. Helen, daughter of the Bulgarian tsar Ivan Alexander and widow of the Serbian ruler Stefan Uroš IV Dušan (1331–55) for whom see Lemerle, Kutlumis, p. 386.
26. Theophylact Simocatta, Historia 1.14.8, ed. C. de Boor, rev. P. Wirth (Stuttgart, 1972).
27. The signature line is in Slavic.

FOURTEENTH CENTURY

28. Ho dikaiou: the same as ho dikaio, i.e., a representative, an agent (ho ta dikaia pheron). See Darrouzès, Οφφικία, p. 131 and n. 1; 338, n. 4; 330, n. 1.

Document Notes

1. First Testament [A]

- [A1] Meditation on Death. See also the parallel treatment in [B14] and [C1] below, as well as in (49) Geromeri [1] and (50) Gerasimos [1].
- [A2] Dedication of the Testament to the monks of Koutloumousi.
- [A3] Legal basis for Chariton's authority. See also parallel treatments in [B2] and [C3] below.
- [A4] Chariton's enlistment of the voivode John Vladislav as patron; construction of the fortification. See also parallel treatments in [B5] and [C4] below. For a similar monastic fortifications, see (23) Pakourianos [1] and (24) Christodoulos [A12].
- [A5] The voivode's attempt to alter the cenobitic constitution. See also parallel treatments in [B6], [B7] below. For the traditional hostility to such attempts, see (27) Kecharitomene [2] and, more recently, (47) Philanthropos [3], [4].
- [A6] Chariton's appearance before the voivode's council of ecclesiastical advisers. See also parallel treatments in [B8], [B9] below.
- [A7] Chariton's promise to abide by the arbitration of the Athonite fathers. See also parallel treatments in [B10], [B11] below.
- [A8] Athonite fathers urge concessions. See also the parallel treatment in [B12] below.
- [A9] Chariton's conditional acceptance of Vlach postulants. See also the parallel treatment in [B13] below.
- [A10] Chariton's proposed compromise; contributions of other benefactors. See also the parallel treatment in [B15] below, and the probable text of the agreement drawn up for the voivode's signature preserved in Lemerle, Kutlumus, No. 26 (1370), pp. 102–5, 367–68.
- [A11] Security deposit for the voivode's loan; other sources of the endowment; insufficiency of support for both Vlachs and Romans. See also the parallel treatment in [B15] below.
- [A12] Chariton's requests to the voivode. See also parallel treatments in [B16], [B17] below.
- [A13] Procedures for election and confirmation of the new superior. See also parallel treatments in [B18] and [C8] below. For elections, patronal confirmations, and ecclesiastical installations in the Palaiologan era, see (37) Auxentios [2], [3]; (38) Kellibara I [18]; (39) Lips [5], [7]; (40) Anargyroi [5]; (48) Prodromos [13]; (54) Neilos Damilas [18]; (57) Bebaia Elpis [25], [26]; (58) Menoikeion [22]; (59) Manuel II [3]; cf. (60) Charsianeites [C18].
- [A14] Chariton's reservation of right to make changes in the Testament; constitutional changes dependent on voivode's confirmation of Chariton's proposal. See also the parallel treatment in [B19] below. For an author's reservation of the right to make changes, see also (27) Kecharitomene [3], cf. her actual changes in [79] and [80].
- [A15] Condemnation of transgressors. See also the parallel treatment in [B20] below, and the use of curses in (35) Skoteine [46], (37) Auxentios [2], (45) Neophytos [22], (48) Prodromos [16], (49) Geromeri [16], (50) Gerasimos [5], (54) Neilos Damilas [21], (57) Bebaia Elpis [17], and (60) Charsianeites [B22].
- [A16] Confirmations. See also parallel treatments in [B21] and [C12] below.

2. Second Testament [B]

- [B1] Direction of old monasteries equally as demanding as erection of new ones. See continuation of the argument in [B3] and [B4] below.
- [B2] Legal basis for Chariton's authority. See also parallel treatments in [A3] above and in [C3] below.
- [B3] Responsibilities of directing a monastery. Continues the argument of [B1] above.
- [B4] Expansion and improvements under Chariton's administration. Continues the argument of [B1] and [B3] above.

51. KOUTLOUMOUI

- [B5] Chariton's enlistment of the voivode John Vladislav as patron; construction of the fortification. See also parallel treatments in [A4] above and in [C4] below.
- [B6] The voivode's attempt to alter the cenobitic constitution. See also the parallel treatment in [A5] above, with cross-references.
- [B7] Role of the zupan Neagu the vitezes. See also the parallel treatment in [A5] above.
- [B8] Hostility of the voivode towards Chariton. See also the parallel treatment in [A6] above.
- [B9] Chariton's appearance before the voivode's council of ecclesiastical advisers. See also the parallel treatment in [A6] above.
- [B10] Chariton's promise to abide by the arbitration of the Athonite fathers. See also the parallel treatment in [A7] above.
- [B11] Chariton angrily dismissed by the voivode. See also the parallel treatment in [A7] above.
- [B12] Chariton's consultation with the Athonite fathers. See also the parallel treatment in [A8] above.
- [B13] Chariton's conditional acceptance of Vlach postulants; drafting of a memorandum of understanding. See also the parallel treatment in [A9] above.
- [B14] Prologue to the memorandum of understanding; meditation on death. See also the parallel treatments in [A1] above and [C1] below; the text of the memorandum is incorporated in [B15] through [B19] below.
- [B15] Sources of the monastery's endowment. See also parallel treatments in [A10], [A11] above.
- [B16] Chariton's requests and concessions to the voivode. See also the parallel treatment in [A12] above.
- [B17] Regulations governing the relations between Vlachs and Romans. See also the parallel treatment in [A12] above. For other ethnic restrictions and prejudices, see (21) Roidion [B3], [B4]; (23) Pakourianos [24]; (42) Sabas [2], [9]; and (50) Gerasimos [4]. Such monastic reform principles as those embodied in (22) Evergetis [9], [26] and related documents are here implicitly rejected.
- [B18] Procedures for election and confirmation of the new superior. See also parallel treatments in [A13] above, with cross-references, and [C8] below.
- [B19] Chariton's reservation of right to make changes in the Testament; constitutional changes dependent on voivode's confirmation of Chariton's proposal and limited to those mentioned. See also the parallel treatment in [A14] above, with cross-reference.
- [B20] Condemnation of transgressors. See also the parallel treatment in [A15] above, with cross-references.
- [B21] Confirmations. See also parallel treatments in [A16] above and [C12] below.

3. Third Testament [C]

- [C1] Meditation on death. See also parallel treatments in [A1] and [B14] above.
- [C2] Purpose of this Testament. For the author's lack of material possessions, see also [C5] below and the sentiment expressed in (1) Apa Abraham [9].
- [C3] Legal basis for Chariton's authority; true reason for monastery's prosperity. See also parallel treatments in [A3] and [B2] above.
- [C4] Chariton's enlistment of the voivode John Vladislav and others as patrons; rebuilding of the monastery and rescue of captives. See also parallel treatments of patronage in [A4] and [B5] above; for ransoming captives, see also [C6] and [C9] below.
- [C5] Use of Chariton's income as metropolitan and protos for the benefit of the monastery. See also (31) Areia [M10] for the use of another prelate's revenues to support his personal foundation.
- [C6] Disposition of Chariton's clerical vestments. For sale of vestments to ransom captives, see also [C9] below.
- [C7] Recommendation for the preservation of monastic poverty. This is meant as a counterbalance to the concessions agreed to for the sake of the Vlachs in [B16] above.
- [C8] Procedure for the election of a new superior. See also parallel treatment above in [A13], with cross-references, and [B18].
- [C9] Provision for sale of Chariton's vestments to ransom captives. See also [C6] above.

FOURTEENTH CENTURY

[C10] Prayers for emperors and other rulers. See also similar provisions in these fourteenth-century documents: (49) Geromeri [15], (50) Gerasimos [1], and (58) Menoikeion [1], [16].

[C11] Validity of this “secret” testament. For other secret testaments, see (14) Ath. Testament [3]; (24) Christodoulos [B]; (29) Kosmosoteira [1], [96], [116]; and (52) Choumnos [A3].

[C12] Confirmations. See also parallel treatments in [A16] and [B21] above.

52. Choumnos: Rule and Testament of Makarios Choumnos for the Nea Mone of the Mother of God in Thessalonike

Date: Shortly before 1374¹

Translator: Alice-Mary Talbot

Edition employed: V. Laurent, “Écrits spirituels inédits de Macaire Choumnos († c. 1382), fondateur de la ‘Néa Moni’ à Thessalonique,” Hellenika 14 (1955), 40–86, with texts at 60–71, 76–85.

Manuscript: Codex Metochii Sancti Sepulchri (Istanbul) 455 (late 14th c.)²

Other translations: None

Institutional History

A. Foundation by Makarios Choumnos

The Nea Mone was founded circa 1360 by our author Makarios Choumnos, and dedicated to the Mother of God.³ A partisan of the hesychast cause, the founder was related to Nikephoros Choumnos and his daughter Irene Choumnaina Palaiologina, author of (47) Philanthropos.⁴ Construction of the monastery was incomplete when, shortly before 1374, Choumnos was summoned by Emperor John V Palaiologos (1341–91) to Constantinople to assume the superiorship of the famous imperial monastery of Stoudios, for which (3) Theodore Studites and (4) Stoudios were written.

B. Patronage by Choumnos’ Successor Gabriel

Although judging from his Rule, Choumnos intended [A3] that the monks David and Philotheos should administer Nea Mone in his absence, it was his disciple Gabriel, for whom see [A6] below, who actually succeeded him as superior. He continued and completed Choumnos’ work on the Nea Mone. In 1389, Gabriel was elected metropolitan of Chalcedon, but returned to Thessalonike in 1397 to serve as its metropolitan down to 1416/17. An enkomion of Makarios composed by Gabriel provides some further details on the history of the foundation, including its location on the ruins of a palace.⁵ According to this document, the founder Choumnos returned to inspect the finished foundation and died in the arms of his disciple, probably circa 1382–83.⁶

Documentary evidence shows the Nea Mone as the frequent beneficiary of patronage during the next decade, including an urban property donated by Manuel II Palaiologos in 1384, and a fortification at Kolydros and a small monastery of St. Photios, both donated by the Caesar Alexios Angelos in 1384 and 1389, respectively.⁷ By the time that a certain Demetrios Tzyringes donated a workshop to the Nea Mone in 1392, the foundation had been designated a patriarchal monastery.⁸ The Nea Mone also engaged in a protracted dispute with the neighboring monastery of Akapniou over the village of Kolydros. In 1394, Patriarch Antony IV ordered the Nea Mone’s patron Gabriel, then serving as metropolitan of Chalcedon, to return to Thessalonike and make restitution to Akapniou.⁹ Yet the controversy was still unresolved in 1401, when Patriarch Matthew once again ordered Gabriel, who by this time was metropolitan of Thessalonike, to return the property to Akapniou.¹⁰

In 1405, the Russian pilgrim Ignatios of Smolensk visited Thessalonike and mentioned the Nea Mone as being among its “wondrous monasteries.”¹¹ The Nea Mone is last attested in 1432, a short time after the final Ottoman conquest of Thessalonike in 1430, when it was the recipient of a donation of a workshop for manufacturing oil.¹² Most of the surviving records for the Nea Mone are preserved at the Lavra monastery on Mount Athos, but the supposition that the former institution had become a dependency of the latter cannot be proven on this evidence alone.¹³

C. Fate of the Foundation

Theocharides (“Nea Mone,” p. 350) argued for the identification of the monastery’s church with the fourteenth-century church of the Prophet Elias which still stands in the north central part of the old city of Thessalonike.¹⁴ In the Ottoman era, the building was converted into a mosque under the name Eski Saray Camii. The church was extensively restored in the 1950s but has been little studied by architectural historians.

Analysis

A. Typology of the Document

This document, intended by its author to serve as a single founder’s typikon, is made up of a deceptively titled Rule (Hypotyposis) [A] that is essentially a pastoral letter and a Testament (Epiteleutios homilia) [B], which has more regulatory content. The author drew up these texts on the occasion of his departure on a journey of unknown duration from which he feared he might not return.¹⁵ The contents were to be kept secret [A3], like some other secret testaments, e.g., (14) Ath. Testament [3], (28) Pantokrator [68] or (29) Kosmosoteira [1], [116], until his death.

The Rule provides a set of portraits of the individual members of the community that is unique in our collection of documents. Sections [A23] through [A26] seem to have been added as postscripts to the main text. The Testament is unusual in many ways, such as the importance attached to manual labor [B8], [B17], [B20], [B21], the willingness to consider all postulants except the obviously unsuited and those being imposed [B6], [B7], the encouragement of daily confession and communion [B10], the rejection of voluntary entrance gifts [B11], and the anticipated use of hired manual laborers.

B. Lives of the Monks

1. Number of Monks

The precise number of monks at the foundation is not specified, but the author provides valedictory instructions to thirteen monks ([A4] through [A15]); other monks accompanied [A23], cf. [A3] the author. The author arrays ([A4] through [A15]) the monks left behind in order, apparently by rank of office or seniority, in his instructions for individual monks. He implies [A23] that the monastery’s principal officers were among the monks left behind, but except for the unnamed gatekeeper [A14] he omits to mention the actual offices they held.

2. Liturgical Duties

The monks are entreated [A16], [B14] not to neglect the customary offices, but our author evidently did not place as high an importance on liturgical duties as the authors of most of the other documents in our collection did.

3. Manual Labor

Manual labor, hailed [B18] as the “useful yoke,” assumes an importance at this foundation not directly attested at any of the others represented by the documents in our collection. The author envisions [B18] monks (like Akakios the shoemaker [A9]) practicing manual labor for ten years, then taking up “spiritual labors” such as performing the liturgical services. Even a monk charged with the latter might occasionally want to pursue some small manual task or even heavy labor for the benefit of his constitution or to relieve boredom. The notion that a monk should serve sequential career stages of manual labor and then choir-singing is not directly attested elsewhere.

That the practice of manual labor was taken seriously seems apparent from the provisions for compassion for those physically incapable [B8] or unaccustomed [B17] to it, especially postulants (from the upper classes?) “but otherwise useful, adorned with piety and humility and righteousness.” Since bodily constitutions differed, there was to be [B21] no one standard for everyone with regard to manual labor. The author asks [B22] the future superior to attempt to find the resources to hire laborers (which he had been unable to do) so that the monks might be relieved of at least some of their responsibilities.

4. The Novitiate

The author professes [B6] his willingness to consider anyone wishing to join the community. As usual, the superior was to supervise novices and conduct their testing and examination. The monks are advised [B7] not to accept candidates not of their own choosing (i.e., katapemptoi), even if the emperor himself should seek admission. Likewise, the monks should not favor candidates of “wealth or worldly knowledge,” presumably including even those who might be in a position to offer large entrance gifts (prosenexeis). On the other hand, monks tonsured elsewhere were apparently welcome, judging from the presence [A24] of Manuel, a xenokourites, perhaps from a monastery of Koula, whose formal acceptance into the community the author anticipates on his return.

Compassion and tolerance for shortcomings is urged [B9] for inexperienced novices. The author himself discusses [B15] a certain Theognostos, possibly a novice, with whom he himself had been extraordinarily patient, but was now considering expelling from the foundation. The author makes [A17] specific provisions for the novice Theodoulos, who was to be allowed to spend some time working in the monastery’s vineyard in consideration of his peasant background.

5. Sacramental Life

Since the author considered confession to be “the first element of obedience and a guide to faith,” he provides [B10] that it should be made available to novices daily “just as the bread of life” (i.e., communion). Not everyone was entitled to hear confessions, only those assigned this responsibility by the superior, although previously our author permitted [A17] the novice Theodoulos, accompanied by another monk, to leave the monastery to consult an outside confessor (cf. (58) Menoikeion [13]).

6. Cenobitic Lifestyle

The author declares [B19] that his monks should not even need to be told that they cannot have private possessions. Monks were to partake [B20], cf. [A16] of common meals in the refectory; gluttony and inequality (presumably in portions of food) were not to be tolerated, except for the sick, whose special requests are to be considered “not inequality but really equality in apparent inequality” (cf. a similar wording in (37) Auxentios [4]). In this connection the author refers to his own practice of offering better wine to “those with a sickish stomach.”

In another respect, however, the author hoped for a tightening of current policy permitting monks to leave the monastery whenever they wished; he expresses [A21] the wish that departures take place henceforth only when urgently necessary and with the permission of the responsible officials (cf. (55) Athanasios I [9]).

C. Constitutional Matters

1. Constitutional Status

There is no discussion of the current constitutional status of the foundation. The author’s arbitrary designation of his own successor [A2] as well as the apparent absence of an independent landed endowment (cf. [B22]) or any regulatory typikon (cf. [A3]) aside from the present document, when taken together, suggest that this was a traditional private religious foundation.

2. Leadership

An unnamed “first brother” (protos adelphos), the author’s designated successor, was obliged to accompany [A3] him on his journey; therefore the second-ranking monks David and Philotheos are to provide interim leadership for the foundation. Should the author be unable to return, the Testament and the Rule, that is, the constituent parts of our document, were to serve as the guide for the life of the community. There is no discussion of how David and Philotheos were to cooperate in governing the foundation (though the former evidently was the senior partner, see [A4]) or of how future superiors would be elected. The author warns [A4] David not to spend time visiting or receiving visits from friends and relatives “as you often dared to do when I was present” (cf. the discussion of this problem in (55) Athanasios I [6] and (57) Bebaia Elpis [75]).

3. Style of Rule

The author subscribes [B4] to the Evergetian model of monastic leadership: the monks were to be subordinated to the superior “unhesitatingly obeying him in all things”; they were not to be his judges, nor was he liable to give an accounting of his administration to them (cf. (22) Evergetis [18]). Should the monks see him change for the worse, only the preeminent monks “who are able to speak frankly with him on account of their own piety” were allowed to take him to task.

4. Patronal Privileges

Three patrons are identified and their perquisites vaguely alluded to. They are: sister Melane [A18], said to have “labored mightily for us,” and for whose needs the monks were to concern themselves diligently; the megas primikerios Isaris [A20], whom the author hoped would someday join the community (as a monk or perhaps as an esomonites)—the monks were to be “concerned for his affairs” as our author himself had been; and the protonotarios Chrysos [A26], who was not expected to become a community member, but was to be received warmly on his visits and be counted “within the circle of those set apart” (for special honors). The monks were to “approach him (for patronal assistance) without hesitation, as you would me.”

D. Financial Matters

The author has very little to say about the financial affairs of his foundation. He implicitly rejects [B11] the solicitation of novices with a view to the entrance gifts in property or cash they might bring to the foundation. Recognizing, like (22) Evergetis [37], the danger of encouraging conceit- edness in applicants who made such donations, the author goes much further by urging them to donate their property to the poor before admission. To be sure, the author does urge [B22] the next superior to provide for the foundation’s prosperity beyond “the necessary and obligatory,” specifically to relieve the brothers of some of their more burdensome manual labors, but as noted above he admits his own inability to do this himself given his own preoccupation with rebuilding the foundation from ruins and carrying out necessary repairs. This suggests either that the foundation was unusually self-reliant in providing for its own livelihood or was heavily dependent on the largess of patrons like the protonotarios Chrysos or the author himself.

E. External Relations

1. Institutional Philanthropy

The author’s injunction that the monks should put [A19] themselves “at the service of all who come to us in piety for the sake of their salvation and improvement” suggests, in conjunction with [B15], that the foundation offered some sort of catechetical or liturgical services for the greater secular community. The foundation also provided [B15] the more typical philanthropy for those visiting “out of physical necessity,” perhaps in a guesthouse or a hospice.

Notes on the Introduction

1. For the dating, see Laurent, “Écrits spirituels,” pp. 49–50, and “Nouvelle fondation,” p. 115.
2. See Laurent, “Écrits spirituels,” p. 42, n. 1.
3. Brief biographical entry in Verpeaux, “Notes prosopographiques,” p. 264.
4. Laurent, “Écrits spirituels,” p. 46, reckoned that Makarios was her nephew.
5. Laurent, “Gabriel,” pp. 253–54, and “Nouvelle fondation,” p. 112, n. 4.
6. Laurent, “Nouvelle fondation,” p. 113, n. 2; for the dating of Choumnos’ death, see Laurent, “Écrits spirituels,” p. 49, and Verpeaux, “Notes prosopographiques,” p. 264.
7. Texts ed. Lemerle, “Prostagma,” 274–76; Theocharides, “Nea engrapha,” pp. 321–22; Laurent, “Nouvelle fondation,” pp. 128–30.
8. Dölger, Schatzkammer, no. 114, pp. 310–11.
9. Darrouzès, Regestes, no. 2943 (1394), pp. 220–21, ed. MM 2.200–2; cf. no. 2944 (1394), pp. 221–22, ed. MM 2.202–3.
10. Darrouzès, Regestes, no. 3221 (1401), pp. 442–44, ed. MM 2.518–20.
11. See Rautman, “Ignatius,” p. 145.
12. Lemerle, Lavra, pt. 3, no. 168 (1432), pp. 183–85.
13. See Laurent, “Nouvelxe fondation,” pp. 125–26.
14. The proposed identification is endorsed by Rautman, “Ignatius,” p. 156.

FOURTEENTH CENTURY

15. He had been summoned to Constantinople to assume the direction of the Stoudios monastery; see above, Institutional History, A.

Bibliography

- Janin, Raymond, La géographie ecclésiastique de l'empire byzantin, vol. 2: Les églises et les monastères des grands centres byzantins (Paris, 1975), pp. 398–99.
- Lampros, Sp., “Isidorou metropolitou Thessalonikes okto epistolai anekdotoi,” NH 9 (1912), 343–414, esp. pp. 359–75.
- Laourdas, B., “Ho Gabriel Thessalonikes,” Athena 56 (1952), 203–4.
- Laurent, V., “Le metropolite de Thessalonique Gabriel (1397–1416/19) et le couvent de la Nea Moni,” Hellenika 13 (1954), 241–53.
- , “Une nouvelle fondation monastique des Choumnos: la Nea Moni de Thessalonique,” REB 13 (1955), 109–30.
- Lemerle, Paul, “Autour d’un prostagma inédit de Manuel II. L’aulè de Sir Guy à Thessalonique,” SBN 9 (1957), 271–86.
- Papadopoulos-Kerameus, A., Hierosolymitike Bibliotheke, vol. 5 (Petrograd, 1915), pp. 18–26.
- Rautman, Marcus L., “Ignatios of Smolensk and the Late Byzantine Monasteries of Thessaloniki,” REB 49 (1991), 143–69, esp. pp. 153–57.
- , “Patrons and Buildings in Late Byzantine Thessaloniki,” JÖB 39 (1989), 295–315.
- Talbot, Alice-Mary, “Nea Mone in Thessalonike,” ODB, p. 1447.
- Theocharides, G. I., “He Nea Mone Thessalonikes,” Makedonika 3 (1953–55), 334–52.
- , “Dyo nea engrapha aphoronta eis ten Nean Monen Thessalonikes,” Makedonika 4 (1955–60), 315–51.
- Verpeaux, J., “Notes prosopographiques sur la famille Choumnos,” Byzantinoslavica 20 (1959), 252–66, esp. p. 264.
- Volk, Robert, Gesundheitswesen und Wohltätigkeit im Spiegel der byzantinischen Klostertypika (Munich, 1983), pp. 265–66.

Translation

Rule [A]

The Rule and Final Discourse which he left for the brethren when he first departed for Constantinople as a result of great pressure from many people.

[A1.] My brethren, since everything is led and directed by the providence and guidance of God, our affairs, too, [are] also [guided] with goodwill on account of his goodness and compassion towards us. This is made clear by many factors, including our harmonious assembly for the same purpose. For he says, “Where two or three are gathered in my name, there am I in the midst of them” (Matt. 18:20). When I dwelt among you, I was constantly concerned about your love, and this was my continual task, and [I placed] your progress above all else. Especially now when I have been compelled by necessity to depart from you for a while “in person, not in heart” (I Thess. 2:17), I have striven in a few words [to assure] that there be preserved among you the “purpose” and good “will” of God (Eph. 1:5), that is your mutual love and peace and concord. This has been achieved successfully up to this point and will continue to be achieved in the future, by the grace of Jesus, as a result of your faith in me and your obedience and unquestioning submission.

[A2.] All of you, especially those of you who have lived with me [p. 61] for a long time and are thus able to understand me well, are aware that I was very distressed about my departure, and not without reason. But I was forced into it by necessity, and the element of compulsion made it clear to you that it was not for a rest or for glory or for any ephemeral consideration. For the eye of God which oversees all things knows that I did not even place any heavenly matter, let alone corporeal matter, ahead of your love. It is my wish that during my absence you remain compliant and obedient to the man whom I shall choose from among you to be your superior, so as to bear my “stamp” (Heb. 1:3) in your sight. For if “the word of truth” (Eph. 1:13) goes so far as to demand that the subordinate consider his master as present even when he is absent, and be mentally guided by him, it is even more necessary when he is blessed with the presence of his representative, and this at the command of the father.

[A3.] If then your first brother,¹ who will be my successor, were present (if this were God’s will and he had not gone away with me), you would have your desire. But since he is absent with me, I bequeath my position and his to the two monks who hold second place after him, the good lord David and also Philotheos, since as a result of their experience and knowledge they are judged competent to assume the responsibilities of your governance for the present. If we survive, God willing, we will soon return to see you, and you will rejoice. But if we should be summoned to pay our [mortal] debt, may you live in accordance with the rule which I have set down in writing for you and have called my “Final Discourse and Rule of the Harmonious Life.”² It is and will remain secret to everyone, but will be revealed to you after my departure to God. But when you see and read it and observe its precepts, I am confident that you will live in a manner acceptable to God and pleasing to myself, and will remain even after my death in the mold in which you were originally stamped by me, through the grace of our Lord Jesus Christ.

[A4.] Come now, good lord David, walk before your brethren during my absence, remembering your pious cohabitation with me, and how I walked before you with purity and good conscience. [You should also keep in mind] your knowledge of the good, which God granted you [p. 62] without offense, and “be a model” (Titus 2:7) of good repute for them in everything which leads to God, remembering my love for you and my zeal on your behalf. During my absence, have as your mission the supervision of your brethren with humility and love, as you have seen me carry out my mission. You should also observe this [precept], that as long as I am absent, you should also absent yourself from friends and relatives, so that neither you nor they engage in visits for friendship or for the frequent demands they make on you (and you should do this prudently in the face of God and not by necessity), as you often dared to do, when I was present. Set aside this freedom like everything else for my sake and for the good repute of your brethren, now that you have assumed more laborious duties for the sake of your and their improvement.

[A5.] As for you, good Philotheos,³ be mindful of my many labors and words on your behalf as well as tears. For I was in travail with you for a long time, “until Christ was formed in you” (Gal. 4:19). Preserve for me yourself, in whose eyes was depicted through many trials “Jesus Christ and him crucified” (I Cor. 2:2), dead to passions, but alive to God. Grant me this favor, since I labored greatly on your behalf, to tolerate with humility and gentleness and much love the faults of your brethren, as I have tolerated yours, “making yourself a model” (cf. I Tim. 4:12) for your brethren, through great spiritual toil, especially now during my absence, for the sake of your and their good repute.

FOURTEENTH CENTURY

[A6.] After you, my good priest Gabriel,⁴ who is beloved by me because of the toil which he has exerted on my behalf, should set a straight course toward the good, “making himself a model” (cf. I Tim. 4:12) of humility for the brethren, especially now during my absence, “consciously” seeking after “humility”⁵ in their presence, on account of the office which he received through grace. On his part he should not demonstrate the slightest trace of preference, even the merest suspicion, toward the brethren, but should be like a sanctification for them, having the obligation to sanctify himself, too, because of Christ’s grace in him. By setting this as a task for himself, “until” in the words of the most gentle David, “he should go into the sanctuary of God,” which is the true humility, and “understand the final issue” (Ps. 72 [73]:17), which is to die for the sake of those things which he has justified, “struggling against” every “sin” and “resisting” passions “to the point of shedding blood” (Heb. 12:4), until he becomes “a mature man, to the measure and stature of Christ” (Heb. 12:4). Let him [Gabriel] assist you two [p. 63] in your consultation regarding the brethren and the kellion, whenever you wish. Furthermore, like the others, he should obey those to whom I entrusted their supervision “not by constraint” (I Pet. 5:2), but gratefully, since they are taking my place.

[A7.] As fourth [in line], let my friend Gerasimos worship God through his holy simplicity and his obedience in accordance with [the will of] God and for the sake of God. For he has rendered the wiles of the devils vain and useless by means of the righteousness of his soul and his opposition to mischief. May he continue on this course even after my departure, obeying the brethren in authority as he does me. Rather let him consider everyone preeminent and superior to him, so that he may be found ahead of the others when each [monk] receives his due.

[A8.] Next the good Theosteriktos should be mindful of God’s blessings on him and of the love which I truly felt for him. [He should also remember] how God supported him previously when he was buffeted by blasts of wickedness, and could not endure the onslaught of rain and floods and winds because of his physical weakness and the fact that he was unaccustomed to the labor, but succumbed to a degree.⁶ Later, however, he “was founded on the rock” (cf. Matt. 7:25) and safeguarded others through his own experience. He should undertake that good ascent which is dear to God and myself, in the words of the great Paul, “forgetting what lies behind, and straining forward to what lies ahead, pressing on toward the goal for the prize of the upward call” (Phil. 3:13–14), submitting with much humility and good cheer to his brethren whom I have chosen to be in authority.

[A9.] [Next comes] Akakios,⁷ with whom I was in travail with much labor and to whom I gave birth through much sorrow and temptation. He should take into consideration the solicitude of God's foresight concerning him and how God accomplished his salvation to his advantage through ways which seemed hostile and almost abominable to everyone. [p. 64] He should conduct himself in total innocence and simplicity, always keeping me before his eyes, rejecting all melancholy from his heart with joy and good cheer. He should be obedient, accepting like heavenly nectar every pricking and piercing word as a cause of purification of the secrets of his heart. He should carry out the position⁸ which I have entrusted to him to the satisfaction of God and the whole community, and in awe of God and with total reverence he should not reject the displeasure of the brethren which is a frequent occurrence in this position, but should accept it with joy and cheerfulness. He should be moderately grieved and truly blame himself with all his might, because he did not demonstrate worthy zeal, and therefore [God], the lover of mankind, did not see fit to comfort his fellow-monk by means of his work. He should strive to be esteemed not only in this work, but to be unquestioningly obedient in every other task which he is ordered [to perform] by the responsible officials, even when they are beyond his capability, remembering the one who said, "the kingdom" of God "is subject to violence"⁹ and "men of violence take it by force" (Matt. 11:12).

[A10.] As for Gregory,¹⁰ he should be mindful of my labor on his behalf night and day, and my great anxiety and fear for him, and how I did not make any concession, enduring every effort and tribulation for the sake of his salvation from devils and his own folly. He should reject all corruption and self-confidence and self-satisfaction, and imitate his brethren, humbly believing that in truth everyone excels him in everything, submitting to those who have been assigned to be obeyed with righteousness and healthy knowledge, regarding them like me, and being guided by them on the road of truth as if by me. He should take pride "in not placing a stumbling block or hindrance in the way of" the least "of the brothers" (Rom. 14:13), exerting every effort on behalf of this, and striving to the point "of shedding of blood," (Heb. 9:22), so that "when the Lord comes," and after him and by means of him his [spiritual] father [Choumnos], and "finds him so doing" (Luke 12:43), the former will deem him worthy of blessings and crowns, the latter of praise and encomia.

[A11.] As for Iakobos who is rich in piety, I urge him not to slacken in his labors, nor relax in his endeavors, being mindful of the Apostle who said, "the sufferings of this present time are not worth comparing with the glory that is to be revealed to us" (Rom. 8:18). He should always keep an image of my face [p. 65] before his eyes, and meditate day and night on the words of David, "I foresaw the Lord always before my face that I may not be moved" (Ps. 15 [16]:8). May he add daily to his labors, progressing and increasing in strength for the sake of the glory of God.

[A12.] Kallinikos and Kornelios, that pair¹¹ [dedicated] to God, should reflect upon the saying of the Apostle that "each shall receive his wages according to his labor" (I Cor. 3:8). They should not make my absence an excuse and cause for laxity and negligence with regard to their responsibilities, but should do their best, as if before the eyes of the all-seeing God and myself, and should not be negligent. Rather let their good work among the brethren be blessed and multiply, so that it may appear voluntary and not compulsory, obeying with eagerness and good will those whom I have appointed as their superiors, just as they obeyed me when I was present, so that they may find favor before God for having revered me and God, and “receive their reward from him” (cf. Luke 18:30).

FOURTEENTH CENTURY

[A13.] As for Theodotos who is young in years and in age, but is not inconsiderable in view of the spiritual blessing of which he was deemed worthy when he was enrolled in the sheepfold of God, it is my wish and prayer that he be gentle, obedient and tractable in all things, submitting to all the brethren, without any hardness of heart. He should always demonstrate blessing and favor in all his works, flourishing and thriving through all his good deeds like a young shoot blessed by God, always laboring for his own growth and advancement. He should keep me always before his eyes and thus be guided in disposition and actions, so that I may enjoy the fragrance of his good fruit and rejoice in it even during my absence. When he sees me, God willing, he will rejoice in me, when he learns from me that he was the cause of my joy.

[A14.] The gatekeeper¹² should be reverent and obedient to all the brethren, maintaining himself in all things as one who “cannot be censured” (Tit. 2:8) before God and his brethren, having as sufficient grounds of persuasion his old age and the benefit of the monastic habit, which he acquired as the result of many labors “with much entreaty” (II Cor. 8:4) from many. Do not neglect him either with regard to food or drink or anything else, but treat him in the same way that you saw me treating him. But if this [p. 66] should ever occur, either as an oversight or for some other reason, he should take confidence in my words and not grumble or inveigh against you. If he is caught doing this, he should be rebuked.

[A15.] Last comes Theognostos, about whom I have much to say, but for now I will pass over it, for I have been compelled by necessity to say even what I am going to say, for the security of the others and himself if he wishes. Aside from this consideration, I would have preferred to pass him over in silence and make no mention of him at all, but not because I hate him or am hostile to him. For the Lord “who searches the hearts” (Rom. 8:27) knows well that I did not undergo any change or abandon my customary behavior when I received this brother, but just as I received all of you with a view to your salvation and good repute, so I received him with love and sincerity, and strove equally on his behalf, not to say even more and with greater effort, but I did not reap any fruit from him, even though I labored mightily.

Thus I will speak briefly about him, “with much affliction and anguish of heart” (II Cor. 2:4), since he is out of harmony with you and could not acquire your “faith and love” (II Tim. 1:13) for me, nor any other good thing. I often wanted to expel him from this sheepfold, and indeed I did banish him, as you know, and while he was waiting I gave him “a chance to repent” (cf. Heb. 12:17), in case the good Lord might see him, and his sojourn might be with knowledge of God, and might relieve me of my grief and bitter sorrow over him, making amends for his sins and imitating you as much as possible, which is my constant prayer to God. If he does not [mend his ways] before I return, he is to be banished from your midst, lest he infect others with his corruption.

I say these words to you, even though I am grieved and “distressed in my heart” (cf. Col. 3:12), for the purpose of his salvation. For I hope that my words do not come to pass, if only he would be inspired with divine zeal and undertake a spiritual struggle for his own improvement. When I accepted him for the sake of God’s glory, he was not only a cause of great sorrow both to me and his brethren, but also to people outside, since God was blasphemed greatly on account of his devious ways and great arrogance. But now let him glorify God through his repentance and reformation, and “let his light so shine before men, [p. 67] that they may see his good works and give glory to our Father who is in heaven” (Matt. 5:16). Let him relieve us of our sorrow and ill repute on his account, so that like the others he may become “a son of light and day” (I Thess. 5:5), freed from the darkness which is a result of his bitter and irremediable grief and the pricking of a wicked conscience, so that he may rejoice and be of good cheer through his harmony with you, since he is not deprived of your company either here or in the world to come. May I see this, I cry with bitter and sorrowful tears to thee, O Lord, the lover of mankind, who alone is good and compassionate. My heart burns for the same reason for which thou hast shed thine own blood. I beg of thee, besprinkle me, and deliver me from this fiery blaze and heat, as thou hast done for me and for others, and I glorified thy name. So much for each of the monks.

[A16.] All together you should glorify God by means of your harmony with each other, and “let this light of yours so shine before men” (cf. Matt. 5:16), that you will attract others to the same and similar zeal, as if I were present; even more during my absence, lest it appear that you do these things for my sake, “in the way of eye-service” (Eph. 6:6), and not for the sake of the Lord, so that everyone may know [that you do them] purely for him.

I entreat you not to neglect the customary offices, but as if you had me by your side, standing and praying with you, to spur you on to vigilance and intensity, thus even in my absence let your same discipline be maintained. It will be maintained if you preserve inviolate your faith and love in me.

Keep an eye on the tranquility and good order of the refectory, lest anything occur to disrupt it, but abide by the traditions and regulations which you have received from me.

Help your weak brethren, especially if they abide in piety and humility.

[A17.] Instruct the novice Theodoulos until I arrive, teaching him what is appropriate, since he is still untrained and completely inexperienced. He should remain within the kellion, never passing through the monastery gate, unless he goes to visit the priest lord Dorotheos Blates¹³ for advice and confession of his secret thoughts. He should not go alone but in the company of a monk, and should return again with him. If he asks [to go] to the vineyard, he should do this, too, with the monks, whenever the [monks] assigned to this judge it [permissible] [p. 68] for the sake of some freedom and relaxation in the good [pursuits] of his peasant background.

[A18.] Do not forget sister Melane,¹⁴ who has labored mightily for us with faith and a wholesome disposition, but always diligently concern yourselves with her needs. Comfort her with words whenever she approaches you, both during my lifetime and after my death.

FOURTEENTH CENTURY

[A19.] Receive with graciousness and much kindness all who love us on account of the Lord and who come to us in piety for the sake of their salvation and improvement, even if they come to you on account of their love for me. Do not in any way avoid looking at and talking with these people, but if they need something from you, to the best of your ability do not neglect them for the sake of the [divine] commandment, but put yourselves completely at their service.

[A20.] I have often revealed to you my friendship and affection and pure love for the megas primikerios Isaris,¹⁵ and how I pray that he may be with us so that we may benefit from his graces and decorum. If I should live to see this (and I pray that I may do so), I will be concerned for his affairs together with you. But if I should die, then you should show the same concern as I would.

[A21.] I do not permit anyone to go out of the monastery gate, as the custom now prevails among you, except for some urgent necessity, and then only with the permission of the responsible officials.¹⁶ [A22.] So I depart, on account of the necessity imposed upon me, leaving you with sorrow because of the unbreakable bond of my love for you. "I commend you to God" (Acts 20.32) and his immaculate Mother, the surpassingly pure Mother of God, under whose protection preserve yourselves for me, I beg of you, "in all purity and respectfulness" (cf. I Tim. 2:2), consecrating your bodies and souls to God, or rather preserving them in consecration. Live for him alone, so that until the end "you may not deprive me of my ground for boasting" (cf. I Cor. 9:15). For you are my hope in the future, as well as "the crown of my boasting" (I Thess. 2:19).

Therefore do not grow weary in your struggle "against the principalities, against the powers, against the world rulers of this present darkness, against the spiritual hosts of wickedness in the heavenly palaces" (Eph. 6:12), which [p. 69] choose to war against you with unsleeping eyes and constantly strive for your destruction, but "taking the shield of faith" which you have been granted by God, and by which you abide, "quench all the flaming darts of the evil one" (Eph. 6:16). [Take also] "the sword of the Spirit, which is the word of God" (Eph. 6:17) according to the Apostle. Keeping it constantly in your hands, vigorously cut off every attack of evil, which holy men call the head of the snake because of the way it slips in secretly and introduces all the coils of its body with bitterness and zeal. Thus with a small expenditure of labor, you will provide much respite and freedom from care for yourselves.

Even though I raise up impure hands, I pray boldly for you on account of my love for you, for your sake propitiating God who alone is good, so that God's will may be accomplished by means of his illumination, and be pleasing and perfect. If I should depart to God before seeing you here, remember my love for you, considering it as a pious goad to spur you on to progress and spiritual advancement. But if I remain here on earth for your sake (and may God grant this, that I may see you), "rejoicing, I will see your rejoicing" (cf. Col. 2:5) in Christ Jesus our Lord, to whom be glory for everlasting generations. Amen.

[A23.] After I finished my instructions to you, this thought also occurred to me, and I did not think it right to omit it. For since necessity requires me to take some of you along as companions, be careful lest each of those who is left behind and not taken along thinks that I love some of you more, and therefore chose them as my companions; and thus he has unworthy thoughts both of himself and me. For this is not the case. I love [you] all equally, even if each does not reap equally the benefit from me on account of whatever sort of talent that he stores within him. Rather, with the sole exception of your first brother who is accompanying me, I have left behind the more capable monks, and I especially chose those who are capable of maintaining the kellion and helping themselves and the others. May those who are left behind accomplish a great deal, filling up my place both for themselves and others.

[A24.] As for Manuel, who came to me from Koula¹⁷ for reasons of piety, if he maintains this after my departure, which is a confirmation of my judgment about him, you should all love him as you know I love him. You should embrace him with words of love and consolation until I come again [p. 70], since he will become one of your number through the ceremony of his clothing with the holy habit, when the Lord permits my return, but only if he abides in piety and great humility. He should obey those whom I have assigned to take my place.

[A25.] As for Joseph, to whom I gave spiritual birth, with great expectations, conceiving and enduring labor pains with much toil and words, “bringing him up in much discipline and instruction” (cf. Eph. 6:4) for the sake of the Lord, I have decided to take him along as a companion (I did not mention him in the proper sequence) if indeed he is chosen to accompany me. If he is not, let him not weaken and demonstrate any ignoble tendency, if indeed he wanted [to accompany me], since each of the others also wanted this, but like all [the others] he should give precedence to my wishes over his own desires, and bear bravely and nobly in this [venture], as in the others, the deprivation of his own desires.

He should keep himself mindful of me and my true love for him and my many words and my daily concern for him, hourly calling me to mind and not separating himself from his memory of me in all “purity and respectfulness” (cf. I Tim. 2:2), submitting himself totally to his brothers, so that he may share with all of them the repose of this world and the eternal blessings of the world to come, by grace of our Lord Jesus Christ, to whom be glory for everlasting generations, Amen.

[A26.] I did not mention the protonotarios Chrysos¹⁸ in the proper sequence because he is not now and does not plan to be in the near future a member of the community within the monastery (with regard to the monastic habit, that is, not to manners). I counted him, however, not simply within the circle of those I love, but those I set apart. You know the man, how he is adorned with all sorts of virtues and a variety of graces, and how not only I love him, but you love him too. For I am your witness in this, and you are mine. Therefore, do not weaken my love and yours for him, but receive him “with upturned hearts,” as the saying goes, whenever he visits you, [p. 71] on account of the special love which he bears for us above all others. Whenever you have need of him, approach him without any doubt or hesitation, as you would me.

FOURTEENTH CENTURY

Testament [B]

[B1.] My brethren, “who share in a heavenly call” (Heb. 3:1), a select contingent, a holy assemblage, an unbreakable phalanx, a holy company, beloved by me, and, I am confident, by God as well. Since you are loved by me, I dare say, not without reason, that I am also loved by you. I am certain, not without proof, that you have preserved and are preserving until now, by grace of Christ, all my precepts, for the sake of love and that which results from it, its sister, holy peace, the inheritance of Christ, the pledge of the heavenly kingdom. Until the present time we have remained, through God’s gift to us, “in all” joy and “blessing” and “spiritual” (Eph. 1:3) cheer, all of us feeling affection for one and all, and preserving, as was necessary, the loyalty which proceeds to me for the sake of God, the ladder which ascends to heaven, the foundation of all good things, and love which is the unshakeable [p. 77] tower of strength in the face of the enemy, the crowning virtue.

For this reason I am confident that God, through his mercy, prepared for us from now on the joy and gladness of the blessings in heaven, though through much sorrow and “toil and labor” (II Thess. 3:38) and spiritual struggle. Because of my love for you, to which I have preferred nothing either temporal or eternal (I say this before God, who knows [men’s] hearts), I want to be and live in your hearts even after my death, and to share your community and existence and to rejoice with you in your spiritual works and in your godly advancement. [Thus], it is my wish that this present discourse, inasmuch as it is the last of my many discourses to you, be engraved indelibly in your hearts. I have taken care to prepare this written document on your behalf, since I am wary of the oblivion and neglect which obliterate good things and gradually send them to the depths of perdition.

[B2.] Thus you know my love for you, and that I have lived together with you in all sincerity and with good conscience, always placing your advantage before my own, frequently suffering harm myself even in spiritual matters because of my preference for your improvement. I know your ready obedience in all things, your sincere faith and love, on account of which you have borne nobly all the grievous woes which have been inflicted upon you by hostile spirits, and by other hardships and troubles which you have endured for the sake of God and your love for me. For I declare to you, before men and God, that you denied even nature itself on account of your love for and obedience to me. I entreat you, preserve this testimony of mine unimpaired until the end and after my death, that you may be “my heart, my boasting” also “in the day of Christ” (Phlm. 12; Phil. 2:16) as here on earth.

[B3.] I beg of you, grant me this last favor, my beloved young saplings, my inheritance beloved even more than that of heaven, my spiritual children, the brethren beloved by my worthless self, but one who is your exceedingly beloved father, as I am persuaded, by time and great testing on your behalf. On account of my love for you, I beg you to love as myself my successor,¹⁹ who, I hope, is or will also become the successor to my love for you. Everything which you observed for me, loyalty and faith and love and true obedience, observe also for him, whom I enjoin as a father [p. 78] and entreat as a brother to associate with you as he knows I lived with you, neither loving nor preferring anything to you except God. I mean spiritual matters, but this is even more true for material objects. Let him feel affection for you, to be cherished by you, or rather to have you as his delight, confirming the confidence of his own soul by means of your increase and progress, concerning himself for your affairs more than his own, or rather for his affairs through you. In any case, fearing your destruction and dissolution like the poison from a snake, guiding you through all things, and having this as his constant concern: not to “domineer over” you, as in the prohibition of the Apostle, but “to be an example” (I Pet. 5:3) to you in everything.

52. CHOUMNOS

[B4.] You should not be his judges, but be judged by him, not to be magistrates, but liable to give an accounting, not prosecutors, but public advocates, not critical, but affectionate, unhesitatingly obeying him in all things. On his behalf and for your own sake I pray to God from my soul and will not cease to pray that neither should the superior be diverted even a little from the straight path, or be sluggish and become a scandal and “stumbling block” (I Cor. 8:9) for you. Nor should you be abandoned and, casting off your praiseworthy blindness to his shortcomings, with keen vision undertake his examination, and thereby open a door to the one who is responsible for your destruction and disaster. But if, God forbid, you should happen to see some change and alteration in him, you must show it to him by way of confession, together with humility and righteousness of heart and sincere love. Whether or not that which requires healing is cured, the preeminent monks, who are able to speak frankly with him on account of their own piety, should take responsibility for warning him. You must entrust this whole task to them, and not be concerned yourselves.

[B5.] Maintain in the future the brotherly love which up to now you have observed with God’s help, correcting and instructing each other in spiritual love, as is your custom. Each of you should consider the correction of another and his diversion from disorderly behavior as his own correction. Whatever you are unable to do, entrust to the one who after God is your father, truly concerning yourselves with the healing of your own members.

[B6.] To everyone who clearly wishes and desires to dwell with you in humility and reverence, open a door, submitting him to your father in accordance with my custom for supervision and testing and examination, [to see] whether or not he truly loves [the monastic life]. Allow him [p. 79] to associate with you until you train his character, and he may thereafter be numbered among you after he is tested and the superior makes an exact decision concerning him.

[B7.] Do not desire to live together with those who are not of your own choice, even if he should be the emperor himself,²⁰ lest you procure for yourselves the materials of destruction.

Do not be deceived by people or wealth or worldly knowledge and shrewdness which strays from the straight path and deviates from the truth.

Do not give preference to a person who seems prudent and sensible, but is really infected with malice and a stranger to peace and love. Give preference rather to the person who is reverent and meek and humble and obedient, a son and a friend of love and peace. Hold such men in honor, even if often one of them is not naturally sharp-witted or quick or energetic.

FOURTEENTH CENTURY

[B8.] Do not trample on the weak and those who are incapable of physical labor, but win them over with words, especially if they are aggrieved at their own shortcomings, so that by seeing your love and compassion for them, they will be more likely to ask God and entreat him fervently with sincere faith to strengthen them so as not to be lacking in this respect, as I know happened to certain of you during your life with me. For the mighty and sole Ruler strengthened them and encouraged them in their difficulties and weakness in work and made it easy.

[B9.] Do not be harsh on the novices among the brethren, especially those who are inexperienced, but rather instruct them with much guidance and reasonableness in the fear of God and reverence and other ethical training, being tolerant of their shortcomings which result from inexperience, until with the aid of God and your skillful teaching they gradually learn the first elements of divine philosophy, and “attain mature manhood, to the measure of the stature of the fullness of Christ” (Eph. 4:13), and become living images of the virtues and models of the instruction [you acquired] from me by the grace of God.

But if any of them should prove to be ill-disposed and suffers from a surly temper, make sure that you do not pass over him, and either from neglect or contempt bring upon yourselves the charge of having been remiss in his correction, since “his blood may be required from your blood” (cf. Luke 11:50–51). Rather always make it your total concern to rebuke him for his bad manners with a great deal of reasonableness and a disposition of genuine love. As I have said, be tolerant and pray to God on his behalf until [p. 80] the Lord grants that he comes to a realization of his faults, and desires his own healing which is the realization of the truth.

[B10.] I do not say this to all the brethren without distinction. For it is not everyone’s duty to observe and judge with precision bad character and defects, but only for a few, whom the father chooses for this work and imposes it on them as an assignment and duty. Since they have learned by experience that the confession of one’s thoughts to the father is the first element of obedience and a guide to faith, they should provide its great benefit daily to the novices, just as the bread of life, explaining its procedures and that they should observe this duty continually, and before all others.

[B11.] From the beginning, when you receive these [novices] and accept responsibility for them, do not “load yourselves with” heavy “burdens, hard to bear” (Luke 11:46), that is, acceptance of responsibility for their money and property, but lighten your load and theirs with the commandment that says: “Sell what you possess and give to the poor” (Matt. 19:21). For thus we both provide them with courage and the help of God in their divine labors, and ourselves with ease in our heavenly ascent, since right from the beginning we do not let them become slack or conceited by accepting their money, nor do we make them enter the contest against the devil naked and unarmed and deprived of God’s help. Rather we should avert from them and ourselves²¹ moral weakness, the death of courage, the deprivation of the shelter of God, the pursuit of the battle order and alliance and marshaling of angels, the betrayal to death, the stake through the heart, the introduction of fatal passions. Moreover we should lighten the vessel of its unpraiseworthy²² baggage of wares, and sail with them lightly and compactly over the sea of the present life, hastening toward the calm harbor, that is complete freedom from sensation of things present, and a taste here of the blessings of the world to come, and the mastery of the passions achieved thereby, of which may we all be deemed worthy.

[B12.] Always cleave throughout to the glory of God, always desiring this, giving this your attention, and having this as a continual concern, in your actions and your sufferings for his sake and for the sake of others. For [the apostle] says, “Provided we suffer with him, in order that we may also be glorified with him” (Rom. 8:17). For I am confident that through God’s gift it has been granted to you not only to believe in him with sincerity and zeal, but also to suffer on his behalf with joy and eagerness. [p. 81] You have me as a model in this respect also. In my delirium I describe the gifts of God as if they were my own, on account of the necessity imposed upon me, which is “your upbuilding” (II Cor. 12:19). I am not lying—for an edifice is not built upon sand but in truth I am describing the accomplishments of God, not my own. For [the apostle] says, “What have you that you did not receive? If then you received it, why do you boast, as if it were not a gift?” (I Cor. 4:7). This is for your benefit, which is my sustenance, through which I have been living and with which I journey towards God with total joy, “bereft of you for a short time” (cf. I Thess. 2:17), but sincerely trusting in God concerning this, too, that I will be with you and rejoice with you both in this world, as long as you are among the living, and in the world to come forever.

[B13.] Like you, I too dedicated and surrendered myself to God from an early age, and in solitude of both body and will I submitted to a good father and teacher, nobly enduring every pain and temptation with joy and eagerness through God’s blessing on me, moreover with a body that was very weak and completely feeble, and unaccustomed to any labor and untrained, so that the “Word” of the Lord which is full of compassion might be “activated” (cf. Heb. 4:12) in me: “my strength is made perfect in weakness” (II Cor. 12:9).

I could relate my history at length and in detail, so that having it fresh in your hearing you might continually rouse yourselves to labors, ridding yourselves of laziness and negligence, the death of virtues. But lest I seem to linger too long on my own affairs, finding pleasure in writing a lengthy account of them and not for the sake of your benefit, I have summarized the whole story, and say before God that several times I almost died in obedience as a result of the trials laid upon me which were beyond my strength. This [occurred] because of my transgression of his commandments. For I do not dare say [it occurred] on account of him. For this [is] beyond me. He revived me by means of his unsurpassable and ineffable power, even though after my vows I became as it were forgetful of God’s gifts to me, and lived heedlessly and wasted my life in much idleness. Wherefore my soul faced the departure from my body with great fear. But having confidence in God’s holy compassion, I believe that you will compensate to God for my shortcomings in this respect, and will appear to me in the world to come, at the fearful Coming of the Lord, partly as occasion for boasting, partly as compensation for my shortcomings, propitiating through yourselves my negligence and indolence in the present world. [p. 82]

[B14.] I, who am beloved of you, beg you not to neglect the customary offices, nor to perform them lazily and with indolence, but with eagerness and love and vigilant heart, as you did when you had my presence to provide the materials and means to arouse you. Thus even when I am absent, gaze upon [me] as if I were present and singing together with you, so that by seeing your diligence and fear of God and love, I may become an intercessor for you with God for that which you need, if indeed I should obtain his compassion because of you. For I have no confidence in my own actions, even though I am mindful of the words of the apostle: “Yet woman will be saved through bearing children” (I Tim. 2:15). For I say that true childbearing is that of the spirit. For if the former [brings salvation], then the latter [saves] to an even greater extent.

FOURTEENTH CENTURY

[B15.] As for the brethren who visit you often, either out of physical necessity or for spiritual improvement, look upon them and do unto them as unto yourselves, remembering the One who said, “Love thy neighbor as thyself” (Matt. 19:19) and “Whatever you wish that men would do to you, do so to them” (Matt. 7.12), and [the apostle] who said, “Do not neglect to show hospitality to strangers, for thereby some have entertained angels unawares” (Heb. 13.2).

[B16.] “Do not prove vain my boasting” (II Cor. 9:3) in you, which I have boasted to many. For I made the following assertion about you to those who investigate our affairs in any way, that your assembling together and your harmony with each other is not on account of the kellion nor physical enjoyment, nor a vain hope, nor anything else exceeding a right purpose (as has been suspected by certain people who are ignorant of our attitude), but simply on account of God and your faith in me and love. So that if I should ever wish to depart—and this I asserted and said to them—not only from the kellion, but from the city itself, and to take nothing but a staff in my hand and say, “Follow me,” (Matt. 4:19) none of you would lag behind, nor show himself inferior to the story told in the Gospel according to the evangelist Matthew (Matt. 9:9) (although this is a daring statement). When I said these things, I was speaking the truth, not showing off, and I have learned this through much experience, for the sake of God’s glory and to show your love for me. Never forget it but also maintain it, even after my departure from you, for the one who succeeds me as your father and brother, considering the kellion or any of the many other things that men desire as “refuse” (Phil. 3:8) compared with his love.

[B17.] I lay this charge upon you: if someone should perhaps [p. 83] desire to live with you, envying your harmony and mutual affection, and he is weak and truly unaccustomed to physical labor, but is otherwise useful to you, adorned with piety and humility and righteousness of soul, and his association with you would lead both to his and your benefit and edification, do not turn him away, but receive him and treat him as if he were one of you, and one of the chosen.

[B18.] As for those who are willing and able to undertake physical labor, I ordain that this useful yoke should be laid upon those who desire it for ten years, and then they should rest from bodily toil, and take up spiritual labors, singing continually to God and praying and reading and relieving their akedia with any sort of small manual task, unless perhaps someone willingly chooses to do physical labor occasionally, of his own accord, because of the labor’s benefit, of which are unaware those who have not tasted it, or, [as] often [happening], because a man’s constitution cannot endure the constraint and struggle of the contemplative life.

[B19.] With regard to private property, even the most miserable and cheapest object, I believe it superfluous to expound or to waste words on this to those who through long-ingrained habit, do not even know whether there is such a thing as private property, except that which is common to all, and equally useful.

[B20.] With regard to the refectory, too, I am confident that you have been instructed by me, so that you will observe [my precepts] until the end. For if you love each other and almost consider it a pleasure to die each [day] for each other, how could you ever tolerate gluttony and a preference for inequality over love and equality? Unless you take heed of someone who requests special food on account of illness (which is not inequality, but really equality in apparent inequality),²³ just as I myself used to do among you without distinction, often concerning myself with those who had a readily apparent disease or one that was invisible (though visible to me who seriously cared), and offering something else, in addition to that normally served to the brethren, which the ailment required for nourishment, such as a better wine, if he should happen to have a sickish stomach.

[B21.] But everyone's constitution is not the same, nor are their bodies the same, but we know that just as there is a great difference in men's appearances, so too in their constitutions and bodies, and there is great variety of knowledge and differentiation among them. A set standard cannot but be dangerous for the one who after God is appointed your leader, I mean with regard to manual labor and so on, as my whole purpose which the Lord knows was continually the salvation of the brethren, moreover with much sympathy and compassion, never preferring, as I said above, my own [p. 84] advantage to theirs, I mean that of the soul of course, not of the body.

Knowing that this standard is certain and sure, you too must build everything separately on this foundation without distinction, as time and circumstances and the knowledge that is in you through God ordains: "Do everything without prejudice"; in all things leading yourself and them toward moral progress, so that the Lord, who glorifies even at the present time those who make it their work to glorify him, may be glorified on each occasion by your "good life" (James 3:13).

[B22.] I also wanted to provide for the prosperity of the kellion and a little more than the necessary and obligatory, and this not for the sake of expansion, but for the brethren, especially that they might occasionally hire men for work outside [the monastery] and act through them and relieve themselves of their many labors. But in general this has not occurred as I would have liked in my lifetime, since the place was in ruins and required a lot of improvements. So it is my desire and I entreat you, the future superior, to carry out my wishes in this respect if possible, and also to accomplish that which I failed to take care of, not without reason, as God knows, and to deal with this and other matters conscientiously.

[B23.] I will "go on my way" (cf. Acts 8:39), and in heaven as here on earth I will be [working] on your behalf (may the Lord make this a straight [road] for me, through the breaths of this air), being separated from you briefly "in person, not in heart" (I Thess. 2:17). "I commend you" (Acts 20:32) to God the Father of our Lord Jesus Christ, to his eternal and consubstantial Son who is also without beginning, our Lord Jesus Christ, and to his co-eternal and life-giving Spirit, also without beginning, which regenerated you through repentance, I mean the second baptism, the compensation for our sins and through its illumination in you deeming you worthy to obtain a more perfect life, “mortifying what is earthly in you” (Col. 3:5) and “crucifying the flesh with its passions and desires” (Gal. 5:24).

FOURTEENTH CENTURY

For through the grace of Jesus, I have confidence that through the true mortification of your will both the flesh and its passionate movements in you are mortified, or if you have any shortcoming it will be mortified by means of your daily advancement and increase, so that at last “this perishable nature must put on the imperishable” in this world and “this mortal nature must put on immortality” (I Cor. 15:53), so that as you journey you may say with confidence until the end the words of the apostle, “O death, where is thy sting, O grave, where is thy victory?” (I Cor. 15:55). [p. 85]

[B24.] So much for this. But since I am at death’s door, and right now I am leaving behind the air which I breathe with you, come and stand about me, my dearly beloved choir which competes in the heavenly choruses for the sake of your restoration to God and the eradication of your own desires. You, who venerate the heavenly Father through your reverence towards me, grant me a last embrace, starting with the first and finishing with the last.

For I go, and will no more see with you this perceptible light, nor will I share with you as usual the same salt and the same table, nor will I enjoy our customary conversation and intercourse which is dear to me. Tearing myself away from you with great pain on account of this deprivation, I revive myself greatly through my anticipation of enjoying with you the bliss of the world to come. For if in this world the Good One truly associates with those who are gathered together in his holy name, according to his blessed promise (cf. Matt. 18:20), undoubtedly [this will be] even [truer] in the world to come. May this be attained by all of us who through our spiritual unity live together in peace here on earth, and also my successors, sharing their enjoyment of present blessings through their harmony, and enjoyment of future blessings through the grace and gift of our Lord Jesus Christ, with the prayers and supplications of the surpassingly pure Mother of God and all those who have pleased him, to whom be glory and power unto everlasting generations, Amen.

Notes on the Translation

Editors’ note: The assistance of our translator, Alice-Mary Talbot [AMT], is gratefully acknowledged for the notes to this document.

1. Possibly the future Patriarch Euthymios II (1410–16), the author’s successor as superior of the Studios monastery; see Laurent, “Écrits spirituels,” p. 54, n. 1.
2. A cross-reference to the author’s Testament [B].
3. See the correspondence of Isidore, metropolitan of Thessalonike, with this monk, ed. Lampros, “Okto epistolai,” pp. 359–75.
4. The author’s eventual successor and future metropolitan of Thessalonike; see above, Institutional History, B.
5. Apophthegmata Patrum, PG 65, col. 373B.
6. See the relevant provision of [B8] below.

52. CHOUMNOS

7. For this monk, see also the author's Funeral Oration, ed. Laurent, "Écrits spirituels," pp. 71–76.
8. Shoemaker; see the author's Funeral Oration, ed. Laurent, "Écrits spirituels," p. 73, line 69; cf. p. 64. n. 1.
9. Sermo de renuntiatione saeculi, PG 31, col. 645D, also found in (22) Evergetis [42] and related documents; cf. Antony the Monk, Hom. 130, PG 89, col. 1841B.
10. For this monk, see also the author's Funeral Oration, ed. Laurent, "Écrits spirituels," pp. 71–76.
11. According to Laurent, "Écrits spirituels," p. 65, n. 1, these monks were probably brothers, as indicated by their choice of the same initial for their monastic names.
12. See also descriptions of the duties of gatekeepers in (54) Neilos Damilas [16], (57) Bebaia Elpis [72], and (58) Menoikeion [7].
13. According to Laurent, "Écrits spirituels," p. 67, n. 1, he was the spiritual director of other residents of Thessalonike, including Nicolas Cabasilas.
14. Laurent, "Écrits spirituels," pp. 54–55, proposes that she was the author's sister rather than a nun.
15. Known to have been deceased by April 1374, by which time his widow and children were part of an accord with the Athonite monastery of Hilandar; see Laurent, "Écrits spirituels," p. 115, n. 1.
16. See similar provisions in (32) Mamas [24], (33) Heliou Bomon [24], and (59) Manuel II [5].
17. Laurent, "Écrits spirituels," p. 54, n. 3, interpreted this as a reference to the city quarter "of the Dungeon" or "Fortress" from which this individual originated.
18. For this individual, who is otherwise unknown, see Laurent, "Écrits spirituels," p. 55, with n. 2.
19. The "first brother;" for a possible identification, see note to [A3] above.
20. John V Palaiologos; for an example of an ex-emperor taking up residence in a monastery, see (60) Charsianeites [A8].
21. Read hemon. [AMT]
22. Read me epainetes. [AMT]
23. See similar sentiment expressed in (37) Auxentios [4].

Document Notes

1. Rule [A]

Due to the essentially homiletic nature of this document, cross-references have been incorporated into the notes.

2. Testament [B]

- [B1] Reason for composition of the Testament. See similar discussions in (58) Menoikeion [2] and (60) Charsianeites [B1].
- [B2] Importance of preserving the Testament. See also the provisions in (54) Neilos Damilas [21] and (60) Charsianeites [B22], [C18].
- [B3] Commendation of the new superior to the community.
- [B4] Subordination of all monks to the superior; superior not liable to give accounts; only pre-eminent monks to correct him. See also similar provisions in (22) Evergetis [16], [18] and related documents, (57) Bebaia Elpis [37], and (60) Charsianeites [B8], [C16].
- [B5] Duty of monks to correct one another. See also (57) Bebaia Elpis [45].
- [B6] Acceptance of all postulants; superior to test them. For examination of postulants, see also (60) Charsianeites [B15].
- [B7] No imposed postulants or those who offer wealth and worldly knowledge. (55) Athanasios I [7] is similar; for rejection of so-called "imposed guests," see (27) Kecharitomene [53], (32) Mamas [20], (33) Heliou Bomon [26], and (58) Menoikeion [11]; elsewhere postulants with special talents or willing to make large voluntary gifts are welcomed, as in (28) Pantokrator [17] and in (29) Kosmosoteira [55].
- [B8] Compassion for those incapable of physical labor. The author may have had the monk Theosteriktos (see [A8]) in mind here; see also [B17] below.
- [B9] Compassion for inexperienced novices. The author may have had Theodotos (see [A13]) and Theodoulos (see [A17]) in mind here.

FOURTEENTH CENTURY

- [B10] Only the superior's designees can offer confession. See similar provisions in (22) Evergetis [7], [15] and related documents, as well as (60) Charsianeites [C6], but note also the provisions for outside confessors in [A17] and in (58) Menoikeion [13].
- [B11] Novices to dispose of their money and property. See also similar provisions in (60) Charsianeites [B12], [B13].
- [B12] The founder a suitable model for the monks. See the similar sentiment expressed in (57) Bebaia Elpis [31].
- [B13] Founder's autobiography. See also the equivalent personal accounts in (49) Geromeri [13], (57) Bebaia Elpis [8], and (60) Charsianeites [A2].
- [B14] Customary offices not to be neglected. See also [A16] above and similar provisions in (53) Meteora [11], (54) Neilos Damilas [10], (55) Athanasios I [4], (57) Bebaia Elpis [59] and (60) Charsianeites [C17].
- [B15] Hospitality for visiting brethren. Perhaps related to the injunction in [A19]; there is a limitation on hospitality in (60) Charsianeites [B19].
- [B16] Assertion of confidence in the monks' personal loyalty.
- [B17] Postulants unaccustomed to manual labor acceptable. See also [A8] and [B8] above.
- [B18] Ten years' service at manual labor. Yet see [B21] below; and explicit provision of this sort is not found elsewhere in the monastic foundation documents.
- [B19] Rejection of private property. See similar provisions in (22) Evergetis [22] and related documents, (53) Meteora [9], (55) Athanasios I [1], and (60) Charsianeites [B5].
- [B20] No gluttony or inequality in refectory. See similar provisions in (22) Evergetis [26] and related documents, (53) Meteora [3], (56) Kellibara II [3], (57) Bebaia Elpis [83], and (60) Charsianeites [C3].
- [B21] No set standard with regard to manual labor. (60) Charsianeites [B20] also leaves this to the discretion of the superior.
- [B22] Superior to hire men for outside work. For use of lay workmen, see also (24) Christodoulos [A10], [A13], [A14] and (54) Neilos Damilas [8].
- [B23] Spiritual exhortation.
- [B24] Valedictory statement.

53. Meteora: Canonical Rule of Athanasios the Meteorite for the Monastery of the Transfiguration (Metamorphosis)

Date: ca. 1350–83¹

Translator: George Dennis

Edition employed: Nikos Bees, “Symbole eis ten historian ton monon ton Meteoron,” Byzantis 1 (1909), 191–331, with text at 250–52.

Manuscript: Codex of the Monastery of the Metamorphosis, no. 404, fol. 333r–334r (14th c.)²

Other translations: Modern Greek, by Sp. Lampros, “Symbolai eis ten historian ton Monon ton Meteoron,” NH 2 (1905), 49–156, at 76–77.

Institutional History

*A. Foundation under Athanasios the Meteorite*³

What was to become the monastery of the Transfiguration (Metamorphosis), the most important of the group of monasteries founded in the fourteenth century at Meteora, a site of unusual towering rock formations in Thessaly near Stagi (mod. Kalambaka), was founded by the hesychast Athanasios the Meteorite towards the middle of that century. Earlier, Athanasios’ monastic career had taken him to Crete and Mount Athos. Fleeing Turkish pirates who were then plaguing Mount Athos, Athanasios and his spiritual master Gregory sought refuge in Thessaly, circa 1340. There was already a monastic community there at Doupiane, a group of anchorites led by a protos forming a skete. Like the earlier anchorites, Gregory recognized the authority of the local bishopric of Stagi, whose incumbent Xenophon gave him permission in 1341 to rent some property for his band of ascetics from the skete at Doupiane.⁴ Later, Athanasios removed himself to a site known as the “Broad Rock” that he called “Meteoron,” from meteoros (“suspended” or “floating in air”); the later monastic foundation here was known as the “Great Meteoron.” The dedication of the first chapel erected here was to the Mother of God Meteoritissa. Nicol (Meteora, p. 95) reckons that the foundation took place before Athanasios’ master Gregory’s departure from Thessaly, said to have occurred “ten years after his first arrival,” i.e., circa 1350. Subsequently, Athanasios sought to accommodate a community of some fourteen monks in a new church dedicated to the Metamorphosis that was to give its name to the whole foundation. In 1359, Antony, archbishop of Larissa, obliged Athanasios with a confirmation of his ownership of the land around the foundation, implicitly acknowledging Meteorora’s independence of the skete at Doupiane.⁵

The anonymous Life that preserves Athanasios’ Canonical Rule for this foundation was written by an Athonite monk after 1388.⁶ Athanasios himself died in 1383 at the age of 78.⁷

*B. Subsequent History of the Foundation under Turkish Rule*⁸

The second founder was Joasaph Uroš († 1423?), son of Symeon Uroš Palaiologos, the Greco-

FOURTEENTH CENTURY

Serbian despot of Epiros (1348–55) and later ruler of Thessaly (1359–71?), who may have joined the community as early as 1373. He rebuilt and enlarged the foundation's church in 1387–88.⁹ In the sixteenth century, this was incorporated into a new church as its apse and sanctuary. Under Joasaph's leadership, Meteora survived the Turkish conquest of Thessaly in 1393. Later Joasaph was able to obtain recognition of Meteora's independence from Patriarch Euthymios II (1410–16), which exempted the monastery from the authority of the local bishop of Stagi.¹⁰

After Joasaph's death, there was a bitter struggle for supremacy between Meteora and the skete of Doupiane.¹¹ By the end of the fifteenth century, with the connivance of the Turkish authorities and the active support of the archbishop of Larissa, Athanasios and Joasaph's successors as directors of Meteora successfully established their claim to independence from Doupiane and their entitlement to the title of superior. In the sixteenth century, an era of more tolerant Turkish rule, especially under Suleiman the Magnificent (1520–1566), made possible a revival of monastic life at Meteora. Two capable superiors of Meteora, Bessarion (1520–40) and his successor Neophytos (1541–55?), strengthened the monastery's cenobitic organization and asserted its authority over the other monastic settlements in the vicinity. A patriarchal stauropolegion awarded by Patriarch Jeremias I (1522–45) in 1540 confirmed Meteora's independence.¹²

This was also the time (1544–55) at which Meteora's katholikon of the Metamorphosis was enlarged to its present size, incorporating the earlier structure on the site as built by Joasaph in the late fourteenth century. A refectory was built a few years later in 1557, and the present ensemble of buildings on the site was essentially complete by the end of the sixteenth century. Like Chariton, author of (51) Koutloumousi, and his successors, the monks of Meteora turned to the Christian rulers of Wallachia and Moldavia for patronage and financial support. Radu Mihnea, voivode of Wallachia and Moldavia in the early years of the seventeenth century, bestowed the Wallachian monastery of Golgotha with its estates upon Meteora as a dependency. This important bequest provided financial support to Meteora down into the eighteenth century.

In the middle of the seventeenth century, however, the monastery's fortunes took a turn for the worse. External support dried up in the eighteenth century when Phanariote Greeks took over the administration of Wallachia and Moldavia for the Ottomans. Bad relations with Ali Pasha, semi-autonomous ruler of Ioannina from 1788, reduced the monastery to especially dire circumstances. Although Meteora had had some thirty monks at the beginning of the nineteenth century, by 1859 it had only four.¹³

*C. Meteora in Modern Times*¹⁴

The part of Thessaly in which Meteora was located was awarded to the independent Kingdom of Greece in 1881, yet the monastery was reportedly pillaged by Turkish soldiers in the course of the Greco-Turkish War of 1897–98. In our own times, Meteora suffered further at the hands of German and Italian troops during the Second World War. It was also occupied by Communist partisans in the aftermath of the war. Subsequently, the foundation, along with its neighbors, was revived under the sponsorship of the Greek government. A small monastic community retains the foundation's relics, icons, and collection of more than 600 manuscripts.

Analysis

According to the hagiographic Life from which this brief document is extracted, Athanasios the Meteorite decided to employ a canonical rule to institute a reform at his monastery based on cenobitical principles. Some—but not all—of the monks then practicing a kelliotic form of monasticism at his monastery agreed to live according to the Rule's terms. As in (28) Pantokrator [28], but not (33) Heliou Bomon [26], the author permits [1] those parakelliotai already present to remain “since he had once welcomed them.” Henceforth, everyone else was to meet the requirements of the cenobitic life.

A. Model Typikon

Almost inevitably, a fourteenth-century document of this sort upholding cenobitical principles of organization invites comparison to (22) Evergetis, the preeminent typikon of the monastic reform movement. At least two of the document's provisions seem to have been inspired by that earlier typikon, and most of the others are consonant with it.¹⁵ Though a direct acquaintance cannot be demonstrated, it seems that this document, like (37) Auxentios, (39) Lips, (55) Athanasios I, (56) Kellibara II, (57) Bebaia Elpis, and (60) Charsianeites, can reasonably be considered an example of the neo-Evergetian revival of Palaiologan times, in which the institutions, if not the actual wording, of (22) Evergetis appear to have returned to favor among some of the era's most prominent benefactors.

B. Lives of the Monks

1. Liturgical Duties

This was a rigorist foundation in terms of liturgical observance. The night office was to be performed [11] daily, not just on Sundays and feasts, in accordance with an unspecified liturgical typikon, at this time most likely that of the Sabas monastery in Jerusalem. Unlike other authors, however, ours here admits that monks often neglected their duty to perform the office.

2. Cenobitic Life

Unlike some contemporary founders such as the author of (51) Koutloumoussi [B17] who accepted variations based on “years and labors,” Athanasios adopts [3] the controversial standard of (22) Evergetis [26] in providing for equality in food, drink, and clothing, with due allowance for illness.

Athanasios' uncompromising hostility to private property [8], [9], [10] was unusual in this era when resistance to idiorhythmic arrangements seems to have been weakening elsewhere (cf. (51) Koutloumoussi [A8], [B12]) while the tolerance of many founders for alternative forms of monasticism was increasing (cf. (34) Machairas [152], (37) Auxentios [11], (48) Prodromos [17]).

In implicit rejection of more tolerant arrangements such as that portrayed in (54) Neilos Damilas [7], Athanasios excepts [8] only articles of clothing “since all are not of the same size.” Moreover, he declares that a community without equality is no more than “an assembly of thieves and a dwelling for the sacrilegious.” Anyone caught with secret possessions was to be excommunicated [10] “as the fathers and St. Basil provided.”

FOURTEENTH CENTURY

C. Constitutional Matters

Athanasios has nothing to say about constitutional arrangements for his monastery in this document, perhaps because (as Nicol, Meteora, p. 98, has suggested) he did not want to infringe on the prerogatives of the protos of Doupiane by attributing to himself or his successor the title of superior.

D. Financial Matters

Athanasios orders [4] that his monks should not sell any surpluses they might have of grain, wine, or oil. This is in conformance with the traditional Basilian prejudice against production for the marketplace that had also been endorsed in (35) Skoteine [23].

E. External Relations

As another facet of an outlook hostile to the secular world (note the general condemnation in [5]), Athanasios prohibits [6] teaching “worldly letters” to children and adopts [7] (22) Evergetis [38]’s exclusion of women from the monastery’s charitable donations, adding the chilling qualifier “even if she happens to be dying of hunger.” Nowhere else in our collection of documents is institutional misogyny more absolute and uncompromising.

Notes on the Introduction

1. Provisional dating based on the approximate time of Meteora’s foundation and Athanasios’ death in 1383, for which see below, Institutional History, A.
2. The Canonical Rule is encapsulated in the Bios kai politeia tou hosiou patros hemon Athanasiou, ed. Bees, “Symbole,” pp. 237–60, which dates from after 1388.
3. See Nicol, Meteora, pp. 88–104, and “Layman’s Ministry,” pp. 146–51.
4. Bees, “Grammata,” no. 23, pp. 96–98.
5. Bees, “Grammata,” no. 4, pp. 18–19.
6. Ed. Bees, “Symbole,” pp. 237–60.
7. The date is based on a now lost inscription built into the wall of the monastery; see Nicol, Meteora, p. 104, n. 22.
8. See Nicol, Meteora, pp. 101–24, 131–32, 168–72, and Alexander, “Monasteries,” pp. 95–100.
9. The date is based on a founder’s inscription in the apse of the katholikon; see Nicol, Meteora, p. 107.
10. Mentioned in a later document of Neophytos, archbishop of Larissa (1541), ed. Zakythinos, “Anekdotia,” no. 3, pp. 288–89.
11. Detailed in the Syngamma historikon (Historical Discourse), a hostile tract drawn up ca. 1521 to contest Meteora’s claims to supremacy over its neighboring monasteries, for which see Nicol, Meteora, pp. 71–72.
12. Mentioned in a later document of Patriarch Metrophanes III (1580), ed. Zakythinos, “Anekdotia,” no. 7, pp. 299–302.
13. Nicol, Meteora, p. 182.
14. See Nicol, Meteora, pp. 172–87.
15. [3] equality in food, drink and clothing, cf. (22) Evergetis [26], and [7] women banned from the premises, cf. (22) Evergetis [38]; [1], [8], [9] are more generally Evergetian in spirit, but may well have had other sources of inspiration.

Bibliography

- Alexander, J. C., "The Monasteries of Meteora during the First Two Centuries of Ottoman Rule," JÖB 32.3 (1983), 95–103.
- Beck, Hans-Georg, Kirche und theologische Literatur im byzantinischen Reich (Munich, 1959), p. 785.
- Becquet, T., "Les Monastères des Météores en Thessalie," Irénikon 8 (1931), 373–83.
- Bees, Nikos, Ta cheirographa ton Meteoron (Athens, 1967).
- , "Geschichtliche Forschungsergebnisse und Mönchs- und Volkssagen über die Gründer der Meteorenklöster," BNJ 3 (1922), 364–403.
- , "Syntagma epigraphikon mnemeion Meteoron kai tes perix choras, meta schetikou archaiologematon," Byzantis 1 (1909), 557–626.
- , "Serbika kai Byzantiaka Grammata Meteoron," Byzantis 2 (1911), 1–100 (= Serbisch-Byzantinische Urkunden des Meteorenklosters [Berlin, 1921]).
- , "Zur Schriftstellerei des Antonios von Larissa," BNJ 12 (1935–36), 300–319, esp. 310.
- Bompaire, Jacques, "Les catalogues de livres-manuscrits d'époque byzantine (XIe–XVe s.)," in Byzance et les Slaves, Études de Civilisation: Mélanges Ivan Dujčev (Paris, 1979), 70–71.
- Bouras, Laskarina, "Dyo byzantina manoualia apo te Mone Metamorphoseos ton Meteoron," Byzantina 5 (1973), 129–47.
- Charitakes, G., "Hagiographikoi kodikes ton Meteoron," NH 21 (1924), 305–31.
- Halkin, François, Bibliotheca hagiographica graeca, 3rd ed. (Brussels, 1957), no. 195.
- Hyde, W. W., The Monasteries of Meteora and Greek Monasticism (Philadelphia, 1913).
- Lampros, Sp., "Symbolai eis ten historian ton monon ton Meteoron," NH 2 (1905), 49–156, esp. 76–77.
- , "Dyo anekdota patriarchika sigillia peri tes en Meteorois Mones tou Soterou Christou, kai sympleromata eis ta peri Meteoron," NH 4 (1907), 194–201, 201–5.
- Nicol, Donald, "A Layman's Ministry in the Byzantine Church: The Life of Athanasios of the Great Meteoron," SCH 26 (1989), 141–54.
- , Meteora: The Rock Monasteries of Thessaly (London, 1963), esp. 73–76, 88–105.
- Nikonanos, N., Meteora: Ta monasteria kai he historia tous (Athens, 1987).
- Skubaras, A., "Meteora," TEE, vol. 8 (Athens, 1966), cols. 1075–93.
- Soteriou, G. A., "Byzantina mnemeia tes Thessalias 13ou kai 14ou aionos," EEBS 9 (1932), 382–415, esp. 394–96.
- , "Hai Monai ton Meteoron," EEBS 9 (1932), 383–415.
- Talbot, Alice-Mary, "Athanasios of Meteora," ODB, pp. 219–20.
- Talbot, Alice-Mary, and Cutler, Anthony, "Meteora," ODB, pp. 1353–54.
- Trapp, Erich, Prosopographisches Lexikon der Palaiologenzeit, fasc. 1 (Vienna, 1976–), no. 359: Athanasios of Meteora, 32–33.
- Volk, Robert, Gesundheitswesen und Wohltätigkeit im Spiegel der byzantinischen Klostertypika (Munich, 1983), 266.
- Zakythinos, D., "Anekdota patriarchika kai ekklesiastika grammata peri ton Monon ton Meteoron," Hellenika 10 (1937–38), 281–306.

Translation

The monks then were living this sort of life and increasing in number each day. [p. 251] The Father saw that having each one live his own life and take thought only for himself is not conducive to unity of spirit but to division and quarreling. He planned, therefore, to draw up a canonical rule for a common life to join together those under his charge. Some of the parakelliotai then came forward, whereas others refused. Nonetheless, he did not drive them away, since he had once welcomed them. Instead, he allowed them to continue living as they wished.

FOURTEENTH CENTURY

He then published the Canonical Rule:

1. With the exception of those already present, parakelliotai should not be received in the future, either by himself or by his eventual successors in governing the kellion. Rather, all should carry on their way of life in common in the general kellion.

2. Let there be one mind and one will. Let them carry on their struggle on an equal basis. Let them think the same.

3. As far as food, drink, and clothing are concerned, what the last of the monks has let the first have, making allowance for illness.

4. If there should be a surplus of grain, wine, or oil, they should not go around selling it.

5. Foreign, worldly things should not be allowed within.

6. Children should not learn worldly letters.

7. A woman should not pass beyond the prescribed boundary. She should not be given anything to eat, even if she happens to be dying of hunger.¹

8. No one should have anything at all as his own, except for his clothing, since they are not all of the same size.

9. By no means should anyone living among them possess his own private property. This is why it is called a community. For wherever this kind of equality does not exist, we must not speak of a community, but of an assembly of thieves and a dwelling for the sacrilegious. [p. 252]

10. Whoever, therefore, is discovered possessing anything as his own, even a coin worth only three obols, should not be allowed to partake of the sacred mysteries, according to the tradition of the Fathers and of the great Basil.² If he should communicate, he does so to his own condemnation and not to the forgiveness of sins.

He penned these rules in his own hand and confirmed them with the signature of the bishop.³ He then presented them to those living with him, the ordained monks lord Gregory and Iakobos and all the brothers then under his charge.

11. He also ordained that all the brothers in his charge should assemble in the church not only for the night offices on Sunday and the other great feasts, but that without fail they should also perform the service each day according to the correct tradition of the typikon. For often enough they can become careless either because of the malice of the enemy or sluggishness of the body, at times too because of distraction or too much to eat. For not all men living as solitaries have received the gift of being able to pray without being distracted, but those to whom grace has given the strong desire and who have strenuously labored at it for a very long time. As it is said, “Woe to the person who is alone.” If he is assailed by akedia or some other temptation, “he has no one to come to his aid” (Eccl. 4:10).

53. METEORA

Notes on the Translation

1. For Athanasios’ well-known misogyny, see Nicol, Meteora, pp. 98–99.
2. Cf. Pseudo-Basil, Poenae 13, PG 31, col. 1308C.
3. Presumably the bishop of Stagi, but see Nicol, Meteora, pp. 99–100, who argues for Antony, archbishop of Larissa.

Document Notes

- [1] Institution of cenobitic life and ban on independent parakelliotai. See also the insistence on cenobiticism in (47) Philanthropos [1] ff. and (60) Charsianeites [B3], [B4], but note the tolerance for alternative forms of monasticism in (37) Auxentios [11], (34) Machairas [152], and (45) Neophytos [17] (missing).
- [2] Importance of one mind and one will.
- [3] Equality in food, drink, and clothing. See also the similar provisions in (22) Evergetis [26] and related documents, (37) Auxentios [7], (52) Choumnos [B20], (56) Kellibara II [2], and (60) Charsianeites [C3].
- [4] No commercial transactions. So also (45) Neophytos [C13], but not (54) Neilos Damilas [7].
- [5] Exclusion of “foreign, worldly things.” The reference is obscure.
- [6] No school to be established to teach children to read. For such schools, generally intended for future monks, see also (23) Pakourianos [31], (34) Machairas [115], and (36) Blemmydes [9].
- [7] Women banned from the premises. See also (22) Evergetis [38] and related documents, (45) Neophytos [19], [C18], (58) Menoikeion [14], and (60) Charsianeites [C2].
- [8] No personal possessions except for clothing. See also (52) Choumnos [B11] and (60) Charsianeites [B12], [B13].
- [9] Private property incompatible with communal living. See also (37) Auxentios [5], (52) Choumnos [B19], (55) Athanasios I [5], (56) Kellibara II [3], (57) Bebaia Elpis [46], and (60) Charsianeites [B5].
- [10] Exclusion of those found with private property from the sacred mysteries. See also a similar provision in (47) Philanthropos [2].
- [11] Vigilant performance of the daily offices. See also (52) Choumnos [A16], [B14]; (54) Neilos Damilas [10]; (55) Athanasios I [4]; (57) Bebaia Elpis [59]; and (60) Charsianeites [C17].

54. Neilos Damilas: Testament and Typikon of Neilos Damilas for the Convent of the Mother of God Pantanassa at Baionaia on Crete

Date: Testament: ca. 1400; Inventory: April 22, 1417

Translator: Alice-Mary Talbot

Editions employed: Testament: S. Pétridès, “Le typikon de Nil Damilas pour le monastère de femmes de Baeonia en Crète (1400),” IRAIK 15 (1911), 92–111, with text at 95–109. Inventory: Sp. Lampros, “Das Testament des Neilos Damilas,” BZ 4 (1895), 585–87.

Manuscripts: Testament: Parisinus graecus 1295, fols. 108–117v (15th–16th c.); Inventory: Oxford, Codex Baroccianus 59, fols. 226v–227v (15th c.)¹

Other translations: None

Institutional History

The convent of the Mother of God at Baionaia is known almost exclusively from the author Neilos’ Testament and Typikon translated below. A note in a fourteenth-century manuscript in the Bodleian Library, Oxford, records that the construction of the convent began on May 9, 1399.² The Testament and Typikon, which is undated, is assumed to have been composed shortly thereafter.³ Turyn (Manuscripts, p. 138) identified the site with the modern village of Vainia, about 3 miles northeast of Hierapetra in southeastern Crete, based on the fact that Neilos is himself identified as an ordained monk of the monastery of ton Karkasion in Hierapetra in the Moscow manuscript of his treatise On the Procession of the Holy Spirit.⁴ The founder, a hesychast (so von Lilienfeld, “Zeugnis,” p. 361), was an associate of Joseph Bryennios, a partisan of Greek Orthodoxy in Venetian-occupied Crete who later took up residence (1416–27) in the Charsianeites monastery in Constantinople for which (60) Charsianeites was written.⁵

There is also another self-described testament preserved under Neilos’ name, dated to April 22, 1417, which is actually an inventory of the author’s books.⁶ This document, quite possibly but not certainly associated with Neilos’ convent at Baionaia,⁷ has been translated here as an appendix to the founder’s Testament and Typikon. Neilos also authored several other theological works that have remained unedited.⁸

Analysis

This document is the latest in date of those in our collection written for a convent. Like (21) Roidion, it illustrates a foundation’s difficult transformation from an idiorhythmic to a cenobitic constitution. The convent enjoyed friendly relations with the author’s neighboring male monastery of ton Karkasion (cf. [8]), close enough to worry the author Neilos Damilas about the canonicity of his arrangements for their cooperation. Indeed, not since (20) Black Mountain have we seen a document whose author was as concerned as this one to quote canonical precedents to justify his regulations, to which Neilos Damilas adds here a reference [8] to a novel of Emperor Justinian (527–565), whose legislation was being rediscovered in the Byzantine world during the Palaiologan era.

A. Internal Evidence on Composition

The document shows signs of careless composition, perhaps due to an adaptation from a lost typikon for the author's male monastery. The role of the spiritual father is addressed twice, [9], [15], and seems to be essentially the same as that assigned to the priest [14]. The text of the prescription on reading [13] also turns up in the wrong place in the manuscript in the middle of [15].

B. Lives of the Nuns

1. Liturgical Duties

The performance of as many penitential prostrations as possible is joined [10] to the usual requirement of the divine office. A series of progressively severe punishments is laid down for nuns (except for the sick and the elderly) who miss parts of the divine office. Like the author of (36) Blemmydes [13], Neilos Damilas disapproved [12] of the increasing influence of secular music on the performance of the office, specifically the “use of undignified tunes varied in modulation, and excessive variety of hymns and trilling of odes which are more fitting for actors on a stage than for a church of God.” Instead, one nun was to take the lead (unless a priest happened to be present) with the loudest voice, and the rest of the nuns would follow her singing with softer voices. In addition to common services, the author urges [11] his nuns to pray privately “day and night.”

2. Manual Labor

Before the institution of cenobiticism, the founder had permitted [6] each nun to work on her personal handiwork in her own cell. Even later, manual labor remained [10] an important part of the daily lives of the nuns. The author was unwilling [7] to allow the nuns' previous practice of producing goods for their children and other relatives to continue, but he alludes to the permissibility of supervised sales to other outsiders, monks and laymen. The nuns and their male counterparts in the monastery also manufactured [8] articles of clothing for one another: the monks made habits and shoes for the nuns, while the nuns made habits for the monks. Most nuns were also expected [16] to assist with watering and guard duties in the convent's garden and vineyard. Hired secular laborers (like those anticipated in (52) Choumnos [B22]) were to handle certain tasks, presumably those thought too arduous for the nuns to do themselves.

3. Sacramental Life

The convent's spiritual father was responsible [9] for celebrating the liturgy on request and for hearing confessions in the narthex of the church. If the weather happened to be cold, he could hear confessions in the convent instead. This officiating priest was not to be changed [14] until absolutely necessary. Ordained monks (presumably those resident in the neighboring monastery) were not permitted to substitute for him in performing the liturgy.

4. Length of the Novitiate

Novices were assigned [6] older nuns as sponsors. There is no discussion of the length of the novitiate except for women with children who wished to join the monastery, who were obliged [5] to serve a year's trial period. No woman was admissible against the wishes of her husband, and none could bring a daughter into the convent with her unless the child was at least ten years of age and willing to become a nun also. Such a child would become a novice at age thirteen.

FIFTEENTH CENTURY

5. Cenobitical Lifestyle

Professedly because he had no older nuns to serve as sponsors for his novices, the founder originally permitted [6] them to live and work separately (i.e., on an idiorhythmic system). Once he found an adequate number of sponsors, however, he obliged the nuns to live cenobitically, subject to the authority of their superior. "Comprehensive abstinence" in food (including aromatic spices and oils), drink, and sleep and "humility" were the ideological foundations [3], cf. [4] of our author's vision of cenobitic life. Two nuns, a mother and her daughter who served as the convent's gatekeepers, continued [16] to live apart from the community in a cell at the outer gate of the courtyard, and were excused from sharing some of the common responsibilities of the other nuns.

6. Importance of Reading

With an enthusiasm not seen in the other documents in our collection, our author, who was himself a bibliophile, asserts the importance of reading for his nuns. He obliges [20] the superior to teach the other nuns how to read, which he terms "a fine and admirable deed." Also, the young daughters admitted to the convent with their mothers were to be taught [5] no other skill than how to read until they began their novitiates at age thirteen. The author even makes bold to declare [13], on patristic authority, that reading aloud (at least twice a night) was more important than the performance of psalmody. His requirement that the nuns not lend [20] their books outside the convent on the grounds that "if they are damaged, you have no one to restore them" is also consistent with his respect for book-learning, as is the list of some forty-one books found in the founder's inventory.

7. Personal Possessions

The author is reluctant to endorse a ban on personal possessions for the nuns. His opinion is [2] that "It is not the mere possession of something for maintenance of life and the needs of the body that harms us, but having a soul enslaved to these possessions." Indeed, it seems [7] that the nuns were engaged in certain unspecified entrepreneurial activities with outsiders, both laymen and monks. The author specifically mentions [20] certain books that were the personal property of the superior (but she was not to bequeath them to anyone outside the convent).

8. Servants

Citing canon law, the author rules [5] that female servants could not be admitted to the convent or even lodged overnight without the knowledge of their master.

9. Relations with Family

Nuns were not to show [7] "passionate attachment" to their children or relatives by giving them money earned from their handiwork or anything else, except food such as fruit, with permission of the superior. Their entrepreneurial activities, conducted in the presence of the superior and one or two elderly nuns, might be transacted with relatives. The superior was required to be present for all conversations with relatives and strangers.

C. Constitutional Matters

1. Constitutional Status

There is no discussion of the constitutional status of this convent, but to all appearances it was a traditional private foundation. However, except for misbehavior (for which see [17]), the resident nuns did enjoy protection from expulsion from the convent, at the hands either of the spiritual father [15] or anyone else [14].

2. Leadership

The author designates [21] the Mother of God herself as the protectress (prostatis) of the foundation. The role of the spiritual father is carefully limited (unlike (39) Lips [10]) to sacramental functions and tonsuring the nuns. The spiritual father was to have no authority to expel [15] nuns or to alter [9] the founder's instructions, which the latter set down so that there would be no need for "anyone to remind you [the nuns] about them or to make different rules from the ones I have made." When absolutely necessary, a new spiritual father was to be chosen [15], cf. [14] by all or a "majority" of the nuns.

As in contemporary independent foundations, the nuns are put [15] under the authority of the superior and the typikon. The superior was to govern [18] in association with two stewards. Upon the death of any of these officials, the entire body or a majority of the nuns would elect a replacement. The nuns were also responsible [16] for choosing new gatekeepers when the present ones died. The election of officers (and not just the superior) by the community contrasts with the more typical practice of allowing the superior to make these appointments on her own.⁹

3. Style of Rule

The superior was responsible for exercising a tight control over her nuns. The gatekeepers were to grant [16] entrance to and exit from the convent only with her permission. Nuns who fled or left without permission were to be excommunicated [17] for as many years as days absent. Nuns could be expelled for refusing to be subject to the typikon, but not for any other reason unless she was found to be a procuress or "wanton, a troublemaker, or malicious, and is unwilling to make amends."

D. Financial Matters

The author has little to say in his typikon about the financial administration of the convent, presumably because these matters were covered [18] in more detail in the "officially registered document" (composed in Latin). This document, said to be unintelligible to the nuns, also contained a "comprehensive" list (i.e., an inventory) of the convent's property. A separate listing "by name" was once to be found in the typikon at [19] but is now missing. A later testament, included here in our edition as an appendix, has a list of some forty-one books (mostly service books, but also some ascetic and even secular literature), certain consecrated vessels, and liturgical vestments.

E. External Relations

1. Relations with Monks and Secular Laborers

As noted above, the convent exchanged manufactured goods with a neighboring monastery and employed outside laborers for certain tasks. Our author, a keen student of canon law, was well aware of the hostility of the canonical tradition to double monasteries, therefore his defense of these external relations [8] is anxious, convoluted and unconvincing. Essentially he pleads that the circumstances of the convent's construction required certain canonical irregularities, i.e., his own lodging and that of others (laborers?) at the convent, that were not to be repeated.

2. Relations with Secular Authorities

The author discusses [20] relations with the secular authorities, the Venetian government of Crete, in his instructions to the superior. She was to grant admission [20], cf. [8] to government authorities and nobles, both local and foreign (perhaps from Venice itself), and to entertain them as best she could, "for where there is government authority, there is no disorder." But a noble coming without the proper authority who misbehaved was to be denied admission and reported to the local officials or to "the highest authorities," if his offensive behavior persisted.

3. Relations with the Ecclesiastical Hierarchy

Like the most traditional of private benefactors, our author completely ignores the local ecclesiastical hierarchy in this document. This may be a reflection of his belief (said to be based on a Justinianic novel) that founders (ktetores) like himself were free to do [8] what they wanted in their foundations "so long as they do not contradict the divine and holy commandments, but are in agreement with them."

Notes on the Introduction

1. For details, see Legrand, "Nil Damilas," pp. 178–80, and Pétridès, "Nil Damilas," p. 93.
2. Ms. Barocci 69, for which see Mercati, "Demetrio Cidone," p. 226, and Turyn, Manuscripts, p. 137.
3. See [8] below for an indication of the gap between the initiation of construction and the issuance of the founder's typikon.
4. Ms. State Historical Library, Moscow (former Synodal Library), fol. 10 (17th c.), transcribed in Pétridès, "Nil Damilas," p. 93. Neilos' own monastery is titled somewhat differently in his other extant works; see Tomadakis, Ioseph Bryennios, pp. 90–91.
5. See Alice-Mary Talbot, "Bryennios, Joseph," ODB, p. 330.
6. Edited by Legrand, "Testament," pp. 180–81, and more accurately by Lampros, "Testament," pp. 585–87.
7. See [20] below, and Talbot, "Damilas," p. 581.
8. For details, see Tomadakis, Ioseph Bryennios, pp. 90–91.
9. For the selection of a monastery's officers by the superior, see (27) Kecharitomene [14], [24], [31]; (28) Pantokrator [34], [64]; (31) Areia [M9], [T7]; (29) Kosmosoteira [34], [35]; (32) Mamas [14]; (33) Heliou Bomon [14]; (34) Machairas [91], [100]; (45) Neophytos [9]; but cf. (39) Lips [21].

Bibliography

- Beck, Hans-Georg, Kirche und theologische Literatur im byzantinischen Reich (Munich, 1959), pp. 750–51.
- Bompaire, Jacques, "Les catalogues de livres-manuscripts d'époque byzantine (XIe–XVe s.)," in Byzance et les Slaves, Études de Civilisation: Mélanges Ivan Dujčev (Paris, 1979), 72–73.
- Legrand, É., "Testament de Nil Damilas," REG 4 (1891), 178–81.
- von Lilienfeld, Fairy, "Das Typikon des Neilos Damilas—ein Zeugnis des gemässigten 'sinaitischen' Hesychasmus," in Byzantinische Beiträge, ed. Johannes Irmscher (Berlin, 1964), pp. 359–72.

54. NEILOS DAMILAS

- Mercati, Giovanni, "Per l'epistolario di Demetrio Cidone," SBN 3 (1931), 201–30, esp. 226.
- Talbot, Alice-Mary, "Damilas, Neilos," ODB, p. 581.
- Trapp, Erich, Prosopographisches Lexikon der Palaiologenzeit (Vienna, 1976–), fasc. 3, no. 5085, pp. 9–10.
- Tomadakis, N. B., "Mone Baionaias," TEE, vol. 3 (Athens, 1963), col. 561.
- , Ho Ioseph Bryennios kai he Krete kata to 1400: Melete philologike kai historike (Athens, 1947), 89–92.
- , "La politica religiosa di Venezia a Creta verso i Cretesi ortodossi del XIII al XV secolo," EEBS 38 (1971), 361–76.
- Turyn, Alexander, Dated Greek Manuscripts of the Thirteenth and Fourteenth Centuries in the Libraries of Great Britain (Washington, D.C., 1980), p. 138 and n. 355.
- Volk, Robert, Gesundheitswesen und Wohltätigkeit im Spiegel der byzantinischen Klostertypika (Munich, 1983), 270.

Translation

The Testament and Typikon which the most blessed ordained monk lord Neilos Damilas has set down for the nuns in the venerable convent of our most holy Lady the Mother of God and eternally virgin Mary, Queen of All, which was built by him at Baionaia.

[1.] Exhortation concerning preservation of the orthodox faith

First of all, my sisters, I exhort you to maintain the confession of orthodox faith unchanged and without innovation, as it was transmitted to us by the first holy and ecumenical council, assembled at Nicaea, of the 318 inspired fathers, that is, "I believe in one God." For whoever deviates from this faith is estranged from God. For all the saints and the most holy fathers who illumined the seven holy and ecumenical councils condemn to anathema those who dare to alter this [creed] or to take away or add even one syllable.

[2.] Concerning love

In addition to the confession of orthodox faith, you have the obligation to obey the commandments of the Lord; the most important of them all and the uniting bond is pure and honest love for one's neighbor. For he who loves his neighbor can also love God, as the Lord said in the Gospel: "If you love me, you will keep my commandment"; (John 14:15) and "this is my commandment, that you love one another, as I have loved you. Greater love has no man than this, that a man lay down his life." (John 15:12–14) Again, "You are my friends, if you do what I command you" (cf. John 14:15). Again, [p. 96] "By this all men will know that you are my disciples, if you have love for one another" (John 13:35); and again, "A new commandment I give to you, that you love one another" (John 13:34); and you will find the rest in the holy Gospel according to John.

Also the blessed Paul in his first Epistle to the Corinthians said many things about love for one's neighbor; for when he enumerated all the gifts of the Holy Spirit, hear how he placed them second to love, and says, "And I will show you a still more excellent way. If I speak in the tongues of men and of angels, but have not love, I am a noisy gong or a clanging cymbal. If I have prophetic powers, and understand all mysteries and all knowledge, and if I have all faith, so as to remove mountains, but have not love, I am nothing. If I give away all I have, and if I deliver my body to be burned, but have not love, I gain nothing” (I Cor. 12:31; 13:1–4). Do you see? Not even witnessing on behalf of Christ profits us if we do not have love for one another. Recounting its characteristics, the blessed Paul spoke as follows: “Love is patient and kind; love is not jealous or boastful; it is not arrogant or rude. Love does not insist on its own way; it is not irritable or resentful. It does not rejoice at wrong, but rejoices in the right. Love bears all things, believes all things, hopes all things, endures all things. Love never ends” (I Cor. 13:4–8).

Therefore since love has all these advantages, strive to achieve it, so that through it you may achieve all the virtues. If then you desire to possess it like an ancestral inheritance and inalienable fortune, read constantly [and] insatiably the ascetical treatise of St. Maximos which begins, “A monk questioned an old man, saying, ‘Tell me, Father, what was the purpose of the incarnation of the Lord?’”¹ Also [read] the four hundred chapters on love of the same St. Maximos.² In addition and together with these [read] the treatise of St. Zosimos which is at the end of [the works of] St. Makarios.³ From all of these you will learn that, if man does not despise honors and dishonors, and renounce every attachment to ephemeral things, as well as his love for his own flesh, he cannot attain spiritual love. For in the beginning of the first hundred of the chapters on love, St. Maximos says precisely as follows: “Love is a good condition of the soul, as a result of which one prefers nothing to knowledge of God; and it is impossible for anyone attached to earthly things to achieve this love.”⁴

Heed; he did not say, “He who has any earthly possession cannot attain love,” but “He who is attached to any earthly possessions cannot have [p. 97] spiritual love.” So that it is not the mere possession of something for maintenance of life and the needs of the body that harms us, but having a soul enslaved to these possessions. For the blessed Job had riches and great wealth, but he was not enslaved by them. For there was in him no trace of greed. Wherefore when he was deprived of these things, he remained free from grief. Not only did he have no passionate attachment to or irrational love for these things, but he was also not unduly attached to the love of his children. For he did not love them more than God, as events showed. For when he heard that terrible news that his house had fallen on his children and they all perished together, he neither said nor did anything displeasing to God. But arising from his royal throne, he “rent his robe” and sprinkled ashes on his head, and falling to the ground worshipped the Lord, saying: “Naked I came from my mother’s womb, and naked shall I return; the Lord gave, and the Lord has taken away. This has happened in accordance with the Lord’s will, blessed be the name of the Lord” (Job 1:20–21).

Do you see his attitude towards God? Neither the loss of so many possessions, nor the sudden death of his children could sway him from his love of God. This is the attitude all we Christians, and especially monks, ought to have in the face of adversity. For as has been said before, he had great wealth, but he had it as if he did not possess it. For when he had it, he shared it with all the needy. For he believed that he and the poor were children of one Father, and the wealth belonged to a common Father, and he and the poor all lived in common off the wealth of his Father. When the wealth was lost and destroyed, he thought to himself, “Neither did I possess anything, nor have I lost anything. For it belonged to my Lord and, when he wished, he took it, and blessed be his name.”

I have made these remarks so as to demonstrate from the Holy Scriptures that, if only we are willing, we can all have possessions without being attached to them, like the monk who had the cabbage, about whom St. Zosimos writes at the beginning of his treatise.⁵

[3.] Concerning virginity

I wish to speak to you concerning virginity and to safeguard you from danger, for without it no one will see the Lord, according to the blessed Paul; for he says in his epistle to the Hebrews, “Strive for peace with all men, and for the holiness without which no one will see the Lord” (Heb. 12:14). He says that peace is love for one another, holiness is self-control and virginity; a lawful and honorable marriage is also called virginity, but even more honorable is life without marriage, for this is properly called virginity. [p. 98] Virginity is truly an angelic life; for in this men are likened to angels. Our Lord, wishing to honor virginity, was born of a holy virgin. From that time virginity has been honored in the world and is envied by everyone. Why do I speak at length? “Virginity is a desirable house of God and a terrestrial heaven of the heart,” according to John Klimakos. “Chastity is extraordinary denial of nature and a truly incredible struggle of the mortal and corruptible body towards the incorporeal.”⁶ These are the praises of virginity, and there are countless others.

The first foundation of virginity with God is said by all the holy fathers to be restraint in food, drink and sleep, since virginity cannot be attained by anyone except through comprehensive abstinence and humility; by comprehensive abstinence I mean abstention from the many aromatic spices and oils, from drinks, sleep, hearing, the tongue, the eyes, hands and feet; for the orderly and discriminating deprivation of all these makes comprehensive abstinence.

The second and finest foundation of this [virginity], its base and structure and roof and consummation, is holy humility; so that man may truly believe that however long someone fasts, and is abstinent and maintains vigils and thirsts and toils and prays and lives in poverty and strives for every good deed, without the help of God, which comes to us as a result of sobriety and heartfelt prayer, through the grace of the all-holy Spirit which is given to us mystically in holy baptism, it is impossible for us to achieve freedom from the passions, since faith is born of humility, and from faith comes fear of God, and from fear of God results avoidance of sin; [and avoidance] of sin is the beginning of repentance; and the beginning of repentance is the beginning of salvation. By freedom from passions I mean the mortification of the spirit and of desire, which it is impossible to attain without God’s mercy. The mercy of God is granted to us at the time when we repent of our sins and despise them in the depths of our souls and grievously sigh and seek God; and this is the result of the fear of God. This is humility. For since we are blinded by pride and disregard God and commit sins, it is clear that, when we abandon evil deeds, we have humbled ourselves and begun to fear him; and this is called repentance, this is the opposite path to the first, or a backward movement of the mind. For as long as the soul loves sin, it descends down into Hell with the devil; but when it despises sin, it leaves the devil below and ascends to heaven, seeking God with much toil. When the merciful God sees it approaching him, he has compassion on it and sends it his mercy, to cleanse [p. 99] it from the filth and impurities of its passions, to be united with him through purity. For if it is not first of all purified by contrition and shedding of tears, it cannot be united with God and become one spirit with him in the words of Paul; for in the first [epistle] to the Corinthians he says, “But he who is united to the Lord becomes one spirit with him” (I Cor.

6:17). He who is not united with him in this life through tears of repentance cannot achieve salvation.

[4.] Concerning repentance

Since man is united with God through tears and repentance, listen to the words of St. John Klimakos in his treatise on humility: "Anxious repentance, and sorrow purified of every blemish, and the holy humility of the novices are as different and distinct from each other as leaven and flour in bread. For the soul is worn down and attenuated by manifest repentance, and is somehow united and, so to speak, kneaded together with God through the water of genuine sorrow, by which blessed humility which is unleavened and not puffed up, baked by the fire of the Lord, is made into bread and made firm."⁷

Again, so that you may learn that without the aid of God no one can achieve virtue, hear the words of the Lord who says, "Apart from me you can do nothing" (John 15:5). But also the divine John Klimakos, in his treatise on chastity, says as follows: "He who wishes to master his own flesh or fight it on his own strives in vain; for unless the Lord destroys the house of the flesh and constructs a house of the spirit, he who wishes to destroy it has labored and fasted in vain. Entrust to the Lord the weakness of your nature, recognizing your own frailty once and for all, and you will receive imperceptibly the gift of self-control."⁸ Abstinence quenches desire, love calms the temper, prayer presents the very mind to God. Why should I speak at length on these matters? For if you wish to be relieved of and liberated from all evils, strive to achieve abstinence and love and prayer. I have said enough on these matters; now I wish to give you certain instructions, which you will find beneficial and advantageous for your souls if you follow them. But if you disregard them and do not follow them, eternal punishment lies in store for you.

[5.] That you should not admit anyone's female servant into monastic life without the knowledge of her master

Take great care not to admit anyone's female servant into your convent to be tonsured; for I forbid her to remain in the convent even one night, not only [p. 100] because of the resulting difficulties with her master, but because the holy canons do not permit this. For the third canon of the council at Gangra condemns to anathema anyone who advises a slave to adopt the monastic habit without the knowledge of his master.⁹ In the same way you [should] not [admit] a married woman against the will of her husband; and then [you should admit her] only if she is childless. If she does have children, you must on no account admit her until you have given her one year's trial, still wearing secular dress, to see if she can endure the loss of her children. Under no circumstances should you admit a woman with a little girl under the age of ten; but even then only if the child wishes to learn her letters and become a nun; for I forbid her to learn any other skill until she dons the novice's habit at the age of thirteen.

[6.] That you should not tonsure anyone without a sponsor

The second canon of the so-called first and second council [of Constantinople (861)] states that we should not tonsure anyone and dress him in monastic habit without a sponsor who will be responsible for him and train him in the monastic way of life. He must render utter obedience to his sponsor, such as he owes to God and the superior of the monastery.¹⁰ Therefore from this moment and henceforth it is my wish that in this convent you clothe no nun in this sacred habit without a sponsor. For I no longer permit the practice which I have followed up to now: that is, tonsuring [the nuns] and giving them the superior as a sponsor, and then permitting each one to be established according to her own wishes, in a private cell and with her own personal handiwork, for I did this previously out of necessity, because I did not have any experienced elderly nuns.

From now on I want all of you, young and old alike, to obey the superior and render her every honor as to the Lord; and in the future, when nuns are tonsured, let the superior give them sponsors who have the obligation to live in a cenobitic manner until the end of their lives. Both the novices and their sponsors should be subject to the authority of the superior.

[7. External relations]

From this moment on, any nun who is found to have a passionate attachment to her relatives or children and wishes to give them money from her own work, even one grossa, in accordance with previous custom which you wrongfully followed, is to be excommunicate for one year; or perhaps in proportion to the amount which out of friendship she has given her relatives from her work, for the same number of years let her be excommunicate, unless she should fall gravely ill; in that case, in accordance with the tradition of the Fathers, [p. 101] let her receive holy communion on her deathbed. But if she should happen to survive, then she is to be deprived of holy communion until the years are accomplished which we set for her sin.

Nor do I permit the nuns to give anything to their relatives except food. If one of the nuns wishes to give one of her relatives some local fruit, she may do this only with the permission of the superior; and if permission is not granted, she may not give [the fruit]. If one of her relatives or a stranger wishes to buy or sell anything, whether they are laymen or monks, let the purchase or sale take place in the presence of the superior and one or two elderly nuns; for henceforth I forbid a nun to have any private conversation, either with her own brother or child, or with a stranger, except in the presence of the superior.

[8. Relations with the monks]

I also forbid any work to be done inside or outside the convent by a monk; [it may be performed] only by secular laborers. For I do not permit monks to stay or sleep in the place even one night, now that I myself have departed from the convent. For previously, when there were necessary chores at the convent, I had to stay with you and be a burden on you. But now, through the grace of Christ, the most necessary tasks are finished, and it is not right to be a burden or “stumbling-block” for you; for the brother or son of one nun is a “stumbling-block” and cause of “hindrance” (cf. Rom. 14:13) for the others. I am not alone to say this; for the twentieth canon of the seventh holy ecumenical council [of Nicaea II (787)] states as follows: “From now on we do not wish there to exist double monasteries and for nuns to live next to monks. For this is a cause of hindrance and a stumbling-block for many. But whoever choose to retire with their own relatives, let the men go to monasteries and the women to convents. As for the double monasteries which have existed until now, out of respect for our¹¹ holy father Basil who decreed that they be thus,¹² let them be administered as he ordains; but it is not right for monks to live and associate with nuns, since it is harmful and unlawful, neither should they approach [the nuns] freely or speak with them, nor eat alone with them. As for the necessary provisions brought to the nuns by men, let them be received by the superior together with another elderly nun. If a monk deems it extremely important to see a female relative for some necessary matter, let him say a few short words to her in the presence of the superior and leave immediately.”¹³

FIFTEENTH CENTURY

The canon makes these statements about the double monasteries for which the great Basil drew up a rule in his lifetime, [p. 102] only in the region of Caesarea, in his district, that is. “We do this,” they say, “out of respect for the great Basil, but we do not permit this to occur in another province, since the rule which the great Basil set forth is not obeyed, but is disregarded and the situation becomes a cause and excuse for disorder and confusion.” But you can offer no good excuse that there is need for people to come constantly into your convent and attend to your needs, for you do not live communally with any men. For if, in cases where there existed communal monasteries of men and women, the canon does not permit the monks to perform any other service in the convent except to bring the [provisions] sent to the [nuns] by the superior [of the male monastery], [to deposit them] outside the gate of the convent and leave, how much more does it apply in this case where there is no such need? When it was necessary, monks and laymen did perform tasks at the convent. But now, through the grace of Christ, as I have already said, the necessary common work is finished. Moreover, the work took place in my presence and with my knowledge and consent, as is permitted by the thirty-eighth canon of the council at Carthage. For it says, “We rule that no monk or cleric is to visit virgins or widows who are consecrated to God, except with the permission of the bishop, or, in the absence of the bishop, the priest. But even then they should not meet alone with them, but in the presence either of other clergy or of honorable and pious Christians, so as to remove any suspicion.”¹⁴ The apostle says, “Give no offense to the Jews or to the Greeks or to the church of God” (I Cor. 10:32), since we have been commanded to avoid wicked reputations, even if they are false. Therefore we advise you to give no offense and bid you observe proper behavior in the name of our Lord Jesus Christ.

The forty-second canon of the sixth council [of Trullo (691–92)] and the twenty-second canon of the seventh council [of Nicaea II (787)] lay down the same regulations and prescribe deposition for clerics who transgress, and threaten with excommunication impious monks and laymen, that is, those who enter female convents without the knowledge of their shepherd and teacher.¹⁵ Therefore, so that you may not be subject to excommunication, we authorize you to have all your work inside and outside the convent performed by virtuous laymen. Nor do we permit them to enter within the convent except in great necessity, unless government authorities come and local officials and likewise other officials, whom we cannot oppose; but we forbid monks to do any work within the convent, except what they can make for you in their cells, that is, a habit, shoes and other handiwork. In the same way you [p. 103] should make nothing else in your cells for monks except their habits. I say this, not because the monks are wicked, but so that there may be no cause for them to linger with you. For the divine and holy canons do not wish this to occur except in the presence of another person, as has already been said. As for the laymen, they should work all day, and in the evening depart for their own homes, nor does the canon permit them, whether they are relatives or strangers, to have private conversations with the nuns, except in the presence of other [nuns]; and I wish this to be your practice, as I have previously written.

When I was building the convent and the church and the other [buildings] which I had constructed in your convent, I did not have my lodgings nearby; for this reason I and the other [laborers] associated and lodged with you. For if my lodgings had been as close as a mile away, as is the case for bishops in the cities where there are female convents, neither I nor anyone else would have imposed upon you; but this situation occurred because of the pressing necessity of circumstances, since I did not have my lodgings nearby, as has already been said. So that this may not occur again under any circumstances, for this reason I lay this charge on you, citing the testimony of the divine and holy canons to support my commandments. For according to the one hundred thirty-first novel of Justinian, the commandments of the founders have authority in their own monasteries, as long as they do not contradict the divine and holy commandments, but are in agreement with them.¹⁶

[9. Role of the spiritual father]

Since I wish to provide every spiritual comfort and benefit for you, therefore I am setting these regulations down for you in writing, so that you will not need anyone to remind you about them or to make different rules from the ones I have made. As for the spiritual father whom you should have, I do not want you to have him as a teacher in everything, so that he can, God forbid, alter my instructions (for this I do not permit), but so that you may summon him to come to your convent when you wish to partake of the divine mysteries. As he sits in the narthex of the church, or inside the convent, if the weather is cold, each of you should confess to him your thoughts with piety and fear of God; and after he rests in my cell, you should dismiss him again with honor and provisions to return to his own cell.

[10. Performance of the divine office]

Living in peace with one another, you should perform your divine office, that is, the church service, and as many prostrations as possible with the knowledge and permission and approval of the superior. Those who are able and so choose should perform 200 in 24 hours, others 100, others 60, others 50, others 40, others 30, others 25, mindful of the words of the apostle, "Each shall receive his wages according to his labor" (I Cor. 3:8), and again, [p. 104] "God loves a cheerful giver" (II Cor. 9:7). For just as with regard to charitable works, he sees not only the gift but also the purpose and the means [of the donor], so with regard to prayer he sees not only the words, but also the strength and the zeal [of the suppliant].

Any nun who does not get up for the divine office because she is ill, and is neither eating nor able to stand, should not be subject to any reproach or regulation; but when she is healthy and does not rise for the service out of laziness and lethargy, if she misses the midnight service, she is not to eat cooked food that day, but only bread and water, no matter what day it is, and should prostrate herself before the superior and all the nuns to receive their forgiveness. If she gets there for the recitation of the psalms or the fourth [hour], let her eat only half a [portion] of bread; but if she does not get up at all, she is to eat nothing at all that day, even if it should be Sunday. If it should be Sunday or Saturday and she wishes to eat, she should make 200 prostrations on Monday. I make these rules for the young and able nuns who are negligent; I am not talking about the elderly and ailing nuns.

FIFTEENTH CENTURY

These are the punishments for those who are absent from the divine services, which I have learned from the ascetical treatise of our great father Basil.¹⁷ If you do not want to be subject to them, recite the psalms in the evening both winter and summer. In winter when you are sitting at your handiwork, sing all your service; and then leave and return to your cells to sleep, until you have had sufficient rest; and again at dawn, if you wish, get up and do your handiwork, as long as you wish.

[11.] Concerning prayer, or “Lord Jesus Christ, Son of God, have mercy upon me”

In all these matters and above all and in everything you should strive to have prayer in your hearts night and day; for it does not require physical labor, but only silence and peaceful conditions. No person can be peaceful without humility; for the humble person does not blame anyone, does not rail at anyone, does not judge anyone, does not hate anyone, even if he is injured by him, but rather does the complete opposite, condemns himself and registers all his own faults, whatever they may be. How then will such a person find cause to be stirred to anger against anyone? This is the great work of the monk; this is the mark of the disciples of Christ; for thus he spoke to them in his advice after the Last Supper before his honorable passion: “By this all men will know that you are my disciples, if you have love for one another” (John 13:35). [p. 105] For such is the marvelous and lovely fruit of blessed humility, but it is found in few men. For no one can find love in his soul without humility. Since then prayer cannot be kept in the heart and be effective without peaceful conditions, this is “the door and the way” (John 10:9; 14:6) by which we can approach spiritual paradise, that is love, as St. Isaac testifies, saying: “Retirement [from the world] precedes prayer, and the purpose of retirement is prayer. We pray so that we may attain the love of God; for on account of prayer God has reason to love us; and prayer is strengthened and confirmed by a peaceful condition of the soul; and peaceful conditions are not found in the soul without humility.”¹⁸ It is clear that love is generated by humility, as St. John Klimakos tells you in his treatise on obedience, saying as follows: “From obedience comes humility, from humility freedom from passions.”¹⁹ Freedom from passions is the healthy condition of the soul; and the first and distinguishing mark of a healthy soul is love for everyone. So much for this topic, now let me turn to the next.

[12.] Concerning good order in church and how the service should proceed

I wish to instruct you about the psalms which you sing in a bodily fashion, how you should perform them so as to profit therefrom, and not labor in vain. For you cannot profit therefrom unless your mind pays attention to the words of your mouth. I could cite many testimonies on this matter; but on account of their number I will set all of them aside and cite the seventy-fifth canon of the sixth holy ecumenical council.²⁰

This [canon] enjoins “those who pray in church and recite the psalms not to utter undisciplined and high-pitched sounds, but to make their prayers and recitations of the psalms with contrite heart and sedate character and attentive mind, so as to attract God’s mercy on your sins by your internal character and external appearance. For as the book of Leviticus says, ‘Thus you shall make pious the sons of Israel’ (cf. Lev. 15:31). Nor should you make use of undignified tunes varied in modulation, and excessive variety of hymns and trilling of odes which are more fitting for actors on a stage than for a church of God. These [practices] have been forbidden many times by many patriarchs with severe penalties, and it has been ordained that one should use simple and unadorned [music] in the singing of the psalms for night offices and services for the departed, as was the old custom dear to God. But this does not happen any more,"²¹ since the desire of the multitude prevails over divine commandments. But do not you appear disobedient, [p. 106] lest you receive the curses of the fathers. For if those who know how to chant accurately are restrained by the fathers, how much more [would this hold true] for you [nuns] who do not know how at all, but rather cause laughter for those who hear you, and despondency and misery for others.

If the canon forbids laymen from chanting with melody and loud voices, how much more [would this apply] to you, who have been summoned to grieve for your own souls? As St. John Klimakos says in his seventh oration, "We are not here invited to a wedding, by no means; rather he who summoned us here summoned us to grieve for ourselves,"²² and again, "Like a widow who has lost her husband and has her only son as her sole consolation after the Lord,²³ thus when the soul dies there is no other consolation at the time of death like utterances of the throat and tears. Such people will never sing, nor shout aloud in hymns by themselves; for such practices are destructive of grief. If you make it your business to invite grief through these, your goal becomes more inaccessible,"²⁴ and again, "My friends, at the time of the departure of our soul we will be charged, we will be charged not because we have not performed miracles, nor because we have not taught about God, nor because we have not become contemplative, but we will rather render an accounting to God because we have not grieved unceasingly [for our sins]."²⁵

Therefore I want [you to do] everything laid down by the holy fathers, so that you will perform your entire service according to the ordering of the recitation of the psalter, slowly, rhythmically, in a dignified manner. You should say it in a voice loud enough to be heard by all the nuns; and you should not all recite with equal volume, lest your ears and the ears of the listeners be deafened, but let one nun lead the service with the loudest voice, and let the rest follow her with quieter voices, so that there is no confusion and disorder. Let her lead from the beginning of vespers until the completion of the ninth hour and the select verses from the psalms and beatitudes of the following day; then let another take the lead, of the entire service that is, or of the recitation of the psalter, of the hymns called prosomoia, the kathismata, the canons and everything else; chant with melody the [canons beginning with the words] "the more honorable," and the "Christ has risen," the canon of Easter, and the psalms called ainoi, the liturgy of the entire year. When your priest happens to be present, let him chant according to his order, and you follow him in your chanting, as best you can. So much for the order of your service.

[13.] Concerning reading²⁶ [p. 107]

I say this, too, that every night you should read aloud at least twice, if not more; for prayer and reading are like two eyes; and St. Isaac sets reading before psalmody with the following words: "If possible, honor reading even more than assembly for prayer."²⁷

[14.] Concerning the priest [p. 106]

It is my wish that you make no change in the priest who ministers to you as long as he lives, even if he so wishes. But if it is absolutely impossible for him [to continue], bring in [p. 107] another secular priest who is pious and God-fearing, who is to be selected by all [the nuns] or the majority of them from the province of the local authority; for not until this world stands still will I permit an ordained monk to conduct services in this convent while it is inhabited by nuns. Nor do I permit any other men to dwell therein until the end of this world; but if anyone at all, whether one of our own people or a foreigner, wishes to cause the nuns to depart from this convent, let him be excommunicated from the body of Christians, and let his portion be with the devil. But I have said enough on these matters.

FIFTEENTH CENTURY

[15.] Concerning the spiritual father

Concerning the spiritual father whom you should have, it is my wish that he, too, be elected by common consent of all or the majority [of the nuns]. Concerning your spiritual father, you must pay attention to this, too, that he not have permission to remove from the convent any nun whom he tonsures therein. For they are not under his authority, but should render obedience to their superior and the rules of the convent; but let him have the rights appropriate to a spiritual father over all; for this is the case in all the venerable female convents which are subject to the authority of the Roman Empire and also in male monasteries. If the incumbent superior happens to be expelled from his position, he does not have the right to remove from the monastery all those he tonsured or appropriate for himself anyone; for all are subject to the superior who succeeds him and to the monastery.

[16.] Concerning the gatekeeper

I wish to give you instructions about the gate of the monastery which are not my own, but those of the pious laws; for the fifteenth [sic] Novel of Justinian ordains as follows: "We command that there not exist many entrances to the monastery, but only one or two, and that elderly and prudent men should stand at the gate, who will not permit the monks to leave the monastery without the knowledge of the [p. 108] superior, nor allow anyone from outside to enter the monastery night or day."²⁸ Therefore, in accordance with this law I order you in the name of our Lord Jesus Christ to guard the gate of the convent as the previously cited law ordains. Since lady Makaria wishes to assume this salutary duty and asks to build a cell at the outer gate of the courtyard, so that she may live there with her mother, this is pleasing to me and it is my wish that this occur. Therefore let her undertake this divine task as long as she lives or is able. After her death you should choose from among you two pious and trustworthy elderly women who are God-fearing, and appoint them to live in that cell to guard the gate. Let them not open the gate to anyone without the permission of the superior; and not only should they refuse to open [the gate] to outside visitors without the permission of the superior, but also for nuns leaving the convent, unless they are going out with the consent of the superior, as the above-cited law ordains. Therefore the gatekeepers should always stay there throughout the day, and if one should happen to be absent because of pressing need, then the other one should stay there. They should not be liable for duty in the vineyard or garden, that is, to keep guard over them and water them, but they should only be assigned to the gate next to them.

[17. Grounds for punishment and expulsion of nuns]

I think these instructions are sufficient for you; and if you follow them, you will have honor and eternal glory, but if you disregard them and do not follow them, on the contrary dishonor and eternal punishment await you. However, if in this present life any one of you is found who does not wish to be subject to these rules, she is to be expelled from the convent by the others. But I do not permit you to expel a nun from the convent on any other account, unless she be found to be a procuress, or if she is wanton, a troublemaker, or malicious, and is not willing to make amends. “For,” as St. Mark the ascetic says, “one should not be patient when the fault of one spreads to many, but should seek that which is expedient for the majority, so that they may be saved.”²⁹ If any of you should flee from the convent on account of meanness of spirit, she is not allowed to partake of communion until she returns to the convent which she wrongly left. If one of you should leave the convent without authorization, for as many nights as she sleeps [outside the convent] without permission, for so many years is she to go without communion after her return, unless she is in danger of death.

[18.] Concerning the superior and the two stewards

Concerning the superior and the two nuns who have responsibility for the administration of the affairs of the convent, I am recording in the officially registered document how there [p. 109] should always be three of them, and if one of them should die, the entire body of nuns or a majority should elect another one who is able to undertake her duties with fear of God and in all humility. But since that [document] is in Latin, which you do not know how to read, for this reason I will write it [also] in our language [Greek]; and moreover since the items which I am bequeathing to you are not all listed there by name, but comprehensively, I wish to list them here by name.

[19. Inventory]

Here I record the possessions of the convent . . .

[Missing]

[20. Additional instructions to the superior]

I give you this instruction, too, that when the government authorities or nobles come to the convent, not only local nobles but foreigners, you, the superior, should go out with other elderly nuns to welcome them with all honor, and entertain them as best you can with what provisions you have. If they wish to enter the convent, open [the gates] to them with joy. For where there is government authority, there is no disorder. But if one of the nobles should come without authority and misbehave toward you in any way, do not open [the gates] to him if he comes again; and if he troubles you, inform the local authority; and if he does not correct the matter, go to the highest authorities.

I also lay this charge on you, that on no account you lend your books outside the convent and church; for I do not want you to lend them to anyone; for if they are damaged, you do not have anyone to restore them.

I lay this further charge on you with regard to the books which are your personal property, that you not bequeath them to anyone outside the convent after your death. Strive to teach other nuns their letters, so that this may be to your eternal memory. This is a fine and admirable deed; for you ought to fear the punishment that befalls anyone who conceals the talent of his master (cf. Matt. 25:14–30).

FIFTEENTH CENTURY

[21. Punishment of transgressors]

If anyone dares to transgress this present Typikon of mine, which was written by the notary lord George Delagronda, may he find the most holy Mother of God, the protectress of the convent, as his opponent and enemy on the Day of Judgment, and may he be subject to the curses of the 318 divinely inspired fathers of the Council of Nicaea, and may his lot be with that of the traitor [Judas].

[p. 585]

[Inventory]

[INV] On the twenty-second day of April, 1417. I, the ordained monk Neilos Damilas, make my confession and write this testament. I have the following books:

The holy four gospels in paper³⁰ in my own writing.

A Praxapostolos in parchment with commentary, one volume.

An Oktoechos in paper in my own writing, two volumes.

A Triodion on paper, copied by myself and the priest Daniel, one volume.

A Pentekostarion in paper in my own writing, one volume.

A book of the Propheteia in paper, copied by the priest Daniel, one volume.

A Psalter in paper in my own writing, one volume.

A *Typikon*³¹ on paper, one volume. [p. 586]

A Menaion for September and October, copied by the priest Daniel, two volumes.

[A Menaion for] July and August in paper, copied by the priest Daniel, one volume.

[A Menaion for] December and January on parchment, one volume.

Gregory the Theologian, on parchment, [one] volume.

[John] Klimakos,³² in paper, one volume.

A Nomokanon on paper compiled by the priest lord Matthew [Blastares], copied by Grimbilas, one volume.

The Book of Job, in parchment, one volume.

The Dogmatic Writings of lord Theophanes of Nicaea,³³ in paper, one volume.

A *Neptikon*³⁴ in my own writing, one volume; it also has different chapters.

[Symeon Metaphrastes], the month of September, one volume.

Photios, patriarch of Constantinople, parchment, one volume.

The *Antirrhetics*³⁵ and *Hexameros*³⁶ of Basil the Great, parchment, one volume.

54. NEILOS DAMILAS

The Hexaemeros in one book.

A second book of [St. John] Chrysostom, in parchment, one volume.

The *Ascetical Treatises*³⁷ of Maximos the Monk, and the *Treatises*³⁸ of Basil the Great, one volume.

St. Makarios, in paper, one volume.

Boethius and Cato, and the chronographer Manasses, one volume.³⁹

A Dogmatic [Treatise] by the holy [Gregory] Palamas and the lord priest Matthew [Blastares] Against Barlaam and Akindynos and Against the Jew, one volume.⁴⁰

The theological works of St. Maximos and of [Anastasios] the Sinaite and of St. Thalassios the African, twenty-eight quires.⁴¹

One Lexicon.

One little book containing 400 chapters on love and philosophy by [St. John of] Damascus.⁴²

One Schematologion which also contains the prayers for Pentecost.

A Mega Apodeipnon and the sorrowful canon⁴³ of the Mother of God.

The *Erotemata*⁴⁴ of Anastasios of the Holy Mountain, and the Logoi of the great [St. John] Chrysostom, one volume.

A first schedos,⁴⁵ one volume.

A [service book for] Communion.⁴⁶

Two liturgies by [St. John] Chrysostom.

Chalices and patens with a spoon and asteriskos and three veils and two stoles. [p. 587]

Logoi on the translation of our holy father John Chrysostom which has parchment pages.

St. Dorotheos⁴⁷ in parchment, one volume.

A *Paradeisos*⁴⁸ in paper, one volume.

One book which has synaxaria of [Nikephoros Kallistos] Xanthopoulos,⁴⁹ and other items.

One Menaion: a collection.

All together, forty-one volumes.

FIFTEENTH CENTURY

Notes on the Translation

Editors' note: We gratefully acknowledge the assistance of our translator, Alice-Mary Talbot, who has provided most of the notes to this document.

1. Maximos the Confessor, Liber asceticus, PG 90, col. 912.
2. Maximos the Confessor, Centuriae de caritate, PG 90, cols. 960–1080.
3. Zosimos (6th c.), PG 78, col. 1680.
4. Maximos the Confessor, Centuriae de caritate, PG 90, col. 961A.
5. Zosimos, PG 78, col. 1681.
6. John Klimakos, Scala Paradisi, PG 88, col. 880D.
7. John Klimakos, Scala Paradisi, PG 88, col. 989D.
8. John Klimakos, Scala Paradisi, PG 88, col. 884B.
9. C. Gangrensis, c. 3 (R&P 3.102).
10. C. Const. I et II, c. 2 (R&P 2.654).
11. Read hemon.
12. Basil of Caesarea, Regulae fusius tractatae 33 ([LR 33], PG 31, cols. 997–1000; Regulae brevius tractatae 108–11, 154, 220 ([SR 108]–[SR 111], [SR 154], [SR 220]), PG 31, cols. 1156C–1157A, 1184B, 1228CD.
13. Cf. C. Nicaen. II, c. 20 (R&P 2.637–38).
14. Cf. C. Carth., c. 38 (R&P 3.402).
15. Cf. C. Trull., c. 42 (R&P 2.406); C. Nicaen. II, c. 22 (R&P 2.642–44).
16. NJ 131.
17. Not in Basil; cf. Pseudo-Basil, Poenae 1, PG 31, col. 1305C.
18. See Isaak [the Syrian], Tou hosiou patros hemon Isaak ta heurethenta asketika, Greek translation by N. Theotokes (Leipzig, 1770), p. 200.
19. John Klimakos, Scala Paradisi, PG 88, col. 709D.
20. C. Trull. (692), c. 75 (R&P 2.478).
21. Matthew Blastares, Comm. ad C. Const., c. 75 (R&P 6. 297–98).
22. John Klimakos, Scala Paradisi, PG 88, col. 805A.
23. Read meta kyrion; cf. PG 88, col. 813A.
24. John Klimakos, Scala Paradisi, PG 88, col. 813A.
25. John Klimakos, Scala Paradisi, PG 88, col. 816C.
26. This passage on reading was erroneously placed by the manuscript's scribe in the middle of the discussion [15] of the spiritual father; cf. Pétridès, "Nil Damilas," p. 107.
27. Tou hosiou patros hemon Isaak ta heurethenta asketika, p. 215.
28. NJ 133.
29. Mark the Hermit, De lege spirituali, PG 65, col. 961C.
30. kolynos; not in the dictionaries; probably a diminutive of kolla, a demotic word for sheet of paper. See Demetrakos, Lexikon, s.v. kolla.
31. Perhaps the typikon for the convent at Baionaia.
32. His Scala Paradisi, PG 88, cols. 631–1164, to which repeated reference is made in [3], [4], [11], [12] above.
33. An unedited or unknown work of Theophanes III, metropolitan of Nicaea (14th c.); cf. his Epistulae, PG 150, cols. 279–356.
34. Read Neptikon, a book on spiritual vigilance.
35. Read Antirrhethika, his Antirrhethica contra Eunomium, PG 29, cols. 497–774.
36. Basil of Caesarea, Homiliae in Hexaemeron, PG 29, cols. 2–207.
37. Maximos the Confessor, Liber asceticus, PG 90, cols. 911–58.
38. Perhaps the Basilian Praevia institutio ascetica, PG 31, cols. 619–52, Sermones ascetici, PG 31, cols.

- 869–88, the Regulae, PG 31, cols. 905–1305, or the Pseudo-Basilian Constitutiones asceticae, PG 31, cols. 1321–1428.
39. Boethius, De consolatione philosophiae; Cato, Origines; and Constantine Manasses, Breviarium historiae metricum, ed. I. Bekker, CSHB (Bonn, 1837), a historical synthesis in verse covering the period from the Creation to 1081.
40. Matthew Blastares' unpublished "Oration against the anti-Palamites" (Athos 3701) and "Oration against the Jews" (Codex Bodleianus Seldenianus 44).
41. Maximos the Confessor; Anastasios the Sinaite (7th c.), PG 89, cols. 9–1288; Thalassios the African (7th c.), PG 91, cols. 1423–80.
42. John of Damascus, excerpts from the Sacra Parallela.
43. Read: ton lyperon; "sorrowful canon of the Theotokos." There are two canons of supplication addressed to the Holy Virgin known as Mikros parakletikos kanon and Megas parakletikos kanon. They are sung in time of sorrow. See M. Saliveros, Mega Horologion (Athens, n.d.), p. 541.
44. Anastasios the Sinaite, Quaestiones, PG 89, cols. 311–824.
45. A book containing the rules of grammar in accordance with the "schedographic" method.
46. Akolouthia tes theias metalepseos; cf. Horologion, 565–87.
47. Dorotheos (6th c.), PG 88, cols. 1609–1844.
48. A collection of monastic epigrams attributed to John Geometres (10th c.), cf. Paul Speck, "Zur Datierung des sogenannten Paradeisos," BZ 58 (1965), 333–36. Collections of sayings of early ascetics were also called Paradeisos.
49. Nikephoros Kallistos, Historia ecclesiastica, PG 145–47.

Document Notes

- [1] Exhortation to preserve orthodoxy. See similar professions of faith in (3) Theodore Studites, Concerning Faith, (7) Latros [1], [2], (10) Eleousa [2], and (49) Geromeri [2] ff.
- [2] Rationalization of institutional wealth. Cf. the opposite idea that the accumulation of wealth by monasteries is morally indefensible while others live in poverty, see (37) Auxentios [9].
- [3] Disciplinary foundations of virginity. Cf. the treatment in (57) Bebaia Elpis [127].
- [4] Importance of abstinence. For use of John Klimakos elsewhere, see also (3) Theodore Studites, Concerning Faith; (20) Black Mountain [53]; (21) Roidion [B8]; (22) Evergetis [4], [7]; (23) Pakourianos [33B]; (29) Kosmosoteira [13], [17]; (30) Phoberos [9], [14]; (34) Machairas [52]; (35) Skoteine [24]; (37) Auxentios [6]; and (39) Lips [12], [13].
- [5] Restrictions on eligible postulants. For the education of girls who wished to become nuns, see (57) Bebaia Elpis [148]; it may also be implied in (39) Lips [17], [18]. For the admission of infants and children, see also (39) Lips [18].
- [6] No tonsure without a sponsor; nuns to live cenobitically. For the pairing of monks with sponsors elsewhere, see (22) Evergetis [24], (29) Kosmosoteira [51], and (30) Phoberos [43]. For the injunction to practice cenobiticism in other convents, see (27) Kecharitomene [2], [3], [51], [55]; (40) Anargyroi [2]; (47) Philanthropos [1] ff.; and (57) Bebaia Elpis [46], [154].
- [7] External relations. Note the much more restricted relations envisioned in other convents: (27) Kecharitomene [17], [80]; (39) Lips [15], [16]; (47) Philanthropos [2]; (57) Bebaia Elpis [75], [76]; and (60) Charsianeites [B13].
- [8] Relations with the neighboring monks. Note the much more restricted relations envisioned in (27) Kecharitomene [69] and (31) Areia [M6]. For use of lay workmen, see also (24) Christodoulos [A10], [A13], [A14], and (52) Choumnos [B22].
- [9] Role of the spiritual father. See also [15] below, and similar discussions of roles in other convents in (27) Kecharitomene [17], (39) Lips [11], (40) Anargyroi [5], and (57) Bebaia Elpis [111].
- [10] Performance of the office and penitential prostrations. See also (52) Choumnos [A16], [B14]; (53) Meteora [11]; (55) Athanasios I [4]; (57) Bebaia Elpis [59]; and (60) Charsianeites [C17].

FIFTEENTH CENTURY

- [11] Importance of continual prayer, humility. For private prayers, see also (39) Lips [52].
- [12] Instructions for performance of the psalter. See also (36) Blemmydes [13] for another example of apparent hostility to the influence of secular music on liturgical services.
- [13] Readings more important than psalmody. See also [20] below; for the importance of reading elsewhere, see also (57) Bebaia Elpis [30], [66], [120], [132].
- [14] Qualifications, selection and tenure of the priest. See also similar provisions in other convents in (27) Kecharitomene [15]; (39) Lips [6]; (40) Anargyroi [5]; and (57) Bebaia Elpis [111].
- [15] Selection of the spiritual father; his restricted authority. See also [9] above, with cross-references.
- [16] Instructions for the gatekeepers. See also (27) Kecharitomene [17], [29]; (32) Mamas [12]; (33) Heliou Bomon [12]; (34) Machairas [116]; (39) Lips [9], [15], [16]; (40) Anargyroi [5]; (52) Choumnos [A14]; (57) Bebaia Elpis [72], [75], [76]; and (58) Menoikeion [7].
- [17] Grounds for expulsion of nuns; punishment of nuns who flee or are absent without leave. See also (34) Machairas [123] and (45) Neophytos [CB2].
- [18] Election of the superior and the two stewards. See also similar provisions in other convents in (27) Kecharitomene [11], [14]; (39) Lips [5], [25]; (40) Anargyroi [5]; and (57) Bebaia Elpis [26], [54], [55].
- [19] Inventory of the convent's property. Missing, but see [INV] below.
- [20] Additional instructions for the superior. For reception of visiting officials elsewhere, see (21) Roidion [B5], [B7]; (26) Luke of Messina [3], [8]; and (34) Machairas [116], [117]; cf. (3) Theodore Studites [20], [23] and (13) Ath. Typikon [33], [35]. For the storage of books and the value placed on them in other documents, see also (24) Christodoulos [B7], [C6], [C7]; and (33) Heliou Bomon [37].
- [21] Curse on violators of the rule. See also similar provisions in (35) Skoteine [46]; (37) Auxentios [2]; (39) Lips [2]; (45) Neophytos [22]; (48) Prodromos [16]; (49) Geromeri [16]; (50) Gerasimos [5]; (51) Koutloumousi [A15], [B20]; (57) Bebaia Elpis [17]; and (60) Charsianeites [B22].
- [INV] Inventory of books. For other inventories of this sort, see also (19) Attaleiates [INV 7], [INV 12] ff.; (23) Pakourianos [33B]; (34) Skoteine [24], [27], [28], [42]; (48) Prodromos [14]; (61) Eleousa Inv. [3].

CHAPTER NINE

Independent and Self-Governing Monasteries of the Fourteenth and Fifteenth Centuries

“Yet I do not intend to devise some novel regime for you, nor things which no one has proposed or done until now, so as to incur the charge not only of innovation, but also of disobedience . . .” (60) Charsianeites [B1]

“If we do not straightaway arouse the monks to observe every one of the original regulations, it does not mean that these things are being overlooked but that we must take care to correct the [transgressions] which remain [to be corrected] also.” (59) Manuel II, Prologue

“Neither should the superior govern with arrogance and insolence, considering himself the master of the monks, and them his servants, believing that his leadership is not a spiritual leadership, but some secular authority, which came to him as if from a paternal inheritance.” (60) Charsianeites [B9]

“It would be right to have nothing affecting the monastery determined without the counsel of the leading monks.” (59) Manuel II [6]

A. General Characteristics

This chapter includes seven documents that illustrate the fortunes of independent monastic foundations during the last centuries of the Byzantine Empire. Unlike the documents of chiefly monastic authorship found in Chapter Eight, these were nearly all written by members of the ruling Palaiologan dynasty and the ecclesiastical hierarchy. Two, (56) Kellibara II and (59) Manuel II, were written by emperors, Andronikos II (1282–1328) and Manuel II (1391–1425) respectively. Another, (57) Bebaia Elpis, was written by a Palaiologan princess, Theodora Synadene, and added to by her daughter Euphrosyne Palaiologina. Two documents, (55) Athanasios I and (60) Charsianeites, have patriarchal authorship—the only ones, along with (5) Euthymios, from this source in our collection. (58) Menoikeion was written by a metropolitan, Joachim of Zichna. Only one document, (61) Eleousa Inv., comes from a specifically monastic source, the monks of the venerable Eleousa monastery, and even this document was drawn up to meet a canonical requirement and was subsequently certified by the local bishop of Stroumitza. Thus this collection of documents provides us with an unusual opportunity to observe the treatment of familiar issues in monastic life and governance by the empire’s public authorities.

CHAPTER NINE

The documents in this chapter are contemporaries of many of those written for private religious foundations that are to be found in Chapter Eight. Chronologically, they cover the last one hundred fifty years of Byzantine history, with four dating from the fourteenth century and three from the fifteenth century. All of the fourteenth-century documents are clustered in the first third of that century, though there were later additions to (57) Bebaia Elpis and a part of (60) Charsianeites (itself an early fifteenth-century compilation), the Rule of Mark and Neilos [B], dates back to circa 1380.

Given the public authorship of most of these documents, it is inevitable that they should have been written for foundations located within the much-diminished boundaries of the Byzantine Empire. With the exception then of Athanasios I, a special case, the foundations for which these documents were written were less geographically dispersed than their counterparts in Chapter Eight. (56) Kellibara II, (57) Bebaia Elpis, and (60) Charsianeites were written for Constantinopolitan foundations, while (58) Menoikeion and (61) Eleousa Inv. were written for monasteries located near the Empire's northern Greek frontier. Both (59) Manuel II and (55) Athanasios I are addressed to the monasteries on Mount Athos, though the latter document also has universalist aspirations for its validity throughout the empire. Only (57) Bebaia Elpis was specifically written for a convent.

B. Typology of the Documents

1. Categorization

Five of the documents are self-described as typika or rules.¹ (61) Eleousa Inv. is a free-standing inventory, like its near contemporary, the inventory included in Chapter Eight as an appendix to (54) Neilos Damilas. (60) Charsianeites is formally titled by its author, Patriarch Matthew I, as his testament, though it incorporates the earlier Rule of his predecessors Mark and Neilos [B] as well as what he modestly titles Subsequent Chapters [C], both of which are in the traditional format of founders' typika. (57) Bebaia Elpis includes a supplementary typikon by the author's daughter [146] ff. as well as even later additions providing for commemorative services down to 1402. (56) Kellibara II is a fragmentary document, like the contemporary (47) Philanthropos in Chapter Eight with which it has been preserved in the work of a sixteenth-century excerptor. The text of (58) Menoikeion as we have it is a re-edition of an earlier version, now lost, that has left its traces in a table of contents that no longer coincides with the document's chapters.

2. Normative and Occasional Documents

Four of our documents, (56) Kellibara II, (57) Bebaia Elpis, (58) Menoikeion, and (60) Charsianeites, are normative texts in the fashion typical for founders' typika. The extraordinary (55) Athanasios I, with its bold attempt to supersede existing founders' typika in the monasteries of the empire, must be seen more as an ambitious political program rather than as an exemplar of the more usual type of a prescriptive typikon. (59) Manuel II, like the much earlier imperial documents also issued for Mount Athos, (12) Tzimiskes and (15) Constantine IX, as well as (21) Roidion, belongs in a small group of non-normative documents in our collection. Like its predecessors, it announces a reform program designed to deal with actual conditions of monastic life that were considerably at variance with the ideals so often prescribed in our normative documents.

¹ (55) Athanasios I, (56) Kellibara II, (57) Bebaia Elpis, (58) Menoikeion, and (59) Manuel II.

3. Utilization of Earlier Documents

In an apparent acceptance of the argument for an intergenerational obligation for founders to respect the wishes of their predecessors that had been advanced in (37) Auxentios [15] and (40) Anargyroi [1], most of our authors show their respect for relevant prior legislation by incorporating it in one way or another in their own rules. Thus, (59) Manuel II makes explicit reference to the provisions of a “Rule of Athanasios” that is apparently not our (11) Ath. Rule, though there is unacknowledged use of (12) Tzimiskes. The author of (58) Menoikeion makes extensive use of (32) Mamas or perhaps a subsequent document descended from that twelfth-century typikon, while the author of (57) Bebaia Elpis [85] apparently employed an Evergetian typikon as a model.

As noted above, the author of (60) Charsianeites takes the extraordinary step of simply incorporating the whole of his predecessors’ regulation into the text of his own document. The authors of (56) Kellibara II [1], (57) Bebaia Elpis [79], (58) Menoikeion [16], and likely also (60) Charsianeites [C17] all refer to and endorse as valid for their own foundations the liturgical typikon of St. Sabas. Finally, the authors of (61) Eleousa Inv. cite (incorrectly as it happens) a requirement of (10) Eleousa, their foundation’s eleventh-century typikon, as their authority for drawing up their inventory.

The failure of Andronikos II to mention his father’s (38) Kellibara I in his own (56) Kellibara II may only be apparent, due to the very fragmentary nature of the latter document, or else reflect the opprobrium in which Michael VIII was held for his Unionist policies.² Only the author of (55) Athanasios I, with his own political objective of establishing a measure of universal patriarchal control over all of Byzantium’s monasteries, implicitly rejects any obligation to make his legislation consonant with earlier founders’ typika.

C. Relation of the Documents to the Monastic Reform Movement

This group of documents shows a much stronger connection to the by now rather remote monastic reform movement than those written for the private foundations of Chapter Eight. In addition to the founders’ pietas seen in the unattributed use of documents in the Evergetian tradition by the authors of (57) Bebaia Elpis and (58) Menoikeion, there is the strongly pro-cenobitic stance of these authors and that of (56) Kellibara II, that has its ideological origins in the reform movement. (55) Athanasios I, even though its universalist pretensions are unique, was influenced by earlier cenobitic traditions including that of the monastic reform movement. The “Rule of Athanasios” cited approvingly by the author of (59) Manuel II appears to have been another product of the monastic reform movement rather than a document reflecting pre-reform conditions like the genuine tenth-century (11) Ath. Rule. Likewise, the custom of drawing up an inventory of monastic property was not, as the authors of (61) Eleousa Inv. [8] believed, a requirement imposed by their founder Manuel of Stroumitza, the pre-reform author of (10) Eleousa, but rather became firmly established in Byzantine monasticism thanks to the efforts of various founders of the monastic reform in the early decades of the twelfth century.

² For the posthumous reputation of Michael VIII, see Alice-Mary Talbot, “Empress Theodora Palaiologina, Wife of Michael VIII,” DOP 46 (1992), 295–303, esp. 298.

CHAPTER NINE

To be sure, our founders, along with many of their predecessors, show a curious reluctance—or perhaps a simple inability—to attribute the sources of their ideological and customary inheritance correctly some two to three hundred years after the creative era of the reform movement in the late eleventh and early twelfth centuries. Instead, what we find in Palaiologan times are anachronistic attempts by authors like those who wrote (59) Manuel II and (61) Eleousa Inv. to read institutions that were actually fundamental achievements of the Evergetian reform back to the times of the founders of their own monasteries. In the case of (60) Charsianeites, a more recent foundation of the fourteenth century, this was not necessary, but instead we are presented with a document so militantly pro-cenobitic and imbued with classic reform ideology that it may justly be termed “neo-Evergetian,” along with (to a lesser extent) the extracts of (47) Philanthropos and (56) Kellibara II. Indeed, (60) Charsianeites takes positions on many issues that are more extreme than those found in any of the earlier documents in our collection, even (22) Evergetis and the other reform documents textually linked to it.

D. Other Concerns of the Authors

There is a considerably larger base of common concerns among the authors of the documents in this chapter than among their counterparts who wrote for the geographically scattered group of private foundations discussed above in Chapter Eight.

1. Support for Larger Monasteries

Only (57) Bebaia Elpis [147], sets a limit on the number of ascetics to be supported at the foundation (fifty nuns), but one’s overall impression is that the foundations represented by these documents were generally larger than their contemporary private counterparts.

2. Lack of Interest in Liturgical Regulation

Probably because of the widespread endorsement of the liturgical typikon of St. Sabas, our authors generally show little interest in liturgical matters. (57) Bebaia Elpis, written for a convent whose raison d’être was the performance of commemorations for the souls of the founder and her family, is an exception. (58) Menoikeion [16] provides for the celebration of the liturgy four times a week.

3. Limited Practice of Manual Labor

(57) Bebaia Elpis [95], where there was a traditional division of the community into choir sisters and those dedicated to services, provides an endorsement of manual labor. A similar arrangement is implied in (58) Menoikeion [12]. The Rule of Mark and Neilos, encapsulated in (60) Charsianeites [B20], leaves the regulation of manual labor to the superior.

4. Treatment of the Novitiate and Entrance Gifts

Only (60) Charsianeites [B15], [C1], which sets the term at the usual three years, discusses the novitiate directly. The convent described in (57) Bebaia Elpis [9] may have relied on orphan girls for its staffing. (55) Athanasios I [7] orders that potential entrance gifts not be taken into consideration in admissions, while (60) Charsianeites [B16] condemns the exaction of entrance fees as an act of hypocrisy for a foundation advocating monastic poverty.

5. Strong Cenobitic Bias

As noted above, this group of documents is strongly pro-cenobitic, particularly in the cluster of documents from the early fourteenth century. The outlook of (55) Athanasios I [1] is uncompromisingly cenobitic. The neglect elsewhere of the (Evergetian) notion of equality in food and drink is identified in (56) Kellibara II [3] as one of the precursors of idiorhythmism, which is treated more as a dangerous behavioral disorder than as an alternative form of monasticism. Idiorhythmic monasticism was certainly known to Euphrosyne Palaiologina, daughter of the author of (57) Bebaia Elpis [149], but not endorsed by her either. Joachim of Zichna, author of (58) Menoikeion [11], simply repeats the prohibition against kelliotic monasticism that he found in his late Evergetian model shared with (32) Mamas [26].

6. Acknowledgement of Cenobitic Alternatives

Despite this bias, by the fifteenth century there is evidence of a grudging acceptance of the existence of cenobitic alternatives even by authors who themselves preferred communally-based monasticism. The Rule of Mark and Neilos incorporated in (60) Charsianeites [B2] is unusually open-minded in its discussion of the issue although both the author of the encompassing document and his predecessors agreed on the superiority of cenobiticism. Only in (59) Manuel II is the author, confronted with the reality of many monks on Mount Athos already living idiorhythmically off private incomes, prepared to make concessions intended to effect a gradual restoration of the cenobitic lifestyle.

7. Preference for Independent Constitutions

Four of our documents, (57) Bebaia Elpis [15], cf. [14], (58) Menoikeion [3], (60) Charsianeites [C18], and (61) Eleousa Inv. [4], describe the foundations for which they were written as independent monasteries. The excerpts that have been preserved of (56) Kellibara II do not discuss the foundation's constitutional status. Though this same foundation is described as independent and self-governing in (38) Kellibara I [15], there is external evidence that its status had changed to that of an imperial and patriarchal monastery perhaps even before 1315.³ The remaining documents, (55) Athanasios I and (59) Manuel II, moreover, illustrate the public authorities, the patriarch and the emperor respectively, attempting to extend their authority over the monasteries of Mount Athos, many of which had long been recognized as independent foundations. In the case of (55) Athanasios I, the author appears to have intended to include other private and independent foundations in the scope of his regulation as well.

8. Dilution of the Meaning of Institutional Independence

In Palaiologan times, assertions of institutional independence were both more commonplace and less meaningful than in the era of the monastic reform of the eleventh and twelfth centuries. In (57) Bebaia Elpis, for instance, the author Theodora Synadene, despite her formal claim for the institutional independence of her convent, hails [124] her daughter Euphrosyne as its "mistress and heir," while later Euphrosyne herself would refer [159] to it as her "ancestral convent." Similarly, Joachim of Zichna, author of (58) Menoikeion, asserts [3] that his monastery is both "independent" and "patriarchal," while also conceding [22] certain traditional rights of imperial patronage and allowing [21] a protector the authority of an old-fashioned private founder. In both of these “independent” foundations, especially the latter, the traditional notion of monastic independence seems to have been considerably attenuated. Moreover, the authors of (55) Athanasios I and (59) Manuel II were unwilling to allow the claims of traditionally independent monasteries to obstruct the exercise of patriarchal and imperial rights, respectively. (60) Charsianeites, however, seems to have been an independent monastery on the traditional Evergetian model, thanks to the willingness of its founder to forego his rights to own and manage it.

³ See discussion below in (56) Kellibara II: Analysis.

CHAPTER NINE

9. Endorsement of Collaborative Rule

Though particular prescriptions for self-governance vary, the authors of the documents in this chapter generally oblige the superior to rule collaboratively with the leading monks of his institution. Thus the authoritarian tendencies prominent in many earlier monasteries, both those within the reform tradition and without, seem to have fallen into disfavor. The imperial author of (59) Manuel II [6] even draws on an Aristotelian argument for the supposedly self-evident superiority of aristocratic government over tyranny or democracy to support consultative rule. In (55) Athanasios I [5] the superior is told to consult with three or four of the “more pious monks” for oversight of finances and for making appointments to offices. (57) Bebaia Elpis [73] is unusual in providing for selection of the convent’s officials through a general community-wide election. Here also the convent’s “leading nuns” play [55] a role in financial oversight. (58) Menoikeion [22] obliges the superior to govern in conjunction with “four brothers.” (59) Manuel II [6] formalizes the governing role of the leading monks who were to meet [7] every day or two and be responsible for electing [3] the superior and, along with him, selecting new officials. A comparable institution is lacking in (60) Charsianeites, but Mark and Neilos’ Rule [B9] warns the superior not to govern the monastery arbitrarily as if it were some sort of inherited secular authority.

10. Limitation of Patronal Privileges

As one might expect in an age when the patriarchs of Constantinople were striving to limit patrons’ rights while simultaneously holding them to defined responsibilities, there are few explicit claims to patronal privileges in these documents. The authors of (57) Bebaia Elpis [113] ff. and (58) Menoikeion [16] both claim the right to commemorative services. More tangibly, the founders of the monastery for which (58) Menoikeion was written thought it within their rights to bequeath [1], [21] it as “a kind of inheritance.” In (60) Charsianeites [A7] the original founder is said to have chosen the first superior before resigning any further patronal rights over his foundation. Subsequently, it became the custom for the superior to name [A5], [C18] his own successor.

11. Interest in Matters of Financial Management

Our authors, especially Theodora Synadene in (57) Bebaia Elpis, show a greater interest in financial affairs than their contemporary counterparts in private religious foundations (for which see Chapter Eight). The administration of these matters was one of the responsibilities the superior was to share with his principal advisors in those institutions with collaborative government.

Record-keeping procedures endorsed long ago by the reform monasteries in the Evergetian tradition appear in (57) Bebaia Elpis [55], where the steward is a nun “with great experience in practical affairs,” in (58) Menoikeion [5], and in (59) Manuel II [7]. (61) Eleousa Inv. owes its very existence to one such procedure for safeguarding the monastery’s movable properties.

INDEPENDENT AND SELF-GOVERNING MONASTERIES

Landed properties constituted a major element of financial support for the foundations described in (56) Kellibara II [7], (57) Bebaia Elpis [121] ff., (58) Menoikeion [2], [21], and (60) Charsianeites [A8] ff. Entrance gifts played a role in the endowment of the foundations governed by (57) Bebaia Elpis [159], (58) Menoikeion [11], and (59) Manuel II [12], but both (55) Athanasios I [7] and (60) Charsianeites [B16] are critical, the latter actually banning them. (60) Charsianeites [C8] is unique in cheerfully accepting the obligation of paying state taxes on its landholdings.

12. Acceptance of Aristocratic Privilege

Our authors were generally willing to accord privileges to aristocratic postulants, provided these could be accommodated within the cenobitic system. Several of the foundations governed by the documents in this chapter permitted certain of their monks or nuns to have servants. (57) Bebaia Elpis [94] allows this as a special privilege to nobly born nuns. (58) Menoikeion [11], drawing on a late Evergetian custom represented by (32) Mamas [26], does likewise for monks from “an exalted station in life.” (59) Manuel II [2] permits all monks with the means to pay for them to have servants. Servants are not mentioned, however, in (60) Charsianeites, which is generally hostile to the notion of special privileges for members of the nobility or anyone else, though even there the deposed Emperor John VI Kantakouzenos was given the superior’s cell and permitted to renovate it during his residence at the monastery.

13. Reluctance to Concede Rights to the Ecclesiastical Hierarchy

Interestingly, despite the public authorship of most of these documents, their authors are not significantly more generous in their concessions of rights over their foundations to the local church officials. The exception is the ambitious (55) Athanasios I, whose author, in asserting patriarchal rights of overlordship over the empire’s monasteries, is not acting as a founder conceding these rights to an external authority but rather as a public official eager to establish his entitlement to them. In (57) Bebaia Elpis [26] Theodora Synadene allows the patriarch of Constantinople only the right to bless a newly elected superior and to bestow on her the pastoral staff. Though Joachim, as metropolitan of Zichna, was himself a prelate, in (58) Menoikeion [3] he denies the local metropolitan of Serres any rights of overlordship over the foundation. In (60) Charsianeites [C12] Patriarch Matthew I requires only that the superior of his foundation visit the current patriarch twice a year in order to demonstrate that he (the superior) is in communion with the leader of the church in Constantinople.

14. Neglect of Institutional Philanthropy

As seems to have been the case with most independent foundations in the thirteenth century (for which see Chapter Seven), the foundations described by the documents here in the fourteenth and fifteenth centuries seem to lack the interest in institutional philanthropy shown by their predecessors in the twelfth century. (57) Bebaia Elpis [89] is archetypical, endorsing a perfunctory form of philanthropy, the daily distribution of leftovers to the poor at the gate, justified with a self-centered rationale. The most substantial donations of food mentioned in (60) Charsianeites [C14],

CHAPTER NINE

[C15] were limited to special feast days. Only the monastery represented by (58) Menoikeion, influenced by the late Evergetian tradition seen earlier in (32) Mamas [12], seems to have made a commitment to a substantial charitable distribution of food to all comers at its gate.

E. Historical Context

1. The Reform Program of Patriarch Athanasios I

The first document in this chapter, (55) Athanasios I, was issued during the early years of the second patriarchate of its author (1303–1309). During Athanasios I's first patriarchate (1289–93), he succeeded in alienating the empire's monastic communities by his insistence on strict discipline and his willingness to seize monastic funds.⁴ After his restoration in 1303, he reportedly encouraged Emperor Andronikos II to confiscate monastic property to provide landholdings for the support of soldiers.⁵ Naturally, there was a substantial core of opposition to the patriarch in monastic circles, augmented by die-hard Arsenite supporters of the late Nicaean Patriarch Arsenios Autoreianos (1255–60).⁶ Yet the patriarch had sought to secure a guarantee that the emperor would support him in all his ecclesiastical reforms.⁷ It is against this background that the daring program of (55) Athanasios I, an attempt to enforce a uniform code of monastic usages in monasteries throughout the empire, should be considered.

2. Continued Patriarchal Activism

Although this effort was clearly a failure, Athanasios I ushered in an era of patriarchal activism that would endure through the next hundred years. For instance, in December 1315, the patriarchal synod met under the leadership of Patriarch John XIII Glykys (1315–19) to consider a charge of sacrilege and decided to depose Theodore, superior of the monastery of St. Demetrios “of the Palaiologans,” that is, the independent monastery for which (56) Kellibara II was written.⁸ This latter document, which cannot be precisely dated, may have been issued in connection with a subsequent administrative reorganization of its monastery that sometime before the end of the fourteenth century had become reclassified as an imperial and patriarchal foundation.⁹

3. The Patriarchal Campaign to Curtail Patronal Rights

Beginning with Patriarch Isaias (1323–32), a series of patriarchs began to curtail longstanding ⁴ Pachymeres, De Andronico Palaeologo, ed. I. Bekker, CSHB, vol. 2 (Bonn, 1835), pp. 148–49, with A.-M. Talbot, The Correspondence of Athanasios I, Patriarch of Constantinople (Washington, D.C., 1975), p. xix.

⁵ Pachymeres, De Andronico Palaeologo, ed. Bekker, vol. 2, pp. 388–90, with Talbot, Correspondence, p. xix.

⁶ Pachymeres, De Andronico Palaeologo, ed. Bekker, vol. 2, pp. 519, 618, with Talbot, Correspondence, p. xxiv.

⁷ V. Laurent, “Le serment de l'empereur Andronic II Paléologue au patriarche Athanase I^{er}, lors sa seconde accession au trône oecuménique (Sept. 1303),” REB 23 (1965), 135–38, with Talbot, Correspondence, p. xiii.

⁸ Vitalien Laurent, Les registes des actes du Patriarcat de Constantinople, vol. 1, fasc. 4: Les registes de 1208 à 1309 (Paris, 1971), no. 2053 (December 1315), ed. MM 1.42.

⁹ So MM 2.325–26 (1400).

patronal rights in private religious foundations. A decree of this patriarch dated to 1325 prohibits the sale of ecclesiastical foundations.¹⁰ The typikon of Theodora Synadene, niece of Michael VIII, (57) Bebaia Elpis [7], which probably dates from the patriarchate of Isaias, contains the tart command that the patriarch should be accorded only canonical prerogatives and “keep his hands off the rest,” a timely reminder of the contemporary conflict between patrons and the ecclesiastical hierarchy.

Even the bitter controversy over hesychasm¹¹ did not distract later patriarchs from the continuing effort to curtail the traditional rights of patrons and transform them into a strictly regulated set of duties and (revocable) privileges. Patriarch John XIV Kalekas (1334–47) was an opponent of Gregory Palamas and an anti-hesychast. It was apparently during his patriarchate that a decision was taken to forbid the traditional practice of lay patrons deriving an income from private religious foundations, for in a case brought before his synod in 1334, the patriarch had alluded without adverse comment to a lay woman who received a pension from a church’s income, while some eight years later in 1342, he denied a founder’s right to personal enjoyment of parishioners’ offerings made to a church on Chios.¹²

4. The Civil War between John V Palaiologos and John VI Kantakouzenos

Hesychast partisans found support from the successful usurper John VI Kantakouzenos (1347–54), who in 1332 had served as the protector of the monastery of St. John the Forerunner for which (58) Menoikeion [21] was written. In 1347 he took Constantinople from Empress Anne of Savoy, who had been acting as regent for the legitimate emperor, the young John V (1341–91). A new patriarch, Kallistos I (1350–54), presided over a council in 1351 that recognized the hesychast position as orthodox, endorsed the supportive doctrines of the mystic Nicholas Kabasilas, and excommunicated the principal partisans of the opposing side, the Calabrian monk Barlaam and Gregory Akindynos.¹³

Also in 1351, Patriarch Kallistos I presided over the most important case on private foundations ever to reach the patriarchal synod.¹⁴ This concerned the convent of St. Mary of the Mongols, once an independent monastery, but which had lost its autonomy to a series of protectors related to the imperial family (cf. similar arrangements made in (58) Menoikeion [21]). One of these protectors, Isaac Palaiologos, an uncle of John V, had badly neglected many of the foundation’s properties, sold off others, and burdened the convent with fellowships (adelphata) for lay appointees. The patriarch simply disregarded patronal privileges by abolishing the protectorate and restoring the foundation’s independent status.

John V, with Genoese help, was emboldened to attempt to overthrow John VI Kantakouzenos

¹⁰ Jean Darrouzès, Les registes des actes du Patriarcat de Constantinople, vol. 1, fasc. 5: Les registes de 1310 à 1376 (Paris, 1977); fasc. 6: Les Registres de 1377 à 1410 (Paris, 1979), no. 2126, ed. MM 1.138–39.

¹¹ See John Meyendorff, Byzantine Hesychasm: Historical, Theological, and Social Problems (London, 1974).

¹² Darrouzès, Regestes, no. 2171, ed. MM 1.568–69; no. 2234, ed. MM 1.231–32.

¹³ Darrouzès, Regestes, no. 2324.

¹⁴ Darrouzès, Regestes, no. 2330, ed. MM 1.312–17.

CHAPTER NINE

and to seize Constantinople in 1354. John VI was forced to abdicate and find refuge in the monastery of the Mother of God Nea Peribleptos, whose founder John Charsianeites, a supporter of his, was also disgraced at this time. The former emperor's residence at the monastery as a monk is recalled in (60) Charsianeites [A8]. Philotheos (1354–55), the patriarch Kantakouzenos had chosen to replace Kallistos I earlier during the course of the civil war, was deposed on John V's restoration and Kallistos I (1355–63) was returned to office. Philotheos (1364–76), however, also had a second term as patriarch, being recalled to office after Kallistos' death.

5. The Controversy over John V's Confiscation of Monastic Properties

In 1367, when John V attempted to settle soldiers on lands belonging to the patriarchate along the coast between Constantinople and Selymbria, Philotheos rejected his promise to compensate the church with other lands, and declared that he had no authority to allow even a temporary alienation of church property of which he was only the guardian.¹⁵ After the Turkish victory at Maritza in 1371 over the Serbs, John V decided to disregard Philotheos' objections and took the even more drastic step of confiscating half of the lands of Byzantine monasteries in order to grant them out as pronoiai to soldiers.¹⁶

This action may have stimulated the discourse of the hesychast theologian Nicholas Kabasilas on the illegal exactions of the government and the ecclesiastical hierarchy at the expense of the great monasteries.¹⁷ In it Kabasilas makes use of traditional arguments for the respect of private property rights and the sanctity of a testator's will in order to defend the great independent monasteries against the government's requisitions. He echoes the arguments of lay patrons for whom the cause of private property rights was so dear. Kabasilas' arguments are based on a secular justification of private property rights, not on canon law, as was the case with the advocates of the monastic reform movement in the twelfth century and more recently, with Patriarch Philotheos. Like most private benefactors, he was also hostile to the claims of the ecclesiastical hierarchy to the exercise of rights over Byzantium's monasteries.

6. Impact of the Ottoman Conquest of Byzantium's European Territories

The Ottoman conquests in Europe also seriously affected the monasteries on Mount Athos and elsewhere in Greece.¹⁸ Even before the Ottomans made their first permanent settlements in the Byzantine Empire's former European dominions, Turkish pirates based in coastal emirates in Asia Minor had forced the larger Athonite monasteries to surround themselves with fortifications (for ¹⁵ Darrouzès, Regestes, no. 2534, ed. MM 1.507–8, with Mark Bartusis, The Late Byzantine Army: Arms and Society, 1204–1453 (Philadelphia, 1992), pp. 106, 165, 168–69, on confiscations of monastic property for military purposes.

¹⁶ Recalled by Manuel II, Prostagma (1408), ed. V. Moshin, "Akti iz svetogorskikh archiva," Spomenik 91 (1939), 165 ff., with George Ostrogorsky, "Byzance, état tributaire de l'empire Turc," ZRVI 5 (1958), 49–58, at 51.

¹⁷ For Nicholas Kabasilas, see Ihor Ševčenko, "Nicholas Cabasilas' 'Anti-Zealot' Discourse: A Reinterpretation," DOP 11 (1957), 80–171.

¹⁸ For the consequences, see Nicolas Oikonomides, "Monastères et moines lors de la conquête ottomane," SF 35 (1976), 1–10, with bibliography cited therein, reprinted in Documents et études sur les institutions de Byzance (VII^e–XV^e s.) (London, 1976).

which see (51) Koutloumousi in the 1370s), while kelliotic and solitary monks had to flee to them for safety. A combined Byzantine and Venetian naval force barely saved Mount Athos from conquest in 1372/73, shortly after the disaster at Maritza, but the Ottomans established their control peaceably in 1383. Sensing the inevitable Ottoman victory beforehand, the monks of the monastery of St. John the Forerunner, for which (58) Menoikeion had been written, obtained assurances of its independence and a promise of protection from Sultan Murad I (1362–89) in late 1372 or early 1373, even though the foundation was then in territory that remained under Byzantine control until 1382.¹⁹ It is thought that the monks of Mount Athos may have taken the same precaution.

The Byzantines were unexpectedly able to recover Thessalonike, the Chalkidike, and Mount Athos in 1403 after the crushing defeat of Sultan Beyazid I (1389–1402) by the Mongols under Timur at the battle of Angora (Ankara) in 1402. (59) Manuel II, the last of the imperial typika for Mount Athos, was issued in 1406 and belongs to the interval of restored Byzantine control over the Holy Mountain. The disordered conditions depicted in that document, and the emperor's willingness to tolerate significant divergences from a cenobitic standard dear to him, reflect the economic difficulties the Athonite monasteries were experiencing in these troubled times. Thessalonike, handed over by the Byzantines to the Venetians in 1423, was finally conquered by Sultan Murad II (1421–51) in 1430. Even earlier, the monks of Athos had submitted to the sultan and agreed to pay tribute, in exchange for which they received his promise to let them keep their properties in Macedonia.

7. Final Activities of the Surviving Constantinopolitan Monasteries

Six Constantinopolitan monasteries represented by documents in our collection either certainly or very likely continued in operation down to the fall of the city to the Turks in 1453.²⁰ Another five monasteries in the capital for which our collection supplies documentary evidence may also have lasted down to the end of the empire.²¹ Among these eleven institutions, the relatively recently founded Nea Peribleptos monastery of Charsianeites played an especially important part in the religious life of the empire. Neilos, its second superior, was elevated to the patriarchate of Constantinople (1380–88), a diversion of leadership that (60) Charsianeites [A9] informs us had an ill effect on the economic well-being of that monastery. Its endowment was completely ruined as a result of the long Turkish siege of Constantinople in 1394–1402. In the midst of that siege, Matthew I, another superior of Charsianeites, likewise became patriarch (1397–1410).

8. Matthew I, the Last Reform Patriarch

Matthew I, author of (60) Charsianeites, was the last reformer who served as patriarch of ¹⁹ Elizabeth Zachariadou, "Early Ottoman Documents of the Prodromos Monastery (Serres)," SF 28 (1969), 1–12.

²⁰ The monastery of Stoudios: (3) Theodore Studites and (4) Stoudios; the Pantokrator monastery: (28) Pantokrator; St. Demetrios-Kellibara: (38) Kellibara I and (58) Kellibara II; the convent of Lips: (39) Lips; the Anastasis monastery: (46) Akropolites; and the Nea Peribleptos monastery: (60) Charsianeites.

²¹ The male monasteries for which (22) Evergetis (see discussion below) and (32) Mamas were written, and the convents for which (27) Kecharitomene, (47) Philanthropos, and (57) Bebaia Elpis were written.

CHAPTER NINE

Constantinople in Byzantine times, following in the footsteps of his predecessors Isaias, John XIV Kalekas, Kallistos I, and Philotheos. Matthew I's register for the years 1399 to 1402 serves as an impressive record of his activity presiding over the patriarchal synod.

For our purposes, perhaps the most interesting case heard by the synod during these years was that brought by George Synadenos Astras against Nicholas Makrodoukas.²² At issue was the attempt by the former to oppose the latter in the exercise of his rights of ownership, as ktetor, of a church on the island of Lemnos. Makrodoukas had inherited a half share in this church from its original founder and later bought the other half share (in violation of the patriarchal ban on sales of ecclesiastical foundations, or so Astras claimed) from the monks of a monastery of the Mother of God Evergetis, quite likely (though not certainly) the famous reform monastery of the eleventh century. The monastery had been subordinated to Astras as its ktetor, who sought the patriarchal synod's assistance in reclaiming its rights in the church that Makrodoukas meanwhile had completely rebuilt.

The case was a difficult one, but the patriarch and his synod resolved it with characteristic skill. They rejected Astras' claim on behalf of Evergetis and confirmed Makrodoukas in his founder's rights, but sternly warned the latter to avoid any diversion of consecrated property for his personal use. The ideological justification of this decision can be traced back ultimately to Leo of Chalcedon's declaration of the fundamental inalienability of ecclesiastical property in the late eleventh century. It is a profound irony, however, that it was the Evergetian monastic reform tradition which had succeeded in gaining a general acceptance of this position in the course of the twelfth century and had played an indispensable role in its transmission down to Matthew I's own times at the beginning of the fifteenth century. The neo-Evergetian content of the patriarch's (60) Charsianeites thus is no surprise, given his reformist activities as leader of the Byzantine church.

²² Darrouzès, Regestes, no. 3082, ed. MM 2.322–23.

55. Athanasios I: Rule of Patriarch Athanasios I

Date: 1303–1305¹

Translator: Timothy Miller

Edition employed: Unedited²

Manuscript: Vaticanus graecus 2219, fols. 171r–174r (14th c.)³

Other translations: None, but there is a French summary by Vitalien Laurent, Les registes des actes du Patriarcat de Constantinople, vol. 1, fasc. 4: Les registes de 1208 à 1309 (Paris, 1971), no. 1595.

Analysis

A. Scope and Purpose of the Document

This document represents a bold attempt by Patriarch Athanasios I (1289–93, 1303–1309) to issue general legislation binding on the empire's monasteries that might well have preempted provisions of many existing founders' typika. An individual founder's selective incorporation of an external typikon in his own work or his referring to another document (e.g., the liturgical typikon of St. Sabas) as being authoritative for particular purposes is a regular feature of the majority of the more ambitious documents in our collection, but this forcible imposition of an external typikon is unprecedented. Moreover, while the document under consideration here inevitably shows the influence of earlier cenobitic traditions and usages, particularly those of (22) Evergetis and its family, Athanasios I does not hesitate to employ it to stake out extreme positions on such matters as dietary observances, tenure of office for the superior, and the propriety of accepting entrance gifts. The author's condemnation [4] of the practice of breaking fast days to celebrate (dominical) feasts shows that he did not hesitate to attempt to overturn the long established customs of earlier typika, including those in the Evergetian tradition. Clearly he wished to supersede these earlier documents, if not abolish them.

This attempt would seem less presumptuous if the document's intended audience was limited to the author's personal and patriarchal monasteries (as Laurent, Regestes, p. 378 believed), and it is true that our copy of the document was attached to a dossier intended for the election of a new superior of the Lavra monastery on Mount Athos. In consideration of the apparent universal scope of the document's greeting, which is addressed [1] to "those most beloved sons of the church who live throughout the whole inhabited world," Boojamra (Church Reform, p. 179), probably rightly, asserts otherwise: "Athanasios was innovative and even revolutionary in the extent and vigor of his monastic reforms and his attempts, unique in Byzantine history, to establish these regulations as universally valid and himself as universal ordinary."

This document's aspirations call to mind papal monarchist claims, and it challenges the long-established prerogatives of both traditional private religious foundations and of the newer, privately sponsored self-governing monasteries in Byzantium. It deserves to rank, therefore, as the quintessential public sector challenge to the empire's private benefactors.

B. Lives of the Monks

1. Liturgical Duties

The author briefly notes [4] the obligation of the superior and his monks not to neglect the performance of the liturgy and the canonical hours. His concern for proper deportment at the services—no leaning against the wall, lifting up feet, or talking—recalls the more extreme (36) Blemmydes [13], which forbids even the old and sick to sit down during the performance of chants.

2. Cenobitic Lifestyle

The overview of a monk's responsibilities, including renunciation (apotage) of property, obedience (hypotage) to the superior, no personal possessions, and a severance of family connections, summarizes [1] the author's uncompromisingly cenobitic outlook. The prescription [4] of equal food and drink for all, even officials, recalls the classic formulation in (22) Evergetis [26]. Refectory procedures, including the ban on conversation and the provision for a reading, had been part of the monastic tradition since (22) Evergetis [9] enjoined them in the eleventh century. The warning that neither the superior nor any of the monks were to leave the table except for a "compelling reason" may reflect a reaction to the absence of the superior from meals that is accepted as a matter of course in (32) Mamas [17] and in (58) Menoikeion [8]. The warning to avoid disorderly behavior on the monks' return to the monastery recalls the language of (22) Evergetis [4]. Only illness or "unavoidable necessity" could excuse [3] monks from their communal obligations of abstinence, prayer and fasting. In the interests of stamping out factionalism, the author enjoins [4] the superior to prevent sworn associations, drinking parties, and "special friendships" (cf. (22) Evergetis [42]), though he does not go as far as (60) Charsianeites [B7] which actually forbids personal friendships.

3. No Personal Possessions

Consistent with his support for the strictest form of cenobiticism, the author prohibits [5], cf. [1] the monks from retaining personal property that they might have wished to continue to control after entering their monasteries. Both (59) Manuel II [2] and (60) Charsianeites [B13] show the persistence of this desire even among monks nominally observing a cenobitic lifestyle.

4. Relations with Family

Apparently fearing [5] that otherwise monks would "scatter the things of God to friends or relatives" (cf. (22) Evergetis [18]), the author emphasizes [1] the importance of severing family connections. As part of a general policy intended to support monastic stability and to discourage both the superior and his monks from leaving their monastery, he orders [6] that they should resist the desire to visit their friends and relatives.⁴

5. Diet

Athanasios prescribes the same food and drink for both officials and ordinary monks alike [4]. Like the author of (36) Blemmydes [11] he was unwilling to see the stricter dietary regime for fast days set aside in order to celebrate a movable feast that might chance to occur on those days. Yet our author exceeds even Blemmydes in considering Monday to be a regular fast day like Wednesday and Friday, as (43) Kasoulon [5] also does. From our author's correspondence we learn that he sided with dietary rigorists like the authors of (7) Latros [8], (20) Black Mountain [43], cf. [38], and (43) Kasoulon [3] in prescribing only dry foods for these regular weekly fast days.⁵ Moreover, he endorses not only the traditional fasting periods of Lent, the Holy Apostles, and the Nativity, but also the relatively less-accepted fast of the Dormition of the Mother of God, endorsed elsewhere in our documents only by the authors of (20) Black Mountain [87] and (30) Phoberos [31].⁶ He was particularly horrified to see even the Good Friday fast set aside to celebrate the Feast of the Annunciation, as (22) Evergetis [10] and several twelfth-century typika in the Evergetian tradition provide.⁷ The author's preference for allowing monks to have only one meal a day, which is explicit in his correspondence, is implied here in this document too.⁸

6. Care for Sick Monks

The author instructs [4] that the superior should take care of sick monks, even one "from among those considered the least" (presumably in rank). This suggests, taken in consideration with (32) Mamas [33] and other incidental evidence from these documents, that the maintenance of such monks after they were no longer able to provide services to their monasteries was a matter of some controversy and that the consensus of a mutual obligation of support in time of illness was breaking down.⁹ Later, a fear of not being adequately supported would be one of the reasons why some monks would seek to retain control over part of their personal assets (see (60) Charsianeites [B13]).

7. Disciplinary Regime

An exceptional feature of this Rule is its imposition of an obligation to seek out [7] monks who flee the monastery. Those who repented and promised to return of their own free will were to be welcomed back. (58) Menoikeion [18] contains another unusual provision for readmission of a monk who has been punished with expulsion, and the expulsion of a particular monk is contemplated in (52) Choumnos [A15], but it is necessary to turn to (45) Neophytos [CB1] ff. to find legislation dealing with voluntary departures from the monastery. Ironically, the author of the latter document was himself once apprehended in flight, as is commanded here, from an earlier monastery in which he had served as a young man (see (45) Neophytos [4]). Presumably this legislation is part of our author's campaign for monastic stability, in which he attempts to bring a new enforcement mechanism into play.

C. Constitutional Matters

1. Leadership

The author's discussion of the personal requirements [3] for a superior who would be a "good shepherd" as well as his declaration [2] that "just any person" would not suffice to fill the position proceed from an outlook hostile to both private patronal appointment to the office and the internal selection seen in independent monasteries in that it implies the possibility that the patriarch could remove a superior from office for any number of administrative or personal shortcomings. For our author, as for Michael VIII in (37) Auxentios [3], orthodox belief is an indispensable requirement, as is knowledge of the patristic tradition on continence, fasting and prayer, which in practice meant a rigorist approach to problems of monastic discipline.

FOURTEENTH CENTURY

The superior, moreover, should not rule [5] his monastery autocratically (cf. (60) Charsianeites [B9]: like a “paternal inheritance”), but in conjunction with three or four of the “more pious monks,” with whom he should make the appointments to the monastery’s offices and oversee its finances. Appointments based on personal favoritism or gratuities are indignantly rejected. Of course, collaborative rule had been popular from time to time in Byzantium, particularly since the influential (22) Evergetis [14] gave its endorsement to a governing role for its “preeminent monks,” and the authors of some important contemporary documents, (39) Lips [27] and (58) Menoikeion [22], also institutionalize consultative government.

2. Assertion of Patriarchal Rights of Overlordship

The admonition to obedience to the typikon (as opposed to patronal whim) is a commonplace in our documents since the monastic reform. Lately, as here, salvation itself is said to be dependent on observance of the rule (cf. (57) Bebaia Elpis [125]). What is unique is the open invitation to those in the monasteries who “fear the Lord” and are not “captives to evil” to inform the patriarch himself if his rule is not being observed. One may be sure that this invitation would have been intensely resented by the leaderships of monasteries, both traditional private foundations and the newer independent ones, in which the patriarch himself had no proprietary interest, but our author’s almost papalist view of the authority of his office is well attested in his other writings.¹⁰

3. Reading of the Typikon

The author boldly seeks to assimilate a novelty, his imposition of a universal rule upon the monasteries to which this rule was addressed, to a well-established Evergetian custom, the reading of the founder’s typikon, a commonplace since (22) Evergetis [43]. Here he orders that the superior have the present document read [8] on the fifteenth of each month. There is no indication whether this new usage was intended to supplement or to supplant the reading of the founder’s typikon.

D. Financial Matters

1. Financial Administration

As noted above, the superior was obliged to share [5] the financial administration of the monastery with a small group of “pious monks.” Similar arrangements are to be found in the typika of the author’s near contemporaries Michael VIII in (37) Auxentios [7], Theodora Palaiologina in (39) Lips [26], and (apparently) Joachim of Zichna in (58) Menoikeion [22]. Following the Evergetian tradition but citing “the holy fathers” and Basil of Caesarea, the author declares the theft of monastic property to be sacrilege.

2. Entrance Gifts Restricted

The author’s instruction that postulants should not be admitted [7] for such secular considerations as personal influence, family connections, or proposed entrance gifts may be an illustration of the increasing unease of contemporaries over discriminatory admissions policies, though the latter had been tacitly endorsed even by the reformist (22) Evergetis [37]. The “open admissions” policy espoused later in the fourteenth century in (52) Choumnos [B6] would lead to an outright prohibition on entrance fees in the early fifteenth century in (60) Charsianeites [B16]. While this last document would actually urge a preference for penniless monks, here we find a command that no one (presumably postulants are intended) was to be expelled from the monastery “on account of poverty.” Instead, piety and intensity of vocation were to be the determining factors for judging a candidate’s worthiness for admission.

55. ATHANASIOS I

Notes on the Introduction

1. See Laurent, Regestes, no. 1595, p. 378.
2. A first edition is being prepared separately by Timothy Miller, with commentary by John Thomas and assistance from Angela Hero, and will appear in Orientalia Christiana Periodica.
3. See Talbot, Correspondence, pp. xxxvi–xxxvii.
4. For the author’s view of the importance of monastic stability, see Laurent, Regestes, no. 1723, ed. Talbot, Correspondence, no. 91, with Boojamra, Church Reform, p. 177.
5. Laurent, Regestes, no. 1776, with Boojamra, Church Reform, p. 175.
6. Laurent, Regestes, no. 1651, with Boojamra, Church Reform, p. 175.
7. (22) Evergetis [10], (27) Kecharitomene [47], (32) Mamas [18], and (33) Heliou Bomon [18]; so also (20) Black Mountain [60]. Athanasios follows C. Trull. c. 89 (R&P 2.512), cited specifically by (43) Kasoulon [9], cf. (27) Kecharitomene [47].
8. Laurent, Regestes, no. 1776, prescribes one meal daily except on Saturdays and Sundays, while no. 1736 prescribes one meal daily after the ninth hour for the entire year; Boojamra, Church Reform, p. 175.
9. See also (39) Lips [33]; (56) Kellibara II [5], [6]; and (57) Bebaia Elpis [92].
10. See Boojamra, Church Reform, p. 179, who reports a letter (Laurent, Regestes, no. 1596) addressed to the superior of the Lavra monastery on Athos that asserts that the latter’s chief responsibility is maintaining good order in accordance with the instructions in the patriarch’s rule, and another letter (Laurent, Regestes, no. 1601) warning the same superior that he must resign if he was not strong enough for the job “rather than harm the community.”

Biography of the Author

- Athanasios Pantokratorinos, “Bios kai politeia tou Athanasiou A’,” Thrakika 13 (1940), 56–107.
- Delehaye, H., “La Vie d’ Athanase, Patriarche de Constantinople (1289–1293, 1304–1310),” MAH 17 (1897), 39–75.
- Halkin, François, Bibliotheca hagiographica graeca, 3rd ed. (Brussels, 1957), 194.
- Talbot, Alice-Mary, “Athanasios I,” ODB, pp. 218–19.
- Tsamis, Demetrios G., Ioseph Kalothetou Syngrammata (Thessaloniki, 1980), with edition of the Life at pp. 453–502, which replaces the edition of Athanasios Pantokratorinos cited above.

Bibliography

- Bănescu, Nicolae, “Le patriarche Athanase I^{er} et Andronic II Paléologue: État religieux, politique et social de l’empire,” Académie roumaine. Bulletin de la section historique 23 (1942), 28–56.
- Boojamra, John Lawrence, The Church and Social Reform: The Policies of Patriarch Athanasios of Constantinople (New York, 1993).
- , Church Reform in the Late Byzantine Empire: A Study for the Patriarchate of Athanasios of Constantinople (Thessaloniki, 1982), pp. 173–79.
- , “Social Thought and Reforms of Athanasios of Constantinople (1289–1293; 1303–1309),” Byzantion 55 (1985), 332–82.
- Gill, Joseph, “Emperor Andronicos II and the Patriarch Athanasios I,” Byzantina 2 (1970), 11–19.
- Laiou, Angeliki, “The Provisioning of Constantinople during the Winter of 1306–1307,” Byzantion 37 (1967), 91–113.

FOURTEENTH CENTURY

- Laurent, Vitalien, "La chronologie des patriarches de Constantinople au XIII^e siècle (1208–1309)," REB 27 (1969), 129–49, esp. 147–49.
- Matschke, Klaus-Peter, "Politik und Kirche im spätbyzantinischen Reich. Athanasios I., Patriarch von Konstantinopel 1289–1293; 1303–1309," Wissenschaftliche Zeitschrift der Karl-Marx-Universität Leipzig. Gesellschafts- und Sprachwissenschaftliche Reihe 15 (1966), 479–86.
- Talbot, Alice-Mary, The Correspondence of Athanasios I, Patriarch of Constantinople (Washington, D.C., 1975).
- , Faith Healing in Late Byzantium: The Posthumous Miracles of the Patriarch Athanasios I of Constantinople by Theokistos the Stoudite (Brookline, Mass., 1983).
- , "The Patriarch Athanasios (1289–1293; 1303–1309) and the Church," DOP 27 (1973), 11–28.

Translation

The document of the Rule which is to be read on the fifteenth of the month; while the [profession] and vows [of the rite] of tonsure [must be read] at the beginning of the month.

1. Mercy, grace, peace, and help from God the Father, and from our Lord, Jesus Christ, and from the All-holy Spirit to those most beloved sons of the Church who live throughout the whole inhabited world, who, because of the desire for God, love the monastic habit as the robe of unchanging glory, and who readily place their own necks under the harness of renunciation and of obedience to the yoke of Christ and, according to the divine saying (Matt. 16:24), take up their cross in order to follow along behind Jesus. For these reasons, it is necessary that each of you submit without question and humble yourselves before the superior and all the brotherhood in Christ, eagerly striving for freedom from desires and for mastery over the passions, in total denial of the wishes and desires of the flesh, by observing fasting, abstinence, vigil, brotherly love and prayer. It is necessary that you lead a life with no possessions, that you be rich in patience and in piety, that you "always and everywhere give thanks" (Eph. 5:20), that you preserve obedience to the shepherd unto the shedding of blood in whatever he commands according to God, that you make a most accurate account of the secrets of your heart, and that you shake from your soul every licentiousness of the flesh, luxury, vain honors, family connections, and [personal] friendship. For then will be lodged in you [the apostolic precept] "to be crucified to the world, and the world to you" (Gal. 6:14), something many of those before us strove to accomplish with God's help. For we know that such is the generation of those who seek the Lord; a generation which strives to live beyond the necessities of the body in the hope and desire of the glorious, blessed, and divine reward for those who have lived in this fashion.

2. The good Lord Christ, the Savior and king, has shown such concern that we slaves, though we are useless and under condemnation, before all else, should not have as our shepherd just any person in an offhand manner, but only such a one who has shown firm evidence that he fears the Lord, and loves him and is devoted to him. Therefore, we are indeed blessed, if we are numbered among the sheep or the lambs of any person who wishes [to fulfill this requirement]. But our shepherd also [is blessed], if, like the Great Peter, he gave in advance and received in return.¹ To find such a man it is necessary that we seek him with much research even before entering the monastic arena, unless we walk on all fours and desire to scatter our gaze in the dust, ready to fall.

3. He must be a God-loving man, that is, one who takes care to lead souls to God, because nothing else is more important to God than this. No one ignores that we are taught by the divine fathers, the nurslings of the Church, what [virtues] must he who is called to be a [spiritual] leader possess in great abundance. In a few of these [virtues] we too require that [such a leader] shine forth. First of all, he must believe correctly and without fault in the holy Trinity and have knowledge and an accurate regimen of conduct and understanding; that is, the rule of abstinence, of fasting, of prayer, and of other things which were done and taught by the fathers; as much as [monks] persevere energetically in these things, the one who gives rewards has prepared their reward. But we are not ignorant of how the fathers define a monk. They say that “a monk is the order and rule of the incorporeal carried out in the filthy and material body. A monk is one who is attached only to the things of God every day, everywhere, and in everything. A monk is a continual forcing of nature and a constant guarding of the senses. A monk is a sanctified body, a purified mouth, and an enlightened mind. A monk is a grieving soul, meditating in the continual awareness of death, meditating both while asleep and while awake, and all the rest.”² Conscious of the many other things in which we fall so much short of the monastic life, we will not cease from beseeching God in humility with a contrite heart and with groans that we obtain his mercy, nor from seeking after abstinence, fasting, and prayer to the best of our ability.

4. Except in case of serious illness or unavoidable necessity, the superior and his charges should not be absent from the church. I mean during the midnight office, matins, the hours, the divine liturgy—when there happens to be one—the ninth hour, vespers, and compline. No one should lean against the wall, nor speak to anyone. No one should lift up his feet, but [everyone] should be devoted to God with every sense. Let neither the superior nor any brother leave the table except for a compelling reason. Let both the superior himself and all [others] have the same bread and wine and cooked food. No one should talk at table, but [all] should pay attention to the readings and delight in the enlightenment from this reading. They should also gratefully glorify [God] the provider of the food. Among the monks or lay persons living in the monastery, disorderly voices, shouts, disgraceful or idle words, and laughter should not be heard. It is, of course, unlawful to allow women inside. [In general], let the superior guard himself and the brotherhood from sworn associations and drinking parties during the day or night, also from special friendships with a few or many, either within or without the monastery. Trembling before the penalty in the apostolic canons, [the brotherhood] should not break the fast days as well as Mondays, Wednesdays, and Fridays,³ perhaps because of the excuse of feast days, but in truth because of a compulsion to gluttony. If it should happen at any time that someone from the monastery should fall sick, even from among those considered the least, the superior should consider him worthy of the proper care.

5. Let not the superior alone appoint a brother for a service within or without the monastery because of [personal] attachment or an accursed gift. Let no one dare to steal anything whatsoever from what belongs to the monastery because the holy fathers,⁴ and especially the great father Basil,⁵ have declared that such a person is found with the lot of Judas and Gehazi (4 Kings 5:20–28), whereas [the fathers] also condemn in similar fashion anyone who possesses in the cenobitic community any private property from home, or who sacrilegiously scatters the things of God to friends or relatives. Rather, under God’s supervision, let [the superior] with the other pious monks select without any emotion those who are able to administer all the affairs of the monastery. Let the knowledge of the income and the expenses not rest with the superior alone, but also with three or four of the more pious monks.

FOURTEENTH CENTURY

6. Unless there is a pressing necessity, neither the superior nor those under him should leave the monastery, either because they are shackled by indifference or vain thinking or because they are thinking of visiting friends or relatives—we have joined ourselves to Christ, and there is no family connection on earth for those “who have their citizenship in heaven” (Phil. 3:20). If necessity sends someone out on a required errand, [go] not alone, because woe to the single person, but [go] two by two because the Lord indeed says two are better than one.⁶

7. If you wish to enroll anyone [as a member of the] community, [do not do so] for some human reason of gain and not for reasons of salvation, nor because of a gift or personal influence or family connection, because the condemnation of the canons lies against these motives, but consider [that person] worthy if he passionately desires salvation and [is motivated] by piety. On account of poverty do not expel anyone from the monastery, this saving harbor. Do not tonsure one who refuses to assign to himself remorse and penance in word and deed; the reverence of the habit is destroyed by such things. If you do not seek after a tonsured [brother] who has fled, you are both liable to a fearful condemnation. Even if he has escaped by stealth or has been expelled, if he is not incurably ill, but promises of his own free will to return and to repent, let us receive him and confirm our love.

8. Once at the beginning of the month, if he hopes for judgment and reward, let the superior command to be read what we have vowed in the presence of God and of both angels and men when we had our hair tonsured. Let the superior teach those who do not know their letters the terrifying aspects of these vows, and beforehand [let him teach] himself since we will be held accountable [for these things] without fail at the hour of judgment. [Let the superior also read] the contents of this Rule in the middle of the month. Strive, therefore, to shepherd the flock of God carefully in love and humility, and not be led astray in the ways that the many suffer who connive to hide their own affairs or, in order not to appear oppressive,⁷ do not compel anyone to live according to the law in any way or, what is more unfortunate, [they act] out of malice.

9. Let us not be unaware of our position that we, wretched though we are, have been established as stewards of souls. For it is in our power to be found prudent and faithful. Thus, heeding our teacher and Savior, let us strive to do and teach what we have professed and what we have been ordained to teach. If, then, what has been said regarding salvation is of great concern to both, I mean to the superior and to the flock, salvation will come to both, as well as God’s great mercy and indeed pride in progress for Christ's Church. If, on the other hand, both the superior and the flock, or one of the two, submit to wickedness and to sluggishness—something I pray will not occur—I adjure you for the sake of our common salvation—for not all are captives of evil—that those among you who fear the Lord should not be silent but should reveal to us in the love of truth only how things are. For when men hide what is harmful to men, and especially what is spiritually harmful, this is the cause of an unpardonable condemnation from God, the judgment against a soul which hates its brother, or more truthfully, hates God. But, those who say and do what brings salvation and pleases God according to their ability instructing both themselves and others, will be surrounded by God's great mercy, of which may we be judged worthy through the intercession of the Mother of God.

Notes on the Translation

1. Perhaps an allusion to Matt. 16:15–20.
2. John Klimakos, Scala Paradisi, 1.10, PG 88, col. 633BC.
3. Apostolic canon 69, R&P, vol. 2, p. 88.
4. E.g., the authors of (22) Evergetis [12] and related documents.
5. Cf. Sermo asceticus II, PG 31, col. 881.
6. Cf. Mark 6:7; Luke 10:3; John 8:17.
7. The text has ei me dokei enbareis einai which does not make sense grammatically. The translation is based on the conjectural reading e me dokein embareis einai.

Document Notes

- [1] Overview of a monk's responsibilities. For the ban on personal possessions, see also [5] below, with cross-references. For the injunction to confession, see also (22) Evergetis [7], [15] and related documents. For the ban on family connections, see (3) Theodore Studites [3], [8]; (12) Tzimiskes [14]; (13) Ath. Typikon [30], [32]; (22) Evergetis [18] and related documents; and (59) Manuel II [10].
- [2] Importance of having a good shepherd. For the topos of the search for same, see also (24) Christodoulos [A3]; (34) Machairas [7], [11]; (35) Skoteine [5]; (45) Neophytos [4]; (48) Prodromos [2]; and (60) Charsianeites [A3].
- [3] Qualifications for the superiorship; definition of a monk. For the importance of orthodox belief, see also (37) Auxentios [3], and (49) Geromeri [2]–[11].
- [4] Various disciplinary regulations. For maintenance of the canonical hours, see also (52) Choumnos [A16], [B14]; (53) Meteora [11]; (54) Neilos Damilas [10]; (57) Bebaia Elpis [59]; and (60) Charsianeites [C17]. For proper deportment at services, see also (11) Ath. Rule [20] and (36) Blemmydes [13]. For refectory procedures, see also (22) Evergetis [9] and related documents. For the ban on special friendships, see also (22) Evergetis [42] and related documents, (37) Auxentios [5], (57) Bebaia Elpis [46], and (58) Menoikeion [22]. For the ban on drinking parties, see (22) Evergetis [9] and related documents, (56) Kellibara II [3], and (58) Menoikeion [22]. For the strict observance of fasts in spite of feasts, see also (20) Black Mountain [53], but cf. [48] and (30) Phoberos [17]. For the superior's obligation to care for sick monks, see (22) Evergetis [41] and related documents, (39) Lips [33] ff., (57) Bebaia Elpis [90], and (60) Charsianeites [B4].
- [5] Various administrative regulations. For consultative appointment to offices elsewhere, see also (39) Lips [21], (57) Bebaia Elpis [73], (58) Menoikeion [22], and (59) Manuel II, but cf. (37) Auxentios [7]. For the condemnation of theft of monastic property, see also (22) Evergetis [19], [42] and related documents. For the ban on private property, see also (22) Evergetis [22] and related documents, (37) Auxentios [5], (52) Choumnos [B19], (56) Kellibara II [3], (57) Bebaia Elpis [46], and (60) Charsianeites [B5].

FOURTEENTH CENTURY

- For the recommendation of consultative government, see also (22) Evergetis [14] and related documents; (37) Auxentios [9]; (39) Lips [21], [23], [32], [38], [39]; (58) Menoikeion [22]; and (59) Manuel II [6], cf. (60) Charsianeites [B9].
- [6] Restrictions on absences from the monastery. See also (3) Theodore Studites [10], (13) Ath. Typikon [33], (32) Mamas [24], (33) Heliou Bomon [24], (34) Machairas [123], (45) Neophytos [C5], [CB2], (57) Bebaia Elpis [9], and (59) Manuel II [5].
- [7] No admission of postulants for secular considerations; poor monks not to be expelled; monks who flee to be welcomed back or sought out. For other views on admissions in Palaiologan times, see (52) Choumnos [B6], [B7] and (60) Charsianeites [B16]; cf. the traditional reform position in (22) Evergetis [37] and related documents. For a monk's right of lifetime maintenance elsewhere, see (32) Mamas [33], (33) Heliou Bomon [36], (56) Kellibara II [7], and (57) Bebaia Elpis [91]; cf. (60) Charsianeites [B13]. For the reclamation of renegade monks, see also (45) Neophytos [4], cf. (59) Manuel II [8]. For attempts to prevent flight, see (34) Machairas [122] and (45) Neophytos [CB1], [CB4].
- [8] Superior to read every month the Rule and the vows made at tonsure. See also Subscription above and [9] below. For the reading of the typikon, see (22) Evergetis [43], (34) Machairas [167], (37) Auxentios [13], (39) Lips [8], (45) Neophytos [11], (57) Bebaia Elpis [120], (58) Menoikeion [9], and (60) Charsianeites [C10]. For instruction of novices, see also (24) Christodoulos [A26], (34) Machairas [60], and (45) Neophytos [C17], cf. (57) Bebaia Elpis [129].
- [9] Assertion of patriarchal rights; mandate for reading the Rule. For the acknowledgement of patriarchal rights elsewhere, see (21) Roidion [A1], (28) Pantokrator [25]; (29) Kosmosoteira [4], [111], (30) Phoberos [33], [35], [50]; (32) Mamas [1], [29]; (33) Heliou Bomon [1], [29], [48]; (38) Kellibara I [15]; (39) Lips [1]; (50) Gerasimos [4]; (57) Bebaia Elpis [26]; and (60) Charsianeites [C12].

56. Kellibara II: Typikon of Andronikos II Palaiologos for the Monastery of St. Demetrios-Kellibara in Constantinople

Date: 1315?–28¹

Translator: George Dennis

Edition employed: Ph. Meyer, “Bruchstücke zweier typika ktetorika,” BZ 4 (1895), 45–48, with corrections by G. N. Hatzidakis and Ed. Kurtz, “Zu den Bruchstücken zweier Typika,” BZ 4 (1895), 583–84.

Manuscript: Iveron codex 593 (1540 A.D.)²

Other translations: None

Institutional History

See (38) Kellibara I, Institutional History

Analysis

Like its contemporary (47) Philanthropos, this document is derived from excerpts from the original text compiled by the Athonite monk Pachomios Rhousanos in the middle of the sixteenth century. Like the former document, this one fulfills the excerptor’s evident purpose of illustrating the classic institutions of cenobitic monasticism, including various egalitarian usages on diet, clothing, care of sick monks, and prohibition of private property, that had long been part of the Evergetian monastic reform tradition.

The relationship of these excerpts to the partial text of (38) Kellibara I is problematic. Janin wondered if the attribution of the excerpts to Andronikos II might be incorrect.³ Yet the authorship of a second typikon for the St. Demetrios-Kellibara monastery by Andronikos II is not implausible, particularly since in (38) Kellibara I [16] his father clearly intended that the office of the monastery’s protector (ephoros) should be inherited by his successors. Moreover, external evidence suggests that the monastery, which had been granted “free and self-governing” status in (38) Kellibara I [15], had been taken over by the public authorities by 1315, at which time one of its monks, a certain Theodore, was condemned by the patriarchal synod.⁴ Thereafter, it became known as an “imperial and patriarchal” monastery.⁵ The present document, therefore, may have been drawn up as part of the administrative reorganization of the monastery.

The excerpts that make up this document address themselves exclusively to disciplinary matters from an aggressively pro-cenobitic perspective later adopted in (60) Charsianeites as well. At least in so far as its present state of preservation indicates, (38) Kellibara I was concerned primarily with matters of organization and governance. Perhaps disciplinary matters were not treated fully in that document, which led our author to remedy the deficiency in the present document, or, as in (37) Auxentios [11], there may have been a toleration of non-cenobitic monasticism in his father's typikon that the public authorities were no longer willing to countenance after they assumed control of the foundation.

A. Lives of the Monks

1. Liturgical Duties

As in most contemporary typika, the author endorses [1] the "Rule of Jerusalem," i.e., the liturgical typikon of St. Sabas, for the regulation of liturgical services as well as the monks' diet: "Those who need to find out something should open the book containing that rule and read it, and they will certainly be able to find what they are looking for in it."

2. Manual Labor

There is no specific discussion of manual labor, but the author mentions [2] in passing a shoemaker, a gatekeeper and a baker among the monks in the monastery entitled to an equal share of food and drink.

3. Cenobitic Lifestyle

In an implicit endorsement of (22) Evergetis [26], the author instructs [2] that the same food and drink should be served to all the monks (manual workers not excluded), regardless of rank. There was to be no variation in quantity or quality either. A discussion of the perils of tolerating dietary inequality follows [3]. It is blamed for secret eating, drinking bouts, and even a tendency to idiorhythmism. Evergetian usages also inform [4] the author's regulations for the refectory. The monks were also to share [7] a common supply of clothes; the alternative of providing the monks with an allowance to purchase shoes and clothing (as in (32) Mamas [28]) is explicitly rejected.

4. No Personal Possessions

As his father did with stipends (rogai) in (37) Mount Auxentios [7], the author bans [9] the gratuities which are here called "blessings" (eulogiai). These he asserts to be "in reality just the opposite," and deserving of condemnation "in the strongest terms." The monks are admonished not to "chase after money and be eager to live in a worldly fashion."

5. Diet

As noted above, the liturgical typikon of St. Sabas was to be [1] authoritative for the regulation of the monks' diet. Dietary concessions were to be allowed [5] for the truly infirm, here defined as those confined to bed (suggesting a looser definition elsewhere), in accordance with the recommendations of their doctors (cf. (39) Lips [33]).

6. Clothing

There is a list of articles of clothing to be supplied [8] to the monks, comparable to that found in (37) Auxentios [7].

7. Care of Sick Monks

The monks are instructed [5] to "spare no expense" to help the sick regain their health, including paying for doctors, purchasing medicines, allowing special diets, and conveying the patients frequently to baths as required. In support of this mandate, the author cites [6] scriptural justifications and stresses the reciprocal nature of this responsibility to care for the sick: "The solace you now bring to the one, you yourselves will surely soon be requesting from those in good health as an appropriate sort of reward.” Elsewhere, there is evidence that some monks preferred to retain control over personal assets so that they would not need to rely on their communities in sickness and old age (see (60) Charsianeites [B13]).

B. Constitutional Matters

The preserved excerpts of this document do not include the usual sections of the typikon dealing with constitutional matters. The author does mention [2] in passing the superior, the steward, and the ecclesiarch as well as [7] the treasurer as being among the monastery’s officers.

C. Financial Matters

Similarly, there is no formal discussion of financial matters in the excerpts. In [7] the author alludes to the (landed) properties and incomes he has donated to the monastery so that the monks might live the monastic life “absolutely undistracted,” just as his father had done previously (see (38) Kellibara I [12]). There was also a treasury for cash receipts from which the superior, through the treasurer, made [7] disbursements for needed items like footwear and clothing.

Notes on the Introduction

1. Darrouzès, Regestes, no. 2053 (1315), a record of the trial of Theodore, an ordained monk of this foundation, provides a possible terminus post quem for its reorganization as a public institution; see above, (38) Kellibara I, Institutional History, D.
2. See Meyer, “Bruchstücke,” p. 50.
3. Géographie, vol. 2, p. 231, n. 2; cf. Meyer, “Bruchstücke,” pp. 51–52.
4. Darrouzès, Regestes, no. 2053 (1315), ed. MM 1.42.
5. Darrouzès, Regestes, no. 3091 (1400), ed. MM 2.325–26, with Janin, Géographie, vol. 3, p. 92.

Bibliography

See the bibliography for (38) Kellibara I

Translation

From the Typikon of the most faithful and holy emperor Lord Andronikos [II] Palaiologos, founder of the revered monastery of the holy and great martyr Demetrios [also called] Kellibara.

[1.] The Rule of Jerusalem,¹ which you agreed to observe and my majesty has clearly ordered [that you should observe], not only sets forth the order of service in the church but also lays down regulations concerning meals. Those who need to find out something should open the book containing that Rule and read it, and they will certainly be able to find what they are looking for in it. But if something is not covered in that Rule, then it is appropriate and it is incumbent upon my majesty to call it to your attention. Indeed, that is what we shall do here.

FOURTEENTH CENTURY

[2.] What is this subject? It is that there shall not be any inequality or disparity as far as diet is concerned among you who are brothers in Christ. For those living in community this almost invariably gives rise to scandal. It shall not be permitted that one has some special and richer food while another has poorer or less. Neither shall good wine, full-bodied and with a nice bouquet, be given to this one to drink while that one is given the opposite, like vinegar, foul smelling, and hostile to one's palate and one's stomach. But the same bread should be given to all the brothers to eat, whether you are talking of the superior, the steward, the ecclesiarch, or whether it be the shoemaker, the gatekeeper, the baker, or whoever it may be. Everyone shall drink the same wine and, in addition to their bread, all the provisions and food given them to eat shall be of the same quality and shall be served to each in equal portions.

[3.] All gradation, such as first and second, shall be done away with. In this regard my majesty expressly removes from their meals any idea of greater or less, large amounts or small ones, better or worse. These words denote inequality, which has introduced into the life of the monks everything which is foreign to their vows. The love of material things and indifference have come to triumph over the venerable and angelic way of life. Whence come secret meals for monks, not to mention stealing off for meals and for drinking bouts with friends? Whence come avarice, appropriating things by stealth, and having one's own possessions? So I do not have to list each one, whence come all the rest? Do they not derive from this very inequality? Do they not stem from the fact that this one has something to eat [p. 46] while that one does not? This one has something to drink while that one has nothing at all? This one is stuffed full while that one is dying of starvation? These things have stirred up murmuring, given rise to evil reports, and brought forth envy and hatred. This is why monks become unstable and go wandering about to no purpose. My majesty now puts an end to these things and insists on equality of diet, reminding you of the words of the apostle: "Pursue what makes for peace and for mutual upbuilding" (cf. Rom. 14:19). How do you make peace with one another and build up one another? You do so by observing what he says: Do not eat any one thing that causes someone to stumble or be scandalized (cf. Rom. 14:21). Do not let what you eat bring about the ruin of your brothers (Rom. 14:15).

[4.] For these reasons let there be only one table, one sort of food, one sort of drink. Let there be one time to partake of them, not some at one time, others at another. No one should eat in a special place or be served special fare. This equality brings peace and calm of soul. This is the bond of love and unity in Christ. This is what indicates progress in community life. In addition, while you are eating let there be reading from the sacred books. This provides nourishment for the soul as the food before you does for the body. Let silence be observed so you can listen, and may the words you hear enter into your soul. Let there be no curiosity in how one's neighbor reaches out to the food,² but let all offer thanks for what is placed before them as well as for the other gifts from God which we enjoy.

From the same rule

[5.] In general, then, this is what my majesty has to say about the healthy and able-bodied monks. Blessed is he who has the wisdom to understand these things and who at the same time will observe them (cf. Luke 11:28). But for the infirm, those who are truly infirm and confined to bed, not simply pretending to be ill, for “the law,” they say, “is not laid down for them” (cf. I Tim. 1:8). Indeed, the infirm shall not be subject to the above prescriptions until they shall have recovered from their illness. But they shall be allowed to eat as required by their treatment which shall be administered under the direction of a doctor. For my majesty wishes a doctor to be called and a brother assigned to assist with the needs of the sick among you, indeed several such assistants if several are needed. You should spare no expense in your efforts to have the sick regain their health. You should make payments for them to doctors, purchase medication, see that they get healthy food, convey them to the bath when they need to bathe, and do so frequently if it becomes necessary frequently.

56. KELLIBARA II

[6.] Do all this with mercy and sympathy with the genuine feeling of Job, who said: “I wept over every helpless man; I groaned when I saw a man in distress” (Job 30:25). You should not grumble, murmur, and take it ill, but realize that by performing such service for your brothers you are [p. 47] being kind to your own selves. It is true that you are members of one another, and you are all one in Christ (Rom. 12:5). There is a need, which nature has as it were made into a law, to labor on behalf of one another because of your unity, for a healthy member does not take it amiss to care for another, but is sympathetic and devotes his best efforts to it. More importantly, though, by the special kindness you show to them you are kind to yourselves since you are of the same nature and subject to the same sufferings. The solace you now bring to the other one, you yourselves will surely soon be requesting from those in good health as an appropriate sort of reward. You will ask them to behave in such a way toward you as you did toward them. You must be concerned about the sick, manifesting greater concern in proportion to the gravity of the illness and the intensity of the person’s suffering.

From the same rule

[7.] My majesty knows this and knows it well, that, above all else, it is necessary for those who have promised to lead the monastic life to be absolutely undistracted in the pursuit of the goal proper to them. My majesty, therefore, has arranged that its brothers in Christ residing in the monastery of St. Demetrios-Kellibara should not have to worry about their sustenance and has granted them possessions and incomes. In addition, my majesty has already seen to it that they need not be anxious about clothing and shoes. Consequently the superior shall not give any of them even one coin, no gold or silver, from the common treasury to purchase shoes or clothing, and thus enmesh them again in distractions and cares. My majesty places an immeasurable value on drawing them away from these and leading them to God. The superior, along with the treasurer, should take thought for these things and should provide them with their footwear and clothing. Thus they need have no concern in this regard.

[8.] My majesty does not wish to leave this matter unregulated. Each year, therefore, the superior shall provide each one of the brothers with two white tunics, the kind worn right next to the skin under everything else. At the same time he shall provide each with one black tunic, larger and more ample than the others, and this garment will be worn over all the others. Each year he will also give each one shoes for his feet, a pair for winter and for summer. Every two years as the above items are furnished to each monk from the storeroom he shall in addition receive one black cloak and a vest thick enough to provide protection against the cold. This is how such matters will be arranged, and nobody will have any cause for anxiety.

FOURTEENTH CENTURY

[9.] In your holy community my majesty prohibits in the strongest terms that distribution of money which goes by the name of “blessing,” but is in reality just the opposite. It is our wish that you be content only with what has been set forth, [p. 48] and that you be persuaded by him who said: “If we have food and clothing, with these we shall be content” (I Tim. 6:8). “Do not be conformed to this world” (Rom. 12:2). Do not chase after money and be eager to live in a worldly fashion. Do not try to replace faith with disbelief or firm hope with uncertainty. To what else does gold condemn those who possess it if not dragging the hopes of men from heaven down to earth? My majesty has not brought you together and given you this residence because you are lovers of money. “If wealth should flow in,” says the divine David, “set not your heart upon it.” (Ps. 61 [62]: 11). Be constant in not loving material things, and place your hope solely in the Lord, that you may be an abundant source of blessing and heavenly mercy to yourselves as well as to us who have brought you together for this purpose. “Blessed,” it is said, “is the man that trusts in thee” (Ps. 83 [84]:13), and “Him that trusts in the Lord, mercy shall compass about” (Ps. 31 [32]:10).

Notes on the Translation

1. The liturgical typikon of St. Sabas, ed. Dmitrievsky, Opisanie, vol. 3, pt. 2, pp. 1–508.
2. The meaning is: “look at your own plate and don’t turn around to see how your neighbor eats”; cf. (57) Bebaia Elpis [86].

Document Notes

- [1] “Rule of Jerusalem” to regulate liturgical services and diet. For other endorsements of this document in Palaiologan times, see (37) Auxentios [8], [10]; (39) Lips [29], [30], [31], [32], [33]; (57) Bebaia Elpis [78], [80]; and (58) Menoikeion [4], [16].
- [2] Same food and drink for all. For the principle, see (22) Evergetis [26] and related documents; for endorsements in Palaiologan times, see (37) Auxentios [7], (52) Choumnos [B20], (53) Meteora [3], (55) Athanasios I [4], (57) Bebaia Elpis [83], (58) Menoikeion [106], and (60) Charsianeites [C3].
- [3] Discussion of the perils of tolerating dietary inequality. See also the similar discussion in (57) Bebaia Elpis [83]. For the condemnation of secret eating, see (22) Evergetis [9], [22] and related documents, and, in Palaiologan times, (39) Lips [29], (57) Bebaia Elpis [84], and (60) Charsianeites [C3]. Drinking parties are also condemned in (55) Athanasios I [4] and (58) Menoikeion [22].
- [4] Refectory procedures. See also similar provisions in (22) Evergetis [9] and related documents, as well as the relevant regulations in Palaiologan documents: (39) Lips [29], (52) Choumnos [A16], cf. [B20], (55) Athanasios I [4], (57) Bebaia Elpis [85], (58) Menoikeion [8], and (60) Charsianeites [C3].
- [5] Dietary concessions for and care of the sick. See also similar provisions in (22) Evergetis [10], [26] and related documents, as well as the relevant regulations in Palaiologan documents: (37) Auxentios [7], (39) Lips [29], cf. [33], (52) Choumnos [B20], (53) Meteora [3], (57) Bebaia Elpis [84], and (60) Charsianeites [C3]. For another reservation of concessions to the “truly sick,” see (39) Lips [33].
- [6] Justification of care for the sick. See also the discussions of the obligation to provide lifetime maintenance in (32) Mamas [33], (33) Heliou Bomon [36], (55) Athanasios I [7], (57) Bebaia Elpis [91]; cf. (60) Charsianeites [B13].

56. KELLIBARA II

[7] Communal supply of clothing. For the principle, see (22) Evergetis [25] and related documents; for endorsements in Palaiologan times, see (37) Auxentios [7], (39) Lips [36], (57) Bebaia Elpis [97] ff.; cf. the different approaches taken in (53) Meteora [8], (58) Menoikeion [12], and (60) Charsianeites [B20].

[8] Articles of clothing provided. See also the lists in (37) Auxentios [7], (39) Lips [36], and (57) Bebaia Elpis [98], [99].

[9] Distributions of money to the monks prohibited. See also (37) Auxentios [7]; for similar gifts and allowances elsewhere, often for specific purposes, see (19) Attaleiates [33], [35]; (32) Mamas [28]; (33) Heliou Bomon [28]; and (58) Menoikeion [12].

57. Bebaia Elpis: Typikon of Theodora Synadene for the Convent of the Mother of God Bebaia Elpis in Constantinople¹

Date: 1327–35²

Translator: Alice-Mary Talbot

Editions employed: H. Delehay, Deux typica byzantins de l'époque des Paléologues (Brussels, 1921), pp. 18–105, supplemented by Ch. Baur, “Le Typikon du monastère de Notre-Dame tes bebaias elpidos,” RHE 29 (1933), 635–36.

Manuscripts: Oxford, Lincoln College, Ms. Graecus 35 (14th c.), supplemented by Berlin, State Library, Phillippicus 1489 (1640 A.D.)

Other translations: None

Institutional History

This foundation is known exclusively from the document translated below. The author, Theodora Synadene,³ was a niece of Michael VIII Palaiologos, himself the author of (37) Auxentios and (38) Kellibara I, who served [8] as her guardian after the early deaths of her parents. She married into the Synadenos family,⁴ a prominent Byzantine aristocratic clan, taking the mezas stratopedarches John Angelos Doukas Synadenos as her husband. After a military career of some distinction, he became [116] a monk under the name Joachim, probably shortly before his death. Theodora then decided [8] to embrace the monastic life herself under the name Theodoule (ca. 1295–1300, according to Hutter, “Geschichte”); she was joined [10] by her only daughter Euphrosyne. The convent of the Mother of God Bebaia Elpis (Sure Hope) in Constantinople for which this document was written evidently dates from Theodora’s profession, though her husband John Synadenos is also honored [116] as its founder (ktetor).

Theodora’s original typikon, probably composed circa 1300, is preserved at Lincoln College, Oxford, in an illuminated manuscript, and is frequently referred to as the “Lincoln College Typikon.” A gap in this manuscript at [144] was resolved by Chrysostom Baur by using another manuscript of the typikon now in Berlin. This latter manuscript was a copy of the original made in Constantinople in 1640 at the request of Jacques Sirmond (Baur, “Typikon,” p. 635). The first twelve folios of the Lincoln College manuscript contain miniatures of the founder and her husband, her parents, her three children, and four granddaughters and their husbands.⁵ Subsequently, Theodora’s daughter Euphrosyne drew up a second, supplementary typikon that is attached to the main document and also translated here. In 1392, it was necessary for a later benefactor, Xene Philanthropene, to undertake [158] the restoration of the convent to prevent its collapse. After her death, the convent benefited from the patronage of her daughter Eugenia Kantakouzene Philanthropene in the last years of the fourteenth century. A note of her death in 1402 is the last mention of the convent.

Based on the description [145] of the properties neighboring the convent, it appears that Bebaia Elpis was located in the Heptaskalon quarter of Constantinople, in the south central part of the city.⁶ No remains have been identified.

Analysis

This document reflects the patronage of the foundation for which it was written over the course of three generations. The bulk of the document is the founder's typikon [1] through [145], including an appendix on commemorations for the founder Theodora Synadene's relatives ([134] through [144]) and boundary description [145]. In the next generation her daughter Euphrosyne Palaiologina composed the foundation's second typikon [146] through [154], actually a series of revisions to her mother's earlier typikon rather than a free-standing document in its own right, as (56) Kellibara II is, for instance, with respect to (38) Kellibara I. There follow various later appendices down to the early fifteenth century recording other liturgical commemorations, [155] through [159].

Therefore, we have here our most extensive documentation of continuous family patronage of a religious institution.⁷ In addition, many of the original author's relatives ([135] through [143]) chose to become monks and nuns, the women among them probably here in this foundation, though some of these may have been only deathbed tonsures.

A. Model Typikon

As was the case with the author of (39) Lips, (22) Evergetis or (more likely) some intermediary text in the Evergetian tradition was in the mind of our author here as she composed this document.⁸ While this model text is not specifically identified, the author was aware of her dependence on earlier tradition and the process of its transmission, for she describes [12] the purpose of this document as setting down a rule prescribing "the exact regulations and authorized observance of all behavior and every situation therein, which our teachers received from their elders long ago." The former are said to have "preserved them themselves well" and to have "handed them on in an exact fashion to their successors," a reasonable approximation of what we know actually to have taken place in the transmissory chain from (22) Evergetis in the eleventh century down to Palaiologan times.

B. Lives of the Nuns

1. Number of Nuns

The author originally set [23] the number of nuns in the foundation at thirty; subsequently her daughter Euphrosyne increases [146], cf. [147] this to fifty, professedly following her mother's wishes as she expressed them before her death. As in many other foundations of this era, the community was formally divided into choir sisters [56] and those charged with the various communal offices [58].

2. Liturgical Duties

Under the leadership of the ecclesiarchissa [49], the convent's ranking officer after the superior, the choir sisters were devoted [56] exclusively to the performance of church services. These nuns were to perform [78] services, vigils, fasts, and genuflections in accordance with the prescriptions of the liturgical typikon of St. Sabas of Jerusalem, which the author hails [79] (like the author of (39) Lips [30]) as the “middle path,” avoiding “superfluity and deficiency.”

FOURTEENTH CENTURY

Qualifications set by the author for the ecclesiarchissa required [50] that she be able to sing and chant in tune (the first citation of professional singing ability for this office) and be familiar with the ecclesiastical office and ritual. The author was also concerned with such matters as correct performance [50], appropriate deportment [62], and avoiding carelessness in prayers [58]. Nuns assigned to other duties should nevertheless “season their work” with prayers [60], cf. [96] and attend church services whenever they had free time [61]. Illiterate nuns attending services were to pray [62] with “those short but powerful phrases which are accepted by God in place of any other prayer.” Neither they nor anyone else was to tend [62], [63] to their handiwork during church services. All this suggests an intense concern over the possible inefficacy of endowed prayers.

The raison d'être for this foundation was the performance of commemorations for the souls of the foundress [117], her parents [113], [114], [134], her husband (hailed as the “founder”) [116], their children (also to be considered “founders”) [119], and their descendants [136]. These were to be performed as a matter of patronal rights. Other members of the imperial family endowed their own commemorations, including the author’s brothers [137], [138], her sister [139] and brother-in-law [140], two of her nephews [141], [142], her son’s father-in-law [143], and a daughter-in-law [135]. Both the author [144] and her daughter Euphrosyne [145] admonish the nuns not to neglect funded commemorative services even should the foundation encounter financial difficulties. Should that occur, the nuns were to conduct these services to the extent of their resources and capabilities. The typikon also includes [112] prescriptions for the patronal feast, the Dormition of the Mother of God.

3. Manual Labor

Even though she clearly considered church services to be more important, our author advocates [95] manual labor as a defense against idleness. The nuns were to receive [96] materials for work from the storeroom supervisor and return the finished products (presumably articles of clothing, cf. [97]) to her afterwards; holding anything back is condemned as theft or sacrilege. Private work projects [66] were also not allowed.

4. Novitiate

There is no discussion of a novitiate, though there is a provision [148] by the author’s daughter Euphrosyne for the education of girls who wished to become nuns. [9] implies that the author recruited orphans to staff the convent.

5. Sacramental Life

A priest was to celebrate [79] the eucharist at the foundation’s church four times a week, on Tuesdays, Thursdays, Saturdays and Sundays (i.e., the non-fast days). The celebrant was to be a pious, married man of mature years (but not a eunuch as in (27) Kecharitomene [33]). He was also responsible for conducting both the morning and the evening services of the daily office.

The author also exhorts [111] the community to choose a spiritual father to hear confessions. Several chapters in the typikon [105] through [111] are devoted to a discussion of the indispensability of confession and its benefits. Since the author believed [105] it was only human to sin hourly (cf. (22) Evergetis [15]), she recommends [109] summoning the confessor whenever he was needed; daily confession [105] was advisable.

6. Cenobitic Life

The author strongly endorses the basic components of cenobitic monasticism, as does [154] her daughter, who was certainly aware [149] of the idiorhythmic alternative. In a section that echoes some of the language of (22) Evergetis [42], the author takes [46] a hard line on private property, declaring that “everything private, every personal possession, will cease to exist.” There was also to be a common table, time and place for meals. The author endorses [83] the notion of “equal and fair” portions of food popularized long ago by (22) Evergetis [26], declaring that otherwise such evils as secret eating will result. Even gifts of food from a nun’s family were to be divided [84] up among all the rest of the nuns if possible, or if not, given to sick nuns or served to the designated beneficiary at the common table. Refectory procedures [85], including a dinner-time reading, are similar to those found in (22) Evergetis [9]. The author extends [66] the Evergetian mandate against frivolous talking to something approaching a rule of silence by banning conversations with other nuns without the mother superior’s permission (cf. [65]). The author’s daughter Euphrosyne adds [154] her endorsement of the essentials of the cenobitic life: observance of the church office, good order in the refectory, tranquility and diligence in the cells.

7. Servants Permitted to Members of the Nobility

Despite her allegiance to most cenobitic institutions, our author was willing to allow [94] a noble woman to have a single servant, though she is at pains to make clear that this concession applied “only for those women who come here from a life of privilege.”

8. Relations with Family

Although she asserts [75] the need for her nuns to “have hate without hatred” for their parents and relatives in the world, the author actually permits a fairly lenient visitation regime. Blood relatives could visit [76] a nun occasionally with the permission of the superior. They would meet their relative in the company of an old nun in the area between the foundation’s inner and outer gates. A younger nun, accompanied by two other nuns, could even visit [77] her relatives at home “for the sake of a little relaxation” on rare occasions, but had to return to the convent by evening and be interrogated by the superior afterwards. In general there was a greater access to the convent by visitors of both sexes (see [55], [72]), which shows that this foundation was much less a cloister than the Komnenian convent described in (27) Kecharitomene [17], where nuns were allowed to leave only to visit a dying parent or as in (39) Lips [15] for “dire necessity” only.

9. Importance of Reading

The author pays some attention to reading in regulating the lives of her nuns. Literate nuns are urged [66] to read (as well as to pray and recite the psalter) during their free time in the cells. Twice she endorses [30], [132] hagiography, particularly the lives of female saints, so that “like a skillful artist, you will make your own way of life an accurate model of them.” She preferred [120], however, that the convent’s typikon should be read more than any other book, it being “the finest and most valuable of [her] possessions” offered to her nuns in lieu of “great wealth and any other rich inheritance.”

FOURTEENTH CENTURY

10. Diet

As in most contemporary institutions, the typikon of the St. Sabas Monastery in Jerusalem was to regulate [80], [81] the nuns' diet, both during fasts [82] and on ordinary days. As elsewhere, this decision relieved our author of the necessity to make detailed dietary prescriptions, as many founders chose to do up through the twelfth century. Generally speaking, the nuns were to practice [86] moderation, defined as stopping eating "when one is still a little hungry," and not to make [87] eating "a pleasurable end in itself, but only a means of survival." Food, including fresh fish and other seasonal items, was to be purchased [88] outside the convent three times a week. An allotment of three gold coins is provided [112] for the especially costly and plentiful patronal feast, and of two nomismata for the "elegant and costly meal" associated [114] with the commemorative service for the author's parents. These are among our only indications of the actual expense of feeding a monastic community in these documents.

11. Clothing

The superior and storeroom supervisor were responsible [97], cf. [68] for supplying the nuns with clothes and other essentials. Many items of clothing were distributed [98] to the nuns yearly, while others (principally outer garments) were handed out [99] every three years. Shoes were repaired [98] at a workshop in the convent as they wore out. The nuns also received [100] a monthly allotment of nitre to wash their own clothes. The author professes to take [102] a very utilitarian view of clothing. Nuns were not to seek to imitate [103] worldly women of rank, but should prefer a habit that was [104] inexpensive but dignified and modestly adorned.

12. Bathing

The author permits nuns who choose to do so to bathe [101] four times a year, as in (39) Lips [34], but considerably less frequently than the once-a-month baths allowed in (29) Kecharitomene [58]. The regulation suggests that certain nuns in this foundation were foregoing bathing as a rigorist observance. Sick nuns could bathe [90] more often as their doctor prescribed.

13. Care of Sick Nuns

The author instructs [90] that a "skilled and pious" doctor should be summoned to examine sick nuns. The cost of treatment would be borne [91] by the convent. The doctor's recommendations for food, medicine and bathing should be observed [90], and other nuns should not begrudge [92] this special treatment.

C. Constitutional Matters

1. Independent and Self-Governing Status

The author formally declares [14], [15] the freedom and independence of her convent. To guard against the favorite devices of her contemporaries for seizing control of private religious foundations, she explicitly states [15] that it was not to be added (i.e., through epidosis) or united (through henosis) to any other convent, church, hospice, or old age home. She denounces [14] any violator of the foundation's independence as an enemy and traitor deserving of capital punishment.

Elsewhere, however, there is evidence of more traditional proprietary attitudes towards her foundation, as in [124], where she asserts that her daughter Euphrosyne is "mistress and heir of this convent and all my property,” and in [159] where her daughter refers to it as “her ancestral convent.” Also, although the foundation was clearly the beneficiary of an endowment [121] separate from that the author intended to bequeath [124] directly to her daughter Euphrosyne, the description of the convent’s boundaries shows [145] that the convent was hedged in by adjoining private residences belonging to the author and to her relatives, from the ranks of whom the foundation’s protectors would be chosen (see below).

2. Leadership

The author piously hails the Mother of God herself as the true owner [14], [123] and guardian [13] of the foundation. However, in a passage which indicates that she was aware that it was a controversial institution, our author nevertheless provides [18] for a protectorate over the convent. After asserting that “the frail nature of women” requires male guardianship and protection, she designates [19] her eldest son as the first incumbent of the office, to be followed in turn by her next oldest son and other suitably powerful and pious relatives. Their responsibilities included [20] defending the typikon, providing for the material needs of the nuns, and repelling their enemies.

Like most founders of professedly independent monasteries, our author was hesitant to grant explicit recognition to the superior as the foundation’s effective governor; like many others, she prefers to emphasize [13], cf. [127] ff. the supremacy of the typikon, which is said to be a “reminder of pastoral administration and supervision” for the superior and “a law of genuine submission and a lesson in pure obedience” to the nuns.

In any event, the superior was to be selected [25] internally by the community, a procedure said to be “in accordance with the tradition of the fathers.” The author’s list of qualifications [25] for the office does not restrict the choice to any class of individuals—as (39) Lips [5] does to choir sisters—but her vague prescriptions for the election provide [26] no clear idea of how the new superior was actually to be chosen.

As far as the convent’s other officials are concerned, the ecclesiarchissa outranked [49] the steward, an uncommon order of precedence, professedly because the former official more closely resembled the essentially spiritual character of the superior. There was also to be a disciplinary official [67], a storeroom supervisor [23], [68], a gatekeeper [72], and a cellarer [69]. The last-named official was aided [70] by various assistants, including the cook, the baker, and a food server.

In an unusual democratic provision, the author orders [73] that the monastery’s officials were to be selected for their offices by a general election and voting lest she “appear to do anything improper and contrary to the apostolic tradition.” In actual fact, the author is making an important break with administrative absolutism, e.g., the usual reliance on the superior alone (as in (37) Auxentios [7]), or the superior’s joint responsibility with the spiritual father (as in (39) Lips [21]) for making these appointments. After election, there follows the ceremonial [74] for the installation of officials which resembles that found in (22) Evergetis [13].

The typikon is not entirely consistent, however, on this important matter of the community-wide election of officials. Elsewhere, the superior and the “leading nuns” are said [67] to choose the disciplinary official, and in [23] the superior chooses nuns for certain other (possibly minor and menial) offices, again with the advice of the “preeminent and leading” nuns. These same nuns are said [55] to play a role along with the superior in the financial oversight of the foundation.

3. Style of Rule

The author sketches out an unusually bold and confident role for the superior, exhorting [27] her to “forget feminine weakness” and govern “if not ‘like a man’ (Job 38:3), then at least in manly fashion.” While the author warns [35] the superior not to be arrogant and to consider [34] herself to be in fact “a worthless maidservant,” she also exhorts her to project “an air of solemnity and awe and respect” so that the nuns would not scorn her authority.

Features of authoritarian rule attested elsewhere are combined into a model of absolute obedience to the will of the superior. This has few parallels elsewhere in Byzantine monasticism. Nuns are said [126] to owe obedience to her when she forbids rigorous voluntary fasting (so also (23) Pakourianos [15]). Nuns were forbidden [9] to leave the convent, to receive anything from outside (even a remedy for a disease), or do anything else without the superior’s permission (cf. (22) Evergetis [22], (32) Mamas [24]). She is authorized [32] to correct the nuns’ faults, although not in a “passionate” manner (cf. (32) Mamas [48]: “you must be angry without anger”), and forgive and pardon “whatever is permitted to a male superior who is not a priest,” hinting at a kind of para-sacramental disciplinary authority exercised by non-ordained superiors of both sexes. She is to remedy [33] deficiencies like “a physician, not being angry at those who are afflicted with illness, but combating the illness alone” (again, cf. (32) Mamas [48], [29]). A regime of punishments is set down [65] including genuflections, fasting, a water-only diet, and standing vigils as well as “other remedies” the superior might think “appropriate to the fault” (cf. penal codes found in (34) Machairas [122] ff. and (45) Neophytos [CB1] ff.). In an extreme summation, the author declares [44] “Everything that is ordered by the superior, even if it seems reprehensible, is completely free from condemnation as being irreproachable.” This is quite apart from the mainstream Byzantine tradition since the monastic reform, which assumed that a superior was fallible, and to some extent relied on the community (usually the “preeminent monks”) to check excesses and even instigate his or her removal in extreme cases (cf. recently, (37) Auxentios [5], (39) Lips [10]).

4. Patronal Privileges

As noted above, the performance of memorial services was the central function of this foundation. Those conducted for the foundress [117] herself as well as those for her parents [113], [114], [134], her husband [116], their children [119], and their descendants [136] fall into the category of patronal privileges. Reflecting the contemporary anxiety about entitlement to these privileges in the absence of actual contributions to the foundation in question (for which see (46) Akropolis [6]), the author insists upon an expansive definition of the term “founder” so as to include both her late husband [116] and her children [119]. Interestingly, her daughter Euphrosyne initially refused [118] the honor of commemoration although subsequently she changed [153] her mind.

Various donors from the author’s family received commemorative services too, but in exchange for various donations of icons, lamps, other valuable movable property, vineyards and other immovable properties, and large sums of cash (see [134] through [143]). The author, again reflecting contemporary sensitivity on this subject, orders [136] commemorative services for one of her granddaughters “even though she made no donation to the convent” since her father had made “abundant contributions and will make further donations.” Additionally, at least one family member, one of the author’s nephews, was to be buried [142] in the convent.

Aside from these, there is no discussion of any other patronal rights that the author and her family might have exercised in the foundation. This in itself is a reflection of the substantial curtailment of patronal privileges in Palaiologan times, especially from the beginning of the fourteenth century.⁹ Even as far as the mostly inoffensive surviving rights of liturgical commemoration and burial were concerned, it is evident that contemporary opinion was hardening to a position that no one, regardless of his or her family ties to a founder, was entitled to any patronal right in the absence of a personal donation to the foundation. In this document, the author's daughter Euphrosyne is even self-conscious about her provision [149], cf. [150], [151] of a joint commemoration for the nuns of the foundation itself. It is defended on the grounds that the nuns have no personal assets of their own (and therefore could not be expected to pay for their own commemorations). Aside from special exceptions of this sort, the benefits of patronal rights were becoming increasingly indistinguishable from the rewards traditionally accorded generous external benefactors unrelated to the founding family.

5. Reading of the Typikon

The author implicitly endorses [120] the Evergetian practice of reading the typikon, which was to take place in the refectory at mealtime at the beginning of each month. Also, the superior was to teach and transmit [129] the precepts of the typikon to the nuns through the incorporation of them into her own life.

D. Financial Matters

1. Financial Administration

As elsewhere, the convent's chief financial officer was the steward, here evidently a nun (unlike (27) Kecharitomene [14] or (39) Lips [25], which require or prefer a eunuch), who was required [54] to be past middle age, with "great experience in practical affairs," and able to resist temptation when visiting the convent's estates. There is a detailed list [55] of the steward's responsibilities that shows her involvement in a whole range of administrative activities that would surely have been thought inappropriate for a woman in Komnenian times, if not a few decades earlier when (39) Lips was composed. The steward was obliged to keep careful records, a commonplace of financial administration since the reform monasteries in the Evergetian tradition of the twelfth century, and hand these over to the superior and the "leading nuns." The storeroom supervisor was likewise required [68] to keep "precise accounts" of the articles of clothing, bedding, etc. in her charge.

The author chose to donate [121] half of her ancestral estate to the convent, while retaining the other half for her own "maintenance and modest comfort" and that of her daughter Euphrosyne. She and one of her sons also donated the village of Ainos in which they each owned half shares. Other relatives had entrusted the author with additional properties [122] to be donated for the support of the convent. The author is careful to identify [124] the parts of her estate that she chose not to donate to the convent. Overall, especially compared to the Komnenian convent described in (27) Kecharitomene [Appendix A] or even (39) Lips [44] ff., the patronal endowment of this foundation was based on just a few key properties rather than a long list of scattered holdings. The foundation may also have been more dependent than earlier ones on outside benefactions.

FOURTEENTH CENTURY

2. Inalienability of Property

Like most of her predecessors since the monastic reform, our author was considerably concerned about the wrongful alienation of her foundation's assets. In addition to demanding [14] capital punishment for transgressors, she identifies [72] the prevention of theft of (movable) monastic property as one of the responsibilities of the convent's gatekeeper, which suggests an entirely new angle to the traditional problem of curbing peculation.

3. Entrance Gifts

There is no discussion or regulation of entrance gifts on the traditional Evergetian model or any other, but at the end of the typikon there is a reference [159] to another benefactor, the (new) "foundress" Eugenia Kantakouzene Philanthropene, who is said to have been tonsured in the convent at an early age and to have spent "all her fortune" on it until her death.

4. Other Sources of Income

Evidently the foundation's assets increased over the years to the point where the author's daughter Euphrosyne was able to support [146] an additional twenty nuns, a two-thirds increase in the number of positions since the original endowment (cf. [23]). Some of the increase came to the foundation thanks to outside donations. Two donors unrelated to the author's family were accorded [156] commemorative services in exchange for their substantial gifts to the foundation, the bishop of Ephesos, who was the author's spiritual father, and the bishop of Mytilene, both presumably absentee prelates resident in Constantinople. Later on, Xene Philanthropene and her daughter Eugenia Kantakouzene Philanthropene [158], who were the author's granddaughter and great-granddaughter respectively [159], made donations to the convent after the death of the original founder. Towards the close of the fourteenth century, the nobleman John and his wife Maria Asanina donated [157] a substantial gift of cash for the purchase of property to endow posthumous commemorative services. As the Turkish grip on the city of Constantinople tightened, the nuns evidently lost much of their traditional income and became increasingly dependent on the money accruing to them from these commemorative endowments.

5. Building Maintenance

Thanks to the generosity of benefactors, the foundation was able to arrange for building maintenance. This seems to have been a special responsibility of the founder's hereditary line. The author's daughter-in-law paid [143] for the repair of the convent's cells in exchange for a commemoration of her father, while the author's granddaughter Xene Philanthropene [158] paid for the restoration of the convent itself "which was threatening to collapse in several places," beginning in 1392. In 1400, the author's great-granddaughter paid [158] for the restoration and repair of the church and its bell tower.

E. Overall Philosophy

As we have noted above, there was the special privilege awarded [94] only to nobly born nuns of being accompanied by a personal servant in the convent. This was part of the author's general policy, following the tradition of (32) Mamas [26], to allow [93] the superior to make similar concessions to and treat more sympathetically noble women who were "accustomed to a luxurious life in the world." That our author was somewhat self-conscious about these concessions seems evident in the fact that she has placed them in a chapter dealing with treatment of sick nuns. Her declaration [92] that the rest of the nuns should not be envious of the special treatment of the latter is not repeated, however, in conjunction with the concessions awarded to the nobility.

F. External Relations

1. Relations with the Ecclesiastical Hierarchy

Unlike her counterpart in (39) Lips [7], our author instructs [26] her nuns to take their newly elected superior to the patriarch who will give her “the customary blessing and grace” (i.e., sphragis) and bestow the pastoral staff. Yet as far as other rights were concerned, she makes [16] the bold though—for a private founder—hardly uncharacteristic declaration that the patriarch should take “only what he is commanded to take by the holy canons and keep his hands off the rest,” an injunction that should be considered against the contemporary background of the reassertion of patriarchal rights.

2. Institutional Philanthropy

Like other convents, such as that for which (27) Kecharitomene was written (though not (39) Lips), our author’s nunnery had only a minimal, ritualistic commitment to institutional philanthropy. This was fulfilled principally through distributions of bread and wine at the gate to the poor on such occasions as the commemorative service for the author’s parents [115] and for the convents’ nuns [149], [150]. The commemorative endowments of other family members and external benefactors generally did not include provisions for charitable distributions (but cf. [142]). In a revealing provision the author instructs [89] the nuns to distribute leftovers at the gate on a daily basis, since “with these small surplus morsels of yours, you will alleviate to a degree their great poverty” and be certain of being repaid a hundred-fold in the convent’s storerooms. This suggests an essentially perfunctory form of philanthropy with a self-centered rationale, as does the author’s daughter Euphrosyne’s provision banning [148] the education of lay children except for those girls who might wish to become nuns, who were allowed to “learn lessons which contribute to the monastic rule” (cf. the later (53) Meteora [6]).

Notes on the Introduction

1. With a second typikon by the author’s daughter Euphrosyne Palaiologina beginning at [146].
2. See Hutter, “Geschichte,” forthcoming; cf. Cutler and Magdalino, “Precisions,” p. 198, Postscript, for whom the range of possible dates is 1327–42.
3. She is portrayed three times in miniature illuminations in the manuscript of the typikon, fols. 2r (as Theodora), and 7r, 11r (as the nun Theodoule); see Cutler and Magdalino, “Precisions,” pp. 185, fig. 1 (fol. 2r), 186, fig. 6 (fol. 7r), 187, fig. 7 (fol. 11r), and 193.
4. For the Synadenoï, see Hannick and Schmalzbauer, “Die Synadenoï,” pp. 125–61, and Alexander Kazhdan, “Synadenoï,” ODB, p. 1990.
5. See Cutler and Magdalino, “Precisions,” pp. 192–94, with illustrations, pp. 185–87, and Spatharakis, Portrait, pp. 190–206.
6. See Laurent, “Kyra Martha,” pp. 306–11, with Janin, Géographie, vol. 3, p. 160.
7. See Paul Magdalino, “The Byzantine Aristocratic Oikos,” in The Byzantine Aristocracy, IX to XIII Centuries, ed. Michael Angold (Oxford, 1984), pp. 92–11, esp. 103, reprinted in Tradition and Transformation in Medieval Byzantium (London, 1992).

FOURTEENTH CENTURY

8. Echoes of (22) Evergetis and related documents: [9] restrictions on outside contacts, cf. (22) Evergetis [22] and (32) Mamas [24]; [32] correction of nuns without anger, cf. (32) Mamas [48]; [33] appropriate remedies for faults, cf. (32) Mamas [29], [48]; [46] ban on personal possessions, cf. (22) Evergetis [42]; [74] elections without rivalry and contention, cf. (22) Evergetis [14], and investiture of officials, cf. (22) Evergetis [13]; [85] refectory procedures, cf. (22) Evergetis [9]; [105] human nature to sin hourly, cf. (22) Evergetis [15].
9. For this development, see Chapter Eight, Historical Context, 4.

Bibliography

- Beck, Hans-Georg, Kirche und theologische Literatur im byzantinischen Reich (Munich, 1959), p. 696.
- Cutler, Anthony, and Magdalino, Paul, "Some Precisions on the Lincoln College Typikon," CA 27 (1978), 179–98.
- Delehaye, Hippolyte, Deux typica byzantins de l'époque des Paléologues (Brussels, 1921), pp. 141–72.
- Gennadios of Heliopolis, "He en te polei gynaikeia mone tes Theotokou tes Bebaias Elpidos kai ho naos tes Panagias Elpidos Kontoskaliou," Orthodoxia 27 (1952), 7–11.
- Hannick, Chr., and Schmalzbauer, G., "Die Synadenoi," JÖB 25 (1976), 125–61.
- Hutter, Irmgard, "Die Geschichte des Lincoln College Typikons," JÖB 45 (1995), 79–114.
- Janin, Raymond, La géographie ecclésiastique de l'empire byzantin, vol. 3: Les églises et les monastères [de Constantinople], 2nd ed. (Paris, 1969), 158–60.
- Laurent, Vitalien, "Kyra Martha. Essai de topographie et de prosopographie byzantine," EO 38 (1939), 296–320.
- Omont, H., "Portraits de différents membres de la famille des Comnènes peints dans le typikon du monastère de Notre-Dame-de-bonne-espérance à Constantinople," REG 17 (1904), 361–73.
- Spatharakis, I., The Portrait in Byzantine Illuminated Manuscripts (Leiden, 1976), pp. 190–206.
- Talbot, Alice-Mary, and Cutler, Anthony, "Bebaias Elpidos Nunnery," ODB, p. 275.
- Volk, Robert, Gesundheitswesen und Wohltätigkeit im Spiegel der byzantinischen Klostertypika (Munich, 1983), 255–65.

Translation

[First Typikon of Theodora Synadene]

With God's help, an index of the typikon divided into 24 chapters.

[I.] Concerning the freedom and independence of this convent of mine.

[II.] Concerning the ephoreia and guardianship of the convent and who should be its ephoros and guardian.

[III.] Concerning the number of nuns, and what sort of person the superior should be, and how she is to be elected to the office of superior.

[IV.] An admonitory and advisory discourse to the superior.

[V.] A hortatory address to all the nuns, inspiring them to obedience.

[VI.] Concerning the ecclesiarchissa and her duties.

[VII.] Concerning the steward and her duties. [p. 19]

[VIII.] How the choir sisters should perform the church services when they assemble in church, and what their duties are.

- [IX.] Concerning the attitude towards the daily church offices of the nuns assigned to other duties outside the church, and how they should attend [the offices].
- [X.] How the superior should punish negligent nuns, and through which nun she will strive to eliminate apathy.
- [XI.] Concerning the keeper and supervisor of the communal storeroom and her duties.
- [XII.] Concerning the cellarer and her duties.
- [XIII.] Concerning the guard and gatekeeper of the convent and her duties.
- [XIV.] How the election of these officials should take place.
- [XV.] How the imperfect and weak nuns are to see their relatives in time of need.
- [XVI.] That all the doxologies to God and vigils and fasts and genuflections should be performed in accordance with the typikon of Jerusalem.
- [XVII.] That all the nuns should have the same daily diet.
- [XVIII.] How the superior should treat nuns who are ill, and what care she should provide for them.
- [XIX.] That all the nuns should do their work in common and not privately, and how they should be clothed.
- [XX.] That daily confession is obligatory.
- [XXI.] How the feast day of the Mother of God should be celebrated annually.
- [XXII.] How to celebrate the commemorations of the parents of eternal memory of the foundress, as well as the commemorations of the blessed founder of this holy convent, and of its foundress [and their children].
- [XXIII.] [Enumeration of] property dedicated to the Mother of God for the support and maintenance of her handmaidens. [p. 20]
- [XXIV.] A hortatory epilogue to all the nuns and the superior to abide by the typikon and not to transgress [it] in any way.

1. It seems to me that there are many fine and great ways to show our pure love for the Creator and our ardent passion for him; but nothing, I think, is better than to construct for him from the foundations divine sanctuaries and holy dwellings, sparing no [expense], and to demonstrate attentive eagerness and generosity “with all one’s soul” (Matt. 22:37) and hands. If in addition one should build holy monasteries and workshops of virtue for the salvation of souls who choose to live in accordance with God, this would be to an even greater extent the clearest manifestation of that [love]; [but to engage] in both these undertakings is the greatest achievement, surpassing all other virtues.

2. For in that manner the first and greatest of the commandments is realized; and moreover “the second” in order and “like” the first in its power, which clearly bids its true disciples “to love one’s neighbor as oneself” (Matt. 22:39). For they are always linked together by the Lawgiver, as the sum of “the law and the prophets” (Matt. 22:40), and they cling to each other, and each supports the other, and each introduces the other. For the first is the beginning and root of the second, and the second naturally depends on the first as being its very cause. Again the second clearly completes the first; and the second, through some divine reason, makes the first complete; and through the first zealous people totally accomplish the second, and through the second return again to the first in a most marvelous fashion, since he who truly loves God also really loves his neighbor as a consequence. For [p. 21] Christ said, “He who loves me will keep my commandments” (cf. John 14:15). Also “This is my commandment, that you love one another as I have loved you” (John 15:12). However, he who genuinely loves his neighbor can without any doubt fulfill his love for the divine, because God transfers this act of grace to himself, and accepts it and considers it [as his own]. For “as you did it to one of these my brethren, and if he was hungry and thirsty, naked and a stranger, sick or in prison, you fed him, gave him drink, clothed him, welcomed him, visited him and ministered to him, you did it to me” (cf. Matt. 25:35–40).

FOURTEENTH CENTURY

3. So that he who carries out the first and greatest of the commandments together with the second is shown to be not only a lover of God, but a lover of his brother and of his fellow man. Rather in accordance with correct and accurate reasoning, when the second returns to the first, of necessity, as has been said, he who loves his brother and God is inferred to be totally a lover of God, by certain physical attractions and ineffable bonds. For he depends upon the Creator as his creation, and always instinctively stretches out to him, and clings to him with passion, and is able to sing with the Holy Scriptures, “I am wounded with love, and my soul has kept very close behind thee” (Cant. 2:5; Ps. 62 [63]:8–9); and “my soul thirsts and longs for thee, the living God, as the harts,” inflamed with extreme burning thirst, “long for fountains of water” (Ps. 41 [42]:2–3). Thus the lover of God clings ardently to the divine, not only because he was brought by God in the beginning “from non-being into existence,”¹ but because having his origins from God he is maintained and supported by him. Therefore the eminent theologians and explicators of the Holy Scriptures do not celebrate divinity only as the creative and essential cause of everything, as we have been taught, but also as [p. 22] the ultimate desirable object, and as “the peak of everything desirable,” for which “every rational nature yearns, and towards which only the mind of the perfect [person] looks and ascends,” and for whose lovers, according to the theologian Gregory [Nazianzen], “there is repose from every other sort of spiritual contemplation.”²

4. Since in some obscure fashion I conceived in the womb of my heart and gave birth to this truly good and holy and divine love and desire, I decided to construct a holy dwelling for my all-pure Lady the Mother of God, and in addition to build from the foundations a convent. It was to be a secure refuge for women who have chosen the ascetic way of life, and it was also for me and my dearly beloved and most true daughter, whom I consecrated not only from infancy, but almost from the moment of her very birth to the all-holy Virgin and Mother of God, and through her to the God of all, just as Anna of old [dedicated] Samuel (1 Kings 1: 10–28) before his birth. Like a welcoming harbor [this convent] was to receive her some time later, as she fled the storms and waves of this world. I have now accomplished this task, and brought to light and realization that deep-felt and old desire of mine. I have repaired and restored this divine church for my great hope and protection, our common and sole Mistress of us all, and I have constructed this holy convent from its foundations as best I could in this place, to her greater glory and in accordance with my primary purpose.

5. I have done this as a small repayment of my great debt, in thanks for the protection and great blessings, beyond all reckoning and number, which I have received from her all my life. For example, leaving aside the rest of her blessings which are more numerous than the sand of the sea and drops of rain, straightaway from the beginning, as a result of her favor, I had admirable parents distinguished for their noble lineage, [p. 23] fine reputation, lofty honors, extreme wealth, physical courage and incomparable beauty, spiritual virtue, genuine piety towards God, and every other blessing with which man is endowed, possessing every [attribute] in themselves and taking pride of place in all respects, just like the sun which is brightest of all the stars.

6. My father³ belonged to the most noble family of the Palaiologoi, and was honored and glorified with the great honor and rank of sebastokrator by his brother the emperor.⁴ As for his distinguished campaigns and deeds of valor, and the victories which he won in east and west, with the help of the mighty and invincible strength of God, when he led the Roman armies against the foe, defeating every enemy and opponent throughout the empire and slaughtering them from the youth upwards, let others speak of them who have the leisure and freedom to speak of such matters. For my ties of kinship and natural great affection for this father of mine and piety encourage me to keep silence in the end and not say anything further. But such a man was my father and of such lineage.

7. My mother⁵ was also most noble and distinguished among all women, tracing her golden lineage to that extremely famous and celebrated Branas family. She was endowed with all blessings analogous and equivalent to the magnificence of her husband's family. She surpassed the distinguished and great women of that time in all respects, as much as my father took precedence completely over the superior and distinguished men of his time.

8. Alas, both my parents died when I was very young; but straightaway, through the providence of the Mother of God, I was deemed worthy [p. 24] of the concerned guardianship of my uncle the emperor. Shortly thereafter I was married to a man who was distinguished in all external and physical aspects, and could not endure to be second to anyone in authority, but was even more distinguished for the internal characteristics which adorn and beautify his very soul. He traced his lineage clearly to the families of the Komnenoi and Synadenoi, and before his marriage was splendidly exalted by the emperor with the rank of stratopedarches.⁶ Why do I need to tell how this man, just like my father,⁷ was treated compassionately and supported and honored by my all-merciful and all-powerful uncle, the emperor, and what an alliance he achieved thereby, and how much time he spent waging war against every enemy and fighting nobly on behalf of his kindred people, the Romans, both before and after his promotion? For I am restrained on all sides and forced to keep silence even now by the same factors as before, when I was narrating a few facts about my parents. But everyone who knows him and his deeds in great detail⁸ is aware [of his character], and surely does not require any further description.

But when my husband died (such are the inscrutable judgments of God!), I was left alone in life, anchoring my hopes on one daughter,⁹ who is exceptionally dear to me above all others, and on my two young sons.¹⁰ I then decided not to remain any longer in the world, nor to live in a worldly fashion, nor attach myself to its dreams, nor struggle in vain with its shadows and fantasies, but with the help of God rather to break loose from the world and be mortified to all life, and to adopt this monastic yoke, and to live here on earth “the life hidden in Christ” (cf. Col. 3:3) through the great guidance and assistance of the [Holy] Spirit.

FOURTEENTH CENTURY

9. Therefore, disregarding all delights and abandoning from my heart all the beguiling pleasures of this enjoyable and delightful life, I brought myself [to this convent], and I also brought [p. 25] my only daughter who is good and fine in all respects, the pleasant and charming light of my eyes, my sweetest love, the flame of my heart, my breath and life, the hope of my old age, my refreshment, my comfort, my consolation. With joyful and leaping soul I dedicated her to the Mother of God and through her to Christ, her only-begotten Son and the God and King of all. As I said, of old I had promised with all my heart to give and dedicate to him this sacrifice of mine, to him I had vowed of old with all my soul to marry this dearly beloved daughter of mine, the adornment of all her family, and to betroth her to the purest and true and only Bridegroom who is “more beautiful than sons of men” (Ps. 44 [45]:2), and who loves and feels affection for the souls who genuinely love and are beloved of him because of his great compassion and incomparable goodness. If she who is mystically wed to him should prove fit to please and satisfy and refresh the Bridegroom, this will be a great mercy for me in accordance with my hopes and prayers to the Mother of God, this will be the chief of her blessings on me, this will be the height of her many great instances of succor.

10. Not only did I thus bring and dedicate myself to God, and also brought my cherished daughter, but I also enclosed in this convent a few virgins who have the same purpose as I do in all things and whose souls are afflicted with the same desire and love, and who agreed, with God and the angels and the Church as witnesses, to live with me always. I have cast all my thoughts, all my hopes, all my anxiety, all my concern for myself and my orphaned children upon the Lord, the Father of orphans, the protector of the defenseless, the great hope and succor of those in despair, from whom every blessing and gift and favor comes to [p. 26] mankind, and who opens his hand most generously and fills everything with contentment and goodness (cf. Ps. 144 [145]:16).

11. But in this way and for these reasons the entire convent together with this divine church was constructed from the foundations and established in honor of the Mother of God. Through her powerful intercessions and protection may it be fruitful as a vineyard, having virgins and nuns within like flourishing and beautiful vine branches, teeming with numerous large and excellent bunches of grapes, to the glory of Christ, and to the glory of his wholly undefiled Mother, and for the eradication of my unspeakable sins, which I have committed inasmuch as I am human and of changeable and fallible nature, and therefore I incited and provoked my Creator to anger (would that I had not!). I think I have said enough about how and why the convent was originally established.

12. It is time then for me to turn to my purpose towards which I was eagerly hastening. This is for me to set down a sort of rule for this convent, prescribing the exact regulations and authorized observance of all behavior and every situation therein, which our teachers received from their elders long ago. They preserved [these regulations by observing] them themselves well and in a manner pleasing to God, and handed them on in exact fashion to their successors as was fitting in word and deed, and they transmitted them just as the inhabitants of famous cities [transmit] the local, original and indigenous laws, or, if you prefer, as the leaders of great peoples [transmit] their native and ancestral [customs]. My dear women, if you follow these rules and regulations in the conduct of your lives and in your behavior, I know well that first of all you will act in accordance with the approval and good will of my Lady who is praised by all, and you will then act in accordance with my wishes, and in accordance with what I do and strive for most eagerly and desire. Thereby you will receive [p. 27] a great reward from God above, and you will also receive from men ineffable blessings and public praise. For you have chosen to live according to God, and you strive always to set yourselves forth as a good example of virtue for your successors, not undermining your angelic way of life by apathy and daily deficiencies in good behavior, but rather reinvigorating it with good words and deeds, and through your disciplined behavior preparing its most pure light to shine forth abundantly.

13. This set of rules and regulations is to be a kind of reminder of pastoral administration and supervision for your superior and common teacher, and for her disciples a law of genuine submission and a lesson in pure obedience. The Mother of God herself is to be the guardian of her rules, and, as she knows best, is to wisely inspire spiritual perfection, and whatever guides and leads to the promised blessedness.

I. Concerning the freedom and independence of this convent of mine.

14. Above all else it is my wish that this convent built by me for the Mother of God be autonomous, and be and remain for all time completely free and unenslaved of any power and authority here on earth. For it is neither just nor pious nor holy for [a convent] which has become once and for all a holy dedication to and possession of the Lady of all, and through her of the eternal and incorruptible King and God, ever to come under another human rule and corruptible authority and power, and for [a convent] which was entirely dedicated to one lord and master, [p. 28] the true Lord and Master, to have human masters. For this is a cause of great damage and unspeakable danger, not to say spiritual death, for those who would dare to do this against the holy and sacred [institutions]. If a man with bold spirit and daring hand should attack this ephemeral government and empire here below, and wickedly attempt to appropriate as his own that which has been dedicated to this [empire] alone and wickedly to use it as his own property, in the judgment of the laws and truth itself he is considered a man deserving capital punishment, and is condemned to execution as an enemy¹¹ and disaffected traitor. How then will he not rightly pay the penalty and be condemned to even worse than death, if he raises up impious hands and not only seeks to rebel against God himself, but impiously takes for himself that which has been consecrated and dedicated to God alone, and is really anxious to enslave that which is truly free.

15. As I have said, the convent is to be independent and autonomous, completely rejecting human enslavement, and in no way recognizing earthly masters. For thus will be maintained inviolate

FOURTEENTH CENTURY

[the commandment], “Render to Caesar the things that are Caesar’s, and to God the things that are God’s” (Matt. 22:21). Wherefore no one at all who truly fears and is in awe of God will be able with impunity to lay tyrannical hands on it, nor to oppress it in any way, nor will he ever try to subordinate and subject [the convent] or any of its property to himself or anyone else, nor will he add or unite it, to any person either lay or ecclesiastical,¹² to any other convent, or church, or hospice, or old age home, to nothing else at all. Rather [the convent] is to preserve its independence, and control, manage and administer itself and all its property; and it is to manage and administer just as I have set forth now in this document. [The convent] is to love, honor and abide by [these rules] unceasingly, and preserve them all its life, and subject itself to them in its heart, and obey them unquestioningly, striving to serve God alone and ardently to worship him alone, which [conduct] alone is able truly to liberate the man who is truly noble and free by nature. [p. 29]

16. Even he who is most holy patriarch at the time should take only that which he is commanded to take by the holy canons, should be content with these things alone and perforce keep his hands off the rest, that is whatever does not lead to the edification and support [of the convent], but to its ruin and destruction. The word of truth knows that this is not the work of pastors who herd voluntarily the flocks of Christ, the Chief Shepherd, but rather [of those who herd] tyrannically and by force and for base gain. But it is my wish that this holy convent of mine be thus independent and adhering to its original form, and I ordain this above all else. May it thus be preserved in perpetuity and may no one ever be found who would take away its freedom with tyrannical and violent force.

17. But if any truly malicious and greedy and unjust person should dare to take this step, and should wish to nullify and transgress these regulations, let him know for sure that, whoever he may be, he will be guilty of a most serious and unforgivable sin, and will be subject to the worst curses, and will greatly provoke divine hostility, and will find the Mother of God herself opposing him, as an avenger of such injustice and boldness. And because he obviously did not fear to commit sacrilege and thus dared shamelessly to appropriate the property of God, for endless ages he will suffer that revenge which is the special punishment of those who attack Christ, and who impiously crucified the Lord of glory, and who bear the guilt for his blood and the frightful sufferings of [his body].

II. Concerning the ephoreia and guardianship of the convent and who should be its ephoros and guardian.

18. On occasion the frail nature of women requires the ephoreia and guardianship of men, to drive away to the best of their ability the insolent and [p. 30] greedy people who are likely to attack them from time to time, through the envy and rage and cooperation of the devil who is always indignant at and envious of the good, so that [the nuns] may be completely liberated from troublesome and bothersome people. Therefore I do not prohibit this [ephoreia] in my convent, rather I approve and encourage it, to preserve for the convent its status as untroubled and unharmed and completely liberated.

19. But who should be the ephoros for the convent, who would be a guardian most nobly disposed toward it, who else than someone who is always very close and dear to me, and labors on behalf of my affairs and strives on their behalf with all his heart? Who else is dearer and closer and, as I have said, is better disposed to me than my dearly beloved sons, who, just as they are the heirs and successors of the family and of [my] other possessions, are also the heirs of the things which I have strived to accomplish to the glory of God and the salvation of souls? Therefore let the eldest of my sons be the first ephoros and first guardian; and after him, my second son. Then whoever of their descendants is abundantly endowed by heaven above with grace and foresight and succor, and thus by far surpasses his other relatives in power and titles, and in all other ways of prosperity appears much more distinguished and notable than the others.

20. Therefore the ephoros of the convent will be this man whom I have appointed to its ephoreia and guardianship. But he is to do only those things for the convent which I [do]. Thus this ephoros will be nobly disposed toward the convent, just as I am, or rather as this book of regulations explains and sets forth in accordance with [the teachings of] the Fathers and the Church. Above all else he should treat [the typikon] reverently and [p. 31] strive first of all to carry out its instructions. Sometimes he should deem worthy of mercy and compassion the nuns who strive to live in accordance with God, giving to them freely of his stores, to the extent of his means, and thus buying that which is stable and incorruptible through the transitory and corruptible. At other times he should serve as their guardian in another way, on the one hand repelling once and for all those who wish to wrong the [nuns], on the other eagerly driving away those, who as the result of satanic influence and attack, rise up against them. His most important concern should be to have the Mother of God as a guardian and intercessor, who rewards and recompenses greatly, and perfectly fulfills his other petitions, and above all else provides the salvation of the soul which is the greatest [blessing] of all, and whose attainment is the worthy task of the highest and first prayer.

III. Concerning the number of nuns, and what sort of person their superior should be, and how she is to be elected to the office of superior.

21. After I discuss the number of nuns and to what number they should be limited, I should then speak of the sort of woman to be their superior, and how she is to be chosen, and how she is to be elevated to her lofty position of authority and leadership by patriarchal blessing and installation.

22. The number of nuns who are going to live in the convent should not be limitless, nor should their number be imprecise. For their [affairs] will not prosper if they are thus disorganized [p. 32] and disorderly, since this will be the usual result of imprecision, and they will go far astray from the proper and obligatory [course of conduct], sometimes uselessly increasing to an unprofitable and excessive number, sometimes being reduced to lesser numbers and falling far short of the required [size]. Therefore the entire group of nuns should be limited to a definite and fixed number, so that as an excellent and beneficial result there is good behavior and order, and, thirdly, neither wrongful excess nor deficiencies in the necessary and appropriate affairs.

FOURTEENTH CENTURY

23. Therefore the whole group of nuns should number three times ten, and they should be thirty in all. This number should never be exceeded nor diminished and reduced. For this number is sufficient for the demands of a cenobitic community, and does not require any increase which would be superfluous and useless. Some of the nuns are to perform their pious duties at church offices and services, each in accordance with her knowledge and age and piety and discipline, with one of themselves as their leader. Another [nun] will be assigned as a prudent and faithful steward of their common property, and to care for physical necessities, another will be entrusted with the important charge of the storeroom. As for the others, the superior will assign them with much care and testing to different duties for the common good, with the cooperation and advice of the pre-eminent and better nuns here, not to say all of them, just as the fathers of old have taught us.¹³

24. Such is to be the number of nuns in the convent. It is fitting that their superior be capable of instructing the others in the noble teachings of divine philosophy, and to guide them in good works and lead them along the path of virtue. She should persuade them, not force them, teaching them a little [p. 33] about virtue through her words, but teaching them much more with good actions, wondrously matching her words to her deeds, thus guiding and leading her followers steadily towards salvation. One of the holy men, indeed, defined this as the “art of arts, the science of sciences,”¹⁴ to lead and guide toward God this most diverse and varied animal which is man.

25. Such should be the woman who leads the others; such a woman you must all seek and choose from among yourselves, one who is able, as I said, by speech and action to instruct her disciples in the fixed word of truth and the holy lessons of piety, and to instill zeal for the truly good, and to kindle your souls with fine love for this, and thus in no way whatever fail to attain the goal. She should provide herself¹⁵ as an example to you and model of the good, and whether speaking or silent present herself to you as an exhortation. For heeding and obeying the traditions of the fathers in this matter, too, it is my command that the search for as well as the selection of the superior should be conducted by you alone.

26. This is the way you will appoint her: all of you are to go together to the holy church. Then all of you together should pray in your hearts that you will have God to assist you in the serious task at hand, through the intercession and support of the Mother of God. After your supplication, you will choose the nun who is superior to the others in all respects, and the one who, as a result of her fine obedience and tutelage, knows well how to rule and control others, [a nun] who has provided, in the past, much evidence of her innate piety, prudence, and qualities of leadership. After choosing her in this way with the help of God, next you should take her and go to the most holy patriarch; and she is to accompany you. Then, after she has received from him the blessing and grace of authority as well as the pastoral staff, as is customary for the patriarch at such installations, you should return to the convent with great joy [p. 34] and cheer, and with God’s assistance you will behave towards each other in the prescribed manner. She will teach according to the commandment, and will explain what can prepare us and lead us to God and make Christ to dwell in our hearts, and you are to obey her just as beasts of burden obey their masters, or as the lifeless tools of a craft [obey] the craftsman. For thus you will certainly be able to demonstrate faultless and unflinching obedience, and will receive from God the full reward for obedience.

IV. An admonitory and advisory discourse to the superior.

27. Therefore, most honorable superior, you who are pleasing unto God, who have been preferred to the others, and thus lawfully elected, you have been appointed to this great and truly difficult task, that is, to supervise human souls, and snatch them away from the world and give and assign them to God, and to make Christ to dwell in them through contemplation and action, and to “be-troth” them to him alone as the One most pure Bridegroom, and to “present chaste” and holy brides and pure “virgins” (cf. II Cor. 11:2) to him, together with Paul, the church’s great “escort of the bride.”¹⁶ As you are taught by Holy Scripture, “Awake, awake, put on the strength of thine arm” (Is. 51:9). Forget our feminine weakness, and for the most part “gird thy loins,” if not “like a man” (Job 38:3), at least in a manly fashion. Assume a manly and masculine temperament, brace up yourself as best you can. Expound that which is necessary and leads to salvation, not only through your teachings and instruction in accordance with the commandment, but through your actions and deeds. Surpass the others in virtue, thereby giving sure pledges and guarantees to your followers, that the achievement of virtue and the good is by no means impossible. Say confidently and boldly to your subordinates, [p. 35] “Look at me, and do as I do.” “For we are not contending against flesh and blood,” as the holy apostle says, “but against the principalities, against the powers, against the world rulers of this present darkness, against the spiritual hosts of wickedness in the heavenly places” (Eph. 6:12) and on account of the heavenly places.

28. Therefore, my spiritual mother, do not labor only to teach and instruct your charges all the time about this frightful war, and after arming them securely and fortifying them on all sides lead them forth to the fierce battle against demons; you should also strive to fight in their front ranks, to protect and shield them. Make this your most important task, smiting these unseen and dangerous enemies as with “arrows” shot “from the hand of a mighty man” (Ps. 126 [127]:4), through psalmody, prayer, vigil, abstinence, contrition, tears, all the other weapons of the [Holy] Spirit. Thus you will defeat the enemy with all your strength and utterly vanquish them, and will render your [disciples] invulnerable to the wounds of arrows, and make them completely safe, and totally remove them from all danger.

29. This, then, is a great charge and truly important responsibility which has been entrusted to you; and for this reason it will require much anxiety, much concern, much exertion, much toil, much zeal, much vigilance and alertness on your part, lest the devil suddenly attack you unawares, like a “roaring lion” (I Pet. 5:8), and accomplish his goal, and lest “the blood” of the lost soul “be required” (cf. Luke 11:50) from the hands of the superior, because she neither gave warning about the justice and judgment of God, nor did she explain how to repent and make amends after a spiritual lapse.

30. In any case, like a skillful and master artist, “you should look often at the lives of the” most blessed and “holy” female saints, as if they were “living images” and “efficacious and inspiring [p. 36] figures,”¹⁷ and examine them very clearly; thus you will make your own way of life an accurate model of them, and will adorn it with all the imperishable flowers and colors of the virtues, and thus you will make their goodness and their fair beauty your own through exact imitation.¹⁸

FOURTEENTH CENTURY

31. In the same way the [nuns] under your direction should look at and regard your steadfast and orderly conduct and your dignified way of life as the perfect archetype, and should scrupulously transform their own conduct, and model their own images after the original character of your goodness and virtue. Thus the many different types of conduct will resemble each other, and thus in a similar fashion the good character of life will shine upon the entire community, just as, if several artists were to paint the representation of one model, all the images would resemble each other. For of whatever nature the leader and ruler, for the most part such is likely to be the subject, and in the words [of the Bible], “As the judge of the people is himself, so are his officers; and what manner of man the ruler of the city is, such are all they that dwell therein” (Sir. 10:2).

32. “Be urgent in season, and out of season,” said the holy apostle; “convince, rebuke, and exhort, be unfailing in patience and in teaching” (II Tim. 4:2). Thus you should at all times and in every way be urgent and reprove the [nuns] who are examined [by you] and caught in error, but you should reprove them with patience, with teaching, with the compassion of Christ, in a spirit of gentleness. You should not only reprove them, but also subject them to penitential discipline for their benefit. You should also chastise them in like manner, gently and sympathetically, with love, with exhortation, calmly. For if you apply these remedies to the ailing [nuns] in a passionate manner, overcome by wrath and anger, not only will you fail to rid them of their illness, but you may perhaps subject yourself to an even more serious disease. For we have been taught “to correct those who oppose” the teaching and commandments of Christ “with gentleness” (II Tim. 2:25), [p. 37] rather than with wrath and anger. We have learned to instruct those who are ignorant and go astray rather than chastise them, just as we guide blind people, but in no way punish them. You will be irritated and angry, without being at all irritated or angry within yourself. Moreover, you should overlook sins with discretion, and forgive and pardon whatever you are permitted to forgive and pardon. You are permitted to forgive and pardon whatever is permitted to a male superior who is not a priest. And you should grant forgiveness in moderation, recognizing the limitations of human nature, and accordingly yielding to the habits and weaknesses and differing qualities of people, as long as no harm will result either to you, the superior, or to the sinner.

33. On the one hand you should strive for the glory of God, since he is dishonored by the transgression of his commandments, but you should also sincerely show the compassion of sisterly love for the salvation of the [nun] who thus dishonors God. You should both lament and mourn, and also shed tears for the nun who is in peril because of her sin, or bitterly dying. For as the Scriptures say, “the soul that sins shall die” (Ezek. 18:4). You should prescribe remedies for the [nuns] who fall subject to passion in exactly the same manner as a physician, not being angry at those who are afflicted with illness, but combating the illness alone, and battling the causes and origins of the diseases, and thus healing the affected members of the community. For physicians say that “opposites are the remedies of opposites.”¹⁹ As it were, vanity will be corrected by the demands of humble behavior, idle talk by silence, excessive sleep by psalmody and prayerful vigils, laziness by physical labor, immoderate eating by fasting, grumbling by expelling the grumbler for a few days from the church and the common table of the [nuns] who are grateful. In short, the superior will correct every sin by its opposite behavior. [p. 38]

34. Thus the dignity of authority is great and lofty is the honor of leadership. But let not this dignity puff you up, or the honor exalt you. For this puffing up and exaltation prepares the one who has thus puffed up and raised herself to fall from the blessing of humility, and makes her to fall into the sin and trap of the devil because of her arrogance and pride. Therefore in the disposition of your heart and the secret [recesses] of your soul you should consider yourself a worthless maidservant and lowly slave granted by God for this purpose to the servants and daughters and brides of Christ himself, but by your external physical appearance you should show the distinction of the total authority and power which you have over them all. You should always preserve about yourself an air of solemnity and awe and respect, so that your authority will not be contemptuously disdained and scorned by the [nuns] in your charge, and so that well-honored humility may be taught by your praiseworthy condition.

35. Furthermore, in the conviction that authority over the majority and concern for them makes you rather their slave and servant, and that you will have to give a greater accounting to God on behalf of the majority, do not make this a cause for pride or fill your heart with much anguish and fear and unspeakable terror. Do not be arrogant because of your authority, but be humble because of the great concern and thought about the defense [you will have to make]. Thus you will set yourself forth as a fine example for your subordinates, not only of humility, but also of love, the love which is truly lofty and the peak of all the other virtues. You will set forth [this example], if you love and cherish the entire assembly of nuns equally and like your own limbs, as if they were your organs. As is reasonable, you should show more honor to the nuns who are the most useful and distinguished; but you should radiate your love and sympathy equally, like the rays of the sun, not more or less, since [p. 39] we naturally love the limbs of our body equally, but we consider some to be more honorable than others. For we love our eyes and feet equally, but we do not deem them both worthy of the same honor, nor do we protect them in the same way, although the pain of both affects us in the same way. Therefore, in accordance with this line of thought, you should care for and watch over these [nuns] as a true mother looks after her own daughters, and cares for them like her own limbs and organs. You should compassionately consider the needs of each of your charges, and treat them without fail as is appropriate for their need, and to the best of your ability you should sustain and strengthen and refresh the truly ailing member of your community with the kindness appropriate for a mother.

36. You, the superior and teacher, should undertake the supervision in this manner which my discourse has briefly expounded; for I have omitted a great deal, so as to avoid showing off, and at the same time have shunned excessive length because of my dislike for surfeit. Thus you should lead the nuns, calling upon the heavenly power of the Bridegroom with spiritual and ceaseless cries, so that it may support you in all things, lightening the burdens of your ministry through its own goodness and helping you to endure its labor and toil, if you desire to fulfill worthily the purpose of your profession, and not to bear the name of superior unworthily or in vain.

V. A hortatory address to all the nuns, inspiring them to obedience.

37. As for you, my dear daughters and maidens and brides of Christ, who are a joy and crown for me, and glory and pride, you should remember almost hourly how you [p. 40] were called or received by God, and the vows you made to God after this vocation and reception, and what you have renounced and to whom you were betrothed, and with whom you made a covenant, and to whom you trust and hope to be joined ineffably as to a Bridegroom; and thus endure with all pleasure and joy every toil and trial and every other hardship of your ascetic or angelic way of life. Endure on account of your shared great hopes, on account of the pure and undefiled love and desire which you ought always to nurture and cherish in your heart for our Lord Jesus Christ and God, your true lover and beloved. "For his sake you have" willingly "suffered the loss of all things, and count them" all "as refuse," in the words of the apostle, "in order that you may gain" (Phil. 3:8-9) as your Lord the one who is greatly desired, the truly beloved, the truly insatiably adored. Above all stoutly enduring, struggle through the great contest of the truly blessed submission and obedience, obeying and submitting to your superior unhesitatingly in all things, as if she were Christ, your Lord and Bridegroom and Savior. For "he who receives you receives me" (Matt. 10:44), as he says in the gospels. The great apostle calls upon everyone in exhortation, "Obey your leaders and submit to them; for they are keeping watch over your souls, as men who will have to give account" (Heb. 13:17).

FOURTEENTH CENTURY

38. Therefore, as I have said, obey your guide and teacher, and submit to her in obedience, in no way whatsoever opposing her, in no way questioning her commands, in no way thwarting them. Obey your superior, and obey her as true daughters obey their mother, or as simple slaves and humble maidservants obey their true lady and mistress. Indeed [you should obey her] just as animals obey their shepherd, turning whichever way the herdsman guides them. Obey your superior, because you have been called for this purpose, that is for obedience, for compliance, for renunciation, for total denial of your own will; and obey in fear of God, with much reverence, with contrition of the soul, in the spirit of [p. 41] humility, always striving to assume the good and sweet yoke of obedience, always bending your necks to the holy hands of your teacher. For "she will keep watch over your souls" (cf. Heb. 13:17), she will carry your burdens, she will be your judge, your leader, your guide, your corrector, your steward, your guardian, she will be everything to you, she will substitute for your father, your mother, your brothers and sisters, your other relatives and acquaintances and friends, she will substitute for everything else; she will be your teacher, your counselor, your doctor, your consolation, your exhortation, your cure, your refreshment, your encouragement; and perhaps I should mention the greatest and most important [point], that she, in imitation of Christ, "will lay down her life for you" (cf. John 13:37) and on the Day of Judgment she will give an accounting for you to Christ who judges all our [actions] impartially.

39. Your obedience will have no contrary result, nor will it result in any harm or damage, indeed it will be the salvific foundation of everything fine and good. What are these? Remission [of sins], freedom, spiritual kinship, immortality, life. Remission [of sins] because once and for all it will relieve you of all your sins, if the psalmist says truly, "Look upon my affliction and my trouble, and forgive all my sins" (Ps. 24 [25]:18). Freedom, because it will completely release and deliver you from the most bitter slavery of your passions. Spiritual kinship, because it will make you worthy of divine grace, because it will make you true daughters of God. Again immortality and life, because it will provide you with immortality and eternal life.

40. A witness to my words is the great and obedient Akakios. For when he was questioned after his death, he replied from the grave, “‘A man who is truly obedient’ will never die.”²⁰ Through obedience you will easily be led back to paradise whence we originally fell because of our disobedience; rather [p. 42] you will be led up to the very heavens, since as we have heard, “our commonwealth is in heaven” (Phil. 3:20). For wherever is Christ himself, there of necessity will be the women who, like you, have followed him and truly imitated his obedience and humility. For “if anyone serves me,” say the Holy Gospels, “he must follow me; and where I am, there shall my servant also be” (John 12:26).

41. Through obedience the original goodness of our nature and its nobility will again be restored to you, and the sin of disobedience of our foremother Eve will be veiled over by your obedience. You will be true disciples of our Savior and God, and you will truly strive to emulate the way of life of the incarnate Christ and his apostles, the Savior because he obeyed his own Father “even unto death” (Phil. 2:8), the apostles again, because in the same way they obeyed Christ and imitated his shameful death.

42. This virtuous and holy obedience has been called a martyrdom and confession by the early Fathers. Therefore it will also crown you as martyrs and make you worthy of the glory of confessors. I dare say it will also procure for you the radiance of the angels. You will show true and perfect obedience to your superior, not only by renouncing that which is improper and contrary to divine law, in accordance with her advice and counsel, but also by not doing those things which are pleasing and dear to God without her encouragement and permission. For a nun who does not obey her superior when she gives advice on this, that is, on what is pleasing to God, and who does not submit to obedience, offends against God. This is a grievous offense, so grievous that she may justly be considered by God to be resisting him. For, as the apostle says, “Therefore he who resists the authorities resists what God has appointed, and those who resist will incur judgment” (Rom. 13:2). Christ says, “If any man comes to me, let him deny himself” (cf. Matt. 16:24). [p. 43]

43. You will not be able to achieve this self-denial, unless you divorce yourselves once and for all from your previous worldly habits and from your own desires. For it is completely forbidden by the Fathers and teachers for any of you to follow her own wishes and, in accordance with her previous habits, to fulfill her own desires and pleasures. In any case, if a nun who has taken the vows of obedience does something in accordance with her own wishes, not only does it simply not seem good in truth, but it seems dangerous and destructive for the soul, since it is clearly contrary to the teachings of Christ, who said, “I have come down from heaven, not to do my own will, but the will of my” Father “who sent me” (John 6:38). It is also [contrary to] the apostle who said this, “to prevent you from doing what you would” (Gal. 5:17).

44. Therefore a nun who is motivated to do something for her own pleasure and on her own responsibility suffers from the affliction of pride, but, in the words of Holy Scripture, “what is exalted among men is an abomination in the sight of God” (Luke 16:15). If it is condemned as sinful to rely totally on oneself, it is very clear that everything which is approved and ordered by the superior, even if it seems reprehensible, is completely free from condemnation as being irreproachable. Therefore, do not do anything at all without the approval and permission of the superior, since a tool cannot do any work on its own, if the craftsman is resting and idle, nor can any limb of the body be moved involuntarily, unless the soul which inhabits the body stimulates the limb to move.

FOURTEENTH CENTURY

45. You should behave towards your spiritual superior and teacher and obey her, as I have indicated. How should you behave towards each other? As the blessed and great apostle wisely taught, “outdo one another in showing honor” (Rom. 12:10), and “through love” of the Spirit minister unto and “be servants of one another” (Gal. 5:13), [p. 44] openly through your deeds observing the words of the Gospel, “Whoever would be great among you must be the slave of all and last of all and servant of all” (cf. Matt. 20:26–27). For “the Son of man came not to be served, but to serve, and to give his life as a ransom for many” (Matt. 20:28). “Love one another with brotherly affection” (Rom. 12:10), and grieve and lament when some of your dearly beloved sisters fall into sin and damage their souls by certain harmful actions, for theirs is truly a risk “full of horror”;²¹ but, on the other hand, you should rejoice and be glad if certain of you achieve the good works of virtue, whose benefit is incomparable, according to the commandment which bids us, “Rejoice with those who rejoice, and weep with those who weep” (Rom. 12:15), and in accordance with [the words], “if one member suffers, all the members suffer together,” by reason of your love and spiritual disposition in Christ, and “if one member is honored,” that is, by acting in a manner pleasing to God, “all the members rejoice together” (I Cor. 12:26). For if you are not thus most purely affected towards each other, you will be accused of being²² everything else except lovers of your sisters.

46. Banish from your midst every rivalry and dispute, whispers and slanders and jealousies and the evil fruits of envy and hatred. Preserve with great care the most perfect communal life, in which all private property will be abolished, and every disagreement will be banished, and private friendships will be meaningless. Meaningless, too, will be the expressions “mine” and “yours,”²³ everything private, every personal possession will cease to exist, rather the principle will strongly prevail that you have everything in common, your souls, thoughts, bodies, food and other physical necessities. Most important, you should have God himself in common, salvation in common, your travails in common, your struggles in common, your trials in common, your achievements in common, your victory in common, your prizes and awards in common, your rewards in common, glory in common, wreaths in common. For you have many separate bodies, but you all have one, indivisible soul; you have many bodies, but the bodies are instruments of the same purpose. [p. 45]

47. If you behave thus towards one another, if you live together in this way, your mode of life will truly be in accordance with Christ, you will truly be an army and company of God, a canonical²⁴ church of Christ, you will truly emulate the very life of the angels,²⁵ and you will show forth this virtuous society and community of yours as an exact model of the way of life and behavior we hope for in the hereafter. If you thus conduct your lives with scrupulous piety and holiness, and have this attitude of love towards your superior and each other, you will seem to everyone to have striven after the peak of virtue, and you will be deemed blessed by everyone for this. In the end you will inherit the kingdom of heaven, and you will be deemed worthy of the royal and eternal bridal chambers, the everlasting nuptial chambers, the undefiled bedchambers and those blessings “which no eye has seen,” in the words [of the Scriptures], “nor ear heard, nor has the heart of man conceived what God has prepared for” his pure and holy maidens, and whichever of you “have loved” (I Cor. 2:9) the true and fine bridegroom in your souls.

VI. Concerning the ecclesiarchissa and her duties.

48. The entire congregation of your sisterhood, together with your superior in Christ, resembles a complete body, composed and constituted of a head and different parts, which have different faculties and energies. Therefore in view of this interconnection and harmony of yours, in accordance with the analogy of the parts of this body a worthy and appropriate position should be assigned to each of you. Thus, one will have the faculty and rank of the eyes, another the ears, another the mouth, another the hand, yet another the foot, and each [of you will be assigned] to each part, [p. 46] so that all of you together, proportionately and as the needs of the common body require, may offer your capabilities and energies in your duties without stint and earnestly for the common benefit. So, too, together you may demonstrate decency and discipline in your behavior in accordance with the words of the apostle who said, “all things should be done decently and in order” (I Cor. 14:40). After these words it would be appropriate for me to discuss and assign²⁶ individually the other nuns and officials and their duties, however God may provide.

49. First of all [I should speak about the nun] who will assume responsibility and leadership in all the holy church services, and then concerning the second in rank, who will be chosen and assigned to supervise the household management of the community. For these [two] have precedence and preeminence over the other nuns second only to the common mother and superior, since they resemble the common teacher and spiritual leader more than the other nuns, the ecclesiarchissa in matters which are more spiritual and in everything that affects the soul and relates to it, the steward in matters which have to do with the management of this humble body which is material and corruptible.

50. The superior and the other sisters should choose as ecclesiarchissa the best nun, who is distinguished for her wisdom and piety, for her moral decency and stability, and especially for the inner chastity and purity of her soul. [She should be] a nun who is able to sing and chant in tune and with skill, and is much more familiar than the others with the ecclesiastical office and rite. [She should] also be steadfast and conscientious, and spiritually passionate and zealous with regard to the holy hymns and divine doxologies. For on the one hand, by setting herself forth as an example of right action, she should incite and encourage the other choir sisters to similar divinely inspired zeal, and be able to persuade them of her own accord not [p. 47] to succumb to laziness, or akedia, or drowsiness, or any carelessness with regards to the hymns which should be offered up daily to God, but rather to devote themselves to them from beginning to end with the most fervent zeal and total concentration; on the other hand, [she should be] well qualified lest on account of inexperience and ignorance some part be omitted of the prayers and psalms ordained from above, or some mode of the doxology be removed and inserted in the wrong place, which I personally consider just as serious as completely omitting it, since confusion is called “a vehicle of the devils and a dissolution of the psalm,”²⁷ as certain Fathers have said.

FOURTEENTH CENTURY

51. She is to assign the proper place and position to each of the choir sisters, with the knowledge and approval of the superior.

52. She is to “love the beauty of the holy habitation” (cf. Ps. 25 [26]:8) of God and its purity, and will exert all zeal and diligence with regard to this place, so that there may be nothing unseemly or disorderly in it, or anything at all neglected.

53. She will take great and vigilant care to light and keep constantly burning the two lamps which are supposed to be lit night and day for the glory of God, as I have set down and instructed. She will see to it that there is no quarreling or disturbance during the holy church services, nor any whispering and idle talk, but only such words as offer glory and weave praises for God, and illuminate the soul and lead it towards God and altogether prepare it to fly up to heaven. The young nuns who devote all their efforts and zeal exclusively to chanting and to learning their letters will be under her authority and will be assigned to obey her, so that these [offices] may thus be performed in good order, gracefully and without any omissions, and so that the duty of directing the choir offices may be performed with all elegance and good order. [p. 48]

VII. Concerning the steward and her duties.

54. Thus the head and leader of the choir sisters should be such a woman, and such is the nature of her holy duty and ministry. In similar fashion, as steward should be chosen a nun with such different qualities as this ministry and situation requires, that is, a nun who first of all has passed through her youth and middle age and is already elderly, not so much in terms of actual years, but with respect to her wisdom and character and the purity and chastity of her life; she should be a woman who is greatly practiced in ascetic toils and labors, and has also over the years amassed and gained great experience in practical affairs. A nun of this nature will not grow faint-hearted or shirk in her duties, when of necessity she is required to work more than the others; nor on those necessary occasions when she must leave the convent in order to visit the monastic estates will she be liable to any of the involuntary sinful actions which can harm the soul and inflict blame and criticism on it. Since, as I have said, she will have this experience in practical matters, she will not permit the monastic property to fall into decline or deterioration through poor and improper management.

55. Indeed the steward is not to concern herself solely with internal properties, nor to administer these alone with much faith and wisdom as if they were her private property, but she is also to make inquiries and have accurate information on the revenues and profits and crops of the external estates. Of necessity she is to ask for accounts from each of their managers and bailiffs, who will meet with her in the convent. She will determine which estates are being properly managed, and [p. 49] especially certify that they are being properly managed; but as for those which are not progressing properly, she will demand appropriate improvements, and will make sure that henceforth they do prosper. When she has already in hand these [revenues and crops] that she received personally, she is to deposit the produce and all the other such [agricultural products] in their own storerooms, entrusting them with precise accounting to the responsible nuns. She is to give all the records to the superior and the leading nuns; moreover, if there is any object of gold and silver, she is to hand it over and entrust it to [the superior]. Again the superior, with the knowledge of the leading nuns, is to deposit it for safekeeping in the place where such [valuables] are usually stored and kept secure.

57. BEBAIA ELPIS

VIII. How the choir sisters should perform the church services when they assemble in church and what their duties are.

56. The choir sisters, who have as their sole occupation the offices celebrated in the church, and who perform this service as a ministry specially assigned to them, should refrain from every other task and duty, and apply themselves to this great work alone. Therefore when the wooden [semantron] is struck for the offices, summoning those who are not engaged in other work to assemble in the holy sanctuary, they should be the first to enter, and show themselves as first in zeal and eagerness through the sobriety of their soul in the divine singing of hymns of the holy gatherings. They should disregard every bodily pain and every physical weakness through the courage and nobility of their soul, standing before the Lord and serving him with great fear, and praising him with love, and worshiping him, trembling with boundless joy of heart. [p. 50] Moreover, when their mind is for the most part distracted and dispersed to external matters, they should make it concentrate once more, and attend to the meaning alone of what is sung and chanted; for thus it can beautifully ascend to a conception of God and be brightened and illuminated and sweetened and made pleasant by the most brilliant light which shines therefrom. For if you choir sisters do not stand before our King and God here on earth, how will you be able to hear, as both appropriate for you and applying to you, the words, “Sing praises to God, sing praises; sing praises to our King, sing praises; sing praises with understanding” (Ps. 46 [47]: 7–8).

57. How will “the words” of my Lord “be sweet to your taste, sweeter than honey and the honeycomb” (Ps. 118 [119]:103)? Again how will they be considered by you “more to be desired than gold and much precious stone” (Ps. 18 [19]: 10), and “more than gold and topaz” (Ps. 118 [119]:127) and truly “more than thousands of gold and silver pieces”? (Ps. 118 [119]:72). How will God hear you and fulfill your petitions, when you are thus made captive and distracted, and say one thing with your tongues, but another in your hearts, and therefore you do not perceive the One before whom you are standing and to whom you are speaking, nor what you are saying and singing?

58. How will you be able to succor the sisters who wait upon you and serve you and are thus distracted and concerned for your comfort, and for this reason are absent from the communal offices and prayers? How will you petition God and receive from him remission for their oversights? How will you succor and help in accordance with their hopes all the others who beg for your prayers for their aid and salvation as the prayers of saints? Rather how will we not irritate God, how will we not provoke him to anger and vexation against us, if you do not apply yourselves to the prescribed hymns in the way I have described, but with great carelessness, since we have heard the words of the Holy Scriptures, “Cursed [p. 51] is the man who does the works of the Lord carelessly” (Jer. 31 [48]:10)?

FOURTEENTH CENTURY

59. May this not be your fate, but may you rather attract the grace of the Lord above upon you and the members [of your community] and your sisters, who work on your behalf and whose salvation depends upon your prayers, and who endure every toil and labor for your sake. But so that you may open the great and divine heart for others, too, on whose behalf you piously offer up daily supplications and petitions, perform the customary offices with sobriety and vigor, as I have previously said, and apply yourselves in this way to the praise of God and singing of hymns. You should turn your entire mind from external distractions to the inner storerooms of the heart, and to God through pure and ceaseless prayer, all but not breathing. Thus you will give the greatest gift to yourselves and your sisters, by thus steadfastly laboring for your salvation and theirs.

IX. Concerning the attitude towards the daily church offices of the nuns assigned to other duties outside the church, and how they should attend [the offices].

60. Therefore these choir sisters will thus perform their duties and devote themselves to this pure and holy service. But as for those of you whose duties require physical labor, and who are engaged in these most of the time, you should not on this account always absent yourselves from the prescribed offices, nor should you see the holy dwelling and sacred precincts of the Lord only from afar, nor should you hear the singing of the holy [p. 52] hymns only from a distance. But when it is time for you to be engaged in your duties, you will give precedence to your work, I mean your ministry, above all. At that time you should occupy your hands with their work, but should privately turn your mind to certain prayers, and season your work with these prayers like salt, and let the phrases of these prayers be on your lips, word for word, "Lord Jesus Christ, Son of God, be gracious unto me the sinner," or "Lord Jesus Christ, Son of God, have mercy on me the sinner," or "Lord Jesus Christ, Son of God, help me who am wretched and weak." These phrases may be short and customary, but they are very beneficial and powerful and bear within them the force of almost all prayers. All people need to use these prayerful phrases on all occasions, whether they are sinners or just, because we all need divine mercy, because we all most urgently need heavenly grace, inasmuch as we are needy and lacking in divinity. Thus you should act and this should be your attitude, as you work with your hands.

61. But when you have free time and complete leisure from your work, and it is time for an office and the wooden [semantron] is struck for the holy office, summoning the nuns to the service, then you should hasten as fast as possible to the sacred precincts, like thirsty "harts" towards pure and fresh "flowing streams" (Ps. 41 [42]:2), on the way singing by yourselves those holy verses of David, "I was glad when they said to me, 'Let us go to the house of the Lord'" (Ps. 121 [122]:1). "But I will enter into thy house in the multitude of mercy; I will worship in thy fear toward thy holy temple" (Ps. 5:7). "How amiable are thy tabernacles, O Lord of hosts! My soul longs and faints for the courts of the Lord; my heart and my flesh have exulted in the living God" (Ps. 83 [84]:10). "I would rather be an abject in the house of my God, than dwell in the tents of sinners. [p. 53] For a day in thy courts is better than a thousand [elsewhere]" (Ps. 83 [84]:10), and whatever other such verses you know.

62. When you have thus arrived at the great and holy sanctuary of God and are standing there with the rest of the congregation, strive as if you saw God himself before your eyes. You should stand consumed with fear and much trembling, with contrition weeping for the sins with which you, as human and subject to human passions, have offended against him. If you should be able to read, sing with both heart and mouth, honoring your Master and Creator and Bridegroom with psalms and hymns and spiritual odes. But if you should be completely ignorant of your letters, then of necessity you should pray with those short but powerful phrases which I know well are accepted by God in place of any other prayer, indeed are superior to every other prayer. However, if in your leisure time you should hasten to assemble with your other sisters, as I have said, and present yourselves²⁸ before God like them, at such times do not do any handiwork. For the best and most salutary [course] which we urge you always to follow is to “pray constantly” (I Tim. 5:17), in accordance with the great injunction of the apostle, and, whether you are working or not, on every occasion and in every place to address God in prayer and “do everything in the name of Christ as we have undertaken to do” (Col. 3:17).

63. But to work also during the hours which are specially dedicated and consecrated to God, and to share them with concerns of [the flesh,] and to attempt to “serve two masters,” at the same time God and your handiwork, or in other words “God and Mammon” (cf. Matt. 6:24), this [course] does not lead to salvation, nor do we permit it in any way whatsoever, rather we completely dissuade you from it and forcefully reject it. For how then will you pray to God in a pure fashion? How will you keep your mind on the chanting [p. 54] and singing, when it is distracted by your handiwork? How will you be able to lift up your hands unto God, as the ecclesiastical rule bids you do, when of necessity you keep your hands bound to your handiwork, and tightly bound indeed? Therefore you should never work during a church service, but without distraction you should concentrate only on the prayers and singing of psalms.

64. If you do these things, if you behave thus each day, be confident that, even if you are physically absent, on the one hand you will have invisibly from these holy offices both the sanctification and grace which are sent down unhesitatingly by God above to those who approach the holy and divine churches with much longing and fear, and you will also share with your sisters the not inconsiderable reward and great benefit therefrom. But if you do not behave as I have said, but rather waste your free time and negligently become involved in and devoted to foolish pursuits, and engage in harmful thoughts, and this while you are in good health and not occupied with the common tasks (which I trust will not befall any of you), I do not know how you will justly receive a share of the blessings of your sisters.

X. How the superior should punish negligent nuns, and through which nun she will strive to eliminate apathy.

65. The heedless, negligent and disorderly behavior of certain nuns, [which does] not [lead] to edification, but is rather a cause of scandal, is not without danger for the superior, since she is liable to give accounting for all [her charges]. [This is] especially [true] if, in the face of apathy, she should remain silent, not out of ignorance, but because as a result of flattery she shows indulgence toward the faults of each [nun] so as to appear gentle and [p. 55] pleasing to all of them.

FOURTEENTH CENTURY

Therefore of necessity she must take care to correct as much as possible this apathy or disorder or slackness or laziness; and she will [be able to] rectify [their behavior], if she does not disregard and ignore and overlook and allow to go unpunished those nuns who demonstrate these faults to their own detriment, I mean carelessness and slackness. She should discipline and punish them, sometimes with genuflections, at other times with fasting or drinking only water, sometimes by standing vigils, and at other times other remedies appropriate to the fault. She should do this with compassion and maternal solicitude. As one who is entrusted with the care of all [the nuns], [the superior] will expediently discipline and punish not only those who are careless and lazy, but also all the others who engage in untimely and inappropriate conversations with each other, and who choose to engage in idle and unprofitable conversation and talk, which cause great harm and injury to their souls.

66. Therefore no one of you at all will have leave or permission, not even when she has free time from her handiwork, to engage in untimely conversation with another nun outside her cell, without need and without the knowledge of the superior, and to talk about matters which are not their affair; nor should she approach another nun who may perhaps be meditating only on herself and God in her cell, and thereby distract her from this praiseworthy occupation. Neither should any [nun] walk into [another cell] if there is no need, nor without necessity should she stand or sit in [another cell]; nor should she do anything else which is neither useful or beneficial, thereby causing great harm to herself, and inopportunistly leading into temptation the nun who is soberly meditating. Rather every nun, who is not engaged in the work of her special ministry, should remain in and cleave to her own cell, and while she is remaining quietly there, she should either pray or recite the psalms or read, if she knows her letters, or work on a communal project, not her own, for no one is allowed to do this, [p. 56] not even to the extent of making a cord of wool [for herself]. At that time her work will occupy the hands of the worker, but prayer will occupy her mind.

67. This is the tradition of the fathers from long ago, this is the rule of precise discipline, and simply of the solemnity of our habit and of our vows; and if some of you devote yourselves to and submit to this rule (and may all of you become submissive and obedient), peace and the blessing and grace and mercy of God will be upon you. This will always continue, and apathy will be completely banished from your midst, and the solemnity and reverence of our habit will be restored, if the superior and the leading nuns (or all of them), choose one of you, who not only seeks after piety more than anyone else and concentrates on her own salvation, but has already entered old age. The nun who has been chosen in this way should be assigned as her permanent task and vigilant concern to watch carefully and be attentive in every way and to observe day and night where and how each of the imperfect nuns and those who need more attention and stability work at their own salvation. She should correct on her own what she is able to correct, but she should refer to the common teacher of all [the nuns] those [faults] which she is unable to correct; and it will always be her concern to concoct and offer to the ailing nun the salutary drugs of correction. Inasmuch as she is their spiritual mother, she will not ignore this suffering nun, just as a mother in the flesh cannot bear to disregard her own child, who is about to fall into a ditch, or to leave it once it has slipped and fallen. How could her illness be ignored by the teacher who is “affectionately desirous” of her, in the words of the apostle, and “is ready to share not only” the word and “the gospel of God” (cf. I Tim. 2:8), but also her own soul? So much for this subject. [p. 57]

XI. Concerning the keeper and supervisor of the communal storeroom and her duties.

68. It is time now to set down instructions and regulations about the remaining officials and their duties, so that there will be no element of disorder in the convent, or anything without rule or regulation. Therefore the convent should have another extremely essential official, who is to manage with prudent supervision the communal storeroom. She should be a pious nun who fears the Lord, and at the same time have a disposition in which gentleness and great humility are mingled, and she should be very sociable and accessible to everyone; and at the same time she should guard that which is entrusted to her with much intelligence and security. She is to receive all the cloaks and tunics, and all the shoes, and the covers and bedding, and everything else which you assuredly need. She is also to receive all the fruit. She is to take the delivery of all these items when they come from some outside source, and after she receives them she is to keep them all with precise accounts, with the knowledge of the superior and your leading nuns; and she is to distribute them only in accordance with the judgment and instructions of your common teacher. Such should be the keeper of the communal storeroom.

XII. Concerning the cellarer and her duties.

69. Of about the same character and manner should be the cellarer, who keeps whatever food is served you, and also keeps the wine, if you should have any. From this supply she is daily [p. 58] to garnish and prepare and serve the refectory meals in proportion to the number of nuns and as the season requires. Other nuns should assist her in her duties. Of necessity she will be assisted by the nun in charge of the refectory and waiting on the sisters, who will serve the dishes and remove them again, and perform other services for the pleasure and refreshment of the nuns seated in the refectory.

70. She will not be the only assistant, but also the nuns who have the task of making and distributing the communal bread, as well as the cook. The former will usually take the wheat, the latter the foodstuffs they need from the cellarer, and after doing everything necessary and appropriate to them they will return the foods to her all prepared and without anything missing. The cellarer is to be very careful to maintain equal compassion and patience towards all the nuns, and to do nothing out of jealousy or with partiality or on account of passionate attachment, so as to deprive some, of whom she is jealous, of their true needs, but to give others, to whom she is partial or passionately attached, more than they really need. The first is an act of hating one’s sister, the second is an act of forbidden passion. Through these [emotions] the bonds of love and fellowship are broken; and wicked suspicions and jealousies and quarrels and carelessness in one’s work take their place. She is not only to do this with great care and concern, but should maintain restraint in her own diet so as to consume the same amount of food and wine as all of you, and so as not to imprudently give herself more and better food.

FOURTEENTH CENTURY

71. Neither she nor any other official among you will accomplish this (since you all have the obligation to accomplish this), unless they all [p. 59] adopt such a disposition and attitude so as to believe that they are not serving and ministering unto human beings, but unto Christ the Lord and Savior of all, who with benevolence accepts for himself the honor and zeal and service and refreshment rendered to your sisters by them, and benevolently promises them the inheritance of the kingdom of heaven for these [services]. For he says, "Come, O blessed of my Father, inherit the kingdom prepared for you from the foundation of the world," because "as you did it to one of the least of these my brethren, you did it to me" (Matt. 25:34, 40).

XIII. Concerning the guard and gatekeeper of the convent and her duties.

72. As for the gatekeeper of the convent, about whom I must now speak, one should not appoint any nun at random, but one who has given evidence of piety, of course, and judgment and prudence. She should also be possessed of a character which is at the same time dignified and steady and stable, so that by her appearance alone she can put to shame and instill awe in those nuns who wish to approach the gate unseasonably and without need, led [astray] by absent-minded and careless thoughts. She will cause them to retreat straightaway, covered in humiliation. She should thus be of such an age that she herself should not require supervision, on account of her youth, instead of supervising others, nor on account of old age should she be less vigorous and sluggish, and incapable of fulfilling the demands of her obligation and duty.

She should take the keys from the superior in the morning, and return them again to her in the evening without fail, and should attend to the guarding of the gates which are always kept closed, so as not to allow anyone at all from outside or inside to enter or go out, without the knowledge [p. 60] and permission of the superior. She is to open [the gates] without question only at that time when some essential need causes a familiar person to go in or out, but by no means for strangers to the convent and people unknown to her, except in the case when the superior bids her do it that one time. If someone comes from outside and seeks admission, first of all the gatekeeper should make inquiries of the visitor and learn from him his identity and whence he came and the purpose of his visit and presence there. After she has obtained this information, she should then report it in detail to the superior, and then she should escort him inside, if the superior permits his admission, or not admit him, if the superior refuses permission. If security is maintained here in this way, none of the nuns will suffer any spiritual harm, nor can any monastic property at all be secretly stolen.

XIV. How the election of these officials should take place.

73. So that in the choice and selection of the nuns who are going to be assigned to these offices we do not appear to do anything improper and contrary to the apostolic traditions, it is my will and command that each of the officials be promoted to the appropriate office by a general election and voting. For that holy band of apostles, in the initial phases of their preaching, when they were going to choose the seven marvelous deacons for the needs of the first converts to Christianity, and to establish them in this ministry, did not entrust the election and voting to themselves, but rather to the multitude (cf. Acts 6:3). Laying their holy hands on the men who were thus²⁹ chosen in a general election, with general voting and summons and prayer, and invoking the grace of the Spirit above, [the apostles] established them in the rank and position of deacons. [p. 61]

74. Therefore, you should make your selection objectively and vote without any rivalry and contention, after you have first of all assembled for this purpose, when the need arises. After the election and voting has thus taken place, you should all enter together into the church, where of necessity your holy spiritual father should be present. After the trisagion and a general prayer, your spiritual father, who is perforce a priest, will make the concluding prayer. Then the nun who has thus been elected to the needful service, pressing her head to the ground, she will prostrate herself three times before the all-holy icon of the Mother of God, and beg with all her soul to receive her assistance in the duties assigned to her. Next she is to kneel once before the superior, prostrating herself on the ground, and then she is to make the same genuflection before the nuns who are standing in two choirs. After requesting a blessing through their prayers, and receiving her request, she will thus begin her service. As one who has received the needful ministry from Christ himself and his immaculate Mother, and who is going to have to render an accounting for it to Christ on the Day of Judgment, she should undertake her work and strive until the end to keep her conscience clear.

XV. How the imperfect and weak nuns are to see their relatives in time of need.

75. I believe that it is permissible and irreproachable for us to pray for the best for our relatives and for [characteristics] conducive to salvation, I mean piety and virtue and whatever else we deem honorable and worthy of much zeal and pursuit. [p. 62] But it is not permissible and causes unspeakable harm, not to say condemnation, for us to be emotionally involved with them in a worldly manner, contrary to our vows, and to physically exert ourselves on their behalf, and to tie our thoughts to worldly and vain concerns about them. For as a consequence we wish to see them continually, and to make inquiries and ask after them, and are most anxious to visit their houses frequently, and converse with them freely, and associate with them fully and fearlessly. For if we introduce into our souls the attitudes of our relatives through continual contact with them, and our minds are filled full again with worldly concerns, we turn away from our honorable commitment, and are separated from our spiritual purpose, and we wickedly reject the fine promises which we made to God, without anyone forcing or compelling us. For how is there total renunciation of the world, if our relatives are a part of it? Where is its total denial? Where is “the death of Jesus,” which it was necessary for us “to carry in the body” (II Cor. 4:10)? Where is “the cross” which we have promised always “to take up” (Matt. 16:24) towards God? Where is the hate without hatred for our parents and all our other relatives? How will we maintain the same separation from them in our attitudes as we see in the separation of the dead from the living, which is the chief of our vows?

76. It would be best and a good guiding [principle], if until our death we were to maintain the same attitude toward relatives and friends that we had when we first entered the convent and took our vows. But since now there is a great weakness of soul, and we cannot therefore maintain a completely perfect way of life, because of our weakness we must yield a little (this is the proverbial “next best way”),³⁰ and relax the intensity of discipline without causing any harm. Therefore, as a concession I order that we should welcome in a civilized manner and with pleasant address the blood relatives who come here occasionally with the knowledge and permission of the superior,

FOURTEENTH CENTURY

[p. 63] and escort them to the area between the two gates, and bid them sit there. Then without the knowledge of any other nun, the superior should summon the nun from within and bid her go there, keeping before her eyes her own Bridegroom, Christ, and praying in her heart that her conversation with her relative will be harmless and beneficial. She should be accompanied by one of the venerable elderly nuns for her greater security. As this pious old woman looks on and hears all their words, very little should be said by either party, and it should be innocuous in nature. Then, taking her leave of her relative, she should depart straightaway, and return to the convent together with the venerable elderly nun.

77. As I have said, in this case one of the God-loving elderly nuns should accompany the younger nun. But when it should be necessary for one of you to go visit her relatives at home for the sake of a little relaxation, at the decision of and with the permission of the superior (for of necessity on rare occasions this should be permitted and allowed to occur), then perforce not only one but two nuns should accompany the nun who leaves [the convent], and even more than in the previous case they should watch the young nun and themselves so that nothing forbidden is said or done, or in any way at odds with the dignity of the [monastic] habit. The young nun who has ventured forth must return in the evening without fail, and should then be questioned privately by the superior (and she should be questioned and respond with the greatest of care). She should tell her what she was thinking about all day, and what her soul was thinking and meditating, and what words were spoken, and what matters occurred perhaps contrary to her wish, and if she remained in fear of God for the entire day, and if she was tempted to violate any of the customary rules, either because she slipped and was led into this as a result of her own indolence and laziness, or because she was carried along unwillingly by disorders and circumstances beyond her control. Then the superior should confirm with approval that which is worthy of approbation, and should correct inappropriate behavior with suitable maternal instruction, [p. 64] to the best of her ability. For thus the sisters who make visits in the manner which I have described will be more prudent during their subsequent [visits], when they consider that they will have to render a complete accounting of their absence, and the superior will not be thought to neglect their way of life even during their absences.

XVI. That all the doxologies to God and vigils and fasts and genuflections should be performed in accordance with the typikon of Jerusalem.

78. Since it is necessary for us to have for daily use some form of rule as a guide, in accordance with which you will praise the God of all with hymns, and will celebrate unceasingly to his glory the offices which we are accustomed to recite in the church, and will sustain yourselves in daily essential needs, this rule should be none other than the one which came to us of old from Palestine for the benefit of our churches here, which is usually called the typikon of Jerusalem,³¹ and has been selected and preferred above the others by prudent people.

79. It has been preferred because it is characterized by “the royal”³² and straight path, which does not make its followers deviate to left or right, because it partakes of a middle position in due proportion, and, equally avoiding superfluity and deficiency, it neither exceeds nor lacks in what is needful and proper. Since it has thus been preferred, for the same reasons it should by all means be preferred by you. Thus the entire holy church service and the doxologies to God which were formulated of old by the Fathers, or rather by the Holy Spirit, should be celebrated by you [p. 65] in accordance with this rule, as well as all the others, including those used for all-night vigils. For in this way in your vigils you will keep vigilant in the manner and at the times that this rule prescribes. Your priest should offer the bloodless sacrifice up to God four times a week. The days for this sacrifice are to be Tuesday, Thursday, Saturday and Sunday. As for this priest, first of all he should have a lawful wife, and then he should have sufficient dignity and piety, and he should not be youthful, but of mature years. He should be so zealous and eager about the daily holy church services so as to never be absent from the morning or evening doxology to God unless he is ill.

80. In the refectory as well you should follow the daily regime which is so well set forth and formulated by this typikon [of Jerusalem]. Thus you are to eat twice a day when this [typikon] so prescribes; but you are not to eat twice a day when the typikon forbids it. You are to eat fish when the typikon bids you eat them; you are not to eat fish when it is forbidden by the typikon.

81. You may partake of olive oil and wine when it so permits; when it does not permit it, you are to abstain from them completely. You are to make genuflections when the typikon approves; you are not to make genuflections when it does not approve.

82. During the holy period of sacred fasting, both the great fasts and the others, you should fast as this typikon bids you. But although it is permitted by the typikon for monks to partake of olive oil on Sundays of the great fasts and on Saturdays during Lent, you should not use any oil at all even on these days, unless one of the nuns is ill. For in that case the ailing nun should not only partake of oil on account of her illness, but she should also eat fish frequently, without being subject to criticism, if the superior so permits. [p. 66]

XVII. That all the nuns should have the same daily diet.

83. The superior should take great care with regard to the daily diet of the nuns, lest inequality and the "false balances" (cf. Amos 8:5) of greediness prevail here and triumph over justice and equality; rather justice should prevail and equality should clearly be the rule among you. Thus there are to be no substitutions in your meals at all, neither of food nor drink, but the same bread and wine and the same foods and sustenance are to be set before all the nuns from head to foot [of the table], or from first to last, and furthermore the portions should be equal and fair. For there should be no need for some nuns to have more and others less, or some much and others little, nor again should some be given better [food], others worse. For this would not be an act of justice, but injustice, and would not bring about peace and love, but countless scandals and much disorder and confusion. The result would be secret gluttony, suspicion, innuendo, condemnation, grumbling, meddling, laziness and indifference, and, in short, all the other manifestations of hostility and wickedness, not to discuss in detail the evils brought into our life by greediness and inequality.³³ Therefore there is to be one and the same food and drink for all of you, and one and the same table, and one time and place assigned for communal meals.

FOURTEENTH CENTURY

84. This is peace in God, this is love in Christ, this is the unity of spiritual friendship, this is the bond of concord, this is the strongest union of sisterly love. Since your meals will be of this sort and prepared in accordance with God's commandment, no nun at all [p. 67] will be allowed by the rule to have any food or drink, and keep it in her own cell.³⁴ For all the nuns should equally and communally enjoy the common repast and refrain from these private forbidden [foods] as unlawful. If one of the nuns should be sent something by one of her relatives, she is not to take it, but the keeper of the storeroom or the cellarer is to take it, and serve it at the refectory table to the nun to whom it was sent. She may partake of it without blame, and give thanks to God. But if the gift [of food] is sufficient to be divided up among many people, perhaps even all the nuns, they are all to receive a small portion, and all are to partake of an equal share for the sake of their peaceful relationship. If it is not sufficient to be thus shared, it should be distributed only to the nuns who are ill.

85. Sacred writings should be appointed to be read aloud. For only the book is to speak and to teach, while all of you alike are with great reverence to maintain the utmost silence, and to listen to the readings with the proverbial "pricked ears."³⁵ Thus you will nourish your body with these material foods on an equal basis, and also nourish your soul equally with the incorporeal sustenance of the [spiritual] readings. For [the sayings] "Man shall not live by bread alone, but by every word that proceeds from the mouth of God" (Matt. 4:4), and "The mouth tastes food, but the mind discerns words" (cf. Job 12:11), very nearly represent this incorporeal diet of the soul. If it should be necessary for the superior to speak about something and receive a response, she should speak quietly and in a subdued tone, and with very few words, and then should immediately become silent again, as before.³⁶

86. No one at table will be allowed to raise her eyes and look at her neighbor to see how she eats the food set before her, and what has been served her. Each nun should not only have eyes for herself alone and focus her attention on the food set before her, [p. 68] but should concentrate to an even greater extent on the sacred readings. She should thank God who has granted this food solely on account of his infinite compassion for our bodily constitution, and should pray from her heart for the nuns who, in response to God's commandment, have prepared this food for her like "unworthy servants" (cf. Luke 17:10). Nor is it right to disregard the following. For in such times as this, it is always necessary to observe this [precept], I mean, not to seek after satiety, nor to stuff your stomach, nor to gorge yourself with food. For this is worthy of all curse, inasmuch as the Lord said, "Woe to you that are full!" (Luke 6:25). Even aside from the terrible burden of this curse, overindulgence renders our body useless for action, and prone to sleep and more liable to carnal sins. For taking of nourishment has one purpose, the satisfaction of one's needs, and moderation means to stop eating when one is still a little hungry.

87. Furthermore, you should not make eating a pleasurable end in itself, but only a means of survival, renouncing undisciplined pleasure. For "to be a slave to pleasures" (Tit. 3:3) is not different than to make "a god of your belly" (Phil. 3:19).

88. Three times a week provisions are to be purchased for you outside [the convent], either fresh fish or anything else which happens to be in season.

89. On no account should you store away the leftovers from this daily meal of yours, nor keep them for the next day, but rather you must distribute them to the poor, my brethren in Christ, those who are driven by starvation and harsh and grievous famine to come to your gate every day, and who look to your generosity, after God, so as to be nourished by you with a small morsel of bread and the tiniest bit of food. With these small surplus morsels of yours, you will alleviate to a degree their great poverty, with both compassionate mercy and with much gladness, since through them you all but feed Christ, and through them [p. 69] you really welcome Christ, and as a result you do yourselves an even greater favor than you do them. For not only “will you be merciful, even as your heavenly Father is merciful” (Luke 6:36), but you will also be blessed and righteous. For, in the words of the Scriptures, the just man “is merciful and lends continually” (Ps. 36 [37]:26), and “he has dispersed abroad, he has given to the poor; his righteousness endures for evermore” (Ps. 111 [112]:9), and “blessed are the merciful, for they shall obtain mercy” (Matt. 5:7), and “blessed is the man who thinks on the poor” (Ps. 40 [41]:1), and “he who sows in mercy, reaps the harvest of life” (cf. Hos. 10:12), that is, of immortality and blessedness. If, as you have heard, “he who has pity on the poor, lends to the Lord” (Prov. 19:17), then you will always have as your debtor the Lord who will repay in time your loan and debt with much profit and heavy interest. But if “he that dishonors the needy” (cf. Prov. 14:21) angers his Creator, then you will clearly honor God by treating his creatures compassionately. If “by mercy and faithfulness iniquity is atoned for” (Prov. 16:6), how will you not cleanse the filth and pollution of your souls, by making use of the purifying herbs of mercy, and become as “white as clean wool” (cf. Isa. 1:18)? You will not only grant yourselves these greatest of blessings, but, as the promise goes, “you will receive” back in your storerooms “a hundredfold” (cf. Mark 10:30) the gift from heaven. Because you planted those few seeds of mercy, you will manifestly find this gift stored in reserve, increasing and multiplying the supplies within. Now on account of the poor, your storerooms will be blessed by the Lord of all and Steward and Provider of all blessings, he who “will have mercy rather than sacrifice” (Hos. 6:7), since he receives the compassion offered to him through the needy [more] graciously and benignly than “tens of thousands of fat lambs” (cf. Mic. 6:7). [p. 70] When you are set free from and depart this earth, without any doubt he will bid that “you be received into his eternal habitations” (Luke 16:9) on account of his infinite and immense mercy, as he has taught.

XVIII. How the superior should treat nuns who are ill, and what care she should provide for them.

90. The superior should sustain and provide food for all the healthy nuns in this way every day, and thus she should care for them with maternal compassion; if they are ill, however, she should not treat or care for them in the same way at all, but in a better fashion, altogether differently, as necessity demands and the attending doctor recommends for the patient. For a physician should be summoned who is both skilled in his profession, and endowed with great piety. In accordance with his skilled diagnosis, the patient should take medicine and eat healthy foods and be taken by you to the bath to bathe, and she should do everything else for herself, in order to restore her health to its previous condition through medical remedies.

FOURTEENTH CENTURY

91. The superior should accord such attention to the patient, and should continue according it, and providing all the expenses from the common [treasury] until the nun is completely cured of her illness and completely regains her health.

92. None of the nuns should be jealous, or fall prey to envy because one of their own sisters is deemed worthy of such special treatment; rather they should accept this and visit their ailing sister with compassion. For it is right that the ailing nun be pitied, not envied. It is meet to visit her, not bear a grudge against her. This should be their attitude and their actions. For, on the one hand, they should consider her illness as that of one of their own limbs, and likewise believe her treatment to be conducive to their own health for this same reason; [p. 71] on the other hand, they should endeavor to obtain good treatment for themselves from the healthy nuns in case of similar illnesses and circumstances, that is, if they at some time should fall sick.

93. The superior should treat not only ailing nuns in the manner which I have described, but also women of noble families, who have been accustomed to a luxurious life in the world, if they should enter [the convent], in order to dwell with you and share a communal life. If she wishes to make concessions and treat them more sympathetically for a time, and give them a modest degree of comfort, in accordance with her discretion, she has permission to do so.

94. The superior should not only provide these comforts, but should also grant permission if any of them should ask to have one servant only to provide a modest amount of service and ease. But she is to make this exception only for those women who come here from a life of privilege, and in no case for anyone else.

XIX. That all the nuns should do their work in common and not privately, and how they should be clothed.

95. Since idleness is the root of all evil and is itself the teacher of all wickedness—for [Scripture] says, “idleness is the teacher of all evil” (Sir. 33:28)—it is necessary [for the nuns] to work, indeed this is as important as their daily bread. I think it is for this reason that the most wise Solomon wrote in praise and eulogy, “She does not eat the bread of idleness” (Prov. 31:27). For this reason Christ, too, [p. 72] did not simply say that everyone or anyone whosoever “is deserving,” but that “the laborer deserves his food” (Matt. 10:10). For this reason the apostle [Paul] “did not eat anyone’s bread without paying, but with toil and labor worked night and day” (II Tim. 3:8); and therefore he also “gave you this command: if anyone will not work, let him not eat” (II Tim. 3:10), and the great teacher of the church indicated thereby that idleness is evil.³⁷ Work is necessary, on the one hand, for the mortification of the flesh and the maceration of the body (for our flight from the vanities of this world and our profession of vows are no excuse for idleness or avoidance of work, rather they should incite us to even greater labor and travail), on the other hand, because of our love for our neighbor, so that we “may be able to give to those in need” (Eph. 4:28), in accordance with the commandment of the apostle.

96. Thus all of you alike should work on behalf of the community, and with such intent you should take your work materials from the common stores. When the nun in charge of the common stores distributes these materials to you, you should keep your hands on your work, and pray aloud when this is possible. Otherwise, raise your inner thoughts in psalms and hymns and spiritual songs and prayers and supplications, both praising God and at the same time giving thanks unto him. You should add more thanksgivings because he has granted you the capability of work, and provided you with intelligence to comprehend your work, and in his generosity has mercifully provided you with the basic materials for your work, and at the same time you should pray that your work may be so guided as to please God. Thus of necessity you should work, and for the purpose which I have mentioned (for in assigning to each nun her task I have learned my lesson well from the patristic literature and Holy Scriptures) you will provide for the common [benefit] and place [your finished work] in the storeroom, refraining from making or keeping anything for yourself. For to make and keep anything in this latter fashion is, according to the great Basil,³⁸ simply theft and sacrilege, leading to death, not profit. [p. 73] Even if this should seem to be good, it is in opposition and contrary to the Acts of the Apostles, where it says: “All who believed were together, and had all things in common, and distributed them to all, as any had need” (Acts 2:44–45). Again, “The company of those who believed were of one heart and soul; and no one said that any of the things which he possessed was his own; but they had everything in common” (Acts 4:32). Any nun who is guilty of this is no different from the traitor Judas, as the great saint says there (cf. Acts 5:1–3). For she betrays the true word of piety and reverence to death and destruction, so to speak, just as that abominable man betrayed the Lord of glory.

97. Therefore you should all work in this way and thus concern yourselves about your work. The superior, inasmuch as she has assumed the common concerns of all [the nuns], and the nun in charge of the common stores will furnish you with the essential [garments], providing them out of your common toil and labors, and will distribute them to you as follows (for it is well that I not neglect this point and omit it from the typikon).

98. Every year each nun should receive two white tunics, worn next to the body, and also one black tunic, which we wear over the other clothes and usually call himation. In the same way each nun is to be provided with shoes suitable for women like yourselves, two new pairs annually, and when they are worn out they should be repaired from the common stores and made new again.

99. The items above are to be distributed to you annually. Every three years each nun should receive without fail, in addition to the garments described above, a cloak and two vests thick enough to insulate and warm the body and protect it sufficiently against the bitter cold of winter. Each nun will receive not only these [items] from the common [stores], [p. 74] but everything she needs to cover her head. I give the name of “skepai” to these headcoverings which you term “phakiolia” and “magoulikia” in the popular idiom.

FOURTEENTH CENTURY

100. Furthermore each nun is to receive monthly one litra of nitre to wash her clothes.

101. In the same way they are to be given linseed oil in order to provide the necessary illumination for their cells. Those nuns who choose to bathe when necessary will be given permission to bathe four times a year.

102. For the female disciples of Christ should be characterized by these outer garments, and should at the same time demonstrate clearly by means of their simplicity and cheap and common [fabric] the purpose of their use, inasmuch as we need clothes only to cover our shameful [bodies] and to avoid harm from drafts. For as the apostle says, “if we have food and clothing, with these we shall be content” (I Tim. 6:8). No more, however, do we need the decorative variety of clothes and the adornment from them, which is the vainglory rightly forbidden by the same apostle. At the same time again we should clearly indicate by our garments the special character of Christian humility, since our very clothing proclaims and testifies to our profession of the godly life. Thus it is proper for you to design and choose those garments which are simple, common, and, thirdly, sufficient for the purpose of their use. Again you should not seek out luxurious [garments], but rather inexpensive ones, so that we may demonstrate our humility by our actions, and not obtain the reputation of being selfish and vain and vainglorious. For those nuns who wrongly desire the first ranks cannot have love, and are totally deprived of humility.

103. Fame-loving women make it their business to pursue vainglory for themselves from the variety of their garments and clothing, aspiring [p. 75] to be gazed upon and admired for the extravagance of their dress. In similar fashion those who imitate the humility and frugality and poverty of Jesus to the best of their ability, and who, in accordance with his great commandment and exhortation, have cast aside their own life to the utmost, ought to choose the worst of all from among these outer garments and mantles. Thereby they will imitate not the women of rank and those who have been raised in royal households, garbed in soft and flowing [garments], but that John who was great “among those born of women” (Matt. 11:11), the son of Zachariah, whose garment was of camel hair. They will imitate not only him, but also those holy women of ancient times, who of old were pleasing to God, who “went about in skins of sheep and goats” (Heb. 11:37), as we are told.

104. Therefore you should choose the cheapest and most common [garments], if indeed you are concerned to distinguish specially in this manner among yourselves the character of the holiness of the [monastic] habit and [to identify] the genuine disciple of the Savior. For just as each worldly rank and office has a distinguishing feature in its dress, by which they are recognized, thus it is appropriate for the female disciples of Christ to have a special character to their garments, a habit of frugal and modest adornment that is at the same time inexpensive and dignified, by which they will be recognized by those who see them (and perhaps also by those who hear them) for what they are, that is to say female disciples of Christ, to the glory of our only great Teacher.

XX. That daily confession is obligatory.

105. According to the theologian Gregory, “The avoidance of sin is” truly beyond man, and [is possible] “for God”³⁹ alone, and lack of repentance and the resultant failure to heal is caused by the evil and opposing power [of Satan]; but for sinners to turn to repentance and fervent confession [p. 76] daily is human and characteristic of those who are saved. It is of utmost necessity therefore that we make use of this salvific drug of repentance and confession, if in truth we desire to find remission of our sins and attain salvation. For it is impossible, it is impossible for us not to sin hourly, inasmuch as we are human and are affected by such passions as human nature is likely to experience. Nor is it possible for us to avoid being horribly attacked by the flaming arrows of the devil and frightfully wounded. For, as the Scriptures tell us, no one “can boast that he has a pure heart” (Prov. 20:9), because, as we have heard, “no one shall be pure of uncleanness” (Job 14:4), even if his whole lifetime were to last only one day, since neither the sky nor the “stars are clean” (Job 25:5) (I will utter the words of Job) in the sight of God. But since, as human beings, we sin daily and daily need to turn away from sin, how else should we sincerely turn away from it unless we resort first to sincere repentance? How will we sincerely repent unless we avoid sin in our hearts and reject it from our hearts? How will we reject sin, unless we expose it, as is right, by pure and blameless confession of our secrets?

106. This confession will serve as a salvific drug for us, a truly powerful drug, and a truly effective drug, drawing out the wretched and troublesome inner matter of sin and casting it somewhere far away from the soul, completely purifying it and granting it perfect health, if only “we do” not “wickedly return as to our own vomit” (Prov. 26:11) to the sin which we formerly vomited forth and denounced, through good actions and confessions. Outright confession is like hyssop and “fuller’s soap” (Mal. 3:2), cleansing and purifying all defilement, all the dirt of every impurity, whitening its disciples even more than the whiteness of the snow. [p. 77]

107. Nothing has the power to remit and forgive sins more quickly than confession. The Holy Scriptures bear witness to this, saying, “If we confess our sins, he is faithful and just, and will forgive us our sins, and cleanse us from all unrighteousness” (I John 1:9). Again, “I said, ‘I will confess my iniquity to the Lord’; and thou forgavest the ungodliness of my heart” (Ps. 31 [32]:5). Again, “Do thou first confess thy transgressions, that thou mayest be justified” (Is. 43:26). Again, “A righteous man accuses himself at the beginning of his speech” (Prov. 18:17). The Scriptures said once through the prophet and king David, “I have sinned against the Lord.” He immediately heard from God through another prophet, Nathan, “The Lord also has put away your sin” (II Kings 12:13). Confession is a great healing drug for us who sin, and a very strong bridle to keep us from sinning, and a mighty safeguard. For the brother of God says, “Confess your sins to one another, that you may be healed” (James 5:16). The great father John Klimakos said, “Bruises which are divulged do not get worse, but are healed”;⁴⁰ and “a soul which intends confession is restrained from sin as if by a bridle.”⁴¹ Confession is by nature a great “lamp to our feet and” a great “light to our path” (Ps. 118 [119]:105). Therefore those who make use of it daily, as they should, are illuminated as if by a great light and will never “stumble on dark” and hostile “mountains” (Jer. 13:16). Just as of necessity the opposite will befall [those who choose] the opposite [course]. For those [nuns] who do not confess daily, as they should, journey in deepest darkness, as it were, and are no better off than blind people, continually bumping up against and running into sin, so that are fulfilled the words of the prophecy which are especially appropriate for them: “They shall feel for the wall as blind men, and shall feel for it as if they had no eyes” (Is. 59:10). [p. 78]

FOURTEENTH CENTURY

108. But there is some shame attached to the act of confessing; this I, too, know full well. But I also know full well that this shame, which is part of the hell of the afterworld, as we have learned, is able to intercept and eliminate some of the torments which await us. I am convinced that everyone realizes how much less burdensome and easier it is to be ashamed in front of only one person, and this man a holy and compassionate and merciful father, than to be tried in front of that multitudinous and universal theater composed of angels and all men (cf. I Cor. 4:9), and to be shamed eternally. This will not be our⁴² fate, however, as long as, through the grace of Christ, we understand the blessing of virtue itself, and always make use of zealous and purifying confessions.

109. Therefore let us avert through confession the face of God which will appear terrifying in the hereafter to those who sin and do not repent. Let us confess, while we have time. Let us summon our spiritual healer to us more frequently, rather constantly, and let us disclose to him with purity and without shame everything that is in us, our deeds, our words, our thoughts. For on the Day of Judgment we shall have to render to Christ an accounting for all the deeds that we have not disclosed until the end, and for which we have not been chastised. Let us show him that our hearts are freshly wounded, and therefore easily healed, before they begin to smell and mortify and thus become difficult to heal.

110. It is impossible for anyone to be saved without this virtuous action. Wherefore let us not be negligent with regard to this good deed, but let us always strive with the utmost zeal and effort to make use of such an excellent remedy.

111. Let us always choose a spiritual physician and father who is capable of this great task, I mean the healing of souls, a man who knows exactly how to provide wisely for your salvation, skillfully devising and concocting the drugs efficacious for this purpose. For we have learned from the sacred writings of the fathers that even many who made confession received no benefit, as a result of the inexperience of these spiritual physicians [p. 79], and slipped down into total despair, that is the pit of Satan and destruction which is most certain to follow.

XXI. How the feast day of the Mother of God should be celebrated annually.

112. Since you should celebrate this feast day annually and never omit its celebration, I should set down instructions concerning this, too, how the celebration should be performed by you in a manner pleasing to God. Therefore it is my will and command that every year we should celebrate the feast day of my surpassingly pure Lady the Mother of God, and this feast day should be a splendid one celebrated at the time of her holy Dormition, on the 15th of August. During this feast day you should hold an all-night vigil and sing psalms, and provide for lavish illumination, with six candelabra all filled with candles appropriate for this great and splendid feast day. You should also light all the small chandeliers, I mean those usually called “polykandela.” You should offer up the most fragrant incense, and decorate the entire holy church of the Lord in a most glorious and pleasing manner. All the nuns should be given wax tapers for the vigil. These are your instructions for the services.

In the refectory, your food should be much more costly⁴³ and plentiful than usual. So that such a fine meal may be prepared for you, I order that three gold coins be spent at that time for the purchase of the necessary food. Furthermore you should distribute to my Christian brethren who beg at the gate 6 annonikoi modioi of wheaten bread, and 4 tetartia of wine, that is one maritime modios. Thus you are to celebrate, and you are to celebrate by yourselves [p. 80] alone, together with your usual priest, carrying out the entire service of the all-night vigil, and not inviting any other priest from outside.

XXII. How to celebrate the commemorations of the parents of eternal memory of the foundress, as well as the commemorations of the blessed founder of this holy convent, and of its foundress [and their children].

113. When the appointed day in the year comes round (it is the 25th of October), on that day without fail you should celebrate the commemorations of my eminent departed parents, the monk Kallinikos and Maria,⁴⁴ and you should celebrate them with great joy and zeal. You should decorate the holy and revered church of the Mother of God in the evening, and you should prepare the six candelabra, and they should all be filled at that time with candles, and all should be prepared for lighting. Moreover you should prepare the kollyba which are customary for the departed faithful. Eleven priests should be invited from outside, so that altogether there should be twelve including your priest. In the evening the parastasimon, the prayer and supplication on their behalf, should be made by these priests alone, but not by you—for it is not permitted for you to sing and stand together with the priests.

114. In the morning when the awesome and great mysteries are celebrated by your regular priest alone, together with the same illumination and the kollyba, you should perform all of this holy service as customary. After its conclusion, you should go to the refectory to partake of a more elegant and costly [p. 81] meal than usual which has been prepared for you, with the additional expense of only two gold nomismata from the treasury. Thus you should eat and rejoice and pray in your hearts for the salvation of my parents of eternal memory and for their blessed repose.

115. Thus you should celebrate. My brethren in God, the poor people at the gate, should receive from you 4 annonikoi modioi of wheaten bread, and three tetartia of wine, for the spiritual [salvation]⁴⁵ of those who are commemorated and of you who thus commemorate them.

FOURTEENTH CENTURY

116. In the same way you should commemorate each year, on the sixth of February, your blessed founder the megas stratopedarches, lord John Angelos Doukas Synadenos, who took the monastic name of Joachim.⁴⁶ You should do everything exactly the same as for my blessed and holy parents,⁴⁷ I mean my father, the most fortunate sebastokrator lord Constantine Komnenos Palaiologos Doukas Angelos, who took the monastic name of Kallinikos, and my holy mother, Branaina Komnene Laskarina Kantakouzene Palaiologina, with regard to the candelabra⁴⁸ and all the other preparations and prayers, I mean the divine services, the food for the nuns, and the charitable donations to the needy at the gate.

117. You are to make the same arrangements for your humble servant, whenever, that is, God chooses to take me from the living as he knows best.

118. I would have liked the commemoration for my dearly beloved daughter lady Euphrosyne Palaiologina⁴⁹ to be more lavish and splendid than those of her parents on whatever day she is transported from this life to the better and eternal [life above], [p. 82] inasmuch as she was dedicated by me to God at infancy, and has chosen of her own accord to seek after every form of virtue with great abundance, and provides a model for her successors. Since, therefore, she chose such blessings from infancy, that is a life of contemplation, quiet, poor and merciful, and has achieved this [goal], she should enjoy the complete ceremony that is owed to the holy departed. Since, however, as in everything else she spurns honors, and seeks moderation and simplicity, she asked me to make no provision and instructions for her own commemoration, let it take place and be commemorated as she chooses and prefers, and in accordance with her dying instructions.

119. Concerning the two sons of the foundress,⁵⁰ who are also founders. With regard to the commemorations of my dearly beloved sons, lord Theodore Doukas, the protostrator, and lord John Palaiologos, the megas konostaulos, and their wives, when God chooses to take them from the living as he knows best, I order that they be celebrated in exactly the same manner as those of their mother and father, and those of my holy and thrice-blessed eminent parents, with respect to the lavishness of the illumination and in all other regards.

XXIII. [Enumeration of] property dedicated to the Mother of God for the support and maintenance of her handmaidens.

120. I have set down the previous instructions in this document so that you may conduct yourselves and live in a manner pleasing to God, and for the salvation of your souls. Certain provisions are addressed to the superior, for the purpose of reminding [her of her duties], others are directed to the whole assembly of nuns, for their instruction and [p. 83] exhortation, as I said at the beginning of the document. I have also included certain [sections] not out of place or unbefitting the precepts of the fathers, all of which, as I believe, indeed truly believe, are consonant with and in accordance with them in all respects.

You should read this typikon aloud in the refectory more often than any other book, with all of you listening, and you should read it attentively and read it at the beginning of each month. For if my written instructions are always resounding in your ears, they will not permit forgetfulness to do her work, making you forget these instructions from reading them infrequently, and they will enable my divine purpose to be realized by you. So first of all I bequeath this [typikon] to you instead of great wealth and any other rich inheritance, the finest and most valuable of all my possessions. I bequeath it as a great benefit for your souls through the grace of Christ and the support and compassion of my Mother of God, for the procuring of salvation, for your greater edification, and greater security. Thus I bequeath it to my beloved sisters in Christ.

57. BEBAIA ELPIS

121. For your physical needs and support I leave you half of my entire ancestral estate called Pyrgos, whatever this half might be, whether arable land or a vineyard, or anything else this half might be, as I said; but the other half⁵¹ will be mine for now, and will be managed by me personally for the maintenance and modest comfort of myself and my dearly beloved daughter. In the same way, [I bequeath to you] the village near Parapolia called Ainos, valued at 400 hyperpyra, of which 200 were donated to the convent by a divine and venerable chrysobull as my ancestral property. My dearly beloved son, the protostrator, donated the other 200, which were taken out⁵² of [the sum] granted to him by the divine and holy chrysobull. [p. 84]

122. In the same way I bequeath the vineyard of ___ *modioi*⁵³ planted at the expense of the convent at Selokaka; another vineyard of ___ modioi near St. Nicholas Mesomphalos, together with its houses, which was bought years ago from a man named Kaligas for 400 hyperpyra, which was barren land, but which I later planted with vines; another vineyard, located near the land of the Kosmidion,⁵⁴ of ___ modioi, which was donated by my dearly beloved nephew, son of the most eminent despoina of the Bulgars, lord John Palaiologos Angelos Branas (who took the monastic name of Joasaph); another vineyard in the land of the Kosmidion, of ___ modioi, which he himself gave for “fellowships”⁵⁵ for his wife, from which 8 hyperpyra are paid annually to the monastery of the Kosmidotes for taxes; another village called Morokoumoulou near Thracian Herakleia, in which is also the land of Diakephalaiois; another vineyard, located in the village called Kanikleion, of ___ modioi, which my dearly beloved daughter-in-law, lady Thomais Palaiologina Kantakouzene,⁵⁶ donated to the convent, for her spiritual salvation.

123. In the same way I bequeath to you my ancestral vineyard, such as it is, located at Pegai, beyond the Queen of Cities; similarly let the other vineyard which is also found at Pegai be yours to keep. From now on they will be your ancestral property and in the future and all years to come, rather they will be like holy dedications honorably and justly dedicated and consecrated to my surpassingly pure Lady the Mother of God. No one at all is ever to take them away or confiscate them, unless he wishes, whoever he may be, [p. 85] to be called a sacrilegious person and to bring down upon himself the most terrible curses and judgments, which have been brought from of old against everyone who trampled on and disobeyed the holy laws of truth and justice. But so much for this.

124. On account of the weakness of my human nature and for the care of my daughter who is most dear in every respect, and for the modest comfort and relief of her many serious illnesses, I have retained personally for myself the following [properties]: half of my ancestral estate called Pyrgos; the village in Parapolia, called Kanikleion, my ancestral estate; the garden called Gymnou near our convent, and the large vineyard which my cherished son, the protostrator, gave to me, and the houses around it, very near the Kyriotissa,⁵⁷ on the public road. I ordain and command with all my soul and purpose that, after my departure from this earth and my release from the present [life], this [property] should be owned and administered by my dearest daughter, just as by me, for her modest comfort and care, inasmuch as she is mistress and heir of this convent and all my property. Then, whenever, after a lengthy and “most abundant old age” (Ps. 91 [92]:14), she should depart to eternal and better rest, to live and rejoice together with her immortal Bridegroom forever, then the other half of the estate of Pyrgos, and the other properties previously mentioned, which were retained personally by me for my maintenance and then by my dearest daughter, are to be immediately donated wherever she wishes and decides, as is just. [p. 86]

FOURTEENTH CENTURY

Lord, help your maidservants to fulfill these instructions.

XXIV. A hortatory epilogue to all the nuns and the superior to abide by the typikon and not to transgress [it] in any way.

125. O my beloved congregation in Christ, I have set down and formulated in this typikon, as you see, those rules which it was necessary for me to set down and formulate, for the sake of your spiritual benefit and salvation, as well as for your physical needs; and even if they are not worthy of the occasion, it is not for any lack of zeal or effort on my part. It will be your responsibility from now on both to heed these rules sincerely, and to accept them sincerely into your soul, and thereafter you should strive in your very deeds to obey all the rules without transgression, which is the primary purpose of all my zeal. For mere hearing and acceptance of the good words of salvation is not able to justify the one who only listens to them and only accepts them, but deeds must be added to the hearing and acceptance. For thus a just man becomes perfect. “For it is not the hearers of the law who are righteous before God” (these are the words of the apostle), “but the doers of the law who will be justified” (Rom. 2:13). You will demonstrate clearly that you are obeying the rules steadfastly, if you display the same attitude toward your teacher and spiritual mother as toward Christ himself, the God of all, to sum up my instructions briefly, and if you obey her as if again the Savior and Lord of all should command you.⁵⁸ For in the Gospel his all-holy lips said, “he who hears you hears me, and he who rejects you rejects me, [p. 87] and he who rejects me rejects him who sent me” (Luke 10:16). You should not have any will at all of your own, or ever permit yourselves to do anything on your own, but you should strive to wish and do only those things which your teacher wishes and orders you to do by way of commandment.

126. Furthermore you must obey the superior in this way not only when she “teaches scrupulous observance,” and prescribes fasting, but even when “she forbids you to fast,” or advises you to partake of satisfying nourishment, when necessary, or bids you relax your discipline in any other way. You must carry out all her [commands] in the same way with the utmost zeal, in the belief that “every word spoken” by your teacher in Christ is “law,” and thus you must accept it and obey it, and in no way permit yourselves any discussion or inquiry about her instructions. For such behavior and attitude is “a practice and habit which lead to anarchy” and disobedience. Therefore you should accept “every counsel” without question, and “carry it out, not with sadness” or “from compulsion,” but “with” great “eagerness, so that your obedience may be rewarded.”⁵⁹

Thus your attitude towards your teacher,⁶⁰ and again towards each other, should resemble your attitude towards your very own limbs and inner organs, always maintaining towards each other spiritual love, true humility and genuine and unfeigned submission, “forbearing one another in love, eager to maintain the unity of the Spirit in the bond of peace,” and in accordance with the apostolic teaching being “one body and one Spirit, just as you were called to the one hope” (Eph. 4:2–4) of the grace of our Lord and God. You should defer to each other with regard to the chief offices, and strive to triumph over each other and excel in those endeavors in which each nun yields the victory to her neighbor, in which each nun does not consider it important to show herself as greater than another, and in which each seeks the last place, although she is probably worthy to take a more important place. [p. 88]

127. If you conduct your lives thus in Christ, if you keep these commandments unaltered and unimpaired, you will destroy “every proud obstacle to the knowledge” (II Cor. 10:5) and obedience of Christ, and, in short, you will raze to the ground all “the strongholds” (II Cor. 10:4) of evil; you will make all wickedness retreat into nothingness, which it is by nature. You will wondrously erect a large and celebrated house of virtue, and will raise it up with great assurance until its completion, since in your construction you have placed the first principle and base of this building on golden and mighty foundations of obedience and humility, and “the greatest of these is love” (cf. I Cor. 13:13).

128. Thus you will do me the greatest favor. For you will clearly demonstrate that I did not sow the seeds of exhortation in barren and unfruitful earth, but rather in soil that is good and rich and fruitful, and capable, like that earth in the gospel, of yielding “thirty, sixty and a hundredfold” (Matt. 13:8) through the great and wise tillage of the Spirit. Furthermore [you will thus demonstrate] that I have spoken these words “into the ears of those that hear” (Matt. 13:9).

129. As for you, O finest and in every way most reverend mother of mine in God (for to you now, as superior, I address my final words), you will be truly blessed and many times blessed, even ten thousand times blessed, if you focus not only your ears on this typikon, but even more so your soul. You will not only hear it speaking and resounding externally, but you will also engrave all its [precepts] deeply in “the tablets of your heart” (II Cor. 3:3). Thus you will not only engrave these [precepts] indelibly, but you will also teach them, and will continuously transmit them and truly convey them to your charges. Moreover you will carry out these [precepts] eagerly, leading the others in their proper execution, and, through your good deeds, demonstrating [p. 89] these precepts as if they were living and efficacious and, like fire, eternally sharing the benefit without diminution both with those who see these things through deeds, and those who hear them through readings. For the Gospel of the Lord has said, “blessed is he who not only has taught, but has done, and then taught” (cf. Matt. 5:19); and again, in the words of Holy Scripture, “if you know these things, blessed are you if you do them” (John 13:17).

FOURTEENTH CENTURY

130. I am confident that you, in accordance with this blessing of the Gospel, will carry out and teach the typikon, and will truly obey it more than anyone else, and will demonstrate now and in the future, by preserving unaltered all the precepts of the typikon, that you are truly their leader, inasmuch as you are the first to guard these [precepts], as you have been called [to do]. Furthermore your charges will truly heed you and obey you, if “from the” proverbial “beginning”⁶¹ they have a good example, and are schooled in humility and obedience by your humility and obedience. For teaching the pure and established word of truth is not as effective as carrying out the teachings in practice. “Good understanding is found in all those who act,” says [the Lord], “but not in those who only listen” (cf. Matt. 13:13).

131. Not only then these [nuns], but even perhaps wild beasts, out of respect for your virtue, will obey you in a similar fashion, and entrust themselves entirely to your holy hands, when they see distinct in you the features of the ancient submission and obedience which our foremother had in paradise towards God before her grievous transgression and consequent disastrous fall. Even the mighty and boastful demons will submit to the weakest and humble nature, and will fear you, and will be crushed into dust beneath your evangelical and “beautiful feet as you preach the gospel of peace” and every “good thing” (cf. Rom. 10:15), with the strength and support of the heavenly grace and power. [p. 90]

132. These are great [challenges], full of wonder and amazement, but capable of being accomplished in the present time, if only we would be willing to act rightly, if only we would emulate to the best of our ability the virtue of the saintly women who preceded us, who mocked at and crushed the satanic forces and ranks as easily as pitiable sparrows. The heroic conduct and wondrous lives of these holy women are preserved in writing for the benefit of their successors in the discourses of wise men and sacred books.

133. Now on account of the great virtue which you will attain without question through the precise observance of this typikon, you will be celebrated and well-known to everyone, and almost all men who see and hear your actions will sing you countless eulogies, and devise lengthy praises for you, and frequently bless you. Again, in the world to come, you will accompany the wise virgins into the pure and celebrated bridal chambers to rule together and be glorified together with your greatly beloved Bridegroom. You will stand on his right and hear his desirable and blessed voice. You will stand and listen together with these your spiritual daughters, and then you will say with great confidence to your Lord and Savior, “O Lord, see the daughters whom you gave me.” May all of you, mother and daughters alike, be deemed worthy of this through the grace of the One who called you to his heavenly and eternal kingdom because of his love for mankind, through the grace and love of the eternal and blessed life-giving and effective and immortal and consubstantial Trinity, the Father, Son and Holy Spirit, now and for ever and for everlasting generations, Amen. [p. 91]

57. BEBAIA ELPIS

[Appendix on the commemorations to be celebrated for the foundress' relatives]

134. Since I have already written sufficient instructions concerning the convent, I will now set down instructions about my deceased parents, and my brothers and sisters in the flesh, and those who have yet to die. With regard to my blessed and holy parents and my own commemoration and that of my dearly beloved daughter and my cherished sons, let them take place as I have already ordained without any change or omission, except in the case of great necessity. Concerning my blood brothers and sisters and relatives and certain others who are expressly listed below, it is my wish that their commemorations take place at the indicated times and days without any alteration.

135. On February 11th should be commemorated my beloved daughter-in-law, I mean the wife of my dearest son lord John Palaiologos, the megas konostaulos, lady Thomais Komnene Doukaina Laskarina Kantakouzene Palaiologina, who took the monastic name of Xene.⁶² The illumination should be more lavish than usual, and there should be four liturgies for her soul. For she donated the vineyard at Kanikleion of ___ modioi. Refreshment should also be served in the nuns' refectory.

136. On the 23rd of July should be commemorated my beloved granddaughter, the daughter of my beloved son, lord Theodore Doukas the protostrator, lady Theodora Komnene Doukaina Raoulaina Palaiologina, who took the monastic name of Theodosia.⁶³ There should be four liturgies on her behalf, and more lavish illumination. For even though she made no donation to the convent, still her father, my beloved son the protostrator, has already made abundant contributions, and will make further donations in the future, since he is alive and well by the grace of God. Therefore her commemorations should not be overlooked. [p. 92]

137. On the 6th of June should be commemorated my beloved brother, lord Michael Komnenos Branas Palaiologos, who took the monastic name of Makarios. There should be two candelabra,⁶⁴ and seven liturgies on behalf of his soul, and in the refectory of the nuns refreshment should be provided and served, since for the sake of his commemoration he donated to the monastery a decorated icon of the archangel Michael of gilt bronze, two silver lamps and 300 hyperpyra.

138. In like manner my other brother, lord Andronikos Komnenos Branas Doukas Angelos Palaiologos, who took the monastic name of Arsenios, offered to the convent on behalf of his spiritual salvation an oil vessel of pure gold which is called malagma, [adorned] with a jasper lid and the nine ranks of the heavenly powers, and 100 hyperpyra. He should be commemorated on the 28th of June. The illumination should be more lavish than customary, and there should be four liturgies.

139. On September 16 should be commemorated my beloved sister, lady Maria Komnene Branaina Laskarina Doukaina Tornikina Palaiologina, who took the monastic name of Mariamne. There should be seven liturgies for her soul, with two candelabra.

140. On the 8th of January should be commemorated her husband, lord Isaac Komnenos Doukas

FOURTEENTH CENTURY

Tornikes, who took the monastic name of Joasaph; likewise seven liturgies should be celebrated for his soul, with two candelabra. For the couple contributed to the convent, on behalf of their commemorations, 1000 hyperpyra and an icon of the bust of my all-holy Mother of God, decorated with three red precious stones and pearls. They likewise gave [p. 93] 72 hyperpyra for the cost of the wine-press at Pera. Therefore it is my command that their commemorations be celebrated in an incomparable manner, and that there be refreshment in the refectory for the nuns.

141. On July 3 should be commemorated my beloved nephew, their son lord Andronikos Komnenos Doukas Palaiologos Tornikes,⁶⁵ the parakoimomenos, who took the monastic name of Antony, also with two candelabra. There should be six liturgies on behalf of his soul, and refreshment provided in the refectory for the nuns. For he gave the convent, for the sake of his commemoration, 500 hyperpyra and a silver lamp weighing five litrai.

142. On the 8th of August should be commemorated my beloved nephew, lord John Komnenos Doukas Angelos Branas Palaiologos, son of the most eminent despoina of the Bulgars, who took the monastic name of Joasaph. Seven liturgies should be celebrated with two candelabra for the sake of his salvation. In addition, on one day of each week of the year, I mean Thursday, one offering of consecrated bread should be made as a sacrifice for him. Once a year four measures of wine should be distributed to the needy at the gate, since he was generous at the time of his death, and made large donations to the convent. For he gave a gold icon of the all-holy Mother of God, all [decorated] with pearls, and with eight precious stones, four red, the other four light blue, together with a veil all [covered with] pearls, what they call symmatinon, bearing an image of my all-holy Mother of God. He also had generously decorated another icon of the Dormition of my all-holy Mother of God. In addition he had made a gold-embroidered podea, decorated with the four feasts of the all-holy Mother of God, and in the middle a circle (?)⁶⁶ of pearls. He also donated a vineyard very near the property of the Kosmidion, of ___ modioi, and a house in the vicinity of the Kaligaria, [p. 94] for the sake of the lighting of the lamp at his tomb.⁶⁷ Further there should be refreshment in the refectory for the nuns, and they should eat more lavishly.

143. On December 24th should be celebrated the commemorations of my most noble sympentheros, I mean the father-in-law of my beloved son the protostrator, lord Theodore Doukas Mouzakios, the epi stratou, who took the monastic name of Theodoretos. It should be celebrated in proportion to the capability and prosperity of the convent. For he gave to the convent for the sake of his burial a decorated icon of St. Onouphrios and 100 hyperpyra. And since my beloved daughter-in-law, his daughter, gave 200 hyperpyra to repair the cells of the convent for the sake of her father's commemoration, his commemorations of necessity should be celebrated as I have ordained without any alteration.

144. I also pray to my totally immaculate and pure Mother of God to support and advance our monastery in perpetuity in the discipline of a holy way of life, and in its affairs, so that God, the Lord of all, may be hymned more ardently with all zeal, and the immaculate name of his holy Mother to be honored and magnified, and the commemorations of the aforementioned departed ones be celebrated as I have instructed with all zeal and diligence. Thus may the Lord look mercifully and graciously on the souls of those who are commemorated and give them rest in a bright place, and may he forgive them for any sins they may have committed inasmuch as they were human, and present you with the worthy reward of love. But if ever, God forbid, it should occur that the convent should fall into poverty and lack of necessities in critical times,⁶⁸ [p. 636] I supplicate and entreat you, my beloved, not on any account to dispense with the annual commemorative services for the aforementioned individuals, but you should provide them at that time, to the extent that you have the resources and capability, mindful of my love and instructions. For if the commemorative services should be decreased because of the monastery's poverty and financial difficulties, and not because of contempt and neglect, God will not be angry, and I will be most deeply grateful to you, my beloved. So much for this.

Since in accordance with ecclesiastical tradition, it is customary for commemorative services to be celebrated together on the Saturdays of Meatfare and Pentecost,⁶⁹ I also ordain that on these days the so-called bread offerings⁷⁰ should be brought to the sanctuary on behalf of each one of the aforementioned individuals, one apiece that is, as a sacrifice on behalf of their⁷¹ salvation and in propitiation of their sins. For you will not only benefit from them enormously, but also you who act in this way will reap not a little benefit in Christ Jesus our Lord, to whom is owed all glory, honor, and veneration now and forever unto everlasting generations. Amen. [p. 95]

The delimitation of our convent of the surpassingly holy Mother of God, the Sure Hope (Bebaia Elpis) of Christians, are as follows:

145. The boundary wall begins at the great gate to the east, which is situated opposite the large houses of my dearly beloved sons, and passes by the bakery and past the entire house of the virtuous Eunouchos. Then it bends to the west and follows the boundary land which is between the two gardens of my dearly beloved son, lord John the megas konostaulos, and the convent. It goes as far as the public road which divides the monastery of the Mosele⁷² on the right. From there it bends towards the enclosure wall of the [monastery] of my surpassingly pure Mother of God Gorgoepekoos,⁷³ follows the same public road, and passes by the garden of Gymnos, keeping on its right the wall of the monastery of the Gorgoepekoos. It continues as far as the boundary land which separates our convent from the convent of my lady and sister, the protostratorissa Glabaina. It then continues as far as my apartments, which were built by my dearly beloved son, the protostrator. Then it passes by my garden, keeping on the right the vineyard of my lady and sister the protostratorissa, and reaches the public road in front of the monastery called Kyriotissa. It then bends to the east along the same public road and stretches as far as the other road which is near St. Onouphrios, where there is a vineyard, which I purchased from Kaligas as ordinary land for 400 hyperpyra, and then planted it so that it has turned into the vineyard which is seen now. Then it bends to the north and passes by the rental houses of the boundary land, where the winnowers live, as far as the church of St. Akakios,⁷⁴ including the church itself without the katechoumena. It extends as far as the great gate of this church. Then it goes as far as [p. 96] the great gate of our convent, keeping on its right the house of Aborates and the tailor Andrew, and from [the house] of Solatos extending as far as the great gate of the convent, where it began.

FOURTEENTH CENTURY

Second typikon, which was drafted by the foundress of the convent, lady Euphrosyne Palaiologina, after the death of her celebrated mother.

146. When my holy lady and mother established this convent of ours on account of the love and ardent passion which she had for God, and her affection for me, in accordance with the instructions she recorded in her typikon, she ordered that the nuns be thirty in number. Thus she honored and venerated the number of the Trinity, and at the same time took precautions lest too large a number be a cause for confusion and disorder. For if, as she said, good order is only maintained with difficulty among a few nuns, how could it be preserved where there is an assemblage of many opinions, and a combination of different ways of life and types of education and ages? But while she was still alive, inasmuch as she was of a loving and compassionate disposition, she yielded to the entreaties of certain people and allowed the number to be increased to fifty. This was the number of nuns when she left the world behind and departed to the Lord, leaving me as her heir and successor. I then, as her daughter and successor, respecting and honoring all her [actions], confirm the same number of fifty, since I do not wish the number of nuns to increase beyond this figure. For just as she honored three multiples of ten on account of the Holy Trinity, so I hold in honor and ratify the figure of seven multiples of seven on account of the number of gifts of the Holy Spirit. It is my wish, and I order you, my beloved sisters, to keep the number of nuns assembled in our venerable convent at this figure. [p. 97] For we have gathered together so that through God's mercy we may share in the gifts of the Spirit. If it were not [for this purpose], but without cause that we thus gathered together, our assemblage would be truly foolish and pitiful.

Chapter I. That the number of nuns should not exceed fifty.

147. Therefore, as has been said, in honor of the number seven, which multiplied seven times makes fifty, lacking one day, which important day [i.e., Pentecost] we call holy on account of the descent of the Holy Spirit, and because it is a model of the future, I command you, my most honored sisters, never to allow your numbers to exceed fifty throughout all time, but to limit your size to this figure.

Chapter II. That lay children should not come to the convent for their education.

148. I absolutely forbid the admission of lay children for the sake of being educated and learning their letters or anything else. For I find that it is a pernicious influence on the morals and habits of the nuns. For anyone who has renounced the world once and for all, and then comes into contact again with lay people and assumes responsibilities incongruous with our vows, and thus causes confusion within himself and obscures the light of understanding, and violates the commandments of the holy Fathers, and follows his own desires and wishes, [p. 98] should not have entered a monastery nor donned monastic habit in the first place. "It is better that you should not vow than that you should vow and not pay" (Eccl. 5:5). But if certain girls should wish to be enrolled among the nuns, but want first to be educated, and learn lessons which contribute to the monastic rule, with the intention of being tonsured years later and numbered among the nuns, I fully approve and consent.

Chapter III. How the commemorations for each single one of the nuns should take place.

149. When my holy lady and mother set down instructions about the commemorations of my holy lords and ancestors, of my holy father, who was a founder, and herself, and of my dearest masters and brothers and other members of our family, she left no instructions at all about the commemorations for all of you, my dearly beloved sisters and mothers. I did not think it right not to celebrate your commemorations, too, in the customary manner. But since you have left behind worldly matter and confusion for the sake of God and his holy and immaculate Mother, and you brought and consecrated yourselves to him and to the immaculate Mother of God, and you endure every labor in your service in obedience to Christ, and you do not have your own dwellings and idiorhythmic occupations, but all follow a common regimen at the convent, I decided that your commemorations should be celebrated as I ordain. Whenever any of you departs to the Lord, I order that one liturgy be celebrated daily for her soul for forty days, and forthwith her portion of food [p. 99] should be distributed daily to the needy at the gate [of the convent], and afterwards the [deceased] nun should be commemorated once a year on the anniversary of her death in perpetuity.

Chapter IV. When there should be general commemorations for the nuns.

150. Since it is customary in monasteries to celebrate the commemorations of the founders annually after the feast day of the patron saint of the monastery, and the commemorations of our founders take place here after the feast of the Dormition of the completely pure Mother of God, it is my wish that there also be a general commemoration service for all my mothers and sisters. But since it is not possible for the commemorations for the founders and for you nuns to take place in the same [location], I order that, since our cemetery bears the name of St. Nicholas, the miracle-worker, commemorations for all our holy sisters be celebrated there after the feast day of the saint. But if you prefer, let the holy [commemorations] for the holy [sisters] be celebrated on the day after the feast of the Mother of God. The illumination should be more lavish than usual with two candelabra, and there should be refreshment for the nuns in the refectory, and three liturgies on their behalf, and a distribution to the poor at the gate of one annonikos modios of bread and one measure of wine.

Chapter V. How offerings should be made at the altar for all the deceased nuns.

151. On Saturday of Meatfare and Pentecost, when general commemorations are customarily celebrated on behalf of all orthodox [p. 100] Christians, I command that on these days the so-called offerings of [consecrated bread] be offered at the altar for each of our departed sisters, one for each that is, as a sacrifice on behalf of their souls.

Chapter VI. Exhortation to the nuns that they omit none of the instructions on their behalf.

152. This is my “whole-hearted”⁷⁵ wish for you, my dearest sisters, and thus I set forth and command out of extraordinary desire for your salvation. Just as I approve everything ordained by my holy mother and lady, and have confirmed them, and have ordered that they remain unchanged, so it is necessary for you to maintain my instructions, which are for your benefit, and to carry them out forthwith, both for the good of love, and especially for your own benefit. For if I performed a deed of kindness by zealously setting forth these instructions on your behalf, how much more should you strive to carry out the instructions for the sake of your salvation?

FOURTEENTH CENTURY

Chapter VII. Request to the nuns concerning her own commemoration.

153. Whenever God should ordain that I die, as he knows best, do not perform the commemoration of your humble servant carelessly and indifferently and superficially. For this is not kind. But as I will order at the time of my death, so I ask of you to do, with compunction, that is, and contrition of heart and all zeal, offering supplications to God on my behalf, as well as everything else I command. [p. 101]

Chapter VIII. Brief hortatory admonition to the nuns.

154. My most honorable mothers and sisters, “rejoice in the Lord always” (Phil. 4:4), and may you be preserved, and may you preserve the fine trust which I have bequeathed to you, I mean with regard to the observance of the church office and discipline in the refectory, and tranquility and diligence in the cells. Above all and with all “be at peace among yourselves” (I Thess. 5:13) and everyone [else], in accordance with the commandment of the apostle, knowing well that the Holy Spirit would never dwell in a turbulent soul . . .⁷⁶ [I request] of my beloved sisters that the annual commemorations for the above-mentioned not be neglected in any way, but that you will act mindful of my love and my instructions, to the extent of your financial resources and your capabilities. For if the commemorations should be diminished, not because of contempt and neglect, but because of poverty and dearth of monastic revenues, God will not be angry, and we will avow the highest gratitude to your love. So much for this.

But when in accordance with ecclesiastical tradition the general commemorations are supposed to take place, on the Saturdays of Meatfare and Pentecost, I give you this order, that on these days the so-called offerings [of consecrated bread] be made at the altar for each of the aforementioned, one apiece, as a sacrifice for the sake of their salvation and as atonement for their sins. For by doing this, you will not only benefit them greatly, but not a little benefit will also accrue to you, in Christ Jesus our Lord, to whom is due every glory, honor, and reverence, now and forever and for all ages, Amen.

[Commemorations for the Bishops of Ephesos and Mytilene]

155. . . .⁷⁷ receiving from God reward for your labor and suffering and humility, which [p. 102] you endure for his sake. For it is his voice that says, “Where I am, there shall my servant be also” (John 12:26). If then that Lord and God of ours is on the right hand of glory of his own Father, it is clear that all those who have suffered for his sake will find repose there where he is, enjoying his pure and eternal blessings through the grace of the consubstantial and blessed Trinity, to which is due all glory, honor, and reverence forever, Amen.

156. But inasmuch as the hypertimos metropolitan of Ephesos was a special friend of my parents, and was also my spiritual father, as my sponsor at the holy baptismal font, and gave our convent 400 nomismata, a commemoration should also be celebrated for him as best you can, as my mother celebrated it while she was still alive. Also celebrate the commemoration of the metropolitan of Mytilene on the anniversary of his death, as best you can. For he donated to the convent a solid gold icon, decorated with precious stones and pearls, of my exceedingly holy and invincible Mother of God, and [liturgical] stoles and cuffs, also with pearls. For this reason nothing should interfere with the celebration of his commemoration. For while my holy lady and mother was still alive, she was eager that his commemoration be celebrated.

[Commemorations for lord John Theophilos and his wife lady Maria Asanina]

157. When the late lord John Theophilos⁷⁸ died, for the sake of his own spiritual commemoration and for that of his wife lady Maria Asanina, he left 300 hyperpyra so that an estate might be purchased and added to the venerable convent of my surpassingly holy Mistress, the Mother of God, that of the protovestiaría, and so that they might perform two commemorations on the anniversaries of their deaths. When our mighty and holy lady and empress⁷⁹ received this [money] at the request of Theophilos, as the guardian and heir of his property, she first gave 100 nomismata to the monastery, and in exchange for them the garden at Blanga was handed over and registered in the name of Theophilos. But then the nuns asked for the remaining 200 nomismata because of the necessity and distress they were suffering from the siege of the infidel [Turks]⁸⁰ which has reduced Constantinople to great poverty. Now, [p. 103] as a result of the general request and petition of the nuns to our lady and holy empress, the remaining 200 [nomismata] were handed over to the convent with the agreement and promise to celebrate their commemorations on the anniversaries of their deaths, that is, for Asanina on November 24, and Theophilos on December 9. The nuns were to have at vespers four trays⁸¹ of kollyba, four candelabra, two priests from the convent, a distribution of wax tapers to all the nuns of the convent, and, if the circumstances permit, a distribution of bread⁸² and wine. On the next day, they should have food to be distributed to the nuns and the usual liturgy by two priests. In making this agreement, they promised to do this continually, as long as the convent stands, with the aid of God, [with the proceeds] from the revenue on the aforementioned garden and from the annual income of the convent. Thus the 300 hyperpyra were entrusted to the nuns, the first part in exchange for the garden as has been explained, and now the second part through my hands, by divine decree of our mighty and holy lady and empress. For future security and the explanation of these events, they were recorded by my hand, the great sacristan of the most holy Great Church of God [Hagia Sophia], the deacon Demetrios Balsamon, on the 11th day of the month of February, fifth indiction of the year 6905 [= 1397 A.D.].

[Commemorations for lady Xene Philanthropene and her daughter lady Eugenia Kantakouzene]

158. Good and holy were the words of the divine David, prophet and king: “Lord, I love the habitation of thy house, and the place where thy glory dwells” (Ps. 25 [26]:8). For those who, like him, have a God-loving soul display continual concern for the care of all things divine and the maintenance of holy monasteries. As a result of that most prophetic text, good zeal enters into those who possess a noble spirit, and through worthy concern for the divine they obtain that blessed [p. 104] and everlasting life. Our holy lady Xene Philanthropene,⁸³ most honorable among nuns, constantly desired [this everlasting life], and therefore she restored at her own expense our venerable convent, which was threatening to collapse in several places. She arranged for its restoration in the year 6900, the fifteenth indiction [= 1392 A.D.]. When she died, her daughter, the most honorable among nuns and our holy lady, Eugenia Kantakouzene,⁸⁴ completely cleared the courtyard of her sister, the late lady Anna Kantakouzene, at her own cost and expense, and turned it into a wheat-field, whose value was set at 300 hyperpyra by the man who sought to purchase it. She gave it to our convent so that in exchange her holy mother might have the customary annual commemoration, which all the founders have, on the anniversary of her death, that is, on February 13 of the second indiction [= 1394 A.D.]. She also made a donation of gold in the year 6906 of the sixth indiction [= 1398 A.D.]. Furthermore, in the month of September of the ninth indiction [= 1400 A.D.] she sold the house of Marachas for 70 hyperpyra, which she requested and received from our mighty and holy lord and emperor Lord Manuel [II] Palaiologos, and with this money and another 130 hyperpyra, which makes all together 200 hyperpyra, she paid for the restoration and repair of the holy church and bell tower, which were in danger of collapsing. These hyperpyra were spent on tiles, nails, plaster, skilled labor and other appropriate expenses. Wherefore we who at present live in this convent and our successors ought to pray that their commemoration be continued in perpetuity, and that they may attain the right hand of Christ the Savior with all the saints and righteous people who have pleased God through the ages, Amen.

FOURTEENTH CENTURY

[Patronage of lady Eugenia Kantakouzene Philanthropene]

159. The aforementioned most honorable nun, our celebrated foundress, lady Eugenia Kantakouzene Philanthropene, [p. 105] as a true [great] granddaughter and heir of her celebrated forebears, our founders, generously demonstrated the same zeal and enthusiasm and concern for this holy and venerable convent of ours until her dying breath. For she was tonsured at a youthful age, and spent all her fortune on this holy convent. It was her dying wish to bequeath 100 hyperpyra so that the garden of the holy great martyr George might be planted and restored as a vineyard, and joined with the large vineyard of our convent for the sake of her spiritual salvation. Thus our convent and the nuns who dwell in it from now on and in the future ought to celebrate a commemoration annually for the sake of her soul on the anniversary of her departure to God, which is February 11 of the year 6910 [= 1402 A.D.]. For this is the day of her death, when we should customarily celebrate a commemoration, just as for our other celebrated founders, her forebears, since she displayed the same zeal and ardor and concern for her ancestral convent, in her longing to attain the heavenly bridal chamber and in her desire for the kingdom of Christ our God. May she be granted these [wishes] through the intercessions of our all-holy, immaculate, and exceedingly praised Lady, the Mother of God Bebaia Elpis, and all the saints, Amen.

Written in the month of March, tenth indiction, of the year 6910 [= 1402 A.D.].

Notes on the Translation

Editors' note: The assistance of our translator, Alice-Mary Talbot, is gratefully acknowledged for the notes to this document. She has offered a number of amended readings of the text (ed.) based on an independent examination of the manuscript (ms.)

1. John Chrysostom, Liturgia, ed. F. E. Brightman (London, 1896), p. 369, lines 27–29; p. 384, lines 27–28.
2. Cf. Gregory Nazianzen, Orationes 28.13 and 21.1, PG 36, col. 44A; PG 35, col. 1084B.
3. Constantine Komnenos Palaiologos Doukas Angelos; see also [113], [116] below. He is illustrated in the ms. of the typikon, fol. 1r.
4. Michael VIII Palaiologos.
5. Irene Branaina Komnene Laskarina Kantakouzene Palaiologina; see also [113], [116] below, and Donald Nicol, The Byzantine Family of Kantakouzenos (Cantacuzenus) ca. 1100–1460 (Washington, D.C., 1968), no. 11, pp. 10–11. She is illustrated in the ms. of the typikon, fol. 1r.
6. John Angelos Doukas Synadenos, Hannick and Schmalzbauer, “Die Synadenoi,” no. 22; see also [116] below. He is illustrated in the ms. of the typikon, fols. 2r and 7r; see Cutler and Magdalino, “Precisions,” p. 185, fig. 1 and (as the monk Joachim) 186, fig. 6.
7. Read houtos, hos kai ho pater ho emos; ed. omits houtos, hos kai.
8. Read me’ akribeias eidotes ho ti polles . . .
9. Euphrosyne Palaiologina, author of the second typikon; see [118], [146] below. She is illustrated in the ms. of the typikon, fols. 7r, 11r, and 12; see Cutler and Magdalino, “Precisions,” p. 186, fig. 6 and 187, fig. 7.
10. Theodore Doukas Synadenos the protostrator and John Palaiologos Synadenos the great constable, Hannick and Schmalzbauer, “Die Synadenoi,” nos. 24 and 23; see also [19], [119], and [121] below. Theodore is illustrated in the ms. of the typikon, fol. 8r; see Cutler and Magdalino, “Precisions,” p. 182, and 185, fig. 2. John is illustrated in fol. 3r; see Cutler and Magdalino, “Precisions,” p. 185, fig. 4.
11. Ed. omits hos echthros kai.
12. Lit: “any of those who live according to the flesh or those who live according to the spirit . . .”
13. See (22) Evergetis [13] and related documents.
14. Cf. Ammonius, In Porphyrii Isagogen, ed. A. Busse, Commentaria in Aristotelem Graeca, vol. 4, pt. 3 (Berlin, 1891), p. 6, line 27.
15. Read heauten for ed. auten.
16. John Chrysostom, Homiliae in Psalmos 5.1, PG 55, col. 63.15.
17. Cf. Basil, Ep. 2.3, PG 32, cols. 228B, 229A.
18. Cf. (37) Auxentios [3].
19. Galen, Ars medica, ed. C. G. Kuhn, vol. 1 (Leipzig, 1821–33), p. 381.
20. John Klimakos, Scala Paradisi 4, PG 88, col. 720D.
21. Cf. John Chrysostom, Hom. 30.2 in II Cor. (PG 61, col. 607).
22. Read ousai for ed. ousan.
23. Cf. the language of (22) Evergetis [37] and related documents.
24. enkanonos: not in the dictionaries.
25. Cf. the language of (39) Lips [28].
26. Ms. taxai for ed. taxan.
27. Cf. John Klimakos, Scala Paradisi 4, PG 88, col. 713D.
28. heautas; ed. omits.
29. Ms. houto for ed. houtoi.
30. E. Leutsch and F. Schneidewin, Corpus paroemiographorum graecorum, vol. 1 (Göttingen, 1839–51; repr. Hildesheim, 1958), p. 359, line 21.
31. The liturgical typikon of St. Sabas, ed. Dmitrievsky, Opisanie, vol. 3, pt. 2, pp. 1–508.

FOURTEENTH CENTURY

32. Cf. Numbers 20:17 and Pseudo-Basil of Caesarea, Constitutiones asceticae 4.2, PG 31, col. 1349B.
33. Cf. the language of (56) Kellibara II [3].
34. kellio; ed. omits.
35. Leutsch and Schneidewin, Corpus paroemiographorum graecorum, vol. 1, p. 320.
36. Cf. the similar language employed in (22) Evergetis [9], ed. lines 355–57.
37. Ms. argia esti kakon for ed. ergasia esti.
38. Cf. Basil of Caesarea, Regulae brevius tractatae 142 ([SR 142]), PG 31, col. 1177B.
39. Gregory Nazianzen, Oratio 40.7, PG 36, col. 365B.
40. John Klimakos, Scala paradisi 4, PG 88, col. 681B.
41. John Klimakos, Scala paradisi 4, PG 88, col. 705C.
42. Read hemeis for ed. hekeis.
43. Ms. polytelestera for ed. polyelestera.
44. Identified below in [116]; see also [6], [7] above.
45. Lacuna in ms.; soterias “salvation” has been supplied by the translator.
46. The founder’s husband; see also [9] above.
47. See also [6], [7], and [113] above.
48. manoualia.
49. See also [8], [9] above and [146] below.
50. See also [8] above and [121] below.
51. Ms. touto hos ephen to hemisy to de heteron hemisy; ed. omits hemisy to de heteron.
52. Ms. apokopenta for ed. apokopentas.
53. This and subsequent figures are left blank in the ms.
54. For this foundation, see Janin, Géographie, vol. 3, pp. 286–89.
55. adelphata; for which see E. Herman, “Die Regelung der Armut in den byzantinischen Klöstern,” OCP 7 (1941), 406–60, and P. Magdalino, “Adelphaton,” ODB, p. 19.
56. Thomais Komnene Doukaina Laskarina Kantakouzene Palaiologina, wife of John Palaiologos Synadenos; see [135] below.
57. For this foundation, see Janin, Géographie, vol. 3, p. 293, and [145] below.
58. Cf. the language of (55) Athanasios I [9].
59. Basil of Caesarea, Sermo asceticus I, PG 31, col. 888BC.
60. Ms. didaskalon for ed. didaskalou.
61. Leutsch and Schneidewin, Corpus paroemiographorum graecorum, vol. 1, p. 14, line 40.
62. See also [122] above.
63. Hannick and Schmalzbauer, “Die Synadenoi,” no. 28.
64. manoualia.
65. For this individual, see Cutler and Magdalino, “Precisions,” p. 181.
66. phengion (lit. “halo”) margaritaria. On syrmatinon (embroidered with gold thread), see Koukoules, Laographika, vol. 1, p. 437.
67. Ms. tapho for ms. tao.
68. Translation continued here from Baur, “Typikon,” pp. 635–36, which fills the lacuna indicated in the Delehayé edition, p. 94.
69. The so-called psychosabbata (Saturdays of All Souls).
70. prosporai.
71. Read auton for autes.
72. For this foundation, see Janin, Géographie, vol. 3, pp. 358–59.
73. For this foundation, see V. Laurent, “Une fondation monastique de Nicéphore Choumnos, He en KP mone Theotokou tes Gorgoepekoou,” REB 12 (1954), 32–44.
74. For this foundation, see Janin, Géographie, vol. 3, pp. 14–15.
75. Cf. Athanasios, Vita S. Antonii 77, PG 26, col. 952A.
76. Lacuna of at least one folio.

77. Lacuna of at least one folio.
78. There is no entry in Trapp, PLP, for John Theophilos. His wife, Maria Asanina, known only from this typikon, is listed as the “wife of John.” See PLP, no. 1532.
79. Empress Helena, daughter of the Serbian prince of Serres Constantine Dragaš and wife of Manuel II Palaiologos (1391–1425).
80. Siege of 1394–1402 by Bayazid. For the beginning and duration of this siege of Constantinople, see J. W. Barker, Manuel II Palaeologus (1391–1425): A Study in Late Byzantine Statesmanship (New Brunswick, N.J., 1969), Appendix X, pp. 479–81.
81. chottea; not in the dictionaries. This term may also denote a kind of basket. (28) Pantokrator [8] refers to “baskets (kaniskia) of kollyba.”
82. koulikion; the reference may be to unleavened bread (cf. Lampe, PGL, s.v. koulikion) or, as is more likely, to bread rolls in the shape of a ring like modern Greek koulouria. See Koukoules, BBP, vol. 5, p. 24.
83. Xene was most probably the monastic name of Anna Kantakouzene Philanthropene, a granddaughter of Theodora Synadene, the foundress of the convent. See D. M. Nicol, The Byzantine Family of Kantakouzenos (Cantacuzenus) ca. 1100–1460 (Washington, D.C., 1968), nos. 40 and 56.
84. Eugenia was Xene’s daughter and therefore a great granddaughter of the original foundress. See Nicol, Kantakouzenos, no. 55.

Document Notes

1. First Typikon of Theodora Synadene

Introduction. Equivalent to (27) Kecharitomene, Prologue.

The first thirteen chapters discuss the founder’s personal history, the background to the foundation, and the purpose of the typikon. Summary titles are listed here to facilitate reference.

- [1] Building religious foundations is the best way to show love for God.
 [2] Such activity fulfills God’s greatest commandments.
 [3] Scriptural and patristic support.
 [4] Foundation history.
 [5] Foundation is an offering of thanksgiving.
 [6] Praise of the founder’s father and [7] mother.
 [8] Founder’s autobiography.
 [9] Dedication of the founder’s daughter.
 [10] Recruitment of other nuns.
 [11] Dedication to the Mother of God.
 [12] Reason for the present typikon.
 [13] The Mother of God to be the guardian of the typikon.

I. Independence of the foundation. Equivalent to (27) Kecharitomene [1] and (39) Lips [1], [2].

- [14] Declaration of freedom and autonomy. For other assertions of institutional independence in Palaiologan times, see (37) Auxentios [2], (38) Kellibara I [15], (39) Lips [1], (40) Anargyroi [3], (58) Menoikeion [3], and (60) Charsianeites [C18].
- [15] Subordination or concession not allowed. See also similar provisions in (38) Kellibara I [15], (39) Lips [1], and (40) Anargyroi [3].
- [16] Restriction of patriarchal rights. See also [26] below; for the treatment of these rights elsewhere in Palaiologan times, see (38) Kellibara I [15], (39) Lips [1], (50) Gerasimos [4], and (60) Charsianeites [C12].
- [17] Curses on violators. See also [123] below; for the use of such curses in other Palaiologan documents, see (37) Auxentios [2]; (49) Geromeri [16]; (50) Gerasimos [5]; (51) Koutloumoussi [A15], [B20]; (54) Neilos Damilas [24]; and (60) Charsianeites [B22].

FOURTEENTH CENTURY

II. Guardianship of the convent. Equivalent to (27) Kecharitomene [3] and (39) Lips [3].

[18] Frail nature of women requires a male protectorate. (39) Lips [3] entrusts the protectorate of its convent to the emperor.

[19] Appointment of the first ephor; qualifications for office. See also (27) Kecharitomene [3], (32) Mamas [3], (33) Heliou Bomon [3], (34) Machairas [147], (37) Auxentios [16], (38) Kellibara I [16], (39) Lips [3], (45) Neophytos [7], (50) Gerasimos [4], and (58) Menoikeion [21].

[20] Duties of the ephor. See other treatments in (27) Kecharitomene [3], (32) Mamas [3], (33) Heliou Bomon [3], (34) Machairas [147], (37) Auxentios [16], (38) Kellibara I [16], (39) Lips [3], (45) Neophytos [7], and (58) Menoikeion [21].

III. Number of nuns; qualifications for the office of superior and election procedures. Equivalent to (27) Kecharitomene [5], [11], and (39) Lips [4], [5].

[21] Purpose of this chapter. Anticipates [22] and [23] below.

[22] Problems of having too many or too few nuns. See also the viewpoints discussed in (22) Evergetis [23] and (45) Neophytos [9], [C16].

[23] Number of nuns fixed at 30; provision for appointment of officials. See [146] below for the subsequent increase in the number of nuns. For detailed provisions for the steward and the storekeeper, see [54], [55] and [68] below.

[24] Qualifications for the office of superior. See also [26] below.

[25] The new superior to be selected internally. (39) Lips [5] also envisions internal selection, while (27) Kecharitomene [11] permits the election of outside candidates.

[26] Election procedures; qualifications for office; patriarchal investiture with the pastoral staff. See also provisions for elections in other convents in (27) Kecharitomene [11], (39) Lips [5], (40) Anargyroi [5], and (54) Neilos Damilas [18]. For qualifications, see also [24] above. For patriarchal installation elsewhere, see (30) Phoberos [33], (32) Mamas [1], (33) Heliou Bomon [1].

IV. Admonitory discourse to the superior.

These ten chapters constitute another self-contained discourse; summary titles are listed here to facilitate reference.

[27] Exhortation to emulate a manly temperament.

[28] Superior to fight against demons.

[29] Required personal qualities.

[30] Endorsement of the value of studying female hagiography.

[31] A dignified way of life is the perfect archetype.

[32] Authority for correction of nuns' faults.

[33] Need for dispassionate correction.

[34] Contrast of exterior and interior deportment.

[35] Need to honor the useful but show love for all.

[36] Reason for foreshortening the discourse.

V. Hortatory address to the nuns on obedience.

These eleven chapters constitute another self-contained discourse; summary titles are listed here to facilitate reference.

[37] Unhesitating obedience to the superior.

[38] Nature of the obedience required.

[39] Benefits of obedience.

[40] Scriptural and patristic justification.

[41] Obedience an atonement for the sin of the foremother Eve.

[42] No pietistic observances without the superior's permission.

[43] Obedience requires divorce from all worldly desires.

57. BEBAIA ELPIS

[44] Nothing the superior orders can be challenged.

[45] Appropriate behavior of nuns towards one another.

[46] No contentiousness, private property or private friendships. [47] Convent to be a model of life in the hereafter.

VI. The ecclesiarchissa. Equivalent to (27) Kecharitomene [20] and (39) Lips [24].

[48] Community analogous to the head and body parts. For the notion of the monastery as a mystical body, see the Pseudo-Basilian Constitutiones asceticae, PG 31, cols. 1381B, 1396B, 1417BD, and 1421A.

[49] Rank of the ecclesiarchissa and the steward. In (39) Lips [24], cf. [21] the ecclesiarchissa ranks below the sacristan.

[50] Personal and professional qualifications. See also the guidelines for performance of services in (54) Neilos Damilas [12].

[51] Responsibilities as choir director; [52] for decoration of the church; [53] other duties. See also (27) Kecharitomene [20], (32) Mamas [8], (33) Heliou Bomon [8], (34) Machairas [93], (39) Lips [24], and (58) Menoikeion [4].

VII. The steward. Equivalent to (27) Kecharitomene [14] and (39) Lips [25].

[54] Selection and qualifications. The appointment is foreseen in [23] above. See also other provisions for this official in convents in (27) Kecharitomene [14], (39) Lips [25], (40) Anargyroi [5], and (54) Neilos Damilas [18].

[55] Responsibilities. See cross-references in [54] above.

VIII. Choir sisters and their responsibilities.

For the division of monastic communities into choir and household monks, see also (35) Skoteine [14], (37) Auxentios [6], (38) Kellibara I [17], (39) Lips [4], (40) Anargyroi [6], and (45) Neophytos [9]. For their duties elsewhere, see (39) Lips [28] and (54) Neilos Damilas [10] ff. Summary titles of the following four chapters are listed to facilitate reference.

[56] Performance of church services their sole duty.

[57] Scriptural exhortations.

[58] Evil consequences of distraction.

[59] Offices must be performed conscientiously to be efficacious.

IX. Duties of the household nuns.

For related discussions in other documents, see (22) Evergetis [33] and related documents; (32) Mamas [21], [35]; (33) Heliou Bomon [21], [34]; (34) Machairas [49]; (39) Lips [27]; and (58) Menoikeion [17]. Summary titles of the following five chapters are listed to facilitate reference.

[60] Should season their work with prayers.

[61] Should attend offices whenever they have free time.

[62] Appropriate deportment at services; no handiwork allowed.

[63] Justification for the prohibition on handiwork.

[64] Conditions for sharing in blessings of the choir sisters.

X. Punishment of negligent nuns.

[65] Faults that must be corrected and their appropriate punishments. See also [32], [33] above.

[66] Appropriate activities in the cells; no idle conversations or private handicrafts. For the ban on private handicrafts, see also (47) Philanthropos [2], but cf. (54) Neilos Damilas [7].

[67] Qualifications and duties of the disciplinary official. See also the provisions for this official in (27) Kecharitomene [26].

XI. Keeper and supervisor of the storeroom.

[68] Qualifications and duties. The appointment is foreseen in [23] above; see also the provisions for similar officials in (27) Kecharitomene [28].

FOURTEENTH CENTURY

XII. The cellarer, refectorian, and other kitchen assistants.

- [69] Qualifications and duties of the cellarer and refectorian. For the cellarer, see the provisions for the wine stewardess and the provisioner in (27) Kecharitomene [22], [23]; (32) Mamas [11], (33) Heliou Bomon [11], and (34) Machairas [96] also discuss the provisioner. For the refectorian, see also (27) Kecharitomene [25].
- [70] Other kitchen assistants. For bakers and cooks in other documents, see (23) Pakourianos [6]; (28) Pantokrator [19], [43], [52]; (32) Mamas [11], [48] (signature); (38) Kellibara I [17]; (39) Lips [51]; (56) Kellibara II [2]; and (58) Menoikeion [6].
- [71] Kitchen staff to behave as if serving Christ himself.

XIII. The gatekeeper. Equivalent to (27) Kecharitomene [17], [29].

- [72] Qualifications and duties; procedures for access to the convent. See also (27) Kecharitomene [17], [29]; (32) Mamas [12]; (33) Heliou Bomon [12]; (34) Machairas [116]; (39) Lips [9], [15], [16]; (40) Anargyroi [5]; (52) Choumnos [A14]; (54) Neilos Damilas [16]; (58) Menoikeion [7]; and (59) Manuel II [5].

XIV. Election of the aforementioned officials.

- [73] Use of a common election and vote to choose officials. A unique provision; for the selection of officials in other convents, see (27) Kecharitomene [25] and (39) Lips [10], [21].
- [74] Procedures for elections. Cf. the procedures for electing the superior in [26] above.

XV. Visitation privileges.

- [75] Nuns can pray for relatives but not become emotionally involved. See also (54) Neilos Damilas [7].
- [76] Procedure for visits to the convent. See also provisions for other convents in (27) Kecharitomene [17], [29], [80]; (39) Lips [16]; and (54) Neilos Damilas [16].
- [77] Visitation of relatives at home. See also provisions in (27) Kecharitomene [17] and (39) Lips [15].

XVI. Observance of the liturgical typikon of Jerusalem.

- [78] Endorsement of the Jerusalem typikon. For other endorsements of this document in Palaiologan times, see (37) Auxentios [8], [10]; (39) Lips [29], [30], [31], [32], [33]; (56) Kellibara II [1]; and (58) Menoikeion [4], [16].
- [79] Authoritative for liturgical services; a priest will celebrate the liturgy four times a week; his qualifications and duties. For frequency of the liturgy in other Palaiologan institutions, see (39) Lips [30], (40) Anargyroi [5], (54) Neilos Damilas [9], (58) Menoikeion [16], and (60) Charsianeites [A11]. For the employment of priests in other convents, see (27) Kecharitomene [15], (39) Lips [6], (40) Anargyroi [5], and (554) Neilos Damilas [9], [14].
- [80] Authoritative for the dietary regime. So also (37) Auxentios [10]; (39) Lips [29], [32], [33]; (56) Kellibara II [1]; and (58) Menoikeion [16].
- [81] Governs consumption of olive oil and wine, performance of genuflections. So also (39) Lips [32] and (58) Menoikeion [16].
- [82] Governs diet during fasts. So also, implicitly, (39) Lips [29].

XVII. Common diet.

- [83] Same food and drink for all; equal portions, same quality; one time and place for communal meals. See also (22) Evergetis [26] and related documents, especially (27) Kecharitomene [56], (37) Auxentios [7], (52) Choumnos [B20], (53) Meteora [3], (55) Athanasios I [4], (58) Menoikeion [106], and (60) Charsianeites [C3].
- [84] No secret eating or drinking in cells; procedures for sharing gifts of food from relatives. See also (22) Evergetis [9], [22] and related documents, (27) Kecharitomene [49], (39) Lips [29], (52) Choumnos [B20], (56) Kellibara II [3], and (60) Charsianeites [C3].
- [85] Mealtime scriptural reading; the superior only may speak. See also (22) Evergetis [9] and related documents, especially (27) Kecharitomene [40], (39) Lips [29], (58) Menoikeion [8], and (60) Charsianeites [C10].

57. BEBAIA ELPIS

- [86] Nuns not to observe what others eat and how; overeating to be avoided. See also (56) Kellibara II [4].
- [87] Eating not to be pleasurable, only a means of survival. See also the argument in [102] below for the purpose of clothing.
- [88] Frequency of purchases of food outside the convent. For a food purchaser in another convent, see (27) Kecharitomene [21]; cf. (37) Auxentios [7].
- [89] Daily distribution of leftovers at the gate. See also similar provisions in (28) Pantokrator [11], (29) Kosmosoteira [6], (32) Mamas [13], (33) Heliou Bomon [13], and (58) Menoikeion [7].

XVIII. Care for sick nuns.

- [90] Doctor should be summoned and his recommendations followed. See also provisions for other convents in (27) Kecharitomene [57] and (39) Lips [35].
- [91] Costs of treatment to be borne by the convent. So also, by implication, (39) Lips [33], but cf. (60) Charsianeites [B13].
- [92] Nuns not to begrudge special treatment accorded the sick. See related discussions in (32) Mamas [33] and (33) Heliou Bomon [34].
- [93] Similar concessions to noble women. See also the provisions in (27) Kecharitomene [4] and (39) Lips [40], [41].
- [94] Servants permitted to noble women. So also (27) Kecharitomene [4] and (39) Lips [40], [41].

XIX. Handicrafts.

- [95] Justification of manual labor. See also the argumentation of (45) Neophytos [C6] and (52) Choumnos [B18].
- [96] Procedures for work; no production for private use. For the former, see also (37) Auxentios [6], [7] and (54) Neilos Damilas [10]; for the latter, see also (34) Machairas [120], (45) Neophytos [C13], and (54) Neilos Damilas [7], cf. [6] and (53) Meteora [4].
- [97] Nuns will be supplied with garments they make for themselves. For the manufacture of clothing, see (54) Neilos Damilas [8]; for the communal supply of clothing in other convents, see (27) Kecharitomene [28], cf. [56] and (39) Lips [36].
- [98] Items of clothing distributed annually. See also similar provisions for other Palaiologan monasteries in (37) Auxentios [7], (39) Lips [36], and (56) Kellibara II [8].
- [99] Items of clothing distributed every three years. See also similar provisions for other Palaiologan monasteries in (37) Auxentios [7], (39) Lips [36], and (56) Kellibara II [8].
- [100] Nitre for washing clothes. See also (28) Pantokrator [52] which provides a weekly allowance to laundresses to pay for soap to wash the clothes of hospital patients.
- [101] Linseed oil for lamps; bathing allowed four times a year. For another allotment of linseed oil, see (28) Pantokrator [50]. For bathing in other Palaiologan monasteries, see (39) Lips [34], (56) Kellibara II [5], and (58) Menoikeion [15]; for bathing the sick, see [90] above.
- [102] Purpose of clothing. See also the argument in [87] above for the purpose of eating.
- [103] Nuns to imitate John the Baptist and the holy women of old.
- [104] Clothes to be inexpensive but dignified.

XX. Obligatory daily confession.

- For related discussions in other documents, see (22) Evergetis [7], [15] and related documents, (27) Kecharitomene [16], (39) Lips [11], (52) Choumnos [B10], (54) Neilos Damilas [9], (58) Menoikeion [13], and (60) Charsianeites [C6]. Summary titles of the following seven chapters are listed to facilitate reference.
- [105] Importance of confession.
- [106] Confession a powerful, salvific drug.
- [107] Scriptural and patristic testimony to its importance.
- [108] Shame as an impediment to confession.
- [109] Frequent confession better than facing the Last Judgment.

FOURTEENTH CENTURY

- [110] Impossibility of salvation without confession.
- [111] Importance of choosing a skilled spiritual father.

XXI. Feast Day of the Mother of God.

- [112] Prescriptions for services, church decoration, the feast, and the charitable distribution at the gate. See also other provisions for this feast in (22) Evergetis [11]; (23) Pakourianos [11]; (27) Kecharitomene [59]; (29) Kosmosoteira [10], [29], [65]; (34) Machairas [29]; and (39) Lips [38].

XXII. Commemorations for the founder, her parents, and family.

For similar provisions in other Palaiologan documents, see (37) Auxentios [13], (39) Lips [30], (46) Akropolites [6], (48) Prodrornos [9], and (58) Menoikeion [16]. Summary titles of the following seven chapters are listed to facilitate reference.

- [113] Commemoration of the founder's parents.
- [114] Prescriptions for the liturgy and feast.
- [115] Charitable distribution at the gate.
- [116] Commemoration of the founder's husband.
- [117] Founder's commemoration.
- [118] No commemoration of the founder's daughter.
- [119] Commemoration of the founder's sons.

XXIII. Inventory of consecrated properties.

- [120] Monthly reading of the typikon. For similar provisions, see also (22) Evergetis [43], (37) Auxentios [13], (39) Lips [8], (55) Athanasios I [8], (58) Menoikeion [9], and (60) Charsianeites [C10].
- [121] Principal endowed properties; [122] Properties endowed by others. For the distinction, see also (28) Pantokrator [65] and (39) Lips [48].
- [123] Donation of two vineyards; curses on transgressors. For a separate donation of a vineyard, see also (49) Geromeri [13]. For similar curses, see [17] above, with cross-references.
- [124] Identification and use of reserved properties; founder's daughter is the convent's heir. For non-consecrated properties in other documents, see (19) Attaleiates [17] and (27) Kecharitomene [79]. For the forthright identification of a founder's child as a monastery's heir, see also (19) Attaleiates [10].

XXIV. Hortatory epilogue.

These nine chapters constitute another self-contained discourse; summary titles are listed here to facilitate reference.

- [125] Need for enthusiastic acceptance of the typikon.
- [126] Nuns must be obedient even when the superior bids a relaxation in discipline.
- [127] Obedience and humility are the moral base of the foundation. Cf. (54) Neilos Damilas [3].
- [128] Nuns to demonstrate that the founder has not "sown the seeds of exhortation in barren earth."
- [129] Superior to teach and transmit the principles of the typikon. Cf. (55) Athanasios I [8].
- [130] Superior's preservation of the typikon demonstrates true leadership.
- [131] Even wild beasts will obey the superior out of respect for her virtue.
- [132] Second endorsement of the value of hagiography. Cf. [30] above.
- [133] Rewards for precise observance of the typikon.

Appendix: Additional commemorations for the founder's relatives.

For similar provisions in other Palaiologan documents, see cross-references in XXII above. Summary titles of the following eleven chapters are listed to facilitate reference.

- [134] Commemoration of the founder's parents, daughter, and sons.
- [135] Commemoration of the founder's daughter-in-law Thomais Komnene Doukaina Laskarina Kantakouzene.
- [136] Commemoration of the founder's granddaughter Theodora Komnene Doukanina Raoulaina.
- [137] Commemoration of the founder's brother Michael Komnenos Branias.

57. BEBAIA ELPIS

- [138] Commemoration of the founder's brother Andronikos Komnenos Branias Doukas Angelos.
- [139] Commemoration of the founder's sister Maria Komnene Branaina Laskarina Doukaina Tornikina.
- [140] Commemoration of the founder's sister's husband Isaac Komnenos Doukas Tornikes.
- [141] Commemoration of the founder's nephew Andronikos Komnenos Doukas Tornikes.
- [142] Commemoration of the founder's nephew John Komnenos Doukas Angelos Branias.
- [143] Commemoration of Theodore Doukas Mouzakios, father-in-law of the founder's son; her daughter's donation for repair of cells.
- [144] Permission to decrease expenses; bread offerings on Meatfare and Pentecost Saturdays. See also [151] and [154] below.

Boundaries of the convent.

- [145] Description of neighboring institutions and landmarks. See similar property delineations in (27) Kecharitomene, Delineation of the convent.

2. Second typikon of Euphrosyne Palaeologina

Introduction.

- [146] Number of nuns increased to fifty. For the original number of nuns, see [23] above; for rationale, see [147] below.

I. Number of nuns not to exceed fifty.

- [147] Rationalization.

II. No education of lay children.

- [148] No education of lay children except for girls who want to be nuns. For a similar ban, see also (53) Meteora [6], but for education of future monks, see (23) Pakourianos [31], (34) Machairas [115], and (36) Blenmydes [9].

III. Commemorations for individual nuns.

- [149] Prescriptions.

IV. General commemorations for the nuns.

- [150] Prescriptions.

V. Offerings for deceased nuns.

- [151] Consecrated bread be offered for departed nuns on Saturdays of Meatfare and Pentecost. See also [144] above and [154] below.

VI. Faithful observance of these instructions.

- [152] Discussion of the obligation.

VII. Euphrosyne's own commemoration.

- [153] To be performed as she will order at time of her death.

VIII. Brief hortatory admonition.

- [154] Preservation of cenobitic life; performance of commemorations; general commemoration on Meatfare and Pentecost Saturdays. See also [149], [150], [151], and [153] above.

Commemorations for the bishops of Ephesos and Mytilene.

- [155] Scriptural quotation.

- [156] Donations made by the bishops.

Commemoration for lord John Theophilos and his wife Maria Asanina.

- [157] Discussion of contractual issues.

Commemoration for lady Xene Philanthropene and her daughter Eugenia Kantakouzene.

FOURTEENTH CENTURY

[158] Benefactions of Xene Philanthropene; her commemoration.

Patronage of Eugenia Kantakouzene Philanthropene.

[159] Bequests of Eugenia Kantakouzene Philanthropene; her commemoration.

58. Menoikeion: Typikon of Joachim, Metropolitan of Zichna, for the Monastery of St. John the Forerunner on Mount Menoikeion near Serres

Date: 1332¹

Translator: Timothy Miller

Edition: André Guillou, Les archives de saint-Jean-Prodrôme sur le mont Ménécée (Paris, 1955), pp. 161–76, with text at 163–76.

Manuscript: Codex Atheniensis 2587 (late 18th c.)²

Other translations: None

Institutional History

*A. Foundation of the Monastery*³

The monastery of St. John the Baptist the Forerunner, located on Mount Menoikeion northeast of Serres in northeastern Greece, owes its foundation to Ioannikios, a former Athonite monk who settled [1] here circa 1275. The original foundation was likely quite modest. He was joined by his nephew Joachim, an orphan and author of the typikon translated below, whom Ioannikios introduced to monastic life. Circa 1287–88, Joachim was chosen bishop of Zichna, a fortified town southeast of the monastery. In 1290, his uncle Ioannikios was also honored with the episcopal see of Ezivai (Ezova), a village some distance to the south of Menoikeion, which prompted him to leave the monastery under the direction of Ioannikios Kaloudes. Upon the founder Ioannikios' death, circa 1300, his nephew Joachim inherited [1] the monastery.

*B. Joachim of Zichna's Patronage of the Monastery*⁴

Joachim of Zichna, though he apparently never himself served as superior of the monastery, was primarily responsible for making it an important institution. He built the still-existing *katholikon*⁵ and a refectory. He also continued a successful tradition, begun by his uncle, of obtaining imperial patronage for the monastery. In 1304, the monastery came under the protection of Simonis, daughter of Andronikos II and wife of Stefan Uroš II Milutin of Serbia.⁶ Though damaged by the depredations of the infamous Catalan Company in 1307–1308, the monastery survived and continued to prosper.

In 1324, Joachim issued his first typikon for Menoikeion. Confirmations issued subsequently by Andronikos II and Patriarch Isaias survive,⁷ but not the document itself. During the civil war between the old emperor Andronikos II and his grandson Andronikos III, Joachim was a supporter of the latter, so the monastery benefited when he secured the throne in 1328. In 1332, Joachim resigned his position as bishop of Zichna and retired to Menoikeion, where he drew up the second version of the monastery's typikon that is preserved and translated below. A ratification of this document by Andronikos III recognizes the monastery's independence from both ecclesiastical and civil authorities.⁸ At about this same time the monastery came under the patronage of the mezas domestikos and future emperor John Kantakouzenos. According to tradition, Joachim died in December 1333.

FOURTEENTH CENTURY

C. The Monastery under Serbian and Turkish Rule⁹

In the 1340s, the Serbian ruler Stefan Uroš IV Dušan (1331–55) took advantage of the civil war between John V Palaiologos (1341–91) and John VI Kantakouzenos (1347–54) to conquer nearly all of northern Greece, including the vicinity of Serres where Menoikeion was located. In 1345, he issued a chrysobull for the monastery that confirmed its possessions and awarded it new donations of landed property.¹⁰ The monastery fared less well once the Ottoman Turks became established in this area, losing much of its property. Firmans issued by sultans Murad I (1372) and Mehmet I (1413) exempted the monastery's surviving properties and the monks themselves from fiscal obligations. Gennadios II Scholarios, the first patriarch of Constantinople chosen after the fall of the city to the Turks, chose to retire to Menoikeion in 1465, and died there circa 1472.

The monastery was in a state of decline throughout the sixteenth century. An arrangement circa 1650 under which four prominent residents of Serres agreed to serve as the monastery's guardians did not suffice to prevent Menoikeion from being deprived of its last properties in the course of the eighteenth century. The monastery was abandoned in 1729, then repopulated by the end of the century by a group of idiorhythmic monks, whose new constitutional organization Patriarch Gerasimos recognized in 1795.

The early nineteenth century brought a partial revival of the monastery's fortunes, but also saw a devastating fire sweep the foundation in 1830. Its superior Damaskenos played a role in the Greek War for Independence. A succession of superiors in the late nineteenth century kept the monastery in existence through a gradual accumulation of additional properties for its endowment.

D. The Monastery in Modern Times

At the beginning of the twentieth century, the superior Christophoros composed a history of the foundation that is still important because he had access to some documents, including three imperial chrysobulls, the originals of which have since disappeared.¹¹ In 1955, Guillou published a painstaking reconstruction, based on nineteenth-century copies, of the two cartularies of the monastery. Cartulary A, called by Christophoros the "Founder's Codex," which was copied between 1345 and 1352, contained the text of the second typikon of 1332. Cartulary B, evidently begun in the fourteenth century, contained documents from 1356 down to 1819.¹² Both of these documents were among the manuscripts stolen in June 1917 in the course of the First World War and removed to Bulgaria. They have since disappeared without a trace. Yet the monastery itself has survived down to the present day, at which time it operates as a nunnery.

Analysis

This document, which is textually linked to the increasingly remote Evergetian monastic reform tradition, principally illustrates how most of the important elements of that tradition had been abandoned or altered beyond recognition over the course of nearly three centuries since the composition of (22) Evergetis. The foundation for which this document was written, though nominally “independent” [3], has clearly had this independence compromised by the imposition of a powerful lay protectorate that is explicitly declared [21] to be the equivalent of private ownership (ktetoreia).

A. Model Typikon

Of the document’s twenty-two chapters, only nine (Group A) have no obvious textual dependency on earlier documents in our collection.¹³ The remaining thirteen chapters (Group B) are clearly linked to earlier documents in the Evergetian tradition.¹⁴ Of these, two (Subgroup B.1) are shared only with (32) Mamas,¹⁵ one (Subgroup B.2) is shared with both (32) Mamas and (22) Evergetis,¹⁶ while four (Subgroup B.3) are shared with both (32) Mamas and (27) Kecharitomene,¹⁷ and six chapters (Subgroup B.4) are shared with (32) Mamas, (27) Kecharitomene, and (22) Evergetis itself.¹⁸ There is no evidence for direct borrowing from (22) Evergetis nor from either (27) Kecharitomene or even its presumed twin, the lost twelfth-century typikon of the Philanthropos monastery.

This document therefore is a genuine if also decidedly hard-to-recognize member of the Evergetian tradition, through the mediation of (32) Mamas, over 275 years after the foundation of Evergetis in the mid-eleventh century. As with earlier textually dependent documents in our collection, the borrowings are layered reflections of the contributions of various generations of participants in the monastic reform movement. The chapters of Subgroup B.1 reflect the Maman interests in bolstering the authoritativeness of the typikon and in allowing for outside confessors. The single chapter in Subgroup B.2 reflects the practice of manual labor outside the monastery that was for practical reasons not a part of (27) Kecharitomene. The chapters of Subgroup B.3 represent the administrative and anti-kelliotic contributions of the second generation of the monastic reform (for which see Chapter Six). The chapters of Subgroup B.4 represent the bedrock of the surviving Evergetian tradition preserved through nearly three centuries of revision and adaptation and incorporated into the present document.

Since (32) Mamas apparently served as the conduit for all of these materials, a discussion of the present document’s relationship to that text is in order. An understanding of the document’s structure and claim to originality is a necessary preliminary. Among the chapters of Group A, our author’s original stamp is indisputable in his foundation history [1], his explanation of the reasons for drawing up the typikon [2], and his defense of the monastery’s independence [3]. The Evergetian borrowings occur exclusively in the middle of the typikon, in the large section between [4] and [20], yet even in the textually dependent chapters there are substantial abridgements (cf. [16] and (32) Mamas [32]), extensive editorial interpolations (e.g., [20]), and supplements (e.g. [5]) of the texts of the corresponding chapters of (32) Mamas. One chapter [7] combines text from two separate Maman chapters. The reference in (32) Mamas [46] to the Evergetian liturgical typikon, which had been losing favor with founders as early as the 1160s (see (33) Heliou Bomon [8]), is deleted in [20]. There is an announced compositional break after [20], followed by more indisputably original (but badly organized) material in [21] and [22] which set up the protectorate, the foundation’s administrative board, and provide the author’s idiosyncratic disciplinary regulations. A chapter listed in the document’s table of contents has disappeared in the author’s consolidation of three of the announced chapters ([21] through [23]) into two [21], [22]. The shift in tone to a more personal style here is as noticeable as and even more abrupt than those that accompany the transitions in (29) Kosmosoteira.

Aside from those chapters of Group A mentioned in the preceding discussion, there remain four that could represent additional independent work of our author. Of these, [12], [14], [15], along with a substantial portion of the Maman-dependent [16], may indeed be original to our author. However, the discussion [6] of the duties of the cellarer and refectorian is a thoroughly unoriginal, boilerplate chapter even though it is textually independent of its Maman counterpart, (32) Mamas [11], and cannot be traced to any other surviving document. This chapter is easier to explain as a derivation from a lost intermediary document composed sometime during the 174 years that lie between (32) Mamas and (58) Menoikeion. An Evergetian usage, the option of allowing a deposed official to remain in the monastery (cf. (22) Evergetis [14]) that is found in the concluding non-Maman portion of [5], is another part of the case for an intermediary other than (32) Mamas, as is the aforementioned combination of two Maman chapters in [7], an unusual editorial practice for an author working directly from one of our extant documents. Moreover, the extensive textual interpolations found in [20] are atypical; generally our authors lifted passages from their models in large sections into which they then introduced only the minimum number of necessary changes, showing a remarkable reverence for the wording of the models even if a contrary meaning was to be introduced (cf. (30) Phoberos [28]). Where this is not the case, as in (11) Ath. Rule's adaption of the two versions of (4) Studios, a complex source tradition is documented or (as here) is to be suspected.

All things considered, it is not surprising that our author, like his thirteenth-century counterpart the author of (34) Machairas, utilized an exemplar of the Maman tradition for his model rather than (22) Evergetis itself, not only because documents descended from (32) Mamas were likely to be more ideologically congenial to him but also because (22) Evergetis, like its companion liturgical typikon, may well have fallen out of circulation after the twelfth century. Since it is unlikely that our author is copying directly from (32) Mamas, however, it cannot be determined with certainty whether the subsequent divergences from that text are his work or that of some earlier unidentifiable intermediary. In any event, these differences are consonant with the general trend away from the precepts of the Evergetian monastic reform with the partial exception here of the core teaching of the primacy of cenobiticism.

B. Relationship of the Document to the First Typikon of 1324

This document was evidently hastily re-edited from the text of the first typikon of 1324 prepared some eight years earlier. The present document's table of contents does not form a perfect match with the actual contents of our typikon. In the interval between the first and second typika, Andronikos III (1328–41) successfully concluded his revolt against his grandfather Andronikos II (1282–1328). Both rulers had bid for Menoikeion's support, and the present document, by referring to both emperors and later to only one, reflects [1] the changed political circumstances of this troubled era. Finally, there is an apparent transitional statement at the end of [20], which serves to introduce materials apparently not in the first typikon, including the identification of the protector John Kantakouzenos and a discussion of his role. Earlier, Menoikeion's patron, the Serbian queen Simonis, may have fulfilled this role. Significantly, this is also the section of the document in which the table of contents fails to match the actual content.

C. Lives of the Monks

1. Number of Monks

There is no discussion of a limit on the number of monks at the foundation. Boys and youths under the age of twenty were not eligible [14] for admission even though the author indicates [1] that he was himself tonsured at an age when he was “able to grasp nothing of his [uncle’s] angelic way of life and conduct.” The author follows [11] the monastic reform tradition (see (32) Mamas [26]) in rejecting imposed guests (katapemptoi) as being incompatible with his foundation’s status as an independent monastery.

2. Liturgical Duties

Like most foundations in this era, this monastery adopts [16], cf. [4] the liturgical typikon of St. Sabas as its model for liturgical services. As in (32) Mamas [8], the ecclesiarch, with the support of an assistant ecclesiarch, was to be in charge of the services. In addition to the customary performance of the canonical hours, the holy liturgy was to be performed [16] four times a week (every non-fast day), with the Tuesday service being held in honor of the patron saint, the Thursday service for the monastery’s founders, the Saturday service for the departed, and the Sunday service for the emperors.

3. Manual Labor

The author mentions manual labor in two passages from this document’s Maman model, in one of which he urges [10] monks to welcome assignments to responsibilities outside the church (cf. (32) Mamas [23]) and in the other he provides [17] for the disciplining of monks guilty of using inappropriate language during their work (cf. (32) Mamas [35]). Elsewhere, vineyard workers, bakers and cooks are mentioned [12] in passing in connection with laborers to whom the superior might grant extra clothes.

4. Sacramental Life

In a passage that in effect adopts and abridges (32) Mamas [32], the author provides [16] for a restricted reception of the eucharist, once a week (on Sundays) for virtuous monks, but only three or four times a year or so for others, at the discretion of a communicant’s spiritual father. Thus he adopts the principle of adjusting frequency to the communicant’s moral probity first found in these documents in (22) Evergetis [5], and follows the long-term trend to restrict access to the sacrament (cf. (32) Mamas [32], which allows the “less virtuous” to receive once every month or two).

The monks were also to have their confessions heard [13] by spiritual fathers (not necessarily by the superior). This follows the more permissive attitude towards allowing the monks to select their own confessors found in (32) Mamas [29], one of the important divergences of that document from the original Evergetian tradition.

5. Cenobitic Life

The document’s relatively old ideological ancestry shows in the author’s prohibition [11] of kelliotic monks, a provision derived ultimately from the twelfth-century reform tradition (cf. (27) Kecharitomene [53] and (32) Mamas [26]). Even monks of exalted status, who otherwise enjoyed a privileged status in this monastery, were obliged to observe the cenobitic rule. On the other hand, the document is also like its somewhat less than rigorously cenobitic model in permitting [11] these monks to have servants (cf. (32) Mamas [26]) and in granting [12] all the monks annual cash allowances (eulogia), rejected earlier in (56) Kellibara II [9], perhaps for the purchase of items of clothing in addition to the shoes and boots that were provided to them directly (cf. (32) Mamas [28]).

6. Diet

Like some of his contemporaries (e.g., the authors of (39) Lips [29], [32] and (57) Bebaia Elpis) who generally recommended the liturgical typikon of St. Sabas as authoritative for the regulation of diet, our author here supplements [8] this recommendation with his own rules for “free (non-fast) days,” fast days, and the Lenten and other traditional fasts. He allows the superior discretion to make dietary ameliorations on dominical and other major feasts. Refectory procedures are an abridgement of the Evergetian prescriptions found in (32) Mamas [17].

7. Bathing

The monks were permitted [15] to bathe four times a year in facilities set aside for this purpose in the monastery itself. The frequency is considerably less than the monthly baths permitted in (32) Mamas [28], of which this chapter is textually independent, but identical to the frequency set for contemporary nuns in (39) Lips [34] and (57) Bebaia Elpis [101].

D. Constitutional Matters

1. Free and Independent Status

The monastery’s independence had been confirmed [3], [11] by a constitution (prostagma) of Emperor Andronikos III (1328–41). The traditional list of condemnations of possible violators of this independence appears [22] at the end of the typikon. The author was particularly concerned that someone might attempt to take control of the monastery by imperial decree, perhaps under the pretext of assisting the foundation financially.

Throughout the Palaiologan era, allegiance to the traditional Evergetian notion of institutional independence seems to weaken among the authors of the documents in our collection, and this typikon is no exception. The role of the foundation’s lay protector is equivalent [21] in authority and prestige to that of a traditional private founder. The requirement that the monks dispatch [22] their newly elected superior to the emperor to receive his staff of office, or else notify him and receive it (later) “by imperial order,” indicates that the foundation was also under some sort of imperial patronage (cf. (39) Lips [7]), though, unlike the arrangement in (37) Auxentios [3], the emperor plays no role here in the election itself. Then there is the claim [3], said to be acknowledged in imperial chrysobulls, that the monastery was “patriarchal.” This probably means that like (49) Geromeri, it held a patriarchal stauropegion which exempted it from the control of the local ecclesiastical hierarchy. As in (39) Lips [1], the declaration of institutional independence is here just part of an overall strategy designed to protect private property interests from interference by the public authorities while not foreclosing the possibility of obtaining lucrative patronal benefits from these same officials.

2. Dependencies

Subordinated to the main monastery was [1] another monastery, also dedicated to St. John the Forerunner, that the author had restored in the city of Serres and united administratively to the principal foundation. The monks at the dependency were also to be governed by the rules of this typikon. There appears to have been another dependency, the monastery of Koulas, whose superintendent was responsible [22] for a charitable distribution of bread to the poor. At the conclusion of the present document, the author announces [22] his intention to establish a church of the Annunciation in the fortress of the main monastery. This was to be staffed by an old priest and an assistant and supported by specially-earmarked revenues.

3. The Protectorate

Like his contemporaries the authors of (39) Lips [3] and (57) Bebaia Elpis [18], our author did not consider the imposition of a protectorate on his foundation to be incompatible with its independent constitutional status. He designates [21] John Kantakouzenos as the monastery's protector (ephoros) for the foundation's "maintenance" and "improvement." These purposes recall the contemporary patriarchal program for the management of needy religious institutions, here duplicated in a private arrangement. The monks were to obey [21] Kantakouzenos as if he were the monastery's founder (ktetor) since, as the author declares, "He replaces me." The author anticipates that the protector will favor [21] the monastery with benefactions, assist [22] the superior and his most important officers in spiritual matters and with physical necessities, and oversee [21] "all aspects of monastic discipline and physical needs of daily regimen and victuals."

Unlike the relatively restricted protectors of the sort found in (32) Mamas [3] and some other twelfth-century monasteries in the reform tradition, our author here envisions a strong protector who enjoyed important rights in this monastery similar to those once held by patrons in traditional private religious foundations.

4. Role of the Superior

The author acknowledges [3] the right of the superior "together with the rest of the community" to govern the monastery, guided by the provisions of the typikon. He provides [22] for the election of the superior "by the whole community," although if the superior was to resign, his four chief officers were to choose a successor among themselves. A venerable Evergetian passage that has come down to our author through the effective mediation of (32) Mamas [45] provides [18] guidance for conducting the election of the superior in an "uncontentious" manner. The author does not adopt two references to the protector found in (32) Mamas, which suggests he did not envision a role for Menoikeion's own protector in the election. As noted above, the superior was to receive [22] his staff of office from the emperor himself.

5. Collaborative Government

The author asserts [22] "It is not in the natural order for the superior to do anything right unless he has other assistants under him." To institutionalize this position, he obliges the superior to govern in collaboration with “four brothers,” both for spiritual and temporal affairs. The brothers were to have the authority to “examine and judge” all the monastery’s officials. The author does not indicate if the incumbents of certain offices were ex-officio members of this group, but he does order that (joined by the superior) their number should be maintained at five, on the analogy of the “five senses,” evidently through co-option of replacement members drawn from the community at large.

FOURTEENTH CENTURY

6. Other Officers of the Monastery

The other officers of the monastery mentioned in the document include the ecclesiarch and the assistant ecclesiarch [4], the sacristan [5], the cellarer [6], the refectorian [6], the precentor [8], and the gatekeeper [7], but not a steward. The superior “with the common consent of those with him” (i.e., the “four brothers”) was to appoint [6] the cellarer, the refectorian, and likely the other officials as well (cf. [22]). Since the specific reference in (32) Mamas [17] to the steward substituting for the superior at meals is deleted in [8] in favor of a vague reference to “the man who exercises his authority,” there may not have been a steward in this foundation.

7. Authoritarian Rule

Although the superior was obliged to govern [22] collaboratively with the institution’s panel of “four brothers,” the author prescribes a stern, authoritarian style of rule for the superior when dealing with ordinary monks. He shows himself willing to resort [5], [18], [19] to expulsion to deal with recalcitrant monks, and he introduces [22] a series of supplementary disciplinary regulations designed to restrict unnecessary conversations and visitations of one another’s cells among the monks. On the other hand, the author follows an established trend to allow the superior discretionary authority to ameliorate certain dietary requirements [8] and to grant extra supplies of clothing [12] to those monks whose official duties required them.

8. Patronal Privileges

The incidental treatment of patronal privileges in this document reflects the diverse patronage of the foundation for which it was written. The author became the foundation’s owner by virtue of his relationship to his uncle, who bequeathed [1], [21] it to him as “a kind of inheritance.” As the monastery’s founders, both of these family members were entitled [16] the prayers offered on Thursday liturgies. The emperor, thanks no doubt to previous patronal generosity (cf. [1], [2], [21]), was the beneficiary of prayers for his long life, salvation, and success in war [1], [16] and (as mentioned above) the right to grant [22] a new superior his staff of office. Also, as noted, the protector John Kantakouzenos was to inherit [21] the author’s rights of ownership to the foundation.

9. Reading of the Typikon

The author provides [9] for the reading of the typikon three times a year, at Christmas, Easter, and on the patronal feast day. He adds that the monks should consider the provisions of the typikon not only as “divine laws” (as in (32) Mamas [16]) but also as “canons.” His claim to have observed the requirements of canon law in the framing of his typikon reflects the increasing sensitivity of many of his contemporaries on this subject.

E. Financial Matters

1. Financial Administration

Little is said in the typikon about the financial administration of the monastery. The implication is that the superior and the “four brothers” were jointly responsible for “administration and improvement” of the monastery. They and the superior are permitted [22] to set aside the usual tenure of office conceded to the monastery’s officials should their mismanagement lead to a short-fall in revenues. In a chapter ultimately derived from (32) Mamas [9] on the duties of the sacristan, the author introduces [5] the twelfth-century practice of assuring this officer’s probity by providing for drawing up an inventory of the valuables entrusted to him and obliging him to account for them on leaving office. There is a specific provision for his removal from office for carelessness or wrongdoing.

The reticence of the typikon on matters of financial administration is certainly curious in light of the reasons our author cites [2] for drawing up a typikon in the first place, namely to have an authoritative document that could be cited to a magistrate or used in a court of law, and to have a record of the foundation’s immovable properties and “the rights pertaining to these” as a safeguard against seizures.

2. Use of Entrance Gifts

There is no prohibition of mandatory entrance gifts as in (32) Mamas [22] or in (22) Evergetis [37]. In declaring that “whatever the postulant contributes for the good of the community will of course go to meeting the needs of the monastery,” the author appears to rule out [11] the utilization of such gifts (here called adelphata) to provide exclusive personal livings for the postulants. This was in line with the author’s unwillingness to tolerate kelliotic monasticism. He orders there should be no exception to the obligation to observe the cenobitic rule even if a single postulant should offer more movable and immovable property than the entire foundation owned collectively in exchange for an exemption from this requirement.

3. Other Sources of Income

Aside from a possibly heavy dependence on entrance gifts from postulants, this foundation also benefited from substantial imperial patronage [1], [2], [21] and looked forward to routine financial support from the new protector [21]. As we have seen, the author was prepared to share his own patronal prerogatives with these external benefactors in exchange for these gifts.

F. Overall Philosophy

1. Attitude towards Privileges

Like the author of (32) Mamas [26], our author here was willing to provide a servant to a monk “from an exalted station in life.” Furthermore, he was willing to offer such a monk “some sort of lighter regimen” (cf. (57) Bebaia Elpis [93]), presumably in exchange for a substantial entrance donation, but not, as we have seen, for a complete exemption from observance of the cenobitic rule. The preservation through the mediation of (32) Mamas [45] of the traditional Evergetian injunction that “nobility or dignity or offering of possessions or monies” by particular candidates should not be considered [18] as qualifications for the superiorship suggests some degree of subscription to reform values, however, even at this late date.

2. Exclusion of Women, Youths, and Boys

The author bans [14] women from access to the foundation, making an exception only for the empress herself and her retinue to visit to venerate the patronal saint, but apparently this ban did not exclude women from the charitable distribution at the gate as in most earlier Evergetian institutions and later in (53) Meteora [7]. Boys and youths under twenty years of age were not to be lodged at the monastery either, even if they happened to be friends and relatives of the superior and the monks. They should not be admitted either for theoretical or practical instruction since this would “contribute to many scandals and to spiritual injury.”

G. External Relations

1. Relations with the Ecclesiastical Hierarchy

Like the authors of (10) Eleousa, (31) Areia, and (34) Machairas, our author was himself a bishop. His elevation to the episcopacy of Zichna was viewed critically by his uncle Ioannikios, Menoikeion’s founder, who feared [1] that as bishop his nephew, having “gone over to the other side” so to speak, would neglect his responsibilities to the monastery. Ironically, the uncle himself later became bishop of Ezivai (Ezova). The author’s own career as a prelate and his claim [9] of the canonicity of his typikon notwithstanding, this document is hardly generous in its recognitions of the rights of the ecclesiastical hierarchy. The metropolitan of Serres is assured [3] only commemoration (anaphora) in the liturgy and the episcopal tax (kanonikon)¹⁹ as described in the imperial chrysobulls that recognized [1] this foundation’s status as a patriarchal monastery. The prelate is specifically disallowed any rights to alter the typikon, to appoint its superior, to appoint or expel monks, to demand financial accountings, or, in general, to “exercise authority over anything in the monastery.”

In only one area does the ecclesiastical hierarchy seem to have been successful in getting its rights recognized, namely its ability to insist that only priests could hear confessions. The author tells us [1] that his uncle became a priest specifically “so he could hear men’s confessions,” and given their intense desire to privatize all aspects of monasticism, it is possible that founders like our author and his uncle sought to become bishops at least in part to circumvent this one seemingly incontestable external control over their foundations. However, evidently anticipating that the next superior of the monastery might not himself be ordained, our author provides for spiritual fathers [13], [16] to hear confessions in the future.

2. Institutional Philanthropy

Influenced by the Maman tradition (cf. (32) Mamas [12]) of providing a substantial charitable distribution to all comers at the gate, our author orders [7] the gatekeeper to “take bread from the endowment and give it without hesitation or grumbling” to beggars. As in (32) Mamas [13], mendicant monks (and here priests also) were to be given wine also; leftover food was to be distributed to all beggars. Apparently the grain brought to a mill owned by the monastery was earmarked

[22] for processing and baking into bread for the charitable distribution, which was to take place some distance from the gate itself “so that confusion and disorder do not occur (there).”

Notes on the Introduction

1. The traditional dating is based on a confirmatory chrysobull of Andronikos III, itself dated to March 1332, ed. Guillou, Archives, no. 26, pp. 91–95.
2. For details, see Guillou, Archives, pp. 161–63.
3. See Guillou, Archives, pp. 7–8.
4. See Guillou, Archives, pp. 8–11.
5. For the katholikon, see Talbot and Cutler, “Menoikeion,” p. 1340, and Xyngopoulos, Toichographiai.
6. Chrysobulls of Andronikos II, ed. Guillou, Archives, nos. 9 and 10 (1321), pp. 53–59; for Simonis, see Jelisaveta Allen, “Simonis,” ODB, p. 1901.
7. Sigillon of Patriarch Isaias (1324), ed. Guillou, Archives, no. 14, pp. 64–65, and Prostagma of Andronikos II (1325), ed. Guillou, Archives, no. 15, pp. 66–67.
8. Chrysobull of Andronikos III (1332), ed. Guillou, Archives, no. 26, pp. 106–8.
9. See Guillou, Archives, pp. 11–14, and Zachariadou, “Ottoman Documents.”
10. Chrysobull of Stefan Dušan (1345), ed. Guillou, Archives, no. 39, pp. 124–30.
11. Christophoros, Proskynetarion.
12. For a full discussion of the cartularies and their reconstruction, see Guillou, Archives, pp. 18–36.
13. Group A: Chapters (9) new to (58) Menoikeion: [1], [2], [3], [6], [12], [14], [15], [21], [22].
14. Group B: Chapters (13) shared with other documents: [4], [5], [7], [8], [9], [10], [11], [13], [16], [17], [18], [19], [20].
15. Subgroup B.1: Chapters (2) shared only with (32) Mamas: [9] = (32) Mamas [16], and [13] = (32) Mamas [29], cf. [30].
16. Subgroup B.2: Chapter shared with (32) Mamas and (22) Evergetis: [17] = (32) Mamas [35]; cf. (22) Evergetis [21].
17. Subgroup B.3: Chapters (4) shared with (32) Mamas and (27) Kecharitomene: [4] = (32) Mamas [8], cf. (27) Kecharitomene [20]; [5] = (32) Mamas [9], cf. (27) Kecharitomene [19]; [7] = (32) Mamas [12], [13], cf. (27) Kecharitomene [29]; [11] = (32) Mamas [26], cf. (27) Kecharitomene [53].
18. Subgroup B.4: Chapters (6) shared with (32) Mamas, (27) Kecharitomene, and (22) Evergetis: [8] = (32) Mamas [17], cf. (22) Evergetis [9] and (27) Kecharitomene [40], [46]; [10] = (32) Mamas [23], cf. (22) Evergetis [33] and (27) Kecharitomene [25]; [16], part = (32) Mamas [32], cf. (22) Evergetis [5] and (27) Kecharitomene [33]; [18] = (32) Mamas [45], cf. (22) Evergetis [14], [17] and (27) Kecharitomene [12]; [19] = (32) Mamas [42], cf. (22) Evergetis [17] and (27) Kecharitomene [12]; [20] = (32) Mamas [46], cf. (22) Evergetis [42] and [27] Kecharitomene [78].
19. Cf. A. Papadakis, “Kanonikon,” ODB, pp. 1102–1103.

Bibliography

- Beck, Hans-Georg, Kirche und theologische Literatur im byzantinischen Reich (Munich, 1959), pp. 218, 697.
- Christophoros, Proskynetarion tes en Makedonia para tas Serras hieras stauropegiakes kai patriarchikes mones tou timiou Prodromou syntachthen para Christophorou kai hegoumenou autes (Leipzig, 1904).
- Dölger, Franz, “Aus dem Wirtschaftsleben eines Frauenklosters in der byzantinischen Provinz,” in Studien zur älteren Geschichte Osteuropas, ed. Günther Stökl, vol. 1 (Graz-Köln, 1956), pp. 11–17.
- , Die Urkunden des Johannes-Prodromos-Klosters bei Serrai (= SBAW, Philos.-hist. Abt., 1935, vol. 9) (Munich, 1935).

FOURTEENTH CENTURY

- Dučev, Ivan, Cartulary A of the St. John Prodromos Monastery (London, 1972). Facsimile edition.
- Jugie, Martin, “Le typicon du monastère du Prodrome au mont Ménécée, près de Serrès. Introduction, texte et remarques,” Byzantion 12 (1937), 25–69.
- Kountiadis, G., Historia kai perigraphe tes hieras mones tou timiou Prodromou Serron (Thessaloniki, 1922).
- Kyriakidès, St., “Ta chrysoboulla tes para tas Serras mones tou Prodromou,” Mélanges Sp. Lambros (Athens, 1934), pp. 529–44.
- Nicol, Donald, The Byzantine Family of Kantakouzenos (Cantacuzenus) ca. 1100–1460 (Washington, D.C., 1968), no. 20, pp. 27–30.
- Oikonomidès, Nicolas, “Monastères et moines lors de la conquête ottomane,” SF 35 (1976), 1–10, repr. Documents et études sur les institutions de Byzance (VII^e–XV^e s.) (London, 1976).
- Papageorgiou, P. N., “Hai Serrai kai ta proasteia ta peri tas Serras kai he mone Ioannou tou Prodromou,” BZ 4 (1894), 225–329.
- Polyakovskaya, M. A., “Monastyrskie vladeniya v gorode Serry i progorodnom raione v XIV v.” V V 27 (1967), 310–18.
- Rautman, Marcus, “Aspects of Monastic Patronage in Paleologan Macedonia,” in Twilight of Byzantium: Aspects of Cultural and Religious History in the Late Byzantine Empire, ed. S. Ćurčić and D. Mouriki (Princeton, N.J., 1991), pp. 53–74.
- Soloviev, A., “Les diplômes grecs de Menoikeion attribués aux souverains byzantins et serbes,” Byzantion 9 (1934), 297–325.
- , “Encore un recueil de diplômes grecs de Menoikeion,” Byzantion 11 (1936), 59–80.
- Talbot, Alice-Mary, “John VI Kantakouzenos,” ODB, pp. 1050–51.
- Talbot, Alice-Mary, and Cutler, Anthony, “Menoikeion, Mount,” ODB, pp. 1340–41.
- Volk, Robert, Gesundheitswesen und Wohltätigkeit im Spiegel der byzantinischen Klostertypika (Munich, 1983), pp. 251–55.
- Xyngopoulos, A., Hai toichographiai tou katholikou tes Mones Prodromou ton Serron (Thessalonike, 1973).
- Zachariadou, Elizabeth, “Early Ottoman Documents of the Prodromos Monastery (Serres),” SF 28 (1969), 1–12.

Translation

Key: As noted above, this document shares, most likely through many intermediaries, substantial portions of the texts of (22) Evergetis, (27) Kecharitomene, and (32) Mamas. In our translation, the borrowings are indicated in boldface type.

What follows is in the book of the typikon composed by me, the humble metropolitan of Zichna and founder of the august monastery of [St. John], the holy Forerunner and Baptist, located on the mountain of Menoikeion. I composed it with the general approval of the brotherhood under our authority in the Lord.

The chapters of the present typikon.¹

1. Introduction to the Rule
2. Concerning the reasons on account of which the present Rule has been set forth
3. Concerning the monastery’s independent and free status
4. Concerning the ecclesiarch
5. Concerning the sacristan

58. MENOIKEION

6. Concerning the cellarer
7. Concerning the gatekeeper
8. Concerning the prescribed diet of the monks in the refectory on the days free from fasting and during the holy fasts
9. Concerning the reading of the present typikon for all to hear
10. Exhortation concerning the fact that those who serve are to apply themselves thoroughly to their services
11. How there are not to be kelliotai or imposed guests in the monastery
12. Concerning allowance to the brothers
13. Concerning confession
14. How women are not to enter the monastery
15. Concerning the bath
16. Concerning the liturgical typikon
17. Concerning the fact that those who come together in manual labor are not to talk idly
18. Exhortation to the brothers concerning the selection of a superior
19. Exhortation to the superior: how he ought to be disposed toward the brotherhood
20. More detailed exhortation to the brothers
21. Disposition concerning the superior and the four brothers; how they ought to manage the monastery²
22. Concerning the ephoros and the founder³
23. Further disposition concerning the spiritual constitution and concerning the four brothers who shall together with the superior deliberate and manage the monastery⁴

1. Introduction to the present Rule.

The pledge of God's love for us and the strongest proof of his care has been that man has been honored by his speech more than by all God's other gifts to us. Thus, by the living word of those who are expert one can correct a life diverted from the straight path—for, he says, "Let those that fear you turn to me" (Ps. 118 [119]:79)—and by the written word, one can teach both thought and action as well as the well-ordered habits of life. For he says that all this has been written for your instruction (cf. I Cor. 10:11). In addition, through writing we can revive those things which the flow of many years has destroyed, just as we can with painting, and can reflect these things as present realities. We can draw pictures of the old in discourse and present that which passes by, ever-flowing, as though it stands still. Thus, it is necessary for me to begin by explaining how, why, and in what inexpressible ways God's governance brought this revered monastery together.

My paternal uncle, also a father to me, bore the name Ioannikios. While still of a young age, he wandered from his native country on account of his fervent love for God and arrived at the holy mountain of Athos. Here he received the tonsure and thereafter ran tirelessly his own course to excise his will. [p. 164] He possessed an unaffected character and manner and was graced by moderation in all things. After he had spent a considerable time on Athos, God's providence, governing all for the better and weaving strands one across the other, caused him to return home whence he had come. Because he was a man who delighted in tranquility, he had no affection for the world at all, nor did he desire to be engrossed with the things of the world, nor to cloud the ruling faculty of the soul with the world's troubles and enslave its indomitable quality to vanities. Therefore, he sought to find some small cell so that he could settle there alone and speak purely with God in his solitude. Traversing the rough and more deserted places about the mountain of Menoikeion, he happened upon a very small kellion, completely neglected and unadorned, only an oratory named after the holy Anargyroi, Kosmas and Damian. Settling in this small monastery⁵ and setting to work, he was totally absorbed in offering to God every service of the monastic profession. He also labored to restore and take care of the cells, nor did he cease his zealous work and activity until with God's blessing he had completed this dwelling house for ascetic men. Thereupon, he handed over this kellion to a certain old man who followed God's way and shared the highest ascetic lifestyle. He himself withdrew to other regions of the mountain, taking with him as usual his virtuous disciple.

FOURTEENTH CENTURY

When he reached the very rough and trackless regions of the mountain, he happened upon a harsh cave, which was even difficult to enter. Fixing his residence in the cave, he remained there for some time. When his health had suffered considerably as a result of the constant moisture in the cave, he left there and came among the spurs of the mountain—this was, however, totally in accord with the divine plan as I know. This place he carefully investigated where today our holy monastery can be seen, since this entire region was narrow and close, a country of precipices, difficult to enter or leave. In a word, it was almost completely impassable, totally veiled with all kinds of wild plants and briars. It had but one church crumbling with age and roofless, a home only for wild animals and creeping things.⁶ Elated by the pristine nature of the place, its tranquility, and its freedom from the confusion and turmoil of worldly intercourse, he decided to live there.

His most pressing task was to clear all the area of the surrounding underbrush and to prepare a roof for the church. He cared for it in every way and restored it to a more fitting state so that those staying in it could enthusiastically offer up their prayers to God. There each day, he added effort to effort and pain to pain and gave “neither sleep to his eyes nor rest” to his temples (Ps. 131 [132]:4) until, with God's assistance won through the intercession of the revered prophet, [St. John] the Forerunner and Baptist, he had built cells for the monks and monks had chosen to live with him; he made it a residence for men who pursued the same moral excellence. He himself was the superior of the monks and took every possible thought for their own salvation and assumed total responsibility for managing their food, clothing, and the necessities of life—becoming in every way their harbor of refreshment and salvation.

Although, while pursuing such an ascetic way of life and living in Christ in this manner, he desired to remain hidden, the Lord did not allow him to escape notice to the end, just as the Holy Scripture says that a city upon a mountain cannot be hidden (cf. Matt. 5:14). Thus, he was entrusted with the sacred duty of spiritual service by the man who at that time steered the tillers of the church so that he [Ioannikios] could hear men's confessions and carefully administer the remedies which suited each of them according to the system of medical practice. But more of this later.

For my part, I was begotten of pious parents, but orphaned at an unseasonable age. My uncle and father, the man of whom we have been speaking, took me in with him although I had not yet reached the age of two. He met every physical need and nourished me with care. Then, vesting me with the monastic habit, he ordered me to live continuously with him and be trained in the monastic discipline although I myself was able to grasp nothing of his angelic way of life and conduct. Therefore, I settled down with him in his cell and was educated and trained by him. I was introduced to Holy Scriptures and to the right ordering of habits and the rest of the monk's way of life.

Then, I was promoted to the order of the priesthood, a promotion which was not appropriate both because the duty of this service was so lofty, scarcely fitting the saints, and also because my own life was neglected in its moral dimension and not worthy. Thereafter, when God deemed it fitting for me to be elected to the episcopal throne [of Zichna], my uncle and father, whom we have been discussing, would not endure it nor did he wish it, but he vigorously [p. 165] opposed [the decision] unyieldingly, for he feared that my concern for the episcopacy would render useless and impractical my resolution to be always thoughtful of and concerned about the monastery. What follows will make clear that the old man's opposition desired this [concern]. He did not abandon his opposition or yield to the desire of those who were pressuring me to serve before he took from me a written promise that while he lived and after his death, I would not ignore the monastery but would in all things take thought of it as was fitting. When the written promise had been completed, he straightway gave his consent and yielded to those who were pressuring me.

By judgments known to him "whose judgments are like the great deep" (Ps. 35 [36]:6), I was entrusted with the throne of Zichna, while the old man was proclaimed bishop of Ezivai. But, he still clung to that same moderation and that zeal for the good and totally supported the monastery. Moreover, he had me toiling and working with him to meet the more pressing business of the monastery and the needs of the monks.

Since, however, it was absolutely necessary for him, being a man and subject to human ailments, to put aside the dust and to cross over from here to [eternal] life, it was possible to see him lying in bed, imprisoned by old age and fierce disease, but healthy in soul and superior to all bodily suffering. Then, breathing his last and just about to hand over his soul to God, he again entrusted the care and renovation of the monastery to me, a totally lazy and careless person, and he added to this the monastery's spiritual direction. What did he not say or do of those things sufficient to compel me to this [service]? Therefore, I accepted the job, and once I had accepted it, how many and what kind of problems I met, problems arising from the trouble and difficulty of the times, God who knows all and I who suffered them alone know. But, through the intercession of the revered prophet, [St. John] the Forerunner and Baptist, the God of my father is my helper for all to see, illuminating "in the fiery pillar" (cf. Exod. 13:21) of his gifts, leading forth and guiding [me] to the day of refreshment, and, moreover, he will rescue me from the punishment I should expect, a punishment worthy of my deeds.

First, I restored the holy church itself from its foundations, beautifying it according to the means at my disposal. We also made it brilliant with icons and with the presence of sacred vessels and the addition of various other ornaments. With God's help we also built the refectory so that the brothers assembled for the glory of God might take bread in it. Moreover, through the mercy of the most generous masters and emperors⁷ I could allot to the monastery certain revenues of such a quantity and kind as I reckoned would meet the need of those who had chosen the simple, monastic life. Who will be able to count how many the benefactions, how many the aids I received from their God-guarded and God-crowned rule, those in words, those in deed, those in gifts and contributions? The holy, revered chrysobulls⁸ which have come from their sacred majesty to this monastery clearly testify that the philanthropic and holy masters and emperors of mine have provided great benefactions and gifts to our monastery. I pray that the Lord God, the king of the ages and giver of all good things, will bless them with every blessing and will guard them under the roof of his goodness in peace, justice, and courage. May the Lord strengthen their arm and place beneath their feet all the barbarous nations desiring to war against them. May he grant them length of days and deem them worthy of both his material and his ineffable goods in this life and of his heavenly kingdom.

FOURTEENTH CENTURY

Inside the city of Serres, I also restored another monastery and its church from their foundations and dedicated it in the name of [St. John] the Forerunner and Baptist. In a similar fashion I built a refectory for it and all the other useful and necessary things for a monastery, and before all else I encircled it with a wall and made every effort that, with God's blessing and the intercession of [St. John] the Forerunner, I would be able to restore a dwelling place of holy men, consecrated to God and embracing the cenobitic way of life for themselves. I wish this monastery always to be subject to and united with the original monastery, the principal one, and the monks to consider themselves one body of the united totality of these two monasteries. They are to be subject to one head, that is, the superior of the principal monastery. From him they receive the rules of the monastic way of life and are directed to the better. They ought to conform to his law and rule.

But, who am I, Lord, my Lord, or [what is] the house of my father (cf. 1 Chronicles 17:16) that you have poured out your mercy on me, an unworthy man, and that through me—useless, of no account, pitiable though I am—these two monasteries have been built? Master, this is your work, yours from your generous, enriching right hand which is open in charity, so that your favor fills up every living creature (cf. Ps. 144 [145]:16). [p. 166] May you preserve this work undiminished and uninjured in its substance, and from above may you guard these [monasteries] from those who in any way whatsoever attempt to trample upon them or raise a destructive hand against them. Nevertheless, so that such things might not befall the monasteries hereafter and so that what has been established might not fade and be obscured in the abyss of forgetfulness, I knew that I should write down all these matters in a document. Having organized these monasteries and united them, I offer them to you, O God the Creator, giver of good things, for the glory of your name and that of the herald of truth, [St. John] the Forerunner and Baptist, and for the atonement of our sins. Therefore, O Logos of God the Father—accept this small offering which I, your servant, present to you. Lavish upon my emperor⁹ the superabundance of your mercies and grant to me and to the whole world salvation and the remission of sins through the entreaties of our immaculate lady, the Mother of God, who gave you birth in the flesh—by [the power of the divine] word transcending human reason—and of [St. John] the holy Forerunner and Baptist and of all your saints, Amen.

2. Concerning the reasons on account of which the present Rule has been set forth.

Our monastery did not possess a typikon which could be produced at any time before an official or magistrate or in any kind of court where legal arguments regarding matters of the law and lawsuits take place. Nor did our monastery have an authoritative document in which all sorts of sacred matters are written down as well as other things such as the immovable property belonging to the monastery and the rights pertaining to these properties so that these remain stable and are safeguarded against seizures. On account of this lack, I have proceeded to this task, I mean to the composition and organization of a typikon and inventory since by the favor of God won through the entreaties of the great herald of truth and through the prayers of my holy father,¹⁰ I have been able with the help of the generous and enriching right hand of my God-crowned, holy emperors to organize these monasteries in this way and to add all sorts of properties to them. Therefore, I wish that everything which has been prescribed for them and committed to writing be subject to no change or diminishment. Through the entreaties of [St. John] the sacred Forerunner and Baptist may the triune God also preserve what has been prescribed and written down inviolate and undiminished to the fulfillment of all ages, so that in this way the flock of Christ might be called light in accordance with the Gospel (cf. Matt.: 5:14), and others might be drawn all the more by it to edification. May the triune God also grant that it be a flock truly chosen, obedient to the voice of him who calls to life and, by the example it sets, be able to restore the souls of many men when they gaze upon the best archetype—the scrupulous way of life it upholds. Whosoever is tempted to proceed toward abolishing any single letter of the present Rule, he will give an account before the just Judge on the fearful day of judgment—an account as to why he wished to disturb this Rule of ours or overturn it either totally or in part—a Rule which I set forth for the benefit of the brothers in order to form these monasteries of [St. John] the sacred Forerunner and to protect both their movable and immovable and animate property belonging to them.

3. Concerning the monastery's independent and free status.

The monastery ought to be free and independent because through a *prostagma*¹¹ of the most august, Christ-loving, holy master and sovereign emperor, Lord Andronikos [III] Palaiologos (1328–1341) who now reigns in God, it obtained complete freedom, and from that time to the present it has so remained and has been preserved by Christ's grace. Moreover, this monastery and its property had [their right to remain] unbroken and undisturbed, through the recent, benevolent chrysobulls which his holy, imperial majesty has granted out of kindness toward this very monastery. It should be free of every hand and from every higher authority, nor should any of these authorities exercise any right or privilege over it. Rather, it should remain totally free to govern itself by itself and to manage its affairs according to what has been expressly set forth in the present typikon. The monastery has been entrusted and dedicated for ever to the sole authority of the philanthropic God and to the great herald of truth, [St. John] the Forerunner and Baptist, and is governed by whoever happens to be the superior at the time together with the rest of the community.

The metropolitan of Serres at any time is entitled only to the commemoration of his name in the liturgy and to the canonical right which belongs to him as the chrysobull documents of my holy emperors expressly state “I wish and decree” saying “this monastery to be patriarchal.” Therefore, beyond commemoration of his own name and likewise the kanonikon, as was stated, and beyond the honor due him from the superior and the brothers, the metropolitan of Serres shall have no right either to exercise authority over anything in the monastery or to corrupt or [p. 167] annul any of the clauses in the present typikon. Neither shall he have the right to appoint a different superior nor to appoint monks, nor to bring them in or expel them from the monastery, nor the right to ask for an account of the monastery's income and outlay. He shall not take anything at all from the monastery; rather he should love the monks as his own children and be peacefully and lovingly disposed toward the brothers and their superior, especially if the metropolitan is the disciple of that gentle and peaceable One who enjoins the rule of peace and love upon all.

4. Concerning the ecclesiarch.

[= (32) Mamas [8]; cf. (27) Kecharitomene [20]]: The ecclesiarch moreover, being appointed by the superior, will be whoever seems to him fit and suitable for this office, receiving from the sacristan at the time of his appointment with an inventory everything that should be used in the church of the monastery, and at the proper time other things suitable for daily use or for use during the feasts. He will look after the customary decoration of the church and he will look after the orderly condition of the church during the singing of psalms as is customary for ecclesiarchs. The complete office of the entire church year will be established and sung in accordance with the monastery's typikon of the ecclesiastical office which follows the traditional form in the Jerusalem monastery of our holy, God-bearing father, the sanctified Sabas.¹² The ecclesiarch at the time ought always to have also an assistant ecclesiarch working with him and ministering and assisting in the office assigned to him.

5. Concerning the sacristan.

[= (32) Mamas [9], ed. lines 16–32; cf. (27) Kecharitomene [19]]: We wish there to be a sacristan in the monastery who must guard the sacred vessels, books and liturgical cloths, and think worthy of every kind of care the things that are turned over to him in a written, signed register. This signed inventory is then filed away in the archives. The sacristan himself must hand over to the ecclesiarch and the assistant ecclesiarchs for the service of the church both the things for daily use and the things used in the feasts, and when it is time, receive these back again from him and guard them; and the things surplus to requirements he must keep in the sacristy shut up and secured. When it is necessary that he be transferred out of this office, he must render an accounting according to the inventory of transfer made out for it. For it is within the power of the superior and those with him to remove and change those officials who hold office in the manner which will be described. For it is just to leave unchanged those who have been appointed for each of the offices while they are performing them carefully and conscientiously, but those who neglect or despise them, and perhaps even behave deceitfully in them, should be removed and others appointed. If one of these people happens to appropriate something, anything at all, and has not confessed the theft, I do not know how he shall make his defense to God.

Such a person shall be removed without hesitation from his rank if he should appear careless toward the office entrusted to him or if he cunningly and secretly wrought some wrong while holding it. If he will return in good faith what he took by fraud, he will remain as a brother of the monastery, abiding in peace, obedient in all things [to the superior] and reproaching himself for his transgression. But if he becomes agitated and disturbs the superior and the brothers—which God forbid—he should be cut off like a festering limb which causes spiritual disease and cast out of the monastery.

6. Concerning the cellarer.

With the common consent of those with him, the superior will appoint a cellarer and a refectorian as well as other officials. In the fear of God and in a good frame of mind each one of these men should be eager above all to carry out the work of his ministry. Each one will receive his remuneration for his zeal and his labor on the day of judgment from the One who says, "I came not to be served, but to serve" (Matt. 20:28). Therefore, each day the cellarer must present the cook with the food prescribed for the brothers, as much as the cellarer has on hand and under his ministry. He will also thoughtfully and carefully exert himself in preparing the monks' table and in caring for it unfailingly in a cheerful manner and without giving offense, especially if he is concerned about finding the God of all well-disposed on the day of judgment. [p. 168]

7. Concerning the gatekeeper.

[= (32) Mamas [12], ed. lines 18–22; cf. (27) Kecharitomene [29]]: The superior must appoint the one who is to hold the keys of the gate, who is usually called the gatekeeper, whose responsibility it will be that no one enters or leaves at all without the permission of the superior. Let the person appointed to this office be elderly and of proven piety and spiritual disposition. He must take bread from the [daily] distribution and give it without hesitation or grumbling to those who beg so that he might not suffer judgment.

[= (32) Mamas [13]]: If the beggar is a priest or a monk, let also wine be given to him. But also, after the brothers have taken their meal, let the leftover cooked food be given, also, by the aforesaid gatekeeper, to the poor who are found at the gate in order that, through your cheerful charity to our brothers, you, too, may receive in return cheerful and abundant mercy from God. For it is our preference that not even any beggar turn away from the gate with empty hands, and in the Holy Spirit we enjoin the gatekeeper at the time to observe this practice as most essential and dear to God.

Moreover, the most honorable superior must value highly works of hospitality and mercy unless he himself wishes to fall under the condemnation issued on the behalf of poor Lazarus.

8. Concerning the prescribed diet of the monks in the refectory on the days free from fasting and during the holy fasts.

[= (32) Mamas [17] ed. lines 18–23; cf. (22) Evergetis [9]]: It should be the right time to mention the table and food and all the other things that supply nourishment to the body. For neither will the soul ever be well without the latter's suitable nourishments, I mean prayer and chanting and reading of the sacred scriptures, nor, indeed, will the body be sustained or render assistance to the [soul's] divine ministrations without the things that are of necessity useful to it.

Therefore, after the superior and the brothers have seated themselves together in the refectory, they partake of the meal in the customary fashion while the precentor reads. During this time no one has permission to argue or shout or to be agitated at all and by such disorder and confusion to destroy the benefit to be derived from the reading. Rather, each is to remain humbly seated and to partake of that which is offered with great piety and godly fear, giving unceasing thanks to God through prayer of the heart.

[= (32) Mamas [17] ed. p. 273, line 37–p. 274, line 5; cf. (22) Evergetis [9]]: The superior only may speak sparingly if he wishes and perhaps the one asked by him may answer similarly in a few brief phrases, if possible. When, however, the superior is not present, prevented perhaps by weakness of the body or even some other reason, the man who exercises his authority shall fulfill the things that ought to be done.

[= (32) Mamas [17], ed. p. 274, lines 8–11; cf. (27) Kecharitomene [46]]: On a fast-free day let the brothers have their nourishment—on Tuesdays, Thursdays, Saturdays, and Sundays two dishes such as the season brings and the superior has ordered. On Saturdays and Sundays the superior should provide for the partaking of fish on account of the difficult vigils. On Monday there should be one dish of boiled food with vinegar and wine should be offered with this. On two days a week, however—I mean Wednesday and Friday—only one dish should be offered in the refectory without olive oil or wine. Let only those afflicted with some illness partake of wine on account of their weak condition while those in good health should take none at all. Those who are familiar with the holy and apostolic canons know the severity of breaking the fast on these two days.

During the holy and great season of Lent, let the first week follow the rules set forth in the synaxarion of the typikon, for it is not fitting to abrogate the rules of the fathers all of which they arranged well as though from God. During the other five weeks, on Mondays, Wednesdays, and Fridays, the brothers should eat dry food and drink only water. On Tuesdays and Thursdays, however, they may have two dishes either with honey or with vinegar and a measure of wine. On Saturdays and Sundays, two dishes should be offered in the refectory together with olive oil and wine. During the great and Holy Week, let there be only dry food and only the drinking of water on Monday, Tuesday, and Wednesday; on the great and Holy Thursday the brothers should have two dishes with honey to eat, for no one should partake of olive oil on that day since that would contravene the tradition of the sacred and apostolic canons. From that day, then, the brothers observe a continuous fast until the Holy and Great Saturday. At that time after the dismissal of the liturgy in church, we break the fast without a cooked meal.

During the other fasts, however, on Mondays, Wednesdays, and Fridays, one dish of legumes or vegetables with vinegar should be served, but without wine; on Tuesdays, Thursdays, Saturdays, and Sundays, two dishes with olive oil should be served together with wine. During the holy fast of Christ's birth—from the feast of the holy and wonder-working Nicholas¹³ to the nativity of Christ according to the flesh [p. 169]—the brothers are to eat but once a day except for Saturdays and Sundays. On Tuesdays and Thursdays, however, let them have without failure the two dishes with olive oil and wine.

If, perhaps, on any of the feasts of the Lord or of the great saints the superior at his discretion should want to offer the brothers a refreshment on account of the work associated with the feast and the vigil, he should have this authority, mindful that he functions as a shepherd not a hireling. During the weeks marked out in the synaxarion of the typikon—I mean Easter Week, the week after Pentecost, the Twelve Days, the week before the Meatfare week and Cheesefare week, it is possible to eat twice a day, both of cheese and of fish on account of the traditional reasons—we will not repeat these same things in order not to lengthen the treatise. Thus, when you do this, you, too, will not violate these rules. On two days only of Cheesefare week, however, you will partake of food once according to the rule of the typikon.

9. Concerning the reading of the present typikon in the refectory for all to hear.

[= (32) Mamas [16]]: In addition to everything I enjoin the superior and my beloved brothers in Christ that this, too, must be observed no less than the other things, if not even more, as both the source and reason for the observance of the things that have been prescribed and utter strengthening of the monastery. Let this present typikon be read, therefore, so as to be listened to by all the brothers on the feast of Christ's birth, similarly on the resurrection day of our God, the Lord and Savior Jesus Christ—I mean the holy and great Easter—and on the feast of the great herald of the truth, [St. John] the sacred Forerunner and Baptist,¹⁴ in order that, by reading it, the things that have been prescribed may be more permanent and indelible.

This, of course, you must observe most carefully, not as our legislations, but as divine laws and canons (since we have not set up anything outside these), that are inviolable and unchangeable. These regulations must be observed, and not only, O fathers, must you not be disheartened or vexed over these matters but reasonably even rejoice and exult because, having been relieved from all concern and free of the yoke of hard labor, you will have one occupation, free of distraction or anxiety, [namely,] the concern and care of your souls.

10. Exhortation concerning the fact that those who serve are to apply themselves thoroughly to their services.

[= (32) Mamas [23]; cf. (22) Evergetis [33]]: I entreat, therefore, all those who serve the monastery, from the first down to even the last, to apply yourselves joyfully to your offices with your whole heart and soul because God has given us the strength to serve our brothers in imitation of him. See what kind of work you are taking in hand; see whom you imitate—that same One who says, "I came not to be served but to serve" (cf. Matt. 20:28). You see that you are putting into practice the greatest of all good, love. Therefore be happy and rejoice because you yourselves are accomplishing each day by your work what could scarcely be achieved by those who devote themselves to prayer. You are blessed in that occupation and to be envied. For prayer is indeed a fine thing, a very fine thing, bringing us into contact with God and raising us from earth to heaven. But no less than this is love, the crown and consummation of virtue according to God. For joined to itself it has humility that exalts (cf. Matt. 23:12) and mercy and sympathy. On account of these God became man and through them man becomes like God. Under these conditions, therefore, grow rich in this very virtue, my brothers, and run on without hesitation until you reach the harbor of rest in Christ Jesus, Our Lord.

11. How there are not to be kelliotai or imposed guests in the monastery.

[= (32) Mamas [26]; cf. (27) Kecharitomene [53]]: I do not want there to be any kelliotai or any imposed guests at all within the monastery. I completely forbid this. If, however, anyone who is from a more exalted station in life shall wish to come to the monastery and to cast off his worldly hair in it or perhaps should enter as one who has already been tonsured and if from his more luxurious way of life he should perhaps have need of a servant or some sort of lighter regimen, the superior will be permitted to make concessions to the one who enters [the monastery], if he should wish, and allow him the servant and the lighter regimen. He may do this especially if the one who enters it benefits the monastery. Whatever the postulant contributes for the sake of “fellowships” will of course go to meeting the needs of the monastery.

They, too, however, ought to maintain the cenobitic way of life. For in no way whatsoever do I wish that the appellation of “kelliotēs” be used in the monastery. Therefore, it is not licit that anyone at all alter or change what we have outlined here, either in a straightforward manner or by trickery, even if he should be of exalted station [p. 170] or should abound in much wealth and in consequence present a lavish offering or make a promise [of one], even if he should possess more immovable and movable and animate property than we have owned. Rather what has been outlined in the typikon will remain unaltered and undiminished under every rule and authority (cf. Eph. 1:21).

Who would send an imposed guest to a monastery that is independent and is ruled by the mighty hand of the only God and by the hand of [St. John] the Forerunner, who is honored therein? May no one, O Christ the King, therefore, ever consider this. No one should think to dissolve the term of the independence of this monastery, which God led our holy, God-crowned emperor to decree, unless he wishes altogether to render God, who is mighty in wars (cf. Sir. 46:1), openly hostile to himself, and unless he should wish to give evidence against his own soul for his eternal condemnation on the day of judgment.

12. Concerning allowance to the brothers.

I certainly desire and approve and order that the allowance which is customarily prescribed and the grant of shoes and of any thing else to the brothers need be carried out in the following way. To each one of the brothers is given each year one [and] a half hyperpera, or nine hexagia [of silver], that is, eighteen large ducats.¹⁵ Shoes and boots are also given to all, depending on the monastery’s level of prosperity. Beyond this, however, the decision will rest with the superior regarding special treatment for those in special service. I mean for those in the vineyard, for the bakers, for the cook, and for those in similar work. Moreover, if the monastery is well-supplied with sheep, let the brothers have sheep’s wool each year for their headgear. If the superior is able to obtain further special treatment for the brothers, then thanks be to God. This, too, accords with my wishes.

13. Concerning confession.

[= (32) Mamas [29], ed. lines 22–27]: I also want there to be spiritual fathers in the monastery so that each monk can select one to whom he will reveal his own stripes according to the tradition of the sacred canons. Thus, they can receive suitable aid from the spiritual doctors, each one according to the injury he suffers. For thoughts are wounds of the soul that are inflicted by the evil demon, who ensnares our life. A wound, however, when it is revealed immediately and receives the medical treatment that is suitable and appropriate, is easily healed;¹⁶ but, when it is kept concealed and becomes chronic, it causes putrefaction and generates a stench and becomes more difficult to heal. It is, therefore, especially helpful to have the physician close by.

14. How women are not to enter the monastery.

I command that the monastery be completely off limits to women. In the Holy Spirit I enjoin this. Only the Augusta at the time and the women in her retinue shall be allowed to enter in order to revere the saint; this is permitted no other women. Nor do we allow any young boys who are in their childhood years or any [youth] under twenty years of age to stay within the monastery, even if they should be the friends or relatives of the superior of the monastery himself or of one of its monks, not even under the pretext of performing some service or of receiving theoretical or practical instruction. I totally reject such an idea as contributing to many scandals and to spiritual injury.

15. Concerning the bath.

Since bathing facilities exist within the monastery on account of the weakness of the body, you shall take a bath four times a year: at holy Easter, during the days of the harvest season, during the twelve days [of Christmas],¹⁷ and during the week of Meatfare. This we establish as a model; whenever it seems proper to the superior, however, you will bathe yourselves.

16. Concerning the liturgical typikon.

You shall have no other liturgical typikon for all church services except the typikon proper to Palestine—that which is customarily called the typikon of Jerusalem since this one I have in my humility judged to be better than the others. This typikon, then, will always hold sway among you and you will do everything according to what it has established. Moreover, you shall observe the vigils of the whole year carefully and unhesitatingly according to the direction of the typikon. In addition, you shall perform the following: after the close of vespers every single day, the synapte is performed by the priest while all of you cry out fifty times in an audible voice the “Kyrie eleison.” [p. 171] You must also perform the sacred liturgy without hesitation and with care. I want it performed on Tuesdays, Thursdays, Saturdays, and Sundays. On Tuesdays celebrate it with kollyba in commemoration of [St. John] the sacred Forerunner. Together with the kollyba a treat [of an extra serving of wine] is given to the brothers in the refectory. On Thursdays celebrate it in honor of the founders, also with kollyba and a treat [of an extra serving of wine] in the refectory. On Saturdays the liturgy will be celebrated in the same way in memory of those who have fallen asleep. On Sundays, celebrate it in honor of Christ our God who rose on that day. A treat [of an extra serving of wine] should also be given to the brothers for the long life of our most august, powerful, holy, and sovereign emperors as well as for their happiness, their salvation, and their triumph over their enemies. This [invocation] should be intoned by the priest so that all can hear and should be sung slowly and melodiously by the choir leaders in the same fashion.

[= (32) Mamas [32], ed. lines 7–33]: So, as has been said, during this sacred mystery, my brothers, you must pay strict attention, and chase from your hearts every thought that is impure and in every way you must purify yourselves. Then as many as allowed by the spiritual father must partake of the divine elements with great awe. For it will not be possible for any of you to partake freely and in a thoughtless manner, nor yet each day.

This we would indeed wish, for to partake often of the divine elements is to share in life, as Christ himself says, “He who eats my flesh and drinks my blood abides in me, and I in him” (John 6:56) and as the most gentle David says conversely “They that remove themselves far from thee shall perish” (Ps. 72 [73]: 27).

Therefore we would indeed wish this, as has been said, but because of human weakness and the danger of the action we do not allow it, for “Whoever eats the body and drinks the blood of the Lord unworthily eats and drinks his own condemnation” (I Cor. 11:27) says the divine apostle. The statement is frightening, my brothers, and causes not only sinners like me but also those who are very confident in themselves to fear partaking. For this reason our thoughts should be cleansed as much as possible from every contamination of the flesh and spirit and in this manner you should partake of the sacraments.

So then as many as are sure that they are pure and free from disgraceful thoughts and submission to them, from anger and grumbling, grief and denigration, deceit and disorderly laughter, furthermore, bearing of grudge and irritation, disgraceful talk and any other such passions, may partake each Sunday. Whereas those who fall prey to the aforementioned passions and hasten to a renunciation of them through confession and repentance should partake three or four times a year or more often, at the discretion of your spiritual father, for he should be in charge of such matters.

17. Concerning the fact that those who come together in manual labor are not to talk idly.

[= (32) Mamas [35]; cf. (22) Evergetis [21]]: Together with the other matters, brothers, I make this demand of you. If any of your number should gather on some manual task or other service and amuse yourselves with idle conversations—for this is usual at gatherings—and then turn to disgraceful talk, I enjoin you not to reject the admonition of your betters. Furthermore, let the more devout one among those of you attending to the task venture a word of correction in love and persuade those who have repeated topics which harm the soul rather to sing psalms and to have on their lips the songs of David.

Moreover, those who happen to be on a journey and are afflicted in the same way should be cured with the same medicine. Furthermore, they are not to resort to mutual rebuking or verbal sparring. For he who does such a thing shall be punished by the superior and will be judged the instigator of insolence and violence. If he does not repent and beg for forgiveness, he shall be punished even more severely. For we prefer that you should always be loving and peaceful towards one another and, instead of anything that provokes quarrels, learn to say “Bless and forgive [me], brother.”

Furthermore, those who form idle gatherings and visit one another with no good reason, without any pressing cause, or the knowledge of the superior, especially after compline, when they are admonished and do not desist, they will be punished by the superior as instigators of disorder and leaders in evil. These people not only destroy themselves, but they also throw other souls into the pit of destruction. They shall be punished until they reject their vain and soul-corrupting foolishness and begin to love living properly as a friend of God.

18. Exhortation to the brothers concerning the selection of a superior.

[= (32) Mamas [45]; cf. (22) Evergetis [14]]: Now that I have spoken, then, sufficiently concerning necessary matters, I entreat you, therefore, or rather, I instruct you and I give you [St. John] the Forerunner and Baptist as witness to this command and overseer of its carrying out, that when you are selecting and choosing the superiors there should be no strife, there should be no jealousy, there should be no pointless partiality and irrational favoritism, but correct judgment, an accurate aim and the strict yardstick of justice [p. 172] and truth should come together, and, as if he was observing you, he the eye itself “that beholds all things” (Sir. 15:19) and “searches hearts and reins” (Ps. 7:9). Your selection should take place in that way.

For, if, suffering from some human failing, you were to produce a faulty judgment, consider how far the evil would spread and calculate how many harmful effects would follow and if the “righteous” (2 Tim. 4:8) and unerring Judge were to require from you a just account for this, I do not know what defense you would make to secure your escape from condemnation. You, who have, alas, with evil and ruinous judgment selected the unworthy persons and brought such great harm not only on them but also on yourselves seeing that you have secured perdition for them as well as yourselves.

So then you will not resort to quarreling and discord and disputes, with each man choosing a different person but in unanimity and agreement, with right and reasonable judgment, and after examination, you should choose the persons elected—I mean those who are most devout and have given witness of their virtuous character by leading fitting and virtuous lives.

[= (32) Mamas [45], cf. (22) Evergetis [17]]: If you all live like that, there will be no one who will usurp this office rashly, forming prejudices and becoming a cause of scandals for the brothers, and perhaps making a display of his seniority or knowledge or sphere of work or noble birth or rank or offering of property or money. The man who wants to behave like this, I shall penalize as a man rash, shameless, and alien to the humility of Christ, the gentle and peaceful one (cf. Rom. 12:1, 18). But that man shall be preferred for such an office who is well-suited for performing this ministry on account of his virtuous way of life and the rest of his spiritual condition just as I have explained above.

Moreover, if anyone of you shall disobey the superior or through carelessness shall perpetrate some misdeed which merits a dressing down or correction, do not expel the sinner from the monastery straightway at the first offense, but discipline him properly within the monastery. If, then, the sinner rejects his arrogant thoughts, returns to repentance, and seeks forgiveness from the superior, then all will be well, and we pray for this. If, on the other hand, he should happen to remain incorrigible and will not accept punishment from the superior—something which often happens to those with a careless and irreverent disposition—he shall be punished even more severely. If he grows more angry and obstinately rebels so that he troubles and disturbs the superior, it shall be possible for the superior, after seeking advice of those about him, to expel the sinner from the monastery with complete freedom. If he remains at the gate of the monastery for two or three days, the superior is to lead him in again and in every way to treat as a physician the disease of his soul. If, however, he immediately departs from the monastery on the first day—which I pray shall not be—the superior shall not be guilty of his destruction.

19. Exhortation to the superior: how he ought to be disposed toward the brotherhood. [= (32) Mamas [42]; cf. (22) Evergetis [17]]: You, spiritual father and guide of this holy flock, be moderate and fair with the brothers, and in your concern maintain in everything a spiritual affection for them. Yes! I entreat you, care for them all, have concern for them all, forbear with them all, support them, instructing, advising, teaching, comforting, healing the sick, supporting the weak, encouraging the faint-hearted, restoring those who sin, forgiving those who repent “seventy times seven” (Matt. 18, 22) in accordance with the word of Our Lord. Proceed against the incurable and unrepentant with reason and straighten them out as a physician would so that the folly of one does not take hold of the healthy sheep. Also, to omit the rest, Saint Basil says “And the superior himself, as a father caring for true children, will watch over the needs of each one and will bring them suitable healing as far as he can, and will support with love and fatherly affection the member who is truly weak whether spiritually or physically.”¹⁸

20. More detailed exhortation to the brothers.

[= (32) Mamas [46]; cf. (22) Evergetis [42]]: So, then, all that I wish and that is acceptable to God—in my opinion at least—and to our fervent patron and helper, [St. John] the sacred Forerunner and Baptist, and greatly beneficial for your help has been sufficiently discussed; in the future it will always be your concern to maintain them unbroken and unchanged always. By this I mean to carry out completely in all the services the canonical procedure handed on to you, in accordance with the synaxarion which is in effect today with you, or according to the typikon of ecclesiastical service, to preserve loyalty and honor which is due to your superiors and likewise to the more devout among your brothers, to love one another (John 15:12) as [p. 173] the Lord commands, to be keen each of you to surpass each other and to excel in humility, moderation and in all the other virtues. Do not stir up quarrels, conflicts, or inappropriate arguments. Nor should one laugh at another, for this is alien to the calling of Christian, to say nothing of monks. Do not passionately delight in improper friendships; refrain from claiming the seat of honor and worldly preferments. But look to one thing only, that is each day strive to live and conduct yourselves virtuously so that you are acceptable and pleasing to God himself, the universal lord of all who will reward each man according to his deeds. On the other hand, as much as you are able, banish from you the source of all evils, the love of money, and the filching of the monastery’s possessions or theft. Such things are forbidden and are the ruinous death of the soul. Nor should you allow anything of the monastery to be destroyed as a result of carelessness or any other reason, since this would be a great sin and would require much treatment. You must root out familiarity as much as possible since it is like the summer heat or a wind which burns up the fruits of the spirit, and, that I may be brief, banish everything that does not lead to your salvation, but rather to the contrary, is conducive to your injury.

So, my children and brothers, let us in no way prefer the things that harm, and pass by those that bring salvation. For nothing of what has been handed on to you is impossible or hard to accomplish. But if one of these [instructions] were to be thought of as such, yet let us strive, let us persevere, let us endure, let us bear it nobly, “for we are not contending against flesh and blood,” as the sacred apostle says, “but against the principalities, against the powers, against the world rulers of this present darkness” (Eph. 6:12). For we did not deny the world for indulgence, honor, glory, or luxury, but for exertion and to strive as much as we could to gain the good things that were promised. Therefore let us force ourselves, let us force ourselves, as has been said, “For the kingdom of heaven has suffered violence, and men of violence take it by force” (Matt. 11:12). No one has ever gained a triumph by being careless, no one has triumphed over his enemy by sleeping and carelessness. Crowns and triumphs belong to those who run well, toil, strive, persevere in the labors of battles. Therefore, I beseech you all: “lead a life worthy of your calling” (cf. Eph. 4:1), “present your bodies holy to the Lord” (cf. Rom. 12:1). “Love one another” (John 15:12) and be peacemakers, imitating Christ the mild and peaceful (cf. Rom. 12:18). Run well the race which lies before you (cf. Heb. 12:1). Whatever is good, beloved of God, salvific, consider these things (cf. Phil. 4:8). Moreover, do not forget my insignificance and humility in your prayers, and the God of peace (Heb. 13:20) who has called us to this calling on account of his great and unspeakable compassion and goodness confirm and strengthen you in his holy will through his only-begotten Son, our Lord and God and Savior, Jesus Christ, so that, aided by the divine power, we might be made worthy of those good things to come which have been prepared for the just in Christ Jesus, our Lord.

Now I add what follows for the better regimen of the brothers so that they will have this [food] for their two dishes without fail.¹⁹

21. Concerning the ephoros and the founder.

My fathers and brothers in Christ, I thus received this revered monastery from my holy father as a kind of inheritance, as I recounted more fully in discussing him in the introduction. I have taken care of it and toiled for it as much as I could, and God has been gracious through the intercession of the great herald of truth, and through the prayers of that blessed father of mine. In addition, through the rich gifts of my mighty, holy masters and emperors and through their sponsorship and supervision, this obscure and small monastery has been restored as a cenobitic monastery and the few brothers have been multiplied. This, however, was not our work, nor that accomplished by my care or my strength, but it is the work of the great power of God, which “opening the hand, fills every living thing with good will” (cf. Ps. 103 [104]:28) and changes all things for the better.

Up to this point, then, events have advanced in this way and what we have desired has reached its conclusion—for our desire sought only that the monastery be improved and made totally independent so that it could become the residence of God-loving men who pursued the best communal life and virtue. Now, I desire nothing else than this: to find a pious and Christ-loving man and to entrust all of you and the things of the monastery to him so that the monastery can be maintained and improved and through his care and concern can prosper and grow. Since I was in this frame of mind, I thought about the matter and beseeched God. Then, I found the much-beloved brother-in-law of my mighty, and holy master and emperor, my lord [John Kantakouzenos], the me gas domestikos.²⁰ He is not only a most Christian man and filled with every goodness, but he also issued forth from pious and faithful ancestors and parents just like a noble sprout from a good and noble root. [p. 174]

FOURTEENTH CENTURY

Therefore, just as that blessed father of mine entrusted to me this great and revered monastery so that there was no other master in it, so I hand over and entrust you together with all belongings of the monastery to my lord, the megas domestikos, and I establish him as master through this present edict of mine. I also hand you over to him as though to your founder, as if he had established the two monasteries and maintained them. I do this not only because of his reverence, his love of Christ, and every other noble quality of judgment, but also because of the spiritual relationship and love toward his holy ancestors and fathers which I have had for a long time—people, I believe, who have been deemed worthy of the inheritance of the saved on account of their characteristic piety and virtue.

I, therefore, entertain high hopes concerning my lord, the megas domestikos, confident that of necessity the nobly born shoot resembles the root. As the Lord says that the tree is known by its fruits (cf. Matt. 12:33), I have no reservations now about him, but I am free from worry and care, taking courage in the great mercy of God and in the megas domestikos' Christian character. [I am confident] that the megas domestikos will take better care of you than I could and will not only look after your virtue and piety and after every other aspect of good monastic discipline, but also will see to your physical needs which pertain to your daily regimen and your own victuals.

But why is it necessary to say more? I surrender you and the affairs of the monastery over to him in such a way that he replaces me, and thus you ought to obey him as your lord and founder. Living in good order and spiritual peace, pray fervently for him so that on the day of judgment he will take his own reward, perfect and whole, from God who watches over all things. If, then, you shall continuously act in the way I am establishing for you, you shall profit greatly both in body and in soul. In addition, for my lord, the megas domestikos and your founder who watches over you and takes care of you to the limit of his strength, you shall procure for him eternal blessedness; of this he would be judged worthy through the grace of Christ our God and through the intercession of the great herald of truth, [St. John] the Forerunner and Baptist.

22. Further disposition concerning the spiritual constitution and concerning the four brothers who shall together with the superior deliberate and manage the monastery.

Whatever has been written down in the present typikon, this I have composed with God and the great herald of truth, [St. John] his venerable Forerunner, as witnesses. I have established these things, too, for the support, permanence, and security of this holy monastery and for the general assistance and governance of the community. Whatever I have established and set down in writing, this I wish to remain. Moreover, since I wish that the brothers persevere in making greater progress and advancement, that they be led upward to improve themselves morally and to grow in virtue, and that they in every way be fortified in the better things, I will run through these matters, treating them in summary fashion.

No one shall have permission to sit in the courtyard of the monastery and carry on a conversation after the dismissal of compline and after bowing to the superior and receiving his absolution. This was the rule legislated by the holy fathers themselves. In fact, such activity was totally forbidden. Just as they forbid such a practice as evil and conducive to spiritual harm, so I, too, forbid it. Therefore, those who wish to make progress as God [wishes], should each withdraw to his own cell after greeting the superior; each one should turn his attention quietly and peacefully to himself, and to God, and he should look to nothing else but to propitiating our universal judge and God for the sins, both conscious and unconscious, which he committed during the entire day.

58. MENOIKEION

In addition, I totally forbid this sinister and ruinous custom which on account of great carelessness and laziness of soul, as well as a contempt for the good, many have acquired: [that is, I forbid] any of you to meet with one another in the evening and to eat or drink together or to be disorderly;²¹ I forbid you to proceed from this to detraction of the superior and of the others, as those customarily do who live carelessly and indifferently. Therefore, let no one go to visit in another's cell in the evening neither to eat together nor for any other reason, for such behavior produces disorder and great harm. Only the officials are allowed to visit the superior if this should be necessary because of what the ministries require. If, however, necessity should require that anyone visit the cell of another, let this be done during the day.

To these I now add what follows as a kind of final seal to this testamentary rule. When aboard a ship in the middle of the sea waves a storm arises, and when the sea grows wild, stirring up on high the waves so that the boat is tossed about perilously, it is totally impossible for the helmsman alone to rescue the ship unharmed unless [p. 175] he should have the assistance and help of the sailors. Nor in the army is it possible for the general alone to defeat the enemies, but he must have his own officers working with him and helping him. So, too, our body is governed by the five senses. Now in the same manner, it is not in the natural order for the superior of the monastery to do anything right or to set affairs in order unless he has other assistants under him. Having, therefore, considered this and pondered it, I wish and decree that with God himself and [St. John] the reverend Forerunner keeping watch, that there be a superior in the monastery and that he be elected by the whole community and that he be established in this office as I previously ordered with regard to this.²² If the chance arises, he is to go to our mighty and holy master and emperor and receive from him the staff of office, or he can notify him and receive the staff by imperial order.

I decree that there be four brothers with this superior. These should be such as are completely free of any physical desire or wantonness and are of proven piety, wisdom, spiritual disposition, and virtue. Let these, then, be of one spirit with the superior, though in separate bodies; of one mind, one will, one desire, one goal. [They should not be] contentious or devious, or sinful, but should work together with love and spiritual conviction so that they toil and struggle in their care for the total well-being of the monastery and for its spiritual state as well as for its constant improvement and for the aid of the brothers. Together with the superior, these shall have the license, authority, and power to examine and judge all of the officials.

If these are serving well and as is dear to God and are free from any desire, they should allow the officials to serve. If, however, the officials are subject to some evil desire in the [performance of] their tasks and if the monastery suffers some injury due to this and the brothers fall short of what they need because the monastery's fortunes have been diminished, they are totally free to change such officials since these people are breaking up and harming the monastery. No one should hinder the four monks and the superior in doing this, but they should draft others whom they find to be both good and appropriate after they have examined them. They should not do this according to any attachment or fondness nor on account of any other human [motive], but only on account of the good, the help due to the brothers, and the greater improvement of the monastery. They should always have God himself before their eyes and the impartial scrutiny of the conscience, concerning which each will have to render an account on the day of judgment, if he has done anything, as far as he knows, outside of what is right and necessary.

FOURTEENTH CENTURY

In addition, the superior will make use of these advisors both with regard to all spiritual matters as well as with regard to the most important temporal affairs. With their advice, he will deal with these issues. They, likewise, will remind the superior if something arises which ought to be set straight. Thus, united with the superior, these aforementioned monks are to take thought of the monastery, are to toil and care for it as I order them; [they are to do this] in such a fashion, to say it succinctly, as though they and I were one and the same. With one accord, they should unite in administering and improving the monastery, not in a manner which focuses on the spiritual aspect and on the things pleasing to God, [but which looks also] to the physical realities. If the superior should become listless for any reason and desire to be excused from his office over the brothers, first all of these four will assemble together and promote one from their midst to the office of superior who, adorned with virtue, understanding, and piety, excels over the other three. Thus, let him feel free to take hold of the office. If the man [who resigned] so wishes, he may fill the place of the one who was just advanced to the office of superior. If he should be unwilling, then let these [four monks] together with the superior choose from the community a man of proven piety and spiritual disposition, and he shall fill the vacancy left by the [newly elected] superior.

So also in the case of the four: if anyone of these should wish not to be in this group, let it be managed in the same way. In this manner let the number of the five always be secure and undiminished. In this manner, too, let the whole monastery be harmoniously administered as I direct these men and give them authority so that both its souls and its affairs improve according to the will of God. They will drive far away from the monastery all disorder, indiscipline, and any other perversion of the monastic way of life. Whatever is well-ordered and disciplined, whatever is good and proper to virtue as well as dear to God—this they will lay claim to and introduce in order to rouse the brothers to keep all which has been ordained above.

Moreover, let the ephoros of the monastery²³ offer a helping hand to these four together with the superior, and let him work together with them regarding whatever they request of him, not only in spiritual matters as occasion demands, but also in physical necessities. Thus, in good order and in a spiritual disposition, the brothers can live peacefully and can pray fervently on his behalf so that on the day of judgment he will receive his own reward, whole and entire, from [p. 176] God who watches over all and will give his rewards corresponding to the earnings of the talents which each has received. (cf. Matt. 25:15–28) As for me, I have no other desire nor do I pray for anything other than that all the regulations laid down be preserved secure with no alterations or deletions and that the brothers be led to greater progress and gain through a spiritual way of life and constitution.

Therefore, I rouse you in the Holy Spirit toward preserving and maintaining in greater safety all that which has been previously written, and [I ordain] that no one shall have the right or authority, not only while I am still living, but even after I have died, to overturn, destroy, or alter what has been so composed and arranged for the benefit of the brothers. I have ordered that things be established in this way for the common benefit of the brothers' whole governance. All the more [I exhort] the superior and the four with him as well as all the officials and the other brothers, if they take thought of their own salvation, not only zealously to keep watch that this very monastic constitution remain unaltered for the benefit and good governance of the brothers, but also that they zealously strive each day to advance the brothers toward what is better by means of a God-loving and virtuous way of life. They should look to the One who created heaven and earth, who gave himself as a ransom in exchange for us and revealed that it is greater and more exalted to serve than to be served (Matt. 20:28).

If, however, after I depart from life, either a bishop, a monk, or an official, or some other person from among the distinguished or the obscure—a person who is not numbered among the brothers nor lives with them, one who is unknown and unfamiliar [to the brothers] or even known to them, but not yet a member of their community—if, employing an unrighteous scheme, such a person has planned to take the monastery by means of an imperial decree and imperial authority, let him be cut off from the holy, consubstantial, life-giving, and indivisible Trinity and estranged from people of piety. [For, he would do this] not so that he would become a model of piety and virtue for all the brothers by practicing asceticism and virtue; nor [would he do it] to increase and improve the monastery's properties. Rather, as a grasping and pleasure-loving person, like the hireling—not the shepherd (John 10:12)—he will squander and consume these [resources] which have been consecrated to God and to [St. John] his venerable Forerunner for the maintenance and improvement of the monastery and for the proper governing and nourishing of the brothers. Such a person will be numbered with Satan and his demons on the day of judgment, and he will be tortured by eternal fire for ages without end.

In addition to these other matters [which are dealt with] in this testamentary rule, I exhort the superior of the monastery in the Holy Spirit to observe and fulfill whatever I shall order regarding the following. Therefore, I order that whoever is the official in charge of the monastery of Koulas²⁴ should take charge of the annual harvest of wheat from the mill close to the little gate of Our Lady, that he take this and make it into loaves of bread and break these into four portions and offer these as charity at the gate of the monastery. He will distribute this charity on Mondays, Wednesdays, and Fridays. Accordingly he should divide up the grain for the entire month into four parts and hand this out as I previously said.

In the same way, he should take the mixed grain to the monastery, make it into loaves of bread and hand out these to the poor, just as I stated before concerning the wheat. He should hand out these loaves not at the gate of the monastery, but removed a distance so that confusion and disorder do not occur at the monastery's gate. So also, what they call the rent for the use²⁵ of the mill, which comes to twelve hyperpera, should be dispersed in the following way.

I wish to build a church in the tower which will be dedicated in the name of the all-holy lady and Mother of God, and I want the Annunciation²⁶ to be celebrated in it. In this building there should remain an old monk with an assistant. Let these two have their allowance from the rent of this mill. With this, let them get the oil and wax for the service of the church and of their liturgical offices. Whatever is left over should all be spent on the feast of the Annunciation for the honor and glory of the most holy Mother of God. For I desire and decree that this particular feast be celebrated in the church of the tower, and I entrust these matters to whoever happens to be the superior at the time so that he will be careful to see that this is done as I order. If anyone—either the superior or an official of the monastery—would want to feather his nest from such revenue which I have assigned to be counted as charity or should wish to confer it upon someone, or would prevent its being used as I decree, he shall render an account before God on the day of judgment.

The end and glory be to God.

Notes on the Translation

Editors' note: The assistance of our translator, Timothy Miller [TM], is gratefully acknowledged for the notes to this document.

1. Actually this is the table of contents for the first typikon of 1324; see above, Analysis, B.
2. A chapter with this title is not among those found in the text of the second typikon of 1332.
3. In the text of the second typikon, this is the title of [21].
4. In this document, this is the title of [22].
5. monydrion, for which cf. Kriaras, Lexiko, s.v.
6. For the wilderness topos, see also (6) Rila, (10) Eleousa [3], and (29) Kosmosoteira [74].
7. Andronikos II (1282–1328) and Andronikos III (1328–41).
8. Perhaps including the following chrysobulls of Andronikos II, ed. Guillou, Archives, no. 4 (1309), pp. 44–46; no. 6 (1313), pp. 48–49; no. 7 (1317), pp. 50–51; no. 8 (1318), pp. 52–53; no. 9 (1321), pp. 53–56; and a chrysobull of Andronikos III, ed. Guillou, no. 10 (1321), pp. 56–59. There are also various prostigmata and horismoi awarded by both emperors to Menoikeion.
9. Andronikos III.
10. Joachim's uncle, Ioannikios.
11. Evidently not preserved; cf. Andronikos III's chrysobulls, ed. Guillou, Archives, no. 24 (1329), pp. 86–89, and no. 26 (1332), pp. 91–95.
12. A reference to the liturgical typikon of St. Sabas, ed. Dmitrievsky, Opisanie, vol. 3, pt. 2, pp. 1–508.
13. Feast of St. Nicholas, December 6.
14. Feast of the the birth of St. John the Baptist, June 24.
15. One gold hyperperon equaled twelve silver ducats. The text as it stands, however, implies that one half-hyperperon equalled eighteen ducats which is not possible. It is therefore necessary to add kai to the text which then renders the passage intelligible. [TM]
16. cf. John Klimakos, Scala Paradisi 4, PG 88, col. 681B.
17. December 25 to the feast of the Epiphany, January 6.
18. Pseudo-Basil of Caesarea, Constitutiones asceticae 28, PG 31, col. 1417C.
19. Likely transitional marker between the portion of the document borrowed from the first typikon and the materials that are original to this document; see above, Analysis, B.
20. The future emperor John VI Kantakouzenos (1347–54), for whom see Nicol, Kantakouzenos, no. 20, pp. 27–30, and Talbot, “John VI Kantakouzenos,” pp. 1050–51. He is called here gambros, “brother-in-law,” of the emperor Andronikos III because his wife was Irene Asenina, a second cousin of the emperor. Irene's grandmother was Irene Palaiologina, a daughter of Michael VIII and sister of the late emperor Andronikos II. [TM]
21. (60) Charsianeites [B7] also forbids daytime visits.
22. In [18] above.
23. John Kantakouzenos.
24. This monastery was located northwest of Serres. See map in Guillou, Archives, pp. 6–7.
25. empatikion. For which, see Kriaras, Lexiko, s.v. embatikiazō.
26. The patronal feast, March 25.

Document Notes

- [1] Foundation history. A Group A chapter. Cf. contemporary foundation histories in (46) Akropolites [4] ff., (48) Prodromos [3], (49) Geromeri [13], (50) Gerasimos [2], and (57) Bebaia Elpis [4].
- [2] Why the typikon was composed. A Group A chapter. See similar discussions in (32) Mamas [41], (33) Heliou Bomon [40], (52) Choumnos [B1], and (60) Charsianeites [B1].
- [3] Independent status of the monastery. A Group A chapter. See other treatments in (22) Evergetis [12] and related documents, including (32) Mamas [4] and (33) Heliou Bomon [4] as well as provisions for Palaiologan institutions in (37) Auxentios [2], (38) Kellibara I [15], (39) Lips [1], (40) Anargyroi [3], (57) Bebaia Elpis [14], and (60) Charsianeites [C18].
- [4] Duties of the ecclesiarch. A Subgroup B.3 chapter, shared with (27) Kecharitomene [20], (32) Mamas [8], and (33) Heliou Bomon [8]. For treatments in Palaiologan documents, see (37) Auxentios [7], (39) Lips [24], and (57) Bebaia Elpis [49], [50], [51].
- [5] Duties of the sacristan. A Subgroup B.3 chapter, shared with (27) Kecharitomene [19], (32) Mamas [8], and (33) Heliou Bomon [8]; see also (39) Lips [23].
- [6] Duties of the cellarer and refectorian. A Group A chapter. For treatments in Palaiologan documents, see (37) Auxentios [7], and (57) Bebaia Elpis [69].
- [7] Duties of the gatekeeper; charity for poor monks and laymen. A Subgroup B.3 chapter, first part shared with (27) Kecharitomene [29], (32) Mamas [12], and (33) Heliou Bomon [12]; second part shared with (32) Mamas [13] and (33) Heliou Bomon [13]. For treatments of the gatekeeper in Palaiologan documents, see (52) Choumnos [A14], (54) Neilos Damilas [16], and (57) Bebaia Elpis [72].
- [8] Dietary regulations: for days of fasting; for non-fast days. A Subgroup B.4 chapter, first part shared with (22) Evergetis [9] and related documents, including (27) Kecharitomene [40], (32) Mamas [17], and (33) Heliou Bomon [17]; second part shared with (27) Kecharitomene [46], (32) Mamas [17], and (33) Heliou Bomon [17]. See also the regulations in other Palaiologan documents: (37) Auxentios [10], (39) Lips [29], (57) Bebaia Elpis [80] ff., and (60) Charsianeites [C17].
- [9] Reading of the typikon. A Subgroup B.1 chapter, shared only with (32) Mamas [16] and (33) Heliou Bomon [16]. See different treatments in (22) Evergetis [43] and (27) Kecharitomene [65]. These Palaiologan documents also provide for the reading of the typikon: (37) Auxentios [13], (39) Lips [8], (55) Athanasios I [8], (57) Bebaia Elpis [120], and (60) Charsianeites [C10].
- [10] Exhortation to the officials. A Subgroup B.4 chapter, shared with (22) Evergetis [33] and related documents, including (27) Kecharitomene [25], (32) Mamas [23], and (33) Heliou Bomon [23].
- [11] Ban on kelliotai and imposed guests. A Subgroup B.3 chapter, shared only with (27) Kecharitomene [53], (32) Mamas [26], and (33) Heliou Bomon [26].
- [12] Allowance to the brothers. A Group A chapter. See different kinds of grants in (32) Mamas [28] and (33) Heliou Bomon [28]; they are rejected, however, in (37) Auxentios [7] and (56) Kellibara II [9].
- [13] Confession. A Subgroup B.1 chapter, shared only with (32) Mamas [29] and (33) Heliou Bomon [29]. See also the treatments in (39) Lips [11], (52) Choumnos [B10], (54) Neilos Damilas [9], (57) Bebaia Elpis [105] ff., and (60) Charsianeites [C6].
- [14] Women and youths banned. A Group A chapter. See different treatments in (22) Evergetis [39], (32) Mamas [27], (33) Heliou Bomon [27], (37) Auxentios [12], (53) Meteora [7], and (60) Charsianeites [C2].
- [15] Regulation of bathing. A Group A chapter. See different treatments in (22) Evergetis [28], (32) Mamas [28], (33) Heliou Bomon [28], (39) Lips [34], and (57) Bebaia Elpis [101].
- [16] Liturgical regulations. A Subgroup B.4 chapter, shared with (22) Evergetis [5] and related documents, including (27) Kecharitomene [33], (32) Mamas [32], and (33) Heliou Bomon [33]. See also the liturgical prescriptions in (37) Auxentios [6], [7], [8]; (39) Lips [30]; (56) Kellibara II [1]; and (57) Bebaia Elpis [78].

FOURTEENTH CENTURY

- [17] No idle chatter during manual labor. A Subgroup B.2 chapter, shared with (22) Evergetis [21] and related documents, including (32) Mamas [35], and (33) Heliou Bomon [34].
- [18] No partiality in elections; hostility to privileges; punishment for disobedience. A Subgroup B.4 chapter, first two parts shared with (22) Evergetis [14], [17] and related documents, including (27) Kecharitomene [12], (32) Mamas [45], and (33) Heliou Bomon [44]; the third part is original to this document.
- [19] Instructions to the superior. A Subgroup B.4 chapter, shared with (22) Evergetis [17] and related documents, including (27) Kecharitomene [12], (32) Mamas [42], and (33) Heliou Bomon [41].
- [20] Final exhortation. A Subgroup B.4 chapter, shared with (22) Evergetis [42] and related documents, including (27) Kecharitomene [78], (32) Mamas [46], and (33) Heliou Bomon [45].
- [21] Designation of the protector. A Group A chapter. For ephoroi and other kinds of protectors in other Palaiologan documents, see (37) Auxentios [16], (38) Kellibara I [16], (39) Lips [3], and (57) Bebaia Elpis [18], [19].
- [22] Additional regulations. A Group A chapter. For disciplinary regulations, see also (55) Athanasios I [4], (56) Kellibara II [3], and (60) Charsianeites [B7]. For imperial investiture of the superior, see also (37) Auxentios [3] and (39) Lips [7]. For consultative government elsewhere, see (22) Evergetis [14] and related documents; in Palaiologan times, see (37) Auxentios [9], (38) Kellibara I [18], (39) Lips [27], (48) Prodromos [8], (50) Gerasimos [3], (52) Choumnos [A3], (57) Bebaia Elpis [23], [55], [67], (59) Manuel II [6], and (60) Charsianeites [B9]. For removal of officials, see (22) Evergetis [32], [42] and related documents. For the protector's assistance, see also (32) Mamas [3], (33) Heliou Bomon [3], (37) Auxentios [16], (38) Kellibara I [16], (39) Lips [3], and (57) Bebaia Elpis [20], cf. (52) Choumnos [A26]. For the warning against violation of the foundation's independence, see also (37) Auxentios [2], (38) Kellibara I [15], (39) Lips [1], (40) Anargyroi [3], and (57) Bebaia Elpis [15].

59. Manuel II: Typikon of Manuel II Palaiologos for the Monasteries of Mount Athos

Date: June 1406

Translator: George Dennis

Edition employed: Denise Papachryssanthou, Actes du Prôtaton (= Archives de l' Athos 7) (Paris, 1975), pp. 254–61, with text at 257–61.

Manuscript: Autograph, Monastery of Iveron library (illustrated in Papachryssanthou, Prôtaton, album, pls. 36–38)¹

Other translations: Russian, by Porfirii Uspensky, Vostok kristianskii. Athon. Istoriia Athona, vol. 3, pt. 2 (St. Petersburg, 1892), pp. 201–9.

Analysis

A. Historical Background

In this document Manuel II Palaiologos asserts his patronal prerogative to legislate for the monastic communities of Mount Athos, much as his imperial predecessors had done four centuries earlier in (12) Tzimiskes and (15) Constantine IX. Thessalonike, along with Mount Athos, was returned to Byzantine administration by a treaty in 1403 between this emperor and the Ottoman Sultan Suleiman I (1403–10). This document dates from this last period of Byzantine control over Mount Athos, which according to Oikonomides (“Conquête ottomane,” p. 10) lasted down to 1423/24, at which time the Athonites made their submission to Sultan Murad II (1421–44). In 1403, a delegation of Athonite monks arrived before the emperor in Constantinople to discuss various matters related to their properties and the taxes due on them.² According to a surviving prostagma, Manuel II sent Demetrios Boulotes on a mission to Athos in September 1404 to investigate disputes over properties in Macedonia between the Athonites and the Turks and between the monks and John VII Palaiologos, who was then administering Thessalonike for the emperor.³ There is also an allusion in this document to differences among the Athonites themselves on matters of common concern. Boulotes was to investigate, and if these issues could not be resolved, they were to be referred to the emperor for “the necessary correction.” This has been identified by Papachryssanthou (Prôtaton, p. 108) as the occasion for the issuance of the typikon translated below.

B. Model Typikon

This document has both an acknowledged and an unacknowledged source. The acknowledged source is the “Rule of Athanasios,” which our author refers to primarily on constitutional matters.⁴ Despite its title, it seems clear this is not the text of (11) Ath. Rule as we know it; though one of the four references may be to that document, the other three apparently are to (14) Ath. Testament. The unacknowledged source, employed for the regulation of disciplinary matters, is (12) Tzimiskes, to which the author's own typikon has many analogues⁵ and from which he quotes (in the typical fashion for our authors, without attribution) in [10]. This shows how one Byzantine patron had the same respect for a prior regulatory typikon that patrons typically had for the memory of the "first founder" of a foundation they proposed to restore.⁶

Through the use of these documents, our author was attempting to impose a gradual reform in support of cenobitic monasticism, of which the monks' renunciation of personal property was the key element. Patronal piety aside, (12) Tzimiskes was hardly an ideal text on which to base such a reform since—typically for a document originating in the pre-reform tenth century—it is broadly tolerant of monks' ownership of private property. Yet the revolutionary changes in Byzantine monasticism since the tenth century were not without their impact on the present document. Our author's assertion [1], [12] of the inalienability and the sacral character of entrance donations and monastic property in general is an implicit acknowledgement of one of the essential conceptual contributions of the Evergetian reform movement. The administrative council, an institution of consultative government attributed [6] to the "Rule of Athanasios," actually represents a considerable expansion of the role designated for the electoral council in the comparable chapters of (14) Ath. Testament [12], [13]. Therefore the "Rule of Athanasios" as known to our author may have been a later, more ideologically and institutionally developed text than any of the Athanasian documents now preserved. The functions assigned to the "pre-eminent monks" in (22) Evergetis [14] may have prepared the way for the expanded role of their Palaiologan counterparts that can also be seen in (58) Menoikeion [22]. Yet the notion of collaborative government was never carried to such an extreme (i.e., decision-making by majority vote) in the rest of our documents as it is here. The increasing awareness of and respect for canon law has also had an impact in the sterner attitude shown [8] towards accepting monks from other monasteries.

C. Lives of the Monks

1. Personal Possessions

Among the many aspects of monastic life that our author claims have suffered neglect "because of the anomalies of the times" was the obligation of the Holy Mountain's monks to forswear personal possessions. Since the author considered it impossible to oblige the monks to "observe every one of the original regulations," he prefers to "approach the more important aspects of monastic life" by beginning with "the lesser ones." Here that means allowing [2] those monks who "hold as their own certain possessions which provide them with a modest income" to have a lifetime usufruct but to have these properties revert to their monasteries afterwards. He hoped that later the monks would be able to return to the original practice, referring to (11) Ath. Rule [34], of having no personal possessions.

2. Cenobitic Lifestyle

Despite the author's exhortation to the monks to fulfill their cenobitic ideals of renunciation (apotage) and obedience (hypotage), it seems clear that he also despaired [1] of being able to prevent them from either leaving their monasteries entirely on occasion or else remaining in the cells and "embracing the idiorhythmic life on the pretext of seeking solitude (hesychia)."

3. Servants Permitted

Those monks with the private means to pay them were allowed to have [2] personal servants, though not eunuchs and beardless youths [13]. Servants were to be [5] subject to the authority of the superior for such matters as permission to enter or leave the monastery.

4. Precautions against Sexual Misconduct

Like his distant imperial predecessors and Athanasios the Athonite,⁷ the author bans [13] eunuchs and beardless youths. The latter were also not to be allowed to accompany [15] building workers who might be engaged by the monks for particular projects (cf. (12) Tzimiskes [25]). The prohibition on eunuchs and youths is justified on the peculiar grounds that if it were not in force, a woman might be able to gain access to the Holy Mountain by disguising herself as a man. The author also endorses [14] the traditional Athonite prohibition⁸ on the use of female animals, “no matter how much help they provide in meeting needs.”

D. Constitutional Matters

1. Leadership

The author formalizes [6] the governing role of the “preeminent monks” seen in other foundations (especially (22) Evergetis [14] and its successors) into an administrative council of fifteen of the leading monks and the superior. He cites the “Rule of Athanasios” for the number of councillors, but neither the number nor indeed even the institution of a governing council is to be found in our present text of (11) Ath. Rule, though (58) Menoikeion [22] provides for collaborative government between its superior and a panel of four monks. Here, the superior and the councillors were to meet [7] every day or two to review the performance of the various officials of the monastery. They would also be responsible for selecting [3] new officials as well as the administrators of the dependencies of their monastery. The appointments to the dependencies were to be made [11] carefully to avoid the appearance of favoritism. The superior and the council were to resolve disputed issues by majority vote. The members of the council were to have their names inscribed [6] in the register of the monastery; deceased members were to be replaced by co-option.

2. Election of the Superior

The councillors were to serve [3], along with certain monks living outside the monastery (perhaps important kelliotai), as an electoral college for the selection of the superior. Again, the author cites the “Rule of Athanasios” as his authority. The citation is identifiable in our documents as (14) Ath. Testament [13], cf. (13) Ath. Typikon [18], in which Emperor Nikephoros Phokas allows the monks at Lavra generally to make their own choice of a new superior. The author provides that the installation ceremony should follow [3] that set down in the “Rule of Athanasios,” cf. (14) Ath. Testament [14].

E. Financial Matters

1. Financial Administration

The superior and his councillors were to be responsible [6], cf. [12] for managing the monastery’s financial administration as well as the rest of its affairs. A secretary, functioning like the treasurer in other monasteries, was to keep [7] a record of income and expenditures, to be countersigned by some of the councillors.

2. Treatment of Entrance Offerings

Unlike the contemporary (60) Charsianeites [B16], entrance gifts brought to the monastery by postulants were welcomed. There is a special regulation governing their proper allocation. Gifts suitable for use in the church should be placed [12] there as consecrated offerings, while everything else was to be entrusted to the monastery's officials and apportioned out for the needs of the community with the knowledge of the superior and his councillors. As in the Evergetian tradition, taking personal possession of a donation of this sort was condemned as sacrilege. Also, as in (22) Evergetis [37], the donor of an entrance gift was not to be accorded [1] any special rights in the monastery because of it but would "receive from the monastery just what each of the brothers receives," i.e., he would not be allowed to retain a private income from his donation for his own use, as was also disallowed in (60) Charsianeites [B13]. If the donor decided later to leave the monastery or adopt an idiorhythmic life, he could not take with him any of the foundation's property or demand money from it, once again on the grounds that to do so would be sacrilegious.

F. Overall Philosophy

1. Respect for Canon Law

In a belated demonstration that another of the traditionally ignored principles of canon law was finally taking root,⁹ there is a provision that a monk coming to one monastery from another (i.e., a xenokourites) should be returned [8] to his home institution. He was to be admitted only if and when his current superior proved unwilling to take him back (cf. the more indulgent (12) Tzimiskes [4]). This is a striking contrast to the willingness of many previous foundations illustrated in our collection of documents to accept pious xenokouritai, even here on Mount Athos back in the tenth century (see (12) Tzimiskes [2]). Indeed these foundations were often dependent on such individuals for institutional reinvigoration and even, on occasion, for their leadership, despite fears that as superiors xenokouritai might compromise institutional independence or introduce foreign customs.¹⁰

G. External Relations

Just as Athanasios the Athonite had long ago banned adoptions and the formation of spiritual relationships in (13) Ath. Typikon [32], so here too our author prohibits [10] them, although he acknowledges that some of these relationships may already be in existence. The fear explicitly acknowledged here is that property-owning monks will bequeath assets to laymen that would otherwise (see [2]) revert to the ownership of their monastery. Our author seems to have been directly acquainted with (12) Tzimiskes [14], from which some of the text of [10] is borrowed.

Notes on the Introduction

1. See Papachryssanthou, Prôtaton, p. 254.
2. See Oikonomidès, "Haradj," pp. 681–88.

3. For the prostagma, see Arkadios Vatopedinos, “Hagioreitika analekta 15. Basilike diatage pros Demetriton ton Vouloten peri Hagiou Orous,” Gregorios ho Palamas 2 (1918), 449–52.
4. The citations are: [2] monastic poverty, [3] election of the superior by the councillors, [3] installation of officials, and [6] number of councillors.
5. [8] reception of monks from other monasteries, cf. (12) Tzimiskes [5]; [10] no spiritual relationships with lay people, cf. (12) Tzimiskes [14]; [13] no eunuchs or beardless youths, cf. (12) Tzimiskes [16]; [14] no female animals, cf. (12) Tzimiskes [22], [23]; [15] building workers’ assistants, cf. (12) Tzimiskes [25].
6. Cf. (33) Heliou Bomon [51], (37) Kellibara I [12], and (40) Anargyroi [6].
7. (12) Tzimiskes [16], (13) Ath. Typikon [48], (15) Constantine IX [1], cf. [15].
8. (13) Ath. Typikon [31], cf. (12) Tzimiskes [22], [23], (15) Constantine IX [3]. For the underlying Studite custom, see (3) Theodore Studites [5].
9. See C. Const. I et II, c. 4 (R&P 2.658–59).
10. For the acceptability of xenokouritai as superiors, see (32) Mamas [1], (37) Auxentios [3], and (60) Charsianeites [B11]; for their career track, see (35) Skoteine [5], [8], [17]; for fear of changes introduced by them, see (32) Mamas [43], (33) Heliou Bomon [1], and (37) Auxentios [3].

Bibliography

- Beck, Hans-Georg, Kirche und theologische Literatur im byzantinischen Reich (Munich, 1959), p. 785.
- Dölger, Franz, Regesten der Kaiserurkunden des oströmischen Reiches von 565–1453, 5 vols. (Munich-Berlin, 1924–65), no. 3312.
- Meyer, Ph., Die Haupturkunden für die Geschichte der Athosklöster (Leipzig, 1894), pp. 62–64.
- Oikonomidès, Nicolas, “Le ‘haradj’ dans l’Empire byzantin du XV^e siècle,” Actes du premier Congrès international des Études balkaniques et du sud-est européennes 3 (Sofia, 1969), pp. 681–88, repr. Documents et études sur les institutions de Byzance (VII^e–XV^e s.) (London, 1976).
- , “Monastères et moines lors de la conquête ottomane,” SF 35 (1976), 1–10.
- Ostrogorsky, George, “Byzance, État tributaire de l’Empire turc,” ZRVI 5 (1958), 49–58.
- Papachryssanthou, Denise, Actes du Prôtaton (= Archives de l’Athos 7) (Paris, 1975), pp. 107–9.

Translation

[Prologue]

When a disease becomes very oppressive, causing serious harm to our bodies, and the affliction does not yield to treatment, the physicians, nonetheless, by skillfully making use of medicines and dietary improvements bit by bit overcome the illness and restore the patient to his former state of health. In like manner, the physicians of souls must constantly endeavor to see that the monks, who have chosen the narrow and rugged road, should live as God wants. If they should ever happen to turn off the straight way, then they must give sound advice, take them by the hand, and lead them back bit by bit to the life they have turned from. Then too, the instructors of serious students are often able to arouse them to greater effort, making use of speech as a goad to keep laziness from taking over, so their progress in acquiring the skill does not come to a stop. If this is so, how much more is it fitting in the monastic way of life, which is appropriately termed the art of arts,¹ that those who have been negligent in living virtuously and thrown themselves off the steep and narrow road should be carefully guided back to the point at which they turned off.

Now then, since so many aspects of the monastic way of life have suffered neglect in the revered monasteries on the holy mountain of Athos because of the anomalies of the time and the circumstances, my majesty realizes that some of those matters which have been neglected must be brought back to a better state, as many as the present situation permits. Otherwise, such gradual negligence will make a mockery of the whole monastic way of life. If we do not straightaway arouse the monks to observe every one of the original regulations, it does not mean that these things are being overlooked but that we must take care to correct the [transgressions] which remain [to be corrected] also. After all, wholesome foods are not disregarded because they do not destroy the disease immediately. Rather, we must choose them, for bit by bit they restore complete health. There seems to be no other way to approach the more important aspects of the monastic way of life than to begin somehow with the lesser ones.

FIFTEENTH CENTURY

1. First of all, to the best of their ability the monks must adhere to their renunciation. What constitutes the monastic way of life is not only whatever leads to the acquisition and practice of virtue and to progress in all other spiritual works which transform the soul into something better and more perfect (the holy scriptures make this clear to anyone interested), but it lies precisely in remembering and fulfilling the ideals of renunciation and obedience. The monks know exactly that just as God holds the recompense ready for those who have chosen to live as monks according to their promise (cf. Heb. 2:2), so there is the threat of judgment if they should be proven false in keeping the agreement they have made with him when they put on the holy habit. To the extent that such monks abandon observing their promises, by so much do they sin against God and transgress their profession to him.

The person entering the monastery and handing himself over completely to be a brother does so without demanding anything back or making any such agreement. He agrees, rather, to observe obedience to the superior and to live in peace with the brothers. Now, if he should wish to present something to the monastery as an offering or dedicatory gift, this may be given by him on the understanding that by making the offering he does not acquire any special right in the monastery because of the gift. The usage followed in the [p. 258] holy and great Lavra² is that absolutely no agreement is made between them because of what a man has brought in, but he is to receive from the monastery just what each of the brothers receives. But if he should become restive and move out of the monastery or remain in his cell without the consent of his own superior, embracing the idiorhythmic life on the pretext of seeking solitude, then he ought not take anything from the monastery nor should he demand any hyperpera from it. For if they were presented to the monastery as a dedicatory gift, then it is sacrilegious to try to take them back. Neither should he take anything from the monastery, in keeping with another custom in force in the holy Lavra, since he has not observed what he promised, nor is he willing to live as do the rest of the brothers. It is right, therefore, that he be deprived of what the other brothers receive from the monastery because of their perseverance and the peace and obedience which they show towards one another and towards the superior.

2. One who has elected to live as a monk should strive to have nothing as his own. But, mindful of the command and the threat just mentioned above in connection with renunciation, he should turn his back on all things present and, according to his promise, live a crucified life. This is the true good. “No one who puts his hand to the plow,” it is said, “and turns back is fit to enter the kingdom of heaven” (Luke 9:62). By “back” is meant those things we have tossed aside as though they weighed us down on our journey to God. There are, however, at present instances of monks who hold as their own certain possessions which provide them with a modest income and for that reason cannot easily be taken away. In the case of these monks, then, let them retain the use and enjoy the fruits of these for the rest of their lives. Upon their death, though, these properties should be transmitted to their monasteries, in keeping with the practice observed in the Lavra up to the present. In the future, however, it is fitting that the monks should possess nothing as their own, according to the Rule of Saint Athanasios and their own promise.³ If the current situation presents a problem by not permitting them to make such a change for the better all at once, then let them hold on to those possessions until, with God’s help, the situation is again favorable, as is the custom throughout the holy mountain. From their movable property let them distribute what they wish to the servants subject to them as a recompense for their service, keeping in view what is fitting and blameless.

3. The superior should be appointed not only by the vote and election of the fifteen councillors inside the monastery according to the Rule of the Saint,⁴ but also by the agreement of preeminent brothers living outside the monastery who are to meet with them. The examination by the internal councillors and their agreement will certainly be sufficient for dealing with the affairs of the monastery. But for the election of the superior the presence of the outside monks is also necessary. For an event which happens only once it is not burdensome for the outside monks to come in once to the monastery. More important, though, it is necessary for everyone to come together and agree upon this man, inasmuch as they are electing a spiritual father whom they are to follow and imitate and to whom they are obliged once and for all to be subject. After the election they shall install him in accordance with the holy Rule of Saint Athanasios,⁵ who has put order into their way of doing things. It is the duty of the superior, then, in full agreement with the councillors to select the officials of the monastery, those who should be sent out to the dependencies,⁶ and those to whom the services of the monastery should be entrusted. In this way no one will gainsay them or suspect that they have appropriated the position themselves, since they were selected by the councillors.

4. All the brothers should have genuine love for the superior and should listen attentively to whatever he may say or propose. “He who hears you,” it is said, “hears me, and he who rejects you rejects me” (Luke 10:16). They should regard him as a father, indeed, as more than a father, for spiritual things are superior to those of the flesh. The superior in turn should look upon all as his brothers and fathers [p. 259] and in every way try to take care of them and guide them along the path of salvation. Our Lord and God was not ashamed to call those who followed him his fathers and brothers. For these, he said, “These are my mother and my brothers” (Matt. 12:49).

5. No one should enter or leave the monastery on his own accord, but only with the permission of the superior and after making their obeisance. Upon their return, they should be closely examined by him about what their soul or body encountered along the way. If necessary, he should give them norms to follow or he should dismiss them with forgiveness. The same will be expected of the servants of the old monks. If the old monks themselves require the permission of the superior to go out, all the more reason then for the servants to observe this rule. Otherwise, how will they look as disciples and servants of those whose way of life they do not imitate?

FIFTEENTH CENTURY

6. Everything affecting the monastery should be done with the council of the leading monks and the superior. Those cities which are prosperous are administered by the council of the best citizens, not by that of the majority or of anyone who happens along or even of the ruler alone. For the first is democracy, and the other is tyranny, both of which are quite out of place. It would be right to have nothing affecting the monastery determined without the counsel of the leading monks. Everything, in fact, should be done with the knowledge, intention and approval of them and of the superior. They should number fifteen, according to the Rule of the Saint,⁷ and their names should be inscribed in the register of the monastery. When one of them is called to perform his final duty, let those who remain deliberate and elect another to take that man's place, so that the number of councillors may be kept the same.

7. These councillors should come together for a meeting each day if possible, and definitely every two days. Together with the superior they should deliberate about what must be done; they should examine the services of the monastery and how they are provided by the appointed officials. The secretary of the monastery should keep a regular account of what goes out and what comes into the monastery, and this should be signed by some of the councillors to keep it above criticism. If there is any disagreement among them concerning what has to be done, the majority of votes should prevail.

8. A monk coming from one monastery to another should not be received immediately by its superior. At the same time, those monks should not be treated with disdain who abandon their own monastery or leave because of some fault, and thus run away from their spiritual enclosure. Every effort, rather, must be made to call them back to their monastery in imitation of our great God and Savior who, according to the parable, left the sheep that had not gone astray to go after the one that had gone astray (Matt. 18:12). A monk leaving one monastery and who wishes to come to this superior's monastery may then be received, according to the holy and divine canons, when the superior whom the monk left has been requested to pardon the brother for his sin, and he does not wish to do so. This is the manner in which they should act. They ought also to fear the penalties which the holy and divine canons⁸ of the first and second council [of Constantinople (861)] explicitly establish concerning monks who hop about from one enclosure to another and are received without the process noted above being observed.

9. The dough which is used to prepare the special bread for the divine offering should be more pure and not like that used for the needs of the monks. For if in times past when the sacrifice was being presented to God according to the old rite, the first and choicest fruits were offered to him, now when the bloodless sacrifice is being celebrated by the holy ministers, how much more appropriate is it that the dough from which the divine and spotless bread will be made should be pure and choice? Too much eucharistic bread should not be made from it, but only as much as shall suffice for the service of the church. To make more than that amount and not to offer it up to God, but to allow the monks to eat the surplus, this is to sin before God. Those who dare to do this call down on themselves the same condemnation to which Eli and his sons were subjected. Before offering sacrifice to God they took the offerings, [p. 260] consumed them, and gave them to others. Eli did not stand up to them and forbid their impetuous act, and because of their sin they perished shamefully along with their father. Then too, the ark of God was handed over to foreigners, almost as if God could not bear having it remain among these lawbreakers (I Kings 2:12–4:18).

10. None of the monks of the Holy Mountain should go out and form spiritual relationships or adopted brotherhoods with lay people. This is quite improper for monks, for they have renounced children and parents and, in a word, all relationship by blood. Even if some have gone ahead and gotten involved in this sort of thing, they should still not go off to their houses, have dinner or supper with them, or do any drinking with them, or leave anything to them as their heirs.⁹

11. The dependencies should be given to those whom the superior and his councillors shall select. This should be a testimony before God, with their own conscience bearing witness, that they were not given these dependencies because of some relationship, close friendship, or in connection with some gift. For if it should not be handled properly, then the monks begin to grumble and whisper, and this will turn the monastery upside down and cause terrible destruction of souls. This leads to the tranquillity of the monks being overturned, as well as the whole monastic establishment and way of life. The Lord laid great stress on this. “Whoever scandalizes one of these little ones, it would be better for him to have a millstone fastened round his neck and to be drowned in the sea” (Matt. 18:6). How severe a judgment, then, will the man suffer who scandalizes so many and such good people? To such a person may be applied the saying: “It would have been better for that man if he had not been born” (Matt. 26:24). By his own actions he dismembers the body of the brotherhood, which is Christ himself, limb by limb with slander and grumbling (cf. I Cor. 12:27). It is clearly time to say: “Drive out such a person from among you,” so that “a little leaven” may not ruin “the whole lump” (I Cor. 5:6).

12. If anything should be brought into the monastery as an entrance gift, whether it be money, sacred vessels, oil, or anything else used for bodily needs, then the sacred things should be placed in the church as dedicated to God, while the other things should be entrusted to the officials, and with the knowledge of the councillors and the superior should be apportioned out for the unquestioned needs of the monastery. No one should take possession of any of them as his own; this would be sacrilegious and quite alien to the monastic way of life.

13. No eunuch or beardless youth should be received by the monks either for some service or to be clothed with the monastic habit.¹⁰ For in that way even a woman might escape notice if she dared to enter into the monastery disguising herself as a man and playing the role of a eunuch or beardless youth.

FIFTEENTH CENTURY

14. Female animals of any kind whatsoever should never be found within the Holy Mountain, no matter how much help they provide in meeting needs.¹¹ This has been forbidden once and for all by those holy and virtuous men not out of simplicity or without reason, but to assure that the monks there would be pure in every respect and that not even their eyes would be soiled by the sight of a female.

15. Building workers may enter within the monastery and do work needed by the brothers, but they should not be accompanied by beardless boys on the pretext that they are assisting them.¹² In this case the reason is the same as was given a little bit earlier concerning eunuchs and beardless youths.

We consider it important that all the superiors and monks of the Holy Mountain should carefully observe every one of these regulations published by my majesty. By no means should anyone dare to take steps to overturn any one of the above chapters, being ever mindful, as it is said, of the threat and of the recompense. For at one time God bestows crowns and wreaths on those who carry out these regulations. At another time there is the threat of punishment and fire for those who pay no heed to them. If, therefore, anyone is discovered holding in contempt these regulations which have been issued for the protection and benefit of the monks on the Holy Mountain, let him recall the threats of the divine and holy canons, and let such a person be aware that he will experience no little unpleasantness on the part of my majesty, since he has trampled on his own conscience and been the instigator of scandal for [p. 261] most people.

Since in connection with some other particular topics the monks requested and called upon my majesty to set down regulations on how they should proceed, my majesty has issued a decree about them in a prostagma, in which they are all written down.¹³ This is also confirmed by the present chrysobull, so that the monks may fulfill everything written down in that prostagma just as what is written here. For this reason, now, the present chrysobull has been issued by my majesty to present the honorable monks on the holy Mountain of Athos with a typikon and a rule for the way of life they ought to be leading.

Issued in the month of June of the current fourteenth indiction, the year 6914 [= 1406 A.D.], and signed below by our pious and powerful majesty promoted by God.

Manuel [II] Palaiologos, in Christ our God faithful emperor and autokrator of the Romans.

Notes on the Translation

1. Cf. Ammonius, In Porphyrii Isagogen, ed. A. Busse, Commentaria in Aristotelem Graeca, vol. 4, pt. 3 (Berlin, 1891), p. 6, line 27.
2. Cf. (13) Ath. Typikon [49].
3. (11) Ath. Rule [34].
4. (14) Ath. Testament [13].
5. (14) Ath. Testament [14].
6. See also [11] below.
7. (14) Ath. Testament [13].

8. C. Const. I et II, c. 4 (R&P 2.658–59).
9. Cf. the language of (12) Tzimiskes [14]. On adelphopoiia, see (3) Theodore Studites [8].
10. Cf. the language of (12) Tzimiskes [16]. For the so-called transvestite nuns—women who disguised themselves as eunuchs in order to enter a male monastery—and the reasons that prompted them to choose a male disguise, see E. Patlagean, “L’histoire de la femme déguisée en moine et l’évolution de la sainteté féminine à Byzance,” Studi Medievali, ser. 3, 17 (1976), fasc. 2, pp. 597–623.
11. Cf. (12) Tzimiskes [22], [23].
12. Cf. the language of (12) Tzimiskes [25].
13. Papachryssanthou, Prôtaton, p. 257, identifies this document as the prostagma of September 29, 1404. addressed to Demetrios Boulotes, ed. Arkadios Vatopedinos, “Hagioretika analekta”; see discussion above in Analysis.

Document Notes

- [1] Irrevocability of entrance gifts. See also [12] below, (22) Evergetis [37] and related documents. (13) Ath. Typikon [49] takes a different approach to the problem.
- [2] Lifetime rights of usufruct for monks with possessions; private payment for servants. For lifetime usufruct, see also (21) Roidion [A2], [B11], cf. [B15], [B17] and (42) Sabas [4]. For servants in other Palaiologan monasteries, see (39) Lips [40], [41]; (57) Bebaia Elpis [94]; and (58) Menoikeion [11].
- [3] Election of and installation of superiors; selection of officials. See also provisions in other Athonite documents in (13) Ath. Typikon [16], [17] and (14) Ath. Testament [13], [14]. For the regulation of these matters in other Palaiologan monasteries, see (37) Auxentios [3], [7]; (38) Kellibara I [18]; (39) Lips [5], [7], [21]; (48) Prodromos [18]; (50) Gerasimos [3]; (51) Koutloumoussi [A13], [B18], [C8]; (54) Neilos Damilas [16], [18]; (55) Athanasios I [5]; (57) Bebaia Elpis [26], [73], [74]; (58) Menoikeion [18], [22]; and (60) Charsianeites [B11], [C18].
- [4] Proper relations between the superiors and their monks. Cf. the general discussions in (37) Auxentios [4], [5] and (57) Bebaia Elpis [27] ff. and [37] ff.
- [5] The superior to regulate all entrances and departures. For regulation of access in other Palaiologan monasteries, see (39) Lips [9], [15], [16]; (40) Anargyroi [5]; (52) Choumnos [A14]; (54) Neilos Damilas [16]; and (57) Bebaia Elpis [55], [72], [75], [76].
- [6] Consultative government by the superior and councillors; deceased councillors to be replaced by co-option. For generally less structured examples of consultative government elsewhere in Palaiologan documents, see (37) Auxentios [9], (38) Kellibara I [18], (39) Lips [27], (48) Prodromos [8], (50) Gerasimos [3], (52) Choumnos [A3], (57) Bebaia Elpis [23], [55], [67], (58) Menoikeion [22], and (60) Charsianeites [B9].
- [7] Regulations for the daily meetings of the councillors. See earlier provisions for financial record-keeping in (27) Kecharitomene [24], (32) Mamas [10], (33) Heliou Bomon [10], (34) Machairas [100], and (57) Bebaia Elpis [55].
- [8] Procedures for admission of monks from other monasteries. See also provisions in other Athonite documents in (12) Tzimiskes [4], [5], [8] and (15) Constantine IX [7].
- [9] Special dough for the eucharistic bread. See also (34) Machairas [40], (36) Blemmydes [4]; cf. (29) Kosmosoteira [85].
- [10] No spiritual relationships or adopted brotherhoods with lay people. Shared with (12) Tzimiskes [14]; cf. (3) Theodore Studites [8], (13) Ath. Typikon [30].
- [11] Dispassionate choice of administrators for dependencies. For appointments to dependencies, see also (44) Karyes [4], [5] and (48) Prodromos [4], [6], [12].
- [12] Proper handling of entrance gifts. See also [1] above, with crossreferences. For other contemporary approaches, see (52) Choumnos [B11] and (60) Charsianeites [B12], [B13], [B16].
- [13] Ban on eunuchs and beardless youths as servants or novices. See similar provisions in other Athonite documents in (12) Tzimiskes [16], (13) Ath. Typikon [48], and (15) Constantine IX [1], cf. [15], in (58)

FIFTEENTH CENTURY

Menoikeion [14], and in the contemporary (60) Charsianeites [C2].

[14] Ban on female animals. See similar provisions in other Athonite documents in (12) Tzimiskes [22], [23]; (13) Ath. Typikon [31], [53]; and (15) Constantine IX [3], [4]. See also the contemporary (60) Charsianeites [C2].

[15] Building workers may enter, but no beardless youths. See similar provision in (12) Tzimiskes [25].

60. Charsianeites: Testament of Patriarch Matthew I for the Monastery of Charsianeites Dedicated to the Mother of God Nea Peribleptos

Date: September 1407

Translator: Alice-Mary Talbot

Edition employed: I. M. Konidares and K. A. Manaphes, “Epiteleutios boulesis kai didaskalia tou oikoumenikou patriarchou Matthaïou A’ (1397–1410),” EEBS 45 (1981–82), 462–515, with text at 472–510.

Manuscripts: Codex Vindobonensis historicus graecus 55; Codex Parisinus Coislinianus graecus 243 (both 15th c.)¹

Other translations: German paraphrase of the Rule of Mark and Neilos [B] and the Subsequent Chapters [C] by Herbert Hunger, “Das Testament des Patriarchen Matthaïos I. (1397–1410),” BZ 51 (1958), 288–309, at 305–9.

Institutional History

A. Foundation by John Charsianeites

The history of this Constantinopolitan foundation is known primarily from the document translated below. The founder John Charsianeites, who is said [A6] to have believed that “wealth is a cause of spiritual destruction for those who do not divert it to needful purposes,” purchased the site for the monastery from a certain Ambar. Charsianeites endowed it with certain properties, including the village of Palatitzia that had been granted to him by Emperor John VI Kantakouzenos (1347–54). He was able to recruit [A7] Mark, then serving as superior of the monastery of Kosmidion, to direct his monastery, which was dedicated to the Mother of God Peribleptos.² After the return of John V Palaiologos (1341–1391) to Constantinople in 1354 and the abdication of John VI, Charsianeites, a supporter of the latter, was disgraced, and all his properties were confiscated [A7], including Palatitzia. It is not clear when Charsianeites himself became a monk under the monastic name Job, nor is it certain that he lived out the rest of his life at his own monastery, but his friend the ex-emperor John VI did take up [A8] residence for a time after 1354 and according to Nicol (Kantakouzenos, p. 94) may have composed his memoirs and other works there.

B. Association with the Patriarchate

Two of Mark’s eventual successors entered the Charsianeites monastery as his disciples during his superiorship; both went on to become patriarchs of Constantinople. The first was Neilos Kerameus, who became a monk at Charsianeites in 1354, and the second was our author Matthew, who entered the monastery at the age of fifteen, perhaps circa 1375.³ Neilos served as Mark’s immediate successor, shortly before his own elevation to the patriarchate in 1380. Neilos continued [A8]

the work of his predecessor in increasing the monastery's endowment, and evidently completed the testamentary Rule Mark had drawn up [A12] for Charsianeites. This work, called for convenience here the Rule of Mark and Neilos, was later incorporated by Matthew in his own Testament translated below (see [B]). This Rule probably dates from the late 1370s and the early 1380s.

Although Neilos continued to serve as superior of Charsianeites during his patriarchate (1380–88), he was unable [A9] to devote sufficient attention to its welfare, and its properties deteriorated. Neilos conveyed [A5] the monastery to our author in a testamentary disposition, probably circa 1388. Matthew then worked [A9] diligently to increase the monastery's endowment during the next few years, yet nearly all its properties were destroyed in the course of the Ottoman siege of Constantinople (1394–1402) by Beyazid I. Undeterred by this calamity, Matthew worked to restore [A12] the ruined properties up through the time he drew up this document. Emperor Manuel II Palaiologos (1391–1425) assisted [A11] with tax exemptions for a few of the foundation's properties. Meanwhile, our author was elected patriarch of Constantinople as Matthew I (1397–1402, 1403–10). He was the last of the great reform patriarchs of the Palaiologan era.⁴ Like Neilos Kerameus, he continued to serve as superior of the Charsianeites monastery during his patriarchate, but with more diligence than his predecessor. He issued the foundation's testamentary typikon translated below in 1407.

C. Subsequent History of the Foundation

In the first half of the fifteenth century, Makarios Makres, superior of the Pantokrator monastery for which (28) Pantokrator was written, was the author of a description of an icon of the Nativity located in the church of the Charsianeites monastery.⁵ The monastery was still in operation in the middle of the fifteenth century when ca. 1450–52 the future patriarch Gennadios II Scholarios began his monastic career there.⁶ According to George Sphrantzes, the superior in 1451 was a certain Neophytos. Earlier, Sphrantzes' younger brother had become a monk there in 1417. He studied under Joseph Bryennios, who was still living at the monastery at the time that Emperor Manuel II Palaiologos dictated his personal testament to Sphrantzes in 1425.⁷ Presumably the monastery remained active up to the fall of Constantinople to the Turks in 1453, but nothing is known of its fate thereafter. Although presumed to have been situated somewhere in Constantinople, the monastery's precise location is unknown.⁸

Analysis

This document, formally titled as “Final Will and Instructions,” is composed of three parts, an Autobiography [A] of the author, Patriarch Matthew I, the Rule of Mark and Neilos [B], the author's predecessors, and the Subsequent Chapters [C], a kind of supplementary typikon. The author's quotation of the earlier Rule [B] within the text of the present document is a novel way for a patron to incorporate the customs of his like-minded predecessors in his own legislation. More typically, patrons accomplished this more circuitously by freely incorporating unattributed quotations from a respected model typikon. Only Isaac Komnenos, in (29) Kosmosoteira [8], comes close to our author's willingness here to acknowledge his indebtedness to earlier legislation that had served to form his own notion of how a monastic community should be organized.

60. CHARSIANEITES

A. Model Typikon

Both Mark and Neilos' Rule and the author's own Subsequent Chapters are militantly pro-cenobitic documents. The Rule in particular is useful for illustrating the impact of the idiorhythmic challenge to cenobitic life that was one of the most salient features of Byzantine monasticism in the last centuries of the empire. Thus, while a contemporary document like (58) Menoikeion weakly claims a place in the Evergetian tradition based on its sharing the more moderate, late-reform phraseology of (32) Mamas, the referenced parts of the present document, like the surviving extracts of (40) Philanthropos and (56) Kellibara II, are aggressively neo-Evergetian by virtue of sharing a common ideological outlook as well as consistent customs and usages with (22) Evergetis itself. Typically, the Rule and the Subsequent Chapters echo some of the most significant content found in (22) Evergetis itself.⁹ They even advance more extreme positions on some subjects such as private friendships, relations with family members, the acceptability of entrance gifts, and the admissibility of monks without assets. Finally, since this long document, along with the very brief (5) Euthymios and (55) Athanasios I, are the only ones in our collection written by patriarchs, we gain from it our best insight into the thinking of the public officials of the Byzantine church at a critical time when the hierarchy was attempting, with some success, to redefine the rights and responsibilities of private patronage over ecclesiastical institutions.¹⁰

B. Lives of the Monks

1. Number of Monks

There is no specification of the number of monks at the foundation, but since the need to replace the monks as they are reduced by attrition is foreseen [B12], there was likely a fixed number of positions.

2. Liturgical Duties

There is no systematic discussion of liturgical duties, although there is a reference [C17] to an unidentified typikon in connection with the psalmody prescribed for Lent and other periods of fasting. There are special provisions for the celebration of the patronal feast of the Dormition of the Mother of God [C14], for the annual memorial service for the founder Neilos [C15], for the memorial services for departed monks [C13], and for a weekly liturgy for the emperor and his family [A11].

3. Manual Labor

Manual labor is one of several areas of monastic life that the Rule of Mark and Neilos prefers to leave [B20] to the discretion of the superior.

4. Length of the Novitiate

Laymen entering the monastery with the intent of becoming monks were to serve [C1], [B15] a novitiate of three years. Candidates had to be at least sixteen years old [C2] even though the author himself was no more than fifteen years old [A3] when Neilos received him into the monastery. The author categorically rejects [C18] imposition of candidates (i.e., as katapemptoi) upon the monastery by either the emperor or the patriarch.

5. Sacramental Life

The monks were to confess [C6] their sins to the superior rather than to an outside spiritual father. This is a return to the usage of (22) Evergetis [15] that contrasts with the more indulgent practices seen in (52) Choumnos [A17] and (58) Menoikeion [13]. The elaborate rationale for this requirement includes an argument that an outside confessor could not prescribe suitably for a monk in accordance with the rules of the latter's monastery.

6. Cenobitic Lifestyle

Although the Rule of Mark and Neilos [B2] presents an unusually open-minded discussion of the various forms of monastic life, the cenobitic lifestyle is to be preferred [B3]. The authors considered [A1] cenobiticism to be the ideal median between the solitary life and life in the secular world. This was an uncompromising form of cenobiticism, too, such as might have pleased the founders of Evergetis. All property was to be held [B5], [B21], [B22] in common; no monk was to have any private property; and cells were to be furnished with only the bare necessities from the common storeroom. Not only are personal quarrels condemned [B6] but personal friendships [B7] as well. Monks were not to fraternize [B7] privately with other monks, but content themselves with communal companionship instead. Even stricter than (58) Menoikeion [22], which banned nighttime visits to cells, this document bans [B7] daytime visits as well.

For his own part, our author condemns [C3] secret eating, but considers a monk's helping himself to his favorite foods as worse than secret gluttony. Therefore, the refectory was to place all food out on the table equally, except for the sick, who could request either sweet or salty foods but not both. As in (22) Evergetis [22], monks were not to be allowed to receive correspondence, which is here said to be a sign of idiorhythmism, and, as in (22) Evergetis [27], the superior was to inspect the monks' cells (here monthly) to enforce the prohibition against personal possessions.

Mark and Neilos' Rule condemns [B17] fellowships (adelphata) which are said to "divide godly communities into thousands of parts." Our author was likewise unwilling to accept [C2], cf. [C18] fellowship holders, either those living inside (esomonitai) or outside (exomonitai) the monastery, even in exchange for donations of money or property.

Likewise Mark and Neilos refuse [B18] admission to kelliotic monks desiring to practice an idiorhythmic life. Even those who might be considered "truly important and God-fearing" were nevertheless considered a harmful example for less perfect monks under obedience to the cenobitic rule. Current monks who were unable to live in common were to be expelled or allowed to withdraw [B8], cf. [B13] from the monastery to adopt a "self-regulating" (i.e., idiorhythmic) lifestyle on their own. Even hospitality was to be limited [B19] to two or three days as a precaution against visiting monks establishing themselves permanently as idiorhythmics.

7. Care of Sick Monks

Mark and Neilos urge [B4] the monks to care for both the physical and spiritual health of those of their number in need. Accordingly, they are instructed to "summon doctors skilled at curing such afflictions." Elsewhere, the prohibition of individual monks retaining part of their personal property as a provision for old age and illness suggests [B13] that monks were losing their willingness to rely upon their monastery to look after them in need.

60. CHARSIANEITES

8. Diet and Clothing

As with psalmody, the author discusses [C17] the monks' diet only during periods of fasting, in accordance with an unnamed liturgical typikon. Mark and Neilos were willing to leave [B20] both dietary regulation and the determination of suitable clothing to the superior's discretion.

9. Relations with Family

Mark and Neilos' Rule expects [B13] candidates for tonsure to renounce not only their money and property but also their family and social ties, accepting the monastic community as a substitute family. This was not simply a nominal renunciation, for the Rule prohibits [B14] visits to or from blood relatives, and for his part our author cites canon law in forbidding [C9] the monks to serve in such secular capacities as guardians of widows and orphans or (in a more surprising capacity) as advocates at law, even for supposedly needy individuals.

C. Constitutional Matters

1. Constitutional Status

At the conclusion of the Testament, the author provides [C18] for the maintenance of the monastery's freedom, which he claims has been honored by emperors and patriarchs since its foundation. The pious but unlucky founder Charsianeites, after choosing Mark as the foundation's first superior, removed [A6] himself from the foundation's "management and ownership, since it had been dedicated by him once and for all to God." Thus Charsianeites serves as a rare model of how the reformist ecclesiastical hierarchy would have liked all private benefactors to behave, and his foundation therefore appears to have been a genuinely independent monastery on the Evergetian model. Later, after the monastery fell on hard times [A7], it seems to have come under some form of patriarchal protection (see [A9]), perhaps just coincidentally since several of its superiors went on to become patriarchs later in their careers.

2. Leadership

The functions as well as the titles of a protector and a superior were combined at this foundation to create a strong leadership under the prostates. After Neilos' elevation to the patriarchate in 1379, the monastery is said [A9] to have been left without a protector, with debilitating consequences for the monks and their properties, until our author became actively involved upon Neilos' death in 1388. The superior was to be free to make [C18] his own choice of a successor as had been [B10] the tradition at this foundation; if no suitable candidate was available internally, an outsider (i.e., a xenokourites) was eligible [B11] for selection instead. There is no mention of any role played by the community as a whole in the selection of the superior. A blank space is left [C18] in the document where our author intended to insert the name of his chosen successor, whom he evidently expected would be an ordained monk.

Other officials are not mentioned in the document, though the heavenly patron the Mother of God is honored [C18] not only with the titles of "founder" and "protector" but also, curiously, as "superior" and "steward."

3. Style of Rule

Although it emphasizes [B8] the importance of the monks' obedience to the superior, Mark and Neilos' Rule warns the latter that he should not govern [B9] the community as if his spiritual leadership were actually "some secular authority which came to him from a paternal inheritance." Our author adds [C4] that the superior should not entertain visitors in his cell or anywhere else except in the refectory and at regular mealtimes. Moreover, he was not to have [C1] a servant or retainer, nor fraternize with lay people on pretext of "management of the monastery." However, as in (22) Evergetis [18], the superior was not to be accountable [C16] to the monks for his administration of finances "as long as he abides by all the rules and regulations."

4. Patronal Privileges

The founder (ktetor) Charsianeites exercised [A7] his patronal right to choose Mark as the monastery's first superior. Eventually this was transformed [A5], [C18] into the right of the superior to choose his own successor. Usually, it was the Byzantine pietistic practice to honor a monastery's original founder even after the lapse of many centuries (e.g., as in (33) Heliou Bomon [51], (38) Kellibara I [12], and (40) Anargyroi [6]). Here, however, Charsianeites fails to receive even a founder's memorial, though the foundation did retain his name.

5. Reading of the Typikon

The author provides [C10] for the reading of the Rule of Neilos and Mark in the refectory at the beginning of each month. The Ascetic Treatises of Basil of Caesarea were to be read there daily, and the Gerontika also on occasion.

D. Financial Matters

1. Financial Administration

Consistent with his hostility to entanglements with the secular world, our author was unwilling to permit [C8] business transactions or loans engaged in with an expectation of financial gain. Instead, the monks were to rely on the income from the foundation's endowment, which had been painstakingly put together, destroyed, and then reconstituted twice already in the relatively short history of this monastery.

This document is unique among those in our collection for viewing [C8] the payment of taxes on its non-exempt properties as a fair civic responsibility. As our author in his extreme formulation of the issue declares, "they should hand over to the tax collectors with all truth and honesty everything owed them from all the revenues of the monastery, even if nothing else remains for the sustenance of the monks." In another position that puts him at variance with most of his fellow patrons, the author forbids [C7] his monks to go to court to defend their title to properties, declaring "I prefer that they be deprived of physical possessions without justice than for them to become involved in lawsuits." This same distaste for litigation was one of the reasons Mark and Neilos sought to ban [B18] kelliotic monks from the monastery, for fear that court suits would result if it was necessary to expel these monks (presumably without returning their entrance donations).

2. Entrance Fees Prohibited

Neilos and Mark's Rule forbids [B16] the exaction of entrance fees from postulants on the grounds that it is hypocritical to demand that they be paid while also teaching that money is unnecessary in the cenobitic life. The Rule goes so far as to prefer penniless monks for admission since they would already be propertyless, accustomed to a spare diet, and amenable to obedience and humility. Wealthy postulants should donate their possessions to the poor or to their relatives; the (no doubt traditional) counter-argument that the management of such a candidate's property should be entrusted to the foundation that would be looking after him henceforth is acknowledged but rejected: "you must absolutely avoid taking any fees from the postulant monks." This is certainly an extreme, and perhaps unprecedented, position on this controversial issue, exceeding in rigor even the classic reform solution to the problem proposed long ago in (22) Evergetis [37].

60. CHARSIANEITES

E. Overall Philosophy

1. Attitude towards Privilege

Before our author's own superiorship, the ex-emperor John VI Kantakouzenos resided at the monastery. Despite the fierce opposition noted above to kelliotic monasticism, this distinguished resident was given [A8] the residence of the superior "because there was no other cell suitable for his habitation and repose," where he carried out renovations to create a kind of apartment for himself. Apparently this was the exceptional case, since in every other respect this foundation exceeds even (22) Evergetis in its disdain for aristocratic privilege. We have noted the author's instruction to prefer [B16] penniless applicants and the prohibition against taking any entrance fees, even those offered voluntarily. In a passage that echoes (22) Evergetis [14], Mark and Neilos' Rule admonishes [B10] the monks that "leadership (i.e., the superiorship) is not the reward of friendship or noble birth or wealth, but of virtue." Also, our author instructs [C4] that visiting nobles are to get no special privileges not given other guests, but should eat with the monks at the regular midday meal.

2. Misogynist Tendency

Endorsing and indeed exceeding the Evergetian tradition, our author forbids [C2] women to enter the foundation "whether dead or, even worse, alive." For other restrictions on the burial of the opposite sex, see (27) Kecharitomene [70] and (37) Auxentios [13]; (29) Kosmosoteira [86] discourages burial of either sex within the monastery. The ban on female animals is not an Evergetian prescription, but has old precedents in the Studite and Athonite traditions.¹¹ For good measure, the author also bans the admission of youths under sixteen because of "their tendency to loose behavior and the scandal produced therefrom by the devil."

F. External Relations

1. Relations with the Ecclesiastical Hierarchy

Our author obliges [C12] the superior to visit the patriarch twice a year, before Lent and during Easter week, in order to demonstrate that he remained in communion with the leader of the church. Otherwise, neither the superior nor any of the monks were to attend services at the cathedral church of Hagia Sophia.

2. Institutional Philanthropy

This foundation provided the customary donations of bread and wine (and here cooked food also) at the gate to the poor on the patronal feast of the Dormition [C14] and on the respective feast days for the founders Neilos and Mark [C15]. On other days, two “larger loaves” of bread were to be distributed. Our author proudly notes [A9] that his acquisitions for the monastery’s endowment made charitable donations possible for both the poor and for travelers.

Notes on the Introduction

1. See Hunger, “Testament,” pp. 288–89, and Konidares and Manaphes, “Epiteleutios boulesis,” pp. 467–69.
2. The dedication is known from notes in two manuscripts that once belonged to the monastery; see A. Papadopoulos-Kerameus, Hierosolymitike Bibliothek (St. Petersburg, 1891–1915), vol. 2, p. 112, with Hunger, “Bildbeschreibung,” p. 137. Makarios Makres’ description of an icon in the monastery church (ed. Hunger, “Bildbeschreibung,” p. 126) also states that the church of the Mother of God Nea Peribleptos was located at what was popularly known as “the monastery of Charsianeites.”
3. For our author, see Talbot, “Matthew I,” p. 1316.
4. See the 228 documents in his patriarchal register for the years 1399–1402, in Darrouzès, Regestes, nos. 3059–286.
5. Ed. Hunger, “Bildbeschreibung,” pp. 126–27.
6. See Hunger, “Bildbeschreibung,” pp. 138–39.
7. George Sphrantzes, Chronicon 5.1, 15.2, 33.5, ed. Riccardo Maisano (Rome, 1990), pp. 12, 32, 120.
8. See Janin, Géographie, vol. 3, p. 502.
9. Echoes of Evergetian usages include: [B10] no preference for aristocrats as leaders, cf. (22) Evergetis [14]; [B16] evils of entrance fees, cf. (22) Evergetis [37]; [C2] access to women forbidden, cf. (22) Evergetis [39]; [C3] inspection of cells, cf. (22) Evergetis [27], and ban on correspondence, cf. (22) Evergetis [22]; [C6] confession to the superior, cf. (22) Evergetis [15]; [C16] superior not financially accountable, cf. (22) Evergetis [18].
10. For which see E. Herman, “‘Chiese private’ e diritto di fondazione negli ultimi secoli dell’impero bizantina,” OCP 12 (1946), 302–21, and my own Private Religious Foundations in the Byzantine Empire (Washington, D.C., 1987), pp. 253–69.
11. Cf. (3) Theodore Studites [5], (13) Ath. Typikon [31], and more recently (45) Neophytos [19], and (59) Manuel II [14].

Bibliography

- Barker, John, Manuel II Palaeologus (1391–1425): A Study in Late Byzantine Statesmanship (New Brunswick, N.J., 1969).
- Beck, Hans-Georg, Kirche und theologische Literatur im byzantinischen Reich (Munich, 1959), p. 760.
- Hunger, Herbert, “Eine spätbyzantinische Bildbeschreibung der Geburt Christi, mit einem Exkurs über das Charsianites-Kloster in Konstantinopel,” JÖBG 7 (1958), 126–40, esp. 136–39.
- Janin, Raymond, La géographie ecclésiastique de l’empire byzantin, vol. 3: Les églises et les monastères [de Constantinople], 2nd ed. (Paris, 1969), pp. 501–2.
- Talbot, Alice-Mary, “Charsianeites Monastery,” ODB, p. 415.
- , “Matthew I,” ODB, p. 1316.
- Volk, Otto, “Die byzantinischen Klosterbibliotheken von Konstantinopel, Thessalonike und Kleinasien” (Ph.D. diss., Munich, 1955), 95–98.
- Volk, Robert, Gesundheitswesen und Wohltätigkeit im Spiegel der byzantinischen Klostertypika (Munich, 1983), pp. 267–69.

60. CHARSIANEITES

Translation

Final will and instructions of our most holy master, the ecumenical patriarch, to the monks in his charge, including his biography from beginning to end, and also including an exposition, divided into chapters, of the contents of the Rule previously written by his venerable master,¹ the most holy monk lord Mark.

Autobiography [A]²

[A] 1. Of the many features which characterize a godly life, one of the most important and most beneficial is for monks to live together in the same [place], brethren who have chosen the same life, lending each other a helping hand to accomplish and acquire virtue, and setting forth the achievements of each as common accomplishments. For such a way of life is like a compromise between the completely eremitical and, on the other hand, life in a worldly society, dividing [men] in appearance as far as their bodies are concerned, but in soul and heart uniting each other into one body, just as occurred once among the apostles. I believe that this is the shortest path and ascent to heaven, and free of every danger. As for those fathers who rivet their attention on this world below, and are all agape for earthly matters, it follows that they will be greatly concerned that their own children continually enjoy wealth and glory. But for spiritual fathers it is fitting rather to be concerned for appropriate and beneficial behavior which leads to the success and spiritual advancement of their spiritual children. This is a reminder of divine words, and explanation and precepts of the rules of the Fathers, whereby virtue is achieved.

Since my humble self has deemed this especially useful, I decided that I should set down in writing the responsibilities of the monastic vocation, and bequeath it to you with a prayer as a paternal inheritance and inalienable treasure. I have collected these [precepts] from the actions and teaching of my holy venerable masters, from whose guidance I profited by divine providence, even though on account of my indolence I lag far behind them in virtue.

I should first describe briefly my own career from the beginning—I think that it is all to the glory of God who disposes everything for the best—and then discuss the rest with as simple language as possible. [The story of] my life is as follows:

[A] 2. When I was very young and had not yet passed through my twelfth year, [p. 473] the idea and thought occurred to me to reject the vanity of the present world as the cause of all evils, and to withdraw to monastic life, which offers complete peace and tranquility and provides much gain and “spiritual profit”³ for the soul. Thus I became obsessed with this [idea], removing my mind from all present things, in which the tender nature of children makes them to take pleasure and delight. Above all I imagined in my mind and told stories with my tongue and marveled at the men who are dedicated to God and lead an angelic life upon earth. I prayed to God that I might live under the tutelage of such a guide and trainer, and that my soul be so ordered and that I might receive such a spiritual education as to enjoy the blessings and prayers of his virtue and not fail to achieve my salvation.

Therefore since such thoughts possessed my soul daily and burned it like fire, but it was not possible for me to achieve my desire easily by myself, I was forced to reveal my intentions to my parents, and to share with them my wish to flee from the world and my desire for the monastic life, as a result of which I was clearly convinced that I would enjoy the pure and absolute blessing of solitude.⁴ I did not cease to join tears to my words, in my entreaties that they might help me, since my heart was irrevocably fixed on this desire, and, in any case, I had no intention of changing my mind, even if they objected. My parents were sorely distressed and grieved at my words, overcome by their natural affection, as a result of which they “left no stone unturned,”⁵ as the proverb says, in the hope that they might weaken somewhat the intensity of my desire and my stubborn resolution. They recounted the arduous life of monks, the mortification of the body, and the extreme hardship and ill-treatment, all of which were difficult and scarcely tolerable for immature adolescents like myself. But although they posed these objections, I managed to avoid being persuaded by them, or being affected with any of their timidity, to such an extent that I became even more eager, as if I had heard encouraging words. My soul was inflamed, and I desired even more to lead such a life, which has no easy or smooth stretches, but is rough and steep; it can, however, convey those who have chosen to live in this way to the truly blessed and eternal life, the true homeland which has no end.

[A] 3. Therefore after three years passed, during which my original desire and intention grew and did not slacken in any way, and it was obvious to my parents from my words and actions that I was even more sorely grieved [p. 474] by remaining in the world, I found them reluctantly yielding to my wishes, considering the passage of time a clear teacher of my future eagerness for my vocation, and praising me and joining with me in prayer for a fortunate outcome from God. I think it was the work of Divine Providence which provided for both [of us] equally, so that my action was rewarding for them, and for me it was a source of great pleasure to achieve my desired goal with their blessing and approval. So they brought me to the most holy monk lord Mark,⁶ whose virtue was so preeminent that no one at all who either saw or heard him did not marvel at him and deem him worthy of much remembrance; indeed he was even revered by the very emperors⁷ who wield all power, who heeded him as if he were their common father and teacher.

Thus they approached this man and explained to him my intention from early life, and entreated and begged him to accept me and enroll me in the band of monks who were his disciples. At first he appeared to hesitate about accepting me on account of my tender years. For usually [immature youths] flit from one thing to another, and tire easily of the intensity of virtuous discipline, and soon take their leave. But at last, through the providence of the Almighty, he agreed to their request and received me with prayers, after first giving me a great deal of instruction on these matters. In this way even further eagerness, so to speak, and spiritual strength entered into my soul through his holy tongue and the truthful charm of his words. For he encouraged me greatly in the labors of virtue, from the very start as they say, and instilled in my soul the greatest benefit with the healing remedies of his hortatory and paternal words.

[A] 4. Therefore from that time on I lived in his cenobitic monastery, acknowledging my great gratitude to God, and carrying out my assigned duties with pleasure and the greatest of zeal. For never through any hesitation or laziness did I fail to fulfill any of the requirements, nor did I appear to procrastinate or complain, even when I was engaged in particularly difficult and unpleasant tasks, but I carried out my assignments gladly, as if I were receiving a favor rather than an order. For I was mindful of the divine voice of Our Lord, which said, “When you have done all that is commanded you, say, ‘We are unworthy servants; we have only done what was our duty’” (Luke 17:10). Therefore through the grace of God and the prayers of the father and venerable master who received me, I have maintained from beginning to end the same eagerness in everything; and to say nothing more, I did what he approved and desired. This was much more important and more valuable for me than thousands of treasures and every other honor and glory, to show every effort and eagerness on behalf of those things which were pleasing to him. [p. 475]

60. CHARSIANEITES

[A] 5. Furthermore, after his most blessed departure to God for whom he longed, I maintained pure and undiminished the affection of my soul for the most holy patriarch lord Neilos,⁸ who was left as successor and heir of his virtue and his monastery, since he clearly retained the virtuous features of the teacher and father; and I had no thought, either great or small, which I did not reveal to him as to “God who knows the hearts of men” (cf. Luke 16:15). At all times I enjoyed his even more paternal disposition and kindness, so that I was established in the same position as that of which he had been deemed worthy by the common father. [This held true] not only when we were living in the monastery, but even more so when he assumed the leadership of the ecumenical church,⁹ by the vote of God who could not bear for the great light of his virtue and teaching not to shine over the entire world. For then I did not spare myself in the least, but exerted the greatest and constant zeal for the sake of those things which pleased and refreshed him. My zeal was not worthy of his gifts to me, I mean both spiritual and physical; however, it was not inferior to his expectations, as he showed later when he was moved of his own accord to entrust to me the inheritance and leadership of the entire monastery in the same way in which he had received it from our common father [Mark], confirming my authority and rule over the monastery with testamentary letters which possessed complete validity. When I took over the monastery,¹⁰ in accordance with his wishes, I had to expend much care for both spiritual and physical matters, on account of the crisis caused, on the one hand, by the wickedness of some of the monks, on the other hand by the confusion and disorder of affairs, as will be recounted a little later in the appropriate section of the document.

[A] 6. Now it is necessary for me to speak briefly about this holy and divine monastery of mine, how and by whom it was originally established, and to what extent it has prospered, first under the leadership of the [two] holy venerable masters, and then up to the present time under the supervision of my humble self. The late and blessed lord John Charsianeites, who took the name of Job when he assumed the monastic habit, prospered during his life on earth, had good repute among emperors and officials, and enjoyed extraordinary honor and glory from everyone. But he realized that this glory in mortal affairs is truly precarious, shifting and rolling about sometimes like dice, and he also realized that wealth is a cause of spiritual destruction for those who do not divert it to needful purposes and a foundation of philosophy and virtue. [p. 476] For this reason, since he considered all worldly things of little account, and desire for them completely unworthy of a noble and magnanimous soul, he decided it was necessary to dedicate his entire life to God, its giver, and to exchange these ephemeral matters, which quickly fade away like spring flowers, for that eternal and blessed glory. Therefore he found it in accordance with this divine purpose of his to construct a monastery for monks at his own expense, and to donate his fortune to it in the desire that the monks should continually preserve the blessing of virtue and solitude through not lacking in any necessities.

The late Ambaros owned at that time the property, where the monastery is now situated. Only a church was still standing there, and some dilapidated houses and old arcades; it was otherwise deserted and a place where robbers and murderers lurked—for often the corpses of murder victims were found there. The deserted and quiet character of the place, which naturally contributes to the working of virtue by men dedicated to God, led Charsianeites to purchase it. After he gained possession of it, he exerted the greatest possible zeal (for he knew how much profit he would gain for himself) first on the decoration of the divine church, and then he cleared everything else away to make the land tidy and serviceable. He built some small cells, which are still standing, as a residence for the future monks. He also donated the village called Palatitzia¹¹ (which had been granted to him with a divine and solemn chrysobull by the late and venerable emperor [John VI] Kantakouzenos, on behalf of which he also acquired a sealed patriarchal letter), and two vineyards outside the capital opposite the Golden Gate, another vineyard in the territory of the Saurai, as well as two houses, one near the Milion, the other one, with a courtyard, near the Beautiful Gate, and a vineyard within [the walls] at Kyparissia. After building this monastery, and donating to it the properties which I have described, he did not think it sufficient to stop at this point, nor did he seem careless and lazy in his pursuit of the good. Instead he carefully investigated and made inquiries like ardent money-lovers in the hope that he might chance upon some hidden treasure, I mean a man united with God through virtue, and hand the monastery over to him, thus removing himself totally from its management and ownership, since it had been dedicated by him once and for all to God.

[A] 7. He learned that the late lord Mark, my venerable master, who was greatly distinguished at that time for his virtue and knowledge of God, had moved to Constantinople [p. 477] from the skete because of the attacks of the infidels there, and that here he had been appointed superior of the great monastery of Kosmidion¹² at the request of the emperor.¹³ Therefore the above-mentioned founder approached him, and resorted to many entreaties and prayers, not only his own, but also those of many other worthy men; and after he disclosed to him his original desire and his pious intention, he persuaded him with difficulty to give up the demanding leadership of the monks [at Kosmidion], and to assume responsibility for this monastery, because he especially liked its tranquility and the way it was otherwise situated and constructed. These were the reasons that persuaded him, since he was a man who always held dear the contemplative life and was not accustomed to worldly pursuits and concerns.

Therefore after he was entrusted [with the monastery] in the aforesaid manner, he lived in it for the rest of his life. The founder made no additional contributions besides the above-mentioned; for although he wished to make further donations, since he possessed a considerable fortune, he was prevented by the tumultuous times from realizing a goal proportionate to his desires. For when the late and venerable emperor Lord John [V] Palaiologos entered the capital,¹⁴ the whole populace was in uproar, inasmuch as it tends to riot at such times of change and confusion.

60. CHARSIANEITES

Nor did Charsianeites escape the frenzy of the mob because he was supposedly a partisan of the emperor [John VI] Kantakouzenos. For suddenly certain individuals attacked his house and completely plundered it, and did not deem him worthy of any consideration, in fact they even tried to bury him alive. But he sought sanctuary at the Great Church of God [Hagia Sophia], and thus was barely able to escape the danger that threatened him, and to emerge safe and sound, although he was stripped of all his property. Shortly afterward the emperor took away the village at Palatitzia, and donated it to the monastery of Stoudios.

[A] 8. All later additions to the monastic property were the fruits of the sweat and labor which my holy venerable masters laboriously expended. When the venerable emperor Kantakouzenos embraced monastic life at our monastery,¹⁵ and subjected himself to my holy venerable master as one who had amassed great experience in true philosophy, and was well trained in leading his disciples to the perfection of virtue, he was given the residence of the superior, since there was no other cell suitable for his habitation and repose. He constructed the sun porch and the small upper floor over it, and had the interior of the cells plastered and painted green, as he described in the letter written in his own hand. Nothing else whatsoever has been donated to this monastery by anyone else at all, neither emperor, nor noble. [p. 478] For it was my venerable masters who added the other vineyards, and constructed the tower which can now be seen. However, some other gardens were purchased, because previously there were some very small courtyards on either side of the monastery.

[A] 9. Shortly after my venerable master, lord Mark, was summoned from this world to the “eternal habitations” (Luke 16: 9), the most holy and venerable patriarch lord Neilos was elevated to the ecumenical throne,¹⁶ illuminating everyone like a sun with the rays of his words, and the monastery was left bereft of its protector. Little by little its properties began to show signs of deterioration, as did the monks, on the one hand because of the absence of their leader, on the other because of their neglect of higher things. Therefore when Neilos journeyed to the God for whom he longed, I returned to the monastery and engaged in much toil and labor in order to improve the monks as much as possible and to set them free from the sluggishness which afflicted them, and to concern myself with the condition of the estates which were completely neglected. Therefore I purchased fields and vineyards, and created others from scratch, and, as it were, I left nothing undone which could contribute to their well-being. These properties became established and prosperous so as to furnish sufficient provisions not only for the monks who lived in the monastery, but for many other poor people and strangers as well. This situation continued for some time.

When the general disaster befell [us], God permitting this for our chastisement, for ineffable reasons which he himself knows, and the infidels ravaged the environs [of the capital],¹⁷ these estates were totally destroyed along with the others, with only a few small roots remaining here and there, but neither trees nor anything else at all surviving. In the course of this disastrous state of affairs the patriarch lord Antony [IV] died.¹⁸ Immediately as his successor was ordained patriarch lord Kallistos [II],¹⁹ who lived only a short time and also departed to the blessed other world.

[A] 10. Therefore since the church was bereft [of a leader] and seeking a spiritual bridegroom, by vote of the entire synod and approval of the most divine emperor, my humble self was entrusted with this position by decisions which God knows.²⁰ Yet I kept putting off my decision in this matter and was extremely reluctant; and this was caused by considerations of my own inadequacy and the enormity of the task entrusted to me. However I referred my [concerns] to Divine Providence, and remained peacefully in possession of the patriarchal throne, by grace of God, as long as the most divine emperor stayed in the capital.

But when it was necessary for the holy emperor [Manuel II Palaiologos] to undertake his arduous journey for the sake of help for the Christians, to travel to Italy to unite the people there with us in alliance, he invited his own [p. 479] nephew, the emperor [John VII Palaiologos], to a reconciliation, and left him in charge of the city.²¹ For a while the affairs of the Church continued peacefully even under him. Then little by little trouble started as if from a spark, and [the flames] of wickedness rose high, kindled by certain men who wished to pursue their own desires. First they stirred up confusion in the church and rebellion against it. Then they set to work openly, as if they interpreted the mission of the holy emperor on behalf of the Christians as a lucky windfall. Led astray by their slanders against me, the incumbent ruler deposed me from the patriarchate.²² When these men were given free rein, just as they were dreaming, of their own accord they threw the entire church of Christ into confusion, and caused grievous harm for the souls of those who listened to them, as insults and unspeakable calumnies were hurled from all sides against the most revered name of Christians, and to the greatest extent possible they exposed the immaculate and pure church of Christ to derision and ridicule by all. Under these circumstances I was exceedingly grieved and sorely wounded in my heart.

I did not attach any importance to the mischief devised against myself, heeding the wise James, who wrote, “Count it all joy, my brethren, when you meet various trials, for you know that the testing of your faith produces steadfastness” (James 1:2), “and endurance produces character, and character produces hope, and hope does not disappoint us” (Rom. 5:4). The great Paul says, “No temptation has overtaken you that is not common to man” (I Cor. 10:13), that is temporary, just as the illuminator and teacher of the world, John Chrysostom, explained. It would take a long time to recount in detail all the passages of the holy [fathers] which have one and the same purpose. Wherefore I shall pass over any of their wicked machinations which clearly affected me alone, and forgive the perpetrators, whoever they may be, both during my lifetime and after my death, as the result of a pure disposition and heart; and I pray to my God that they will not be held liable for this, either in this ephemeral age, or at the future and awesome Last Judgment of Christ.

But to the extent that they have worked shamelessly to destroy and slander the church of Christ, with calumny and unjustly as He knows who watches over the hearts of men—for, as God is my witness, I speak the truth, with a clear conscience—I beg God that they may be granted an intelligent mind and true understanding, so that, as the result of a change of heart through repentance, they [p. 480] may find God kindly toward them, and that they become aware of how much destruction they have caused for themselves and the souls of men by exposing the church of Christ to derision and ridicule to the greatest extent possible. For it is no small or insignificant crime for someone to sin against God and to tear asunder into limbs and parts the body of the church which has been well joined by him.

60. CHARSIANEITES

[A] 11. Thus I first prayed for them, when with God's permission that storm was still raging about the church, and now I am setting it down in writing for informational purposes, since the Church is prospering again,²³ through the grace of Christ, and has received the proper honor and glory from the holy emperor [Manuel II Palaiologos]. For he has striven magnificently on its behalf, so that there might be added to his many noble accomplishments this special achievement, that the Church of Christ which was grievously divided might be restored to harmony and enduring peace by his excellent and most imperial soul. Furthermore when peace was restored to earthly affairs, too, through the ineffable solicitude for us of God who crushed the spirit of the barbarian and delivered it to total destruction, and vouchsafed that the holy emperor returned from Italy to his own city and empire, and everyone began to restore their estates, I, too, set to work to care for and improve to the best of my ability our estates which were completely devastated by that lengthy siege. At great expense I restored these [properties] as best I could, as well as the tower which had been set on fire by the infidels and was in danger of imminent collapse, so that, with God's assistance, I was able to bring them to even greater prosperity and increase so as to furnish adequate provisions for the brethren in the monastery.

I also petitioned on their behalf the holy emperor, who with great kindness granted this concession, referring the favor to my Virgin, that the imperial treasury would collect only three hyperpera annually on every hundred-measure of wine produced at the dependency, and, of the two zeugaria of land which we own, that one zeugarion should be maintained in perpetuity completely exempt and not liable for the customary tithe of the crops harvested, and that absolutely all our land should be free of tax, just as we had it previously. For most of our fields consisting of no longer cultivated vineyards²⁴ outside [the city] were free of tax. Wherefore I enjoin and beg of you that each week the monks in this holy monastery celebrate a liturgy solely in honor of the holy emperor and his family. You should not be content with this, but whenever the liturgy is celebrated, you should commemorate the name of the holy emperor and his family.

[A] 12. Thus from the beginning, even while my holy venerable masters were still alive, as I have already explained, I showed great concern for this monastery, and even greater after their death. For I added [p. 481] to the properties left by them other lands both at the monastery itself and at the dependency, which I consider unnecessary to mention by name. And now again after the destruction from the siege, I restored and improved these properties as much as possible with great expense and labor to provide sufficient food and livelihood for the monks in this holy monastery. I also thought it necessary to provide for their spiritual and holy tasks, and to give them a written rule and regulation. If they live in accordance with this typikon, they will please God and will continually provide the necessities not only for themselves, but also for others, with the help of God.

It seemed to me then, in accordance with the desire and purpose of my heart, that worthy and sufficient was the Rule which my holy venerable master lord Mark had already issued. It was written by the most holy and venerable patriarch lord Neilos, and included in complete detail the [rules] appropriate for the holy monastic and cenobitic way of life. My humble self, satisfied with it, enjoins and exhorts all the monks, both those who now live in this holy monastery and their successors, and especially the superior, to cleave to this rule as if it were holy tablets and laws of

FIFTEENTH CENTURY

God, and to endeavor to leave none of its commandments unfulfilled. The rule reads as follows:

Rule of Mark and Neilos [B]

[B1.] [Introduction]

It is appropriate both that the life of those who choose to live in accordance with God be a holy life, and that they abstain from those things which seem pleasant in this life, so as not to be greatly distressed at the harshness of the godly life, nor consider the working of virtue to be labor. In the belief that the promised bliss is ineffable and marvelous and fitting only for the One who awards the prizes, they should not only traverse the road that leads to it quickly and with great eagerness, but should also congratulate themselves and rejoice, because they happen to be among those who have chosen “the good portion, which shall not be taken away from them” (Luke 10:42), as the Gospel says.

Therefore all our marvelous fathers have made it their single business throughout life to regulate with deeds and words us, their successors. On the one hand, they provide the example of an irreproachable life and follow a very strict regime, spending their life in constant fasting, subduing the body with vigils and labors and preferring the better [course], through prayer and study and the care of the heart revealing themselves as a pure dwelling-place for God. They also advise us with words, either [p. 482] by offering their teaching orally and transmitting it to us like a paternal inheritance, so that the good may travel to everyone until the end, or by writing accounts of virtue, sometimes persuading us that it is a fine and honorable possession and necessary for us, sometimes inciting us to acquire it. Then again, they show us ways and methods through which we will hold fast to virtue and reject evil, exposing the treachery and wickedness of the insidious [enemies], and enduring lengthy and constant travails, and being everything, and leaving no stone unturned, so as to prepare us to choose and walk upon this true and narrow path, and not the broad path followed by the majority, which ends in distress and pain and sighing and, in short, destruction. For, like prophets, they knew that they would need little or no human teaching, since they had the Paraclete dwelling in them, teaching and reminding them of the whole truth, but that we, who in the last days will be among those whose great negligence and indolence is condemned by the great teacher of the Church, I mean Paul (cf. II Tim. 3:1–5), together with the other evils which he enumerates, that we would need much and continual teaching, in the hope that, after being stung by the number and severity of the rebukes, we might be able to rouse ourselves and dispel the thick and gloomy cloud of laziness.

The superiority of their virtue gave them confidence, and they proposed common laws for all the people of the earth, as if they were common teachers of salvation, using the power of the Spirit in them. This is evident: for they could easily subdue to themselves and humble those who did not obey them, for the most part treating them well and benefiting them in various ways, but sometimes using a light whip to tame the unruly. Just in this way the great Paul, for instance, delivered the sinner in Corinth to the devil “for the destruction of the flesh, that his spirit may be saved” (I Cor. 5:5), since when he was chastened with words, he was not willing to abstain from evil. Before him, Peter, the chief [of the apostles], delivered Ananias to an early death (cf. Acts 5:1–5), [though] I am not sure why, either engaging in such cruelty so that the life of Christians might not be infested with evil weeds straightaway from the beginning, or else judging that those who deceive the Holy Spirit must be so severely punished as to deserve death. I certainly incline to this latter explanation, since his every act and word and thought depended on the will of God, and whatever he wished, this Peter manifestly did and taught that band of believers [p. 483]. I will pass over the other fathers and teachers, not to mention the apostles, who manifestly lead on their disciples through both these [principles], as if showing that what pleases them, pleases God first, and it is necessary to receive them with gratitude and not act rashly.

60. CHARSIANEITES

They then acted in this way, and it is in no way remarkable, for they had the authority which they received from the Spirit. But I believe that it is not at all appropriate for me, who lacks their virtues to an extraordinary degree, to propose general precepts and a rule of life. On the other hand, it is possible for me to teach you who are in my charge (in the capacity not only of counselor but also of teacher), what I think is best, and, as it were, to set down laws and order you to abide by my precepts, or if you do not abide by them, to suffer the appropriate punishment. Yet I do not intend to devise some novel regime for you, nor things which no one has proposed or done until now, so as to incur the charge not only of innovation, but also of disobedience, because I neglected the [path] which was not only revealed by the holy fathers, but also previously traveled by them, which, as God himself is a trustworthy witness, is the right path, because not only after their departure from this world (for those things are neither perceptible to the mind, nor can they be spoken), but also while they were still alive, he enriched them with many spiritual blessings, and because I took another course, an untrodden path, so to speak, and not explored by the fathers, which is not possible to call new, but rather the contrary, which clearly ends in destruction, since [its] opposite has been shown by deeds themselves to end in eternal life.

[B2.] [Discussion of the forms of monastic life]

Therefore since [our] argument has rejected innovation, it remains for us, following in the footsteps of the holy fathers, to convince you to abide by the traditional and ancient regime of the pious ascetics, so that by “fighting the good fight” (cf. I Tim. 6:12 and II Tim. 4:7), and running the course of virtue, you may be deemed worthy by them of the same prizes. For there are many paths of piety for athletes, since our heavenly Father also has “many mansions” (cf. John 14:2), or rather since there are many paths, therefore there are many mansions. For we hear that this makes the difference between mansions, but all [paths] lead to heaven and stand before God and always receive one of those mansions. Therefore some men embrace the completely solitary and reclusive life, truly choosing the angelic life, having one goal, to be united with the most pure light, and to engage in its study and contemplation, with little or no attachment to earthly things. [They do] this so that, while still encased in this carnal and earthly body, they may be fortunate enough to experience their ascent from this world and their deification in the world to come, pledges of which they have already [p. 484] had on earth, being able to do whatever they wish, like gods. Other men live with each other and derive much consolation therefrom, but these men also live by themselves to the extent of each one’s desire or ability, possessing individually not only virtues and accomplishments, but also the very necessities of life, as if they were on a borderline between those who are completely solitary and those who on the other hand live a communal and cenobitic life, who have not only their possessions and bodies in common, but also one heart and soul. Now

FIFTEENTH CENTURY

I must write a few words about them, since you have stripped for this course of asceticism.

[B3.] [Advantages of the cenobitic way of life]

To recount all the virtues inherent in such a way of life would take longer than the intent of my present discourse, and so to speak would require a separate treatise. But lest through ignorance of the treasure of virtues hidden therein, you be disheartened [and think] that you have chosen a humbler and even mundane lifestyle, I have selected a few of its blessings to recount to you, so as to show that it is a sister of the aforementioned [forms of monasticism], and leads to the same prize of the higher calling.

First then they maintain and preserve the main point of the Savior's incarnation, as best they can, for we are taught by the Holy Scripture that there is no other principal tenet than this, [namely] how to join us to him and to each other, and remove the separation and division which resulted from sin, uniting "all things" and "reconciling" (Col. 1:20) them to God the Father. Although they are gathered together from different nations and places, they join themselves together into one purpose and way of life, and bind their souls together as much as possible. Then too they imitate exactly our Savior's life on earth, for they take the place of disciples, while bestowing upon the superior the role of Christ, and rendering to him absolute obedience in all things. The many are one through the union of free will, and the one is not alone because he uses the bodies of all as his own limbs; and if one is "honored," then all are glorified as members of each other; if one "suffers," they "suffer together" (cf. I Cor 12:26), in the words of the apostle. They are each other's masters, and each other's servants, and they believe that this servitude is sweeter than any freedom. For the cause of this is not necessity, in which there is an element of pain, but free will and right choice. They own their possessions in common, they have one purpose, their salvation is in common, as is their wealth. At the same time, it suffices for them all in common, and the whole belongs to each one individually, for it is not material, so that it can be decreased by division into many parts. Therefore what could be more blessed than this way of life? For if the great Paul cites as the most perfect teaching, "Be imitators of me, as I of Christ" (I Cor 4:16), then [p. 485] it must be a great thing for them to become imitators of Christ.

I have related these few [virtues] out of many, not in order to give praise (for I am afraid lest I detract greatly from their value because of the inadequacy of my narration), but in order to show how great and what sort of blessing you lay claim to²⁵ and what eagerness and zeal you should demonstrate for its acquisition. So great is this topic that you can form an idea of the web [of my discourse] from the words I have woven at the beginning. Therefore I want you, my beloved sons, my true brothers beloved in Christ, to be workers and heirs of such a great good. For what more sublime or magnificent [possession] could I have to bequeath to you as a paternal inheritance?

[B4.] [Care for the physical and spiritual health of the monks]

First of all, I entreat [you] all to be one through good works and mutual love, so that you are separated only in your bodies, but are united in your souls, and each preserves the relation of limbs to the natural cohesion of the whole body. When everyone is healthy, you should be grateful to the Provider of health, each one on behalf of the others rather than on his own behalf, but if one of you is ill, then you should all be sympathetically disposed to his illness and share in his suffering, just as the other limbs of the body suffer, if one is in pain. You should do everything and exert yourselves to see the brother cured of his illness, sparing nothing, neither deed nor effort, each of you reckoning that the same zeal and equal affection, as they go around, will reach him too, since we are all clad with the same weak body. But if, God forbid, someone should happen to be afflicted in his soul, then you must demonstrate even greater zeal and more ardent concern, since inasmuch as the soul is more valuable than the body, the harm is greater and more grievous. You should summon doctors who are skilled at curing such [afflictions], and in every way divert your brother from sin, exhorting him to proper behavior with words, and propitiating God with supplications and prayers.

60. CHARSIANEITES

[B5.] [Maintenance of all possessions in common]

Next [I enjoin you] to hold all your possessions in common, and that no one should have private property, nor even speak of it. You should condemn to utter banishment from this holy sheepfold [the words] “mine” and “yours,” which cause much trouble in life.²⁶ You should have nothing in your cells except for the bare necessities, and I do not mean food for the body, since the communal storerooms will have that, but whatever coverings are required for daytime use and for your rest at night, or even a book, so that when you have leisure from external distractions, you may occupy your mind with this, lest it wander off into improper thoughts as the result of idleness; and these items should be from the common [stores].

[B6.] [Expulsion of quarrelsome monks]

As for the arguments and rivalries and fights, I do not even wish to exhort you to avoid them. For how could the blessing of peace be preserved, or how could it not be torn into thousands of pieces by those who argue and fight? So that, as long as peace and equality remain, there is no possibility of fighting. If, however, [p. 486] the whole body is at peace and harmony, but one of the limbs is in discord, in this case the superior must concern himself with which drugs he can restore health to the ailing [brother], provided that [the latter’s illness] is such that he can somehow expel the evil and embrace harmony in the future. But if [the limb] is completely incurable, then even though we grieve and are pained at this, we must amputate it, lest it infect the other members with its disease, or even bring death to the whole body.

[B7.] [Prohibition of private companionships and friendships]

Not should you have private companionships or friendships, for this destroys harmony in yet another way. Paradoxically strife arises from friendship, for “slanders” and grumbling and “gossip” (cf. II Cor. 12:20) and suspicions and countless ills result from this, and grow upon the beautiful body of the community like spots and blemishes; and as a result its beauty withers and decays and its strength is gradually consumed, just like bodies consumed by lengthy illness. You should guard against all these things with every precaution. You must guard against this evil as well, and not permit anyone to do it, since it is one of the forbidden actions. Thus none of you should fraternize privately with another [monk], but should engage only in that communal companionship which members [of a community] owe each other. Nor will anyone be allowed to go to another’s cell, and visit or talk with him, either at nighttime or during the day, unless he wishes to be guilty of the charge of disobedience. But if the superior who is entrusted with the direction of the community orders a monk to convey one of his decisions to a monk in his cell, he should stand outside the door and depart as soon as he has delivered the message.

FIFTEENTH CENTURY

[B8.] [Importance of obedience to the superior]

It does not seem necessary for me to review in detail all the appropriate behavior. For you are not ignorant of these things, but as a result of your long association with me, you have experience of everything. Besides, this will be the concern of my successor as superior, to maintain your virtuous actions, by both his words and deeds, and to correct your faults with fatherly advice and instruction. Thus this will be his concern; and I ask you to maintain your obedience to him in a genuine and pure fashion, inasmuch as you owe him the same obligation as me, and you should render to him the appropriate reverence and honor. If someone asks, "Why should I? It is to you that I came and entrusted myself, and submitted myself with humble spirit. I do not wish [to submit] to another, you will not force and compel me to obey [another] against my will," we will quickly answer him that he will receive the same reward for submission, whether he submits to me or to him. For it is not the rank of one who subjects him, but the humility of the one who submits that leads to wreaths [of glory]. But if he should not be able to endure the submissiveness, and once and for all surrenders himself to a self-regulating regime and vainglory, he should withdraw from [p. 487] the monastery and live by himself wherever he wishes. No one will refuse him, since there can be no compulsion in the godly way of life. But I am not giving instructions now about those who choose to withdraw from the community of brethren, but about those who wish to live with the monks and share their possessions. These I enjoin to observe obedience toward my successor as superior. For I believe that this will be to your advantage and will lead to harmony and will bring you peace, as the many become one through obedience to one man. But in case one of you rebels and follows his own desires, if the superior can somehow reform him and make him submit to the yoke of Christian humility, this would be the best solution; but if he is incurably ill, he should be expelled from the monastery. For as John Klimakos said, "it is not right to permit the visible and the invisible enemy in the monastery."²⁷

[B9.] [Exhortation to the superior]

Neither should the superior govern with arrogance and insolence, considering himself the master of the monks, and them his servants, believing that his leadership is not a spiritual leadership, but some secular authority, which came to him as if from a paternal inheritance. For such [a superior] not only does not follow the strict regime of monks, but is clearly its enemy and opponent. Rather he should govern and care for [the monks] as a father cares for his own children, being guided by fatherly love in everything he says and does. For thus he will endure the unpleasant odor of the ailing [monk] and the rashness and congenital stupidity of the novice and the inability to perform bodily [functions] as a result of old age or disease. He should always hold the position of head with regard to the other limbs of the body, supervising them all and telling them all what needs to be done to manage the body, moving the limbs as he wishes, and they should not rebel against nor resist any of his wishes, but offer unquestioning obedience. He should treat them all as his own, deeming each one worthy of the appropriate care, maintaining the same affection and compassion toward all of them, but assigning each its own. For it would be inappropriate, or rather completely foolish, to assign to the hand the function of the foot, or the function of the eye to the mouth, or that of the mouth to the kidneys. For thus these limbs or organs will be worn out, and he will labor in vain, not having put them to appropriate use. Such a character do I wish in my successor as superior of this community.

60. CHARSIANEITES

[B10.] [Designation of a successor]

Wherefore after much deliberation on this matter, as the result of long trial and having learned from his very deeds that Neophytos Kerameus²⁸ is suited for this position, I want him to [p. 488] succeed me in authority over my brethren. For I have not passed over, as the result of some friendship or affection, a candidate who was suitable for the task on account of his virtue and experience, and preferred someone who lacked intelligence and made no pretense of virtue, but thus simply and honestly I have judged him capable of the task, so that his authority will not bring him any harm, but an increase in virtue, so that he will be able not only to instruct himself, but also to be a good example to the others, since the subject always tends to resemble the ruler. When he approaches the end of his life, in the same way he too should choose from the current monks the one who is pre-eminent over the others, and should appoint him as the leader of the brothers. The others should not be annoyed, or pierced with darts of envy, because they surpass the one who was preferred, but instead they should make the affair material for the acquisition of virtue, in the clear conviction that leadership is not the reward of friendship or noble birth or wealth, but of virtue. Again, when he is about to depart this present world, he should do the same; and this procedure should be followed in succession, with preference always being given to the best candidate. For I think this will not only be to your material advantage, but even more to your spiritual profit.

[B11.] [Permission to select a superior from outside the community]

But if it should ever occur that no one from the community is competent to assume the position, not because of wickedness, but because of lack of experience, the superior at that time, heeding my present discourse, should not subject the monks to an inexperienced [leader], since as a result he may be ruined and destroy²⁹ the others too. For he would be acting in a similar fashion to someone who took men whom he wished to save and whose salvation he deemed most important, and put them in a boat and released it upon the ocean, but then entrusted the tiller to a farmer or smith or cobbler, who not only did not know how to battle the waves and save the boat from the swell, but did not even know this fact, that it is by means of the tiller that [the boat] is steered. For they will surely sink with the ship, since there is no one who knows how to save them. But first of all he should make a search and exert a great deal of effort on this matter and bring in from the outside a shepherd who has a virtuous disposition and who, above all, fits in with your way of life. For it would be foolish to see no danger in importing food from the outside for the body, if there are no local provisions, but not to provide for the soul from the outside one who can nourish it with the bread of life. No one of any intelligence would find it harmful to entrust his sheep to an experienced shepherd brought in from outside, if he realizes the inexperience of those he has trained; and so in the case of rational souls [it would be foolish] to consider it shameful to entrust them to someone with pastoral experience, thinking this is not a fine thing, for the good to be found in others. In the case of the vineyard, no one would insist that its owner prune it, if he had no experience, [p. 489] but would call in vine-dressers from outside to prune it knowledgeably; and so in the case of “the plant which our heavenly Father has planted” (cf. Matt. 15:13), [it would be foolish] not to call in from outside someone to care for it and surround it with a trench, and make it inaccessible to wicked beasts. But so much for this.

FIFTEENTH CENTURY

[B12.] [Qualities of postulants and manner of their reception]

When, as is to be expected, certain members of your community depart this life, or for some other reason it is necessary to introduce new [monks], we would consider what sort of people they should be and the manner of their reception. First of all then it is fitting that anyone who wishes to join your community and become a member of it should renounce all his possessions. For how could he be numbered among the disciples of Christ if he has not renounced everything, since our Lord Jesus Christ said, “Whoever does not renounce all that he has cannot be my disciple” (Luke 14:33), and again, “If any man would come after me, let him deny himself and take up his cross,” and then he added, “and let him follow me” (Matt. 16:24); or again, “If anyone comes to me and does not hate his own father and mother and children and brothers, yes, and even his own life, he cannot be my disciple” (Luke 14:26). Since therefore one who does not renounce everything and sever his attachment to the world cannot be a disciple of Christ, how could he be numbered among you, who have not only renounced money and property and friends and intimates and relatives, but have even denied yourselves, which is the greatest and most difficult [sacrifice]? Since then this is impossible, the reverse [alternative] would be possible, and [would prove] both profitable and beneficial.

[B13.] [Requirements for tonsure]

Therefore the [prospective monk] who comes to you must first renounce his money and property and family and social ties, and not be encumbered with any worldly evils, but he should believe that his true father is the one who brings him to the True and First Father, and that his brothers and friends and relatives are those who have chosen the same ascetic way of life as he has. He must also believe that his true property and wealth are above all the lack of possessions and poverty, which will procure for him the inalienable wealth of heaven, and in the second place the common property of the brethren, which belongs both to everyone and no one, on the one hand because it fulfills equally everyone’s basic need, on the other hand because each [monk] believes it belongs to the others and is not his own; and thus it happens that everyone practices perfect poverty.

Next he must adapt himself to the habits and system of the community, and believe that he should aspire to those goals [p. 490] which he also sees the community pursuing, and avoid those things towards which he sees the brothers ill-disposed. He should not have any private property, using as an excuse perhaps that only taking something from common property is forbidden and incurs a charge of theft, whereas storing up something for oneself from his own property, with a view to his old age or illness, is not liable to any charge. For first of all he entangles himself in faithlessness, not believing that he who gave this promise is trustworthy, and capable of doing what he promised, and he imputes injustice to God, [believing that] if he were to give all his property to the poor, in obedience to God, God would not be present at a time of need to relieve his necessity. How could he then say to Christ, “Lo, we have left everything and followed you” (Matt. 19:27), when he has kept back certain items, or how could he say, “You cannot serve God and Mammon” (Luke 16:13), and “No one can serve two masters” (Matt. 6:24)? He should avoid such an action. Indeed the parable of the merchant, which bears on this, is clear to everyone, “who finding one pearl of great value” bought it “for everything he had” (Matt. 13:45–46); and in another parable the Lord clearly declared that [the seed] “that is choked by the” anxieties and “cares of wealth” is not able “to bring its fruit to maturity” (cf. Luke 8:14). The Lord himself declared that the wealthy man is enmeshed in all sorts of cares, saying, “Where your treasure is, there will your heart be also” (Matt. 6:24). Besides these, such [a monk] will be inclined to defect from the community of brothers. Rather right away from the beginning he is infected with the disease of rebellion, cut off from the others by his possession of private property; and such [a monk] is arrogant,³⁰ and becomes contradictory and contentious and useful for nothing. But if such [a monk] is discovered before he even enters the monastery, do not let him enter even at first, although some people may think he is adorned with other good qualities, since he has thoughts unworthy of the community and of the profession [of vows]. But if his [true nature] should be revealed after his vows, either he should be chastised and embrace poverty and lack of possessions and humility to the same extent as the other monks, or he should be expelled from the monastery as one who has already divorced himself from the community through the possession of private property.

60. CHARSIANEITES

[B14.] [Required renunciation of secular relations]

Moreover the monk should neither have private engagements, nor should he visit his blood relatives nor receive them if they come to visit. For if they too have renounced the world and chosen the same [ascetic] way of life, he will not see them as blood relatives, but as spiritual brothers. But if they are still laymen, it is not right for a [man] who is crucified to the whole world for the sake of Christ to be still the servant of laymen. So much for the [postulants] who come to our community.

[B15.] [Examination of postulants]

As for you who receive them, [p. 491] you should not receive the postulant thus openly and without due examination, but should first inquire if his character is suitable for the [monastic] profession, and then you should make trial of him and test him for a considerable length of time, to see whether he is obedient and tractable, whether he is easily led and changes his mind with the slightest provocation, wafted about on every breeze, like the seed which fell on rocky ground, and quickly sprouted, but then withered away when a little heat struck it because it had no depth of heart. If he is thus tested, and found to be a worthy laborer in the divine vineyard of Christ, then let him be included among the brothers.

[B16.] [Entrance fees not allowed]

In no way should you ask the postulant for an entrance fee. For it is improper to teach him, on the one hand, that the possession of money is not necessary, but rather superfluous and even harmful, but through your deeds to show that it is necessary, that it is impossible to obtain salvation or to adopt the monastic habit except through the payment of money. But if he should happen to be penniless, this should make you even more eager [to receive him], because you will find that this brother is already trained in ascetic discipline, and has already successfully attained the renunciation of property, and is accustomed to a spare diet and amenable to obedience and humility, since for the most part the inner condition of the soul is disposed by nature to resemble the outer garments and diet. If, on the other hand, he should be wealthy, he should first distribute his fortune to the needy or to his friends and relatives, and after ridding himself of this consuming passion,³¹ he should come to the monastery relieved of his burden and lightly equipped, as if ready for battle and to run the good race of piety. However, one could argue that it is right also to entrust the management of his money to whomever he entrusts his body and soul, and no one could find any fault, since we find that those who first believed in the gospel sold their property, and “bringing the proceeds laid it at the apostles’ feet” (Acts 4:34–35). But sometimes harm results from this, because the monk who makes this donation is lax in his obedience, or looks down on the others, because he has made a larger donation, or else because the situation causes shame for the poorer [monks]. For these reasons therefore you must absolutely avoid taking any fees from the postulant monks.

[B17.] [Prohibition of so-called fellowships]

As for the so-called “fellowships,”³² which fill the life of the monks with much negligence and laziness, and drive out love and divide godly communities into thousands of parts, and bring countless reproaches and disgrace on the solitary way of life, you should not let them even be mentioned, but forbid them with all [p. 492] your might as a source of evils, as an estrangement from Christ, since they separate and divide his members, as completely alien to the tradition of the holy fathers. So you should always maintain a vigorous and zealous opposition to fellowships. You should bear in mind the [punishments] decreed on this matter in synods by the holy fathers, which will befall the man who accepts these fellowships in the first place and persuades others, inasmuch as he will be responsible for countless murders, or rather something worse than murder, since depriving the body of present life and depriving the soul of future life are not equal [offenses].

[B18.] [Kelliotai not to be admitted]

I shall end my discourse after adding yet one more point, which might perhaps seem at first hearing to contradict the commandment, but if we put the matter to the test, it will be seen not to be in contradiction but in agreement with it. For although the commandment bids, “When you saw me a stranger and welcomed me” (cf. Matt. 25:35, 38, 43), I command you never to receive in the monastery the kind of monk called a kelliotēs, who is a monk in his habit, but has chosen an idiorhythmic regime and to live by himself as he wishes.

If we consider then the reason for the commandment, we will find no other than to unify everyone through love, and thereby eagerly to care for the ill and the poor and strangers like one’s own limbs, as much as is practicable. But if it should happen that on this account the unified [limbs] are torn apart, and love and harmony vanish, and we are filled with great confusion, will we not avoid harm, if we are able to carry out the same commandment in other [ways] by which we would not be harmed? If then we find great harm resulting from this kelliotes, must we not avoid the situation for this reason?

60. CHARSIANEITES

This man will either be an important [monk] who lays claim to virtue, or one who lives carelessly and lazily, and demonstrates no concern for his own salvation. If then he is careless and lazy, the evil is at once obvious. For it is easier for him to bring them down to the imitation of his wickedness than for him to be elevated to the peak of virtue, since evil is easy to imitate, but virtue requires much sweat and toil, and is an uphill battle for the present and hard [to attain]. So that for this reason one must prevent his residence in the monastery, lest we lose everything, through showing concern for one man.

If however he is an important monk and one who seems to love wisdom, either he is one of those who both seems and is important, or he is a charlatan and wears his virtue like a mask, [like those] whom the Lord compared to “whitewashed tombs” (cf. Matt. 23:27), beautiful on the exterior, but on the inside full of corpses and foul odors.

If he is one of those who is truly important and God-fearing, perhaps he himself will not cause any harm. But merely [p. 493] by following an idiorrhythmic regime in the midst of monks who have vowed obedience, he will provide an example of insubordination for the less perfect of monks under obedience. If one of them should ever be ridiculed by the superior, or ordered to perform a difficult task, he will immediately look to the idiorrhythmic monk as a model. With the devil as his advocate, he will say, “Why would not God support me like this monk, who has no one to order him about and who lives a trouble-free life, without singing many psalms and fasting and being preoccupied with physical distractions, but always communing with God? Most important is that he avoids all unpleasantness and sorrow, neither scorned or ridiculed by anyone, but regulating and disciplining himself, while I will always remain overwhelmed by hardships and destroyed in vain and to no purpose. What is worse, I have this stern judge as examiner of my actions, who in accordance with his authority judges affairs not as they are but as they seem to him, and sometimes he purposely slanders the good, so that he may make my life more bitter than death. Let me go away and live in a cell by myself, and rid myself of the present situation. For God did not limit man’s salvation to obedience alone.” The infected monk will say these things and will be destroyed by the idiorrhythmic regime of the monk who lives together with them.

Above all, who will be a trustworthy guarantor that a man who now concentrates on himself, and causes no offense to anyone, will always remain thus, and will not change and bring some harm to the community? Therefore since of necessity harm results from this situation, even if [the kelliotes] himself does not contribute to this, and since, on the other hand, it is unclear whether he will never wish to become deliberately evil, why should we heap up evils on ourselves unnecessarily? But if it should happen that he is discovered to be a fraud and one who feigns virtue, even should I wish, it will not be easy for me to relate how many evils will overwhelm you. Rather why need I list them in laborious detail, when I can sum up briefly that there is no evil that he will not teach you?

If you should ever agree with him, and [then], after realizing into what a depth of evil you have fallen, you wish to get rid of the evil, then it will be necessary for you to be dragged before the tribunal for having committed the ultimate injustice against him, and you will have to listen to our affairs being basely exposed by him, and matters of which he was perhaps the teacher. You will run the danger either of being totally destroyed, scattered hither and thither, or remaining in the same place you will stray from your blessed obedience, and will destroy the good of peace. There will be the danger that you will rebel against your supervisor and yourselves, and, although you share the same residence, and perhaps some bodily [necessities], you will be far removed from each other in your souls, in fact you will be enemies.

FIFTEENTH CENTURY

[B19.] [Limitation on hospitality]

If then such ills are expected from this [kind of monk], one must guard against this. I do not absolutely forbid you to receive a stranger, but you should offer hospitality for [only] two or three days to the stranger who arrives, and then, giving him as much as you can from [p. 494] your stores, dismiss him in peace, so that we may both carry out the commandment and avoid the problems caused by living together with idiorhythmic monks.

[B20.] [Other matters left to the superior's discretion]

I do not believe it necessary to discuss everything in detail and say what things you should cling to, for one should entrust these decisions to the superior, who has as his counselor him who approves of all good deeds and “imparts understanding to the simple” (cf. Ps. 118 [119]:130) and “teaches man knowledge” (Ps. 93 [94]:10): for example, about diet and clothing and manual labor, as well as about punishments, for which faults he should indicate his displeasure with words alone, and for which ones he should chastise with work in due measure, and again in which cases it is necessary to cut off the incurable limb after much admonition and as much treatment as possible. May it never happen that my brothers, my fine congregation in Christ, be in need of such medical attention. I pray that it may be in good health and condition. But if ever they are fated to fall ill, betrayed by our common nature, inasmuch as they are men, may they not require cautery or surgery, but milder drugs and those with which doctors reduce inflamed swellings.

[B21.] [Summary of injunctions]

Now I will briefly review and describe the chief features of our godly life, without which it is impossible ever to establish on earth this heavenly way of life. First of all, you must seek after genuine obedience throughout your entire life, and never quarrel with or contradict the superior, heeding the apostle who said: “Obey your leaders and submit to them, for they are keeping watch over your souls, as men who will have to give account” (Heb. 13:17). Then you should maintain harmony with one another, bound together with ties of love, and being one body and having as your head Christ Who has joined together that which is divided, and unified everything and “reconciled” (cf. Eph. 2:10) the world to God the Father. “You should outdo one another in showing honor” (Rom. 12:10), and in his love each [monk] should be concerned for all [monks] as for himself, not only in bodily matters, but much more in spiritual affairs. In fact they should be more concerned for each other than for themselves, obeying in this, too, the apostle who said, “Let no one seek his own good, but the good of his neighbor” (I Cor. 10:24). You should hold all property in common, and nothing should be called or be private property. For it is foolish to procure in common our heavenly inheritance, but not to have joint possession of earthly things, which are nothing in reality.

60. CHARSIANEITES

[B22.] [Warnings against transgressions of the Rule]

I give you this advice as your father, and it is fitting for you to abide by it; for it is good to obey one's father. I also enjoin you as one who holds authority, and you must be content with [my injunction]. But if anyone through meanness should [p. 495] attempt to undo any of these things, you must oppose the evil and demonstrate all zeal and eagerness. If you must die to prevent any of this from being undone, you must believe it is to your advantage to run the course of martyrdom, confident, too, that evil will not prevail over virtue, nor will God, the judge of virtue, grow drowsy, nor will "he slumber, so as not to keep Israel" (cf. Ps. 120 [121]:4). But consider the possibility, God forbid, that with one accord you become fainthearted in the pursuit of virtue, and wish to destroy your community and union and concord, and each of you wishes to look out for himself and tend his own needs, using the monastery only as a pretext; and rejecting the truth, you utter these cold words, "Will not we alone show ourselves more intelligent than all the others? God will not deliver to destruction such a multitude of monks, because although they seem to be in a community, they have acquired private property, and do not observe fitting obedience toward the superior."

First of all, I do not know how to lament you and describe your destruction, that "you will be as a garden that has no water and as a terebinth tree that has cast its leaves" (Is. 1:30), or any other passage taken from Holy Scripture about someone's destruction. Then I will proclaim the judgment that awaits you, that even in the present world you will live in dishonor and disgrace, persecuted and insulted by everyone and deprived of your property and rightly being ill spoken of, because through your indolence you have extinguished the small spark of a true community which others established with much sweat and toil, and you have revealed yourselves unworthy of your vows. In the world to come, you will pay a severe penalty for your rash act, even though in other matters you may appear long-suffering and eager for virtue. For who will believe of you, that although you destroyed the common good, in private you acted in an appropriate matter? For when one labors alone and forces himself to some difficult task, it is completely clear that he would accomplish it more easily if many people shared [the work]. But I pray that you may never sink to such a degree of negligence, nor turn your backs to the devil, so as to be mocked by him, as you are thus shamefully and ignobly defeated. But if you scrupulously observe all [my precepts], and live the life which is hidden in Christ, on the great and remarkable day of the Second Coming of Christ you will be gloriously praised by him on the common stage of the world, and will receive the crown of justice (2 Tim. 4:8), and there [p. 496] you will obtain the universal abode in heaven, in Christ Jesus our Lord, to whom be glory forever, Amen.

Subsequent Chapters [C]

Preamble to the Subsequent Chapters

This is a verbatim transcription of the instructions set forth in the form of a testament by my most holy father and venerable master, of blessed memory, for my encouragement and advice. He presented it all in a fine manner and as no one else at all would express the discipline and order of the cenobitic and monastic life; and if one examines it, he would find this in the grandeur of the ideas and the graceful composition of the phrases, from which anyone who wishes may learn to what extent they possessed the grace of the divine spirit.

FIFTEENTH CENTURY

It is the desire of my humble self to select a few [items] from their many wondrous sayings in order to present them in a simpler and clearer fashion to those who do not yet have exact experience of the spiritual precepts which are operative in this monastery of ours. Thus if those who come to the monastery after my death read the [instructions] which they would have received through my presence and advice, “as the next best thing”³³—as the saying goes—having these instructions before their eyes in written form, and by walking in their footsteps, they will enjoy the true and blessed life as a result of this pious regime and way of life, just as if I were still alive and were uttering these admonitions to them in a living voice.

[C] 1. That the superior should be kind to the monks in his charge, and should not make outside friendships, nor enter into spiritual relationships or loans or anything else of this sort. Neither should he ever permit a layman to stay in the monastery without a trial period of three years, if he wishes to become a monk.

Therefore first of all I enjoin the superior of this monastery not to lay exclusive claim to some of the brothers and behave in a familiar or friendly fashion with them, but reject others as strangers and outcasts. Rather he should maintain the same spiritual attitude and love toward all, the one maintaining the form of the head, the others the form of limbs, in order to make up one complete body. Neither should he ever acquire a servant or retainer or anyone, either an outsider or monk, supposedly to serve his needs. Nor on the pretext of the management of the monastery should he make friends with outsiders, especially with laymen, and enter into friendships or adoptions of lay brothers or what are called spiritual relationships with them, and engage in [p. 497] loans and worldly transactions and business deals. Nor should he establish a tavern or bakery or oil-press for profit and for provision of the monastery, since they clearly bring perdition and spiritual ruin on the workers, and total destruction of the most holy monastic way of life. Nor should he receive any layman at all to take up residence in this monastery, unless he comes to the monastery for the fine purpose of submission, in observance of the rule which the divinely inspired Pachomios was taught by angelic visitation,³⁴ that is, that the person who comes to try out the monastic habit must be trained for three years, and, if he wishes to remain after this, he is deemed worthy of the holy habit, and to live together with them in the future; otherwise he is to be expelled from the monastery once and for all.

[C] 2. That there should be no female animals at all in the monastery or in the dependency, and that no woman should enter or be buried in the monastery. Neither should you receive holders of fellowships nor a youth younger than sixteen.

In general I enjoin you never to possess female animals, neither in the monastery, nor in the dependency, and never to permit in any way a woman to enter within the holy precincts, whether dead or, even worse, alive. There should be no other entrance or exit except for the general gateway to the monastery. In no way should one admit a holder of a fellowship, either for money or property, either inside or outside the monastery. You should never receive youths below the age of sixteen, precisely on account of their tender years and their tendency to loose behavior and the scandal produced therefrom by the devil.

60. CHARSIANEITES

[C] 3. How it is sinful to eat in secret and even worse than theft and fraud, and that no one should be allowed at mealtime to serve himself his favorite foods, for this is a cause of disgrace and scandal for the monks.

None of the monks should eat in secret, nor receive messages from anyone at all from outside [the monastery], since secret gluttony is forbidden by our holy fathers. For it is said, “We have seen the salvation of negligent men, but never of the secret glutton.”³⁵ For such a man will be condemned by God to the same punishment as one who robs and defrauds his own brothers. Nor should he refrain from the appearance of secret gluttony, but in another way do something worse, and at mealtime shamelessly serve his favorite foods to himself, or perhaps to others as well to conceal his own disease. For this is even more offensive than secret gluttony, since the secret glutton acts in secret and with hesitation, but the former acts openly and boldly. One could not easily [p. 498] imitate the secret glutton, but [blatant greediness] will attract many, even apparently serious monks, to imitate this shameless behavior, and will be a cause of great harm and disgrace. For from this always follows contempt and everything will be thrown into confusion.

The old custom must be observed, namely that the official should place all the food, whatever it is, on the table in equal fashion, and each [monk] should take it to eat with indifference, and should not seek out his favorite foods and what is tasty and sweet to his tongue. The only exception is in the case of a [monk] who is ill and does not wish to eat salty food, but sweet. Even this should not be permitted for the ailing monk without the superior’s permission. When he has informed the official about him, then in accordance with his discretion he should offer the monk who requests it sweet food instead of salty, or, if he prefers, salty food instead of sweet. It is unreasonable to wish to partake of both at the same time, out of hedonism. For it is not fitting for those who have chosen the crucified life to indulge in luxury and pursue physical pleasures, which introduce war to the soul.

Likewise it is inappropriate for monks who have taken vows of obedience to receive messages, and thereby be forced to reply to them. For this is a sign of an idiorhythmic discipline, and anyone who does something of the sort must be reprimanded by the superior, to whom his correction must be entrusted.

[C] 4. Concerning visitors to the monastery, either at mealtime or at another time, that the superior should not be permitted to entertain them, if it should be necessary, either in his own cell or anywhere else, whoever they may be, except in the refectory at the appointed [mealtime].

Visitors to the monastery at the time of the midday meal should be invited to the refectory, whether they are men of virtuous and spiritual character, or nobles, or others. Whatever has been prepared at that time for the monks’ food should also be served to the guests for their meal, for this is our custom from of old. The superior should not invite them and entertain them in his cell or in the garden or anywhere else except the refectory at the appointed [hour]. If the visitors should arrive before or after lunch, whoever they are, and it should be necessary to offer them some hospitality and refreshment, they should be invited into the refectory, but none of the monks should share in their meal. The superior should engage in spiritual instruction, and the other [p. 499] monks should carry out their proper duties in a serious and quiet manner, and then the [guests] should be dismissed with blessings.

FIFTEENTH CENTURY

[C] 5. That the entrance into the monastery should not be easily accessible for all who desire it, for this is a cause of spiritual harm.

Entrance into the monastery should not be readily available to all who wish it, especially for those from whom it will not be possible to acquire any spiritual profit, but rather grave spiritual harm. For although these people always wear a mask of friendship, as in a play, they usually throw their simple and right-minded audience into turmoil by the words they sow. Instead of being kind and peaceful, they rouse everyone to anger and distress and disgust, and try to attract people to their own passions and wicked ways, and ridicule the behavior of others. Therefore you must turn them away as corrupters of the community and manifest enemies of the monastic life, and not give them any opportunity for words and speech.

[C] 6. That all the monks in the monastery should confess their private thoughts to their superior and not to any outsider. Anyone who does not conform should be expelled from the monastery.

The monks who live in the monastery should not confess their private thoughts to any outsider, but to their superior, to whom they have vowed obedience until their dying breath. For it is improper for any of them, when sharing his thoughts, to bypass his own superior, and convey his [confession] to an outsider. For of these two, whose rules and instructions will he carry out? Certainly of neither. For one of two things will happen: either the outsider selected by him will relate [his confession] to the spiritual director of the monastery, and it will be superfluous for him to have chosen another [confessor] (for he tries to acquire outside what he has near at hand, and thereby the superior of the monastery is scorned), or he will give different advice. How is it right for a brother from the monastery to go to another person, who gives some advice that is spurious and alien to the monastic life? Where will he then carry out his admonitions? In the monastery? That is impossible, since the situation is not in accordance with its rules. Nor can he do this in his cell. For how can he, since he does not even control his own body? He will not, then, carry out the commands of either one, as has been said. For, on the one hand, he has shown his contempt for his own superior by his choice of a stranger and interloper. On the other hand, he has no place to carry out [p. 500] the instructions he receives from him. Furthermore, how is it clear that the man chosen from outside is virtuous rather than the opposite? For in any case, if he appeared to be virtuous and was capable of leading those who consulted him toward spiritual perfection, he would have advised them to go back to the spiritual director of the monastery and themselves, and to humble themselves, and accept with gratitude his decisions and instructions. If he fails to do this, he reveals that he is not from the ranks of the virtuous, but one of those who wear a mask of virtue, who pretend that they can teach the monastic way of life, but are far removed from it. The saying well fits them that externally they appear in the guise of sheep, but inwardly they are filled with rapine and greed (cf. Matt. 7:15). "For by their fruits shall they be known" (Matt. 7:16). Thus for monks to approach such men and entrust them with their thoughts, disregarding their own shepherds, causes enormous spiritual harm. For these men, who neither walk in the path of the Lord, nor give advice appropriate to the monastic way of life, have made themselves answerable to God. In the same way, these [monks] could rightly be called "thieves," in the words of the Lord, "because they do not enter by the door, but climb in by another way" (cf. John 10:1), inasmuch as they do not appear to obey their own superior, but consult another, who is a corrupter rather than a shepherd.

60. CHARSIANEITES

But someone will object and say that he will carry out the instructions of both the common father and of the stranger. Rather, if the truth be known, he will show his contempt for both, as has been demonstrated above. For it is not permissible for one who has chosen to carry out to the utmost the commandments of our common protector, the “narrow and hard” (cf. Matt. 7:14) [path], in the words of our Lord, not to be satisfied with this [path], which is for him the most desirable accomplishment, and to leave it and seek another [path] outside, as if the first does not satisfy him. Rather it is clear that he has contempt for both, since he does not confidently attach himself to anyone, for [the Lord] says, “No one can serve two masters” (Matt. 6:24). In any case it is appropriate that a monk who falls victim to such a disease, and is not willing to mend his ways even after exhortation and counsel, but relies rather on his own inclination, should be severed from the rest of the community, like a diseased member, lest he infect the others with his disease. Since it is not at all lawful for a disobedient and willful [monk] to be found in the monastery, his correction must be entrusted to the superior. [p. 501]

[C] 7. That monks should not go to law courts. But if it becomes necessary, they should go only to state the case, and should immediately depart without getting involved in the affair.

[Monks] should not go to law courts concerning any sort of financial suit. If they are wronged by someone and deprived of their property, then they should approach those who wrong them, in accordance with the words of the Savior: “If your brother sins against you, go and tell him his fault, between you and him alone. If he listens to you, you have gained your brother. But if he does not listen, take one of two others along with you. If he refuses to listen to them, tell it to the church; and if he refuses to listen to the church, let him be to you as a Gentile and a tax collector” (Matt. 18:15–17). Wherefore, following this commandment of the Lord, they ought to approach those who wrong them, and discuss among themselves their injustice to them. If after listening to their words, one renounces his wrongdoing, a double advantage results therefrom: the wrongdoer renounces his wrongdoing, and the [property] taken unjustly is recovered for the monastery. But if he takes no heed of their words, then they should take one or two [others] with them, for perhaps the one who wronged them will be ashamed and will renounce his sin. But if he pays no heed to these either, then they should approach the protector of the Church [i.e., the patriarch], not to lodge an accusation against the wrongdoer, nor seeking a lawsuit with him, but only to state the amount of which they have been deprived by the brother who has wronged them, and not to get any further involved in the affair. For the protector of the Church will see to it that the monastery recovers its property and that the wrongdoer is corrected, unless he wants to be subject to the Lord’s judgment: “Let him be to you as a Gentile and a tax collector” (Matt. 18:17).

But if the monks should be accused by another of theft, it is my wish, to begin with, that my [monks] not be seen as thieves of any movable or immovable property, since they are obligated to renounce their own [property], if the commandment is observed. But if ever such an occurrence should take place as a result of beguilement [by the devil], I do not want them to wait to be accused by their victim and then make restitution, but they should give up the stolen property even before the summons of the court. For thus they will induce the love of their [opponents] and will secure their own peace and quiet. But if that person suspects that he has been wronged by the monks, but the reality and truth are different, they should go to court, whether they were accused before the holy and divine [tribunal] of the church of Christ, or the imperial and royal sekreton, for three reasons: on account of the respect owed to the court, so that the monks may not be [p. 502] dishonored and slandered as thieves and people covetous of the property of others, and, moreover, so that they may reveal the truth in a clearer fashion for the satisfaction of the judges and the plaintiff. [The monks] should not become further involved in this business, but immediately after the statement of the case they should depart from the court, cheerfully accepting the decision made by the judge, even if it does not turn out as they wish. For I prefer for them to be deprived of physical [possessions] without justice rather than for them to become involved and interfere in their lawsuits and in the struggle and battle against their adversaries, contrary to the commandment, which says, “the Lord’s servant must not be quarrelsome” (II Tim. 2:24), but should be peaceful with “those who hate peace” (Ps. 119 [120]:7).

[C] 8. That the treasury should be paid without any reduction what the monastery is accustomed to pay on the annual harvests of wheat and wine.

Since I have mentioned law courts and injustice, I think I should not overlook this point, the payment of taxes to the treasury. First of all, my holy [predecessors], the venerable masters, with a view to the discipline of the monastic life, strove to apply, among others, the following [rule], which indeed was observed their entire life, and after their death this practice was continued by me up to the present day, in accordance with their holy wishes: that no business affairs be carried out in the monastery, either for revenue or for a loan or any other transaction resulting in financial gain. I myself enjoin that my [monks] should continue this practice in the future, as long as, with God’s help, the monastery exists.

Next, since our food is provided above all by the mercy of my all-holy Virgin, to whom as foundress this monastery has been dedicated from the beginning, and then from our estates and the crops they bear annually, and from this harvest has been paid the customary tax to the treasury, I say that in the future everything that belongs to the state from this harvest, whether it is wine or wheat or any other products, should be paid by the monks without any reduction to the collectors of the state taxes, and nothing that belongs to the fisc should be kept back, perhaps with the excuse of private profit, that what is hidden results from the labor of the monks. Rather they should hand over to the tax collectors with all truth and honesty everything owed them from all the revenues of the monastery, even if nothing else remains for the sustenance of the monks, [p. 503] and they should not prefer falsehood to the truth for the sake of personal gain. For it is better for them to tell the truth and be deprived even of their own property than to choose falsehood, and for the sake of material gain to renounce truth, that is, Christ himself, who is Truth (cf. John 14:6). For this is the work of the wicked devil who with mind and senses begrudges good deeds, to grasp matters on the right and end on the left, and through a few small matters causes enormous harm to those who obey him. For through his advice that it is not sinful for someone to keep back his own [property] and to lie about this, he gradually casts them into greed and desire for the property of others. For when someone becomes accustomed to lie and keep back his own property, he will advance along this road and use these [tactics] with regard to the property of others, which is covetousness. My brethren, there is no difference between this and idol worship, according to the blessed Paul, who says: “Flee covetousness, which is idolatry” (Col. 3:5). Moreover, according to God’s ancestor, the prophet David, everyone who lies will fall into the abyss of perdition, for he says, “Thou wilt destroy all that speak falsehood” (Ps. 5:6). At all events my all-holy Virgin will not overlook these monks who have chosen³⁶ to speak the truth, through the compassion and grace of our Lord Jesus Christ, “Who opens his hand and fills with pleasure every living thing” (Ps. 144 [145]:16), who said, “Look at the birds of the air: they neither sow nor reap nor gather into barns, and yet our heavenly Father feeds them” (Matt. 6:26), who commanded, “Seek the kingdom of God and his righteousness, and all these things shall be yours as well” (Matt. 6:33), but [the Virgin], the Nurse and Protectress and Provider of all the monastery’s property from the beginning until now, will provide for their needs many times over.

60. CHARSIANEITES

Therefore, as has been said, you must pay the fisc its due, without any reduction, from the income of the monastic estates, since we have this obligation according to the blessed Paul, the universal teacher of the world. For he says, “Brethren, pay all of their due, taxes to whom taxes are due, honor to whom honor is due, revenue to whom revenue is due. Owe no one anything, except to love one another” (Rom. 13:7-8). The same is also found in the commandments of the holy and divine fathers who enjoin, “Child, if you are a disciple of the gentle and humble One, give and pass by.”³⁷ [p. 504]

[C] 9. That no one of the monks should ever be a protector or guardian of anyone at all, nor should he be readily disposed to bear witness about any matter whatsoever.

On no pretext whatsoever should any of the monks become a guardian or protector or attorney for anyone, whether a foreigner or one of his countrymen; for this is contrary to the divine and holy canons. For those who have mortified themselves for the sake of the Christian life and have renounced the world, and are not masters of their own will, and have vowed to be proper monks, have the obligation to act in accordance with the canons and not be involved in any worldly affairs. This would be impossible for anyone to avoid if he is the guardian of widows and orphans, and is an advocate at trials, and appears before emperors and patriarchs allegedly to succor the needy. For such a man will be forced, on the one hand, as a guardian to be concerned with material matters, and to busy himself with those things whose possession he renounced once and for all when he became a monk; on the other hand, if he spends a lot of time at lawsuits, as an attorney and advocate, [he will be forced] to contend with his opponents and to attack and be attacked by his adversaries. This is not the role for disciples of the gentle and peaceful one, who enjoined them to deny themselves and raise his cross and follow him (Matt. 16:24).

Neither do I want my monks to be eager to bear witness, unless they should be ordered to do so by the superior, because it is not otherwise possible to ascertain the truth and where justice lies, except from their testimony. [I permit] this only if they are simply questioned; but if [they are to testify] under duress and upon orders, in no wise do I permit it. For without this [prohibition], if they were ready to testify, they would be well liked by the party on behalf of which their testimony seemed to be delivered, but hated and opposed by the other, inasmuch as they testified against it. If the latter party takes offense at them, how could these monks who are asked by the commandment to be peaceful with “those who hate peace” (cf. Ps. 119 [120]:7) have a peaceful conscience? This certainly would not occur, if they lived like monks, in the words of the commandment, mortifying themselves to things on earth for the sake of the hidden life in Christ, just as the blessed Paul says, “For you have died, and your life is hid with Christ in God” (Col. 3:3). For if this was said once and for all to all Christians, it is even more right that it be observed by monks, since they have renounced the present world and mortified themselves to the world, and have clothed themselves in the monastic habit as a second baptism, so that they may recollect the first [baptism]. Thus for monks to revert to the same [worldly concerns] [p. 505] and to defile this second baptism by associating with those things which they have renounced, makes them transgressors of their vows, inasmuch as they are building up those things which they tore down as an obstacle to them in their pursuit of virtue. Suitable for them would be the words of the blessed Paul, “But if I build up again those things which I tore down, then I prove myself a transgressor” (Gal. 2:18). Therefore it is fitting for you to avoid these things, so that you may not experience punishment in the world to come as transgressors of the commandments, but rather may be deemed worthy of eternal life as workers of virtue.

[C] 10. That daily during the brothers’ mealtime should be read the Ascetic Treatises of the great father Basil and the sayings of the holy fathers.

Daily, while the brothers are eating in the refectory, should be read aloud, in everyone’s hearing, the Ascetic Treatises of our holy father Basil the Great, and sometimes the sayings and deeds of the holy fathers, which are called Gerontika, since both contribute to the contemplation and action, through which the person who lives according to God and renounces earthly things and likens himself to God as much as possible. For together with this material nourishment monks should consume the angelic and heavenly food which is the word of God, and the monks should occupy themselves above all with this [spiritual food], comprehending the readings, since “Man shall not live by bread alone, but by every word that proceeds from the mouth of God” (Matt. 4:4), and according to the blessed Paul, “Whether you eat or drink, or whatever you do, do all to the glory of God” (I Cor. 10:31), and again, “pray constantly, give thanks in all circumstances” (I Thess. 5:17–18), lest by doing otherwise they be subjected to the judgment of being ranked by Holy Scriptures with dumb animals, because they treat the refectory like a stable. For it is said, “A refectory without the word of God is like a stable for animals.”³⁸

At the beginning of each month should be read aloud the treatise of the most holy patriarch lord Neilos for the regulation of monastic life, in the form of the testament of our most holy monk lord Mark,³⁹ and the treatise which my humble self recently composed in a more comprehensible and clearer style,⁴⁰ treating systematically the benefit of the monks therefrom. [p. 506]

[C] 11. That no one should have any private property in his cell unbeknownst to the superior, and that the superior has the obligation continually to oversee such matters.

No one should keep in his cell any garment for day or night nor anything else, even a needle, without the knowledge of the superior. If someone should be caught concealing anything of this sort, he should be rebuked and disciplined with the appropriate penalties, and that which he concealed, no matter what it is, should either be distributed to the poor or thrown into the fire to be burned and destroyed in front of all the monks. Therefore it is perforce necessary that the superior enter the cell of each monk at the beginning of each month and make the required inspection and examination of the things in each one’s cell.

60. CHARSIANEITES

[C] 12. That none of the monks should go to services at the Great Church, but the superior has the obligation to visit the incumbent ecumenical patriarch twice a year, and that [the monks] should not interfere in his affairs.

No one is to attend the services and feast days of the Great Church, neither the superior, nor any of his entourage, not because the holy rites celebrated there are blameworthy, but because it is not appropriate for monks, who have once and for all vowed to embrace contrition and sorrow (for it is to this that we are appointed), to surrender themselves to celebrations and festivals. For it is ridiculous for someone to mourn and celebrate at the same time. Moreover it was not customary for the inhabitants of our monastery to do this, and it is my wish that this tradition be maintained forever.

I permit only this, that the superior should visit the incumbent ecumenical patriarch twice a year, that is during the week of the tax collector and Pharisee,⁴¹ when the divine and revered days of Lent are approaching, to receive from him a prayer and blessing for the accomplishment of virtue, and again during Easter week, in all ways demonstrating his fellowship to the defender of the Church.

No one from our monastery should ever listen to gossip and slanders against him [the patriarch], or in any way dislike him (unless he falls into manifest heresy, either with regard to the divine and ineffable dispensation and accommodation of our Savior and God, or in theology), but should honor him in every way and speak his name with sincere affection and love, and not interfere at all in his affairs, whether they are carried out well or not; for, to quote [Gregory] the Theologian, “it is sufficient for you if you are well tended.”⁴² [p. 507]

[C] 13. That the customary commemorative services should be performed for the monks who have passed away, and that there should be a liturgy on the day of their death and every day thereafter for forty days, and that sick [monks] deserve a great deal of attention.

You must exert all zeal and diligence without fail to carry out the traditional [services] for deceased monks, that is, commemorative services and liturgies. On the very day of their death, if the time [of death] does not prevent it, during the very hour, if possible, a liturgy should be celebrated on behalf of the deceased. This should be continued without interruption for forty days. In the evenings, until the aforesaid forty days are accomplished, after compline all the monks should each make twelve prostrations on behalf of the deceased, saying, “Lord, grant rest to the soul of your servant so-and-so.”

Furthermore, you should visit and take suitable care of those brothers who fall ill, and a doctor should be summoned, and in no way should his orders be thwarted by any excuse of cost and expense.

[C] 14. That every year there should be celebrated without fail the feast day of our most holy Mother of God, that is of the Dormition, and the following day there should be a parastasimon and liturgy on behalf of the blessed founders.

The feast day of my Panagia, I mean of the Dormition,⁴³ should be celebrated without fail, just as it was first celebrated by my holy fathers and monks and then by myself, that is, the monks should spend the entire night in psalmody and reading, and during the day should celebrate the divine liturgy. The usual arrangements should be made in the refectory, and at the monastery gate a distribution should be made to the poor of half a modios of bread and wine and sufficient cooked food. A parastasimon and liturgy for the founders should be celebrated on the next day. In like manner we say that on the feast day of my holy great martyr Demetrios,⁴⁴ and on the following day, there should be a parastasimon and liturgy for my holy fathers and monks, the blessed lord Mark and the celebrated patriarch lord Neilos. [p. 508]

FIFTEENTH CENTURY

[C] 15. That each year, without interruption, a commemorative service should be celebrated at the appointed time for the most holy ecumenical patriarch lord Neilos and for the most holy monk lord Mark.

On the first of February should be celebrated the commemorative service and feast day of the most holy and venerable patriarch lord Neilos and a liturgy on the following day, and there should be a distribution to the poor of one-quarter modios of bread and wine and sufficient cooked food.

I ordain that the same thing should also happen without any change on the [first]⁴⁵ of March, the commemorative service for my most holy father and monk, lord Mark of blessed memory, and a liturgy on the following day, and a distribution to the poor of the same amount of bread, wine and cooked food, and on all the other days of the year the poor should be provided with two loaves of bread of the larger size.

[C] 16. That the superior should not be questioned by anyone with regard to the revenues and expenses of the monastery, and that [monks] should not speak to each other privately and should avoid idle gossip.

This too can be stated summarily: the superior should not be questioned by any of the monks about the revenues and expenses of the monastery, as long as he abides by all the rules and regulations I have set forth.

I ordain that all the monks should avoid idle gossip in common, and should not visit each other's cells, either by night or by day, and converse with each other in private, especially after the office of compline, but each should go straight to his own cell to perform prostrations or prayers, to the extent of his strength and inclination.

[C] 17. That on all the days of the year, including fast days, [the monks] should chant their own office.

I think I should write a few words, as a reminder, about communal psalmody, I mean that of both night and day. During Lent everything should be carried out exactly as the typikon specifies at the Sunday vigils and the daily offices. On Saturday and Sunday [the monks] should partake of wine and a boiled dish with olive oil, on the other days they should abstain from food cooked with olive oil. If perhaps they need some boiled dish in between these, add vinegar instead of oil. On Tuesday and Thursday they may have wine. During Easter week they should follow the rules [p. 509] of the typikon, and begin to chant the customary hours daily without fail and the entire night office together with the kathismata and readings. They should also sing the vesper hymns with the prayers, that is, on Sunday the canon of the "Angel, guardian of the soul," on Monday the [canon] of my Panagia, that begins, "Oppressed by many trials," on Tuesday the [canon] of our Lord God and Savior Jesus Christ, that begins “Alas, what shall I lament, what shall I bewail,” on Wednesday the [canon] of my holy and glorious martyr Demetrios and the other canons composed for him by mode, on Thursday the [canon] of our Lord God and Savior Jesus Christ, that begins “Sweetest Jesus,” on Friday the hymns and canon of the Akathistos. In like manner should be celebrated all the vigils on the feast days of the Lord and anniversaries of the great saints, as the typikon ordains.

60. CHARSIANEITES

During the fast of the Holy Apostles and the fast preceding the Dormition of my Panagia,⁴⁶ [the monks] should abstain from boiled food, olive oil and wine on Wednesday and Friday. Also during the forty days before Christmas, [the monks] should abstain from olive oil and wine on Wednesday and Friday, except on feast days of the Lord or on the anniversary of a great saint. On these days they should chant the hours and the mesoria in unison at vespers, and should eat only once a day, consuming dry foods and drinking only water and partaking only of seasonal fruits at mealtime.

[C] 18. Exhortation that all the foregoing rules should be continuously observed by the monks, and a petition to future emperors and patriarchs not to interfere with the monastery.

These [rules] then have been set forth by my humble self for the sake of clear explanation, as has been said, on the one hand as a reminder of the monastic and cenobitic condition, on the other hand to maintain and preserve all the previous regulations, as well as those which I have now set forth. I pray to my God that you be revealed as trusty workers of virtue, who regard the written rules as if they were an image and archetype of every good, so that if some depraved person should renounce his vows to God, and dare to transgress and overturn these [rules], he will receive a heavy sentence from God, and will be subject to the punishment of my mediocrity, unless he makes amends through repentance.

Furthermore, since by the grace of God this monastery has been preserved free and unenslaved up to the present time by successive venerable emperors and most holy patriarchs, I pray to God that it be maintained in the same freedom even after my death. I beg and entreat future emperors and patriarchs [p. 510] to maintain the same attitude toward the monastery as their predecessors, and no one else should be appointed superior against the wishes of the incumbent superior of the monastery, nor should a fellowship be given to anyone at all as a gift, nor should any other ill-treatment and abuse or any demand whatsoever be inflicted upon the monks, nor should any monk, or, even worse, layman be sent to the monastery by emperor or patriarch. For anyone who attempts anything of this sort, either totally or in part, my humble self considers him as unjust and unreasonable and as one who throws into confusion good rules and regulations and overturns the good order of monastic life, to the best of his ability, and considers him as excommunicated and unforgiven by God the Ruler of All.

Therefore just as the most holy and blessed venerable master lord Mark entrusted this monastery to the most holy and venerable patriarch lord Neilos, and he in turn passed it on to my humble self, and I exerted considerable effort and zeal for its prosperity and improvement, thus in turn my humble self transfers it to the most honorable ordained monk _____⁴⁷ whom I decided was distinguished above the others in his edification and improvement of the souls to be found in this kellion, with God’s help. Therefore I want him as my successor to have all license and authority in the monastery. When he, too, is about to depart this present world and journey to God, he has the obligation to pass it on to the monk whom he chooses as the best of all, and who is capable of protecting souls and guiding them to the path of salvation, and this should occur in succession in perpetuity. We have had my Panagia as the sole founder and steward and superior from the beginning until now, and I bequeath her to you as protector and perpetual patron.

FIFTEENTH CENTURY

I pledge to you all and assert to my beloved children in Christ, that if you dwell in this monastery with eagerness and zeal, striving for virtue until the end and observing the rule, you will attain the same rewards and crowns as those promised by God the Judge to the hierarchs and holy men and martyrs on the great and illustrious day of his judgment. To him be power, glory, honor and kingdom now and forever and to everlasting generations. Amen.

Written and signed in the month of September of the year 6916 [= 1407 A.D.], first indiction. Matthew, by God's mercy archbishop of Constantinople, the New Rome, and ecumenical patriarch.

Notes on the Translation

Editors' note: The assistance of our translator, Alice-Mary Talbot [AMT], is gratefully acknowledged for the notes to this document.

1. kalogeros. [AMT]
2. The chapter numeration in [A] follows Hunger's edition. [AMT]
3. John Chrysostom, Homilia in Rom., 8.28, PG 51, col. 170.
4. hesychia. [AMT]
5. E. Leutsch and F. Schneidewin, Corpus paroemiographorum graecorum, vol. 2 (Göttingen, 1839–51; repr. Hildesheim, 1958), p. 104, line 99. [AMT]
6. Perhaps ca. 1375. For Mark, see [7] below, and Trapp, PLP, fasc. 7, no. 17017, p. 115.
7. Probably John V (1341–91) and Andronikos IV Palaiologos (1376–79) are meant.
8. Neilos Kerameus (1380–88), for whom see Alice-Mary Talbot, "Neilos Kerameus," ODB, pp. 1449–50, and Trapp, PLP, fasc. 5, no. 11648, Kerameus Neilos, pp. 173–74.
9. In 1380.
10. Sometime before 1388; see Talbot, "Neilos Kerameus," p. 1449.
11. Location uncertain; see Janin, Géographie, vol. 3, p. 501, and D. Nicol, The Byzantine Family of Kantakouzenos (Cantacuzenus) ca. 1100–1460 (Washington, D.C., 1968), p. 94, n. 146.
12. For this foundation, see Janin, Géographie, vol. 3, pp. 286–89.
13. Probably John VI Kantakouzenos (1347–1354).
14. In 1354, after the fall of John VI Kantakouzenos.
15. After his abdication on December 10, 1354, John VI, under the monastic name Joasaph, first retired to the monastery of St. George of Mangana, then to the Charsianeites monastery; see Nicol, Kantakouzenos, pp. 86, 94.
16. In 1380; see [5] above.
17. A reference to the Turkish siege of Constantinople (1394–1402) by Beyazid I.
18. Antony IV (1389–90, 1391–97)
19. Kallistos II Xanthopoulos (1397).
20. In October 1397.
21. In 1399; John VII Palaiologos served as regent from 1399 to 1403; see Barker, Manuel II, pp. 202–11, and Talbot, "Matthew I," p. 1316; for John VII, see John Barker, "John VII in Genoa: A Problem in Late Byzantine Source Confusion," OCP 28 (1962), 213–38.

60. CHARSIANEITES

22. Matthew I's deposition lasted from the summer of 1402 until June 1403; see Talbot, "Matthew I," p. 1316.
23. Subsequent to Matthew I's restoration by Manuel II Palaiologos in 1403.
24. exampelon: old or abandoned vineyard. See Demetrakos, Lexikon, s.v. [AMT]
25. Read metapoieisthe? [AMT]
26. Cf. the language of (22) Evergetis [37].
27. John Klimakos, Scala paradisi 4, PG 88, col. 685A.
28. Neilos Kerameus; see Trapp, PLP, fasc. 5, no. 11648, p. 173.
29. Read prosapollyein. [AMT]
30. Read alazon. [AMT]
31. Read tes touton. [AMT]
32. adelphata; for which see E. Herman, "Die Regelung der Armut in den byzantinischen Klöstern," OCP 7 (1941), 406–60, esp. 444–49, and Paul Magdalino, "Adelphaton," ODB, p. 19.
33. Cf. Leutsch and Schneidenwin, Corpus paroemiographorum graecorum, vol. 2, p. 362. [AMT]
34. Palladius, Historia Lausiaca 32, ed. C. Butler (Cambridge, 1898; repr. Hildesheim, 1967), pp. 88–96.
35. Cf. John Klimakos, Scala paradisi, Schol. 20, PG 88, col. 877B.
36. Read proeremenous. [AMT]
37. Unidentified. Not in the works of the Cappadocian fathers.
38. Unidentified. Not in the works of the Cappadocian fathers.
39. That is, the Rule of Mark and Neilos [B].
40. Matthew I's Subsequent Chapters [C].
41. The week preceding the fourth Sunday before the beginning of Lent when the parable of the tax collector and the pharisee (Luke 18:10–14) is read. See Catechesis Chronica Monasterii Studii, 8, PG 99, col. 1697D.
42. Gregory Nazianzen, Oratio 19, De suis sermonibus et ad Julianum exaequatorem, PG 35, col. 1053C. [AMT]
43. Feast of the Dormition of the Mother of God, August 15.
44. Feast of St. Demetrios, October 26.
45. Possible lacuna in the manuscript here.
46. Fast of the Holy Apostles, from Monday after the feast of All Saints (Sunday after Pentecost) through the vigil of the feast of Sts. Peter and Paul, June 28; fast of the Mother of God, August 1–14, for which see (20) Black Mountain [87], [88] and (30) Phoberos [31].
47. A space for the name has been left blank in the manuscript.

Document Notes

1. Autobiography [A]

Summary titles of the chapters are listed to facilitate reference.

[A1] Excursus on the value of the cenobitic life.

[A2] Matthew's monastic vocation.

[A3] His reception as a disciple by Mark.

[A4] His acceptance of monastic discipline.

[A5] Neilos succeeds Mark as superior, becomes patriarch (1379); Matthew appointed superior; his labors on the monastery's behalf.

[A6] Foundation history; role of the founder John Charsianeites.

[A7] Recruitment of Mark as superior; Charsianeites' disgrace (1354).

[A8] Subsequent additions to the endowment; residence of the ex-emperor John VI Kantakouzenos.

[A9] The monastery left without a protector after Neilos; Matthew's benefactions; destruction of properties by the Turks.

FIFTEENTH CENTURY

[A10] Matthew elected patriarch (1397); his deposition by John VII Palaiologos (1402).

[A11] Restoration of devastated estates; imperial tax concessions; commemoration of the emperor.

[A12] Summary of Matthew's personal contributions; purpose of the typikon.

2. Rule of Mark and Neilos [B]

[B1] Authority for issuance of this Rule. See similar discussions in (52) Choumnos [B1] and (58) Menoikeion [2].

[B2] Discussion of alternative forms of monastic life. See also (24) Christodoulos [A24], (34) Machairas [152], (37) Auxentios [11], (42) Sabas [7], (54) Neilos Damilas [6], and (57) Bebaia Elpis [149].

[B3] Advantages of the cenobitic way of life. See also (47) Philanthropos [1] and (57) Bebaia Elpis [47].

[B4] Care for physical and spiritual health of the monks. See also (22) Evergetis [41] and related documents, (39) Lips [33] ff., (56) Kellibara II [5], and (57) Bebaia Elpis [90].

[B5] Maintenance of all possessions in common. See also [B21], [B22] below and (22) Evergetis [22] and related documents, (37) Auxentios [5], (52) Choumnos [B19], (55) Athanasios I [5], (56) Kellibara II [3], and (57) Bebaia Elpis [46], [154].

[B6] Expulsion of quarrelsome monks. See also (22) Evergetis [9] and related documents, (42) Sabas [5], and (45) Neophytos [CB9].

[B7] Prohibition of private associations and friendships. See also (22) Evergetis [42] and related documents, (37) Auxentios [5], (55) Athanasios I [4], (57) Bebaia Elpis [46], and (58) Menoikeion [22].

[B8] Importance of obedience to the superior. See also (22) Evergetis [16] and related documents, (39) Lips [9], and (52) Choumnos [B4], (55) Athanasios I [1], and (57) Bebaia Elpis [9].

[B9] Exhortation to the superior; not to govern despotically. For the principle, see (37) Auxentios [9] and (38) Kellibara I [18]; for consultative government elsewhere, see (22) Evergetis [14] and related documents; (39) Lips [21], [23], [32], [38], [39]; (55) Athanasios I [5]; (58) Menoikeion [22]; and (59) Manuel II [6].

[B10] Designation and qualifications of the next superior; future succession to the superiorship. For the use of a testament to designate a successor, see [C18] below and (1) Apa Abraham [1]; (10) Eleousa [11]; (24) Christodoulos [B3], [B5], [C1]; (25) Fragala [A7], [B7]; (41) Docheiariou [4]; (45) Neophytos [16]; (49) Geromeri [14]; (50) Gerasimos [3]; and (52) Choumnos [A3]. The discussion of qualifications echoes (22) Evergetis [14] and related documents.

[B11] Monks from outside the community eligible for the superiorship. See also (32) Mamas [1], (33) Heliou Bomon [1], (35) Skoteine [17], (37) Auxentios [3], cf. (34) Machairas [148].

[B12] Qualities of postulants and how they should be received. See also (52) Choumnos [B9], [B17] and (54) Neilos Damilas [5], [6].

[B13] Requirements for tonsure. See also (39) Lips [17], [18]; (52) Choumnos [B11], [B17]; and (54) Neilos Damilas [7].

[B14] Required renunciation of secular relations; no visits or visitors. See also (39) Lips [15], [16]; (52) Choumnos [A21]; (54) Neilos Damilas [7]; and (57) Bebaia Elpis [75], [76].

[B15] Examination and trial of postulants. See also (37) Auxentios [12]; (39) Lips [17], [18]; and (52) Choumnos [B6].

[B16] Entrance fees not allowed; distribution of worldly goods to others on entrance; monastery to welcome penniless monks. For similar views, see (13) Ath. Typikon [49], (52) Choumnos [B6], [B7], and (55) Athanasios I [7]; cf. (59) Manuel II [12].

[B17] Prohibition of fellowships. See also [C2], [C18] below, and (34) Machairas [153].

[B18] Kelliotic monks not to be admitted. See also [B8] and [B13] above, and (53) Meteora [1], (57) Bebaia Elpis [149], and (58) Menoikeion [11].

[B19] Limitation on hospitality. See also [C4] below and (21) Roidion [B2] and (42) Sabas [8]; cf. (34) Machairas [118].

[B20] Diet, clothing, manual labor, and punishments left to superior's discretion. (53) Meteora [8] permits differences in clothing; (52) Choumnos [B21] also leaves manual labor to the superior's discretion.

60. CHARSIANEITES

[B21] Summary of injunctions. See also (22) Evergetis [42] and related documents, which serve the same function.

[B22] Warning against violators of the Rule. See also [C18] below and the sanctions in other Palaiologan documents: (37) Auxentios [2]; (39) Lips [2]; (48) Prodromos [16]; (49) Geromeri [16]; (50) Gerasimos [5]; (51) Koutloumousi [A15], [B20]; and (57) Bebaia Elpis [17].

3. Subsequent Chapters [C]

[C1] Code of conduct for the superior; admission of laymen only for tonsure. For the former, see (22) Evergetis [17] and related documents; for the latter, see bans on fellowships in [B17] above and [C2] and [C18] below, and for length of the novitiate, see [B15] above.

[C2] No women, youths, or female animals; no burials of women in the monastery; only one gateway; no fellowships. For the ban on women, see (22) Evergetis [39] and related documents, (37) Auxentios [12], (45) Neophytos [19], [C18], (53) Meteora [7], and (58) Menoikeion [14]. For the ban on youths, see also (12) Tzimiskes [16], (13) Ath. Typikon [48], (15) Constantine IX [1], cf. [15], (29) Kosmosoteira [49], (42) Sabas [1], (58) Menoikeion [14], and (59) Manuel II [13]. For the ban on female animals, see also (12) Tzimiskes [22], [23]; (13) Ath. Typikon [31], [53]; (15) Constantine IX [3], [4]; (45) Neophytos [19]; and (59) Manuel II [14]. For other bans on burials, see (27) Kecharitomene [70], (29) Kosmosoteira [86], and (37) Auxentios [13]. For other physical restrictions on access and observation, see (27) Kecharitomene [74], [80]. For fellowships, see also [B17] above and [C18] below.

[C3] No secret eating; equal portions of food; no correspondence with outsiders. For the ban on secret eating, see also (22) Evergetis [9], [22] and related documents, (39) Lips [29], (47) Philanthropos [2], (56) Kellibara II [3], and (57) Bebaia Elpis [84]. For dietary equality, see also (22) Evergetis [26] and related documents, (37) Auxentios [7], (52) Choumnos [B20], (53) Meteora [3], and (56) Kellibara II [2]. For the ban on correspondence, see also (22) Evergetis [22] and related documents, (34) Machairas [131], and (45) Neophytos [CB5].

[C4] Guidelines for the entertainment of visitors. See also [B19] above and (3) Theodore Studites [20], [23]; (13) Ath. Typikon [33], [35]; (21) Roidion [B5], [B7]; (34) Machairas [116], [117]; (52) Choumnos [B15] and (54) Neilos Damilas [20].

[C5] Restriction on access to the monastery. Cf. (45) Neophytos [C17].

[C6] Exclusive confession to the superior. See also (22) Evergetis [7], [15] and related documents, and (52) Choumnos [B10]. (52) Choumnos [A17] and (58) Menoikeion [13] are more indulgent.

[C7] Monks not to engage in litigation except if falsely accused. See [C9] below and also the discussion of litigation in (15) Constantine IX, Introduction, [8]; (19) Attaleiates [34], [43]; (23) Pakourianos [18]; and (47) Philanthropos [4].

[C8] Obligation to pay taxes on annual harvests. For the monastery's tax-exempt properties, see [A11] above. For fiscal obligations of the properties of other monasteries, see (19) Attaleiates [INV 10], [INV 11]; (27) Kecharitomene, Appendix A; and (31) Areia [M10], [T6].

[C9] Monks not to serve as guardians, protectors, or advocates. See also (3) Theodore Studites [8], (12) Tzimiskes [14], (13) Ath. Typikon [30], and (59) Manuel II [10].

[C10] Daily reading of Basil's Ascetic Treatises; monthly reading of the Rule of Mark and Neilos and the author's Subsequent Chapters. For use of Basil, see also (24) Christodoulos [A26]; for reading of the typikon in other Palaiologan monasteries, see also (37) Auxentios [13], (39) Lips [8], (55) Athanasios I [8], (57) Bebaia Elpis [120], and (58) Menoikeion [9].

[C11] No private possessions in the cells; superior to conduct monthly inspections. For the former, see also (22) Evergetis [22] and related documents, (47) Philanthropos [2], and (53) Meteora [10]; for the latter, see (22) Evergetis [27] and related documents, (34) Machairas [120], and (45) Neophytos [C11].

[C12] Monks to abstain from services at Hagia Sophia; superior to visit the patriarch twice a year. For the treatment of patriarchal rights in other Palaiologan documents, see (38) Kellibara I [15], (39) Lips [1], (50) Gerasimos [4], (55) Athanasios I [9], and (57) Bebaia Elpis [26].

[C13] Commemorations of departed monks. See also (22) Evergetis [36] and related documents; for provi-

FIFTEENTH CENTURY

- sions in other Palaiologan monasteries, see (37) Auxentios [13] and (57) Bebaia Elpis [149], [150], [151].
- [C14] Prescriptions for feasts of the Dormition and of St. Demetrios. For the former feast, see also (20) Roidion [B9], (22) Evergetis [11], (23) Pakourianos [11], (27) Kecharitomene [59], (29) Kosmosoteira [10], (34) Machairas [29], (39) Lips [38], and (57) Bebaia Elpis [112].
- [C15] Annual commemorations of Neilos and Mark. See also the commemorations of past superiors in (22) Evergetis [35], Appendix, and, in Palaiologan times, in (48) Prodromos [9].
- [C16] Superior not answerable to monks for finances; condemnation of idle gossip and visitation of cells. For the former, see (22) Evergetis [18] and related documents. For the latter, see (22) Evergetis [9] and related documents; (34) Machairas [128], [130]; and (45) Neophytos [CB6].
- [C17] Dietary and liturgical regulations. See also provisions for other Palaiologan monasteries in (37) Auxentios [8], [10]; (39) Lips [29], [30], [31], [32], [33]; (53) Meteora [11]; (52) Choumnos [A16], [B14]; (54) Neilos Damilas [10], [12]; (55) Athanasios I [4]; (56) Kellibara II [1]; (57) Bebaia Elpis [59], [78], [80]; and (58) Menoikeion [4], [16].
- [C18] Recapitulation of provisions; institutional independence; designation of a successor. For institutional independence, see also (37) Auxentios [2], (38) Kellibara I [15], (39) Lips [1], (40) Anargyroi [3], (57) Bebaia Elpis [14], [15]; and (58) Menoikeion [3], [11], [22]. For the ban on fellowships, see also [B17] and [C2] above. For a prior designation of a successor, see [B10] above, with cross-references.

61. Eleousa Inv.: Inventory of the Monastery of the Mother of God Eleousa in Stroumitza

Date: 1449¹

Translator: Anastasius Bandy, with Nancy Ševčenko

Edition employed: Louis Petit, “Le Monastère de Notre-Dame de Pitié en Macédoine,” IRAIK 6 (1900), 1–153, with text at 114–25.

Manuscript: Parisinus, supplément grec 1222 (19th c.)²

Other translations: Macedonian, by Ć. P. Miljković-Pepok, Veljusa: Manastir Sv. Bogorodica Milostiva vo seloto Veljusa kraj Strumica (Skopje, 1981), pp. 283–309.

Analysis

This Inventory, separated from the foundation’s typikon, (10) Eleousa, by nearly 365 years, concludes our collection of monastic foundation documents. Like some of the Athonite monasteries for which (59) Manuel II was written earlier in the fifteenth century, Eleousa was a foundation born in the era before some of the enduring principles of the monastic reform had taken root. Indeed, (10) Eleousa [18], as will be recalled, actually prohibits the drawing up of an inventory. Perhaps the founder Manuel of Stroumitza considered such a requirement demeaning to the monastery’s superior even though—like the reformers—he was unwilling to countenance the alienation of any of the foundation’s assets. Be that as it may, here in the fifteenth century³ the monastery’s monks and their superior Meletios chose to interpret [8] their founder’s typikon in accordance with what more than three centuries of Evergetian security provisions had conditioned them to accept as customary practice.

The itemization of the foundation’s movable properties follows, including a list of icons, both “adorned” and “unadorned” [2], books [3], sacred textiles such as altar cloths and podeai [5], and lamps, candelabra, and other lighting devices [6]. There is no enumeration of the foundation’s landed properties, though there is a list of imperial chrysobulls and other official documents in the monastery’s cartulary of which eight are fully or partially preserved along with the inventory and the typikon. The Inventory asserts [7] that the monastery had no cash assets and was even laboring under the burden of debts imposed by a “capricious tax collector” on “pretext of some indebted Vlachs.”

Twenty-three monks sign the inventory with their names or marks, including the superior, the ecclesiarch, two ordained monks, the steward, the cellarer, a fisherman, two ox-team drivers, a tailor, and a beekeeper. This is considerably in excess of the ten monks set in the late eleventh century as a limit by the founder in (10) Eleousa [5].

FIFTEENTH CENTURY

Notes on the Introduction

1. For this provisional, still problematic dating, see Petit, “Notre-Dame,” p. 13, endorsed by Bompaire, “Catalogues,” p. 74. The document is dated Monday, February 10, in the twelfth indiction, yielding, according to Petit, the following possible dates: 1119, 1164, 1449, 1494, and 1539; the date of 1344 proposed by Omont, “Inventaire,” p. 312, is impossible; Laurent, “Recherches,” p. 23, followed by Miljković-Pepek, Veljusa, pp. 55–64, argues for 1164, with later interpolations such as the chrysobull of John III Doukas Vatatzes in [4].
2. See Omont, “Inventaire,” p. 309, and discussion in the note on the manuscript in (10) Eleousa.
3. According to Laurent, “Recherches,” p. 17, the area around Stroumitza had been under Serbian rule for sixty years (1334–94), then was conquered by the Turks.

Bibliography

- Bompaire, Jacques, “Les catalogues de livres-manuscrits d’époque byzantine (XIe–XVe s.),” in Byzance et les Slaves, Études de Civilisation: Mélanges Ivan Dujčev (Paris, 1979), 74.
- Miljković-Pepek, Č. P., Veljusa: Manastir Sv. Bogorodica Milostiva vo seloto Veljusa kraj Strumica (Skopje, 1981), pp. 55–64.
- Omont, H., “Inventaire du trésor et de la bibliothèque du monastère de Stroumitza,” in Mélanges Henri Weil (Paris, 1898), pp. 309–20.
- Laurent, Vitalien, “Recherches sur l’histoire et le cartulaire de Notre-Dame de Pitié à Stroumitsa,” EO 33 (1934), 5–27, esp. 15–23.
- Talbot, Alice-Mary, “Veljusa Monastery,” ODB, p. 2157.

Translation

The present list of the sacred vessels, both books and sacred offerings, liturgical cloths and all ecclesiastical effects of our holy monastery, namely, of the supremely holy Mother of God the Merciful, who is properly and quite truly supremely blessed, has been committed to writing by us, the monks, as will be indicated in the text.

1. The fathers have rightly prescribed by canon and handed down that each church’s belongings—the sacred vessels and liturgical cloths of the holy houses and monasteries, that is, places of meditation, and all other ecclesiastical effects for the performance of the divine eucharist and celebration of sacred rites—be indicated in a record book, which record book is called and was called and continues to be called the inventory in accordance with the language [of the fathers]. For, in fact, when the fathers had gathered together in Constantinople under the Patriarch Photios in the church of the holy and universally renowned Apostles, they stated that, “along with all its belongings, including that is, the church itself, the possessions of [the monastery] must be recorded in an inventory and be deposited in the archives of the bishopric. For, if anyone no longer can have authority over those very things that he gives as gifts to a human being, how will one be permitted to wrest [from God] [p. 115] the authority over the things that he consecrates to God and dedicates to him?”¹ So much for the first canon of the aforesaid council.

The seventy-fourth canon of the holy and universally renowned Apostles [says]: “Let no one any longer appropriate for his own use a consecrated gold or silver vessel or cloth, for this is unlawful. If anyone, however, should be detected [doing this], let him be punished with excommunication.”²

61. ELEOUSA INVENTORY

The twelfth canon of the Second Council at Nicaea [says]: “If any bishop or superior should be found alienating anything from the properties of the diocese or of the monastery into a civil official’s hand or surrendering them to another person, the surrendering is to be invalid according to the canon of the Holy Apostles, which says, ‘Let the bishop have care of all the ecclesiastical things and let him manage them as if God were observing; and he is not permitted to appropriate any of them or grant as gifts the things of God to his own relatives. If, however, they should be paupers, let him provide for them as paupers but let him not, on their pretext, sell off the things of the monastery.’³ If they should allege as an excuse that a field is creating a loss and does not happen to produce a profit, not even thus are they to give out the land to the civil authorities in the area but to clerics or to farmers. If, however, they should use wicked cunning and a civil official purchases the field from the cleric or the farmer, even thus the sale is to be invalid and [the property] is to be restored to the diocese or to the monastery. Let the bishop or the superior of the monastery who does this be expelled, the bishop from the episcopal office and the superior from the monastery, for wickedly dispersing the things that they have not collected.”⁴

The twenty-sixth canon of the Council at Carthage says: “Likewise we have resolved that no one is to sell any ecclesiastical property. If this property produces no profits and if there is a pressing need, this is to be made clear to the primate of the province and he is to consult with the prescribed number of bishops as to what he is to do. If, however, there should be such an emergency in the church as to render impossible a consultation prior to the sale, let the bishop call to witness at least those who are in the vicinity, taking care [p. 116] to point out to the council all the troubles that have occurred to his church. If he will not do this very thing, [the seller] shall be responsible to God and the synod and shall be deprived of his own office.”⁵

The seventh canon of Gregory of Nyssa [says] concerning sacrilege: “Sacrilege in the Old Testament was not at all to be tolerated with less than frightful condemnation. For likewise both he who had been caught for murder and he who had purloined the things that had been dedicated to God suffered punishment by stoning (cf. II Macc. 4:42; 13:6). On the basis of ecclesiastical custom I do not know how any accommodation and indulgence occurred so that a more tolerable cleansing from such an illness was considered. For the tradition of the fathers prescribed less time for punishment of [those who commit sacrilege] than for [those who commit] adultery.”⁶

The seventeenth regulation of the second title of the first book of the Codex [of Justinian] [says] that, “If movable things, apart from the sacred vessels, are available, the alienation and mortgaging of the necessary immovable and sacred properties ceases. The twenty-first regulation of the same title says that whoever purchases sacred vessels or liturgical cloths, except for the ransoming of prisoners, or accepts them for mortgaging or security, forfeits both the value [of the goods he received] and the debt [owed to him]; and these [goods] are reclaimed by the bishops and stewards and sacristans, even if [the items] have been melted down; or their [estimated] value is demanded back, even if they are not to be seen. Book eighteen, title one, regulation sixty-two says that whoever in ignorance purchases the sacred [property] as if it were private [property], even though the sale is invalid, nevertheless has a [legal] grievance against the seller for he should not have been deceived in a matter of vital interest to him. [Justinianic] Institutes twelve, title one, says that the sacred vessels are neither to be sold nor to be mortgaged except for the releasing of prisoners. The first regulation of the second title of the Novels [of Justinian]⁷ subjects to punishments those who pawn the sacred vessels contrary to the law or sell them or melt them down or alienate them except for the releasing of captives.”⁸

“The second regulation of the same title says that the sacred vessels of the church of Constantinople and of the houses of prayer, wherever they are situated, are not otherwise to be sold or to be mortgaged except for the release of prisoners. If, however, there should be many [p. 117] vessels that fulfill no necessary use, and it happens that some of the sacred houses are weighted down with debts and other movable possessions are not available to them from which they are bound to repay their debts, there will be permission—provided that the sale is constituted without fraud, the bishop alienating [the sacred property] with the authorization of the metropolitan and the metropolitan with the authorization of his own patriarch—to sell superfluous vessels to other holy houses that have need [of them] or to melt them down and sell them and to furnish their value for the debt, so that the immovable possessions may not be alienated. Book one, title eighteen, chapter thirteen says that the civil authorities are to seek out the sacrilegious. Book ten, title two, chapter four says that the heirs cannot divide among themselves the things that have been acquired from sacrilege.”⁹

“Book forty-eight, title four, chapter one, [says] that the crime of high treason is similar to that concerning sacrilege. Chapter seven [says that] the sacrilegious are punished in accordance with the nature of their sin.”¹⁰ “Regulation six [says that] the removal of personal monies from a sanctuary is not sacrilege but theft.”¹¹

“Book forty-eight, title thirteen, chapter seven [says that] the punishment of the sacrilegious is imposed, either more heavily or more lightly, according to the character of the persons and the sin and the time and the age and the nature. For some are turned over to wild animals; some are burned, some are impaled. A fitting punishment, however, is for him who commits sacrilege at night to be turned over to wild beasts, while he who commits a moderate sacrilege in daytime is condemned to the mines, whereas he who is a dignitary is exiled. Regulation eleven [says that] the sacrilegious are subject to capital punishment. Sacrilegious are those who rob the public churches, while those who rob private sanctuaries and the small churches that are unguarded are punished less than the sacrilegious but more than thieves. An outsider who robs the sanctuaries is subject to the crime of sacrilege, for he who has been entrusted with their guarding, even if he takes away something from them, is not subject to this law. Regulation twelve [says that] he who places a man in a casket and sets him down in a church [for healing purposes], if the latter comes out of the casket and steals some objects of the sanctuary, is to be exiled.”¹²

These chapters of the laws according to the sacred canons we have set down in the present Inventory for the purposes of deterring [p. 118] and arguing against those who intend perhaps to form designs upon the sacred vessels and other objects belonging to our most holy monastery that have been dedicated by our most blessed and most saintly father and founder and [by] some Christ-loving people for generations for the sake of commemoration upon their death.

2. When our most saintly father and founder built this monastery and consecrated to it the things that belong to it, he included the latter in an inventory for the identification of the things that belonged [to the monastery] and dedicated them to the Mother of God and made them known just as those who lived as monks in this monastery in a saintly manner and were consecrated to God told us. In the instant year, namely, the now current indiction

61. ELEOUSA INVENTORY

..... [lacuna in the text]

where, in fact, the strap of the aforementioned broken lamp was inserted.

A bronze icon [representing] the holy Mother of God seated with Child; it has a narrow silver-gilt frame. A silver-gilt-icon, monopetalos, [representing] three holy military saints depicted in profile (?),¹³ standing, with a frame that has busts of various saints. An icon of the Mother of God, painted on wood, that has a narrow halo and a narrow silver-gilt frame without images. Another icon [representing] the Mother of God seated, made of steatite,¹⁴ with a narrow silver frame without images. A large icon [representing] the supremely holy Mother of God standing, with the Child smiling (?) [p. 119] at her breast;¹⁵ it has two enameled, silver-gilt haloes. A large banner icon:¹⁶ a bust of the Mother of God with Child, painted on wood; it has two silver haloes without an overlay of gold. An icon of the Mother of God with Child, standing, one cubit high; it has two silver haloes. The foregoing are the sacred adorned icons of various saints that we have found.

There are also the following unadorned icons, namely: an icon of the supremely holy Mother of God the intercessor, unadorned, a cubit high, that stands near the icon of the Mother of God the Merciful set out for veneration. Another icon, a cubit high, [representing the Entrance of the Virgin into the] Holy of Holies. Another icon, a cubit high, [representing] the Dormition of the Mother of God. An icon, a cubit high, of the Mother of God, seated, that has also [a picture of] the founder. An icon, a cubit high, of the three martyrs, Manuel, Sabel, and Ismael.¹⁷ An icon of St. Nicholas standing; this too has [a picture of] the founder. Large icon, four spans high, that has three standing persons: Christ and Peter and Paul and around them various busts. Above the templon, there stand icons, busts [of] the Savior, a cubit high, [St. John] the Forerunner, likewise a cubit high, St. Peter, three spans high, [St. John] Chrysostom, standing, a cubit high. Another icon, of St. Auxentios together with St. Stephen the Younger, a cubit high. An icon triptych: the one panel, that is, the middle one, has the holy Crucifixion, while the other two have the Dormition of the Mother of God, the holy Resurrection, the Ascension, and the Nativity. Another icon, a bust of Emmanuel, the Savior. [Another] icon, [representing] the Deesis on a single panel. Another, which has wings, [representing] the holy Forty [Martyrs]. A large icon with wings, [representing] the Second Coming. [Another] icon, small busts of the holy Anargyroi, on one panel. Another [icon], a bust of St. Demetrios, one pseudo-cubit high, likewise also another small one. [Another], a bust of [St. John] Chrysostom, one pseudo-cubit high. Two new icons, [p. 120] joined, Christ and the Mother of God, a span high. A small icon, of gilded bronze, [representing] St. Menas. Three icons on one board, a cubit high, of St. Eleutherios, John Chrysostom, and St. Blasios. A bronze shield like icon,¹⁸ a bust of the Savior. There is also an icon that by error we have overlooked to include above with the rest of the adorned icons, which is St. [lacuna in the text]

We have found also a case for the precious wood [of the Holy Cross], with decoration in the old [style], which has its cover and is a span in length, having inside a circular, thick, short cross without precious wood, and inside the case it has Sts. Constantine and Helena depicted in the old [style] crudely.¹⁹ So much about the holy icons that have been found without adornments.

FIFTEENTH CENTURY

3. As for the holy books we found, they are as follows:

Among the first, a large holy Gospel lectionary which has inside the four Evangelists in color with gold nimbuses (?)²⁰ and gold initial letters and decorations, covered with bright white silk cloth, having silver-gilt decoration. [It has] on the one cover in the middle Christ crucified and likewise in the shape of a cross the four Evangelists, standing, and at their edge round busts and a corresponding number of white silver nails that keep the aforesaid images nailed to the cover, while on the other cover of the same Gospel there is a cross and silver-gilt gamma ornaments and no images, likewise a pair of silver clasps²¹ entwined with silk.

Another Gospel lectionary for the entire year appropriate for every day. It is large with an old multicolored bright silk [cover], and it too has silver-gilt ornaments, that is, in the middle of the one cover it has a cross, an image of the Crucifixion, and four gamma ornaments, and the four Evangelists, and at their edge [p. 121] busts [of saints] and clasps and silver nails.

Another Gospel lectionary [covered] with silk cloth of the highest quality,²² having a cross and four silver-white gamma ornaments, plain, without saints.

Another Gospel lectionary in uncials²³ [covered] with silk cloth of the highest quality, small, it too having as ornament a cross and silver gamma ornaments, plain, white.

Two books: the four Gospels, written in minuscule;²⁴ two Euchologia, written in minuscule, and another one written in uncials. Two books of "The Ladder" [by John Klimakos]. Two books for funeral services. Two other books containing the [Gospel of] Matthew, one small and one large; the small one is of paper. A Schematologion. One Nomocanon written in uncials. Two books, a half Oktoechos, with two canons. One Apostolos for every day of the year. Another book [with] selections from the apostolic epistles.

Two books, [containing readings] from the Prophetes for the office. A Praxapostolos with gold-lettered initials, that is, a commentary on the [Acts and Epistles of the] Evangelist John.²⁵ A Panegyrikon of Gregory the Theologian; the initials and titles are in gold letters; it is covered with bright white silk cloth without ornaments. Synaxarion containing the lives of the saints for each day of the whole year. Another regular Synaxarion, for the office that is sung. One large psalter, written in minuscule on parchment and paper, written in thick letters, beautifully written. Three other small Psalters. Two other half Psalters. Another Psalter, on paper, with commentary. Two large books, Sticheraria, one of them for the [Great] Lent. Another small Sticherarion for the [Great] Lent. Four Menaia for the whole year. Two large Parakletikai Oktoekhoi for the daily office, divided, but counted as one [book]. One Triodion, in good condition, complete.

A book [containing] the great Nomokanon, both ecclesiastical and civil laws, not lacking any of the synodal regulations and being equal in its contents with that which is kept in the Great Church of Constantinople.²⁶ Another book, a lectionary, Panegyrikon, beginning from the month of September up to [the feast of] St. Stephen the Younger. Likewise another book, [p. 122] beginning from the month of October and ending with [the feast of] St. Prokopios. Another [book], beginning from [the feast of] St. Stephen the Younger and ending with [that of] St. Martin. Another book, by [Symeon] Metaphrastes, beginning from the month of October up to the end [of that month]. Another book of The Statues by [St. John] Chrysostom. Another book, beginning from the month of January up to the end [of that month]. A book of [St. John] Chrysostom, on the acts of the patriarchs, that is, Abraham, Isaac, and Jacob, which those who are ignorant call "The Hexameros." Another [book], the Ascetic Treatises of St. Basil. Another book, a Panegyrikon, beginning on the thirtieth of the month of November and ending with the [feast of] the Holy Innocents.²⁷ Another [book], beginning with April and ending with the [feast of the holy] martyr Basil. Another [book] beginning from the sixth of December up to [the feast of] St. Panteleëmon. A book of paper, leather-bound, a Panegyrikon of [Symeon] Metaphrastes. A book of the works of [Pseudo-] Clement. Another book of St. Ephraem, and another of St. Dorotheos. A book in paper called "Melissa,"²⁸ and another Melissa in parchment, which the magistrate Theodore from Stipi possesses. One book, a Paterikon. One book, [containing the] Heirmologion. Two kontakaria. One book, in paper, [containing] the troparia sung during matins. One Horologion, in paper, belonging to the founder. One book, for the month of October, in good condition. So much regarding the books of the monastery.

61. ELEOUSA INVENTORY

4. The property titles are as follows: Two chrysobulls of the celebrated emperor, Lord Alexios [I Komnenos (1081–18)].²⁹ Another prostagma of the celebrated emperor, Lord John [II Komnenos (1118–43)].³⁰ A prostagma of our most mighty and Born-in-the-Purple Lord Manuel [I] Komnenos (1143–80), that prescribes concerning the dependent peasants and the land.³¹ Another prostagma of the aforesaid concerning the donation for the salvation of his soul.³² Another prostaxis of his holy majesty concerning the children of such dependent peasants.³³ Another prostaxis, of his majesty confirming all the rights of the monastery.³⁴ Act of the transfer of the dependent peasants and the land.³⁵ Another [act of] transfer regarding the delimitation of the land [where] our monastery is situated.³⁶ Another act regarding Mostanitzia.³⁷ [p. 123]

Another act [regarding] the dependency of the holy Anargyroi.³⁸ Two memoranda of the most holy and ever-memorable archbishops of all Bulgaria, lord Leo the Philosopher, and lord John Komnenos.³⁹ Another memorandum, or rather a juridical decision, of the aforesaid ever memorable archbishop, the monk John Komnenos, confirmed and sealed by him, making clear the independence of the monastery, that is to say, the fact that it is to be outside of all control and beyond covetous authority.⁴⁰ Another chrysobull of our mighty and holy emperor, Lord John [III] Doukas [Vatazes] (1222–1254).⁴¹ Another prostagma of this holy majesty. Another, a *sigillidion*⁴² of the much-beloved nephew of our mighty and holy emperor, lord Constantine Komnenos Tornikes.⁴³ So much concerning such titles.

5. The sacred liturgical cloths and other altar-cloths and silk cloths are the following, namely: Three altar-cloths, the one a silk cloth with an ornamental design of forty bands (?),⁴⁴ which has in the middle the image of [emperor John] Tzimiskes (969–976). Another, more elaborately wrought, a silk cloth, which has six lions; and the other, a silk cloth of the highest quality, which is delicately embroidered.⁴⁵ These are the altar cloths.

Eleven podeai, namely icon hangings for the feast days: the one that is gold-sprinkled, and four [made] of silk cloth of the highest quality, that are white; two other, ordinary ones, that are violet-purple,⁴⁶ two others, that are scarlet with gold-sprinkled parrots; another, narthekote,⁴⁷ having Christ in the middle and the holy Apostles in a circle; and the other, of silk cloth of yellow background, with a fine design. While these are for the feast days, there are six old ones for everyday use, and one large podea, embroidered with a lentil design. Along with these there are two pairs of paten and chalice veils; six genuine fans;⁴⁸ two koukoula,⁴⁹ and another of red silk. The foregoing are indeed the sacred coverings or silk cloths.

FIFTEENTH CENTURY

6. As regards lighting devices,⁵⁰ however, that is, candlestands⁵¹ and *lamnai*⁵² and large candelabra⁵³ and basket-shaped lamps⁵⁴ of cast bronze, they are as follows. Two large and long lamnai.⁵⁵ Two arched candlestands for the icons set out for veneration.⁵⁶ One large candelabrum with six candleholders [p. 124] made of elektron.⁵⁷ Two thin and long candelabra of [the same type made of] elektron. Two identical candelabra for the entrance.⁵⁸ Big and small basket-shaped lamps with their suspending chains, these, too, of elektron. There are ten chains for these basket-shaped lamps and [there are] also another two short chains. Another deep basket-shaped lamp with incised work and bronze overlay. Two bronze censers and three bronze standing censers.⁵⁹ Two white sets of vestments and one purple.

7. The foregoing are the things that have been found at hand, before God as witness, in our church and the sacristy at the close examination conducted by us, the monks, as stated above. Beyond these things that are indicated in the present register, no other kind of thing was found or coin, whether of imperial stamp or any other of whatsoever sort, even so much as one gellion or hyperperon, as God is [our] witness. Rather we had even debts up to thirty gellia because of a tax collector's extraordinary requisition on pretext of indebted Vlachs, the lord George Tetragonites⁶⁰ acting as tax collector during the tenth indiction before the last. For this reason, in fact, we revealed and mentioned these things in support of the innocence of us monks. If, however, we perhaps have not spoken the truth but have given a contrived account of these debts or have concealed any of the things that belong to the monastery, we shall be accountable to the judgment that is to come for having lied. For this reason, indeed, with our own hand we have affixed our signature and sign, each of us, the monks of our monastery who are at hand, for the confirmation of this register.

We are the following:

- + I, Nephon, the monk, and ecclesiarch, have signed
- + I, the lowly ordained monk, Clement, have signed
- + I, the lowly ordained monk, Hilarion, have signed
- + I, Ignatios, monk, have signed
- + I, Theodosios, monk, who am from afar, have signed
- + I, the monk Barnabas, have signed
- + I, too, Gerasimos, monk, have signed
- + I, too, Chariton, monk, have signed
- + I, Ioannikios, monk, have signed

Sign [affixed] by Nephon the steward

Sign [affixed] by Nikon, monk, the Theban [p. 125]

Sign [affixed] by Nikon, monk, the nephew of Pter[. . .

61. ELEOUSA INVENTORY

Sign [affixed] by Joachim, monk, the fisherman

Sign [affixed] by Neophytos, monk

Sign [affixed] by Leo, monk

Sign [affixed] by Iakobos, monk, the tailor

Sign [affixed] by [the] monk Dositheos

Sign [affixed] by Ioannikios, monk, the teamster

Sign [affixed] by Laurentios, monk, the cellarer

Sign [affixed] by Gerontios, monk, the member of the dependency

Sign [affixed] by Barlaam, monk, the teamster

Sign [affixed] by Kallinikos, monk, the beekeeper

I, Meletios, the lowly monk and superior of the monastery of the supremely holy Mother of God the Merciful, with my own hand, have signed.

8. + In the month of February, the tenth, on Monday, in the twelfth indiction, in the presence of the most God-revering clerics of our most holy bishopric, the monk papa Constantine the Thracian, John Kyparissiotēs, priest and deutereuon, Presbyteros the priest and nephew of Soterichos (?),⁶¹ John the most devout archdeacon and acting trustee, and others, the present Inventory was brought to us by the most honorable monks of the supremely holy Mother of God the Merciful and the most honorable lord Meletios, the superior, and the monks under him, who had set it forth, and this Inventory was acknowledged by them to have been made in accordance with the testamentary instruction of the founder of blessed memory of their most holy monastery, namely, that they make a close examination of the things that belong to it, whenever a superior is appointed. Accordingly, when the leadership of the monastery fell to the above-mentioned monk, Meletios, since an inventory was not found in their monastery, the present Inventory was made, and, as a result of their request, it was signed also by us in order that it might carry self-credibility, in the aforewritten month and indiction. +++

The lowly bishop of Stroumitza, Clement, monk +

Notes on the Translation

1. C. Const. I et II (861), c. 1 (R&P 2.649).
2. Canones apostolorum, c. 73 (not 74), (= R&P 2.93).
3. Canones apostolorum, c. 38 (= R&P 2.52).
4. C. Nicaean. II (787), c. 12 (R&P 2.592–93).
5. C. Carth. (419), c. 26 (R&P 3.372).
6. Gregory of Nyssa, Canon 8 (not 7) (R&P 4.328).
7. JN 120.10.
8. This long quotation is from Nomokanon 2.2 (R&P 1.108).
9. Nomokanon 2.2 (R&P 1.109).

FIFTEENTH CENTURY

10. Nomokanon 2.2 (R&P 1.110).
11. Nomokanon 2.2 (R&P 1.111).
12. Nomokanon 2.2 (R&P 1.112–13).
13. grammistoi; for grammistos as synonymous with katagraptos, “drawn in profile,” see Petit, “Notre-Dame,” p. 129. The meaning of monopelos is unclear.
14. lithos amiantos.
15. enkardion eulalaton; eulalaton is not in the dictionaries. It may be synonymous with eulalon, “smiling,” “having a fair expression.” See Kriaras, Lexiko, s. vv. eulalos and eulaleton (attested only as an adverb). Petit, who believes that enkardion stands here for enkolpion, prefers to read euelaton and translates “medaillon bien laminé.” See “Notre-Dame,” p. 130.
16. signon; icon attached to or represented on a banner used in a procession. See Petit, “Notre-Dame,” p. 131, and (28) Pantokrator, [25], [30], [31].
17. According to Petit (“Notre-Dame,” p. 132), these obscure saints, who were put to death in Chalcedon during the reign of Julian (361–363), continued to enjoy a widespread cult in Macedonia at the end of the 19th century.
18. skoutarion; for which, see Petit, “Notre-Dame,” p. 133.
19. atechna = “crudely”?
20. chrysopetala; for a tentative translation of this term, see (23) Pakourianos, note 42 to Translation.
21. tzinotheka; not in the dictionaries but see Petit, “Notre-Dame,” p. 134.
22. katablattion; Petit (“Notre-Dame,” p. 136) defines katablattion as silk cloth of “dark purple color” and Kriaras (Lexiko, s.v. blattin) as “all-purple” silk cloth. However, the listing in chapter 5 of this Inventory of four “white” podeai made of katablattion clearly shows that this term denotes not the color but the quality of the fabric. Since blattion meant silk cloth, regardless of color, after the 10th century (cf. A Gonosovà, “Blattion,” ODB, p. 296), the term katablattion must have been used for silk cloth of the highest quality.
23. litogramma; see Petit, “Notre-Dame,” p. 134, and (19) Attaleiates, [Inv. 7] and [Inv. 17].
24. monokaira; see Petit, “Notre-Dame,” p. 136, and (19) Attaleiates, [Inv. 7].
25. On the apocryphal acts of St. John, see E. Junod and J.-D. Kaestli, L’histoire des Actes apocryphes des apôtres du III^e au IX^e siècle: Le cas des Actes de Jean (Geneva-Lausanne-Neuchâtel, 1982).
26. For this work, see Beck, KTL, p. 146, and Andreas Schminck, “Nomokanon of Fourteen Titles,” ODB, p. 1491.
27. The commemoration on 29 December of the children of Bethlehem slain by Herod after he had been told by the magi of the birth of Christ (Matt. 2:16–19). Since the Panegyrikon ended with this feast, it must have started with November, not December thirtieth, as the edition reads.
28. Lit. “Bee.” A collection of quotations from the works of ecclesiastical and secular authors. See E. M. Jeffreys and A. Kazhdan, “Melissa,” ODB, p. 1335.
29. Dölger, Regesten, nos. 1124, 1231, ed. Petit, “Notre-Dame,” docs. 1–3, pp. 25–27, 28–30.
30. Dölger, Regesten, no. 1328, cf. Petit, “Notre-Dame,” p. 30.
31. Dölger, Regesten, no. 1385, ed. Petit, “Notre-Dame,” doc. 4, p. 31 = doc. 8, pp. 36–37.
32. Dölger, Regesten, no. 1437, ed. Petit, “Notre-Dame,” doc. 5, pp. 31–32.
33. Dölger, Regesten, no. 1409, ed. Petit, “Notre-Dame,” doc. 6, pp. 32–35.
34. Dölger, Regesten, no. 1337, ed. Petit, “Notre-Dame,” doc. 7, p. 33.
35. Possibly the Pittakion, ed. Petit, “Notre-Dame,” doc. 8, pp. 34–46.
36. Not extant.
37. Not extant.
38. Not extant.
39. Not extant.
40. Not extant.
41. Neither the chrysobull nor the edict is extant or listed in Dölger, Regesten.
42. Not extant.

61. ELEOUSA INVENTORY

43. Constantine Tornikes (d. ca. 1275) who was megas primikerios under John III Doukas Vatatzes and sebastokrator under Michael VIII Palaiologos. See G. Schmalzbauer, “Die Tornikioi in der Palaiologenzeit,” JÖB 18 (1969), 117–19.
44. tessaraktasemos; not in the dictionaries. Koukoules (BBP, vol. 2.2, p. 41) cites the term platysemos in reference to silk cloth with “an inwoven pattern of large bands.”
45. leptoexomplios; for the meaning of exomplion, see Koukoules, BBP, vol. 2.2, p. 41.
46. oxykaistorai; on this term, see (23) Pakourianos, p. 559, n. 50.
47. Fabric named after a type of reed (nartheki) used as a tool in weaving it so as to achieve the effect of loops on the surface of the cloth. See Koukoules, BBP, vol. 6, pp. 291–92.
48. flamoula; Danica Lecco (= P. Lemerle, Cinq études sur le XI^e siècle byzantin [Paris, 1977], p. 26) identifies flamoulon with ripidion. The latter is a fan with which the deacon fans the oblation; see Lampe, PGL, s.v.
49. The fact that these koukoula are listed with other furnishings of the church and that among them is found one made of “red silk” indicates that they were not monastic cowls (koukoulia) but some kind of cover for sacred vessels or icons(?).
50. manoualia: for which see L. Bouras, “Byzantine Lighting Devices,” JÖB 32. 3 (1982), pp. 480, 487, n. 22.
51. kerostatai.
52. lamnai: metal beams with candleholders used over the templon and icon frames. See Bouras, “Byzantine Lighting Devices,” p. 480.
53. statareai: see Bouras, “Byzantine Lighting Devices,” p. 480.
54. kaniskia: see Bouras, “Byzantine Lighting Devices,” p. 479.
55. See n. 52 above.
56. kamarai: arched metal strips with candleholders. See Bouras, “Byzantine Lighting Devices,” p. 480.
57. statarea elektros: It is not certain that the reference is to the alloy of silver and gold known as electrum. According to a glossary in a 14th-century manuscript cited by Petit (“Notre-Dame,” p. 147), elektron was either “pure bronze or another type of gold mixed with glass and stones.” For a similar definition of elektron, see Demetrakos, Lexikon, s.v. allotypos.
58. manoualia: see n. 50 above.
59. On the katzion, see L. Ph. Bouras and A. Kazhdan, “Censer,” ODB, p. 397.
60. Otherwise unknown; see E. Trapp, PLP, no. 27597.
61. Edition reads: Presbyterou hiereos tou tou Soterichou; the second tou may here be a scribal error in which case we should translate “the priest Presbyteros Soterichos.” In PLP, no. 23732, Presbyteros is listed as the son of Soterichos.

Document Notes

- [1] Civil and canon law requirements for an inventory. For the obligation to have an inventory, see also (35) Skoteine [24]; cf. (10) Eleousa [18].
- [2] List of icons. See also similar lists in (19) Attaleiates [INV 5]; (23) Pakourianos [33B]; (35) Skoteine [26], [45]; and (48) Prodromos [14].
- [3] List of books. See also similar lists in (19) Attaleiates [INV 7], [INV 12] ff.; (23) Pakourianos [33B]; (35) Skoteine [24], [27], [28], [42]; (45) Neophytos [12], (48) Prodromos [14], and (54) Neilos Damilas [INV].
- [4] List of property titles. See (23) Pakourianos [33D], [33E] and also inventories of landed properties in (19) Attaleiates [INV 9]; (27) Kecharitomene, Appendix A; (28) Pantokrator [65], [66]; (35) Skoteine [31], [32], [33], [34], [35], [36], [37], [38], [41], [43]; (37) Auxentios (Missing); (39) Lips [44] ff.; and (57) Bebaia Elpis [121] ff.
- [5] List of sacred textiles. See also similar lists in (19) Attaleiates [INV 8], [INV 18]; (23) Pakourianos [33B]; (31) Areia [T11]; (35) Skoteine [25], [28], cf. [45]; and (48) Prodromos [14].
- [6] List of lighting devices. See also similar lists in (23) Pakourianos [33B] and (35) Skoteine [25].

FIFTEENTH CENTURY

- [7] Statement of no cash assets; signatures. For not storing up wealth in the monastery, see also (3) Theodore Studites [21] and (37) Auxentios [9].
- [8] Certification by Clement, bishop of Stroumitza. For other episcopal confirmations of the documents in our collection, see (10) Eleousa [22], (34) Machairas [18], (45) Neophytos [22], (50) Gerasimos [5], and (51) Koutloumousi [A16], [B21], [C12]; cf. (25) Fragala [A12], [B12], [C5].

Glossary

This glossary contains the following: 1) transliterated terms not translated or identified in the translations in this collection; 2) transliterated terms that have been identified but occur more than once in the translations; and 3) certain English terms requiring extended definitions.

- abba(s)/apa* (“father”) title of respect, especially for prominent or older monks
- Acheiropoietos* miraculous icon of the Virgin Mary “not made by hands”
- aer* the largest of three liturgical veils used to cover the chalice and paten
- aerikon* supplementary fiscal levy on a village; fine for a felony
- ainoi* laudatory hymns containing the phrase “praise the Lord”
- Akathistos* anonymous hymn of twenty-four stanzas dedicated to the Virgin Mary and sung during the fifth week of the Great Lent while the congregation stands
- akedia* state of boredom and spiritual lethargy afflicting monks, especially solitaries
- almaia* cabbage preserved in brine and vinegar
- Anargyroi SS Kosmas and Damian, the most renowned of the healing saints who received no payment for their services (feast day: 1 November and 1 July)
- anthypatos* title conferred on high administrative officials
- antikaniskon* monetary payment in order to avoid the obligation of kaniskon (q.v.)
- antimitatikion* payment in order to avoid the obligation of providing lodging for troops
- antiphon (antiphonon) verses from the Psalter sung alternately by two choirs in the liturgy and the offices
- Antiphonetes* epithet of Christ who gave his life as “surety” for the salvation of mankind
- Antiphonetria* epithet of the Virgin Mary stressing her role as intercessor
- aplekton* the obligation to provide lodging for troops
- Apodeipnon, Mega* liturgical book containing the office of the Great Compline sung during Lent
- apokrisiarios* personal representative of an ecclesiastical authority; envoy of the emperor
- apostolikai* monks of the apostolikon schema (q.v.)
- apostolikon schema* intermediate monastic rank between those of martyr and angel
- Apostolos* liturgical book containing lections from the Acts and the Epistles of the apostles used during the liturgy
- archimandrite superior of a large monastery or group of monasteries
- Artzibourians Monophysite Armenians who fasted on Wednesday and Friday of the first week of the Triodion (the three-week period preceding the Great Lent). Byzantine polemicists derided this practice, claiming that it honored the memory of Artzibourion (or Artzibourios), the favorite dog of Armenian teacher and holy man St. Sergios
- asekretissa* wife of an imperial secretary

Glossary

- aspron* term used for various silver coins in the 14th–15th c.
- aspron, nomisma trachy* term applied mainly to the billon and occasionally to the electrum trachy (q.v.)
- asteriskos* crossed metal bars supporting the veil that protects the paten containing the eucharistic bread
- aule* group of buildings in a courtyard surrounded by walls
- autokrator* absolute ruler; title of the emperor
- basileus*; f. basilissa emperor; empress
- Bebaia Elpis* (epithet of the Virgin Mary) “sure hope”
- caesar* title conferred on members of the imperial family under the Komnenoi
- caesarissa* wife of a caesar (q.v.)
- canon (kanon) liturgical hymn divided into nine odes, each of which consists of several stanzas
- Catechesis* sermon with instructions for the monks; book containing such sermons
- charistikarios* private individual who was granted the administration of a monastery
- chartoularios* official of a bureau with fiscal and archival duties; in the 11th c. the term could also designate a commander on the field
- Cheesefare, week of (hebdomas tes tyrophagou / Tyrine) week immediately preceding the beginning of the Great Lent, during which cheese might still be eaten
- chiaton nomisma* (lit. “nomisma with a X”) At the end of the 11th c. the term designated a hyperpyron (q.v.) of Alexios I (1081–1118) showing on the obverse the abbreviation $\overline{\text{IC}}/\overline{\text{XC}}$ (Jesus Christ)
- choros* large polygonal structure suspended from the dome of a church and carrying several lamps and small chandeliers
- chrysebull (chrysoboullon) document bearing the emperor’s gold seal (bullā)
- closure of a feast (apodosis) the day on which the prescribed period for the celebration of a feast ends
- Deesis* icon representing the Virgin Mary and John the Baptist standing on either side of Christ with their hands extended toward him
- despoina* (lit. “lady,” “mistress”) epithet of the Virgin Mary; title of the empress
- deutereuon* title of a priest who could act as a vicar for a protopresbyteros (senior priest) in the latter’s absence
- dikaiophylax* (of the Great Church) patriarchal official acting as judge in cases of an ecclesiastical nature
- dishypatos* title conferred on judges and administrative officials
- domestikos of the themes* official connected with the financial administration of the themes
- domestikos ton scholon* commander of the army
- doulos* (lit. “slave”) honorific title designating close association with the emperor
- doux* military commander of a large district

Glossary

- dromos* department of official post and transportation
- droungarios* a military officer of low rank
- droungarokometes* holder of the combined military office of droungarios (q.v.) and komes (a subaltern officer)
- ducat (doukaton) silver coin worth 1/12 of the hyperpyron (q.v.) in the 14th c.
- eidikos* head of the imperial treasury
- ekphrasis* description of a work of art
- ektenes / ektene* type of prolonged and fervent litany consisting of supplications and responses
- Eleousa* (epithet of the Virgin Mary) “merciful”
- emphyteusis* long-term lease of ecclesiastical lands
- enkainia* (lit. “inauguration”) feast held on the first Sunday after Easter to celebrate the beginning of a new life in Christ
- enkolpion* cross or small icon worn around the neck
- Entry of the Virgin into the Temple, or Feast of the Holy of Holies (Eisodia / Hagia ton Hagion) Presentation of the Virgin in the Temple (21 November)
- eparch (eparchos) governor of Constantinople
- epeixis* unidentified imperial revenue
- ephoreia* office of the ephoros (q.v.)
- ephoros* protector or guardian of a monastery
- epidosis* concession of an ecclesiastical institution from one ecclesiastical authority to another
- epimanikia* ornamental cuffs worn over the sleeves of a bishop’s alb
- episkepsis* property held by the emperor
- epi ton hippodromon* synonymous (?) with epi tou hippodromou, i.e., judge of a tribunal that met at the Hippodrome
- epi ton oikeiakon* head of the imperial private treasury
- epi tou kanikleiou* private secretary of the emperor and influential official
- epi tou stratou* high-ranking officer whose duty was to select the place where the army set up camp while on campaign
- epitaphios hymnos* funerary hymn
- epitrachelion* liturgical stole worn by priests and bishops
- esomonites* (“internal monk”) resident recipient of a living allowance
- Euchologion* liturgical book containing prayers for all services
- eukraton* beverage prepared from pepper, cumin, and anise by infusion with boiling water
- eulogetarion* short hymn that follows the recitation of the versicle “Blessed art Thou, O Lord”
- Evergetis* (epithet of the Virgin Mary) “benefactress”
- exagion* weight measure equivalent to 4.44 g. However, the use of this term in the typika indicates a larger measure
- exaposteilarion* hymn sung at the end of matins
- exomonites* (“external monk”) non-resident recipient of a living allowance

Glossary

- Fast of St. Philip from the day after the commemoration of St. Philip, 14 November through 24 December
- Fast of the Dormition of the Virgin Mary from 1 through 14 August
- Fast of the Holy Apostles from the Sunday of All Saints (first Sunday after Pentecost) through 28 June
- Feasts of the Lord (despotikai heortai) feasts in honor of Christ. Together with the feasts of the Virgin Mary, the apostles Peter and Paul and St. John the Baptist, they form the Great Feasts (megalai heortai), i.e., Birth of the Virgin (8 September), Exaltation of the Cross (14 September), Presentation of the Virgin in the Temple (21 November), Nativity (25 December), Epiphany (6 January), Presentation of Christ in the Temple (2 February), Annunciation (25 March), Birth of St. John the Baptist (24 June), SS Peter and Paul (29 June), Transfiguration (6 August), Dormition of the Virgin (15 August), Beheading of St. John the Baptist (29 August), and the mobile feasts of Easter (Palm Sunday, Crucifixion, Resurrection, Ascension, Pentecost)
- follis* unit of account equal to 1/288th of the standard nomisma (q.v.)
- gammata* ornaments in the form of the Greek letter gamma, indicative of the number three and hence a symbol of the Trinity
- gellion* unidentified coin, probably Italian
- Gerontikon* book containing the sayings and deeds of the early ascetics
- Gorgoepekoos* epithet of the Virgin Mary, “who listens and responds swiftly to a prayer”
- graptai* title of four elderly women tending the church of the Theotokos Eleousa at the Pantokrator monastery
- grosso* Venetian silver coin of small value
- gruel (groute) plain or roasted flour mixed with hot water
- hagiogeorgaton, nomisma* electrum trachy (q.v.) showing on the reverse the emperor John II Komnenos (1118–43) and St. George
- Heirmologion* liturgical book with or without musical notation, containing model stanzas on which the melody and rhythm of the odes of various canons are based
- Heortologion* book listing the feasts of the church accompanied by brief biographies of the commemorated saints
- heroon* funerary chapel dedicated to St. Michael at the Pantokrator monastery
- hetoimasia* icon representing the prepared throne for Christ’s Second Coming
- Hexameros* title given to the homilies of Basil of Caesarea on the six days of Creation in Genesis I and often to John Chrysostom’s 67 homilies on Genesis
- hexagion* see exagion
- hexapterygon* metal disk with a representation of the six-winged Serapheim carried on a pole during a religious procession
- hippodromou, krites tou* judge of a tribunal that met at the hippodrome
- Hodegetria* precious icon of the Virgin attributed to St. Luke and kept at the Hodegon monastery in Constantinople

Glossary

- holokotanon, stamenon* standard gold coin
- horeiarios* official in charge of the state granaries
- Horologion* liturgical book containing the daily offices: mesonyktikon (midnight office), orthros (matins), horai (first, third, sixth and ninth hours), hesperinos (vespers) and apodeipnon (compline)
- hypakoe* hymn sung after a eulogetarion (q.v.) during matins on Sundays and feast days
- hyperpyron* the standard gold coin from the late 11th c. onward
- hyperpyros litra* a litra (q.v.) of gold or 72 gold coins
- hypertimon* increase of estimated tax
- hypertimos* honorary title of a metropolitan
- idiomelon sticheron* (q.v.) that has its own melody and rhythm
- idiorythmism (idiorythmia, “self-regulation”) monastic regime permitting monks to acquire property through their own labor, sleep and eat in their own cells, and be governed by an elected council of monks instead of a superior
- imposed guest (katapemptos) guest sent to the monastery by an outside authority
- ithmos* (= ethmos, lit. “strainer”) perforated (?) metal cover for the communion chalice
- kaballarios* (“knight”/ “cavalryman”) low-ranking dignitary
- kaniskion* (lit. “small basket”) donation in kind to landlords and state officials; gift for admission to monastery
- kanonikon* tax imposed on monasteries for the maintenance of the local bishop
- kaprilingas (camerlengus)* chief financial officer at the court of Roger I (1071–1101) of Sicily
- kastrision* unidentified term describing a kind of silk cloth
- kastrisios* (= kastresios) courtier in charge of the emperor’s quarters
- kastron* fortified settlement; town
- katechoumena / katechoumeneia* gallery in the triforium of a church
- katepanikion* small administrative unit from the 12th c. onward
- katepano* governor of a large province in the 11th c.; local official from the 12th c. onward
- kathisma* subdivision of the Psalter; hymn during the singing of which sitting is permitted
- katovlia* unidentified part of a reliquary
- Kecharitomene* (epithet of the Virgin Mary) “full of grace”
- kellion* monastic cell in the vicinity of a cenobitic monastery occupied by a kelliotes (q.v.); small monastery
- kelliotes* monk living alone or with a companion in the vicinity of a cenobitic monastery that he would visit for purposes of worship and from which he received his weekly supplies
- kentarchos* commander of a hundred men in the army or fleet
- kentemata* embroidery-like signs preceding the name of a feast day in the monastic calendar to indicate either a minor feast or one for which a fast is prescribed
- kentenarion* 100 litrai (q.v.); often used in reference to gold or gold coins

Glossary

- klimakes* term describing three hospices built by Pakourianos
- kokkion* unit of account equal to 1/24th of the standard nomisma (q.v.); unidentified large measurement of surface
- kollyba* boiled wheat mixed with raisins, pomegranate seeds, herbs and a sprinkling of roasted flour and sugar, served after a memorial service
- komodromikion* secondary tax, consisting of the obligation to provide army blacksmiths with nails and horseshoes
- Kontakarion* liturgical book containing a collection of kontakia (q.v.)
- kontakion* liturgical hymn in honor of a saint or a feast
- Kosmosoteira* (epithet of the Virgin Mary) “savior of the world”
- koudai* unidentified participants in a religious procession, probably the “rear guards” (?) (from Italian, coda)
- kouropalates* title granted to generals in the 11th c. (but not a high-ranking dignity from the 12th c. onward)
- koutroubin* type of commercial boat
- kraktai* professional chanters
- kyklion* term designating a building erected by Attaleiates to serve as a hostel
- Kyrie eleison* liturgical prayer “God have mercy”
-
- lamna* metal beam with candleholders used over icon frames and the sanctuary screen
- lamplighting, office of (lychnikon) first part of vespers when the lamps are lit in the evening
- laosynaktes* monastic official in charge of maintaining order in the church
- lavra* monastery consisting of dispersed individual cells and a community center for assembling on weekends
- Lent, Great (megale tessarakoste) forty-day period of fasting and penitence preceding Holy Week (i.e., the week before Easter)
- lepton* surface measurement equal to 1 square orgyia (= square with sides of 2.10 m)
- libellikon* reduced land tax paid by individuals or monasteries to whom the state ceded lands whose tax-paying owners had disappeared
- libellos* document connected with the assignment to a private individual or monastery of real property in a village commune on which taxes had ceased to be paid
- litra* measure of weight varying from 319 g to 324 g
- logariastes* financial official serving as comptroller in various departments
- Logos* (epithet of Christ) “the Word of God”
- logothetes* chief of a government bureau; patriarchal official acting as the patriarch’s representative and spokesman
- logothetes, genikos* head of the fiscal department dealing with the assessment and collection of taxes
- logothetes stratiotikos* high-ranking official dealing with soldiers’ taxes. By the 11th c. he had also acquired judicial duties.
- logothetes tou dromou* high-ranking official acting as minister of foreign affairs and adviser to the emperor

Glossary

- lysis* document issued by the imperial or patriarchal chancery in response to a petition
- magistros* high-ranking title that had begun to lose its significance by the 11th c.
- magoulikon* nun's headcovering
- malagma* pure gold
- malaratoi* soldiers armed with axes
- mandator* official employed for special missions
- maphorion* a garment covering the head and shoulders and, in the case of civil officials, the entire body
- matzoukation* fiscal levy for the maintenance of soldiers armed with maces
- measure (metron) measure of capacity: maritime or standard measure for wine (= 10.25 liters) and oil (= 8.52 liters); annonikon (= 2/3 maritime measure); monastic (= 4/5 maritime measure)
- Meatfare, week of (hebdomas tes Apokreo) the last week during which meat might still be eaten before the beginning of the Great Lent, i.e., second week before the Great Lent
- megas domestikos* supreme commander of the army
- megas doux* commander of the fleet
- megas doux ton scholon* in the East synonymous (?) with megas domestikos ton scholon in the East, i.e., commander in chief of the army in the East
- megas droungarios* high-ranking naval officer
- megas konostaulos* ("count of the stable") title born by members of the aristocracy from the 13th c. onward
- megas logariastes* financial official acting as general controller of expenses
- megas primikerios* high-ranking courtier whose function was to present the emperor with his scepter at court ceremonies
- megas stratopedarches* high-ranking official responsible for the provisioning of the army
- Menaion* liturgical book containing hymns and prayers proper to the matins and vespers of the fixed feasts of one of the twelve months of the year
- Menologion* book containing Lives of saints in the order of their commemoration in the church calendar
- merarches* commander of a cavalry division
- mesaplekton* fiscal obligation connected with the billeting of troops (?)
- mesoria* intermediate hours recited after each of the four liturgical hours (first, third, sixth and ninth)
- Metastasis tes Theotokou* the "removal" to heaven of the Virgin Mary; also known as the Dormition (Koimesis) or the Assumption (Analepsis) of the Virgin (feast day: 15 August)
- modios* measure of weight and land; annonikos (revenue modios = 26.667 litrai [q.v.], or 11.389 liters; monasteriakos (monastic modios = 32 litrai, or 13.667 liters); thalassios (maritime modios = 40 litrai, or 17.084 liters). The land modios varied from 888.73 sq. m to 1,279.78 sq. m.
- mystikos* private secretary of the emperor

Glossary

mystographos assistant to the mystikos (q.v.)

Neptikon book on spiritual vigilance night office (pannychis) brief service celebrated after vespers or compline nomisma standard gold coin

Nomokanon book containing the acts of the holy synods, canon law and civil law nomophylax (“guardian of law”) title created for the head of the law school in Constantinople in the mid-11th c. and subsequently held mostly by canonists noummion lowest unit of account, synonymous with small change octave (oktoemera) the week after a feast or the eighth day after the feast marking the closure (apodosis) of the festival odes canticles from the Old Testament sung during liturgical offices oikeiaka (sekreton ton oikeiakon) bureau in charge of imperial property oikistikos official with fiscal and judicial functions oikomodion secondary tax in kind levied on peasant households oikonomion imperial bureau of finances oikos stanza of a kontakion (q.v.)

Oktoechos liturgical book containing under each of the eight Byzantine musical modes a set of hymns proper to Sunday offices throughout the year except for Lent, Easter and Pentecost

omphaitos unidentified part of a building in the monastery of Kecharitomenē orthotes fiscal officer dealing with the re-establishment of taxes on lands previously exempted from taxation

ounce (oungia) 1/12 litra (q.v.)

Panagia (epithet of the Virgin Mary) “All Holy”; ritual offering of a piece of bread at the end of a meal in honor of the Virgin

Pandektes book on Christian spirituality by the 7th-c. Palestinian monk Antiochos; Nikon, the author of (20) Black Mountain, has a similar work.

Panegyrikon liturgical book containing appropriate sermons for the feasts of the church panhypersebastos dignity conferred on members of the imperial family under the Komnenoi

Panoiktirmon (epithet of Christ) “All Merciful” pansebastohypertatos title held by members of the imperial family under the Komnenoi pansebastos sebastos title held by members of the imperial family under the Komnenoi

Pantanassa (epithet of the Virgin Mary) “Queen of All”

Pantokrator (epithet of Christ) “Ruler of All” panyoikeiotatos an inflation of oikeios, an honorific title denoting close association with the emperor

papa (“father”) term of respect for priests parakelliotai term applied to the first hermits who settled near the kellion (q.v.) of Athanasios on the Great Meteoron

Glossary

- Parakletike* liturgical book containing under each of the eight Byzantine musical modes the hymns for weekdays and Sundays throughout the year except for Lent, Easter, and Pentecost
- parakoimomenos* chamberlain and bodyguard of the emperor
- parastasimon* solemn office consisting of prayers and supplications for the dead
- Paterikon* book containing tales and sayings of various fathers
- patrikios* dignity conferred on governors and generals
- peisa* weight measure equated with 128 kg
- Pentekostarion* liturgical book containing the offices from Easter Sunday through the first Sunday after Pentecost
- Perableptos* (epithet of the Virgin Mary) “Celebrated,” “Eminent”
- Petriziotissa / Petritzonitissa* epithet of the Theotokos of Petritzos, a medieval kastron near modern Bačkovovo in Bulgaria
- phakiolion* headcovering worn by nuns
- phiale* fountain in the atrium of a church
- Philanthropos* (epithet of Christ) “Lover of Mankind”
- pinkernes* cupbearer of the emperor; under the Komnenoi this office was held by members of the imperial family
- pittakion* document issued by the imperial or patriarchal chancery
- platidion* type of commercial boat
- podea* piece of precious cloth hanging from the bottom of an icon to the ground
- polyeleos* selected verses from Psalms 44 (45), 134 (135), and 135 (136) sung during matins on the feasts of the Lord and other feast days
- praiapositos* eunuch involved in palace ceremony
- praktikon* inventory of a taxpayer’s property
- Praxapostolos* lectionary containing the whole text of the Apostolic Acts and Epistles
- Presanctified Gifts, liturgy of (leitourgia ton prohegiasmenon) liturgy following vespers on weekdays during the Great Lent in which consecrated elements from an earlier Eucharist are used
- primikerios* title of supervising doctors at the Pantokrator hospital
- Prodromos* (epithet of St. John the Baptist) “Forerunner”
- proleusimaios* member of the retinue of a general
- prokeimenon* verse from the psalms sung before the Apostolic Epistle in the liturgy or before other lections in the offices
- pronoia* imperial grant of tax and other revenues from a specific property
- prooimion* Psalm 103 (104), with which the office of vespers begins
- Prophetologion / Prophetes / Propheteia* liturgical book containing readings from the prophets and other books of the Old Testament
- prosodia* fees paid to state officials
- prosoimoia* hymns similar in rhythm and melody
- prostagma / prostaxis* imperial document conveying an administrative order
- protekdikos* ecclesiastical judge responsible for the defense of suspected criminal offenders

Glossary

- protoallagator* chief of the officers in charge of military detachments called allagia
- protokentarchos* chief of the kentarchoi (q.v.)
- protomenites* title of the chiefs of the medical staff at the Pantokrator hospital
- protonotarios* chief of imperial scribes and secretaries
- protopapas* senior priest who in the absence of the bishop acted as his vicar
- protoproedros* high-ranking title implying precedence
- protos* head of the Athonite monastic community; chief doctor at the Pantokrator hospital
- protospatharios* title conferred on commanders of themes up to the 10th c. By the 11th c., it was held by lower military officers and other functionaries
- protospatharissa* wife of a protospatharios (q.v.)
- protostrator* commander of the troops and one of the highest dignitaries under the Palaiologoi
- protostratorissa* wife of a protostrator (q.v.)
- protosynkellos* adviser to the patriarch or a bishop
- protovestiaría* first in rank of the empress's attendants
- protovestarios* title held by high civil and military officials
- Psychosostis* (epithet of the Virgin Mary) "Savior of Souls"
- pterygia* lateral spaces in the sanctuary (?)
- ptochotrophos* official in charge of an institution for the poor and sick
- quaestor* judicial officer
- raso* the outer garment of a monk
- sakellarios* official in charge of the imperial or patriarchal sakelle (q.v.); local ecclesiastical treasurer
- sakelle* imperial treasury where a record of imperial monasteries and their properties was kept; name of the patriarchal treasury
- sakellion* see sakelle
- Schematologion* book containing the service for the clothing of a monk
- sebastokrator* title conferred on the emperor's sons and brothers under the Komnenoi
- sebastokratorissa* wife of a sebastokrator (q.v.)
- sebastos* title held by members of the aristocracy and the imperial family under the Komnenoi
- sekretion* department of administration
- semantron* traditional instrument of call in monasteries. It consisted of a flat wood or metal board struck with a hammer to produce a resounding tone
- semeioma* / semeiosis record of a judicial decision
- sigillidion* diminutive of sigillion (q.v.)
- sigillion* official document confirmed by a seal
- skaramangion* silk tunic with belt and long sleeves worn by the emperor and members of the court; silk cloth by the same name used as a cover for the altar

Glossary

- skepe* headcovering of a nun
- skete* small monastery; hermitage
- solemnion* imperial grant
- spharakandidatos* dignity conferred on officials of lower rank
- sphragis* (lit. “seal”) blessing, i.e., sign of the cross made by the installing bishop on the head of a newly elected superior; same rite performed by the superior at the installation of other monastic officials
- staurion* eucharistic bread offering in the shape of a small cross
- stauropegion* monastic foundation charter issued by local bishop or the patriarch
- sthlabopolos* (= sklabopoulos) see doulos
- Sticherarion* liturgical book containing the stichera (q.v.)
- Sticherokathistarion* liturgical book containing both stichera (q.v.) and kathismata (q.v.)
- sticheron* hymn sung after one or more verses of a psalm
- Stichophon* unidentified liturgical book in Church Slavonic probably similar to the Byzantine Sticherarion (q.v.)
- strateia* monetary commutation of military service
- strategos* (general) military governor of province; commander of small territorial and military unit by the 11th c.
- strateutes* army recruiting officer
- sympentheros* father-in-law of one’s son or daughter
- synapte* type of litany consisting of a series of intercessory prayers and responses linked together
- synaxarion* church calendar of fixed feasts indicating, but not including, the liturgical readings proper to each feast; collection of brief hagiographical notices and other information relevant to the celebration of feasts in the church calendar; title of monastic liturgical typika
- synone* obligation of farmers to sell part of their crops to the state at a fixed price; monetary land tax from the 10th c. onward
- synthronon* seats for the bishop and the priests in the back of the apse of a church
- tagmata* after the end of the 10th c., the term applied to military contingents in general
- taxation* fiscal levy for the maintenance of police
- taxiarches* military commander of a 1,000-man unit
- Telonia* (lit. “places of toll”) places where the souls of dead sinners are stopped and examined by demons personifying various sins; title of work by Neophytos the Recluse
- templon* screen separating the nave from the sanctuary
- tetareron* gold coin of light weight (3.98 g) in the 11th c.; small copper coin worth 1/4 of the old folllis (q.v.), which it replaced by the end of the 11th c.
- tetartion* 1/4 modios (q.v.)
- Tetrabaseleon* book containing the four books of Kings in the Old Testament: I Kings (I Samuel), II Kings (II Samuel), III Kings (I Kings), IV Kings (II Kings)
- tetrakarikoxyton* building for the private use of the empress in the monastery of Kecharitomene

Glossary

theotokion hymn addressed to the Virgin Mary; hyperpyron of John II Komnenos (1118–43) showing on the reverse the emperor and the Virgin Mary Theotokos epithet of the Virgin Mary “Mother of God” three hundred and eighteen fathers alleged number of the fathers who attended the Council of Nicaea in 325, suggesting the 318 servants of Abraham topoteretes military officer in charge of a small district tourmarches high-ranking military commander and civil governor of a large subdivision of a theme trachy, nomisma concave coin of electrum (= 1/3 standard gold coin) or billon (= 1/48 standard gold coin) struck from the 11th to the 14th c.

tribounos official in charge of road maintenance in Constantinople trikephalon, nomisma electrum trachy (q.v) that had on it the head of the emperor, the Virgin Mary, and Christ

triklinos dining room; reception hall

Triodion liturgical book whose hymns are composed, for the most part of three odes. It contains offices for the nine weeks preceding Easter and the eight weeks following it. The latter period was covered by the Pentekostarion (q.v) after the 14th c.

triodion short hymn of three odes trisagion the “thrice holy” hymn (“Holy is God, holy and mighty, holy and immortal”); intercessory prayer beginning with this hymn troparion short liturgical hymn tropike small pavillion serving as a residence for royal nuns at the convent of Kecharitomene typikon monastic foundation charter; liturgical ordinal describing the services for each day tzieron type of kitchen utensil or agricultural tool (?)

tzounganion / tsoukganion ball game of Persian origin played on horseback velum (judge of the velum) member of a tribunal meeting behind a curtain at the hippodrome vestarches title conferred on low-ranking officials vestes title granted to prominent military commanders vestiarion state treasury vestiarites imperial bodyguard vestiaritissa wife of a vestiarites (q.v.)

voivode (voivodas) title of the ruler of Wallachia washing of the feet (nifter) ceremonial washing of the monk’s feet by the superior on Holy Thursday in commemoration of Christ’s washing of the feet of the Apostles at the Last Supper zeugaratos a peasant who owned a pair of oxen zeugarion land cultivated by a pair of oxen zupan (zupanos) high-ranking Wallachian official

Appendix A

Concordance with Previous Lists

1. Delehayé (1921)

Hippolyte Delehayé, Deux typica byzantins de l'époque des Paléologues (Brussels, 1921), pp. 4–8. Delehayé's list does not include the documents edited in his own work: (8) John Xenos, (39) Lips, (40) Anargyroi, and (57) Bebaia Elpis. These are marked with one asterisk (*) in the accompanying chart. Delehayé's No. 1 is the liturgical typikon of St. Sabas, which is not translated in our collection.

2. Meester (1940)

Placide de Meester, "Les typiques de fondation (Typika ktetorika)," SBN 6 (1940), 496–508, at 500–505. Meester divided his list into typika ktetorika (A), founder's testaments (B), and lost typika ktetorika (C). Documents in our collection known to Meester and discussed by him in his article but not included in his list are marked with two asterisks () in the accompanying chart. Meester's A19 is the Serbian typikon of Chilandar which is not translated in our collection. Meester's A29–A33 and B10–B11 are post-Byzantine documents that are also not translated here.

3. Janin (1964)

R. Janin, "Le monachisme byzantin au moyen âge. Commende et typica (x^e–xiv^e siècle)," REB 22 (1964), 5–44, at 18–21. All of Janin's documents are translated in our collection.

4. Manaphes (1970)

Konstantinos A. Manaphes, Monasteriaka typika-diathekai (Athens, 1970), pp. 178–90. Manaphes' list is divided into typika (A) and diathekai (B). All of Manaphes' documents are translated in our collection.

5. Konidares (1984)

Ioannes M. Konidares, Nomike theorese ton monasteriakon typikon (Athens, 1984), pp. 45–67. We do not consider Konidares' No. 56, the Typos of Manuel II (ed. Meyer, Haupturkunden, pp. 197–203), to be a founder's typikon, and it is not translated in our collection.

6. Galatariotou (1987)

Catia Galatariotou, "Byzantine Ktetorika Typika: A Comparative Study," REB 45 (1987), 77–138 at 85–87. Galatariotou's list is not numbered. Documents included in her list are marked Y on the chart; those rejected are marked N. All of Galatariotou's documents are translated in our collection.

APPENDIX A

7. Thiermeyer (1992)

Abraham-Andreas Thiermeyer, "Das Typikon-Ktetorikon und sein literarhistorischer Kontext," OCP 58 (1992), 475–513. Our (39) Lips and (40) Anargyroi are both assigned the number 38 in Thiermeyer's list. Thiermeyer's No. 49, the Typos of Manuel II, and his No. 54, the Testament of Theodore Agallianos, a liturgical typikon, are not translated in our collection.

NOTE: The absence of documents in our collection in other lists is indicated with a dash (–) in the accompanying chart.

		Delehayé (1921)	Meester (1940)	Janin (1964)	Manaphes (1970)	Konidares (1984)	Galatariotou (1987)	Thiermeyer (1992)
CHAPTER ONE	1 Apa Abraham	–	–	–	–	–	N	–
	2 Pantelleria	–	A15	–	–	33	–	31
	3 Theodore Studites	2	B1	–	A2	3	Y	1
	4 Stoudios	–		2	A2	2	Y	2
	5 Euthymios	–	–	–	B1	4	–	3
	6 Rila	–	B2	–	–	–	–	–
	7 Latros	3	B3	3	B2	5	Y	4
	8 John Xenos	*	B5	–	B4	18	N	17
	9 Galesios	–	**	–	–	–	–	–
	10 Eleousa	10	A5	10	A7	14	Y	14
CHAPTER TWO	11 Ath. Rule	4		4	A3	8	Y	5
	12 Tzimiskes	5		5	–	9	N	8
	13 Ath. Typikon	4	A1	4	A3	6	Y	6
	14 Ath. Testament	4	–	4	A3	7	N	7
	15 Constantine IX	6		6	–	10	N	10
CHAPTER THREE	16 Mount Tmolos	–	–	–	–	–	–	–
	17 Nikon Metanoeite	–	–	–	–	–	–	–
	18 Nea Gephyra	–	–	–	–	–	Y	9
	19 Attaleiates	8	A3	8	A5	12	Y	12
	20 Black Mountain	–		–	–	19	–	18.1
	21 Roidion	–	–	–	–	20	–	18.2
CH. FOUR	22 Evergetis	7	A2	7	A4	11	Y	11
	23 Pakourianos	9	A4	9	A6	13	Y	13
	24 Christodoulos	11	A6, B4	11	A8	15-17	Y	15-16

		Delehaye (1921)	Meester (1940)	Janin (1964)	Manaphes (1970)	Konidares (1984)	Galatariotou (1987)	Thiermeyer (1992)
CHAPTER FIVE	25 Fragala	–	–	–	–	–	–	–
	26 Luke of Messina	19	A14	20	A17	25	Y	23
	27 Kecharitomene	12	A8	13	A10	22	Y	20
	28 Pantokrator	13	A9	14	A11	24	Y	22
	29 Kosmosoteira	15	A11	16	A13	28	Y	25
CHAPTER SIX	30 Phoberos	–	A7	12	A9	21	Y	19
	31 Areia	14	A10	15	A12	26-27	Y	24
	32 Mamas	16	A12	17	A14	29	Y	26
	33 Heliou Bomon	18	A17	19	A16	31	Y	28
CHAPTER SEVEN	34 Machairas	22	A18	23	A20	34	Y	32
	35 Skoteine	–	B7	24	A21	36	Y	34
	36 Blemmydes	–	A20	–	A22	37	Y	35
	37 Auxentios	23	A21	25	A23	38	Y	36
	38 Kellibara I	24	A22	26	A24	39	Y	37
	39 Lips	*	A23	27	A25	40	Y	38
	40 Anargyroi	*	A24	28	A25	41	Y	38
CHAPTER EIGHT	41 Docheiariou	–	–	–	B3	23	N	21
	42 Sabas	–	–	1	A1	1	Y	29
	43 Kasoulon	17		18	A15	30	Y	27
	44 Karyes	20	A16	21	A18	32	Y	30
	45 Neophytos	21	A17	22	A19	35	Y	33
	46 Akropolites	–	–	–	–	42	–	39
	47 Philanthropos	25	A25	29	A26	43	Y	41
	48 Prodromos	–	–	–	B5	44	N	42

		Delehayé (1921)	Meester (1940)	Janin (1964)	Manaphes (1970)	Konidares (1984)	Galatariotou (1987)	Thiermeyer (1992)
CHAPTER EIGHT	49 Geromeri	–	B9	–	B6	46	N	44
	50 Gerasimos	–	B6	–	B7	47	N	45
	51 Kouloumousi	–	–	–	B8	52-54	–	48
	52 Choumnos	–	–	–	A29	50-51	Y	47
	53 Meteora	–	B8	–	A30	55	Y	50
	54 Neilos Damilas	27	A28	32	A31	57	Y	51
CHAPTER NINE	55 Athanasios I	–	–	–	–	–	–	–
	56 Kellibara II	24	A22	26	A24	–	–	–
	57 Bebaia Elpis	*	A26	31	A28	48-49	Y	46
	58 Menoikeion	26	A27	30	A27	45	Y	43
	59 Manuel II	–	–	–	–	58	N	52
	60 Charsianeites	–	–	–	A32	59-60	N	53
	61 Eleousa Inv.	10	A5	10	A7	14	–	–

Appendix B

The Regulation of Diet in the Byzantine Monastic Foundation Documents¹

A. General Rules

Systematic treatments of the monastic diet are lacking in the Byzantine monastic foundation documents. The discussions of dietary matters that do appear in these documents generally bear on particular problems, the general principles (e.g., a strict prohibition on the use of meat) evidently being well understood.

1. Customary Food and Drink

Abstinence from meat was understood by (30) Phoberos [25] to be one of those practices that distinguished monks from laymen (cf. (29) Kosmosoteira [104]). The use of meat was not allowed in any of the monasteries for which the documents in our collection were written, though (19) Attaleiates [18] mandates that meat, along with other foodstuffs, should be supplied to guests in the almshouse. There are explicit prohibitions on the use of meat in only a few documents, however, including (20) Black Mountain [42] and (34) Machairas [115]. Two documents from Norman Sicily, (25) Fragala [A4], [B4] and (26) Luke of Messina [3], indicate that the consumption of meat had been abolished only recently. Only (11) Ath. Rule [24] forthrightly states that vegetables and legumes constitute the ordinary diet. The consumption of fish, except in (12) Tzimiskes [12], was generally permitted at various times during the year. Shellfish evidently were a special treat, available seasonally, especially as gifts of outside benefactors. Unlike some of their predecessors in the earlier monastic traditions, the authors of our documents permit the consumption of wine by their monks. Only (43) Kasoulon [1] features the extreme provision that its monks are never to eat cheese or eggs, though their use is restricted in many other documents.

2. Quantities of Food and Drink

Little is said about the quantities of food and drink to be used in the diet. In the eleventh century, however, (20) Black Mountain [44] has some basic instructions: one heaping wine measure [cup] of lentils, beans or chickpeas along with one level measure of rice per person when cooked plain; the quantities were to be halved in making soup. Quantities for “dry” food were similar, one heaping measure of olives, and a level one of raisins. Following the command of Basil of Caesarea,² easily procured, seasonal foods (especially fruits and vegetables) were to be preferred. Both (32) Mamas [17], followed by (33) Heliou Bomon [17] and (27) Kecharitomene [46], provide for the allotment of wine according to the greater measure; the last document also gives the mother superior discretionary authority to increase the quantity of wine drunk by her nuns. At times when greater moderation was desired, a smaller measure of wine might be employed.

¹ For a discussion of the monastic diet and requirements of fasting and abstinence, see the works cited in the General Bibliography, XXVII. Daily Life, B. Diet, especially Joachim Herbut, De ieiunio et abstinentia in Ecclesia byzantina ab initiis usque ad saec. XI (Rome, 1968).

² Basil of Caesarea, Regulae fusius tractatae 19 ([LR 19]), PG 31, cols. 268–69.

APPENDIX B

3. Number and Times of Meals

Generally, monks were offered a midday or early afternoon meal and then a considerably smaller (and less formal) meal or snack of bread and wine or leftovers later in the evening. During times of fasting or for liturgical reasons, the principal meal might be delayed, and some strict monasteries omitted the evening meal entirely. As (28) Pantokrator [9] notes, “the time of eating is not always the same . . .,” and could be affected by seasonal changes, the need to accommodate work, the liturgy and other services, and the requirements of fasting and abstinence.

4. Fasting and Abstinence

The often confusing requirements for fasting and abstinence gave rise to most of the dietary regulations in our documents. The difference between fasting and abstinence is explained thusly in (20) Black Mountain [91]: “Fasting is not touching anything at all, but abstinence is touching a small (amount) and again holding (oneself) back.” The latter is said to be appropriate always, while the former could be inappropriate at certain seasons and on certain days. The stern (2) Pantelleria [4], a document probably of the late eighth century, imposes the unusual obligation upon its monks of fasting throughout the day. Those performing strenuous manual labor, however, were to be allowed a quarter portion of a regular meal, with a glass of wine. In the tenth century, (7) Latros [8] fasting was to be observed by each of the monks in proportion to his strength and as approved by the superior.

5. Historical Development of Dietary Regulation

Our earliest documents provide only a few general rules for dietary observances. Beginning with (4) Stoudios, we see an intensified interest in dietary prescriptions, though primarily for periods of fasting. The most detailed regulations are to be found in the eleventh and twelfth centuries, when our authors gradually expand their prescriptions to cover both fast and non-fast days throughout the year. In this era, (20) Black Mountain, (30) Phoberos, and (43) Kasoulon offer the sternest regulations, but generally speaking, the monastic reform favored (implicitly rather than explicitly) a relatively relaxed dietary regime. In the thirteenth century, however, one observes an increasing inclination among our authors to defer to the authority of the liturgical typikon of the Sabas monastery near Jerusalem,³ with the result that dietary regulation becomes scarcer in Palaiologan times.

(7) Latros [8] makes the earliest recommendation of the “Rule of Jerusalem,” presumably an early version of the Sabas typikon. In the Palaiologan era, (37) Auxentios [10], (39) Lips [30], (56) Kellibara II [1], and (57) Bebaia Elpis [78] all endorse that typikon. (56) Kellibara II [1] confidently states: “Those who need to find out something should open the book containing the rule and read it, and they will certainly be able to find what they are looking for in it.” (57) Bebaia

³ (22) Evergetis [10]; (27) Kecharitomene [47]; (28) Pantokrator [12]; (29) Kosmosoteira [25], [26]; (30) Phoberos [28]; (34) Machairas [67]; and (36) Blemmydes [11].

APPENDIX B

Elpis [79] praises the typikon for its moderation “equally avoiding superfluity and deficiency.” Among other things, the typikon is said to regulate the number [80] of daily meals and the times when fish was allowed to be eaten, wine drunk [81], and olive oil employed in cooking. However, (37) Auxentios [10] allows the superior discretionary authority to relax the interpretation of its dietary provisions.

In later centuries, dietary observances were among those traditional practices that contemporaries thought needed explication. Thus, the cumin-flavored Lenten beverage named eukraton mentioned earlier in (4) Stoudios [AB30] and elsewhere⁴ without explanation is said in the thirteenth century in (36) Blemmydes [18] to be a precaution against flatulence.

B. Rules for Regular (Non-Fast) Days

At first one finds relatively little regulation for non-fast days. In the ninth century, (4) Stoudios [29], followed by (11) Ath. Rule [22], provides for three servings of wine at the main meal and two in the evening. The most detailed discussion is to be found in the eleventh century in (20) Black Mountain [37], which provides for two courses on Tuesdays and Thursdays, one a legume soup cooked with olive oil (but see the reservation on its use in [R41]) and the other boiled vegetables without. A small, carefully measured portion of cheese, eggs, or fish was also permitted on these days. The monks could eat a benefactor’s gift even if it exceeded the usual standard. There was to be [57] no fasting on the weekends at any time during the year with the exception of Holy Saturday. On Saturdays, a meal was to be prepared [47] at the fifth hour, consisting of two courses of legume soup and boiled vegetables, both prepared with olive oil. Cheese, eggs, or fish could also be consumed if they were available. The Sunday meal was to be served [47] at the third hour, and consisted of two courses, prepared with olive oil, or three if necessary to accommodate a benefactor’s gift. There were to be evening meals on both Saturdays and Sundays (see also [38]). Wine could be consumed on Sundays [38], diluted one part to twenty of water, but generally not on other days except on feasts, when taken for medicinal purposes or consumed as a gift. When permitted, it was to be limited to two cups in most cases, but absolutely no more than three.

In the contemporary (23) Pakourianos [8], we find a generous provision for three dishes a day, accompanied by four measures of wine, and with cheese permitted on four days: Tuesday and Thursday during the week, and Saturday and Sunday on the weekend. Later in the early twelfth century, (27) Kecharitomene [46] provides for two to three dishes at the midday meal, of fish and cheese, on these days. The diet for Monday was to be two or three dishes of legumes cooked with olive oil, and shellfish if they happened to be available. The beverage was to be dispensed by the larger measure, to be increased at the mother superior’s discretion. At the evening meal, the nuns were to be fed bread, seasonal vegetables, and small fruits, accompanied again by a beverage distributed with the larger measure. (32) Mamas [17], along with (33) Heliou Bomon [17], follows these prescriptions. At the principal meal, (29) Kosmosoteira [63] allows its monks two dishes of food daily, including fish, cheese, and two “monastic measures” of wine. (28) Pantokrator [12], ⁴ For cumin-flavored beverages, see also (22) Evergetis [10], (27) Kecharitomene [47], (28) Pantokrator [12], (29) Kosmosoteira [25], [26], (30) Phoberos [28], (34) Machairas [67], and (36) Blemmydes [11].

APPENDIX B

whose treatment of dietary matters is generally liberal, provides for three dishes of cheese and eggs on Tuesdays and Thursdays, three dishes of vegetables, legumes, and mussels and oysters (in season), prepared with olive oil and seasonings, on Mondays, and three dishes, including fresh fish, on Saturdays and Sundays. Hot water was to be poured [9] into the monks' wine-cups (perhaps for dilution) to accompany each dish; bread was also served with the meals.

In the much stricter (43) Kasoulon [2], cf. [5], legumes, olive oil, vegetables, fish, and wine are permitted on non-fast days, here Tuesdays, Thursdays, Saturdays, and Sundays. Two dishes were to be served [3] on Tuesdays and Thursdays, and also on Sundays [4]. There was to be [4] no cooked evening meal on Sunday, however.

In the late thirteenth century, (39) Lips [32] provides for two to three dishes of fish, cheese and legumes on four fast-free days, which are the same as in (43) Kasoulon [5]. In the fourteenth century, (58) Menoikeion [8] allows two daily meals on these same fast-free days. Fish was to be served on Sunday "on account of the difficult vigils." On Monday, the prescribed diet was one "boiled dish with vinegar and wine." Fasting on the weekend days was forbidden.

C. Rules for Fast Days

Our authors disagreed on what days of the week fasting should be practiced. The more lenient required fasting only on Wednesdays and Fridays, while the stricter insisted on fasting on Mondays as well.

In (11) Ath. Rule [30] wine is prohibited on Mondays, Wednesdays, and Fridays except for the infirm. (7) Latros [8] is more severe, restricting its monks to bread and water on Wednesdays and Fridays, except on the occurrence of a dominical feast, that is, a feast of the Lord, or in regard for a monk's infirmity. In the eleventh century, (20) Black Mountain [38] restricts its monks on Mondays, Wednesdays, and Fridays to one course of boiled vegetables without olive oil, and another of dry food. The single meal on these days was to take place [43] either at the conclusion of vespers or at the ninth hour.

For Wednesday and Friday fast days, (27) Kecharitomene [46] prescribes a diet of three dishes of legumes and vegetables cooked with olive oil, yet if fish were sent by a benefactor on these days or on a Monday, it could be consumed. Likewise, at the discretion of the superior, fish could be consumed on a dominical feast that chanced to fall on one of these days. The prescription for the Wednesday and Friday diet is adopted by (32) Mamas [17], which also allows wine distributed with the customary measure, but permits the monks to observe voluntarily a stricter dietary regime of dry foods only "for the sake of the canons." (33) Heliou Bomon [17] has the same regulation. (28) Pantokrator [12] simply provides for an observance of the canons on these two days, but allows the superior to make concessions to accommodate the "weakness of the brothers." (29) Kosmosoteira [63] recognizes Mondays, Wednesdays, and Fridays as fast days; its monks were to be fed "Holy Broth" and legumes.

(30) Phoberos [16] indicates that the diet will be similar to that prescribed for Lent, specifically legumes soaked in water or fruits and fresh vegetables, with cumin-flavored hot water for a beverage, to be served at the ninth hour. Observance of the Wednesday and Friday fasts, enjoined by many patristic authorities, was a very serious obligation, to be set aside [17] only for the observance of a dominical feast. Cheese, fish, and eggs were not to be eaten [19] on these days, even if the feast of Christmas happened to occur on one of them.

APPENDIX B

(43) Kasoulon [5] ordains fasting for three days of the week, Mondays, Wednesdays, and Fridays, except for dominical feasts, feasts of the Mother of God with an octave, of the angels, of St. John the Baptist, of the Twelve Apostles, or “any other saint whose memory is celebrated.” No fish was to be consumed [6] on Wednesdays or Fridays, except again when an important feast chanced to occur on them, unless a monk was sick; nor was oil to be employed [13] in cooking on these days.

In the thirteenth century (34) Machairas [77], citing Palestinian observance, defines fasting on these days as total abstinence from wine and oil, and reckons Mondays as equivalent in dietary obligation to the other days of fasting. (45) Neophytos [C4] limits its monks to uncooked foods on Mondays, Wednesdays, and Fridays. (36) Blemmydes [11], while banning the use of oil on Wednesdays and Fridays, permits the use of wine. Towards the end of this same century, (39) Lips [32] provides for one or two dishes of fresh vegetables or legumes on Wednesdays and Fridays (with the usual exceptions for the celebrations of great feasts), and boiled legumes and fresh vegetables with olive oil, along with shellfish, if abundant and in season, on Mondays.

In the early fourteenth century, (55) Athanasios I [5] rejects the practice of breaking a fast day on a Monday, Wednesday, or a Friday on grounds of observing a dominical feast. Later on in the same century, (58) Menoikeion [8] limits its monks on Wednesdays and Fridays (but not Mondays) to one meal a day prepared without olive oil, and served without wine except for the sick and those with weak constitutions.

D. The Evening Meal

At least during the period from Easter to the feast of All Saints (the first Sunday after Pentecost), (4) Stoudios [AB29], followed by (11) Ath. Rule [22] in the tenth century, provides for a modest evening meal. No special food was to be prepared, but bread and any leftovers from the midday meal were to be set out for the monks along with two servings of wine each. (22) Evergetis [9], prescribes similarly, but more generally, ordering that small quantities of bread alone be set out, unless the superior wishes to add some small fruit as well. Drink was to be distributed with the larger measure. If a feast should occur, the superior could replace the supper with an appropriate celebration. (27) Kecharitomene [46], (29) Kosmosoteira [24], and (30) Phoberos [24] all follow the Evergetian prescription on the evening meal. On those days when the main meal took place not at the ninth hour but earlier, (27) Kecharitomene [48] provides for a small supper, with wine distributed in the smaller measure. (28) Pantokrator [11] likewise makes a provision for a supper of vegetables and some fruit whenever a second meal was permitted. The serving of beverages would follow the rules for the midday meal. (32) Mamas [17], followed as usual by (33) Heliou Bomon [17], provides for a supper of bread, seasonal fruits and vegetables, or “any other thing that shall seem best to the superior,” served with a beverage distributed with the greater measure.

In the thirteenth century, the anachronistically minded (36) Blemmydes [11] declares that eating only once a day was the custom of the famous ascetics (of late antiquity), but out of consideration for those who were not strong enough to subsist on one meal a day, allows for a second meal in the evening from “whatever happens to be available.” In the fourteenth century, (58)

APPENDIX B

Menoikeion [8] makes reference to specific times marked out in the monastery's synaxarion in which it was possible for its monks to eat twice a day: Easter Week, the week after Pentecost, the Twelve Days (of Christmas), the week of Meatfare, and the week of Cheesefare.

E. The Lenten Diet

1. General Prescriptions

(4) Stoudios [AB30] provides for only one meal a day, except for Saturdays and Sundays. Except for the sick and elderly, the monks were to substitute eukraton, flavored with pepper, cumin, anise, and hot water, for wine. Oil and wine were allowed in the diet on Lenten Saturdays, when there would be two servings at the main meal and in the evening. In the tenth century, (11) Ath. Rule [25], [26] repeats these provisions, but allows wine also on Sundays and reduces the evening meal to one serving. In the contemporary (7) Latros [5], monks are told to restrict themselves “as much as possible” to moderate quantities of bread and water. Wine mixed with water was allowed on Saturdays and Sundays “because of lack of strength.” Also in the tenth century, (12) Tzimiskes [12] prohibits fish except for the infirm.

In the late eleventh century, (20) Black Mountain [57] explains the separate treatment of Saturdays and Sundays as non-fast days as being a traditional practice to refute “the dogma of the so-called Eustathianoï and Markianitai and Lapetianoï and Messalianoi,” but cheese, eggs, and fish were not allowed [56] on these days during Lent. The use of oil was permitted on Saturdays and Sundays, and on Sundays wine too, if available, was to be drunk “to the glory of God.” On other days, the monks were to eat only dry foods [57]; fish is explicitly forbidden [60], except on the feast of the Annunciation. At about the same time, (23) Pakourianos [10] provides for a Lenten fast without fish, wine or olive oil, except on Tuesdays, Thursdays, Saturdays, and Sundays, when its monks were allowed one cup of wine each “for refreshment.”

Among the documents of the monastic reform, (22) Evergetis [10] prohibits fish generally during Lent, except when it was offered as a refreshment by an outside benefactor. (27) Kecharitomene [47] restricts the consumption of such a gift to weekend days. (22) Evergetis [10], followed in the twelfth century by (27) Kecharitomene, (29) Kosmosoteira, and (30) Phoberos, and in the thirteenth by (34) Machairas [73], allows the superior to exercise discretion with the diet of the sick during Lent. (32) Mamas [18], (33) Heliou Bomon, and (43) Kasoulon [2] make the same provision.

In the twelfth century, (28) Pantokrator [12] restricts its monks to one meal a day, except for Saturdays and Sundays. Exceptions for feasts are not recognized. On weekend days, however, the monks were to be served three dishes, one of fresh vegetables, the second of legumes, and the third of oysters, mussels, scallops, and onions, all seasoned with olive oil and accompanied by the “usual” measure of wine. (30) Phoberos [19] forbids the consumption of cheese or eggs. (31) Areia [T5] provides that the Studite typikon, i.e., (4) Stoudios [AB30], should be followed. The rigorist (43) Kasoulon [2] forbids fish throughout Lent, oil on Mondays, and wine on Wednesdays and Fridays.

In the thirteenth century, (45) Neophytos [C4] provides for uncooked food during all the Lenten weekdays; additional self-imposed dietary rigors are encouraged but not required. In the fourteenth century, (57) Bebaia Elpis [82] adds to the rigor of its model, the Sabas typikon, by prohibiting the use of oil even on weekend days, except for the sick, who were to be allowed even to have fish frequently. In the fifteenth century, (60) Charsianeites [C17] orders abstinence from food cooked with oil during the Lenten weekdays though food could be boiled with vinegar instead of oil. Foods prepared with oil and wine were allowed on weekend days. Wine was also allowed on Tuesdays and Thursdays.

APPENDIX B

2. The First Week of Lent and the Feast of St. Theodore

The first week of the Lenten fast, particularly the first day, were generally marked by dietary asceticism of varying rigor. The diet was relaxed in honor of the feast of St. Theodore on Saturday of that week. In the ninth century, (4) Stoudios [AB30] orders simple food during the first week of Lent: boiled beans and chickpeas, almaia without olive oil, figs, and (if available) chestnuts, cooked pears, and prunes. In the tenth century, (11) Ath. Rule [25] endorses the Studite regulation, adding “some other boiled fruit” to the list of permitted food. In (4) Stoudios [A30] there are special regulations for the first weekend in Lent: on Friday, boiled beans with white and black olives, almaia, and kollyba, with one measure of wine as well; on Saturday and Sunday at the midday meal, two dishes with olive oil and two measures of wine, followed by two more measures in the evening.

In the eleventh century, (20) Black Mountain [56] orders no eating at all on the first day of Lent, and on Tuesday, Wednesday, and Thursday just one piece of salted bread with water. The Catechesis of Theodore Studites is cited for having at least this modest meal during the first week of Lent. On Friday evening, just before the feast of St. Theodore, there was to be a cooked meal without oil and some other dry food, as well as bread and water. As on other Lenten weekend days, there was to be no eating of cheese, eggs, or fish on this Saturday or Sunday. (22) Evergetis [10] also orders a day of complete fasting on the Monday of the first week of Lent, but meals were to be prepared on the other days of that week for those who wished to partake, consisting of legumes soaked in water, raw vegetables and fruits, with a cumin-seasoned hot water drink. On Friday, in honor of St. Theodore, there would be two dishes of food cooked without olive oil with a larger measure of “better” wine. On Saturday, the monks were also permitted to eat shellfish (but not other fish) as a refreshment if sent to them by outside benefactors.

Among the Evergetian institutions in the twelfth century, (27) Kecharitomene [47], (29) Kosmosoteira [25], (30) Phoberos [28], (32) Mamas [18], and (33) Heliou Bomon [18] all endorse the prescription for a total fast on the first Monday in Lent, although (30) Phoberos [28] encourages his monks to continue the fast until Wednesday or even Friday, while (32) Mamas [18] and (33) Heliou Bomon [18] substitute wine “distributed with the half measure” for the cumin-flavored water on the grounds that the chanters need “a moderate concession even if it is contrary to the canons” so that they will have enough sustenance to perform the office and the required genuflections. These last two documents also allow a more generous diet on the feast of St. Theodore, namely two meals of boiled vegetables and shellfish (fish also if sent by benefactors), and the “customary large measure” of wine. To a lesser extent, (27) Kecharitomene [47] does also, providing that one of the two dishes prepared for the Friday feast should be cooked with olive oil.

(28) Pantokrator [12], however, permits but does not require the Monday fast, which is acknowledged to be “the custom of many.” The diet for the first week was to be a smaller portions of bread and wine than usual, legumes soaked in salty hot water without olive oil, nuts, and dried figs. On Friday evening, the vigil of St. Theodore, the monks were to have pickles seasoned with olive oil and a measure of wine. On Saturday and Sunday, the diet would follow the prescriptions for other Lenten weekend days.

The rigorist (43) Kasoulon [9] provides for a diet of bread, soaked beans, and water (but no vegetables) during the first week of Lent, then soaked beans, kollyba, and also wine (so [23]) on Friday in honor of St. Theodore, with vegetables being allowed again on Saturday. In the thirteenth century, (34) Machairas [67] appears to follow the provisions of (22) Evergetis [10], but permits the use of sesame oil as shortening for the meal and substitutes the “customary” for the “larger” measure for the wine on the vigil of St. Theodore. In the fourteenth century (58) Menoikeion [8] simply provides that the monks should follow the rules set forth in the monastery’s synaxarion for the first week of Lent.

3. The Rest of Lent until Palm Sunday

For the second, third, fifth, and sixth weeks of the Lenten fast, (4) Stoudios [AB30] provides for a diet of boiled beans, olives (in [A] only), legumes, and vegetables seasoned with ground nutmeg—but no fruits or figs—on regular weekdays. All except the sick will drink eukraton instead of wine. (4) Stoudios [A30] (only) provides that the diet for Wednesday and Friday fast days will be the same as for the more rigorist first and middle (fourth) week of Lent; on Friday this was to include beans, olives, almaia, kollyba, and one measure of wine; on Saturday, two dishes prepared with oil, with two measures of wine at the midday meal and two at the evening collation. For the mid-Lent (fourth) week, (4) Stoudios [B30] (only) provides for a diet that is the same as for the first week of Lent.

In the tenth century, (11) Ath. Rule [25], follows (4) Stoudios [AB30] as its model, but with only boiled beans and another dish seasoned with nutmeg provided as the diet for non-fast weekdays. There is no specific discussion of the diet for the Wednesday and Friday fasts.

In the late eleventh century, (20) Black Mountain [56] refers to the fiftieth canon of the Synod of Laodicea for the restriction to dry foods on Lenten weekdays. Uncooked fruits and olives are permitted, if available. For the entire mid-Lent (fourth) week, (20) Black Mountain [58] references the Studite typikon, (4) Stoudios [B30], for the exclusive use of dry foods. The fast was not to be broken on the Wednesday of this week.

In (22) Evergetis [10], the diet for regular weekdays (Tuesdays and Thursdays) was to be two cooked dishes, both prepared with olive oil, accompanied by wine of the smaller (half) measure. On the weekday fast days (Mondays, Wednesdays, and Fridays), the diet prescribed is uncooked foods—beans and some small fruits—and hot cumin-flavored water in place of wine. On weekend days, the two cooked dishes prepared with olive oil are accompanied by wine of the larger measure. In opposition to (20) Black Mountain, the weekend diet is to prevail on the Wednesday in the middle of Lent, as well as on the Thursday of the Great Canon (so also (27) Kecharitomena [47], (32) Mamas [18], and (33) Heliou Bomon [18]). In the twelfth century, (29) Kosmosoteira [26] endorses these Evergetian prescriptions, while (30) Phoberos [28] is more selective, omitting the provision for the extension of the more ample weekend diet to the middle Wednesday of Lent.

(22) Evergetis [10] makes exceptions to the general ban on the consumption of fish during Lent for the feasts of the Discovery of the Head of St. John the Baptist (February 24), the Forty Martyrs (March 9), and the Annunciation (March 25), and if some benefactor were actually present for the consumption of this sort of culinary gift. (29) Kosmosoteira [26] provides likewise, but (30) Phoberos [28] omits the feast of the Annunciation and reminds its readers that shellfish are permitted on Saturdays and Sundays.

APPENDIX B

(27) Kecharitomene [47] makes use of (22) Evergetis [10], but introduces some changes, particularly in making the diet for the weekday fast days more lenient. On Mondays, there were to be two cooked dishes, one prepared with and the other without olive oil, accompanied by wine of the smaller measure, while on Wednesdays and Fridays the two dishes were to be prepared without olive oil, though still with the small measure of wine. On Saturdays and Sundays there were to be three cooked dishes prepared with olive oil instead of two.

Later on in the twelfth century, (32) Mamas [18] also makes use of (22) Evergetis [10], but it favors a stricter dietary regime on Tuesdays and a slightly more lenient one on weekend days. The Tuesday diet was to be boiled beans and black olives, while on Thursdays the diet was the same as in (22) Evergetis [10]. On Mondays, Wednesdays and Fridays, the diet was to be legumes soaked in water, raw vegetables, nuts, and dried figs, accompanied by the “customary” two-thirds measure of wine. On Saturdays and Sundays, there was a richer diet of “two or three” cooked dishes prepared with olive oil and accompanied by a large measure of wine. As usual, (33) Heliou Bomon [18] provides a ready endorsement of these provisions of its model.

Typically, (28) Pantokrator [12] provides for a more generous diet: fresh vegetables served with olive oil and legumes sweetened with honey “as an additional refreshment” accompanied by the “usual measure” of wine on Tuesdays and Thursdays; and the legumes soaked in water prepared without olive oil, nuts, figs, and smaller than usual portions of bread and wine on Mondays, Wednesdays, and Fridays that also made up the diet prescribed for the first week of Lent. This weekday fast diet was to prevail during the whole of the fourth week of Lent as well.

Also typically, (43) Kasoulon [9] regulates the Lenten diet strictly. On regular weekdays, there was to be one cooked meal each day prepared with olive oil (except on Mondays, when oil was not allowed), accompanied by wine. On Wednesdays and Fridays, the diet was to be bread, boiled beans, raw or wild vegetables, and small nuts, accompanied only by water. Wine and the use of olive oil were not allowed on these days. For the weekend days, the diet would follow that for the regular weekdays, with the use of olive oil permitted.

In the thirteenth century, (34) Machairas [69] provides for a single meal of boiled beans, almaia, and fruits accompanied by a brewed beverage for those of strong constitutions and one of cooked food prepared with sesame and olive oil accompanied by wine for others on Tuesdays and Thursdays. For the diet on Mondays, Wednesdays, and Fridays, (34) Machairas [69] follows (22) Evergetis [10] in prescribing boiled beans and small fruits (adding raw vegetables) accompanied by cumin-flavored water. On Saturdays and Sundays, the provision is [68] for three cooked dishes prepared with sesame oil with the “customary” measure of wine. The larger number of dishes on the weekend days is in accord with (27) Kecharitomene [18] and (32) Mamas [18] rather than (22) Evergetis [10]. Citing the “custom of the monastery,” there was to be an evening meal on these days.

In the fourteenth century, (58) Menoikeion [8] provides for two meals seasoned with either honey or vinegar and accompanied by a measure of wine on Tuesdays and Thursdays, dry food and water only on Mondays, Wednesdays, and Fridays, and two meals seasoned with olive oil and accompanied by wine on Saturdays and Sundays.

APPENDIX B

4. Holy Week

a. General Regulations

In the ninth century, (4) Stoudios [A30] provides on Wednesday and Friday for a diet of boiled beans and chickpeas, almaia prepared without olive oil, figs, chestnuts, cooked pears, and prunes, just as for the first week of Lent. Monday and Tuesday follow the diet of the second, third and fifth weeks of Lent, i. e., boiled beans, olives, cooked legumes and vegetables, but no fruits or dried figs. [B30], on the other hand, and, in the tenth century, (11) Ath. Rule [26] prescribe for Holy Week the same food as for the first. In the twelfth century, (28) Pantokrator [12], also observes this parallelism between the first and last weeks of Lent, adding also the fourth week. (30) Phoberos [28] provides for an uninterrupted six-day fast on just bread and water from Monday to the Saturday before Easter, seeing that “they are days of grief and not a feast.”

b. Monday through Wednesday

(20) Black Mountain [62] prescribes a three-day fast broken in the evening with a modest meal of bread and water and raw vegetables “just as the sacred canons specify.” Similarly, (30) Phoberos [28] provides that the monks’ modest meals should be taken in the evening during this week up through Holy Thursday. (43) Kasoulon [9] orders a three-day fast during Holy Week on the same terms as the four-day fast prescribed during the first week of Lent. In the fourteenth century, (58) Menoikeion [8] is in agreement, prescribing only dry food and water during Monday, Tuesday, and Wednesday of Holy Week.

c. Holy Thursday

In (4) Stoudios [AB30], the Holy Week fast is alleviated somewhat on Holy Thursday with a meal consisting of one dish of legumes with ground nutmeg and boiled beans, accompanied by up to a measure of wine. (11) Ath. Rule [26] permits the use of both oil and wine on Holy Thursday. (20) Black Mountain [63], citing the “typika of the great monasteries, that is, of Stoudios and [St. Sabas of] Jerusalem,” prescribes a legume soup without oil and other dry food, accompanied by wine.

(22) Evergetis [10], followed by (34) Machairas [72] in the thirteenth century, prescribes that the monks’ diet on Holy Thursday was to follow that set for non-fast days, that is, two cooked dishes prepared with olive oil accompanied by wine of the smaller measure. (27) Kecharitomene [47] is similar, but substitutes the larger measure of wine, as do (32) Mamas [18] and (33) Heliou Bomon [18]. The indulgent (28) Pantokrator [12] permits the use of olive oil on this day, as even the strict (43) Kasoulon [9] does, adding also “good wine,” on account of the upcoming sleepless vigil its monks were obligated to perform in honor of Christ’s passion. In the fourteenth century, however, (58) Menoikeion dissents on the use of olive oil, which it condemns as a contravention of “the sacred and apostolic canons,” though two meals seasoned with honey are permitted instead.

d. Good Friday

For Good Friday, (20) Black Mountain [64] recommends but does not require a total abstinence from food (to continue through Holy Saturday). If this cannot be done, the monks should have only bread and water and raw vegetables on Good Friday, then fast for Saturday only. This is also the approach taken by (30) Phoberos [28]. (22) Evergetis [10] simply orders that no cooking is to be done, but with its usual moderation provides for a meal of raw vegetables and fruits, accompanied by wine of the larger measure, in view of the exertions of the monks' Easter vigil. This is endorsed by (27) Kecharitomene [47], (32) Mamas [18], and (33) Heliou Bomon [18]. (28) Pantokrator [12] provides for a diet from Good Friday up till the eve of Easter consisting only of bread, legumes soaked in water, and wine mulled with cumin. (43) Kasoulon [9] typically takes the firmest position of its era, ordering that its monks should eat nothing from Holy Thursday evening until late night Saturday, in accordance with the provisions of the Synod in Trullo. Both (34) Machairas [72] in the thirteenth century and (58) Menoikeion [8] in the fourteenth century endorse this view in a conspicuous rejection of the more lenient Evergetian tradition.

APPENDIX B

e. Holy Saturday

In (4) Stoudios [A30], the monks begin the vesper service at the eleventh hour and break their fast when it is concluded with a meal of fruit, bread, and two measures of wine. In [B30], the meal is more substantial, consisting of cheese, fish, and eggs, with three measures of wine. (11) Ath. Rule [26], rejecting the Studite model, declares that the refectory should not be opened after the vesper service, begun in the middle of the twelfth hour, is concluded "because a large meal would weigh heavily on the stomach and on the mind." Its monks were to be content with the blessed bread, and two servings of wine distributed in the narthex.

In (20) Black Mountain [66], cf. [65] there is a discussion of various canonical authorities for when to end the Easter fast. The less stringent typika of "the great monasteries," including those discussed above, are preferred in their provision for a small meal of bread (baked ahead of time on Holy Thursday), fruit and a little wine at the end of the third hour of the night.

For its part, (22) Evergetis [10], followed by (27) Kecharitomene [47], simply provides for a "customary collation," in order to avoid distraction from the vigil. (32) Mamas [18] and (33) Heliou Bomon provide for opening the refectory for a collation. (30) Phoberos [28], citing the patristic tradition considered but rejected by the author of (20) Black Mountain [66], provides for the collation at the sixth hour of the night (i.e., at midnight). (28) Pantokrator [12], with typical lenience, allows its monks to have a meal of bread, legumes soaked in water, and wine mulled with cumin even before the vesper service. (43) Kasoulon [9], also typically, insists that the fast should last until midnight, at which time its monks were to partake of a cooked meal prepared in the refectory with olive oil and accompanied by wine.

In the thirteenth century, (34) Machairas [72] provides for a collation only, in the narthex, after the dismissal of the liturgy celebrated "around the third or fourth watch of the night." In the fourteenth century, (58) Menoikeion [8] likewise provides for breaking the fast in the church without a cooked meal after the dismissal of the liturgy.

F. Lenten Dietary Dispensations for Feasts

1. Feasts of St. John the Forerunner and the Forty Martyrs

The possible occurrence of these two feasts early during the Lenten fast led many of our authors to make provisions for special dietary concessions. (4) Stoudios [A30] (but not [B]) provides for a special diet of two dishes of vegetables and legumes, prepared with olive oil and whole olives and accompanied by three measures of wine for the feasts of the discovery of the head of St. John the Baptist (February 24) even if it should happen to occur in Lent. For the feast of the Forty Martyrs (March 9), the diet prescribed is a midday meal of two dishes prepared with olive oil accompanied by two measures of wine, then two more measures of wine in the evening.

APPENDIX B

For these same feasts, (20) Black Mountain [59] provides that one meal—the legume soup prepared without olive oil—be served, followed by any available fruit in the evening after vespers service, as long as they do not fall within the first week of Lent, in which case it was not permitted to break the fast. It should be noted that the liturgical calendar in (20) Black Mountain [89] reckons these as only minor feasts.

The provision of (22) Evergetis [10], followed by (29) Kosmosoteira [26], is for the celebration of these feasts whenever they might fall, breaking a fast if necessary, with a meal of two dishes prepared with olive oil and accompanied by wine of the larger measure. (30) Phoberos [28] provides for a relaxation only of wine of the larger measure. (27) Kecharitomene [47] allows for a celebration with fish and wine of the larger measure, but only if the feast falls on a day of the week besides Wednesday or Friday. If the feast occurs during the first week of Lent, the nuns were to have the benefit only of the diet for Lenten Tuesdays and Thursdays, i.e., two cooked dishes, prepared with olive oil and accompanied by wine of the smaller measure.

(32) Mamas [18] follows (27) Kecharitomene in restricting celebration of the feast of St. John to those occasions when it does not fall on a fast day, here interpreted to include Mondays also. The prescribed diet, fish and wine of the larger measure, is the same. The feast of the Forty Martyrs was thought to merit only shellfish and the same amount of wine. (33) Heliou Bomon [18] endorses these provisions. (28) Pantokrator [12], however, recognizes only the feast of the Forty Martyrs, on which occasion monks were to eat fish, unless the feast fell during the first week of Lent, when they would have only the concession of olive oil in the preparation of their food.

In the thirteenth century, (34) Machairas [70] follows the language of (22) Evergetis [10] but allows three dishes of food prepared with olive oil and accompanied by wine, but not fish. An occurrence during the first week of Lent would reduce the concession to a serving of wine.

2. Feast of the Annunciation

The feast of the Annunciation on March 25 was bound to occur sometime during the Lenten fast, sometimes even during Holy Week, leading many of our authors to make special dietary provisions for it. Without discussion of possible complications, (4) Stoudios [AB31] enjoins the celebration of the feast of the Annunciation with fish prepared with olive oil and accompanied by three measures of wine. In the tenth century, (7) Latros [5] does likewise, prescribing fish and the use of olive oil “with moderation.” (20) Black Mountain [60] also considers this feast a legitimate reason to break a fast with two meals, including any available fish, prepared with oil and accompanied by wine.

According to (22) Evergetis [10], its monks were to eat fish on this feast if it was sent by benefactors, but the item was not to be procured deliberately. Leftovers were to be consumed freely on the following day, but if there were none, the monks were to be given two dishes prepared with olive oil instead. If the feast fell during the first week of Lent, however, the festal concession would be reduced to wine of the larger measure and gruel. If the feast fell during the first three days of Holy Week, the monks would be allowed shellfish and wine of the larger measure in preference to the usual diet of legumes soaked in water, raw vegetables, fruit, and cuminflavored water. In a controversial position, (22) Evergetis [10] declares, “we will do everything appropriate for the feast even if it should fall on Holy Thursday, or Good Friday, or even holy Easter Eve itself.”

APPENDIX B

(29) Kosmosoteira [26], [27] faithfully follows these provisions of its Evergetian model. (30) Phoberos [28] mostly does so also, but restricts the consumption of leftovers from the feast on fast days and omits Easter Eve from the list of days in Holy Week when it must be celebrated. (27) Kecharitomene [47] permits a celebration with shellfish during Holy Week only on Monday, Tuesday, or Thursday (i.e., the non-fast days). Should the feast occur on Wednesday or on Good Friday, the nuns were to be content with cooked legumes and vegetables accompanied by olive oil. The Easter Eve fast was not to be broken. (32) Mamas [18], followed by (33) Heliou Bomon [18], makes similar provision for occurrences during Holy Week, but permits wine of the greater measure as a consolation on those days when cooked legumes had to be served for the feast in lieu of shellfish. (28) Pantokrator [12] is not much different, permitting celebration by consumption of fish at any time in Lent, including on Holy Thursday, except during the weekdays of the first week of Lent and the other days of Holy Week. If the feast occurred during a day during Holy Week when fish could not be consumed, the monks were to have the consolation of the use of wine and olive oil.

The usually strict (43) Kasoulon [24] is uncharacteristically lenient on this issue, providing for a three-day feast (March 24-26) featuring food prepared with olive oil and good wine, with no discussion of possible exceptions to its celebration. The usual exception for Holy Week is found in (34) Machairas [71], however, when its monks were to be content with legumes, fresh vegetables, seasonal fruits, and hot water flavored with honey and cumin, though an occurrence on Holy Thursday, Good Friday, or Holy Saturday would be marked by serving wine of the “customary allotment.”

3. Performance of the Great Canon

The special concessionary diet of (4) Stoudios [A30] (but not [B]) prescribed for an occurrence of the feast of the discovery of the head of St. John the Baptist was also valid for the Wednesday and Thursday of the fifth week in Lent when the monks performed the Great Canon. In the late eleventh century, (20) Black Mountain [58] rejects the notion of breaking a fast at this time “because it is rather a day of grief and not a feast.” (22) Evergetis [10], followed by (27) Kecharitomene [47], provides for a meal of the type ordinarily provided on a Lenten weekday, that is, two cooked dishes, one with olive oil, and wine with the smaller measure, on the Thursday of the Great Canon. (43) Kasoulon [22] typically refuses to grant a substantial dietary concession, but permits the superior to approve the consumption of wine on Wednesday “on account of the labor the brothers are about to take up.” On the following Thursday, the monks would eat a meal prepared with olive oil and accompanied with good wine. (34) Machairas [69] notes that the monks will miss supper on Wednesday and Thursday, but provides for a refreshment for the chanters on Friday.

4. Feast of St. Lazarus

(4) Stoudios [A30] orders that the Saturday feast of St. Lazarus on the day before Palm Sunday be celebrated in the same way as that of St. Theodore, i.e., with two dishes at the midday meal prepared with olive oil and accompanied by two measures of wine, followed by two more in the evening. On the Friday before the feast, (20) Black Mountain [61] allows one meal, legume soup prepared without oil, any available fruits, and bread and water. (43) Kasoulon [16], [23] allows the superior to grant a concession of wine on the Friday evening before Lazarus Saturday.

APPENDIX B

5. Feasts of the Presentation and of St. Symeon

(29) Kosmosoteira [27], observing that these feasts, which occurred on February 2 and 3 respectively, often fell during the first week of Lent, orders that they be kept in the same way as the feast of the Annunciation.

G. Rules for Other Fasts

1. Fast of the Holy Apostles

(43) Kasoulon [10] provides the parameters of this fast, which begins on the Monday after the feast of All Saints and extends to the vigil of the feast of Saints Peter and Paul on June 29. In the ninth century, (4) Stoudios [AB29] provides that the monks should abstain from fish, cheese, and eggs during this fast, except for those days on which they did not sing the hours [i.e., on Sundays and feasts]. The diet was to consist of two dishes, one of vegetables served with olive oil and another of legumes without, accompanied by two servings of wine at the ninth hour and two in the evening. On feast days during this period of fasting, the monks were not only allowed to have cheese and other foods, but also to drink three measures of wine at the sixth hour and two more in the evening.

In the tenth century, (11) Ath. Rule [23] orders abstinence from fish, except on Sundays and feasts, during this fast. On Mondays, Wednesdays, and Fridays, the monks were also to abstain from wine and not use oil with their food, but otherwise they were to make use [24] of their customary diet of vegetables and legumes.

At the end of the eleventh century, (20) Black Mountain [R38] prescribes a diet on regular weekdays (here Tuesdays and Thursdays) of two courses of boiled vegetables without oil and dry foods at the ninth hour. On the remaining weekday fast days, the diet was to be reduced to two portions of bread with water. This is said [31] to be in accord with the typika cited above and other authorities.

(22) Evergetis [10], followed by (29) Kosmosoteira [28], cf. [63] provides for a meal at the seventh hour of two dishes cooked with olive oil and wine of the larger measure, followed later by a supper consisting of a small piece of bread and the larger measure of wine “because of the heat and dryness of the season.” The monks were to abstain from fish, unless it was given to the monastery by external benefactors. (30) Phoberos [29] endorses these prescriptions, but applies them to regular weekdays (Tuesdays and Thursdays); on Wednesdays and Fridays, the monks were to abstain [19] also from cheese, eggs, and fish.

In (23) Pakourianos [10], the rule is abstinence from olive oil on the three fast days (Monday, Wednesday, and Friday), but with two measures of wine at the main meal and one in the evening.

(27) Kecharitomene [48] is based on the provisions of (22) Evergetis [10] but more lenient. The nuns, limited to two dishes on Mondays, Wednesdays, and Fridays, are permitted as many as three on Tuesdays and Thursdays at the discretion of the mother superior; they were to dine on fish supplied by the convent or some refreshment sent by a benefactor. As in (22) Evergetis [10], there should also be a supper of bread, to which available raw vegetables and fruit are added, all accompanied by wine of the larger measure “because of the heat and dryness of the season.”

APPENDIX B

(32) Mamas [18], followed by (33) Heliou Bomon [18], also makes its own customized use of (22) Evergetis [10], prescribing dry food only on Mondays, Wednesdays, and Fridays, and two or three dishes cooked with olive oil on Tuesdays and Thursdays. The superior is permitted to provide refreshments and make dietary concessions at his discretion. Fish supplied by the monastery or a benefactor was to be consumed on Saturdays and Sundays. Fish supplied by a benefactor could also be eaten on Tuesdays and Thursdays. Wine distributed with the greater measure was to be served at meals on all of these days “on account of the burning heat and dryness of the season,” and a supper served, too, of bread and seasonal raw vegetables and fruit.

Among other twelfth-century documents, (28) Pantokrator [12] provides for an abstinence from cheese and eggs “to be observed on the days without a fast” (i.e., days other than Wednesdays and Fridays); supper would be served, however. (29) Kosmosoteira [63] simply leaves the determination of food and drink during this fast to the discretion of the superior. (31) Areia [T5] provides for a modification of its model, the typikon of Stoudios (i.e., (4) Stoudios [AB29]), permitting its monks to eat twice a day “since the days are long at that time of year.” The fast is said to differ from non-fast days only in eating after the recitation of the psalms at the third and sixth hours and in abstaining from cheese and eggs. The stern (43) Kasoulon limits [10] its monks to a single meal a day “according to the tradition of the holy apostles,” prescribes a diet like that for the fast of St. Philip (see G.2 below), and permits [3] the consumption of fish only on the feast of St. John the Baptist.

In the thirteenth century, (34) Machairas [76], based loosely on (22) Evergetis [10], prescribes two dishes cooked with oil and accompanied by the customary allotment of wine. The same was to apply for Saturdays and Sundays, except that there would be three cooked dishes. On all of these days there would be a supper consisting of a small piece of bread and a few seasonal olives or fruits, accompanied by wine of the smaller allotment. On Mondays, Wednesdays, and Fridays, the monks were to eat at the seventh hour after the completion of the daily office, dining on cooked legumes and raw vegetables and fruit, if available, accompanied by water. The consumption of any other cooked food or wine was forbidden, as was the use of oil. The contemporary (45) Neophytos [C4] contents itself with a command to observe the provisions of the (liturgical) typikon without imposing any additional obligations “because of the hot weather and the length of the daytime.”

In the fourteenth century, (58) Menoikeion [8] restricts its monks to one meal of legumes or vegetables with vinegar but no wine on Mondays, Wednesdays, and Fridays. On Tuesdays, Thursdays, Saturdays, and Sundays, the diet was to be increased to two meals prepared with olive oil and served with wine. In the fifteenth century, (60) Charsianeites [C17], orders abstention from boiled food, oil, and wine on Wednesdays and Fridays.

2. Fast of St. Philip (or the Holy Nativity)

This is the Advent fast, which begins after the feast of St. Philip, November 14. The provisions for this fast generally followed those set forth for the fast of the Holy Apostles. (4) Stoudios [A29] so provides, while [B29] restricts its monks to one meal a day “on account of the short days during the fast” but compensates them with three measures of wine. (11) Ath. Rule [24] adopts this restriction of one meal a day also. (20) Black Mountain [54] provides an option for moving the single meal from the ninth hour to the night, again “because of the shortness of the days.”

(22) Evergetis [10] likewise provides for a diet for what it calls the “fast of the Holy Nativity” that is similar to that of the fast of Holy Apostles, with a single meal to take place at the ninth hour after the completion of the canonical office. The shortness of the days made it impossible to conduct the divine liturgy during the fast. A fast day was to be identifiable as one on which “God is the Lord” (Ps. 117 [118]:27) is not sung at matins but rather the “Alleluia.” (27) Kecharitomene [48], (29) Kosmosoteira [28] (but cf. [63]), (32) Mamas [18], and (33) Heliou Bomon [18] all follow these Evergetian prescriptions, as does (30) Phoberos [30], which identifies the days on which fasting is required as Mondays, Wednesdays, and Fridays. (27) Kecharitomene [48] prescribes the addition of fish to the diet on the feast of the Entrance of the Mother of God into the Temple (Presentation of the Virgin in the Temple), which occurred on November 21.

(23) Pakourianos [10] provides for a single meal at the ninth hour each day during this fast except for those days on which “God is the Lord” is sung (Mondays, Wednesdays, and Fridays), when the monks should also abstain from the use of olive oil. Wine was not to be consumed during this fast (or any of the others) except on Saturdays and Sundays, when the monks would receive a single cup of wine “for refreshment.” (28) Pantokrator [12] restricts the eating of fish and limits the monks to one meal a day after the completion of the office of lamplighting. Weekday meals were to be prepared without the use of olive oil. The contemporary (31) Areia [T5] simply references the typikon of Stoudios, i.e., (4) Stoudios [A29], for its regulations for this fast.

In (43) Kasoulon [3] we find a prescription for two cooked dishes on Tuesdays and Thursdays, including fish, but no use of olive oil on Wednesdays and Fridays. The consumption of fish is also permitted on the feast of the Entrance of the Mother of God into the Temple (Presentation of the Virgin in the Temple) and for the three-day feast of St. Nicholas (December 5-7).

In the thirteenth century, (34) Machairas [76] follows (22) Evergetis [10] in decreeing that the diet should be the same as for the fast of the Holy Apostles. The contemporary (45) Neophytos [C4] contents itself with a command to observe the provisions of the liturgical typikon.

In the fourteenth century, (58) Menoikeion [8], which delimits the fast from the feast of St. Nicholas to Christmas, instructs its monks to eat only once a day except for Saturdays and Sundays, and to abstain from using olive oil or drinking wine on Tuesdays and Thursdays, a restriction that presumably also applied during the three fast days. In the fifteenth century, (60) Charsianeites [C17] provides for a forty-day fast during which its monks should abstain from oil and wine on Wednesdays and Fridays (except for feasts of the Lord and those of great saints). There was to be only one daily meal on these days, to take place after the chanting of the hours and the mesoria at vespers; it would consist of dry foods and seasonal fruits accompanied only by water.

3. Fast of the Mother of God

Among our documents, only (20) Black Mountain [87], [88], (30) Phoberos [31], and (60) Charsianeites [C17] recognize this fast, which precedes the feast of the Dormition on August 15. (20) Black Mountain [87] provides a discussion of when it should begin (at the beginning of the month of August, but not on a Wednesday or Friday) and prescribes a diet of two kinds of food and drink “just as on the fast of the Holy Apostles and Christmas.” (30) Phoberos [31] provides for a fast of the Dormition from the beginning of August until the “very day of the holy Mother of God.” During this fast, neither cheese nor eggs nor fish were to be eaten, except for Saturdays and Sundays when the consumption of fish was allowed “because of your weakness.” (60) Charsianeites [C17] provides for abstinence from boiled food, oil, and wine on Wednesday and Friday fast days.

APPENDIX B

H. Diet from Easter to the Sunday after Pentecost

For the period from Easter until the feast of All Saints on the Sunday after Pentecost, (4) Stoudios [A29] provides for a diet of two dishes of garden vegetables and legumes prepared with olive oil, fish, cheese, and eggs, accompanied by three measures of wine. There was to be an additional three measures of wine distributed at the evening meal. In [B29], the diet for the evening meal is specified as bread and leftovers from the midday meal; the number of permitted servings of wine is only two. (11) Ath. Rule [22], taking its lead from (4) Stoudios [AB29], mentions only the two courses of the midday meal, to consist of green vegetables and legumes seasoned with three litrai of oil.

In the eleventh century, (23) Pakourianos [8] provides for a “more lavish” dinner on Easter Sunday because the monks “will be tired and hungry having completed a vigil the previous night.” During the fifty days of the Easter season leading up to Pentecost, the monks were to have four courses at their meals, including cheese and “whatever else divine providence supplies,” accompanied by two measures of wine each. The contemporary (20) Black Mountain [34] provides that during Easter week and up until the feast of All Saints, its monks should eat at the same time and, if possible, the same food (though not the same quantity) as they did on Easter itself. A little later in the early twelfth century, (30) Phoberos [28] provides for the celebration of the Resurrection for forty days, then ten days later, a week-long celebration of the feast of Pentecost, to be followed by the fast of the Holy Apostles, “for it is right that you should be glad at the gift from God and that you should fast after the relaxation.”

During Easter season, for its purposes from Easter [“Radiant”] Sunday until the Sunday of All Saints, even the stern (43) Kasoulon [10] allows its monks to eat twice a day; there was also to be [17] a feast on Pentecost Sunday, but after the vespers service rather than after the conclusion of the liturgy.

In the thirteenth century, (34) Machairas [74] permits its monks to eat cheese, eggs, and milk every day during the Week of Renovation (Sunday after Easter) as well as to drink wine. This is cited in [75] as an observance from the liturgical typikon of St. Sabas.

I. Diet from the Feast of the Apostles to the Feast of St. Philip

This is the time of the church year between the fast of the Holy Apostles and the fast of St. Philip (late summer and fall). In the ninth century, (4) Stoudios [A29] provides that its monks, constrained by their obligation to perform prayers at the ninth hour, were to observe the dietary regime previously prescribed for the aforementioned fasts. If a feast of a saint happened to fall on one of these days, however, the monks were to be allowed to eat fish, accompanied by three servings of wine at the midday meal, and to have two servings later in the evening. [B29] permits also cheese and eggs on these feast days. In the tenth century, making some use of (4) Stoudios [AB29], (11) Ath. Rule [24], forbids the use of oil or wine on Wednesdays and Fridays during this period and, like (4) Stoudios [B29], permits the use of cheese and eggs on feasts.

APPENDIX B

(20) Black Mountain [R39] provides that after the fast of the Holy Apostles down through the feast of St. Philip, the monks were to have a meal at the ninth hour of two courses of boiled vegetables prepared without oil, accompanied by unsweetened juice. Fasts on Mondays, Wednesdays, and Fridays could be broken [R38], cf. [91] to consume a benefactor's refreshment, even by monks doing penances who ordinarily would not be allowed to do so.

In the early twelfth century, (30) Phoberos [28], cf. [19] provides that its monks, after the conclusion of the fast of the Holy Apostles, were to continue to fast on Wednesdays and Fridays.

J. Diet on Dominical Feasts

Most—though not all—of our authors were willing to grant dietary dispensations for the celebration of the so-called dominical feasts, the great feasts of the Lord, and sometimes for other important feasts as well.

1. General Principles

(4) Stoudios [29], followed in the tenth century by (11) Ath. Rule [24], permits an exemption from the usual requirements for fasting on Wednesdays and Fridays from the feast of the Holy Apostles to the feast of St. Philip in the event that a major feast fell on one of these days. The monks would then be allowed to eat fish, accompanied by three servings of wine at the midday meal, and to have two servings later in the evening. (11) Ath. Rule [24] also allows its monks to eat cheese and eggs, and elsewhere [31] provides for an exemption from the requirement of the recitation of hours and permits partaking of two meals on these days.

In the late eleventh century, (20) Black Mountain [38] permits two meals prepared with oil on dominical feasts that happened to coincide with fast days; a third dish supplied by a benefactor “as frequently happens” could also be consumed on these feast days. Great feasts are defined [48] as those of Christ and the Mother of God, the birth and the beheading of St. John the Baptist (June 24 and February 24), and the feast of the apostles Peter and Paul (June 29). Should they fall on a Monday, Wednesday, or Friday, the more lenient dietary regulations for Sunday would be observed, except during Lent. Dominical feasts were [38] also the only days, aside from Sundays or whenever offered by benefactors, that wine could be consumed. Fasts were not to be broken [32] for minor feasts, however. On the medium feasts the dietary regime was to remain [49] the same, but the meals would be offered both at the sixth hour and at night, even on fast days, when the monks would eat dry food twice or, optionally, cooked food without relish or even with it “whenever it is not suspect as a risk to the soul.” On minor feasts, there would be [50] one meal a day, at the ninth hour; if such a feast fell on a fast day, the monks would eat dry food “as on the ordinary day” at one meal at the ninth hour. The general practice was to advance the hour of the daily meal, so that “relaxation may take place.” As with medium feasts, serving cooked food with or without oil is offered as an option “if God be pleased.”

(22) Evergetis [11] simply provides for a more elaborate celebration of the feasts of the Lord and of the Mother of God, to be reflected in the meals of the monks. (29) Kosmosoteira [29] endorses this injunction. (28) Pantokrator [12] is more specific, providing for cooked dishes of vegetables and legumes, seasonal fruits, fish, and a measure of wine “greater than is customary.” (32) Mamas [17], followed by (33) Heliou Bomon [17], allows the consumption of fish on Wednesday and Friday fast days if a dominical feast should occur on them, to be provided by a benefactor or else by the superior.

APPENDIX B

(30) Phoberos [18] makes a distinction between (minor) feasts, on which days Wednesday and Friday fasts should be observed, and those (major) feasts marked with crosses on which these fasts were to be broken with meals of cooked legumes, vegetables, and olive oil. Citing the example of various synaxaria, including those of the “Holy Mountain” (cf. (11) Ath. Rule [24]), this typikon permits three measures of wine at the midday meal and two at the evening meal. Those monks are encouraged [19], however, who chose voluntarily to abstain from cooked food on all Wednesdays and Fridays, even those on which great feasts might chance to fall,

The generally stern (43) Kasoulon [3] nevertheless permits the consumption of fish on the feasts of the Entry of the Mother of God into the Temple (Presentation of the Virgin in the Temple) (November 21), of St. Nicholas (December 5-7), and of St. John the Baptist (June 24). A more extended list of permitted exceptions is found in [5], cf. [6]. The exemptions are extended in [18] to octaves of dominical feasts and those of the Mother of God, during which no fasting was to take place and the monks would eat fish and other dishes prepared with olive oil.

In the thirteenth century, (34) Machairas [77] permits fasts on Mondays, Wednesdays, and Fridays to be broken for the celebration of dominical feasts, those of the Twelve Apostles, or “any of the great teachers . . . or great fathers.” Yet a little later, (36) Blemmydes [11] denounces those who “say that occasionally Wednesday and Friday should be counted as a Saturday and Sunday from the point of view of eating well, on the pretext of celebrating the Lord’s feast days and refuting the nonsense of heretics.” Towards the end of the thirteenth century, (39) Lips [32] allows its nuns to set aside the usual dietary regulations for Wednesday and Friday fasts to celebrate a dominical feast or one of the apostles or “famous hierarchs.” The consumption of fish is permitted on such a day (if available) or at least the use of olive oil in the preparation of the meal. Other delicacies such as cheese and milk were also permitted.

In the early fourteenth century, however, (55) Athanasios I [5] denounces those who break fast days Mondays, Wednesdays, and Fridays “because of the excuse of feast days, but in truth because of a compulsion to gluttony.” Apparently unaffected by this, (58) Menoikeion [8] later on in the same century permits the superior to offer unspecified “relief” to his monks on “any of the Lord or of the great saints . . . on account of the work associated with the feast and the vigil.” In the early fifteenth century, (60) Charsianeites [C17] grants an exemption from abstinence from oil and wine on Wednesday and Friday fast days whenever a dominical feast or anniversary of a great saint should occur on these days in the forty days before Christmas.

2. Feast of the Dormition (August 15)

Some documents of the late eleventh and the twelfth centuries provide for special celebrations of this feast. (22) Evergetis [11] makes no specific dietary provision, but (32) Mamas [19] provides that grapes blessed by the priest in the church at the daily service were to be served to the monks two or three times after the feast, along with figs and melons (daily) whenever they came in season. (43) Kasoulon [11] also provides for the eating of blessed grapes along with the blessed bread (klaston) on this feast.

3. Feast of the Exaltation (September 14)

In the twelfth century, (43) Kasoulon [12] provides for a celebration of the feast of the Exaltation of the Holy Cross with two meals, limited, however, to beans, legumes, or some other vegetable seasoned with vinegar. Citing the typikon of the Holy Mountain (though there is no comparable reference in (11) Ath. Typikon), fish and the use of olive oil are prohibited in favor of bread and squash with vinegar, accompanied with wine.

APPENDIX B

K. Diet during Christmastide

Supplementing (4) Stoudios [AB29], (11) Ath. Rule [24] notes that the diet for the twelve days of Christmas was to be like that for the season of Pentecost, that is, the two courses at the midday meal of green vegetables and legumes seasoned with oil as provided for in [22]. There is no full discussion in (20) Black Mountain [54], just a provision for a full meal at night if the vigil service for Christmas or the Epiphany should happen to fall on a Saturday or Sunday when fasting was prohibited, and a concession for the monks to consume cheese or eggs sent by benefactors on Mondays, Wednesdays, or Fridays during the twelve days of Christmas. Both of these dietary provisions were motivated by a desire to refute the practices of various sectaries. In the contemporary (23) Pakourianos [8], there is a provision for serving four courses to the monks at their main meal and cheese and “whatever else divine providence supplies” at the evening meal, accompanied by two measures of wine.

In the early twelfth century, (30) Phoberos [19] also addresses the matter of the timing of meals on the vigils of Christmas or Epiphany happening to fall on a Saturday or a Sunday, providing for an evening meal of legumes and vegetables prepared with olive oil, accompanied by wine. A little later, (43) Kasoulon [8] also delays the daily meal on the vigils of Christmas and Epiphany to the evening under these circumstances “if the grace of the Holy Spirit has made provision for us.” This document also exempts [17] its monks from fasting from Christmas until the octave of Epiphany, during which time they were to eat fish, drink wine, and use olive oil freely. In the thirteenth century, (34) Machairas [77] is even more generous, permitting its monks to eat cheese, milk, and eggs as well as to drink wine during the twelve days of Christmas.

L. Diet from Christmastide to Cheesefare Week

For this period of the church year, (11) Ath. Rule [24] provides that “the rule of the previous days is observed,” i.e., the prohibition on the use of oil or wine on Wednesdays and Fridays and the explicit permission to use cheese and eggs on feasts as provided for the time between the fast of the Holy Apostles and the feast of St. Philip in [24]. The week before Cheesefare Week was to be absolutely free of fasting.

In the late eleventh century, (20) Black Mountain [55] provides for eating a little cheese or egg at the ninth hour on the Wednesday and Friday of the week before Meatfare week as a rejection of the contemporaneous fast of Armenian sectaries. This was patterned [90] on the observance for Cheesefare week itself; others are reported to have suspended fasting entirely on these two days for the same purpose, but that practice is not endorsed here.

In the early twelfth century, (30) Phoberos [19] provides for an abstinence from cheese, eggs, and fish on Wednesdays and Fridays during Christmas, in the week before Meatfare week, and during Cheesefare week. The need to refute Armenian sectaries by consuming cheese is rejected, but if a visitor insisted on doing so on the days before Meatfare or during Cheesefare week, the monks were to eat a little cheese to oblige him. Later in that same century, (32) Mamas [19] provides for the eating of cheese and eggs during the entire week prior to Meatfare to refute the Armenian practice of eating only bread and water during this week. (33) Heliou Bomon [19] and, in the thirteenth century, (34) Machairas [78] endorse this position. (36) Blemmydes [11] alludes to the controversy without providing for an alteration of existing dietary practices.

APPENDIX B

M. Diet during Cheesefare Week

In the late eleventh century, (20) Black Mountain [55], cf. [90] orders the monks to eat cheese at the common meal on Wednesday and Friday of this week after the liturgy of the Presanctified Gifts. In the twelfth century, (30) Phoberos [19] similarly provides for eating cheese and eggs on Wednesday and Friday after this liturgy. Otherwise during this week, the monks are to eat a cooked dish in preference to dry food, but not cheese, eggs, or fish. (28) Pantokrator [12] likewise endorses the eating of cheese and eggs so that “the faithful may not seem to observe the fasts of unbelievers by respecting their ordinances.” (32) Mamas [19], followed by (33) Heliou Bomon [19], endorses eating cheese and eggs during the entire week of Cheesefare.

In (43) Kasoulon [19], the monks fast every day during this week, which they call week of “Cheesefast,” except for Saturday and Sunday when they consume a meal prepared with olive oil and fish.

In the thirteenth century, (34) Machairas [78] follows (32) Mamas [19] in prescribing the consumption of cheese and eggs during the entire week of Cheesefare, while in the fourteenth century, (58) Menoikeion [8] appears to restrict its consumption to two days, probably Wednesday and Friday as in (20) Black Mountain [55].

N. Special Rules

In (11) Ath. Rule [30], cf. [31] the monastery’s heavy manual laborers, including metal workers, muleteers, shipwrights, carpenters, vineyard and bakery workers, were to get extra rations of bread and wine when they missed the midday meal, except on Monday, Wednesday, and Friday fast days. Others performing work outdoors were to be supplied with just bread, to be eaten with water. The superior is also allowed [31] to exercise his discretion in making dietary concessions for the weak and the sick. In the late eleventh century, (23) Pakourianos [8] gives the superior a general right to add food to the diet of the monks, with the intent of “blunting the impulses of those who favor indulgence.” In the twelfth century, (43) Kasoulon [19] provides for saving the food share of a monk who was absent on some duty until he was able to return, unless the food was likely to spoil beforehand. There is also a concession [25], apparently later withdrawn, allowing fishermen monks to eat fish, drink wine, and use olive oil during Lent except on Wednesday and Friday fast days.

Appendix C

Topical Interrelationships of the Families of the Typika of the Byzantine Monastic Reform Movement

Part One: Topical Interrelationships of the Evergetian Family of Monastic Typika

This part illustrates the textual commonalities of (22) Evergetis with seven other typika: (27) Kecharitomene, (29) Kosomosoteira, (30) Phoberos, (32) Mamas, (33) Heliou Bomon, (34) Machairas, and (58) Menoikeion.

Part Two: Topical Interrelationships of the Post-Evergetian Family of Monastic Typika

This part illustrates the textual commonalities of (27) Kecharitomene with five other typika: (32) Mamas, (33) Heliou Bomon, (34) Machairas, (47) Philanthropos, and (58) Menoikeion.

Part Three: Topical Interrelationships of the Maman Family of Monastic Typika

This part illustrates the textual commonalities of (32) Mamas with three other typika: (33) Heliou Bomon, (34) Machairas, and (58) Menoikeion.

Common Symbols

- indicates no parallel treatment
- indicates a parallel but textually independent treatment

Part One: Topical Interrelationships of the Evergetian Family of Monastic Typika

Evergetis		Kecharitomene	Kosmosoteira	Phoberos	Mamas	Heliou Bomon	Machairas	Menoikeion
(22)	Topic	(27)	(29)	(30)	(32)	(33)	(34)	(58)
3	List of Benefactions	–	–	8	–	–	–	–
	Introduction to the Hours	–	–	–	–	–	30	–
4	First Hour	32	13	9	47	46	31	–
	Enforcement of Discipline	–					32	–
	Private Recitation/Office	–		33	–
	Omission of Genuflections	33	14	11	32	32	34	–
	Third and Sixth Hours						36	–
	Reception of Communion						–	–
5	Frequency of Reception	33	14	11	32	32	37	16
	Non-Reception Blameworthy	–	–	–	–	–	38	–
	Preparation for Communion	–	–	–	–	–	39	–
		–	–	–	–	–	–	–
6	Ninth Hour	35	15	12	47	46	42	–
	Vespers						43	–
	Compline	36					44	–
	Night Office	37		–	–
	Midnight Office	38		45	–
		46		–	–
Matins	39	13	–	–	–	48	–
7	Confession to be offered	16	16	14	29	29	50	13
	Guidelines for Confession	–	17		30	30	51	–
	Expel Non-Confessants	–	–	–	–	–	52	13
	Confession at Tonsure	–	18	15	–	–	53	–
8	Use of the Synaxarion	–	19	16	–	–	–	–

(22)	Topic	(27)	(29)	(30)	(32)	(33)	(34)	(58)
9	Importance of the Diet	–	20	20	17	17	61	8
	Refectory Procedures	40	21	21			62
	Discipline of Disorderly	41			–	–	63
	Disputes over Precedence	42	22	22	36	35	64	–
	No Sharing of Food	43	23		–	–	–	–
	No Secret Eating	49		23	20	20	–	–
	Evening Meal	–	24	24	–	–	66	–
	Lateness and Absences	–		26	–	–	–	–
10	Diet/First Week of Lent	47	25	27	18	18	67	8
	Lenten Diet			26			28		68
	Diet on Lenten Weekends							69	–
	Diet for the Great Canon		27					70	–
	Diet/Feast of St. John							71	–
	Diet/Feast of Annunciation			72			8
	Diet for Holy Week		28	29			73	–
	Discretion for the Sick						48	30	76	8
	Fast of the Holy Apostles
	Fast of the Nativity
11	Patronal Feast	59	29	32	–	48	27	–
12	Institutional Independence	1	31	33	4	4	21	3
13	Importance of Superior	–	–	34	–	–	–	–
	Qualifications for Office	–	32	35	7	7	80	–
	Investiture of Steward	–	34	–	7	7	81	–
	Promotion of Steward	–	–	35	–	–	–	–
	Investiture of Superior	11	33	–	1	1	–	–
	Fickleness of Human Nature	13	–	–	2	2	88	–
Superior's Tenure	41		35	–	–	89	–
Justifications for Removal		–		–	–	–	90	–
14	Retain Bad Superior	–	–	–	–	–	–	–
	Removal of the Superior	13	–	–	2	2	90	–
	Deposed Superior Remains		41	35			–	–
	Strife-Free Elections	12	42	–	45	44	–	18

(22)	Topic	(27)	(29)	(30)	(32)	(33)	(34)	(58)
15	Confession Only to Superior	16	–	35	29	29	141	13
	Expel Non-Confessing Monks	–	–	36	–	–	54	–
16	Obedience to the Superior	12	43		24	24	142	–
	Monk's Mutual Affection	–	–		–	–	143	–
17	Exhortation to the Superior	12	44		42	41	144	19
	Hostility to Privilege		42	45	44	148	18
18	Superior not Accountable	–	81	37	44	43	145	–
	No Favors for Relatives	–	–				146	–
	Correction of the Superior	–	–				147	–
19	Alienation Procedures	10	45	38	37	37	94	–
20	Bookkeeping Requirements	–	46	–	–	–	–	–
21	No Idle Talking	–	47	39	35	34	113	17
	No Arguing	–		40	–	–	–	–
22	No Secret Eating	49		41	20	20	–	–
	No Personal Possessions	50		35	34	87	–
23	Number of Monks	5	48	42	5	5	–	–
24	Servants Not Permitted	–	–	43	34	33	87	–
	Number of Monks in Cells	–	51		–	–	–	–
25	Communal Wardrobe	52	52	44	28	28	102	12
	Exchange of garments	–			–	–	103
26	Equality in Food and Drink	56	53	45	34	33	106	–
	More Food for Sick Monks						107	–
27	Superior to Inspect Cells	50			20	20	–	–
28	Bathing	58			97	46	28	28
29	Investiture of Officials	18	35	47	6	6	92	–
30	Three Treasurers	24	36		10	10	100	6
31	Refectorian	25	37	–	–	–	–
	Disciplinary Official	26		–	–	114	–
32	Officials' Tenure of Office	–	38	48	–	–	92	22
33	Exhortation to Officials	25	39		23	23	–	10
34	Property Administrators	31	40	49	–	–	109	–
35	Founder's Commemoration	71	7	50	40	50	154	–

(22)	Topic	(27)	(29)	(30)	(32)	(33)	(34)	(58)
36	Monks' Commemoration	70	54	50	39	39	157	–
	Benefactors' Commemoration		–		40	–	156	–
37	Novitiate for Notables	30	55	51	22	22	55	–
	Novitiate for Others		–				56	–
	No Mandatory Entrance Gifts	7	55	53A			57	–
	Voluntary Gifts Acceptable				58	–
	Gifts Cannot be Reclaimed	7	–	52	5	5	59	–
	Monks Tonsured Elsewhere	54	–	52	22	22	60	–
38	Charitable Distributions	64	6	54	13	13	118	22
	Women Excluded from Charity	–	56	55	–	–	118	–
	Rationale for Exclusion	–			–	–	119	–
39	Opposite Sex Barred	17	84		–	27	27	115
	Additional Offices Allowed	–	–	–	14	14	–	–
40	Maintenance of the Typikon	–	–	–	15	15	158	–
41	Need to Discuss Sick Monks	57	61	55	34	33	–	–
	Care for Sick Monks			56			108	–
42	Final Instructions	78	57	59	46	45	163	20
	Scriptural Exhortations						166
43	Reading of the Typikon	65	59		–	16	16	167
	Scriptural Blessing	78	–	–	46	45	168	–

Part Two: Topical Interrelationships of the Post-Evergetian Family of Monastic Typika

Kechartomene (27)	Topic	Mamas (32)	Heliou Bomon (33)	Machairas (34)	Philanthropos (47)	Menoikeion (58)
2	Need to Discuss Cenobitic Life	5	5	–	1	–
	Institution of Cenobiticism	–	–	–	2	–
	Maintenance of Cenobiticism	–	–	–	3	–
	Legal Safeguard for Preservation	–	–	–	4	–
3	Role of the Protector	3	3	–	–	22
11	Election of the Superior	1	1	17	–	22
14	Duties of the Steward	7	7	–	–	–
19	Duties of the Sacristan	9	9	–	–	5
20	Duties of the Ecclesiarch	8	8	93	–	4
23	Duties of the Provisioner	11	11	96	–	–
24	Duties of the Treasurers	10	10	100	–	6
29	Duties of the Gatekeeper	12	12	116	–	7
45	Second Dinner Sitting for Servers	17	17	–	–	8
46	Diet on Ordinary Days			–	–
49	No Secret Eating	20	20	–	–	–
50	Inspection of Cells at Any Time	20	20	120	–	–
53	No External Monks or Imposed Guests	26	26	–	–	11
55	Maintenance of Cenobitic Lifestyle	25	25	11	–	–

Part Three: Topical Interrelationships of the Maman Family of Monastic Typika

Mamas (27)	Topic	Heliou Bomon (34)	Machairas (47)	Menoikeion (58)
13	Charity for Poor Monks	13	–	7
15	Inalterability of the Typikon	15	–	–
16	Reading of the Typikon	16	167	9
19	Anti-Artziburian Diet	19	78	–
	Share Meals with Manual Workers		79	–
21	No Absences from the Office	21	49	–
24	Honors Due the Superior	24	–	–
27	Women and Laymen Barred	27	119	–
28	Clothing Allowance	28	–	12
29	Alternate Confessors	29	–	13
31	Third and Sixth Hours	31	35	–
33	Maintenance of Elderly Monks	34	–	–
36	Order of Seating at Meals	35	65	–
37	Purpose of the Inventory	37	94	–
38	Exhortation to the Protector	38	161	–
41	Preservation of the Typikon	40	158	–
	Curse Against Violators		162	–
43	Superior from Another Monastery	42	–	–
48	Exhortation of the Superior	47	–	–

General Bibliography

I	General Typika
II	Byzantine Church
III	Byzantine Monasticism
IV	Byzantine Monks
V	Earlier Monastic Rules
VI	Egyptian Monasticism
VII	Basilian Monasticism
VIII	Syro-Palestinian Monasticism
IX	Early Ascetic Fathers
X	Early Constantinopolitan Monasticism
XI	Italo-Greek Monasticism
XII	Byzantine Monasticism and the West
XIII	Byzantine Monasticism and the Slavs
XIV	Foundation and Governance
XV	Patronage
XVI	Monastic Property
XVII	Philanthropy
XVIII	External Relations
XIX	Revenues
XX	Monasticism in the Provinces
XXI	Women in Byzantine Monasticism
XXII	Spirituality
XXIII	Liturgy
XXIV	Monasticism and the Charistike
XXV	Monasticism and Ecclesiastical Reform
XXVI	Monastic Architecture and Furnishings
XXVII	Daily Life
	A. Manual Labor and Crafts
	B. Diet
	C. Dress
	D. Hygiene
XXVIII	Books and Libraries
XXIX	Lexicographical Studies
XXX	Reference

GENERAL BIBLIOGRAPHY

I General Typika

- Allatius, Leo. De libris et rebus ecclesiasticis graecorum (Paris, 1646).
- Bezobrazov, P. "Materiali dlya istorii vizantiiskoi imperii: I. Ne izdannie monastirskie ustav," ZMNP 254 (1887), 65–78; rev. Ed. Kurtz, BZ 2 (1893), 627–31.
- Dmitrievsky, Aleksei. Opisanie liturgicheskikh rykopisei, vol. 1: Typika (Kiev, 1895); vol. 2: Euchologia (Kiev, 1901); vol. 3: Typika (Petrograd, 1917).
- Galatariotou, Catia. "Byzantine Ktetorika Typika: A Comparative Study," REB 45 (1987), 77–138.
- Janin, R. "Le monachisme byzantin au Moyen Age. Commende et typica (X^e–XIV^e siècle)," REB 22 (1964), 5–44.
- Konidares, Ioannes M. Nomike theorese ton monasteriakon typikon (Athens, 1984).
- MacCoull, L. S. B. "Typos in Coptic Legal Papyri," ZSR 106, k. a. 75 (1989), 408–11.
- Manaphes, Konstantinos A. Monasteriaka typika-diathekai (Athens, 1970).
- Mansvetov, Ivan. Tserkovnii ustav (Moscow, 1885).
- Meester, Placide de. "Les typiques de fondation (Typika ktetorika)," SBN 6 (1940), 496–508.
- Nesbitt, J., and Wiita, J. "A Confraternity of the Comnenian Era," BZ 86 (1975), 360–84.
- Talbot, Alice-Mary. "Typikon, Monastic," ODB, p. 2132.
- Thiermeyer, Abraham-Andreas. "Das Typikon-Ktetorikon und sein literarhistorischer Kontext," OCP 58 (1992), 475–513.
- Steinwenter, Artur. "Byzantinische Mönchstestamente," Aegyptus 12 (1932), 55–64.
- Zielinski, Th. "Projet de la création d'un 'Corpus scriptorum juris graecoromani tam canonici quam civilis,'" SBN 5 (1939), 735–40.

II Byzantine Church

- Beck, Hans-Georg. Geschichte der orthodoxen Kirche im byzantinischen Reich (Göttingen, 1980), esp. IV. 4: Das Klosterwesen, pp. 134–38.
- . Kirche und theologische Literatur im byzantinischen Reich (Munich, 1959).
- Herman, Emil. "The Secular Church," in Cambridge Medieval History, vol. 4, 2nd ed., pt. 2 (Cambridge, 1966), pp. 104–33, 425–32.
- Hussey, Joan. Church and Learning in the Byzantine Empire (London, 1937).
- . The Orthodox Church in the Byzantine Empire (Oxford, 1986).
- Janin, R. La géographie ecclésiastique de l'empire byzantin, pt. 1: La siège de Constantinople et le patriarcat oecuménique; vol. 2: Les églises et les monastères des grands centres byzantins (Paris, 1975); vol. 3: Les églises et les monastères [de Constantinople], 2nd ed. (Paris, 1969).
- Majeska, George. Russian Travelers to Constantinople in the Fourteenth and Fifteenth Centuries (Washington, D.C., 1984).
- Morris, Rosemary, ed. Church and People in Byzantium (Birmingham, 1990).
- Thomas, John Philip. Private Religious Foundations in the Byzantine Empire (Washington, D.C., 1987).

GENERAL BIBLIOGRAPHY

III Byzantine Monasticism

- Bryer, Anthony. "The Late Byzantine Monastery in Town and Countryside," SCH 16 (1979), 219–41.
- Darrouzès, Jean. "Le mouvement des fondations monastiques au XI^e siècle," T&M 6 (1976), 159–76.
- Delehay, Hippolyte. "Byzantine Monasticism," in Byzantium: An Introduction to East Roman Civilization, ed. Norman H. Baynes and H. St. L. B. Moss (Oxford, 1948), pp. 136–65.
- Failler, Albert. "Le monachisme byzantin aux XI^e–XII^e siècles. Aspects sociaux et économiques," Cahiers d'histoire 20 (1975), 279–302.
- Guilland, Rodolphe. "Remarques sur la vie monastique à Byzance," EEBS 30 (1960), 39–53.
- Herman, Emil. "Ricerche sulle istituzioni monastiche bizantine. Typika ktetorika, caristicari e monasteri 'liberi,'" OCP 6 (1940), 293–375.
- Hussey, Joan. "Byzantine Monasticism," in Cambridge Medieval History, vol. 4, 2nd ed., pt. 2 (Cambridge, 1966), pp. 161–84, 439–43.
- Kazhdan, Alexander. "Vizantiiskii monastir XI–XIIvv. kak sotsialnaya gruppa," VV 31 (1971), 48–70.
- Leroy, Jules. "Monachisme oriental aux X^e–XIII^e siècles," Cahiers d'histoire 20 (1975), 303–31.
- Marin, Eugène. Les moines de Constantinople depuis de la fondation de la ville jusqu'à la mort de Photius (Paris, 1897).
- Mullett, Margaret, and Kirby, Anthony, eds. The Theotokos Evergetis and Eleventh-Century Monasticism (Belfast, 1994).
- Oikonomidès, Nicolas. "Monastères et moines lors de la conquête ottomane," SF 35 (1976), 1–10.
- Papachryssanthou, Denise. "La vie monastique dans les campagnes byzantines du VIII^e au XI^e siècles," Byzantion 43 (1973), 158–80.
- Papadakis, Aristeides. "Byzantine Monasticism Reconsidered," Byzantinoslavica 47 (1986), 34–46.
- Pargoire, Jules. "Le début du monachisme à Constantinople," RQH 65 (1899), 67–143.
- . "Les monastères doubles chez les Byzantins," EO 9 (1912), 21–25.
- Rousseau, Olivier. "Le rôle important du monachisme dans l'Église d'Orient," OCA 153 (1958), 33–55.
- Salaville, Sévérien. "La vie monastique grecque au début du XIV^e siècle d'après un discours inédit de Théolepte de Philadelphie," EB 2 (1944), 119–25.
- Savramis, Demosthenes. Zur Soziologie des byzantinischen Mönchtums (Leiden-Köln, 1962).
- Sokolov, Ivan I. Sostoyanie monashestva v vizantiiskoi tserkvoi s poloviny IX do nachala XIII veka (842–1204) (Kazan, 1984).
- Talbot, Alice-Mary. "The Byzantine Family and the Monastery," DOP 44 (1990), 119–29.
- . "An Introduction to Byzantine Monasticism," ICS 12 (1987), 229–41.

IV Byzantine Monks

- Besse, Jean-Martial. Les Moines d'Orient antérieurs au concile de Chalcédoine (Paris, 1900).
- Bréhier, Louis. "Les populations rurales au IX^e siècle d'après l'hagiographie byzantine," Byzantion 1 (1924), 177–90.

GENERAL BIBLIOGRAPHY

- Browning, Robert. "The 'Low Level' Saint's Life in the Early Byzantine World," in The Byzantine Saint, ed. Sergei Hackel (London, 1981), pp. 117–27.
- Charanis, Peter. "The Monk as an Element of Byzantine Society," DOP 25 (1971), 61–84.
- Congourdeau, Marie-Hélène. "Un procès d'avortement à Constantinople au 14^e siècle," REB 40 (1982), 103–15.
- Granić, B. "Die privatrechtliche Stellung der griechischen Mönche im V. und VI. Jahrhundert," BZ 30 (1929–30), 669–76.
- Herman, Emil. "Die Regelung der Armut in den byzantinischen Klöstern," OCP 7 (1941), 406–60.
- . "La 'stabilitas loci' nel monachismo bizantino," OCP 21 (1955), 115–42.
- Horde, Peregrine. "The Death of Ascetics: Sickness and Monasticism in the Early Byzantine Middle East," SCH 22 (1985), 41–52.
- Jeanselme, Edouard, and Oeconomos, Lysimaque. "La Satire contre les Higoumènes," Byzantion 1 (1924), 317–39.
- Joakeim Iberites. "Ek tou archeiou tes en hagio orei hieras mones ton Iberon," Orthodoxia 6 (1931), 364–71.
- Magdalino, Paul. "The Byzantine Holy Man in the Twelfth Century," in The Byzantine Saint, ed. Sergei Hackel (London, 1981), pp. 51–66.
- Morris, Rosemary. "The Political Saint of the Eleventh Century," in The Byzantine Saint, ed. Sergei Hackel (London, 1981), pp. 43–50.
- Nicol, Donald M. "Instabilitas Loci: The Wanderlust of Late Byzantine Monks," SCH 22 (1985), 193–202.
- Patlagean, Evelyne. "Sainteté et Pouvoir," in The Byzantine Saint, ed. Sergei Hackel (London, 1981), pp. 88–105.
- Ringrose, Kathryn. "Monks and Society in Iconoclastic Byzantium," BS/EB 6 (1979), 130–51.
- Wawryk, Michaël. Initiatio monastica in liturgia byzantina (Rome, 1968).

V Earlier Monastic Rules

- Keil, V. "Zur Form der Regel des Shenute," Göttinger Miszellen 30 (1978), 39–44.
- Vogüé, Adalbert de. Les règles monastiques anciennes (400–700) (Turnhout, 1985), with a list of early rules, pp. 53–60.

VI Egyptian Monasticism

- Bacht, Heinrich. "Antonius und Pachomius. Von der Anachorese zum Cönobitentum," in Antonius Magnus Eremita, ed. Basilius Steidle (Rome, 1956), pp. 66–107.
- . "L'importance de l'idéal monastique de s. Pacôme pour l'histoire du monachisme chrétien," RAM 26 (1950), 308–26.
- . "Pakhôme et ses disciples (IV^e siècle)," in Théologie de la vie monastique (Paris, 1961), pp. 39–71.
- . Das Vermächtnis des Ursprungs: Studien zum frühen Mönchtum, vol. 2: Pachomios. Der Mann und sein Werk (Würzburg, 1983).
- Barison, Paola. "Ricerche sui monasteri dell'Egitto bizantino ed arabo secondo i documenti dei papiri greci," Aegyptus 18 (1938), 29–148.

GENERAL BIBLIOGRAPHY

- Chitty, Derwas. The Desert a City: An Introduction to the Study of Egyptian and Palestinian Monasticism under the Christian Empire (Oxford, 1966).
- Gascou, Jean. "P. Fouad 87: Les monastères pachômiens et l'état byzantin," BIFAO 76 (1976), 157–84.
- Goehring, James. "New Frontiers in Pachomian Studies," in The Roots of Egyptian Christianity, ed. Birger Pearson and James Goehring (Philadelphia, 1986), pp. 236–57.
- . Chalcedonian Power Politics and the Demise of Pachomian Monasticism (Claremont, Calif., 1989).
- Ladeuze, Paulin. Etude sur le cénobitisme pachomien pendant le IV^e siècle et la première moitié du V^e (Louvain-Paris, 1898).
- Leipoldt, Joannes. Schenute von Atripe und die Entstehung des national-ägyptischen Christentums (Leipzig, 1903).
- MacCoull, Leslie S. B. "Coptic Documentary Papyri as a Historical Source for Egyptian Christianity," in The Roots of Egyptian Christianity, ed. Birger Pearson and James Goehring (Philadelphia, 1986), pp. 42–50.
- . "The Apa Apollos Monastery of Pharoön (Aphrodito) and Its Papyrus Archive," Le Muséon 106 (1993), 21–63.
- Nagel, Peter. "Diktion der römischen Kommandosprache in den Praecepta des Pachomius," ZÄS 101 (1974), 114–20.
- Rousseau, Philip. Pachomius: The Making of a Community in Fourth-Century Egypt (Berkeley, Calif., 1985).
- Ruppert, Fidelis. "Arbeit und geistliches Leben im pachomianischen Mönchtum," OS 24 (1975), 3–14.
- . Das pachomianische Mönchtum und die Anfänge klösterlichen Gehorsams (Münsterschwarzach, 1971).
- Steinwenter, Artur. "Aus dem kirchlichen Vermögensrechte der Papyri," ZSR 75, k. a. 44 (1958), 1–34.
- . "Die Rechtsstellung der Kirchen und Klöster nach den Papyri," ZSR 50, k. a. 19 (1930), 1–50.
- Timbie, Janet. "The State of Research on the Career of Shenoute of Atripe," in The Roots of Egyptian Christianity, ed. Birger Pearson and James Goehring (Philadelphia, 1986), pp. 258–70.
- Wipszycka, Ewa. "Les factions du cirque et les biens ecclésiastiques dans un papyrus égyptien," Byzantion 39 (1969), 180–98.
- . Les ressources et les activités économiques des églises en Égypte du IV^e au VIII^e siècle (Brussels, 1972).

VII Basilian Monasticism

- Amand de Mendieta, Emanuel. L'ascèse monastique de saint Basile (Maredsous, 1948).
- . "Le système cénobitique basilien comparé au système cénobitique pachômien," RHR 152 (1957), 31–80.
- Bardy, Gustave. "Basile (Règle de saint)," DDC 2 (1937), cols. 218–24.
- Chrestu, P. K. Ho Megas Basileios (Thessaloniki, 1978).

GENERAL BIBLIOGRAPHY

- Clarke, W. K. L. St. Basil the Great: A Study in Monasticism (Cambridge, 1913).
- Fedwick, J. P. The Church and the Charisma of Leadership in Basil of Caesarea (Toronto, 1979).
- Frank, Karl Suso. "Monastische Reform im Altertum. Eustathius von Sebaste und Basilius von Caesarea," in Reformatio Ecclesiae: Festgabe für Erwin Iserloh, ed. Remigius Bäumer (Paderborn, 1980), pp. 35–49.
- Gribomont, Jean. "L'Exhortation au renoncement attribuée à saint Basile. Etude d'authenticité," OCP 21 (1955), 375–98.
- . Histoire du texte des Ascétiques de saint Basile (Louvain, 1953).
- . "Saint Basile," in Théologie de la vie monastique (Paris, 1961), pp. 99–113.
- Hauschild, Wolf-Dieter. "Basilius von Caesarea (ca. 329–379)," Theologische Realenzyklopädie, vol. 5 (Berlin, 1980), pp. 301–13.
- Humbertclaude, M. La doctrine ascétique de saint Basile de Césarée (Paris, 1932).
- Laun, Ferdinand. "Die beiden Regeln des Basilius, ihre Echtheit und Entstehung," ZKG 44 (1925), 1–61.
- Morison, E. F. St. Basil and His Rule: A Study in Early Monasticism (Oxford, 1912).
- Murphy, Margaret G. St. Basil and Monasticism (Washington, D.C., 1930).
- Pichler, Theodorich. Das Fasten bei Basileios dem Grossen und im antiken Heidentum (Innsbruck, 1955).
- Rothenhäusler, Matthäus. "Der hl. Basilius der Grosse und die klösterliche Profess," BM 4 (1922), 280–89.
- Savramis, Demosthenes. "'Ora et labora' bei Basilius dem Grossen," Kyrios 6 (1966), 129–49.
- Vogüé, Adalbert de. "The Greater Rules of Saint Basil—A Survey," Word and Spirit: A Monastic Review 1 (1979), 49–85.

VIII Syro-Palestinian Monasticism

- Griffith, Sidney. Arabic Christianity in the Monasteries of Ninth-Century Palestine (London, 1992).
- Leroy, Jules. Moines et monastères du Proche-Orient (Paris, 1957).
- Patrich, Joseph. Sabas, Leader of Palestinian Monasticism: A Comparative Study in Eastern Monasticism, Fourth to Seventh Centuries (Washington, D.C., 1995).
- Vailhé, Siméon. "Les monastères de la Palestine," Bessarione 3 (1897–98), 209–25, 334–56; 4 (1898–99), 193–210.
- . "Les premiers monastères de la Palestine," Bessarione 3 (1897–98), 39–58.
- Vööbus, Arthur. History of Asceticism in the Syrian Orient, 3 vols. (= CSCO, Subsidia, vols. 14, 17, 81) (Louvain, 1958, 1960, 1988).
- . "Die Rolle der Regeln im syrischen Mönchtum des Altertums," OCP 24 (1958), 385–92.
- . History of Asceticism in the Syrian Orient, 3 vols. (= CSCO, Subsidia, vols. 14, 17, 81) (Louvain, 1958, 1960, 1988).

IX Early Ascetic Fathers

- Altenburger, M., and Mann, F. Bibliographie zu Gregor von Nyssa (Leiden, 1988).
- Daniélou, Jean. "Saint Grégoire de Nysse dans l'histoire du monachisme," in Théologie de la vie monastique (Paris, 1961), pp. 131–41.

GENERAL BIBLIOGRAPHY

- Guy, Jean-Claude. "Les Apophthegmata Patrum," in Théologie de la vie monastique (Paris, 1961), pp. 73–83.
- Hausherr, Irénée. "La théologie du monachisme chez saint Jean Climaque," in Théologie de la vie monastique (Paris, 1961), pp. 385–410.
- Leloir, Louis. "Saint Ephrem, moine et pasteur," in Théologie de la vie monastique (Paris, 1961), pp. 85–97.
- Leroux, Jean-Marie. "Monachisme et communauté chrétienne d'après saint Jean Chrysostome," in Théologie de la vie monastique (Paris, 1961), pp. 143–90.
- Plagnieux, Jean. "Saint Grégoire de Nazianze," in Théologie de la vie monastique (Paris, 1961), pp. 115–30.
- Regnault, L. Les pères du désert à travers leurs apophthegmes (Sablé-sur-Sarthe, 1987).
- Ruether, R. Gregory of Nazianzus: Rhetor and Philosopher (Oxford, 1969).

X Early Constantinopolitan Monasticism

- Dagron, Gilbert. "Les moines et la ville: Le monachisme à Constantinople jusqu'au concile de Chalcedoine (451)," T&M 4 (1970), 229–76.
- von Falkenhausen, Vera. "Monasteri e fondatori di monasteri a Costantinopoli tra Costantino Magno e Giustiniano I," Corsi di cultura sull'arte ravennate e bizantina 26 (1979), 151–55.
- Pargoire, Jules. "Les débuts du monachisme à Constantinople," RQH 65 (1899), 67–143.
- . "Un mot sur les acémètes," EO 2 (1898–99), 304–8, 365–72.
- Talbot, Alice-Mary, and Taft, Robert. "Monastery of Akoimetoi," ODB, p. 46.

XI Italo-Greek Monasticism

- Borsari, Silvano. Il monachesimo bizantino nella Sicilia e nell'Italia meridionale prenormanna (Naples, 1963).
- . "Monasteri bizantini nell'Italia meridionale longobarda (sec. X e XI)," Archivio storico per le provincie Napoletane, n.s., 32 (1950–51), 1–16.
- Cappelli, Biagio. Il monachesimo basiliano ai confini Calabro-Lucani (Naples, 1961).
- von Falkenhausen, Vera. "I monasteri greci dell'Italia meridionale e della Sicilia dopo l'avvento dei Normanni: continuità e mutamento," in Il passaggio dal dominio bizantino allo stato normanno nell'Italia meridionale (Taranto, 1977), pp. 197–219.
- . "Patrimonio e politica patrimoniale dei monasteri greci nella Sicilia normanno-sveva," in Basilio di Cesarea. La sua età, la sua opere e il basilianesimo in Sicilia, vol. 2 (Messina, 1983), pp. 777–90.
- . Untersuchungen über die byzantinische Herrschaft in Süditalien vom 9. bis ins 11. Jahrhundert (Wiesbaden, 1967).
- Fonseca, Cosimo Damiano. "La prima generazione normanna e le istituzioni monastiche dell'Italia meridionale," in Roberto il Guiscardo e il suo tempo (Rome, 1975), pp. 135–46.
- Giovanelli, Germano. "Il tipico archetipo di Grottaferrata," BBGG, n.s., 3 (1949), 17–30, 98–113.
- Giunta, F. "Il monachesimo basiliano nella Sicilia normanna," in Basilio di Cesarea. La sua età, la sua opere e il basilianesimo in Sicilia, vol. 2 (Messina, 1983), pp. 709–31.
- Guillou, André. "La classe dei monaci-proprietari nell'Italia bizantina (sec. X–XI). Economia e

GENERAL BIBLIOGRAPHY

- diritto canonico," BISIAM 82 (1970), 159; repr. Culture et société en Italie byzantine (VIe–XIe s.) (London, 1978).
- . "Grecs d'Italie du Sud et de Sicile au Moyen Age: Les moines," MAH 75 (1963), 79–110; repr. Studies in Byzantine Italy (London, 1970).
- Korolovsky, K. "Il rito italo-bizantino dei secoli X–XIV. Studio storico-liturgico," BBGG, n.s., 1 (1947), 4–16, 144–54; n.s., 2 (1948), 76–86.
- Ladomérszky, N. "L'influsso del monachismo basiliano greco sulla vita culturale dell'Italia meridionale," SBN 7 (1953), 395–96.
- Minisci, Teodoro. "I monaci basiliani in Sicilia e in Albania," BBGG, n.s., 11 (1957), 73–89.
- . "Riflessi studiti nel monachesimo italo-greco," OCA 153 (1958), 215–33.
- . "I typika liturgici dell'Italia bizantina," BBGG, n.s., 7 (1953), 97–104.
- Morini, E. "Eremo e cenobio nel monachesimo greco dell'Italia meridionale nei secoli IX e X," RSCI 31 (1977), 1–39.
- Patlagean, Evelyne. "Recherches récentes et perspectives sur l'histoire du monachisme italo-grec," RSCI 22 (1968), 146–66.
- Pertusi, Agostino. "Rapporti tra il monachesimo italo-greco ed il monachesimo bizantino nell'alto medio evo," in La chiesa greca in Italia dall'VIII al XVI secolo (Padua, 1972), pp. 473–520.
- Rougeris, Petros. "Ricerca bibliografica sui 'Typika' italogreci," BBGG, n.s., 27 (1973), 11–42.
- Russo, Francesco. "L'importanza delle opere ascetiche basiliane nella vita spirituale del monachesimo orientale dell'Italia meridionale," Nicolaus 8 (1980), 173–82.
- Scaduto, Mario. Il monachismo basiliano nella Sicilia medievale (Rome, 1947).
- Turyn, Alexander. Dated Greek Manuscripts of the Thirteenth and Fourteenth Centuries in the Libraries of Italy, vol. 1 (Urbana, 1972).
- White, Lynn Townsend, Jr. Latin Monasticism in Norman Sicily (Cambridge, Mass., 1938).
- XII Byzantine Monasticism and the West
- Gay, Jules. "L'abbaye de Cluny et Byzance au début du XII^e siècle," EO 30 (1931), 84–90.
- Leclercq, Jean. "Les relations entre le monachisme oriental et le monachisme occidental dans le haut moyen âge," in Le Millénaire du Mont Athos, 963–1963, vol. 2 (Chevetogne, 1965), pp. 49–80.
- Leroy, Julien. "S. Athanase l'Athonite et la Règle de S. Benoit," RAM 29 (1953), 108–22.
- Lialine, Clément. "Monachisme orientale et monachisme occidental," Irénikon 33 (1960), 435–59.
- McNulty, Patricia, and Hamilton, B. "Orientale lumen et magistra latinitas. Greek Influences on Western Monasticism (900–1100)," in Le Millénaire du Mont Athos, 963–1963, vol. 2 (Chevetogne, 1965), pp. 181–216.
- Saint-Laurent, G. E. "St. Basil of Caesarea and the Rule of St. Benedict," Diakonia 16 (1981), 71–78.
- Salaville, Sévérien. "Fragment inédit de traduction grecque de la Règle de saint François," EO 28 (1929), 167–72.
- . "Une version grecque de la règle de Saint Augustin," Hellenika 4 (1931), 81–110.

GENERAL BIBLIOGRAPHY

XIII Byzantine Monasticism and the Slavs

- Casey, Robert P. "Early Russian Monasticism," OCP 19 (1953), 372–423.
- Ćorović, V. Spisi Sv. Save (Belgrade, 1928).
- Granić, Branko. "Die Disziplinarstrafbestimmungen des vom hl. Sabbas, dem Erzbischof und Gründer der serbischen Autokephalkirche erlassenen Typikons des Chilandar-(Cheilantar-) Klosters," SBN 5 (1939), 646–56.
- Heppell, Muriel. "The Early History of the Kievan Monastery of Caves," in The Theotokos Evergetis and Eleventh-Century Monasticism, ed. Margaret Mullett and Anthony Kirby (Belfast, 1994), pp. 56–66.
- Iščenko, D. S. Tserkovnie i monastirskie ustavi (Moscow, 1976).
- Majeska, George. Russian Travelers to Constantinople in the Fourteenth and Fifteenth Centuries (Washington, D.C., 1984).
- Mirković, Lazar. "Tipik arhiepiskopa Nikodima," Bogoslovlje 1.2 (1957), 12–19; 2.1 (1958), 69–88.
- . "Ein Typikon des serbischen Erzbischofs Nikodemos: vom Einfluss Konstantinopels auf den Gottesdienst der serbischen Kirche," SBN 8 (1953), 429–33.
- Rouët de Journel, M.-J. Monachisme et monastères russes (Paris, 1952).
- Shchapov, Ya. "Ustav knyazya Yaroslava i vopros ob otnoshenii k vizantiiskomu naslediyu na Rusi v seredine XI v.," VV 31 (1971), 71–78.
- Smolitsch, Igor. Das russische Mönchtum. Entstehung, Entwicklung und Wesen (Würzburg, 1953).
- Troickij, S. "Ktitorsko pravo u Vizantiji u Nemanskoj Srbiji," Glas Srbske Kraljevske Akademije 86 (1935), 79–133.

XIV Foundation and Governance

- Alivisatos, Hamilcar. Die kirchliche Gesetzgebung des Kaisers Justinian (Berlin, 1913).
- Deslandes, S. "De quelle autorité relèvent les monastères orientaux," EO 21 (1922), 308–22.
- Granić, B. "L'acte de fondation d'un monastère dans les provinces grecques du Bas-Empire au V^e et au VI^e siècle," in Mélanges Charles Diehl, vol. 1 (Paris, 1930), pp. 101–5.
- . "Das Klosterwesen in der Novellengesetzgebung Kaiser Leons des Weisen," BZ 31 (1931), 61–69.
- . "Die rechtliche Stellung und Organisation der griechischen Klöster nach dem justinianischen Recht," BZ 29 (1929), 6–34.
- Hergès, Adolphe. "Élection et déposition des hegoumènes au XII^e siècle," EO 3 (1899–1900), 40–49.
- Herman, Emil. "'Chiese private' e diritto di fondazione negli ultimi secoli dell'impero bizantino," OCP 12 (1946), 302–21.
- . "Le mete e i compiti delle ricerche sulla storia del diritto ecclesiastico bizantino," OCP 17 (1951), 255–64.
- Kazhdan, Alexander, and Talbot, Alice-Mary. "Stauropigion," ODB, pp. 1946–47.
- Konidares, Ioannes M. Nomike theorese ton monasteriakon typikon (Athens, 1984).
- Meester, Placide de. De monachico statu juxta disciplinam byzantinam (Vatican City, 1942).

GENERAL BIBLIOGRAPHY

- Morris, Rosemary. "Legal Terminology in Monastic Documents of the Tenth and Eleventh Centuries," JÖB 32.2 (1982), 281–90.
- Moutzourès, J. "Ta charistika kai eleuthera monasteria," Theologia 34 (1963), 536–69; 35 (1964), 87–123, 271–304.
- Nissen, Waldemar. Die Regelung des Klösterwesens im Rhomäerreich bis zum Ende des 9. Jahrhunderts (Hamburg, 1897).
- Österle, Gerardo. "De monasterio stauropegiaco," Il Diritto Ecclesiastico 64 (1953), 450–60.
- Panagiotakos, Panagiotos I. "Peri tes apo tou Ioustinianou mechri tou Leontos tou Sophou nomothesias peri tes monachikes aktemosynes," in Akten XI. internationalen Byzantinistenkongress, München, 1958 (Munich, 1960), pp. 430–37.
- . Systema tou ekklesiastikou dikaiou kata ten en helladi ischun autou, vol. 4: To Dikaion ton Monachon (Athens, 1957).
- Petrakakos, Demetrios. Hoi monachikoi thesmoi en te orthodoxo anatolike ekklesia (Leipzig, 1907).
- Pfannmüller, Gustav. Die kirchliche Gesetzgebung Justinians hauptsächlich auf Grund der Novellen (Berlin, 1902).
- Thomas, John Philip. "The Rise of the Independent and Self-Governing Monasteries as Reflected in the Monastic Typika," GOTR 30 (1985), 21–30.
- Zhishman, Joseph von. Das Stifterrecht in der morgenländischen Kirche (Vienna, 1888).
- Zöckler, Otto. Askese und Mönchtum, 2nd ed., 2 vols. (Frankfurt, 1897), esp. pp. 285–99.
- XV Patronage
- Cutler, Anthony. "Art in Byzantine Society: Motive Forces of Byzantine Patronage," JÖB 31.2 (1981), 759–87.
- Jones, William R. "Pious Endowments in Medieval Christianity and Islam," Diogenes 109 (1980), 23–36.
- Kalopissi-Verti, Sophia. Dedicatory Inscriptions and Donor Portraits in Thirteenth-Century Churches of Greece (Vienna, 1992).
- Magdalino, Paul. "The Byzantine Aristocratic Oikos," in The Byzantine Aristocracy, IX to XIII Centuries, ed. Michael Angold (Oxford, 1984), pp. 92–111.
- Morris, Rosemary. "Alexios Komnenos and the Monasteries," BBBS 16 (1990), 59–60.
- . "The Byzantine Aristocracy and the Monasteries," in The Byzantine Aristocracy, IX to XIII Centuries, ed. Michael Angold (Oxford, 1984), pp. 112–37.
- . "Monasteries and Their Patrons in the Tenth and Eleventh Centuries," BF 10 (1985), 185–231.
- Oeconomos, Lysimaque. La vie religieuse dans l'empire byzantin au temps des Comnènes et des Anges (Paris, 1918).
- Puza, Richard. "Gründer einer Gemeinde und Stifter einer Kirche oder Klosters in der christlichen Antike," AKKR 151 (1982), 58–72.
- Rautman, Marcus L. "Aspects of Monastic Patronage in Paleologan Macedonia," in Twilight of Byzantium: Aspects of Cultural and Religious History in the Late Byzantine Empire, ed. Slobodan Ćurčić and Doula Mouriki (Princeton, 1991), pp. 53–74.
- . "Patrons and Buildings in Late Byzantine Thessaloniki," JÖB 39 (1989), 295–315.

GENERAL BIBLIOGRAPHY

Vryonis, Speros, Jr. "The Will of a Provincial Magnate, Eustathius Boilas (1059)," DOP 11 (1957), 263–77.

Zhishman, Joseph von. Das Stifterrecht in der morgenländischen Kirche (Vienna, 1888).

XVI Monastic Property

Ahrweiler, Hélène. "La concession des droits incorporels. Donations conditionnelles," in Actes du XII^e congrès international d'études byzantines (Belgrade, 1964), 103–14.

Angelov, D. "Post i struktura krupnogo monastirskogo zemlevladieniya v severnoi i srednei Makedonii v XIV v.," VV 11 (1956), 135–62.

Charanis, Peter. "Monastic Properties and the State in the Byzantine Empire," DOP 4 (1948), 53–118.

Ferradou, André. Les biens des monastères à Byzance (Bordeaux, 1896).

Guillou, André. "La classe dei monaci-proprietari nell'Italia bizantina (sec. X–XI). Economia e diritto canonico," BISIAM 82 (1970), 159–72.

Györffy, György. "Das Güterverzeichnis des griechischen Klosters zu Szávaszentdemeter aus dem 12. Jahrhundert," Studia Slavica Academiae Scientiarum Hungaricae 5 (1959), 9–74.

Harvey, Alan. "Land, Taxation and Trade in the Eleventh-Century Monastic Economy: The Case of Evergetis," in The Theotokos Evergetis and Eleventh-Century Monasticism, ed. Margaret Mullett and Anthony Kirby (Belfast, 1994), pp. 124–36.

Kaplan, Michel. "The Evergetis Hypotyposis and the Management of Monastic Estates in the Eleventh Century," in The Theotokos Evergetis and Eleventh-Century Monasticism, ed. Margaret Mullett and Anthony Kirby (Belfast, 1994), pp. 103–23.

Knecht, A. System des justinianischen Kirchenvermögensrechtes (Stuttgart, 1905).

Konidares, Ioannes. To dikaion tes monasteriakas periousias apo tou 9^{ou} mechri tou 12^{ou} aionos (Athens, 1979).

Kurth, Julius. "Ein Stück Klosterinventar auf einem byzantinischen Papyrus," BNJ 1 (1920), 142–47.

Orestano, Riccardo. "Beni dei monaci e monasteri nella legislazione giustiniana," in Studi in onore di Pietro de Francisci, vol. 3 (Milan, 1956), pp. 561–93.

Polyakovskaya, M. A. "Gorodskie vladeniya provintsialnikh monastirei v pozdnei Vizantii," VV 24 (1964), 202–8.

Sokolov, Platon Petrovich. Tserkovnoimushchestvennoe pravo v greko-rimskoi imperii (Novgorod, 1896).

XVII Philanthropy

Bardy, Gustave. "Les origines des écoles monastiques en Orient," in Mélanges J. de Ghellinck, vol. 1 (Louvain, 1951), pp. 293–309.

Bréhier, Louis. "L'enseignement classique et l'enseignement religieux à Byzance," RHPR 21 (1941), 34–69.

Constantelos, Demetrios. Byzantine Philanthropy and Social Welfare (New Brunswick, N.J., 1968); 2nd ed. (New Rochelle, N.Y., 1991).

GENERAL BIBLIOGRAPHY

- Hagemann, Hans-Rudolf. "Die rechtliche Stellung der christlichen Wohltätigkeitsanstalten in der östlichen Reichshälfte," RIDA 3 (1956), 265–83.
- . Die Stellung der Piae Causae nach justinianischen Rechte (Basel, 1953).
- Konidares, Ioannes M. "To typikon tou Pakourianou kai he 'hieratike schole' tes mones Petritzou," in Antidoron pneumatikon timetikos tomos Gerasimou Io. Konidare (Athens, 1981), pp. 156–69.
- Leclercq, Henri. "Hospices, hôpitaux, hôtelleries," DACL, vol. 6, pt. 2 (Paris, 1925), cols. 2748–70.
- Mentzou-Meimari, Konstantina. "Eparchika euage idrymata mechri tou telous tes Eikonomachias," Byzantina 11 (1982), 243–308.
- Miller, Timothy. The Birth of the Hospital in the Byzantine Empire (Baltimore, Md., 1985).
- Philipsborn, A. "Der Fortschritt in der Entwicklung des byzantinischen Krankenhauswesens," BZ 54 (1961), 338–65.
- Volk, Robert. Gesundheitswesen und Wohltätigkeit im Spiegel der byzantinischen Klostertypika (Munich, 1983).

XVIII External Relations

- Angelov, D. "Zur Frage der Immunitätsrechte der balkanischen Klöster im 13.–14. Jahrhundert," in Akten des XI. Internationalen Byzantinistenkongresses, München 1958 (Munich, 1960), pp. 27–33.
- Herman, Emil. "Bénéfices dans l'église orientale," DDC, vol. 2 (Paris, 1937), cols. 706–35.
- . "Das bischöfliche Abgabewesen im Patriarchat von Konstantinopel vom XI. bis zur Mitte des XIX. Jahrhunderts," OCP 5 (1939), 434–513.
- Levčenko, M. V. "Tserkovnie imushchestva V–VII vv. v vostočno-rimskoi imperii," VV 27 (1949), 11–59.
- Ruggieri, Vincenzo. Byzantine Religious Architecture (582–867): Its History and Structural Elements (Rome, 1991).
- Skabalonovich, M. Vizantiiskoe gosudarstvo i tserkov v XI veke (St. Petersburg, 1884).
- Sokolov, Platon P. Tserkovnoimuschchestvennoe pravo v greko-rimskoi imperii (Novgorod, 1896).
- Troianos, Sp. "Ein Synodalakt des Sisinius zu den bischöflichen Einkünften," FM 3 (1979), 211–20.
- Ueding, L. "Die Kanones von Chalkedon in ihrer Bedeutung für Mönchtum und Klerus," in Das Konzil von Chalkedon, ed. A. Grillmeier and H. Bacht, vol. 2 (Würzburg, 1953), pp. 569–676.

XIX Revenues

- Bartusis, Mark. "Solemnion," ODB, p. 1924.
- Herman, Emil. "Die kirchliche Einkünfte des byzantinischen Niederklerus," OCP 8 (1942), 378–442.
- . "Zum kirchlichen Benefizialwesen im byzantinischen Reich," SBN 5 (1939), 657–71.
- Hrochova, Vera. "Zur wirtschaftlichen Rolle der byzantinischen Klöster im 13.–15. Jahrhundert," JÖB 32.2 (1982), 85–93.

GENERAL BIBLIOGRAPHY

- Lemerle, Paul. "'Roga' et rente d'État aux X^e–XI^e siècles," REB 25 (1967), 77–100.
Schmid, H. F. "Byzantinisches Zehntwesen," JÖBG 6 (1957), 45–110.

XX Monasticism in the Provinces

(see also XI. Italo-Greek Monasticism)

- Epstein, Ann. "The Problem of Provincialism: Byzantine Monasteries in Cappadocia and Monks in South Italy," JWCI 42 (1979), 28–46.
Janin, R. "Les monastères nationaux et provinciaux à Byzance," EO 32 (1933), 429–37.
Papachryssanthou, Denise. "La vie monastique dans les campagnes byzantines, du VIII^e au XI^e siècle," Byzantion 43 (1973), 158–80.
Ševčenko, Ihor. "Constantinople Viewed from the Eastern Provinces in the Middle Byzantine Period," HUS 3–4 (1979–80), pt. 2, pp. 712–47.
Trombley, Frank. "Monastic Foundations in Sixth-Century Anatolia and Their Role in the Social and Economic Life of the Countryside," GOTR 30 (1985), 45–59.

XXI Women in Byzantine Monasticism

- Abrahamse, Dorothy. "Women's Monasticism in the Middle Byzantine Period: Problems and Prospects," BF 9 (1985), 35–58.
Anson, J. "The Female Transvestite in Early Monasticism: The Origin and Development of a Motif," Viator 5 (1974), 1–32.
Carr, Annemarie Weyl. "Women and Monasticism in Byzantium: Introduction from an Art Historian," BF 9 (1985), 1–15.
Clark, Elizabeth. "Authority and Humility: A Conflict of Values in Fourth-Century Female Monasticism," BF 9 (1985), 17–33.
Galatariotou, Catia. "Byzantine Women's Monastic Communities: The Evidence of the Typika," JÖB 38 (1988), 263–90.
Herrin, Judith. "Women and the Church in Byzantium," BBAO 11 (1979–80), 8–14.
Laiou, Angeliki. "Observations on the Life and Ideology of Byzantine Women," BF 9 (1985), 59–102.
Patlagean, Evelyne. "L'histoire de la femme déguisée en moine et l'évolution de la sainteté féminine à Byzance," Studi Medievali, ser. 3, 17.2 (1976), 597–623.
Talbot, Alice-Mary. "Bluestocking Nuns: Intellectual Life in the Convents of Late Byzantium," Okeanos 7 (1983), 604–18.
———. "A Comparison of the Monastic Experience of Byzantine Men and Women," GRBS 30 (1985), 1–20.

XXII Spirituality

- Hausherr, Irénée. "L'hésychasme. Étude de spiritualité," OCP 22 (1956), 5–40, 247–85.
Holl, Karl. Enthusiasmus und Bussgewalt beim griechischen Mönchtum (Leipzig, 1898).
Kriwocheine, Basil. "The Most Enthusiastic Zealot, 'Zelotes manikotatos,' St. Symeon the New Theologian as Abbot and Spiritual Instructor," OS 4 (1955), 108–28.
Meyendorff, John. Byzantine Hesychasm: Historical, Theological, and Social Problems (London, 1974).

GENERAL BIBLIOGRAPHY

- . “Les débuts de la controverse hésychaste,” Byzantion 23 (1953), 87–120.
- . “Mount Athos in the Fourteenth Century: Spiritual and Intellectual Legacy,” DOP 42 (1988), 157–65.
- Podskalsky, Gerhard. “Zur Gestalt und Geschichte des Hesychasmus,” OS 16 (1967), 15–32.
- Ware, Kallistos. “Prayer and Sacraments in the Synagoge,” in The Theotokos Evergetis and Eleventh-Century Monasticism, ed. Margaret Mullet and Anthony Kirby (Belfast, 1994), pp. 325–47.
- XXIII Liturgy
- Arranz, Miguel. “La liturgie des heures selon l’ancien Euchologe byzantin,” Studia Anselmiana 68, Analecta liturgica 2 (1979), 1–19.
- . “L’office de l’Asmatikos Orthos (‘matines chantées’) de l’ancien Euchologe byzantin,” OCP 47 (1981), 122–57.
- Baldovin, John. The Urban Character of Christian Worship: The Origins, Development, and Meaning of Stational Liturgy (Rome, 1987).
- Clugnet, Léon. Dictionnaire grec-français des noms liturgiques en usage dans l’église grecque (Paris, 1895).
- Egenger, Nikolaos. “Byzantinische Liturgie und orientalisches Mönchtum,” Erbe und Auftrag 35 (1959), 267–75.
- Engberding, Hieronymus. “Die Hochschätzung des Mönchtums in ostkirchlichen Liturgien,” BM 18 (1936), 362–73.
- . “Osterfeier und Osterfreude in byzantinischer Liturgie,” BM 21 (1939), 106–17.
- Herman, Emil. “Die häufige und tägliche Kommunion in den byzantinischen Klöstern,” in Mémorial Louis Petit (= Archives de l’Orient Chrétien 1) (Bucharest, 1948), pp. 203–17.
- Klentos, John. “The Typology of the typikon as Liturgical Document,” in The Theotokos Evergetis and Eleventh-Century Monasticism, ed. Margaret Mullet and Anthony Kirby (Belfast, 1994), pp. 294–305.
- Leclercq, Henri. “Lexique liturgique grec,” DACL 9 (Paris, 1929), cols. 1–14.
- Matéos, Juan. Le Célébration de la Parole dans la liturgie byzantine (Rome, 1971).
- . “L’office monastique à la fin du IV^e siècle: Antioche, Palestine, Cappadoce,” Oriens Christianus 47 (1963), 53–88.
- . Le typicon de la Grande Église, 2 vols. (Rome, 1962–63).
- Noret, Jacques. “Ménologes, synaxaires, ménées. Essai de clarification d’une terminologie,” AB 86 (1968), 21–24.
- Pantelakis, E. G. “Livres ecclésiastiques de l’orthodoxie,” Irenikon 13 (1936), 521–77.
- Petit, Louis. “La grande controverse des Colybes,” EO 2 (1898–99), 321–31.
- Salaville, S. “Messe et communion d’après les Typica monastiques byzantins du X^e au XIV^e siècles,” OCP 13 (1947), 282–98.
- Schulz, H.-J. Die byzantinische Liturgie. Glaubenszeugnis und Symbolgestalt (Trier, 1980).
- Souliotes, Giannes. To Kollyba (Athens, 1986).
- Stoelen, André. “L’année liturgique bizantine,” Irenikon 4 (1928), 307–38.
- Taft, Robert. “The Byzantine Office in the Prayerbook of New Skete: Evaluation of a Proposed Reform,” OCP 48 (1982), 336–70.

GENERAL BIBLIOGRAPHY

- . “How Liturgies Grow: The Evolution of the Byzantine Divine Liturgy,” OCF 43 (1977), 355–78.
- . “The Liturgy of the Great Church: An Initial Synthesis of Structure and Interpretation on the Eve of Iconoclasm,” DOP 34–35 (1980–81), 45–75.
- . Liturgy of the Hours in East and West (Collegeville, Minn., 1986).
- . “Mount Athos: A Late Chapter in the History of the Byzantine Rite,” DOP 42 (1988), 179–94.
- . “The Synaxarion of Evergetis in the History of Byzantine Liturgy,” in The Theotokos Evergetis and Eleventh-Century Monasticism, ed. Margaret Mullet and Anthony Kirby (Belfast, 1994), pp. 274–93.
- . “Liturgical Typikon,” ODB, pp. 2131–32.
- Trombley, Frank, and Kazhdan, Alexander. “Kollyba,” ODB, pp. 1137–38.
- Wellesz, E. A History of Byzantine Music and Hymnography (Oxford, 1949).

XXIV Monasticism and the Charistike

- Ahrweiler, Hélène. “Charisticariat et autres formes d’attribution de fondations pieuses aux X^e–XI^e siècles,” ZRVI 10 (1967), 1–27; repr. Études sur les structures administratives et sociales de Byzance (London, 1971).
- Barnalides, S. Ho thesmos tes charistikis (doreas) ton monasterion eis tous Byzantinous (Thessalonike, 1985).
- Bartusis, Mark. “Charistikion,” ODB, pp. 412–13.
- Herman, Emil. “Charistiaires,” DDC, vol. 3 (Paris, 1939), cols. 611–17.
- Kaplan, Michel. “Les monastères et le siècle à Byzance: les investissements des laïques au XI^e siècle,” CCM 27 (1984), 71–83.
- Kazhdan, Alexander. “Charistikariersystem,” Lexikon des Mittelalters, vol. 2 (Munich-Zurich, 1983), cols. 1723–24.
- Lemerle, Paul. “Un aspect du rôle des monastères à Byzance: les monastères donnés à des laïcs, les charistiaires,” CRAI (Paris, 1967), pp. 9–28.
- Thomas, John Philip. “The Crisis of Byzantine Ecclesiastical Foundations, 964–1025,” BF 9 (1985), 255–74.

XXV Monasticism and Ecclesiastical Reform

- Boojamra, John Lawrence. Church Reform in the Late Byzantine Empire: A Study for the Patriarchate of Athanasios of Constantinople (Thessaloniki, 1982).
- . “Social Thought and Reforms of Athanasios of Constantinople (1289–1293; 1303–1309),” Byzantion 55 (1985), 332–82.
- Gautier, Paul. “Diatribes de Jean l’Oxite contre Alexis I^{er} Comnène,” REB 28 (1970), 5–55.
- . “L’édit d’Alexis I^{er} Comnène sur la réforme du clergé,” REB 31 (1973), 165–201.
- . “Jean V l’Oxite patriarche d’Antioche, notice biographique,” REB 22 (1964), 128–57.
- . “Réquisitoire du patriarche Jean d’Antioche contre le charisticariat,” REB 33 (1975), 77–132.
- . “Le synode des Blachernes (fin 1094). Étude prosopographique,” REB 29 (1971), 213–84.

GENERAL BIBLIOGRAPHY

- Glavinas, A. He epi Alexiou Komnenou (1081–1118) peri hieron skeuon kai keimelion kai hagion eikonon eris (1081–1095) (Thessaloniki, 1972).
- Grumel, V. “L’affaire de Léon de Chalcédoine. Le chrysobulle d’Alexis I^{er} sur les objets sacrés,” EB 2 (1944), 126–33.
- . “L’affaire de Léon de Chalcédoine. Le décret ou ‘semeioma’ d’Alexis I^{er} Comnène (1086),” EO 39 (1941–42), 333–41.
- . “Documents athonites concernant l’affaire de Léon le Chalcédonien,” in Miscellanea Giovanni Mercati, vol. 3 (Vatican City, 1946), pp. 116–35.
- Polyzoides, Konstantinos. Ho Vasileus kai hoi laikoi eis to en genei dioiketikon ergon tes ekklesias epi Alexiou Komnenou (1081–1118) (Thessaloniki, 1979).
- Stephanou, Jean. “La doctrine de Léon de Chalcédoine et ses adversaires sur les images,” OCP 12 (1946), 177–99.
- Stephanou, Pelopidas. “Le procès de Léon de Chalcédoine,” OCP 9 (1943), 5–64.
- Thomas, John Philip. “A Byzantine Ecclesiastical Reform Movement,” M&H, n.s., 12 (1984), 1–16.
- . “Documentary Evidence from the Byzantine Monastic typika for the History of the Evergetine Reform Movement,” in The Theotokos Evergetis and Eleventh-Century Monasticism, ed. Margaret Mullet and Anthony Kirby (Belfast, 1994), pp. 246–73.
- Tiftixoglu, V. “Gruppenbildungen innerhalb des konstantinopolitanischen Klerus während der Komnenenzeit,” BZ 62 (1969), 25–72.

XXVI Monastic Architecture and Furnishings

- Babić, Gordana. Les chapelles annexes des églises byzantines: Fonction liturgique et programme iconographique (Paris, 1969); rev. Slobodan Ćurčić, Art Bulletin 53 (1973), 448–51.
- Barber, Charles. “The Monastic typikon for Art Historians,” in The Theotokos Evergetis and Eleventh-Century Monasticism, ed. Margaret Mullet and Anthony Kirby (Belfast, 1994), pp. 198–214.
- Bouras, Laskarina. “Byzantine Lighting Devices,” JÖB 32.3 (1982), 479–91.
- . “Dyo byzantina manoualia apo te Mone Metamorphoseos ton Meteoron,” Byzantina 5 (1973), 129–47.
- Ćurčić, Slobodan. “Architectural Significance of Subsidiary Chapels in Middle Byzantine Architecture,” JSAH 36 (1977), 94–110.
- James, Liz. “Monks, Monastic Art, the Sanctoral Cycle and the Middle Byzantine Church,” in The Theotokos Evergetis and Eleventh-Century Monasticism, ed. Margaret Mullet and Anthony Kirby (Belfast, 1994), pp. 162–75.
- Kalavrezou-Maxeiner, Ioli. Byzantine Icons in Steatite (Vienna, 1985).
- Krautheimer, Richard. Early Christian and Byzantine Architecture, 4th ed., rev. Slobodan Ćurčić (Harmondsworth, 1986).
- Mathews, Thomas. The Byzantine Churches of Istanbul: A Photographic Survey (University Park, Pa., 1976).
- . The Early Churches of Constantinople: Architecture and Liturgy (University Park, Pa., 1971).

GENERAL BIBLIOGRAPHY

———. "'Private' Liturgy in Byzantine Architecture: Toward a Reappraisal," CA 30 (1982), 125–38.

Müller-Wiener, Wolfgang. Bildlexikon zur Topographie Istanbuls (Tübingen, 1977).

Orlandos, Anastasios. Monasteriake Architektonike (Athens, 1958).

Ousterhout, Robert. "Polycandelon," Dictionary of the Middle Ages, vol. 10 (New York, 1988), pp. 28–29.

Teteriatnikov, Natalia. "Upper-Story Chapels near the Sanctuary in Churches of the Christian East," DOP 42 (1988), 65–72.

Van Millingen, A. Byzantine Churches in Constantinople: Their History and Architecture (London, 1912).

XXVII Daily Life

A. Manual Labor and Crafts

Magoulias, Harry J. "Trades and Crafts in the Sixth and Seventh Centuries as Viewed in the Lives of the Saints," Byzantinoslavica 37 (1976), 11–35.

Teoteoi, Tudor. "Le travail manuel dans les typika byzantins des XI^e–XIII^e siècles," RESE 17 (1979), 455–62.

B. Diet

Dembinska, Maria. "Diet: A Comparison of Food Consumption between Some Eastern and Western Monasteries in the 4th–12th Centuries," Byzantion 55 (1985), 431–62.

Grumel, Venance. "Le jeûne de l'Assomption dans l'église grecque (étude historique)," EO 32 (1933), 162–94.

Herbut, Joachim. De ieiunio et abstinentia in Ecclesia byzantina ab initiis usque ad saec. XI (Rome, 1968).

Holl, Karl. "Die Entstehung der vier Fastenzeiten in der griechischen Kirche," APAW, Phil.-Hist. Klasse (1923), 3–40.

Jeanselme, Edouard. "Le régime alimentaire des anachorètes et de moines byzantins," extract from 2^e Congrès d'histoire de la médecine (Evreux, 1922), 28 pp.

Karpozelos, Apostolos. "Diet," ODB, pp. 621–22.

———. "Realia in Byzantine Epistolography, X–XII c.," BZ 77 (1984), 20–37.

Kislinger, E. "How Reliable Is Early Byzantine Hagiography as an Indicator of Diet?" Diptycha 4 (1986–87), 5–11.

C. Dress

Innemée, Karel. Ecclesiastical Dress in the Medieval Near East (Leiden, 1992).

Meester, Placide de. "Autour quelques publications récentes sur les habits des moines en orient," EL 47 (1933), 446–58.

———. "Le rasophorat dans le monachisme byzantin," IBID 16–17 (1940), 323–32.

GENERAL BIBLIOGRAPHY

D. Hygiene

Berger, Albrecht. Das Bad in der byzantinischen Zeit (Munich, 1982).

Karpozilos, Apostolos. "Baths," ODB, pp. 271–72.

Magoulias, Harry J. "Bathhouse, Inn, Tavern, Prostitution and the Stage as Seen in the Lives of the Saints of the Sixth and Seventh Centuries," EEBS 38 (1971), 233–52.

XXVIII Books and Libraries

Bompaire, Jacques. "Les catalogues de livres-manuscrits d'époque byzantine (XIe–XVe s.)," in Byzance et les Slaves, Études de Civilisation: Mélanges Ivan Dujčev (Paris, 1979), pp. 59–81.

Crostini, Barbara. "Towards a Study of the Scriptorium of the Monastery of the Theotokos Evergetis: Preliminary Remarks," in The Theotokos Evergetis and Eleventh-Century Monasticism, ed. Margaret Mullet and Anthony Kirby (Belfast, 1994), pp. 176–97.

Mercati, S. G. "Un testament inédit en faveur de Saint-Georges des Manganes," REB 6 (1948), 36–47.

Noret, J. "Ménologes, synaxaires, ménées. Essai de clarification d'une terminologie," AB 86 (1968), 21–24.

Oikonomides, Nicolas. "Mount Athos: Lands of Literacy," DOP 42 (1988), 167–78.

Pantekalis, E. "Livres ecclésiastiques de l'orthodoxie," Irenikon 13 (1936), 521–77.

Volk, Otto. "Die byzantinischen Klosterbibliotheken von Konstantinopel, Thessalonike und Kleinasien" (Ph.D. diss., Munich, 1955).

XXIX Lexicographical Studies

Krumbacher, Karl. "Ktetor, ein lexicographischer Versuch," IF 25 (1909), 393–421; rev. A. Heisenberg, BZ 19 (1910), 588–89.

Moutsoulas, E. D. "Aparche. Ein kurzer Überblick über die wesentlichen Bedeutungen des Wortes in heidnischer, jüdischer und christlicher Literatur," SE 15 (1964), 5–14.

Stephanides, B. K. "Hoi horoi episteme kai epistemonarches para tois Byzantinois," EEBS 7 (1930), 153–58.

XXX Reference

Beck, Hans-Georg. Kirche und theologische Literatur im byzantinischen Reich (Munich, 1959).

Clugnet, Léon. Dictionnaire grec-français des noms liturgiques en usage dans l'église grecque (Paris, 1895).

Demetrakos, D. Mega Lexikon tes Hellenikes Glosses, 9 vols. (Athens, 1949–50).

Dölger, Franz, and Wirth, Peter. Regesten der Kaiserurkunden des oströmischen Reiches von 565–1453 (Munich-Berlin-Vienna, 1924–).

Du Cange, Charles. Glossarium ad scriptores mediae et infimae Graecitatis, 2 vols. (Lyon, 1688; repr. Graz, 1958).

Grumel, Venance. La chronologie (Paris, 1958).

Grumel, Venance, Laurent, Vitalien, and Darrouzès, Jean. Les regestes des actes du Patriarcat de Constantinople, vol. 1: Les actes des patriarches, 7 fascicles (Chalcedon-Paris, 1932–79).

Halkin, François. Bibliotheca hagiographica graeca, 3rd ed. (Brussels, 1957).

GENERAL BIBLIOGRAPHY

- Jedin, Hubert, Latourette, K. S., and Martin, Jochen. Atlas zur Kirchengeschichte (Leipzig, 1984).
- Kazhdan, Alexander, ed. Oxford Dictionary of Byzantium, 3 vols. (New York-Oxford, 1991).
- Koukoules, Phaidon. Byzantinon bios kai politismos, 6 vols. (Athens, 1948–57).
- Lampe, G. W. H. A Patristic Greek Lexicon (Oxford, 1961).
- Papadopoulos, Th. Versuch einer Genealogie der Palaiologen (1259–1453) (Munich, 1938).
- Polemis, Demetrios. The Doukai: A Contribution to Byzantine Prosopography (London, 1968).
- Schilbach, Erich. Byzantinische Metrologie (Munich, 1970).
- Skoulatos, Basile. Les personnages byzantins de l'Alexiade (Louvain, 1980).
- Trapp, Erich. Prosopographisches Lexikon der Palaiologenzeit (Vienna, 1976–).
- Varzos, Konstantinos. He genealogia ton Komnenon, 2 vols. (Thessaloniki, 1984).

Index of People and Places

Note: Individuals with proper surnames are generally indexed under same, except for emperors, other monarchs, and patriarchs, e.g., Komnene, Anna, but Alexios I Komnenos. Individuals with first names to which traditional attributes have been appended, e.g., John Xenos (“John the Stranger”), are indexed under their first names. Some individuals indexed by name are referred to by title in the text.

Byz. = Byzantine; CP = Constantinople; c. = century

Abalantos (property owner in katepanikion of Smyrna), 1279

Abel (Old Testament figure), 773

Abirom (Old Testament figure), 586

Aborates, house of (CP), 1563

Abraham (biblical patriarch), 185, 433, 773, 1361

Abraham, apa (7th c. founder and bishop of Hermonthis), 51, 52, 57; testament of, see General Index: monastic foundation documents, (1) Apa Abraham

Abraham, Flavios (7th c. curialis of Hermonthis), 57, 58n. 18

Abrammios (baptismal name of Athanasios the Athonite), 205, 206

Abroba (field in theme of Philippoupolis, modern Javrovo), 524

Abul Kasim (11th c. emir of Nicaea), 453

Abythianos (property owner near Skoteine), 1188, 1189, 1193n. 51

Achaia (Peloponnesos and central Greece), 911, 1244

Achemenids (Turks), 1427

Achilleion (estate near Pergamon [?]), 1279

Achilles Tattius (novelist), 369

Achnistai, Hai (village in Thrace [?]), 769. See also Tzachnistai, Hai

PEOPLE AND PLACES

- Achrido (district in theme of Philippoupolis), 556
- Achsartanes (brother-in-law of Pakourianos), 524
- Acre, Genoese church in, 726
- Adelaide (12th c. Norman countess), 607, 622, 623, 624, 625, 626, 633, 634
- Adriana, Ta (village), 770
- Adrianople, metropolitan of, 213
- Aegean islands, 569
- Aegean Sea, 566, 1245
- Aeidaropniktes (site in Thrace), 828
- Aetolia (Greece), 1244
- Aetos (fort in Thrace), 829
- Agapetos (priest). See Exerdiopoulos, Agapetos
- Agar, sons of: (Arabs), 631; (Turks), 129
- Agarenes (Seljuk Turks), 580, 600, 1107, 1127
- Agathos (estates of, Ta Agathou), 121, 122, 123
- Agelastos (estate of), 769
- Agridion (site near Skoteine), 1182
- Ahmed I (17th c. Ottoman sultan), 1312
- Aigialos (site in western Crete), 144
- Ainos (city in Thrace, modern Enez), 286, 826, 827, 829, 833
- Ainos (river in Thrace), 833
- Ainos (village in Thrace), 1519, 1557
- Akakios (6th c. ascetic), 1223, 1535, 1569n. 20
- Akakios (12th c. priest of Stoudios), 1032
- Akakios (14th c. monk of Nea Mone), 1435, 1441, 1453nn. 7 and 8

PEOPLE AND PLACES

Akarnania (Epiros), 1244

Akindynos, Gregory (14th c. theologian), 1491

Akindynos, St. (4th c. martyr), icon of. See General Index: icons (specific)

Akritas, Cape (southwest of CP), 68, 726

Akropolitaina, Eudokia (mother of Constantine Akropolites), 1380

Akropolitaina, Maria Komnene Tornikina (wife of Constantine Akropolites), 1379, 1380

Akropolites, Constantine (14th c. founder), 150, 1301, 1374, 1375-76, 1378-81; testament of, see General Index: monastic foundation documents, (46) Akropolites

Akropolites, George (13th c. founder), 150, 1301, 1374, 1375, 1376, 1377-79

Akrotiri (peninsula in Crete), 144

Akte (site in Crete), 144

Alakasseis (property owners in Thrace), 769

Albanians, 69

Alcuin (8th c. English churchman), xiv

Alexander (16th c. Romanian prince), 1304

Alexander I (emperor), 121

Alexander VI (15th c. pope), 624

Alexander the Clerk (14th c. Russian pilgrim), 727

Alexander [the Monk] (Byz. author). See General Index: books, ascetic and patristic

Alexandria (Egypt), 51; patriarchs of, 213, 567

Alexandroupolis (Thrace), 782

Alexios (convert from Judaism), 840

Alexios (priest and property owner near Skoteine), 1187

Alexios I Komnenos (emperor): appointee of, 326-27; authority of, 667; and Christodoulos, 452, 565, 571, 575, 582, 583, 584, 595, 596, 600; chrysobulls of, see General Index: imperial legislation (specific); commemoration of, 700, 701, 742, 755, 759, 823, 840; date of death of, 823, 840; garments of, 526; general of, 507; inscription mentioning, 714; and Lavra, 212; and Leo of

PEOPLE AND PLACES

Chalcedon, 307-8, 451; military campaigns of, 453, 665; novel on patriarchal rights (1096), 618, 868, 959, 1199; orders of, 557; and Philanthropos monastery, 974; portrait of, 838; relatives of, 456, 465, 467, 565, 649, 798, 872; requisitions/confiscations of, 450, 466, 515, 1238; and reform movement, 650, 657, 862-63

Alexios III Angelos (emperor): and Hilandar monastery, 1331; and Isaac II Angelos, 783; and Machairas monastery, 1108, 1116, 1131; reign of, 456; relative of, 1207

Alexios Philanthropenos (14th c. courtier), 726

Alexios Studites (11th c. patriarch of CP), 16n. 49, 69, 88, 144, 203-4, 305-6

Ali, Alaeddin (15th c. mosque builder), 1255

Ali Pasha (18th/19th c. ruler of Ioannina), 1456

Alopos, Theodosios (14th c. Athonite protos), 1410, 1414, 1418, 1425

Alousianos (property owner in Madytos), 770, 771

Alp Arslan (11th c. Seljuk leader), 507, 1408

Amanos (river in Syria), 377

Amathous (town in Cyprus), 1351

Ambaros (15th c. property owner in CP), 1625, 1636

Ambeles (13th c. property owner near Chalcedon), 1292

Amiras (13th c. property owner near Skoteine), 1190

Amirasames, Alexios (13th c. property owner near Skoteine), 1187, 1188

Ammonites (Old Testament people), 1354

Amykleion (town of Amyklai in Lakedaïmon), 317

Anabartzos, metropolitan of, 377

Anabasion (estate on Kos), 600

Anachoutlou, Anna (empress of Trebizond). See Anna Anachoutlou

Anaia (site), 1279

Ananias (16th c. superior of Gouverneto), 144

Ananias and Sapphira (New Testament figures), 228, 911

PEOPLE AND PLACES

Ananias, St. (apostle and martyr), feast day of. See General Index: feasts (specific, fixed)

Anapausa (endowment property of Koutloumousi), 1408

Anargyroi, Holy (Sts. Kosmas and Damian), 1291, 1292; churches of, see General Index: churches and chapels (monastic); convents of, see General Index: convents (specific); feast days of, see General Index: feasts (specific, fixed); icon of, see General Index: icons (specific); monasteries of, see General Index: monasteries (specific)

Anastasios (10th c. imperial treasurer), 1042

Anastasios I (emperor), 919

Anastasios of the Holy Mountain. See Anastasios the Sinaite

Anastasios the Sinaite (late 7th c. theologian and author). See General Index: books, ascetic and patristic

Anastaso (sister-in-law of Attaleiates), 336, 364

Anatolikon (theme), strategos of, 206

Anatolios (9th c. superior of Stoudios), 121

Andrew (10th c. Athonite monk and superior), 241

Andrew (another 10th c. Athonite monk and superior), 241

Andrew (14th c. tailor in CP), 1563

Andrew (15th c. student of Evtimij of Turnovo), 508

Andrew, St. (apostle), 931; feast day of, see General Index: feasts (specific, fixed); monastery of, see General Index: monasteries (specific)

Andrew the Fool, St. (historicity and date uncertain). See General Index: books, hagiography and miracles

Andronikos (11th c. imperial chaplain), 599

Andronikos (15th c. student of Evtimij of Turnovo), 508

Andronikos I Komnenos (emperor), 783

Andronikos II Palaiologos (emperor): and Auxentios monastery, 1207; chrysobulls of, see General Index: imperial legislation (specific); confiscation of monastic property, 1490; and convent of Lips, 1254, 1262, 1266; family of, 1246, 1250, 1266, 1485, 1579, 1610n. 20; and Galesios monastery, 150; and Lavra monastery, 212; and Pantokrator monastery, 726; and Patmos, 566; policy of, 1396; regulations of, 1506-7; reign of, 1106, 1389; relative of, 69; typikon of, see General Index:

PEOPLE AND PLACES

monastic foundation documents, (56) Kellibara II

Andronikos III Palaiologos (emperor): chrysobulls of, see General Index: imperial legislation (specific); family of, 1254, 1610n. 20; and Menoikeion monastery, 1579; and Patmos, 566; war with Andronikos II, 1579, 1582

Angelina (priest's wife): house of (CP), 712; house of daughter of, 712

Angelina, Eudokia (mother of empress Theodora Palaiologina), 1278, 1283n. 29, 1291

Angelos, Alexios (Caesar, 14th c. patron of Nea Mone), 1433

Angevins: rulers of Naxos, 567; rulers of Sicily and Southern Italy, 639, 1320

Angora/Ankyra (modern Ankara): battle of (1402), 1493

Ani/Anion (Ani in Armenia), 507, 555

Anna (empress, wife of John VIII Palaiologos), 1255

Anna (relative of Attaleiates), 349

Anna (wife of John Vladislav, voivode of Wallachia), 1412, 1426

Anna (wife of Leo Hikanatos), 927

Anna (woman commemorated at Phoberos), 946

Anna Anachoutlou (empress of Trebizond), 1301, 1404, 1405, 1406

Anne, St. (mother of the Virgin Mary), feast days of. See General Index: feasts (specific, fixed)

Anne of Savoy (empress, wife of Andronikos III), 1491

Ano Palaiokastron (village in Macedonia), 174, 175

Ano Siliou (village). See St. Helen (Thracian estate)

Anonymous (author of the Studite typikon), 90, 96n. 45

Anthemiotos (estate of, Diabenetoi), 768

Anthimos (10th c. Athonite monk and superior), 241

Anthimos (16th c. metropolitan of Adrianople), 213

Anthimos, St. [of Nikomedeia] (early 4th c. martyr), feast day of. See General Index: feasts (specific, fixed)

PEOPLE AND PLACES

Antiathos (Athonite mountain), 264

Antioch: Crusader conquest of, 377, 378; Mamluk conquest of, 378; patriarchate of, 429, 431; patriarchs of, 360, 425, 564; property in, 525; Seljuk conquest of, 425

Antiochos (7th c. monk of Sabas monastery), Pandektes of. See General Index: books, ascetic and patristic

Antiochos (10th c. imperial official), 313

Antony (9th c. superior of Elegmoi), 1042

Antony (10th c. Athonite monk and disciple of Athanasios the Athonite), 207, 210

Antony (10th c. Athonite monk and superior), 241

Antony (another 10th c. Athonite monk and superior), 242

Antony (10th c. superior of St. Mamas), 973

Antony (11th c. ecclesiarch of Christ Panoiktirmon), 327, 348

Antony (11th c. monk of Christ Panoiktirmon), 348

Antony (11th c. monk of Evergetis). See Doukas, John

Antony (11th c. monk and successor of Athanasios the Athonite), 210, 510, 558n. 3

Antony (11th c. monk and superior of Athonite St. Eustratios), 291

Antony (11th c. superior designate of Lavra), 278, 280n. 17

Antony (12th c. monk of St. Mamas), 1031

Antony (14th c. archbishop of Larissa), 1455

Antony III the Studite (10th c. patriarch of CP), 69, 455

Antony IV (14th c. patriarch of CP), 1409, 1433, 1637, 1662n. 18

Antony of Mount Kyminas (10th c. monk of Lavra), 278

Antony of Novgorod (12th c. author), 457, 975, 1374

Antony the Great, St., 76, 81n. 7, 133, 159, 247, 259, 1356; feast day of, see General Index: feasts (specific, fixed); monastery of, see General Index: monasteries (specific)

Antzades (noble family in the Argolid), 954

PEOPLE AND PLACES

Antzas (12th c. property owner), 770

Antzas, Constantine (uncle of Leo, founder of Areia monastery), 968

Antzas, Iakobos (uncle of Leo, founder of Areia monastery), 968

Anzas, Michael (11th c. vestes and quaestor), 336, 370n. 8

Aoinares (13th c. property owner near Chalcedon), 1292

Aôos, Mount (monastic site in Cyprus), 1107

Apadios (father of Flavios Pantonymos), 57

Apasios. See Pakourianos, Apasios

Apedou, houses of (CP), 713, 714

Aphameia (site near CP), 1279

Aploucheir, Thomas (12th c. judge of the Velum and epi ton hippodromon), 1035

Apodroungarion (village in theme of Selymbria), 1280

Apokaukos, Basil (10th c. benefactor of Nikon the Metanoieite), 315, 319

Apollinaris (4th c. theologian), 1400

Apollo (New Testament figure), 587

Apollo, St. (early ascetic), 900

Apostles, Holy (Sts. Peter and Paul): canons and constitutions of, see General Index: books, law and typika; fast of, see General Index: fasts (specific); feast day of, see General Index: feasts (specific, fixed). See also Paul, St.; Peter, St.

Apostles (Twelve), Holy: church of, see General Index: churches (specific); feast day of, see General Index: feasts (specific, fixed)

Apotheke (arable land near CP), 1292

Apros (city in Thrace), 769

Apsaras, John (14th c. benefactor of Geromeri), 1401

Apsaras, Nicholas (14th c. kaballarios), 1397, 1402

Apulia, 1244

PEOPLE AND PLACES

- Arabs, 59-60, 143, 148, 355, 566, 621, 622, 940, 1311. See also Agar, sons of; Ismaelites
- Aragonese, rulers of Sicily, 639
- Aratos, John (10th c. nobleman of Lakedaimon), 320n. 3
- Arbantenos, John (nephew of John II Komnenos), 733, 743, 776n. 48
- Arbantinos (13th c. property owner near Skoteine), 1187
- Archangels, Holy: feast day of, see General Index: feasts (specific, fixed); icons of, see General Index: icons (specific). See also Archistrategos; Gabriel, St.; and Michael, St.
- Archistrategos* (Archangel Michael), monastery of. See General Index: monasteries (specific)
- Areia (Peloponnesos), 954, 960, 961. See also General Index: monasteries (specific)
- Areobindos (Flavius Dagalaiphus, 5th c. general), 941, 949n. 79
- Arethas, St. (6th c. martyr), feast day of. See General Index: feasts (specific, fixed)
- Argolid: monasteries in, 954; Venetian rule of, 954, 955
- Argos (Peloponnesos): bishop of, 954, 960, 964; church in, 959n. 8; visited by Nikon Metanoieite, 313
- Arius (4th c. theologian), 1399
- Arkadios (9th c. superior of Stoudios), 121
- Arkolykes (11th c. Thracian property owner), 341, 360, 367
- Armenia, 543
- Armeniakoi/Armeniakon (theme in Asia Minor), 313, 555
- Armenians: as founders, 507, 508; heresy of, 401, 415, 905, 907, 918, 947n. 27, 1198 (see also General Index: Artzibourios and dissidents, religious); in Jerusalem, 1312; language of, 557. See also Tzatoi
- Armoukomis (village), 769
- Arnasakion (site in theme of Armeniakoi), 555
- Arsenios (10th c. Athonite monk and superior), 241
- Arsenios (11th c. superior of St. Mamas), 974
- Arsenios (12th c. monk of CP), 89

PEOPLE AND PLACES

- Arsenius (13th c. superior of Docheiariou), 1389, 1390, 1393
- Arsenius (14th c. patriarch of Jerusalem[?]), 1404, 1407
- Arsenius Autoreianos (13th c. patriarch of CP), 1490
- Artemios, St. (4th c. martyr). See General Index: books, hagiography and miracles and icons (specific)
- Artzibourians. See General Index: Artzibourios and dissidents, religious
- Asanina, Maria (14th c. patron of Bebaia Elpis), 1567, 1571n. 78
- Asenina, Irene (wife of John VI Kantakouzenos), 1610n. 20
- Ashtoreth (Phoenician goddess Astarte), 1354
- Asia Minor: monasteries in, 579; monastic properties in, 566; monks from, 940; passage of Crusaders through, 565; Seljuk attacks in, 580
- Aspeiotos (12th c. property owner in Thrace), 828
- Astras (14th c. megas stratopedarches), 1416, 1422, 1429n. 14
- Astras, George Synadenos (15th c. founder), 457, 1494
- Asyla (Sicily), bishopric of, 625, 630, 634n. 7
- Athanasios (10th c. Athonite monk and protos), 233, 235, 241
- Athanasios (10th c. superior of Christ the Savior), 135
- Athanasios (11th c. monk of Panagios), 205
- Athanasios (11th c. monk and superior of Athonite Sisoos monastery), 291
- Athanasios (11th c. monk and superior of Vatopedi), 285, 289, 290, 291
- Athanasios (12th c. monk and deacon of St. Mamas), 1031
- Athanasios (12th c. patriarch of Antioch), 564
- Athanasios (12th c. superior of Evergetis), 455
- Athanasios, lord (identity uncertain), monastery of. See General Index: monasteries (specific)
- Athanasios, St. (4th c. archbishop of Alexandria): feast days of, see General Index: feasts (specific, fixed); works attributed to, see Ps.-Athanasios

PEOPLE AND PLACES

Athanasios I (14th c. patriarch of CP and author): and Galesios monastery, 150; and Lavra monastery, 212; reform program of, xi, 1301, 1384, 1485, 1487, 1489, 1490, 1495-96; regulations of, 1496-1504; Rule of, see General Index: monastic foundation documents, (55) Athanasios I

Athanasios of Panagiou (11th c. monk and hagiographer), 210

Athanasios Philanthropenos (12th c. superior of St. Mamas and author): career of, 652, 974, 993; commemoration of, 984, 1005; and George the Cappadocian, 982, 994, 1030, 1033; and monastic reform movement, 977-78; regulations of, 38, 610, 860, 861, 867, 868, 978-87, 1587; seal and signatures of, 1030, 1032, 1034, 1036; typikon of, see General Index, monastic foundation documents, (32) Mamas; and typikon of Evergetis, 975-76, 978-87, 1044

Athanasios the Athonite (10th c. founder): documents authored by, 193, 205-31, 245-70, 271-80, 379, 568; and imperial patrons, 198, 200, 201, 203, 232-34, 235, 250-54, 302, 609; and Lavra monastery, 1237; and the protectorate, 197, 297, 299, 300, 305, 310, 572; regulations of, 327, 1615; and self-governance, 196, 202, 254-57, 443, 445, 867; signature of, 241; and Studite monasticism, 31, 88, 194; successors and disciples of, 199, 442

Athanasios the Meteorite (14th c. founder), 1297, 1301, 1302, 1455, 1456, 1457-58, 1459-60; Canonical Rule of, see General Index: monastic foundation documents, (53) Meteora

Athens: Latin Duchy of, 954; metropolitan of, 772; visited by Nikon Metanoeite, 313

Athos, Mount: absence of women from, 247; and Athanasios the Athonite, 205-10; Byzantine recovery of, 1613; documents from/for, xx, xxxiii, 3, 13, 18, 19, 211, 234n. 2, 1295, 1300, 1484, 1493; monasteries on, xi, xxi, xxii, xxiii, xxxi, xxxii, xxxiv, 49, 88, 91, 126, 151, 168, 193-204, 205, 210, 211, 232, 233, 247, 281, 283, 456, 507, 567, 572, 649, 956, 1303, 1304, 1331, 1389, 1408, 1409, 1434, 1487, 1492-93, 1495, 1667; monks of, xiv, xvi-xvii, xviii, xxx, 89, 232, 234, 245, 272, 281-82, 1455, 1505, 1579, 1613, 1616; Ottoman rule over, 212, 1409; patriarchal jurisdiction over, 212; travel away from, 1390, 1392

Atsiz (11th c. Seljuk ruler), 564

Attaleia (Pamphylia): city of, 148, 326; style of, see General Index: cloths, liturgical Attaleiates, Michael (11th c. founder): background of, 326, 333, 465; and charistike, 300, 443; History of, see General Index: books, secular; and imperial patrons, 361, 363, 449, 513, 575; and monastic reform, 171, 307, 308, 509; and protectorate, 309, 610; regulations of, 302, 304, 448, 463, 512, 656, 984; Rule of, see General Index: monastic foundation documents, (19) Attaleiates

Attaleiates, Theodore (son of Michael): designation as protector, 326, 327, 328, 331, 338-39; rights of, 328, 329, 345-46, 483; succession to as protector, 339, 340, 350-51

Attarioi (Tatars), 1231. See also Massagetai

Attica, 1244

PEOPLE AND PLACES

Aulax (site near Skoteine), 1178, 1182, 1186-90

Ausones (of Byzantines), 737

Auxentios, Mount (in Bithynia, modern Kayisdag), 1207, 1215. See also General Index: monasteries (specific)

Auxentios, St. (4th c. martyr), 1374. See also General Index: icons (specific)

Auxentios, St. (5th c. Syrian monk), 1207

Auzizin (estate near Serres), 769

Axios (13th c. property owner near Skoteine), 1188

Axouch, John (12th c. megas domestikos), 725

Azogyres (village in western Crete), 144

Baboulou (Thracian estate), 335, 341, 360, 367

Babylon, captivity in, 1354

Bačkovo (site of Pakourianos' monastery), xxiii, xxiv, xxxiii, xxxv, 507, 509

Bagrat IV (11th c. Georgian king), 507

Baionaia (village in Crete), 1462, 1467

Baios (promontory on Patmos), 584

Bakchos (13th c. bishop of Paphos), 1338, 1343, 1346, 1348, 1361

Bakchos, St. See Sergios and Bakchos, Sts.

Balanidia (site near Skoteine), 1187

Baldwin (13th c. Latin emperor of CP), 726

Balsamon, Demetrios (14th c. sacristan of Hagia Sophia), 1567

Balsamon, Theodore (12th c. canonist), 1103, 1105

Bandophorus (Thracian estate), 367

Banianous, He (promontory in Thrace), 828

PEOPLE AND PLACES

Baninos (Vanskos), Gregory (11th c. superior of monastery of Petritzonitissa), 507, 514, 522, 550

Baniska (in theme of Philippoupolis, modern Banista), fort of, 524, 555

Banitzes (11th c. property owner), 333

Barbara, St. (3rd c. martyr): church of, see General Index: churches (specific); feast day of, see General Index: feasts (specific, fixed)

Bardachlas, protoallagator (13th c. property owner near Skoteine), 1189

Bardales, house of (CP), 712

Bardanes (11th c. agent of Pakourianos). See Vardanes

Barelina (13th c. property owner in Galata), 1292

Barlaam (14th c. Calabrian monk), 1491

Barlaam (15th c. monk and teamster at Eleousa), 1675

Barnabas (12th c. priest of Stoudios), 1032

Barnabas (12th c. superior of Docheiariou), 1303

Barnabas (15th c. monk of Eleousa), 1674

Barnabas, St. (apostle), feast day of. See General Index: feasts (specific, fixed) Barsanouphios (6th c. Monophysite bishop), 76, 81n. 3

Barsanouphios (6th c. Palestinian ascetic), 76, 80n. 2, 87

Bartholomew (11th c. monk and superior of Athonite Savior monastery), 291

Bartholomew (12th c. superior of Rossano), 637

Bartholomew (15th c. Latin bishop of Argos and Nauplia), 954

Bartholomew, St. (apostle), feast days of. See General Index: feasts (specific, fixed)

Bartholomew of Semeri (12th c. founder), 638

Barys (estate near Pergamon [?]), 1279

Basianos, St. (5th c. founder and superior in CP), feast day of. See General Index: feasts (specific, fixed)

Basil (8th c. superior of St. John the Forerunner on Pantelleria), 59

PEOPLE AND PLACES

Basil (9th c. steward of Elegmoi), 1042

Basil (10th c. Athonite monk and superior), 242

Basil (another 10th c. Athonite monk and superior), 242

Basil (another 10th c. Athonite superior), 242

Basil (11th c. deacon and notary of Euripos), 598

Basil (11th c. kastrisios), 585, 597, 598, 599

Basil (12th c. monk and vinedresser at St. Mamas), 1031

Basil (12th c. protopapas in Sicily), 630

Basil (12th c. treasurer of St. Mamas), 1031

Basil (13th c. episcopal notary in Paphos), 1370

Basil (13th c. monk of Nea Mone in Chios), 1181

Basil (13th c. superior of St. Nicholas of Kasoulon), 1320

Basil (brother of Paul the Younger), 135

Basil (nephew of patriarch Euthymios), 124

Basil (relative of Attaleiates), 349

Basil, St. (8th c. martyr), feast of. See General Index: feasts (specific, fixed)

Basil I (emperor), 121, 1042

Basil II (emperor): and charistike, 144-45; chrysobull of, see General Index: imperial legislation (specific); death of, 205; legislation of, 201, 202, 203, 275, 286, 1199; support of Lavra, 209, 211, 271, 299

Basil of Caesarea (Basil the Great), St.: Ascetic Treatises of, see General Index: books, ascetic and patristic; feast day of, see General Index: feasts (specific, fixed); icon of, see General Index: icons specific; legacy of, xii, xiv, 32, 70, 303, 631, 1298, 1457, 1696; legislation of, 10, 46; Liturgy of, see General Index: books, liturgical; Longer Rules [LR] and Shorter Rules, see General Index: monastic rules (non-Byzantine); Moralia of, see General Index: books, ascetic and patristic; other works attributed to, 29-30, 38, 60, 87 (see also General Index: books, ascetic and patristic; Ps.-Basil); utilization by later authors, 31-32, 46, 61, 76, 78, 87, 137, 139, 215, 225, 228, 283, 287, 382, 406, 446, 454, 511, 538, 570, 593, 625, 631, 676, 694, 810, 911, 912, 947n. 45, 1274, 1282n. 18, 1356, 1365, 1370n. 8, 1371n. 18, 1400, 1405, 1407n. 1, 1471, 1472, 1480n. 12, 1498, 1502, 1503n. 5

Basil protasekretis (11th c. imperial official), 455

PEOPLE AND PLACES

- Basileides (3rd c. Alexandrian priest), 916
- Basilikis. See Petritzos
- Bastagos (site near Skoteine), 1187
- Bastos (13th c. property owner near Skoteine), 1188
- Batrachonites, house of (CP), 1279
- Batzakoba (field in theme of Philippoupolis, modern Bačkovo), 524
- Batzinea, He (Thracian village), 829
- Baybars (13th c. Mamluk sultan), 378
- Bayram Pasha (17th c. grand vizier), 1255
- Beautiful Gate. See Constantinople, gates of
- Bedouins, 1312, 1313
- Belyakovo (village north of Philippoupolis), 508
- Benedict of Santa Susanna (13th c. cardinal-legate), 456
- Bera (Thrace, modern Pherrai), xiv, xviii, 782, 783, 799
- Berges (husband of 13th c. benefactress of Skoteine), 1178, 1182
- Bergotos (11th c. property owner in Kos), 600
- Beroites (12th c. vestiarites of John II Komnenos), 743
- Beros (estate in Thrace), 829
- Berroia (Macedonia), episkepsis in, 771
- Bertha (Irene) of Sulzbach (empress, wife of Manuel I Komnenos), 725
- Bessai (site near Mount Galesios), 149, 150
- Bessarion (16th c. superior of Meteora), 1456
- Bessarion, Cardinal (15th c. scholar and theologian), 1320
- Bethlehem, 647, 1404
- Beyazid I (14th c. Ottoman sultan), 126, 1493, 1626, 1662n. 17

PEOPLE AND PLACES

Beyazid II (15th c. Ottoman sultan), 69, 126, 567, 1409

Bezalel (Old Testament figure), 1418

Bithynia: monasteries in, 86, 206, 564; “patriarch of,” 1233

Blachernai: council of, see General Index: councils and synods; district of, see Constantinople, quarters of; palace of, see Constantinople, monuments of; synod of, see General Index: councils and synods (specific)

Black Mountain (near Antioch), 377, 383n. 1. See also General Index: monastic foundation documents, (20) Black Mountain

Black Sea, 872

Blaktista (village), 770

Blanga. See Constantinople, quarters of Blasios (12th c. superior-designate of St. Philip’s in Sicily), 623, 625, 629, 632

Blasios (14th c. superior-designate of St. Euthymios in Jerusalem), 1405, 1406

Blasios, St. (early martyr), icon of. See General Index: icons (specific)

Blastares, Matthew (14th c. canonist). See General Index: books, ascetic and patristic, and books, law and typika

Blates, Dorotheos (14th c. priest in Thessalonike), 1443, 1453n. 13

Blemmydes, Nikephoros (13th c. founder): career of, 1196-97; regulations of, 1097, 1101, 1106, 1197-99, 1208, 1463, 1496; works of, see General Index: books, ascetic and patristic and monastic foundation documents, (36) Blemmydes

Blemmyes (warrior tribe from Upper Egypt), 580

Bobaina, Euphrosyne (nun and aunt-in-law of Attaleiates), 335, 336, 343

Bodena (in theme of Philippoupolis), fort of, 524, 557

Boeotia, 1244

Boethius (5th c. Roman statesman and author). See General Index: books, secular

Bogomils. See General Index: dissidents, religious

Bohemond I (12th c. prince of Taranto and Antioch), 1319

Bohemond II (12th c. prince of Taranto), 1319

PEOPLE AND PLACES

- Boleron (theme in Thrace), 499, 524, 556
Boniface (12th c. superior of St. Philip's in Sicily), 624
Boris-Michael (9th c. Bulgarian ruler), 125
Bosphorus, monasteries on, 872
Botaneiates, Ioannikios (12th c. monk), 927, 928, 948n. 71
Botaneiates, [Manuel], (12th c. sebastos), 770, 771
Botaneiates, Nikephoros (monastic name Neophytos, 12th c. sebastos), 872, 873, 927, 948n. 68
Botaneiates, Nikephoros (emperor). See Nikephoros III Botaneiates
Botaneiotas [sic] (13th c. property owner near Skoteine), 1189
Boukolike (fields near Skoteine), 1189
Boulotes, Demetrios (15th c. imperial emissary), 1613
Boupai (site in Cyprus), 1350
Boupi (village), 769
Boures (13th c. property owner near Skoteine), 1187
Bourgogne (sister of Hugh I, king of Cyprus), 1108
Bourseos (field in theme of Philippoupolis, modern Borceto), 524
Bouthrotos and Glykys (bishopric in Epiros), 1396
Boutoumites, Manuel (11th c. general and patron), 326-27, 369
Boutzas, house of (CP), 712
Bouze (Peloponnesos), 954, 957, 961. See also General Index: convents (specific) Bracheon, Philaretos (11th c. strategos of Crete), 146
Brachionion (Thrace), 769
Branas (13th c. property owner near Skoteine), 1187
Branista, [He] (Thracian village), 829
Branković, Vulk (14th c. patron of Koutloumousi), 1416, 1422, 1426, 1429n. 13

PEOPLE AND PLACES

Brindisi, 1244, 1245

Broquière, Bertrandon de la (15th c. traveler), 783

Bryennios, Joseph (15th c. monk of Charsianeites), 1462, 1626

Bryennios, Nikephoros (husband of Anna Komnene), 549, 701, 718n. 35, 742

Brysis (village near Philippoupolis), 524

Bulgaria: archbishops of, 168, 368, 1673; bishopric of, 187; documents from, 18; exarchate of, 509; monasteries in, xxii, 49, 125, 129, 507

Bulgarians/Bulgars: billeting of, 362, 366; despoina of (sister of Theodora Synadene and wife of Smilec of Bulgaria), 1557, 1562; as monks, 508, 1409; rule of Thrace, 783; war with, 1254. See also Mysians and Paeonians

Bursa. See Prousa

Bythianos (13th c. property owner near Skoteine), 1188

Cadiz (Spain, ancient Gades), xix, 258

Caesar (father of John Ugleša), 1416, 1422

Caesarea (Cappadocia), 207, 538

Cain (Old Testament figure), 335, 338

Cairo (Egypt), 52

Calabria, 88, 637, 638, 644

Cappadocia: monk from, 1311; patron from, 974; relic from, 975

Carmel, Mount, 800, 938, 1396

Carthage: Council of, see General Index: canon law (specific canons); fall of to Arabs, 59

Cassian, John (5th c. monastic leader in the West), xiv. See also General Index: books, ascetic and patristic: Cassian and Ps.-Athanasios (Epistulae ad Castorem)

Catherine, nun (mother of Leo, founder of Areia monastery), 968

Catherine, St. (4th c. martyr). See General Index: icons (specific)

Cato (ancient Roman statesman and author). See General Index: books, secular

PEOPLE AND PLACES

Cedron River, valley of, 1311

Celestine III (12th c. pope), 1108

Chabaron, house of (CP), 1279

Chalcedon: eparchy of, 1215; estate in, 1292; metropolitans of, 1101, 1213, 1218, 1219, 1433; monasteries near, 167, 1207, 1215; Ottoman conquest of, 1208

Chalkaiopoulos (patron of Koutloumousi), 1422

Chalkeion. See St. Peter (estate near Phoberos)

Chalkidike, 1303, 1493

Chamadion (alt.: Chasmadion, Machadion; name of Phoberos monastery), 886

Chamelos (13th c. property owner near Skoteine), 1187

Chamopournea, house of (CP), 713

Chandax (Crete, modern Herakleion), fort of, 146, 206

Chania (city in northern Crete), 144

Charakonites, John (13th c. property owner near Skoteine), 1187, 1188

Charastias, house of (CP), 713

Charatzias, house of (CP), 713

Charax (site near CP), 1292

Chardamion (11th c. benefactor of Christodoulos), 600

Charibdis (neighborhood of Messina), 639

Chariton (14th c. founder): career of, 1408-9, 1412, 1417-18, 1424, 1426, 1428, 1429n. 24; and concessions for Vlach postulants, 1297, 1301, 1416, 1422; and consultation with Athonite fathers, 1416, 1421; journeys of, 1414, 1419, 1420, 1426; patron of, 1298, 1409, 1410, 1411, 1414-17, 1419-22, 1426, 1456; and ransoming of prisoners, 1426, 1427; regulations of, 1410-12, 1415, 1418, 1424, 1457; testaments of, see General Index: monastic foundation documents, (51) Koutloumousi

Chariton (15th c. monk of Eleousa), 1674

Chariton, St. (early Palestinian ascetic), 398; feast day of, see General Index: feasts (specific, fixed)

PEOPLE AND PLACES

Charlemagne (8th c. Frankish emperor), xxiv, 60; capitulary of (De literis colendis), xxiv-xxv

Charles I of Anjou (13th c. king of Sicily), 624, 1240n. 1, 1245, 1320

Charles V (16th c. Holy Roman emperor), 639

Charpetikion (village in district of Achrido), 556

Charsianeites, John (monastic name Job, 14th c. founder), 1488, 1492, 1625, 1629, 1630, 1635-36, 1637

Chasmadion. See Chamadion

Chatesiou, Tou (village in Thrace), 829

Chatzitzarii. See General Index: dissidents, religious

Chaya River, valley of (Bulgaria), 507

Chazares (13th c. property owner near Skoteine), 1188

Cheilas, John (13th c. metropolitan of Ephesos), 150

Cheilas, pansebastos (13th c. judge of the army), 1280, 1283n. 33

Chemosh (Old Testament pagan god), 1354

Chenolakkos (fields near Skoteine), 1187. See also General Index: monasteries (specific)

Cherna (alt.: Tsrna; mountain in Bulgaria), 129

Chersonesos (Thrace), 769

Chios (Aegean island): Byzantine reconquest of, 565; library on, 508

Choirosphaktes, Michael (11th c. landowner of Lakedaimon), 313

Choirosphaktou, Tou (estate in Thrace), 829

Choneiates (13th c. property owner near Skoteine), 1189

Chonika (town in Argolid), church in, 959n. 8

Choromonasteri (site in northern Crete), 143

Chortaites (mountain east of Thessalonike), 771

Chortokopion (site in Thrace), 499

PEOPLE AND PLACES

Chosbaites (11th c. Thracian property owner), 360

Chosrienes. See Pakourianos, Chosrienes

Chosroes II (6-7th c. Sassanid king), 1311

Choumnaina (mother of Irene), 1386

Choumnaina, Irene. See Palaiologina, Irene Laskarina Choumnaina

Choumnos, Makarios (14th c. founder): career of, 1301, 1433; regulations of, 1298, 1434-37; Rule and Testament of, see General Index: monastic foundation documents, (52) Choumnos

Choumnos, Nikephoros (monastic name Nathaniel, 14th c. statesman and father of Irene Choumnaina Palaiologina), 1383, 1386, 1433

Chousderi, Tou (village in Thrace), 829

Choziba (Palestinian lavra), 1350

Christ: accountability to, 463, 492; burial slab of, 726; churches of, see General Index: churches (specific) and churches and chapels (monastic); feasts of, see General Index: feasts (specific, fixed) and feasts (specific, movable); imitation of, xiv; monasteries of, see General Index: monasteries (specific); as a monastic trustee, 1163. See also Emmanuel

Christene, house of (CP), 1280

Christodoulos (10th c. monk and superior of Athonite Protaton), 241

Christodoulos of Latros. See Christodoulos of Patmos

Christodoulos of Patmos (11th c. founder): career of, 136-37, 453, 564-65, 619, 771, 1314; documents authored by, 564-606, 654; imperial and patriarchal support of, 451-52; knowledge of earlier monastic rules by, 31, 37; patronal privileges of, 445; regulations of, 442, 443, 447, 448, 568-76; Rule, Testament, and Codicil of, see General Index: monastic foundation documents, (24) Christodoulos; signature of, 594, 598, 601

Christophoros (20th c. superior of Menoikeion), 1580

Christophoros (father of superior of Phoberos), 927

Christoupolis (northeastern Greece, modern Cavalla), 771

Chrysanthos (18th c. patriarch of Jerusalem), 955

Chrysochoos (13th c. property owner near Skoteine), 1187

Chrysopolis (Skoutari, on Asiatic coast of Bosphorus), 974, 1262

PEOPLE AND PLACES

Chrysos, protonotarios (14th c. patron of Nea Mone), 1436, 1437, 1445

Cilicia, 940, 1107, 1128

Clement (12th[?] c. bishop of Stroumitza), 168, 189

Clement (possibly another 12th c. bishop of Stroumitza), 168

Clement (15th c. bishop of Stroumitza), 1675

Clement (15th c. ordained monk of Eleousa), 1674

Clement, St. (1st c. bishop of Rome), feast day of. See General Index: feasts (specific, fixed)

Clement, St. (3rd c. bishop of Ankyra and martyr), feast day of. See General Index: feasts (specific, fixed)

Cologne, archbishopric of, xxxv

Constance (mother of Frederick II), 639

Constance (wife of Bohemond of Taranto), 1319

Constantina (empress, wife of Maurice), 973

Constantine (12th c. chartouarios), 927

Constantine (12th c. imperial protonotarios), 773

Constantine (12th c. metropolitan of Kyzikos), 619, 868

Constantine (12th c. pinkernes and property owner in Thrace), 829

Constantine (12th c. protovestiaros and priest), 837

Constantine (12th c. Sicilian priest), 630

Constantine (13th c. bishop of Ikaria), 566

Constantine (16th c. Bulgarian patron), 508

Constantine (relative of Attaleiates), 349

Constantine I the Great (emperor and saint), 43, 1374, 1381; feast day of, see General Index: feasts (specific, fixed); icon of, see General Index: icons (specific)

Constantine IV Chliarenos (12th c. patriarch of CP), 860, 869, 1043, 1046, 1049, 1051

Constantine V (emperor), 48, 67, 68

PEOPLE AND PLACES

Constantine VII Porphyrogenitos (emperor), 136, 200, 312n. 1; chrysobull of, see General Index: imperial legislation (specific)

Constantine VIII (emperor), 209, 299, 324

Constantine IX Monomachos (emperor): chrysobulls of, see General Index: imperial legislation (specific); coinage of, see General Index: coinage; letter of, see General Index: correspondence (specific); typikon of, see General Index: monastic foundation documents, (15) Constantine IX

Constantine X Doukas (emperor): 211, 297, 378, 449, 526. See also General Index: coinage

Constantine the Thracian (15th c. monk of Eleousa), 1675

Constantinople: bishops resident in, 731, 751, 1520; Byz. reconquest/recovery of (1261), 212, 1106, 1207, 1216, 1233, 1245, 1300, 1375; churches in, 326, 1374 (see also General Index: churches [specific] and churches and chapels [monastic]); convents in, 1512 (see also General Index: convents [specific]); departure from, 472; documents from, 18, 19, 1295, 1484; documents and books kept in, 555, 599; eparch of, see General Index: imperial officials (specific); gardens of, 1280; houses in: 712, 713, 1279, 1280, 1563, 1568, 1636; imperial court at, 197, 300, 301; Latin conquest of (1204), 69, 90, 457, 566, 783, 1103, 1104, 1108, 1207, 1219, 1231, 1238, 1247, 1287, 1289, 1291; Latin Empire of, 457, 726, 1374; Latin Patriarchate of, 1104; manuscript made in, 1512; monasteries in/near, xvi, xxvii, xxix, xxxiii, xxxv, 68-71, 86, 88, 120, 205, 210, 311, 406, 454, 456, 509, 515, 519, 575, 782, 789, 870, 975, 1043, 1045, 1046, 1106, 1238, 1287, 1493, 1625 (see also General Index: monasteries [specific]); monastic dependencies in, 247, 248, 259, 457, 616, 863, 870; monks of, 1054; Ottoman siege of (1394-1402), 1567, 1571n. 80, 1626, 1637, 1639, 1662n. 17; patriarchs of, 213, 568, 992, 993, 1037n. 2, 1232-33, 1426, 1633, 1635, 1637, 1639, 1662; properties in, 330, 333, 335, 336, 1287, 1290; protection of, 665; relics in, 150, 650, 975, 1374; relocation of monks to, 150, 1374; suburbs of, 1207 (see also Constantinople, suburbs of); synods in, 954; Turkish conquest of (1453), 69, 458, 975, 1255; visits to, 143, 145, 153, 207, 208, 210, 285, 287, 456, 567, 650, 975, 1107, 1127, 1238, 1255, 1375, 1409, 1438, 1580, 1613, 1626. See also Istanbul

Constantinople, councils of. See General Index: canon law (specific canons) and councils and synods (specific)

Constantinople, gates of: Beautiful Gate (on the Golden Horn), 1279, 1280, 1636; Gate of Kynegoi (on the Golden Horn), 1279; Golden Gate (land walls), 67, 1636; Imperial Gate (on the Golden Horn), 1279; Jewish Gate (at Vlanga [Blanga]), 1238; Xylokerkos (modern Belgrad-Kapou) Gate, 973

Constantinople, monuments of: house and palace of Mangana, 363, 367; imperial palace, 728; marketplace (agora), 348; Milion (monument), 1636; palace of Blachernai, 1280; palace of Eleutheriou, 363, 367; patriarchal palace, 975; port of Contoscalion, 1238; port of Eleutherius, 1238; walls of, 454, 456, 458, 727, 1238, 1383

Constantinople, quarters of: Blachernai, 1279; Blanga, 1280, 1292, 1567; Deuteron, 649, 1043; Galata (Pera), 714, 1280, 1292, 1562; Heptaskalon, 1513; Jewish, 770; Kaligaria, 1562; Kynegoi, 1279; Kyparissia/Kyparission, 1636; Petra, 89; Phanarion, 1280; Psamathia, 67, 69, 120, 121, 122, 123; Tzochareia, Ta, 1279, 1280; Venetian, 726

PEOPLE AND PLACES

Constantinople, suburbs of: Kosmidion, 1557, 1562; Pegai, 1557; Philopation, 1279, 1292

Corinth (Greece), 313

Cossyra (ancient Pantelleria), 59

Couza (19th c. prince of Wallachia and Moldavia), 1409

Craon, Hugh de (12th c. Norman patron), 623

Craon, Matthew de (12th c. Norman patron), 623

Cretans (Arab conquerors of Crete), 251

Crete: Arab conquest of, 251; benefactor from, 212; documents from, 18, 1296, 1302; monasteries of, xiii, xxviii, 49, 143-47, 566, 1462; monastic properties of, 566; monks of, 567, 1455; Ottoman rule over, 567; reconquest of by Nikephoros Phokas, 206, 313; trade with, 595; Venetian rule of, 144, 566, 1462, 1466, 1472, 1477

Crusaders, 377, 378, 1313. See also Jerusalem and General Index: Crusades

Cumans, 453, 526, 556

Cyprian, St. (4th c. martyr), feast day of. See General Index: feasts (specific, fixed)

Cyprus: and Byzantium, 1113, 1116, 1118; Crusader conquest of, 1108, 1339, 1344, 1353, 1370n. 5; documents from, xxi, 13, 18, 19, 32, 69, 1296; drought on, 1129; and Evergetian reform, 84; Frankish rulers of, 1097, 1108, 1113, 1339, 1348, 1351, 1352, 1370n. 4; monasteries of, xix, xxii, xxxiv, 90, 207, 1107-75, 1338-73; Ottoman conquest of, 1108, 1339; Venetian rule of, 1339; visits to, 207, 210, 245, 1107, 1127, 1128

Cyril. See also under Kyrillos

Cyril, St. (patriarch of Alexandria), 1308; feast day of, see General Index: feasts (specific, fixed)

Cyril I Loukaris (17th c. patriarch of CP), 568, 1339

Cyril VII (19th c. patriarch of CP), 1409

Cyril of Skythopolis (6th c. monk and hagiographer), 1311

Cyrus (7th c. Monothelite patriarch of Alexandria), 1400

Dabroboulos (village), 770

Dacians (Hungarians), 738, 774n. 3

PEOPLE AND PLACES

Dadouna, episkepsis of, 770

Dalassena, Anna (mother of Alexios I Komnenos), 360, 371n. 38, 450, 565, 583, 702, 718n. 49, 742, 755

Dalassena, Zoe (wife of Theocharistos the Cappadocian), 983, 1021

Dalmatians (Serbians), 738, 774n. 3. See also Serbians and Triballians

Damaskenos (19th c. superior of Menoikeion), 1580

Damian (6th c. patriarch of Alexandria), 51

Damian (10th c. Athonite monk and superior), 242

Damian, St. See Anargyroi, Holy

Damilas, Neilos (15th c. founder): career of, 1462; regulations of, 1197, 1296, 1297, 1298, 1302, 1463-66; testament of, see General Index: testaments (specific); typikon of, see General Index, monastic foundation documents, (54) Neilos Damilas

Damon (village owned by Alousianos), 770

Daniel (10th c. Athonite monk and superior), 241

Daniel (14th c. superior-designate of Athonite St. John the Forerunner monastery), 1389, 1390, 1392

Daniel (15th c. Cretan priest and copyist), 1478

Daniel (Old Testament prophet), 917; feast day of, see General Index: feasts (specific, fixed); icon of, see General Index: icons (specific)

Danubian principalities, 567

Daonion (place between Thracian Herakleia and CP), 769

Daphereras, Leo (11th c. Cretan notary), 146

Daphne (village owned by Alousianos), 770

Daphnoudion (site near CP), 1292

Dathan (Old Testament figure), 586

David (14th c. bishop of Hierissos), 1418, 1424

David (14th c. monk of Nea Mone), 1433, 1436, 1439

PEOPLE AND PLACES

- David (15th c. patron of Rila), 126
- David (biblical king), 75, 131, 182, 484, 579, 580, 664, 666, 684, 835, 880, 881, 882, 968, 1180, 1333, 1440, 1441, 1656
- De Ciocchis, J. A. (18th c. royal visitor), 624
- Dekanos, George (courtier of Alexios I Komnenos [?]), 743, 776n. 44
- Delagronda, George (15th c. Cretan notary), 1478
- Delbotzianous (estate in Thrace), 829
- Demenna (Sicily, modern Val Demone), 621, 622, 628, 630, 633
- Demetrianos, St. (9th c. archbishop of Cyprus), relics of. See General Index: relics (specific)
- Demetrios (10th c. Athonite superior), 242
- Demetrios (10th c. protospatharios at Lakedaimon), 320
- Demetrios (13th c. bishop of Domokos), 1105
- Demetrios, St., xxxvi, 1099, 1246, 1247, 1248; churches of, see General Index: churches (specific) and churches and chapels (monastic); feast day of, see General Index: feasts (specific, fixed); icons of, see General Index: icons (specific); monasteries of, see General Index: monasteries (specific)
- Dêr el Bahri (North Monastery, Upper Egypt), 51, 52
- Diabatenos (13th c. property owner in CP), 1280
- Diabenetoi (village on the European coast of Marmara [?]), 768, 771
- Diakephalaios (14th c. Thracian landowner), 1557
- Didymos (4th c. theologian), 1400
- Dilianou, Tou (village in Thrace), 829, 846
- Diocletian (emperor), 1287
- Diogenes, Constantine (husband of Xene Komnene), 360, 371n. 38
- Dionysios (3rd c. archbishop of Alexandria). See General Index: books, ascetic and patristic
- Dionysios (10th c. Athonite monk, priest and superior), 241
- Dionysios (12th c. superior of Eleousa), 168

PEOPLE AND PLACES

Dionysios III Muselimes (17th c. patriarch of CP), 213, 568

Dionysios [the Areopagite], St.: feast day of, see General Index: feasts (specific, fixed); works attributed to, see Ps.-Dionysios Dioskoros (5th c. Monophysite patriarch of Alexandria), 1400

Dioskoros (7th c. archpriest of Hermonthis), 57, 58n. 17

Dithetes, John (12th c. imperial secretary), 1032

Djême (ancient Thebes, Egypt), 51, 53

Dobrastanos (field in theme of Philippoupolis, modern Čauševo), 524

Dobrolonkos (field in theme of Philippoupolis, modern Dobřalák), 524

Domenaki (site near Skoteine), 1188

Dometian (14th c. superior of Rila), 126, 128n. 1, 129

Dometien (13th c. hagiographer), 456, 1331

Dorotheos (6th c. Monophysite bishop), 76, 81n. 3

Dorotheos (10th c. monk of Lavra), 278

Dorotheos (11th c. monk and superior of Athonite St. Nicholas monastery), 291

Dorotheos (14th c. spiritual director), 1415, 1420

Dorotheos [of Gaza] (6th c. Palestinian ascetic author), 76, 80n. 2, 87, 88; 24 Catecheses, 87. See also General Index: books, ascetic and patristic

Dositheos (12th c. patriarch of CP), 69

Dositheos (15th c. monk of Eleousa), 1675

Dositheos (17th c. Orthodox patriarch of Jerusalem), 1313

Doukaina, Anna (sister of Irene Doukaina Komnene), 609, 702, 719n. 53, 742

Doukaina, Irene (daughter of Anna Komnene), 701, 707, 718n. 39

Doukaina, Irene (empress). See Komnene, Irene Doukaina

Doukaina, Maria (monastic name Xene, mother of Irene Doukaina Komnene), 702, 718n. 47, 742, 775n. 25

PEOPLE AND PLACES

Doukaina, Theodora (monastic name Irene, sister of Irene Doukaina Komnene), 702, 719n. 51, 742

Doukaina, Zoe (daughter of Constantine X Doukas), 742, 775n. 34

Doukas (aristocratic family), 610

Doukas, Andronikos (monastic name Antony, father of Irene Doukaina Komnene), 702, 718n. 46, 742

Doukas, John (monastic name Antony, brother of Irene Doukaina Komnene), 456, 465, 467, 468, 499, 565, 610, 702, 719n. 52

Doukas, John Angelos (despot of Epiros). See John II Orsini

Doukas, Michael (brother of Irene Doukaina Komnene), 702, 719n. 50, 742

Doupiane (monastic site in Thessaly), 1455, 1456

Drachou, Tou (estate in Thrace), 828, 837; resettlement of, 846

Dragabasta (village in Thrace), 829, 846

Dreux, Robert de (17th c. traveler), 783

Drosos, episkepsis of, 771

Dryatos (region near Skoteine), 1189

Dzefre (garden in CP), 1280

Efendi, Zeyrek Mehmet (15th c. founder), 727

Egypt: climate of, 92; documents from, 18, 32-37, 233; holy fathers of, 891, 892; monasteries of, 51-58; monks from, 940

Eirenikos (father of Attaleiates), 341, 349

Eleutherios, St. (3rd c. martyr). See General Index: icons (specific) Eleutheriou (palace of Empress Irene in CP). See Constantinople, monuments of Eli (Old Testament priest), 933, 1621

Elia (site near Pergamon), 135

Elias (6th c. archbishop of Jerusalem), 941, 949n. 80

PEOPLE AND PLACES

- Elias (10th c. Athonite monk, priest and superior), 241
- Elias (11th c. monk and superior of Athonite Xeropotamou), 291
- Elias (11th c. superior designate of Eleousa), 170, 171, 181, 184, 185, 186
- Elias (14th c. bishop of Bethlehem[?]), 1404, 1407 and n. 9
- Elias, St. See Elijah of Tishbe
- Elijah of Tishbe (Old Testament prophet), 800, 917, 940, 1356; feast day of, see General Index: feasts (specific, fixed); hermitage of, 524
- Elisha (Old Testament prophet), 933, 1127; feast day of, see General Index: feasts (specific, fixed)
- Elizabeth (widow of Stefan Uroš IV Dušan), 1426, 1429n. 25
- Elvira (consort of William I, king of Sicily), 1319
- Ematha (site near Ephesos), xxi, xxxvi, 1196
- Embole (site near Skoteine), 1188
- Emesa (Hims, Syria), 67
- Emmanuel (Christ): icons of, see General Index: icons (specific); meaning of, 664
- Emporianos (13th c. property owner), 1279
- Empyrites (site), 1280
- Ephesos: metropolitans of, 49, 148, 150, 152, 1520, 1566-67; relic from, 726
- Ephraem (11th c. monk [?] at Pakourianos' monastery), 546
- Ephraem [Syrus], St. (4th c. theologian and hymnographer): 76, 81n. 7, 127, 132, 134n. 7, 370, 396, 398; feast day of, see General Index: feasts (specific, fixed); monasteries of, see General Index: monasteries (specific); works of, see General Index: books, ascetic and patristic
- Ephraim (18th c. monk and editor), 2, 1108
- Epidamnos (Dyrrachion, modern Durrës in Albania), 1244
- Epiphanius (11th c. scribe of Euripos), 599
- Epiphanius (estate in Thrace), 499
- Epiphanius (nephew of Christodoulos of Patmos), 596

PEOPLE AND PLACES

Epiphanius, St. (4th c. bishop of Salamis in Cyprus): church of, see General Index: churches (specific); works of, see General Index: books, ascetic and patristic

Epiros, Despotate of (1204-1348), 1105, 1244, 1301, 1396, 1456

Epizyga (village near Skoteine), 1183, 1187

Epoetine (estate of Galesios), 149, 164

Ergodotes, building site of, 770

Erichiotes, Neilos (14th c. founder): career of, 1396, 1401; confession of faith, 1398-1401; testament of, see General Index: monastic foundation documents, (49) Geromeri

Erichos (monastic site in Epiros), 1396

Euboea (Aegean island), 453, 565, 568, 572, 1244, 1245

Eudelos (site on Patmos), 584

Eudokia (wife of George Akropolites), 1376, 1380

Eudokimou (village), 555

Eudoxia (daughter of Constantine X Doukas), 558n. 3

Eudoxios (9th c. metropolitan of Amorion), 60

Eugenios (12th c. Norman court official), 633

Eugenios II (15th c. pope), 1375

Eugeniotēs, Thomas (12th c. benefactor of Phoberos), 873, 946

Eulogios, John, house of (CP), 1279

Eumathios (11th c. strategos of Crete), 146

Eumathios (12th c. sebastos), 771

Eunouchos, houses of (CP), 1563

Euphemes (13th c. property owner near Skoteine), 1187

Euphemia, house of (CP), 712

Euphemia, St. (4th c. martyr), feast day of. See General Index: feasts (specific, fixed)

Euphorbenos, Nikephoros Katakalon (son-in-law of Irene Doukaina Komnene), 701, 718n. 37, 742

PEOPLE AND PLACES

- Euphrosyne, Lady, monastery of. See General Index: monasteries (specific)
- Eupraxia (mother of Lazaros of Galesios), 149
- Eupraxia, St. (late 4th c. Egyptian nun), icon of. See General Index: icons (specific)
- Euripos (ancient Chalkis, Euboea), 568, 595, 596, 597; see of, 597, 598
- Eurotas (alt.: Iris; river in Lakedaimon), 296, 303, 323, 324
- Eustathianoï. See General Index: dissidents, religious
- Eustathios (12th c. metropolitan of Thessalonike), 1103
- Eustathios, St. (2nd c. martyr): feast day of, see General Index: feasts (specific, fixed); monastery of, see General Index: monasteries (specific)
- Eustratios, St. (3rd c. martyr): feast day of, see General Index: feasts (specific, fixed); monastery of, see General Index: monasteries (specific)
- Eustratios, St. (9th c. holy man), 1042
- Eustratios Garidas (11th c. patriarch of CP), 308-9, 450, 451
- Euthymios (9th c. metropolitan of Sardis), 60
- Euthymios (10th c. Athonite monk), 207
- Euthymios (10th c. Athonite monk and superior), 241
- Euthymios (11th c. founder of Docheiariou), 1307, 1309n. 3
- Euthymios (11th c. patriarch of Jerusalem), 557
- Euthymios (14th c. superior of Philotheou), 1428
- Euthymios (son of John the Iberian), 210, 211, 271, 275
- Euthymios I (10th c. patriarch of CP and founder), 48, 120-22, 124, 299; testament of, see General Index: monastic foundation documents, (5) Euthymios
- Euthymios II (15th c. patriarch of CP), 1452n. 1, 1456
- Euthymios of Peribleptos (11th c. monk and author). See General Index: books, ascetic and patristic
- Euthymios the Great, St. (5th c. monastic leader), 1311, 1356, 1404; Life of, see General Index: books, hagiography and miracles; monastery of, see General Index: monasteries (specific)
- Euthymios the Studite (ambassador of John I Tzimiskes), 69, 89, 198, 208, 232, 240, 281

PEOPLE AND PLACES

Eutropios (5th c. eunuch and superior of a Palestinian monastery), 941-42

Eutyches (5th c. Monophysite theologian), 1400

Eutychos (6th c. patriarch of CP), 918, 948n. 62

Evagrius Pontikos (4th c. theologian and ascetic author), 454, 1400

Evtimij (14th c. patriarch of Turnovo), 126, 508

Exarchopoulos, Nicholas (12th c. witness at deposition of Mamas typikon), 1036

Exerdiopoulos, Agapetos (13th c. priest and property owner near Skoteine), 1187

Ezekiel (Old Testament prophet), 902, 1159

Fenari (15th c. Turkish family of CP), 1255

Feredjik (Pherrai). See Bera

Ferrara, 727

Florence, 727, 1245

Forty Martyrs [of Sebasteia] (4th c. martyrs): chapel of, see General Index: churches and chapels (monastic); feast day of, see General Index: feasts (specific, fixed); icons of, see General Index: icons (specific)

Forty Saints. See Forty Martyrs

Foscari, Francesco (15th c. Venetian doge), 954

Fragala (monastic site in Sicily), 621

Franks: billeting of, 362, 366; hospitality to, 425, 427, 432; liturgical privileges of, 1316; monastic offices of, 1317; peace negotiations with, 557; as pilgrims, 1313, 1316; and rule of the Argolid, 954

Frazzano (village in northeastern Sicily), 621

Frederick II (13th c. Holy Roman emperor), 639

Gabras, house of (CP), 1279

Gabriel (10th c. Athonite monk and superior), 241

PEOPLE AND PLACES

- Gabriel (10th c. priest of Lakedaimon), 319
- Gabriel (10th c. superior of Latros), 136, 137
- Gabriel (11th c. steward of Galesios), 149
- Gabriel (14th c. patron of Pakourianos' monastery), 509
- Gabriel (14th c. priest of Nea Mone, later metropolitan of Thessalonike), 1433, 1440, 1452n. 4
- Gabriel, St. (archangel): feast days of, see General Index: feasts (specific, fixed); as a patron, 1304; symbolism of his name, 346. See also Archangels, Holy
- Galaktere, St. (identity uncertain). See St. Galaktere (estate in Thessalonike)
- Galaktion (13th c. monk of Galesios), 150
- Galata. See Constantinople, quarters of
- Galaton (12th c. property owner in Thessalonike), 771
- Galatou, Tou (estate in Thrace), 829
- Galesios, Mount (modern Alamandag), monasteries on, xix, 148, 149, 151, 1374
- Galland of Rigny (12th c. Cistercian author), xxvi
- Galotes, Konstas, [vineyard of] (CP), 712
- Gangra, council of. See General Index: canon law (specific canons)
- Garatzias, house of (CP), 712
- Gastivilea (village in Thrace), 843
- Gastivilenoi (inhabitants of Gastivilea), 843
- Gaultiero of Paleraria (13th c. chancellor), 639
- Gehazi (Old Testament figure), 338, 545, 911, 933, 1501
- Gelasios (late antique ascetic), 380, 410
- Gelloba (village in theme of Philippoupolis), 524
- Gemlik, Gulf of (extension of Sea of Marmara), 1042
- Gennadios (16th c. metropolitan of Serres), 212

PEOPLE AND PLACES

Gennadios (superior-designate of St. Euthymios in Jerusalem), 1406

Gennadios II Scholarios (15th c. patriarch of CP), 1580, 1626

Genoese, 726

George (10th c. Athonite monk and superior), 241

George (10th c. Athonite painter), 241

George (11th c. monk and librarian of Evergetis), 466

George (11th c. monk and superior of Iveron), 285, 289, 290, 291

George (11th c. priest and notary in Euripos), 574, 597, 601

George (12th c. monk of St. Mamas), 1031

George (14th c. patron of Pakourianos' monastery), 509

George, St.: chapel of, see General Index: churches and chapels (monastic); church of, see General Index: churches (specific); feast day of, see General Index: feasts (specific, fixed); hermitage of, see General Index: monasteries (specific); icon of, see General Index: icons (specific); monasteries of, see General Index: monasteries (specific)

George II Xiphilinos (11th c. patriarch of CP), 1102

George of Adrianople (16th c. priest and patron), 1304

George of Leros (11th c. priest in Euripos), 596

George the Cappadocian (monastic name Gregory, 12th c. founder): and Athanasios Philanthropenos, 982, 993, 1028, 1030, 1034; benefactions of, 985, 1019; career of, 870; commemoration of, 983, 984, 1005, 1021; and Nikephoros Mystikos, 1044; and restoration of St. Mamas monastery, xxix, 869, 974, 981, 982, 991-94, 1032-33, 1036; rights of, 865, 983, 1004, 1013

George the Iberian (10th c. monk of Lavra), 278

Georgi (16th c. Bulgarian patron), 508

Georgia (Iberia), 543, 547

Georgians: as founders, 507; language of, 552, 557; monasteries of, 507, 508, 522; as monks, see General Index: monks (types of); as pilgrims, 1313, 1316; race of, 519, 523, 532, 547. See also Iberians

Gerakares, house of (CP), 712

PEOPLE AND PLACES

Geranes (area near Skoteine), 1188

Gerasimos (11th c. monk and superior of Athonite Loutrakiou monastery), 291

Gerasimos (12th c. monk of St. Mamas), 1031

Gerasimos (12th c. Sicilian priest), 630

Gerasimos (14th c. founder), 1298, 1404, 1405

Gerasimos (14th c. monk of Geromeri), 1397, 1401

Gerasimos (14th c. monk of Nea Mone), 1440

Gerasimos (18th c. patriarch of CP), 1580

Germanos (11th c. monk and superior of Athonite Anargyroi monastery), 291

Germanos (13th c. superior of Patmos), 567

Germanos (14th c. metropolitan of Basan), 1407

Germanos II (13th c. patriarch of CP), 137, 1105, 1237

Germanos IV (19th c. patriarch of CP), 568

Germans, 1244

Geromeri (monastic site in northwestern Greece), 1396

Gerontios (15th c. monk of Eleousa), 1675

Gerontios (15th c. superior of Pantokrator), 727

Gilles, Peter (16th c. traveler), 69

Glabaina, protostratorissa (wife of Theodora Synadene's brother Andronikos Palaiologos), convent of. See General Index: convents (specific)

Glaunon (hamlet in theme of Serres), 525

Glykas, Michael (12th c. author). See General Index: books, miscellaneous

Golden Gate. See Constantinople, gates of

Golden Horn, 1287

Gordia (sister of Emperor Maurice), 973

PEOPLE AND PLACES

Gradenigo, Pietro (13th c. Venetian doge), 567

Grammatike (fields near Skoteine), 1188

Grantales (13th c. property owner near Skoteine), 1187

Greece (exclusive of Mount Athos): Charles of Anjou's campaign in, 1245; documents from, 18, 1296, 1484, 1492; monasteries in, 954, 1396, 1579; monks in, 313; Ottoman rule of, 955

Greeks (Romaioi), 547; language of (Hellenike), 55, 57, 1216, (Romaike), 552, 557; as monks, see General Index: monks (types of); as priests, 521, 547; as secretaries, 547; as teachers, 547

Gregoras (village of), 769

Gregory (10th c. magistros and monk at Athonite Lavra), 278

Gregory (10th c. strategos of Lakedaimon), 321n. 12, cf. 319

Gregory (10th c. superior of Lakedaimon), 313

Gregory (10th c. superior of Rila), 127, 133

Gregory (11th c. monk of Attaleiates' monastery), 369

Gregory (12th c. monk of St. Mamas), 1030

Gregory (13th c. monk, father of Maximos of Skoteine), 1176, 1177, 1180

Gregory (13th c. monk of Skoteine), 1187

Gregory (14th c. monk of Meteora), 1460

Gregory (14th c. monk of Nea Mone), 1441, 1453n. 10

Gregory (14th c. monk and spiritual master of Athanasios the Meteorite), 1455

Gregory (15th c. superior of St. Demetrios-Kellibara), 1238

Gregory (19th c. metropolitan of Philippoupolis), 509

Gregory II Kyprios (13th c. patriarch of CP), 150; correspondence of, 150; Life of St. Lazaros of Galesios, see General Index: books, hagiography and miracles

Gregory (II) of Fragala (12th c. superior of St. Philip's in Sicily), 623

Gregory V (18th c. patriarch of CP), 568

Gregory VII (11th c. pope), xxix

PEOPLE AND PLACES

Gregory IX (13th c. pope), 639

Gregory XIII (16th c. pope), 639

Gregory Nazianzen, St. (4th c. bishop of CP and theologian), 99A, 174, 180, 398, 578, 586, 588, 593, 692, 799, 800, 1014, 1478, 1553, 1570n. 39, 1659; feast day of, see General Index: feasts (specific, fixed); icon of, see icons (specific); works of, see General Index: books, ascetic and patristic

Gregory of Armenia, St. (first bishop of Armenia), feast day of. See General Index: feasts (specific, fixed)

Gregory of Fragala (11th c. founder), 32, 90, 613, 616, 617, 621, 622, 623, 625-26, 628, 630, 633, 641; testaments of, see General Index: monastic foundation documents, (25) Fragala

Gregory of Nyssa, St. (4th c. theologian). See General Index: books, ascetic and patristic

Gregory the Galesiote (11th c. monk and hagiographer), 45, 148, 151, 152; Life of St. Lazaros of Galesios, see General Index: books, hagiography and miracles

Gregory the Magistros (10th c. monk of Lavra), 278

Grimanis, Neophytos (17th c. archbishop of Karpathos), 567

Grimbilas (15th c. Cretan copyist), 1478

Guiscard, Robert (11th c. Norman prince), 450, 622

Gymnopelagesion (Aegean island), 273n. 1

Gymnou (garden near Bebaia Elpis), 1558, 1563

Hagia Glykeria (island south of Cape Akritas), 726

Hagiopolites (Andrew of Crete), liturgy of. See General Index: liturgies (specific)

Hagios Nikolaos (estate in Thrace), 829

Hagiosabbitai (monks of the monastery of St. Sabas near Jerusalem), 587

Hagiostephanites, Niketas (13th c. bishop of Tamasia, Cyprus), 1107, 1118, 1130, 1159

Haimos (mountains), 1216

Hasnadar-Dere (district of Istanbul), 458

Hattin (battle site in Palestine), 1312

PEOPLE AND PLACES

Helen (sister of Leo, founder of Areia), 968

Helena (St. Helena/Helen, empress), 1374, 1378; feast day of, see General Index: feasts (specific, fixed); icon of, see General Index: icons (specific)

Heliotos (site near Skoteine), 1190

Hellespont, 1046, 1054

Hennakosia (village near CP), 1280

Herakleia (Caria), 1237

Herakleia (Pontos), 782

Herakleia (Thrace), 1557

Hermouthis (Armant, Upper Egypt), 51, 53, 57

Herod (New Testament king), 887

Hesychios [of Jerusalem] (6th c. priest and author), 76, 81n. 2

Hexamilion (ancient Lysimachia, Thrace), 769

Hierakes (14th c. patron of Koutloumoussi), 1416, 1422, 1429n. 15

Hierapetra (town in Crete), 1462

Hierissos (site of episcopal see near Mount Athos), 208, 209, 232, 1410

Hierosolymitai. See Hagiosabbitai

Hikanatos, Leo (12th c. benefactor of Phoberos), 927

Hilarion (10th c. Athonite monk and superior), 241

Hilarion (10th c. monk of Lakedaimon), 319

Hilarion (11th c. monk of Athonite St. Nikephoros monastery), 291

Hilarion (12th c. monk and gardener of St. Mamas), 1031

Hilarion (12th c. monk of St. Mamas), 1031

Hilarion (13th c. monk of Skoteine, also known as Isaac), 1182

Hilarion (14th c. monk of Peribleptos), 1043

PEOPLE AND PLACES

Hilarion (15th c. monk of Eleousa), 1674

Hilarion, St. (4th c. Palestinian ascetic), feast day of. See General Index: feasts (specific, fixed)

Hilkaiah (Old Testament figure), 1354

Holy Land (Palestine): Christian communities in, 1404; departure from, 1107; pilgrimage to, 148, 164, 195, 207, 343, 432, 457, 564, 625, 782, 1107, 1301, 1338, 1350, 1396. See also Palestine

Holy Theologian (field near Skoteine), 1188

Honorius I (7th c. pope), 1400

Honorius III (13th c. pope), 456-57, 639, 1104, 1108

Horaiozele, St. (1st c. martyr), monastery of. See General Index: monasteries (specific)

Horeb, Mount (Old Testament), 938

Horsiesios (4th c. Pachomian ascetic): Book of (Testament), xii, 36, 38, 41, 44; Regulations of, 36-37, 44

Hreljo (14th c. Serbian nobleman), 126, 127

Hugh (12th c. bishop of Messina), 638

Hugh I (13th c. king of Cyprus), 1104, 1108, 1343, 1344

Hülegü (13th c. Mongol khan), 726

Hyakinthos (14th c. metropolitan of Ungrovlachia), 1415, 1429n. 9

Hyaleas (13th c. property owner near Skoteine), 1190

Hysterinos (13th c. property owner near Skoteine), 1188

Iakobos. See also under Jacob

Iakobos (7th c. superior of St. Phoibammon). See Jacob, apa

Iakobos (10th c. Athonite monk, priest and superior), 241

Iakobos (11th c. monk of Athonite Mother of God monastery), 291

Iakobos (11th c. monk of Patmos), 596

Iakobos (14th c. metropolitan of Hierissos), 1410, 1414, 1418, 1425

PEOPLE AND PLACES

Iakobos (14th c. monk of Meteora), 1460

Iakobos (14th c. monk of Nea Mone), 1441

Iakobos (14th c. superior-designate of Athonite St. John the Forerunner), 1389, 1390, 1392, 1393

Iakobos (14th c. Vlach postulant at Koutloumousi), 1416

Iakobos (15th c. monk and tailor at Eleousa), 1675

Ialoukos (Thrace), episkepsis of, 770

Iannoba (in theme of Philippoupolis): field of, 524; monastery of, see General Index: monasteries (specific)

Iapyges (Calabrians), 1244

Iberians (Georgians): liturgical privileges of, 1316; monastic offices of, 1317

Iberopoulos, Eutybios (13th c. witness at deposition of Mamas typikon), 1036

Icarian Sea (southeastern Aegean), 582

Ifriqiya (Africa), 59

Ignatios (9th c. patriarch of CP), 69

Ignatios (10th c. Athonite monk), 241

Ignatios (11th c. monk, brother of Lazaros of Galesios), 149, 151

Ignatios (11th c. monk of Christ Panoiktirmon), 370

Ignatios (15th c. monk of Eleousa), 1674

Ignatios, St. (1st c. bishop of Antioch and martyr), feast day of. See General Index: feasts (specific, fixed)

Ignatios of Machairas (12th c. founder), 1094, 1107, 1109, 1115, 1118, 1127, 1129, 1130, 1163

Ignatios of Smolensk (15th c. Russian pilgrim), 1434

Igoumenitsa (city in northwestern Greece), 1396

Ikaria (Aegean island), 566

Illyria (southern Albania), 1244

Illyrians, 1245

PEOPLE AND PLACES

Ilyâs bey b. Abdullah (15th c. imrahor), 69

Imbros (Aegean island), 253

Incorporeal. See Archangels; Archistrategos; Gabriel, St.; and Michael, St.

Innocent III (13th c. pope), 639, 1104

Innocent VIII (15th c. pope), 624

Innocents, Holy (Hagia Nepia), feast of. See General Index: feasts (specific, fixed)

Intres, Bartholomew (13th c. monk at Skoteine), 1188

Ioannikios. See also under Joannikios

Ioannikios (11th c. Athonite monk and protos), 291

Ioannikios (11th c. monk of Patmos), 596

Ioannikios (12th c. benefactor of Phoberos), 872-73, 927

Ioannikios (12th c. monk and groom of St. Mamas), 1031

Ioannikios (13th c. monk and founder of Menoikeion), 1579, 1583, 1588, 1591-93

Ioannikios (15th c. monk and teamster at Eleousa), 1675

Ioannina (town in Epiros): metropolitanate of, 1396; Ottoman ruler of, 1456

Ionia, 580

Irene (8th c. empress), 67, 68, 71

Irene (convert from Judaism), 791, 840

Irene (second wife of Attaleiates), 341, 349

Irene Doukaina (11th c. empress). See Komnene, Irene Doukaina

Irene of Brunswick (empress, first wife of Andronikos III), 1254

Iris (alt.: Eurotas; river), 324

Isaac (13th c. monk of Skoteine), 1187

Isaac (14th c. Athonite protos), 1408

Isaac (14th c. bishop of Hierissos), 1428

PEOPLE AND PLACES

Isaac I Komnenos (emperor), 69, 307, 448-49, 450, 466

Isaac II Angelos (emperor): and Kosmosoteira monastery, 783; and Machairas monastery, 1108, 1116, 1131; and St. Mamas monastery, 974; tax collectors of, 1176

Isaac [of Nineveh] (7th c. Syrian theologian), 553, 1474, 1475, 1480nn. 18 and 27. See also General Index: books, ascetic and patristic

Isaiah (5th c. Egyptian monk), 76, 80n. 2

Isaiah (5th c. Monophysite leader), 76, 81n. 3

Isaiah (13th c. recluse-designate), 1339, 1344, 1348, 1358

Isaiah (Old Testament prophet), 368, 906

Isaias (12th c. monk of St. Mamas), 1031, 1034, 1036

Isaias (12th c. superior of Koutloumousi), 1408

Isaias (12th c. superior of Philanthropos), 1036

Isaias (14th c. patriarch of CP), 1375, 1377n. 1, 1490-91, 1494, 1579, 1589n. 7

Isaias (14th c. superior-designate of Geromeri), 1397, 1401

Isaias of Chilandar (15th c. Russian pilgrim), 1304

Isaris (14th c. megas primikerios), 1444, 1453n. 15

Isbes, Gregory (14th c. Athonite monk), 1304

Isidore (14th c. metropolitan of Thessalonike), 1452n. 3

Isidore (15th c. metropolitan of Kiev), 1238

Ismael (4th c. martyr), icon of. See General Index: icons (specific)

Ismaelites (Arabs), 628. See also Agar, sons of and Arabs

Israel (Old Testament Jews), 580, 916, 917

Istanbul: churches in, 67; districts of, 458; mosque in, 1287; Patriarchal Library in, 326; Seraglio Library in, 782

Italians: conquest of CP by, 1378; as opponents, 566, 1216, 1244

Italy (Southern): documents from, 18, 88, 1296, 1299; and Evergetian reform, 84; monasteries in, 323; Studite tradition in, 90

PEOPLE AND PLACES

Itea (landed property), 770

Iulitta, St. (4th c. martyr), feast day of. See General Index: feasts (specific, fixed)

Ivan Alexander (14th c. patron of Pakourianos' monastery), 509

Ivan Shishman (14th c. Bulgarian king), 125

Jacob (13th c. superior of St. Nicholas of Kasoulon), 1320

Jacob (Old Testament patriarch), 667

Jacob, apa (7th c. superior of St. Phoibammon), 51, 52

Jacob Baradaeus (6th c. Monophysite leader), 401, 416, 418n. 69, 905, 907. See also General Index: dissidents, religious

Jakob (15th c. bishop of Krupnik), 126

James, son of Alphaios, St. (apostle), feast day of. See General Index: feasts (specific, fixed)

James, son of Zebedee, St. (apostle), feast day of. See General Index: feasts (specific, fixed)

James the brother of God, St. (apostle), feast day of. See General Index: feasts (specific, fixed)

Jediler (monastic site in southwestern Turkey), 1237

Jehoiakin (Old Testament king), 1354

Jeremiah (11th c. Athonite monk and priest), 291

Jeremiah (prophet), 131, 183, 580, 902

Jeremias (14th c. superior of Koutloumousi), 1409

Jeremias (18th c. patriarch of CP), 568

Jeremias I (16th c. patriarch of CP), 1456

Jericho (Palestine), 941, 1396

Jerome, St. (church father), xv, 32

Jerusalem: Christian community of, 148; church in, 955; constable of, 1108; Crusader conquest of (1099), 425; documents from, 18, 1296, 1299; monasteries in/near, xxii, 86, 148, 426, 569, 587, 1404, 1516; patriarchs of, 557, 955, 1043, 1404, 1405, 1406; pilgrims to, xix, 425, 432, 581, 623, 632, 1313, 1350; Saladin's reconquest of (1187), 1312; scriptural references to, 885, 911; Seljuk conquest of (1070), 564

PEOPLE AND PLACES

- Jerusalem, Crusader Kingdom of (1099–1187), 1312; diplomatic mission to, 327
- Jerusalem, New (of Constantinople), 1216
- Jews, 314, 317, 791, 840. See also Israel
- Joachim (12th c. superior of Heliou Bomon), 1043
- Joachim (13th c. superior-designate of Machairas), 1114, 1159
- Joachim (14th c. founder, bishop of Zichna): career of, 1483, 1489, 1579-80, 1590, 1591-94; commemoration of, 1488; and Mamas typikon, 1485, 1487, 1581-82; regulations of, 987, 1487, 1489, 1498, 1583-89; Rule of, see General Index: monastic foundation documents, (58) Menoikeion
- Joachim (15th c. monk and fisherman at Eleousa), 1675
- Joachim (16th c. superior of Mar Saba), 1312
- Joachim (19th c. superior of Holy Cross hermitage), 1339
- Joachim, St. (father of the Virgin Mary), feast day of. See General Index: feasts (specific, fixed)
- Joannikios. See also under Ioannikios
- Joannikios (18th c. steward of Holy Cross hermitage), 1339
- Joannikios III (18th c. patriarch of CP), 568
- Joasaf (15th c. patron of Rila), 126
- Job (14th c. hagiographer), 1396
- Job (Old Testament figure), 530, 1306, 1468, 1553. See also General Index: books, Old Testament
- Johannan bar Qursos (6th c. Monophysite bishop of Tella), 40
- Johannan of Dalyata (Syrian ascetic), 41
- John (6th c. Palestinian ascetic), 87
- John (8th c. deacon), 63
- John (10th c. Athonite monk and priest), 241
- John (10th c. Athonite monk and superior), 241
- John (another 10th c. Athonite monk and superior), 241

PEOPLE AND PLACES

- John (10th c. monk and calligrapher of Athonite Lavra), 278
- John (11th c. epi tou kanikleiou), 211
- John (11th c. monk and Attaleiates' spiritual director), 359, 368
- John (11th c. monk of Patmos), 596
- John (11th c. monk, priest and superior of Athonite Zygyou monastery), 290, 291
- John (11th c. monk and superior of Athonite Kaspakos monastery), 291
- John (11th c. monk and superior of Athonite Phakenou monastery), 291
- John (11th c. mystikos), 743
- John (11th c. praipositos and patron of Attaleiates' monastery), 357, 358, 360, 369
- John (11th c. priest and notary in Euripos), 597, 600
- John (12th c. bishop, brother of Leo of Areia), 968
- John (12th c. metropolitan of Rhodes), 564
- John (14th c. Athonite solitary), 1389, 1390, 1391
- John (15th c. archdeacon in Stroumitza), 1675
- John (nephew of Christodoulos of Patmos), 596
- John (of Pantelleria, 8th c. founder), 33, 37, 59, 62; typikon of, see General Index: monastic foundation documents, (2) Pantelleria
- John (of Phoberos, 12th c. founder): background of, 872-73, 879n. 1; commemoration of, 874, 927; regulations of, xxviii, 37, 456, 616, 731, 860, 861, 862, 866, 867, 868, 874-79, 880, 946, 963, 1321, 1497; typikon of, see General Index: monastic foundation documents, (30) Phoberos; and typikon of Evergetis, 468, 785, 874-79, 955, 976, 1044
- John (witness to the Codicil of Christodoulos of Patmos), 601
- John I Tzimiskes (emperor): chrysobull of, see General Index: imperial legislation (specific); image of, 1673; and Lavra, 196, 201, 299; and Tragos affair, 69, 89, 198, 208, 232, 235, 236, 240, 241, 281; typikon of, see General Index: monastic foundation documents, (12) Tzimiskes
- John II Komnenos (emperor): autograph of, 727; cells of, 772; children of, 743, 774, 778nn. 102 and 103; commemoration of, 701, 743, 756, 759, 774; death of, 991; and Isaac Komnenos, 782; and Kosmosoteira, 815, 839; and Pantokrator monastery, 725-81; and Patriarch Leo Styppes, 620, 870; as patron, 607, 611-19, 649, 652, 866; prostagma of, see General Index: imperial legislation (specific); regulations of, 958, 1048, 1113, 1340; testament of, see General Index: testaments

PEOPLE AND PLACES

(specific); typikon of, see General Index: monastic foundation documents, (28) Pantokrator; and typikon of Evergetis, 789

John II Orsini (John Angelos Doukas, 14th c. despot of Epiros), 1301, 1396, 1397, 1401

John III Doukas Vatatzes (Nicaean emperor): chrysobull of, see General Index: imperial legislation (specific); confirmation of patriarchal act, 1241n. 5; and Kosmosoteira monastery, 783; prostagma of, 1673, 1676n. 41; reign of, 1199n. 6, 1243

John IV Laskaris (monastic name Joasaph[?], Nicaean emperor), 1238

John IV the Faster (6th c. patriarch of Constantinople), 400, 418n. 64

John V Palaiologos (emperor), 1433, 1491, 1492, 1580, 1625, 1636, 1662n. 7

John V the Oxite. See John of Antioch

John VI Kantakouzenos (monastic name Joasaph, emperor): and Charsianites monastery, 1489, 1492, 1625, 1631, 1637, 1662n. 15; chrysobull of, see General Index: imperial legislation (specific); civil war of with John V Palaiologos, 1491, 1580; family of, 1610n. 20; and Kosmosoteira monastery, 783; and Menoikeion monastery, 1580, 1582, 1585, 1586; as protector, 1605, 1606; and St. Mamas monastery, 975

John VII Palaiologos (emperor), 726, 1638, 1662n. 21

John VIII Palaiologos (emperor), 727, 1238, 1255

John IX Agapetos (12th c. patriarch of CP), 309, 565, 619, 869, 879

John XI Bekkos (13th c. patriarch of CP), 1105, 1207

John XIII Glykys (14th c. patriarch of CP), 1241n. 10, 1490

John XIV Kalekas (14th c. patriarch of CP), 1396, 1491, 1494

John Angelos Doukas. See John II Orsini

John Asen II (ruler of Bulgaria), 168

John Chrysostom, St. (late 4th c. bishop of CP and theologian), 400, 403, 406, 413, 904, 1638; feast days of, see General Index: feasts (specific, fixed); icon of, see General Index: icons (specific); works of, see General Index: books, ascetic and patristic and books, liturgical

John Klimakos (7th c. ascetic author), 1391, 1393. See also General Index: books, ascetic and patristic

John of Antioch (John V the Oxite, 11th c. patriarch of Antioch), 38n. 65, 89, 305, 442, 443; florilegium of, 454; and Nikon of the Black Mountain, 377, 378, 425, 426; reform program of, 650; works of, see General Index: books, ascetic and patristic

PEOPLE AND PLACES

John of Damascus (8th c. theologian), 358, 1312, 1479, 1481n. 42. See also General Index: books, ascetic and patristic

John of Rila (10th c. founder), 125, 126, 129, 248; testament of, see General Index: monastic foundation documents, (6) Rila

John Smyrnaios (11th c. monk of Galesios), 156

John the Baptist and Forerunner, St., 800, 1356, 1391, 1553, 1593, 1603, 1604, 1606, 1609; churches of, see General Index: churches (specific) and churches and chapels (monastic); feast days of, see General Index: feasts (specific, fixed); icons of, see General Index: icons (specific); miraculous appearance of, 885; monasteries of, see General Index: monasteries (specific)

John the calligrapher (10th c. monk of Lavra), 278

John the Evangelist or Theologian, St. (apostle), 582, 584, 586, 587, 592, 593, 601, 931; church of, see General Index: churches and chapels (monastic); feast days of, see General Index: feasts (specific, fixed); monastery of, see General Index: monasteries (specific); works of, see General Index: books, New Testament

John the Iberian (10th c. superior of Iveron), 197, 208, 209, 210, 232, 262, 271, 272, 275, 276, 277, 300, 301

John the Merciful, St. (7th c. patriarch of Alexandria): churches of, see General Index: churches and chapels (monastic); feast day of, see General Index: feasts (specific, fixed); Life of, see General Index: books, hagiography and miracles

John the Treasurer or Cellarer (11th c. Athonite monk), 1303

John Ugleša (Jovan Ugljesa, 14th c. despot of Serres), 1416, 1422, 1429n. 12

John Vladislav (14th c. voivode of Wallachia), 1298, 1301, 1412, 1414-15, 1416, 1419, 1420, 1422, 1426, 1429n. 2

John Xenos (11th c. founder), 143-46, 296, 328; Autobiography (Bios kai politeia), see General Index: books, hagiography and miracles; testament of, see General Index: monastic foundation documents, (8) John Xenos and testaments (specific)

Jonah (11th c. monk and priest of Athonite St. Onouphrios [monastery]), 291

Jordan (river), 782, 1127, 1396

Joseph (7th c. priest and notary of Hermonthis), 53, 57

Joseph (11th c. founder of St. Nicholas of Kasoulon), 1319, 1320, 1324, 1327

Joseph (12th c. sacristan of St. Mamas), 1031

Joseph (14th c. monk of Nea Mone), 1445

PEOPLE AND PLACES

- Joseph (14th c. superior of Vatopedi), 1424
- Joseph (brother of Theodore the Studite), 68, 973
- Joseph (early ascetic), 943, 949n. 82
- Joseph I (13th c. patriarch of CP), 150
- Joseph II (15th c. patriarch of CP), 1409
- Joseph III (16th c. patriarch of CP), 568
- Joseph Hagioglykerites (12th c. superior of Pantokrator), 726
- Josephus, Flavius (1st c. historian), 359
- Josiah (Old Testament king), 1354
- Jovane (monk [?] at Pakourianos' monastery), 546
- Judas (Iscariot), in formulaic curses, 325, 337, 911, 931, 933, 1019, 1076, 1150, 1190, 1478, 1501
- Jude, St. (apostle), feast day of. See General Index: feasts (specific, fixed)
- Juliane of Plakis (Anicia Juliana, 6th c. noblewoman), 941, 948n. 78
- Justinian (emperor): Codex, Institutes, and Novels of, see General Index: imperial legislation (specific); legislation of, 47, 49, 446, 573; officials of, 973
- Kaballourios (11th c. benefactor of Christodoulos of Patmos), 583, 600
- Kabasilas, Nicholas (14th c. hesychast partisan), 1288, 1491, 1492
- Kadmeia (Boeotia), 1244
- Kaisaropolis (village in theme of Serres), 525
- Kakodikes (12th c. property owner in Thessalonike), 771
- Kalamaritzis (field near Skoteine), 1188
- Kalambakes (13th c. property owner near Skoteine), 1189
- Kalamoutzes (13th c. property owner near Skoteine), 1187
- Kale (mother of Attaleiates), 341, 349

PEOPLE AND PLACES

- Kaligaria. See Constantinople, quarters of
- Kaligas (14th c. property owner in CP), 1557, 1563
- Kalimytos (13th c. property owner near Skoteine), 1188
- Kallierges (13th c. property owner near Skoteine), 1187
- Kallinikos (10th c. Athonite monk, priest and superior), 241
- Kallinikos (12th c. monk and priest of St. Mamas), 1030
- Kallinikos (another 12th c. monk and priest of St. Mamas), 1030
- Kallinikos (14th c. monk of Nea Mone), 1441
- Kallinikos (14th c. monk and priest of Geromeri), 1397, 1401
- Kallinikos (15th c. monk and beekeeper at Eleousa), 1675
- Kallinikos II (17th c. patriarch of CP), 568
- Kallistos (14th c. superior of Iveron), 1428
- Kallistos I (patriarch of CP), 975, 1491, 1492, 1494
- Kallistos II Xanthopoulos (patriarch of CP), 1637, 1662n. 19
- Kaloeides (13th c. property owner near Skoteine), 1187
- Kalogerites, Basil, [vineyard of] (CP), 712
- Kalojan (13th c. Bulgarian ruler), 508, 783
- Kalon Neron (village near CP), 1280
- Kalosera (village in Thrace), 829
- Kaloudes, Ioannikios (13th c. superior of Menoikeion), 1579
- Kalymnos (Aegean island), 566
- Kamachon, building site of (oikostasion), 772
- Kamarotes (11th c. poet of Rhaidestos), 367
- Kamelogephyron (site), 1280
- Kaminia, episkepsis of, 770

PEOPLE AND PLACES

Kamytzes (estate). See Kyklobios

Kamytzes, Eustathios (courtier of Alexios I Komnenos), 743, 776n. 44

Kanikleion (village in Thrace), 770, 1557, 1558, 1561

Kanikleiou (estates in Thrace), 828

Kanokes, Demetrios, [vineyard of] (CP), 712

Kanokes, priest, [vineyard of] (CP), 712

Kantakouzene, Anna (great-granddaughter of Theodora Synadene), 1568

Kapandrites, Aristarchos (14th c. benefactor of Geromeri), 1397, 1402

Kapassou, house of (CP), 712

Kapsex (12th c. property owner in Kos), 771

Karantene (13th c. property owner near Skoteine), 1189

Karbeas (12th c. property owner in Thessalonike), 771

Kardamon (region near Skoteine), 1188

Kardiasmenoi (estate on Kos), 600

Kareon (estate), 770

Karia (Caria), 1245

Karpathos (Aegean island), archbishop of, 567

Kars (Armenia), district of, 555

Karseres (13th c. property owner near Skoteine), 1189

Karyes (site on Mount Athos), 206, 208, 285, 1331, 1333, 1389

Kasilokome (site near Skoteine), 1189

Kastamonites, Leo (12th c. retainer of Isaac Komnenos), 791, 794, 804, 823, 829, 837, 844, 848

Kastella (field near Skoteine), 1188

Kastellia, Ta (fields near Skoteine), 1188

Kastellites, John (11th c. monk of Patmos), 596

PEOPLE AND PLACES

- Kastellon (property in theme of Pergamon), 1279
- Kastrianou, Ta (site on Kos), 600
- Katabolion (district in Opsikion), 1050, 1051
- Katakalos, house of (CP), 712
- Katakoilas, Leo (9th c. courtier), 120, 121
- Kataphloron (11th c. patron of Evergetis), 462, 494, 501n. 33
- Kathare, Theodora, house of (CP), 712
- Kathras (13th c. property owner near Skoteine), 1188
- Kaystros (river in Anatolia), 148
- Kazanes (13th c. property owner near Skoteine), 1187, 1188
- Kekaumenos, Basil (11th c. imperial official), 455
- Kentarchos (11th c. Thracian property owner), 341, 360, 367
- Kentarchos, Gounares, [vineyard of] (CP), 712
- Kephalas, Theodore (12th c. superior of Lavra), 212
- Kephalenia (island in Ionian Sea), 784
- Keporos, Theodore, [vineyard of] (CP), 712
- Keramareion (site near Skoteine), 1189
- Kerameus, Neophytos. See Neilos Kerameus
- Kerkizos (village in Thrace), 829
- Kiboulios (estate of), 769
- Kiev, monastery in, 88
- Kinnamos, Basil (13th c. bishop of Paphos), 1338, 1346, 1348, 1352, 1361
- Kinsterna (estate), 769
- Kisamos (site in western Crete), 144
- Kissos (mountain near Skoteine), 1189

PEOPLE AND PLACES

Klemes (12th c. monk of St. Mamas), 1034

Knights Hospitallers of St. John, 567

Kobena (site near Skoteine), 1182, 1188, 1189

Kochlakea (estate), 770

Kodoneianes: episkepsis of, 771; estate of, 770

Koila (market [emporion] on Thracian peninsula): Jewish quarter of, 770; tithe of wines of, 770

Kolobos, John (early ascetic), 435

Kolydros: fortification at, 1433; village of, 1433

Kommation (field on Kos), 600

Komnene, Anna (daughter of John II Komnenos), 507, 743, 774, 776n. 47

Komnene, Anna (historian, daughter of Alexios I), 308, 507, 508, 649, 655, 670, 701, 707, 708, 709, 710, 782

Komnene, Eudokia (daughter of Alexios I), 654, 655, 669, 701, 707, 709, 717n. 4, 742

Komnene, Eudokia (daughter of John II Komnenos), 743, 774, 776n. 47

Komnene, Eudokia (daughter-in-law of John II Komnenos), 742, 775n. 28

Komnene, Eudokia (monastic name Xene, niece of Alexios I), 872, 878, 927, 928, 948n. 70

Komnene, Eudokia (sister of Alexios I), 742, 775n. 37

Komnene, Irene (empress, wife of John II Komnenos), 701, 718n. 33, 725, 728, 733, 742, 755, 756, 759, 771, 774

Komnene, Irene (empress, wife of Manuel I Komnenos). See Bertha (Irene) of Sulzbach

Komnene, Irene (wife of Andronikos Komnenos), 701, 718n. 43

Komnene, Irene (wife of Isaac Komnenos), 701, 718n. 44

Komnene, Irene Doukaina (empress and founder): background of, 665; and Christodoulos, 599, 600; commemoration of, 701, 742, 755, 774, 823, 840; and convent of Kecharitomene, 666; date of death of, 823, 840; donations of, 714; family of, 607, 782, 784, 860; miracle at grave of, 840; and Philanthropos monastery, 861, 976; portrait of, 838; regulations of, 610-12, 614-19, 649-59, 664, 706, 731, 793, 866, 867, 1113, 1261, 1384; typikon of, see General Index: monastic foundation documents, (27) Kecharitomene; and typikon of Evergetis, 609, 785, 789, 863, 873, 1044

PEOPLE AND PLACES

- Komnene, Maria (daughter of Alexios I), 701, 710, 718n. 41
- Komnene, Maria (daughter of John II Komnenos), 743, 774, 776n. 47
- Komnene, Theodora (daughter of John II Komnenos), 743, 774, 776n. 47
- Komnene, Theodora (monastic name Xene, daughter of Alexios I), 702, 718n. 45
- Komnene, Xene (monastic name Theodora, nun and sister of Alexios I), 360, 371n. 38, 742, 775n. 37
- Komnenos, Adrian (brother of Alexios I), 742, 775n. 33
- Komnenos, Adrian (monastic name John, son of Isaac Komnenos), 770, 777n. 89
- Komnenos, Alexios (basileus, son of John II Komnenos), 731, 742, 743, 755, 756, 759, 774
- Komnenos, Alexios (grandson of John II Komnenos), 742
- Komnenos, Andronikos (son of Alexios I), 701, 718n. 34, 742
- Komnenos, Andronikos (son of John II Komnenos), 743
- Komnenos, Isaac (brother of Alexios I), 307, 450, 526, 770, 775n. 27, 872, 927
- Komnenos, Isaac (founder, son of Alexios I Komnenos): career of, 782-83; coffin of, 838; commemoration of, 701, 742; dwelling of, 848; editorial work of, 785-86; enkolpion of, 838; Gift and Grant Ordinance by, 608, 792, 848, 860; illness of, 830, 832, 839; and Kosmosoteria monastery, xiv; and Manuel I Komnenos, 725; patronage of, 610; portrait of, 835, 838; regulations of, xxxi, xxxiv, xxxv, 611, 614-19, 784, 786-95, 864, 866, 868, 986, 1113; relationship of with parents, 832; Seraglio Octateuch of, 783; testament of, see General Index: testaments (specific); tomb of, 838-39; typikon of, see General Index: monastic foundation documents, (29) Kosmosoteira; use of typikon of Evergetis by, 456, 468, 609, 612, 784-85, 787, 788, 789, 861, 873, 975, 976, 1044, 1626
- Komnenos, Isaac (son of John II Komnenos), 743
- Komnenos, Isaac (usurper and ruler of Cyprus), 1108
- Komnenos, John (archbishop of Bulgaria), 168, 1673, 1676n. 39
- Komnenos, John (father of Alexios I), 702, 718n. 48, 742
- Komnenos, Manuel (brother of Alexios I), 742, 775n. 35
- Komnenos, Nikephoros (brother of Alexios I), 773, 778n. 99
- Komnenos, Pyrouses (13th c. property owner near Skoteine), 1188, 1189

PEOPLE AND PLACES

- Konstitzes (foster child of Isaac Komnenos), 791, 794, 829, 837, 845, 846
- Kontostephanos, Andronikos (Antony, 12th c. monk of Heliou Bomon), 1043
- Koraes (library on Chios), 508
- Kordoleon (site in katepanikion of Smyrna), 1279
- Kornelios (14th c. monk of Nea Mone), 1441
- Kos (Aegean island), 564, 566, 572, 573, 574, 575, 581, 583, 599, 601, 771
- Kosmas (10th c. Athonite ecclesiarch), 242
- Kosmas (10th c. Athonite monk and superior), 242
- Kosmas (another 10th c. Athonite monk and superior), 241
- Kosmas (10th c. superior of Athonite Theoktistos monastery), 242
- Kosmas (11th c. monk of Galesios), 163
- Kosmas (11th c. monk and superior of Athonite Philadelphou monastery), 291
- Kosmas (11th c. monk and superior of Lavra), 211
- Kosmas, St. See Anargyroi
- Kosmas I Hierosolymites (11th c. patriarch of CP), 136, 452, 564, 580
- Kosmas II Attikos (12th c. patriarch of CP), 869, 974, 981-82, 992, 1032, 1037n. 2
- Kosmas III (18th c. patriarch of CP), 568
- Kosmas the Hymnographer (8th c. Sabaitic monk), 1312
- Kosmidion. See Constantinople, suburbs of
- Kostenechki, Constantine (15th c. scholar), 508
- Kostomyres (13th c. monk of Skoteine), 1188
- Kostomyres (estate of, Diabenetoi), 768
- Kotresi (village), 555
- Kottabos (estate), 768
- Koukou (Thracian estate), 367

PEOPLE AND PLACES

- Koula (quarter of Thessalonike), 1445, 1453n. 17
- Koulpingoi (mercenaries), 362, 366
- Kouphou (village in northern Crete), 144
- Kourasmene, house of (CP), 712
- Kourianis (estate in Thrace), 829
- Koursares, Manuel [vineyard of] (CP), 712
- Kourtikas, George Doukas Maniates (doulos of emperor of Trebizond), 1407 and n. 7
- Kourtikios (12th c. property owner), 770
- Kourtikios, Constantine (first husband of Theodora Komnene), 701, 718n. 38
- Koutloumousi (legendary founder of Koutloumousi monastery), 1408
- Koutzouvendis (mountain in Cyprus), 1338, 1350, 1370n. 1
- Koxes (village near Serres), 770
- Krambeas, confraternity of (Thessalonike[?]), 771, 777n. 92
- Krasas, house of (Rhaidestos), 335
- Krisa, gulf of (Greece, modern gulf of Itea), 1244
- Kritopoulos, Daniel (dikaiophylax and metropolitan of Ungrovlachia), 1415, 1420, 1429n. 17
- Krupnik (episcopal see in Bulgaria), 126
- Kryon Neron (estate in Thrace), 769
- Ktima (site of hermitage in Cyprus), xv, xxii, xxiv, xxxiii, 1338
- Kurşunlu (Turkish village on gulf of Gemlik), 1042
- Kyamites/Kyamitos [?] (region near Skoteine), 1187
- Kybaros (site near Skoteine), 1189
- Kyklobios (estate of), 769
- Kyminas, Eudokia (13th c. property owner near Skoteine), 1188
- Kynegoi. See Constantinople, gates of and Constantinople, quarters of

PEOPLE AND PLACES

Kyparissia/Kyparission. See Constantinople, quarters of Kyparissiotēs, John (15th c. priest in Stroumitza), 1675

Kypsella (Thrace): episkepsis of, 770; fort of, 770; hostels of, 770

Kyriake, St. (3rd c. martyr): church of, see General Index: churches and chapels (monastic); monastery of, see General Index: monasteries (specific)

Kyrikos, St. (3d c. martyr), feast day of. See feasts (specific, fixed)

Kyrillos. See also under Cyril

Kyrillos (11th c. monk of Galesios), 165

Kyrillos (11th c. monk of Patmos), 596

Kyrillos (11th c. superior of Esphigmenou), 291

Kyrillos (12th c. monk of St. Mamas), 1031

Kyrillos (another 12th c. monk of St. Mamas), 1031, 1034

Kyrillos (12th c. monk of Stoudios), 1032

Kyrillos (14th c. superior of Athonite Lavra), 1428

Kyrillos (14th c. superior-designate of St. Euthymios in Jerusalem), 1406

Kythrina (cattle byre near Pergamon [?]), 1279

Labaka (site in theme of Armeniakoi), 555, 556

Lachanas (estate at Lopadion, Bithynia), 1280

Lachanitzin (site on Kos), 600

Ladislav (12th c. king of Hungary), 725

Lakedaimon (ancient Sparta), 313, 314, 317-20, 324-25

Lalkouba (field in theme of Philippoupolis, modern Lilkovo), 524

Laodiceia, council of. See General Index: canon law (specific canons)

Larissa (city in Thessaly), archbishopric of, 1455, 1456, 1458n. 10

Latins, 1231, 1233, 1245, 1247, 1291

PEOPLE AND PLACES

- Latouros: house of (CP), 713; house of son-in-law of (CP), 713; workshop of (CP), 713
- Latros (monastic center northwest of Miletos), 136-37, 564, 570, 574, 580, 599, 1237, 1338, 1351
- Latros, Mount, 135, 580, 599, 1351
- Laurentios (11th c. stylite of Galesios), 156, 163
- Laurentios (15th c. monk and cellarer of Eleousa), 1675
- Lazarus (9th c. painter), 886
- Lazarus (10th c. Athonite superior), 242
- Lazarus, poor (New Testament), 1597
- Lazarus, St. (New Testament): chapels of, see General Index: churches and chapels (monastic); feast day of, see General Index: feasts (specific, movable)
- Lazarus of Galesios (11th c. founder), 148-66, 170, 204, 448, 463, 1198, 1374; Life of, see General Index: books, hagiography and miracles; testament of, see General Index: monastic foundation documents, (9) Galesios
- Lefkara (village in Cyprus), 1338, 1351
- Leipso (Aegean islet), 583, 594, 595
- Lekapenos (10th c. aristocratic family), 1042
- Lemnos (Aegean island), 201, 253, 457, 1494
- Lentianos (13th c. property owner near Skoteine), 1187
- Leo (11th c. peasant). See Lazarus of Galesios
- Leo (11th c. priest and sakellarios in Euripos), 597
- Leo (12th c. Sicilian logothetes), 633
- Leo (15th c. monk of Eleousa), 1675
- Leo (relative of Attaleiates), 349
- Leo I (emperor), 918
- Leo V (emperor), 68, 121
- Leo VI the Wise (emperor), 48, 49, 69, 120, 121, 122, 198, 299, 1254. See also General Index: books, law and typika

PEOPLE AND PLACES

Leo Musikos (10th c. courtier), 69

Leo of Chalcedon (11th c. metropolitan), 307-8, 309, 326, 330, 442, 450, 451, 456, 618, 650, 863n. 5

Leo of Nauplia (12th c. bishop and founder): career of, 1588; his convent at Bouze, 954, 960-62; memorandum and typikon of, see General Index: monastic foundation documents, (31) Areia; monastery in Areia, 954, 961, 964; regulations of, xxxvi, 862, 863, 864, 867, 870, 956-59, 1340

Leo Styppes (12th c. patriarch of CP), 620, 773, 778n. 100, 869, 870, 879

Leo the Philosopher (archbishop of Bulgaria), 1673, 1676n. 39

Leontios (9th c. superior of Stoudios), 68

Leontios (11th c. monk and superior of Athonite Phalakrou monastery), 291

Leontios (12th c. monk and priest of St. Mamas), 1031

Leontios (12th c. superior of Patmos and patriarch of Jerusalem), 566

Leontios Theotokites (12th c. patriarch of CP), 1207

Leros (Aegean island), 566, 583, 594, 595

Lesbos (Aegean island), 565

Leuke (Thracian village), 769

Leuke of the Armenians (Thracian estate), 367

Leukosia (Cyprus, modern Nicosia), 1107, 1108, 1131

Levunion, battle of (1091), 453

Libadion (village), 555

Libaditzia (site near Skoteine), 1189

Liberos (13th c. property owner near Skoteine), 1188

Ligmous/Ligoumous (Greek village near Heliou Bomon), 1043

Liguria (Italy), 1245

Limnin (estate), 769

Liparites, Basil (12th c. kouropalates), 1035

PEOPLE AND PLACES

Lipitzos (hamlet in theme of Philippoupolis), 524

Lips (estate). See Baboulou

Lips, Constantine (10th c. founder), 1254

Lithognomon, Apostoles, house of (CP), 712

Lombardy, xxix

Lopadion (town in northwestern Asia Minor), 1280

Lot (Old Testament figure), 933; wife of, 1222, 1281

Louis IX, St. (13th c. king of France), 726

Loukilianos, St. (3rd c. martyr), icon of. See General Index: icons (specific)

Loxadi (village), 770

Luke (10th c. Athonite monk), 241

Luke (10th c. Athonite monk and steward), 241

Luke (11th c. metropolitan of Anazarbos), 377, 383n. 1

Luke (11th c. monk of Patmos), 596

Luke (11th c. monk and superior of Athonite Mother of God monastery), 291

Luke (12th c. metropolitan of Mesembria), 872, 875, 927, 948n. 67; relic of, 927

Luke (12th c. monk of St. Mamas), 1031

Luke (12th c. Sicilian archimandrite), 637, 638, 639, 640-41, 643

Luke (12th c. Sicilian bishop and scribe), 625, 630, 633, 634 and n. 7

Luke (12th c. superior of St. Philip's in Sicily), 624

Luke (13th c. priest of St. Mamas), 975

Luke, St. (evangelist): church of, see General Index: churches (specific); feast day of, see General Index: feasts (specific, fixed)

Luke II (12th c. Sicilian archimandrite), 639

Luke Chrysoberges (12th c. patriarch of CP), 565, 870

PEOPLE AND PLACES

Luke of Messina (12th c. founder), 32, 90, 607, 613, 616, 617; typikon of, see General Index: monastic foundation documents, (26) Luke of Messina

Luke the Cappadocian (11th c. monk of Patmos), 600

Luxor (Egypt), 52

Lykochorion (estate in Thrace), 828, 837; resettlement of, 846

Lykos (estate of), 770

Lykos (valley, CP), 1254

Lyons (France), 1396

Maccabees, Holy (Old Testament figures), feast day of. See General Index: feasts (specific, fixed)

Macedonia (Greek): Athonite properties in, 1493; theme of, 209, 361, 363, 364, 911

Macedonia (Republic of), 18, 167

Machadion. See Chamadion

Machetarios (12th c. property owner in Mytilene), 771

Madytos (Thrace): market (emporion) of, 770; village of, 769

Maeander (river), 148, 1245

Maedones (13th c. property owner near Skoteine), 1187

Mafre (13th c. Syrian pitchmaker in CP), 1279

Magdala (village in Galilee), 1350

Magistros (13th c. property owner in CP), 1279

Magnesia (on the Maeander), 148

Magoules (13th c. property owner near Skoteine), 1187

Mainz, archbishopric of, xxxv

Makaria (12th c. woman commemorated at Phoberos), 946

Makaria (15th c. gatekeeper at Damilas' convent), 1476

Makarios (7th c. Monothelite patriarch of Antioch), 1400

PEOPLE AND PLACES

- Makarios (15th c. superior of Pantokrator), 727
- Makarios [the Egyptian], St. (4th c. ascetic). See Ps.-Makarios
- Makedonios (4th c. bishop of CP), 1399
- Makres, Makarios (15th c. superior of Pantokrator), 1626, 1632n. 2
- Makres Moires (field near Skoteine), 1187
- Makrodoukas, Nicholas (14th c. founder), 1494
- Makron Chorion (Thrace), 341, 360, 367
- Malakenos, John (10th c. man of Lakedaimon), 318, 321n. 10
- Maleinos, Michael (10th c. superior of Mount Kyminas), 206, 251
- Mallabret, Eleazar (12th c. Norman nobleman), 623
- Malon (12th c. property owner), 770
- Malta (island), 60
- Mamas, St. (3rd c. martyr), 992, 995, 1002, 1022, 1024, 1028; church of, see General Index: churches and chapels (monastic); feast day of, see General Index: feasts (specific, fixed); monastery of, see General Index: monasteries (specific)
- Mamitzonites, house of (CP), 713
- Mamluks, 378
- Manasses (Old Testament figure), 587, 773
- Manasses, Constantine (11th c. chronicler). See General Index: books, secular
- Mangana, house and palace of (CP). See Constantinople, monuments of
- Mangaphaina, Irene (monastic name Athanasia, 13th c. benefactress of Skoteine), 1176, 1182, 1188, 1189, 1190
- Mangaphas (husband of Irene Mangaphaina), 1178, 1182
- Mangaphas, Theodore (13th c. dynast), 1176
- Mango, Cyril (historian), xvii, 67
- Maniakes, George (11th c. general), 621; church of, see General Index: churches (specific)

PEOPLE AND PLACES

Manias, place of (location uncertain), 1251

Manoutes, John (12th c. judge of the Velum), 1035

Mantzikert, battle of (1071), 449

Manuel (14th c. novice of Nea Mone), 1435, 1445

Manuel, St. (4th c. martyr), icon of. See General Index: icons (specific)

Manuel I Komnenos (emperor): chrysobulls of, see General Index: imperial legislation (specific); and clerical tax exemptions, 1105; commemoration of, 743, 1047, 1086-87; and Heliou Bomon, 1047-48, 1051; and Isaac Komnenos, 782; and Machairas, 1101, 1102, 1107, 1109, 1113, 1116, 1118, 1128, 1130; officials of, 125, 871, 974, 991, 1042-43, 1050, 1088; and Pantokrator monastery, 725-26; and private religious foundations, 870-71; prostagmata and prostaxeis of, see General Index: imperial legislation (specific); reign of, 566, 1110, 1345; solemnion of, 1051; support of Eleousa, 168; tomb of, 728

Manuel I Sarantenos (13th c. patriarch of CP), 137, 1105, 1237, 1241n. 5, 1331

Manuel II (13th c. patriarch of CP), 137, 168, 1105, 1199n. 6

Manuel II Palaiologos (emperor): bequest to Bebaia Elpis, 1568; bequest to Nea Mone, 1433; burial of, 726; and Charsianeites monastery, 1626; chrysobull of, see General Index: imperial legislation (specific); and Docheiariou monastery, 1304; journey to Italy, 1638, 1639; and monastic independence, 1488; personal testament of, 1626; prostagma of, see General Index: imperial legislation (specific); reform program of, 1487; regulations of, xxx, 1483, 1486, 1493, 1613, 1617-24; and “Rule of Athanasios,” 1485; son of, 727; typikon of, see General Index: monastic foundation documents, (59) Manuel II

Manuel of Stroumitza (11th c. founder): and Alexios I Komnenos, 167, 513, 575; career of, 1588; and charistike, 171, 443; and institutional independence, 170-71, 186, 308, 328; and monastic reform, 171, 307, 1485, 1667; regulations of, 50, 169-72, 304, 329, 512; relations with ecclesiastical hierarchy, 49, 172, 185, 186, 513, 959; signature of, 188; typikon of, see General Index: monastic foundation documents, (10) Eleousa

Marachas, house of (CP), 1568

Marcian (emperor), 1207

Margaret, Queen (12th c. ruler of Sicily), 624

Margon (property of Pakourianos), 555

Maria (12th c. nun, mother of superior of Phoberos), 927

Maria (spouse of Michael VII Doukas), 507

Maria, despoina (Maria of Alania, 11th c. empress), 872, 927, 948n. 72

PEOPLE AND PLACES

Maritza (alt.: Hebros; river), 770, 793, 827, 828; battle of (1371), 1492, 1493

Mark (10th c. Athonite monk, priest and superior), 242

Mark (11th c. Athonite monk and superior), 291

Mark (15th c. monk and superior of Charsianeites), 1625, 1630, 1632, 1633, 1634, 1635, 1636, 1637; Rule of, see General Index: monastic foundation documents, (60) Charsianeites

Mark, St. (evangelist): church of, see General Index: churches and chapels (monastic); feast day of, see General Index: feasts (specific, fixed); monastery of, see General Index: monasteries (specific)

Mark the Hermit (5th c. opponent of Nestorianism), 76, 80n. 2, 454, 1391, 1394, 1477, 1480n. 29

Markianistai. See General Index: dissidents, religious

Marmara, Sea of, monasteries near, xvii, 326, 1042

Marmaras (village of), 769

Marmarion/Marmaros (site in theme of Thessalonike), 522, 549

Marnakiou (site near Chalcedon), 1292

Martinakion (site near CP [?]), 1280

Martin [I], St. (7th c. pope), feast of. See General Index: feasts (specific, fixed)

Martin V (15th c. pope), 727

Martisapao (site in theme of Armeniakoi), 555

Martyrs, Forty. See Forty Martyrs

Mary Magdalene, St. (New Testament figure), feast day of. See General Index: feasts (specific, fixed)

Mary of Egypt, St. (late antique hermit), Life of. See General Index: books, hagiography and miracles

Marzautes (field near Skoteine), 1189

Massagetai (Tatars), 1243, 1245. See also Attarioi

Mathos, Nicholas (17th c. patron of Patmos), 567

Matos (14th c. metropolitan of Gaza), 1407

PEOPLE AND PLACES

Matthew (15th c. superior of Patmos), 567

Matthew, St. (apostle), feast days of. See General Index: feasts (specific, fixed)

Matthew I (15th c. patriarch of CP): Autobiography of, see General Index: monastic foundation documents, (60) Charsianeites; career of, 457, 975, 1493-94, 1625-26, 1638; decisions and synodal acts of, 1241n. 11, 1433-34; and previous monastic rules, 37, 1485; regulations of, xxxiii, 32, 1487, 1489, 1627-32; testament of, see General Index: monastic foundation documents, (60) Charsianeites

Matthew Kantakouzenos (co-emperor), 975

Mauraganos, house of (CP), 713

Maurianos, house of (CP), 713

Maurice (emperor), 973

Maurikas, John (12th c. kouropalates), 1032

Maupous, [John] (11th c. metropolitan of Euchaita and writer), 1393

Mauros, house of (CP), 713

Mavrocordato, John Nicolas (18th c. dragoman of the Sublime Porte), 727

Maximos (12th c. ecclesiarch of Philanthropos), 1036

Maximos (13th c. superior of unspecified Cypriot monastery), 1350

Maximos (of Skoteine, 13th c. founder): career of, 1176, 1397; regulations of, xx, 1093, 1094, 1095, 1100, 1101, 1177-79, 1198, 1199, 1208; signature of, 1180; testament of, see General Index: monastic foundation documents, (35) Skoteine

Maximos the Confessor (7th c. theologian), 137, 140, 454, 1468. See also General Index: books, ascetic and patristic

Mazarina (13th c. property owner near Skoteine), 1187

Mazizanes (13th c. property owner near Skoteine), 1188

Medenistai. See General Index: dissidents, religious

Medinet Habu (Egypt), 51

Meester, Placide de (historian), 6, 7, 9, 10, 1691

Megagianni, Zacharie (16th c. manuscript collector), 1320

PEOPLE AND PLACES

Megale Petra (site on Mount Athos), 1394

Megalebos (village), 770

Megara (town near Athens), 1244

Mehmet I (15th c. Ottoman sultan), 126, 1580

Mehmet II (15th c. Ottoman sultan), 567

Mehmet III (17th c. Ottoman sultan), 1312

Melachrenos (13th c. property owner near Skoteine), 1188

Melana (site on Mount Athos), 206

Melana, Ta (attribute of Athonite Lavra), 235, 274, 279n. 1

Melandros (village), 769

Melane (14th c. patron of Nea Mone), xix, 1436, 1443, 1453n. 14

Melanoudion (fortress near Miletos), 599

Meletios (12th c. monk and baker at St. Mamas), 1031

Meletios (12th c. monk and vinedresser at St. Mamas), 1031

Meletios (15th c. superior of Eleousa), 1667, 1675

Meletios (18th c. superior of Heliou Bomon), 1043

Meletios, St. (4th c. archbishop of Antioch), feast day of. See General Index: feasts (specific, fixed)

Meletios the Younger (11th c. founder), 862, 864, 955, 960n. 19; typikon of, see General Index: typika (lost)

Melikoures (region near Skoteine), 1189

Melissenos, Nikephoros (brother-in-law of Alexios I), 742, 775n. 36

Melos, Ho (site), estate at. See St. George of Melos (estate)

Memnonion (mountain, Upper Egypt), 55

Menas (6th c. patriarch of CP), 918, 948n. 62

Menas (estate in theme of Boleron), 524

PEOPLE AND PLACES

Menas, St. (4th c. martyr): feast day of, see General Index: feasts (specific, fixed); icon of, see General Index: icons (specific)

Menoikeion, Mount (northeastern Greece), 1579, 1580

Merbaka (town in Argolid), church in, 959n. 8

Mesarites, Nicholas (13th c. author and bishop of Ephesos), 457

Mesembria (Bulgaria, modern Nesebur), metropolitan of, 872, 875, 927

Mesokomion (Thrace), estates at, 367

Mesopotamia (13th c. property owner near Skoteine), 1189

Mesopotamia, monks from, 940

Mesopotamites (11th c. imperial official), 557

Mesotraphos (site near Skoteine), 1188

Messalianoi. See General Index: dissidents, religious

Messina (Sicily), 623, 637, 638, 639, 643

Messoglossion (site near Skoteine), 1189

Metaxas (11th c. Thracian property owner), 341, 360, 367

Meteora (monastic site in Thessaly), 1455

Methodios (10th c. Athonite monk and superior), 241

Methodios (10th c. monk and emissary of Nikephoros II Phokas), 251, 252

Methodios (10th c. monk and superior of Kyminas), 206

Methodios I (9th c. patriarch of CP), 69, 1042; icon of, see General Index: icons (specific)

Methone (Peloponnesian city), taxes from bishopric of, 771

Metochites, Theodore (14th c. courtier), 1254; funeral oration for Theodora Palaiologina, see General Index: books, miscellaneous

Metrophanes III (16th c. patriarch of CP), 1458n. 12

Michael (10th c. Athonite monk, priest and superior), 241

Michael (10th c. Athonite monk and superior), 241

PEOPLE AND PLACES

- Michael (10th c. ecclesiarch of Lavra), 274
- Michael (11th c. monk of the Athonite Archistrategos monastery), 291
- Michael (11th c. monk and superior of Athonite St. Peter monastery), 291
- Michael (11th c. steward and superior of Christ Panoiktirmon), 326, 329, 353, 359, 367, 368
- Michael (11th c. witness to the Testament of Christodoulos), 598
- Michael (12th c. monk of Stoudios), 1032
- Michael (13th c. bishop of Stroumitza), 168
- Michael (monastic name Melchisedek, 14th c. Vlach postulant of Koutloumoussi), 1416, 1422
- Michael (secretary of Isaac Komnenos), 791, 794, 804, 829, 837, 844, 846, 848
- Michael, St. (archangel), 1207, 1209, 1214, 1215, 1229, 1230, 1232, 1233, 1304, 1306, 1307, 1308; churches of, see General Index: churches (specific) and churches and chapels (monastic); feast days of, see General Index: feasts (specific, fixed); icons of, see General Index: icons (specific); monasteries of, see General Index: monasteries (specific). See also Archistrategos
- Michael I (emperor), 68
- Michael I Keroullarios (11th c. patriarch of CP), 152, 163, 204, 448-49
- Michael II (emperor), 68
- Michael III (12th c. patriarch of CP), 1102
- Michael IV Autoreianos (13th c. patriarch of CP), 457, 1105
- Michael IV the Paphlagonian (emperor), 283n. 2
- Michael V Kalaphates (emperor), 69, 1042
- Michael VI Stratiotikos (emperor), chrysobull of. See General Index: imperial legislation (specific)
- Michael VII Doukas (emperor), 69, 449; chrysobull of, see General Index: imperial legislation (specific); general of, 507; semeiosis of, see General Index: legal documents (specific) and Glossary. See also General Index: coinage
- Michael VIII Palaiologos (emperor): Autobiography of, 1215-17, 1230-32, 1239, 1241-46; and Auxentios monastery, 1207, 1208, 1238, 1258; church reunification (unionist) policies of, 150, 212, 1207, 1396, 1485; death of, 1525; and endorsement of typikon of Skoteine, 1191, 1193n. 61; family of, 1288, 1512, 1610n. 20; Grand Logothete of, 1374; and Kellibara monastery, 1237-38, 1507; and Pantokrator monastery, 726; and Patmos, 566; rebuilding program of, 1106; and recovery of CP, 1300; regulations of, 1093, 1095, 1098-1101, 1105, 1208-14, 1261, 1397, 1497, 1498, 1505; and Skoteine monastery, 1181, 1193n. 61; typika of, see General Index: monastic foundation documents, (37) Auxentios and (38) Kellibara I

PEOPLE AND PLACES

Michael IX Palaiologos (Michael VIII's grandson and co-emperor), 1246, 1252n. 19

Michael the Monk (9th c. hagiographer), 84, 85, 86

Mileto (site of Norman court in Calabria), 622

Miletos, 135; metropolitan see of, 137

Milion. See Constantinople, monuments of Mintou, Ta (village), 769

Mirto (village in northeastern Sicily), 621

Mixis (village), 770; ford (perama) of, 770

Moabites (Old Testament people), 1354

Modi (site near Skoteine), 1190

Moldavia, 1456

Monacheion (site of Phoberos monastery, near Asiatic shore of Bosphorus), 880, 884

Monasteriotes, Leo (12th c. judge of the Velum and tou hippodromou), 1035

Monokellion (estate of). See St. Myrope (estate in Thrace)

Monokellion (Thracian property of Attaleiates), 360

Monomachatos (George, katepano of Dyrrachion [?]), property of, 769

Monomachos (13th c. patron of Skoteine), 1185, 1188

Monophysites. See General Index: dissidents, religious

Montbéliard, Walter de (13th c. constable of Jerusalem), 1108

Montokiklina (13th c. property owner near Skoteine), 1187

Morochartzanes (estate of), 769

Moroioannes, Basil (11th c. seaman of Euripos), 595

Morokoumoulou (village in Thrace), 1557

PEOPLE AND PLACES

Moschonas (13th c. property owner near Skoteine), 1187

Moschos (11th c. Cretan deacon), 146

Moschos, John (6th c. ascetic author), 1311

Moses (late antique ascetic), 892

Moses (Old Testament prophet), 580, 630, 666, 917, 1218, 1354, 1418

Mostanitza (site in Bulgaria[?]), 1673

Mosynopolis (town in Thrace), fort of, 524, 531, 555, 556; military district of (bandon), 524

Mother of God (Theotokos): accountability to, 463, 492; as administrator, 427, 437; churches of, see General Index: churches (specific) and churches and chapels (monastic); cult of, 169; as a dedicatee, 310, 511; feast days of, see General Index: feasts (specific, fixed); monasteries and convents of, see General Index: convents (specific) and monasteries (specific); naming of foundations after, 169-70; as protector, 304, 611, 804, 819; as steward, 801, 1662; as superior, 1662; as trustee, 1113, 1163

Mount Athos. See Athos, Mount

Mousaios, Georgios (19th c. Greek scholar), 508-9

Mouzakios, Theodore Doukas, epi stratou (monastic name Theodoretos, 14th c. patron), 1562

Murad I (14th c. Ottoman sultan), 508, 1493, 1580

Murad II (15th c. Ottoman sultan), 212, 1304, 1493, 1613

Murad III (16th c. Ottoman sultan), 126

Mylopotamos (site near Lavra), 252, 262, 264

Myra (city in southern Asia Minor), metropolitan of, 567

Myriokephala (site in Crete): monastery of, see General Index: monasteries (specific); mountain of, 143, 146; village of, 143

Myron (14th c. superior of Anastasis), 1375

Myrope, St. (3rd c. martyr). See St. Myrope (estate in Thrace)

Mysia (Bulgaria), 1246

Mysians (Bulgarians), 1216, 1231, 1244, 1246. See also Bulgarians/Bulgars and Paeonians

Mytas, sebastos (13th c. benefactor of Skoteine), 1188, 1190

PEOPLE AND PLACES

Mytilene (city of Lesbos), 771; metropolitan of, 1520, 1566, 1567

Narkioi (Aegean islet), 583

Narses (11th c. property owner in Rhaidestos), 336

Naukratios (9th c. superior of St. John Stoudios), 68, 69, 71, 85; Encyclical Letter of, 85

Naupaktos (city in Western Greece), 313

Nauplia (Peloponnesos): diocese of, 867, 954, 960, 967; monasteries near, xviii, 958; noble family of, 955

Naxos (Aegean island), 566, 567

Nazareth, 667

Nazirites (Old Testament holy men), 178

Nazogeraia (site in western Crete), 144

Neagu, John (14th c. emissary of the voivode of Wallachia), 1410, 1415, 1420, 1429n. 7. See also General Index: titles and dignities, vitizes

Neboselous (estate in Thrace), 829

Nebuchadnezzar (Babylonian king), 884, 1354

Nebuzaradan (Babylonian dignitary), 1354

Neilos (13th c. bishop of Leros), 566

Neilos (14th c. monk of Docheiariou and founder), 1304, 1389-91, 1391n. 1; testament of, see General Index: monastic foundation documents, (48) Prodromos

Neilos, bishop of Tamasia (13th c. founder): career of, 1104, 1107-8, 1109, 1127-30, 1166, 1332, 1588; and early monastic traditions, 32, 38, 1094; imperial patronage of, 1131; regulations of, 457, 1095, 1100, 1110, 1111-18, 1165, 1198, 1340, 1582; signatures of, 1126, 1188; and stauropegia, 1101, 1102; typikon of, see General Index: monastic foundation documents, (34) Machairas; and typikon of Evergetis, 468, 987, 1094

Neilos Erichiotes. See Erichiotes, Neilos

Neilos Kerameus (14th c. patriarch of CP), 1625-26, 1629, 1631, 1635, 1637, 1645; Rule of, see General Index: monastic foundation documents, (60) Charsianeites

Neilos of Ankyra, St. (5th c. ascetic), 398

PEOPLE AND PLACES

Nektarios (13th c. superior of St. Nicholas of Kasoulon), 1320

Nektarios (19th c. bishop of Sardis), 568

Neobolianes (village), 771

Neochorion (estate in Thrace), 829

Neochorion (Thracian village), 770

Neokastron (town in Thrace), 827, 828; episkepsis of, 846, 847; fairs at, 828

Neophytos (11th c. monk and treasurer of Patmos), 573, 596, 598

Neophytos (11th c. superior of Lavra), 199

Neophytos (another 11th c. superior of Lavra), 285, 287, 289, 291

Neophytos (12th c. monk of St. Mamas), 1031

Neophytos (12th c. superior of Docheiariou and founder), 1303, 1304-5, 1306; Rule of, see General Index: monastic foundation documents, (41) Docheiariou

Neophytos (13th c. ascetic), 1127, 1163

Neophytos (13th c. monk of Machairas), 1107, 1115, 1163, 1166

Neophytos (15th c. monk of Eleousa), 1674

Neophytos (15th c. superior of Charsianeites), 1626

Neophytos (16th c. archbishop of Larissa), 1458n. 10

Neophytos (16th c. metropolitan of Serres), 212

Neophytos (16th c. superior of Meteora), 1456

Neophytos I (12th c. patriarch of CP), 456

Neophytos the Recluse (13th c. founder): books of, 1355; burial instructions of; 1369; career of, xxiv, 1297, 1300, 1314, 1338-39, 1349-51; and early monastic traditions, 32, 37; monastery of, 1108; regulations of, xxxiv, 1198, 1298, 1341-46; relics of, 1339, 1497; signature of, 1348, 1370; successor of, 1356; Testamentary Rule of, see General Index: monastic foundation documents, (45) Neophytos; tomb of, 1369

Nephton (15th c. ecclesiarch of Eleousa), 1674

Nephton (15th c. steward of Eleousa), 1674

PEOPLE AND PLACES

Nestongos (11th c. property owner in Rhaidestos): fields of, 769; hostels of, 769; vineyards of, 769

Nestorios (5th c. bishop of CP), 1400

Nicaea: councils of, see General Index: canon law (specific canons) and councils and synods (specific); Empire of (1204-61), 137, 150, 566, 1105, 1106; fathers of (see General Index: curses); monasteries in, 1238; “patriarch of,” 1233

Nicandros (14th c. monk of CP), 1375

Nicholas (9th c. Studite monk), 70

Nicholas (9th c. superior of Elegmoi), 1042

Nicholas (10th c. Athonite monk, superior and calligrapher), 242

Nicholas (10th c. judge in Lakedaimon), 317

Nicholas (11th c. scribe of Galesios), 163

Nicholas (12th c. man commemorated at Phoberos), 946

Nicholas (12th c. Sicilian court official), 633, 634

Nicholas (12th c. Sicilian deacon), 630

Nicholas (12th c. superior of Kasoulon and author), 1319, 1320, 1321, 1324, 1496; Rule of, see General Index: monastic foundation documents, (43) Kasoulon

Nicholas (13th c. superior of Iveron), 168

Nicholas (relative of Attaleiates), 349

Nicholas, St. (4th c. bishop of Myra): church of, see General Index: churches and chapels (monastic); feast day of, see General Index: feasts (specific, fixed); hermitage of, 524; icons of, see General Index: icons (specific); monasteries of, see General Index: monasteries (specific)

Nicholas I Mystikos (10th c. patriarch of CP), 121, 1042

Nicholas II Chrysoberges (10th c. patriarch of CP), 201, 202, 209, 299, 973

Nicholas III Grammatikos (11th c. patriarch of CP): and Christodoulos of Patmos, 599; commemoration of, 875, 927; and individual reformers, 452, 619, 866; memorandum of, 699, 879n. 1, 920; and Phoberos, 872, 876, 927; and privatization of monasteries, 649, 654, 699, 860, 869; reform activities of, 309, 442, 451, 618, 868, 879; and stauropolegion for Patmos, 566; and Vlach question, 212

Nicholas IV Muzalon (12th c. patriarch of CP), 860, 869, 974, 981, 986, 992, 993, 1033, 1037n. 3, 1049

PEOPLE AND PLACES

- Nicholas Alexander (Basarab, 14th c. voivode of Wallachia), 1410, 1414, 1419, 1429n. 4
- Nicholas of Methone (12th c. hagiographer), 955
- Nicholas the Studite (9th c. superior of St. John Stoudios), 69, 84, 96n. 43
- Nikephoros (10th c. Athonite monk and priest), 242
- Nikephoros (10th c. Athonite monk and superior), 241
- Nikephoros (another 10th c. Athonite monk and superior), 242
- Nikephoros (10th c. epi tou kanikleiou), 209, 210, 211, 271, 272, 275
- Nikephoros (11th c. monk of Athonite Xerokastrou monastery), 291
- Nikephoros (11th c. monk and superior of Athonite Berroiotou monastery), 291
- Nikephoros (11th c. patron of the church of Petritziotissa), 500
- Nikephoros (11th c. superior of Athonite St. Ephraem monastery), 291
- Nikephoros (12th c. architect in CP), 725
- Nikephoros (12th c. monk of St. Mamas), 1031
- Nikephoros (grandfather of superior of Phoberos), 927
- Nikephoros (relative of Nikephoros, patron of Petritziotissa), 500
- Nikephoros, St. (3rd c. martyr), monastery of. See General Index: monasteries (specific)
- Nikephoros I (9th c. patriarch of CP), 68, 121, 401, 416, 907, 947n. 43; works of, see General Index: books, law and typika
- Nikephoros I (emperor), 60, 68, 973
- Nikephoros II Phokas (emperor): ambassador of, 312n. 1; ban on new construction, 49, 201, 202, 303; chrysobulls of, see General Index: imperial legislation (specific); as patron of Kyminas, 206; prayers for, 136; reconquest of Crete, 143, 206, 313; reign of, 198; support of Athanasios the Athonite, 206-7, 233, 245, 246, 248, 251-52, 299, 302
- Nikephoros III Botaneiates (emperor): and Attaleiates, 449; chrysobulls of, see General Index: imperial legislation (specific); family of, 872; general of, 507; marriage of, 558n. 3; semeiosis of, see General Index: legal documents (specific) and Glossary
- Nikephoros Erotikos (10th c. founder), 310, 311, 312n. 1; typikon of, see General Index: monastic foundation documents, (16) Mount Tmolos

PEOPLE AND PLACES

Nikephoros Mauros (11th c. patriarch of Antioch), 360, 371n. 38

Nikephoros Mystikos (12th c. founder): career of, 974, 1044, 1050; commemoration of, 1047, 1087; and Heliou Bomon, 1042-43; and Mamas typikon, 987, 1044; regulations of, 610, 865, 867, 868, 869, 870, 871, 1045-49; signature of, 1088; typikon of, see General Index: monastic foundation documents, (33) Heliou Bomon; and typikon of Evergetis, 1109

Nikephoros of Crete (17th c. superior of Patmos), 567

Niketas (11th c. metropolitan of Athens), 451, 868

Niketas (11th c. monk of Patmos), 596

Niketas (11th c. patron of Christ Panoiktirmon), 369

Niketas (12th c. doctor), 743

Niketas, St. (4th c. martyr), feast day of. See General Index: feasts (specific, fixed)

Niketiates, houses of (CP), 1280

Nikodemos (10th c. Athonite monk and superior), 241

Nikodemos (14th c. Serbian archbishop), 1331

Nikodemos (father of Leo of Nauplia), 968

Nikodemos of Nea Gephyra (11th c. founder), 296, 298, 299, 301, 302, 303, 306, 323-25; testament of, see General Index: monastic foundation documents, (18) Nea Gephyra

Nikolezos, house of (CP), 1280

Nikomedeia: metropolitan of, 773; olive trees at, 1280

Nikon (15th c. monk of Eleousa), 1674

Nikon of the Black Mountain (11th c. reformer): and Basil of Caesarea, 31; career of, 377, 425-26; Interpretations of the Commands of the Lord (Pandektes), Small Book, and Taktikon, see General Index: books, ascetic and patristic; and John of Antioch, 309, 425; and monastic reform, 303, 428, 446-47, 454, 575; and Pachomian texts, 37; Regulations of, see General Index: monastic foundation documents, (20) Black Mountain; relations with ecclesiastical hierarchy, 298; and Theodore the Studite, 89; Treatise and typikon for Roidion, see General Index: monastic foundation documents, (21) Roidion

Nikon (the) Metanoeite (10th c. founder), 298, 299, 302, 304, 313-15, 317-20, 323, 363-67; testament of, see General Index: monastic foundation documents, (17) Nikon Metanoeite

Nikon the Theban (15th c. monk of Eleousa), 1674

PEOPLE AND PLACES

Nile (river), 51

Niphon (11th c. monk of Athonite Lavra), 291

Niphon (13th c. monk, grandfather of Maximos of Skoteine), 1181

Nitria (mountain in Egypt), 942, 1217

Noah (Old Testament figure), 931

Norman kings of Sicily: confirmation of superiors, 617; patronage of monasteries by, 607, 609, 613, 616, 622-24, 638

Normans, attack on Patmos, 566

Notaras, Chrysanthos (18th c. patriarch of Jerusalem), 1043

Nymphai (village near CP), 1279

Ochrid (see of Bulgarian archbishopric), 168

Olympos (mountain in Cyprus), 1351

Olympos, Mount (Bithynia), 86, 206, 455, 564, 1042, 1043, 1046, 1054

Onouphrios, St. (late antique Egyptian ascetic), 1356; church of, see General Index: churches (specific); monastery of, see General Index: monasteries (specific)

Ophrydas, Constantine (12th c. deacon of Hagia Sophia), 1036

Opsikion (theme), 772, 1050, 1051

Origen (3rd c. theologian), 1400

Orlando, Capo d', 621

Orniales (village), 771

Otranto (city in Apulia), archbishop of, 1320

Ottoman Turks: conquest of Anatolia, 150, 1238, 1374; conquest of the Argolid, 955; conquest of Balkans, 169; conquest of Bulgaria, 508; conquest of Byzantium's European possessions, 1492-93; conquest of CP, 69, 1493; conquest of Epiros, 1396; conquest of Philadelphia, 1176; conquest of Prousa, 1043; conquest of Thessaly, 1456; control of Mount Athos by, 219, 1409; destruction of monasteries by, 144, 508, 1320; loss of Bulgaria, 508; occupation of Otranto, 1320; and Patmos, 567; pirates, 1245, 1304, 1409, 1455; and post-Byzantine monasticism, 1300; promises of protection by, 1493

PEOPLE AND PLACES

Oumbertopoulos (Constantine Humbertos, general of Alexios I [?]), house of, 771

Ouranos, Nikephoros (10th c. military officer), 273n. 4

Pachomios (4th c. founder) and the Pachomian tradition, 32, 34, 40, 41, 61; feast day of, see General Index: feasts (specific, fixed); hagiography of, see General Index: books, hagiography and miracles; monastic rules of, see General Index: monastic rules (non-Byzantine); utilization by later writers, 390, 392, 396, 397, 402, 405, 409, 587, 906, 1364, 1652

Pachomios (11th c. monk of Galesios), 156

Pachomios I (16th c. patriarch of CP), 568

Pachymeres (14th c. historian), 1097

Paeonians (Bulgarians), 738, 774n. 3. See also Bulgars/Bulgarians, and Mysians

Paisios I (17th c. patriarch of CP), 1043

Pakourianos (cousin of Gregory Pakourianos), 551

Pakourianos, Apasios (brother of Gregory), 507, 509, 515, 516, 519, 520, 525, 544; testament of, 425

Pakourianos, Apasios (relative of Gregory), 524

Pakourianos, Chosrienes (uncle of Gregory), 551

Pakourianos, Gregory (11th c. founder): career of, 451, 525, 526, 527, 542-43; and charistike, 443; chrysobulls and other documents in possession of, 555-57, 575; commemoration of, 514, 544-45; foundation history of, 522-24; gifts and dedications of, 524-27, 552-54; and patronal privileges, 445, 514-15, 656; and preservation of documents, 329; reform sentiments of, 171, 307, 308, 330, 446, 509; regulations of, 509-17, 569, 731, 984; signature of, 557; tomb of, 509; typikon of, see General Index: monastic foundation documents, (20) Pakourianos

Pakourianos, Prince of Princes (father of Gregory), 519, 523, 551

Palaiokastron (site of Eleousa in Macedonia), 167

Palaiologina, Anna (daughter of Michael VIII), 1278, 1283n. 28

Palaiologina, Anna (wife of John II Orsini of Epiros), 1301, 1397, 1401, 1403n. 17

Palaiologina, Eudokia (daughter of Michael VIII), 1278, 1283n. 26

Palaiologina, Euphrosyne (14th c. patron): commemoration of, 1518, 1556; and convent of Bebaia Elpis, 1516, 1517; family of, 1525, 1526, 1569n. 9; regulations of, 1514, 1515, 1519, 1520, 1521;

PEOPLE AND PLACES

typikon of, see General Index: monastic foundation documents, (57) Bebaia Elpis

Palaiologina, Helena (14th c. empress), 1567, 1571n. 79

Palaiologina, Irene (daughter of Michael VIII), 1278, 1283n. 26, 1610n. 20

Palaiologina, Irene (empress, second wife of Andronikos II Palaiologos), 726. See also Yolande-Irene of Montferrat

Palaiologina, Irene Branaina Komnene Laskarina Kantakouzene (monastic name Maria, mother of Theodora Synadene), 1525, 1555, 1569n. 5

Palaiologina, Irene Komnene (monastic name Eugenia, grandmother of Michael VIII), 1228, 1242

Palaiologina, Irene Laskarina Choumnaina (monastic name Eulogia, 14th c. foundress), 1255, 1386, 1433; typikon of, see General Index: monastic foundation documents, (47) Philanthropos

Palaiologina, Mary (illegitimate daughter of Michael VIII Palaiologos), 726

Palaiologina, Theodora (monastic name Eugenia, empress, 13th c. founder): and convent of Lips, 1254; and convent of Sts. Kosmas and Damian, 1287-88; and Lips typikon, 1093, 1106, 1256, 1513; marriage to Michael VIII, 1243, 1252n. 6; regulations of, 1095, 1098, 1099, 1100, 1101, 1256-63, 1288-90, 1498, 1514, 1584, 1585; typika of, see General Index: monastic foundation documents, (39) Lips and (40) Anargyroi

Palaiologina, Theodora (monastic name Theodosia, mother of Michael VIII), 1228

Palaiologoi, heritage of, 1242-43

Palaiologos, Alexios (monastic name Antony, grandfather of Michael VIII), 1207, 1228, 1242

Palaiologos, Andronikos (despot of Thessalonike, son of Manuel II Palaiologos), 727

Palaiologos, Andronikos (monastic name Arsenios, father of Michael VIII), 1228, 1242

Palaiologos, Andronikos Komnenos Branas Doukas Angelos (monastic name Arsenios, brother of Theodora Synadene), 1561

Palaiologos, Constantine (brother of Andronikos II), 69, 1254

Palaiologos, Constantine Komnenos Doukas Angelos, sebastokrator (monastic name Kallinikos, father of Theodora Synadene), 1525, 1555, 1556, 1569n. 3

Palaiologos, George (11th c. founder), 609, 742, 776n. 39, 1106, 1238, 1239, 1240, 1247, 1252n. 20

Palaiologos, house of (CP), 714

Palaiologos, Isaac (uncle of John V), 1491

PEOPLE AND PLACES

Palaiologos, John, the Despot (brother of Michael VIII), 1237, 1251

Palaiologos, John, the Despot (son of Andronikos II), 1383

Palaiologos, John Angelos Branas (monastic name Joasaph, son of Theodora Synadene's sister and Smilec of Bulgaria), 1557, 1562

Palaiologos, Michael Doukas Angelos Komnenos. See Michael VIII Palaiologos

Palaiologos, Michael Komnenos Branas (monastic name Makarios, brother of Theodora Synadene), 1561

Palamas, Gregory (14th c. theologian), 212, 1491. See also General Index: books, ascetic and patristic

Palatitzia (village), 1280, 1625, 1636, 1662n. 11

Palermo, 60, 624

Palestine: fasting in, 1146; flight from, 564; monasteries and monasticism in, 41, 87, 88, 1311-13; monks from, 569, 1107; pilgrimage to, 579; Sassanid invasion of, 1311. See also Holy Land

Palladios (bishop of Helenopolis), Lausiak History and Rule of the Angel. See General Index: books, ascetic and patristic

Pambo (14th c. monk of St. Euthymios in Jerusalem), 1406

Pamphilon (Thrace), district of, 769

Pamphilos [of Jerusalem] (6th c. author), 76, 81n. 2

Pamphylia, 148

Panagios (11th c. monk of CP), 558n. 3

Panakas (fort), 771

Pangostas, Parthenios (17th c. founder), 567

Panion (fort in Thrace), 769

Pankalitze (property of Pakourianos), 556

Pankas, John (11th c. seaman), 595

Pankratios (12th c. superior of St. Philip's in Sicily), 624

Pankratios [II?] (12th c. superior of St. Philip's in Sicily), 624

PEOPLE AND PLACES

- Panopoulos, Lampadares, [vineyard of] (CP), 712
- Pantechnes, George (12th c. witness at deposition of Mamas typikon), 1036
- Pantechnes, Theodore (12th c. quaestor and nomophylax), 974, 1032, 1034, 1035
- Panteichion. See St. Peter: estate near Phoberos
- Panteleemon, St. (3rd c. healer saint): feast day of, see General Index: feasts (specific, fixed); icon of, see General Index: icons (specific)
- Pantelleria (alt.: Cossyra, Patellaria; island off Sicily), 59-60, 61n. 5, 62
- Panteugenos, Soterichos (12th c. sectarian), 954
- Pantniza (site near Skoteine), 1189
- Pantonymos, Flavios (7th c. citizen of Hermonthis), 57
- Paphians, 1348
- Paphlagonia (province of), 313
- Paphos (city in Cyprus), 1338, 1346, 1351, 1352
- Papnute (7th c. village headman of Djême), 51
- Pappadopoulos, Nicholas (12th c. priest of Euripos), 601
- Pappikion, Mount (Thrace), 524, 556
- Parapolia (site in Thrace), 1557, 1558
- Pareuria (site in Thrace), episkepsis of, 770
- Parorion (site in Lakedaimon), 319
- Parthenion (estate on Leros), 583, 594, 595
- Parthenios (18th c. superior of Machairas), 1108
- Parthenios IV Mongilalos (17th c. patriarch of CP), 568
- Pasinales (13th c. property owner near Skoteine), 1188
- Patmos (Aegean island): and Christodoulos, 565, 572, 576, 581, 583, 584; imperial donation of, 565, 575, 594, 600; monastery on, xxi, xxxiii, 90, 136, 447, 566, 567, 570, 595; monks of, xiv, 569, 573, 574; Turkish attacks on, 453, 566

PEOPLE AND PLACES

Patras (Peloponnesian city), taxes from metropolis of, 771

Patzinaks, 451, 452, 453, 508, 526, 555. See also Scyths/Scythians

Paul (7th c. deacon of Hermonthis), 57

Paul (12th c. monk and priest of Peribleptos), 1032

Paul (late antique ascetic), 892

Paul, St. (apostle), 131, 132, 133, 139, 142, 182, 434, 475, 487, 488, 530, 539, 586, 587, 593, 684, 687, 881, 887, 891, 906, 910, 911, 922, 939, 969, 1134, 1160, 1216, 1291, 1308, 1359, 1423, 1440, 1441, 1467, 1469, 1531, 1550, 1640, 1642, 1656, 1657; Epistles of, see General Index: books, liturgical; feast day of, see Apostles, Holy; icons of, see General Index: icons (specific)

Paul II (7th c. Monothelite patriarch of CP), 1400

Paul VI (20th c. pope), 1313

Paul Evergetinos (11th c. founder), 38n. 65, 89, 454, 455, 464, 472, 448; commemoration of, 464, 499; Evergetinon or Synagoge of, see General Index: books, ascetic and patristic

Paul Helladikos (6th c. ascetic), xviii, 874, 879, 939-43, 948n. 77. See also General Index: books, ascetic and patristic

Paul the Confessor, St. (4th c. bishop of CP), feast day of. See General Index: feasts (specific, fixed)

Paul the Younger (10th c. founder), 46, 135, 136, 137, 139, 564, 1237, 1312, 1497; testament of, see General Index: monastic foundation documents, (7) Latros

Paul Xeropotamites (10th c. monk and priest of Xeropotamou), 233, 235, 241, 242n. 1

Paulianists. See General Index: dissidents, religious

Paximades, Michael (13th c. secretary of the metropolis of Philadelphia), 1191

Pegadiotes, Rhomnos (13th c. property owner near Skoteine), 1188

Pegai. See Constantinople, suburbs of Pelekanos (13th c. property owner near Skoteine), 1187

Pelekanos, house of (CP), 712

Pelion, Mount (site on Kos), 564, 572, 581, 600, 601

Peloponnesos, 296, 1244, 1245

PEOPLE AND PLACES

Pelusium (Egyptian monastic center), 1217

Pera. See Galata

Pergamon, 135; theme of, 1279

Peribleptenos, Constantine (11th c. patron of Christ Panoiktirmon), 369

Peripatou (estate on Kos), 600

Perrissos (village of Lakedaimon), 315, 320

Peristerai (monastic site near Thessalonike), 208, 211, 246, 248

Peritheorion (in theme of Boleron): fort of, 524; military district of, 524

Persia (Sultanate of Rum), 1231

Persians (Seljuk Turks), 355, 580, 581, 738, 774n. 3, 1216, 1231, 1243, 1245, 1246, 1252n. 8

Peteinos, Basil (10th c. conspirator), 1042

Peter (7th c. notary [?] of Hermonthis), 57

Peter (7th c. superior of St. Phoibammon), 51, 52

Peter (10th c. Bulgarian ruler), 125, 130, 134n. 6

Peter (10th c. founder and superior of Karya), 135, 136, 142n. 2

Peter (10th c. superior of Karya), 139, 141n. 2

Peter (11th c. monk and superior of Athonite lord Athanasios monastery), 291

Peter (12th c. monk, brother of Leo of Nauplia), 968

Peter, St. (apostle), 931, 1309, 1500; churches of, see General Index: churches and chapels (monastic); feast days of, see General Index: feasts (specific, fixed); icon of, see General Index: icons (specific); monastery of, see General Index: monasteries (specific). See also Apostles, Holy

Peter I (3rd c. archbishop of Alexandria), 905, 947n. 26

Peter II (7th c. Monothelite patriarch of CP), 1400

Peter of Aragon (13th c. ruler of Sicily), 624

Peter the Confessor (10th c. bishop of Gordorynia), 124 and n. 1

Peter [the Hesychast], St. (late antique ascetic), feast day of. See General Index: feasts (specific, fixed)

PEOPLE AND PLACES

Petra. See Constantinople, quarters of Petrizos (in theme of Philippoupolis), fort of, 507, 519, 523, 524, 555

Phagomodes (13th c. property owner near Skoteine), 1189

Phakenos (10th c. Athonite protos), 209

Phanarion. See Constantinople, quarters of Phaphoulakes, Michael (11th c. priest of Euripos), 601

Pharsamanes (6th c. epi tou koitonos), 973

Pherrai. See Bera

Philadelphia (Lydia, modern Alaşehir), 296; metropolitans of, 1101, 1176, 1178, 1179, 1184, 1383, 1384; monastery near, 310

Philadelphoi, Holy (3rd c. Sicilian martyrs): church of, see General Index: churches and chapels (monastic); monastery of, see General Index: monasteries (specific)

Philanthropene, Eugenia Kantakouzene (14th c. patron), 1512, 1520, 1567, 1568, 1571n. 84

Philanthropene, Xene (14th c. patron), 1512, 1520, 1567-68, 1571n. 83

Philaretos (12th c. monk of Stoudios), 1032

Philiates (town in northwestern Greece), 1396

Philip, St. (apostle): fast of, see General Index: fasts (specific); feast day of, see General Index: feasts (specific, fixed); monastery of, see General Index: monasteries (specific)

Philip II (16th c. king of Spain and Sicily), 639

Philip II Augustus (11-12th c. king of France), 566

Philip of Argiro, St. (Sicilian saint), 633, 635n. 18

Philippou, Tou (field near Skoteine), 1187

Philippoupolis (in Thrace, modern Plovdiv): battle near, 508; founder's possessions at, 507, 555; metropolitans of, 509, 513, 527, 555; monastery near, 507; theme of, 523, 524, 531, 556

Philopation. See Constantinople, suburbs of Philotheos (14th c. monk of Nea Mone), 1433, 1436, 1439-40, 1452n. 3

Philotheos Kokkinos (14th c. patriarch of CP), 212, 1375, 1409, 1492, 1494

PEOPLE AND PLACES

- Philoxenos of Mabbug (ascetic author), Rules of. See General Index: monastic rules (non-Byzantine)
- Phlatoumes (also known as Akanthopates; 13th c. priest and property owner near Skoteine), 1189
- Phlethra (site, location unknown), 1251
- Phletra (estate in Thrace), 367
- Phlorios (village near the walls of CP), 771
- Phoibammon, St., monastery of. See General Index: monasteries (specific). See also Abraham, apa
- Phokas, allagator (13th c. benefactor of Skoteine), 1176, 1177, 1182, 1190
- Phokas, Irene (Phokas the allagator's wife and benefactress of Skoteine), 1176, 1177, 1188, 1189, 1190
- Phokas, Leo (brother of Nikephoros II Phokas), 206
- Phokike (Greece), 1244
- Photios (9th c. patriarch of CP), 69, 120, 1478, 1668. See also General Index: books, miscellaneous
- Photios (11th c. deacon and protekdikos of Euripos), 597
- Phoulanos (13th c. property owner near Skoteine), 1188
- Phrygia, 1245
- Phylax, treasury of (CP), 363, 367
- Pilate (New Testament figure), 917
- Plakos (village near CP), 1280
- Platanin (estate), 769
- Plato (uncle of Theodore the Studite), 67, 85, 86, 973
- Plovdiv. See Philippoupolis
- Poemen (late antique ascetic), 396
- Polemoniake (village in Pontos), 313
- Polychronios (partisan of Monothelitism), 1400

PEOPLE AND PLACES

- Polydrion (gate of fort Panion), 769
- Polykarpos (12th c. Sicilian priest), 630
- Polypeirina, [vineyard of] (CP), 712
- Pontos (province of), 313, 782
- Popolia (near Serres), district of, 770
- Pothos (13th c. property owner near Skoteine), 1187
- Prenezes (site in theme of Philippoupolis), 524
- Presbyteros (15th c. priest in Stroumitza), 1675, 1677n. 61
- Prilonkos/Prilonkion (village in theme of Thessalonike), 522, 525, 556
- Princes' Islands, 68
- Prinkipo (one of the Princes' Islands), 68
- Prodromos, Theodore (12th c. hagiographer and poet), 610, 955
- Prokopios (13th c. monk of Machairas), 107, 1115, 1127, 1128, 1163
- Prokopios, St. (3rd c. martyr), 1187, 1188; church of, see General Index: churches (specific); feast day of, see General Index: feasts (specific, fixed); monastery of, see General Index: monasteries (specific)
- Promotenos (11th c. benefactor of Evergetis), 462, 494
- Prooikoi (region near Skoteine), 1189
- Prousa (city in Bithynia, modern Bursa), 1042, 1043, 1238, 1251
- Proximos (13th c. property owner near Skoteine), 1187
- Psamathia. See Constantinople, quarters of
- Psellos, Michael (11th c. courtier and historian), 449
- Ps.-Athanasios. See General Index: books, ascetic and patristic
- Ps.-Basil, Ascetic Constitutions (Constitutiones asceticae) and Penitential (Poenae) of. See General Index: books, ascetic and patristic
- Ps.-John Chrysostom. See General Index: books, ascetic and patristic

PEOPLE AND PLACES

Ps.-Makarios (5th c. ascetic author), 454, 1391, 1394. See also General Index: books, ascetic and patristic

Psorarios (11th c. property owner in Rhaidestos), 336

Psychron Pegadin (village), 769

Pylopthia (place, location uncertain), 1251

Pyrgos (estate), 1557, 1558

Pyrrhos (7th c. Monothelite patriarch of CP), 1400

Qutlumush I (11th c. Seljuk sultan of Rum), 1408

Rabbula (5th c. bishop of Edessa), Canons of. See General Index: monastic rules, non-Byzantine

Rachel (Old Testament figure), 887

Radaboundos (village in Thrace), 829

Radenos, building site of (oikostasion), 772

Radochan (14th c. patron of Koutloumousi), 1422

Radu, Mihnea (17th c. voivode of Wallachia and Moldavia), 1456

Raithou (site on Sinai peninsula), anchoretic settlement of, 579

Raithou, Fathers of, Holy (5th c. [?] martyred anchorites), 580; feast day of, see General Index: feasts (specific, fixed)

Ramah (Old Testament figure), 887

Rametta (Sicilian city), 621

Randulf (= Rudolf of Cheurières [?], 13th c. apostolic visitor), 1320

Raoul, house of, 772

Raunianous (estate in Thrace), 829

Rebecca (mother of apa Abraham), 57

Rethymno (town in northern Crete), 143, 144

PEOPLE AND PLACES

Rhaidestos (city in Thrace): almshouse in, 298, 310, 326, 335, 336, 339, 340, 364, 367; Attaleiates' properties in, 326, 330, 334; churches in, 343; convents in, 343; icon of the Kosmosoteira from, 839; monasteries in, xxix, 343; west gate of, 342, 343

Rhaos (village near Skoteine), 1188

Rhodes (Aegean island): Hospitaller conquest of, 567; metropolitan of, 564

Rhodope Mountains (Bulgaria), 507, 508

Rhontakios (10th c. man of Lakedaimon), 318

Rhousanos, Pachomios (16th c. excerptor), 1384, 1385, 1484, 1505

Rhoustika (village in northern Crete), 143

Rhymos (field near Skoteine), 1187

Richard I the Lionheart (12th c. king of England), 1108, 1339

Rila (river in Bulgaria), 125. For Rila monastery, see General Index: monasteries (specific)

Robert Guiscard (11th c. Norman prince), 450

Roger (12th c. duke of Apulia), 1319

Roger I (11th c. Norman count), 607, 622, 623, 624, 626, 628, 630, 633, 634, 637

Roger II (12th c. Norman king of Sicily): and Greek monasteries of Sicily, 607, 609; and Kasoulon monastery, 1319; and St. Philip of Fragala monastery, 622, 623, 624, 626, 633; and San Salvatore monastery, 616, 637, 638, 639, 640, 641, 643

Rogeres, Constantine (sebastos), 743

Romaios, Eustathios (11th c. jurist), 974

Romania, 1230, 1233

Romanites, Niketas (12th c. property owner in Thrace), 829

Romanos I Lekapenos (emperor), 136, 196, 200, 202, 206, 973, 1042; old age home of, see General Index: old age homes (specific)

Romanos II (emperor), 195, 1042

Romanos III Argyros (emperor), 143, 145, 203. See also General Index: coinage

Romanos IV Diogenes (emperor), 449

PEOPLE AND PLACES

Romans (Byzantines), 580, 1216, 1231, 1233, 1244; emperors of, 1422; empire of, 523, 543, 665, 885; monks, see General Index: monks (types of)

Rome, pilgrimage to, 564

Rossano (in Calabria, Italy), 637

Roudroa, house of (CP), 713

Roxandra (consort of Prince Alexander of Romania), 1304

Rum (Anatolian sultanate), 1408

Russia, 126, 567

Russian Anonymous (15th c. Russian pilgrim), 727, 1255

Russians, 362, 366, 1238, 1304, 1374, 1383, 1434

Sabas (10th c. Athonite monk, superior and kouboukliseios), 242, 242n. 9

Sabas (14th c. Athonite protos), 1418, 1424, 1429n. 16

Sabas (14th c. logothetes), 1415, 1420

Sabas, St. (6th c. founder): as authority on diet, 403, 1145, 1227, 1507, 1547, 1697-98, 1701, 1705, 1712; career of, 1311; contemporaries of, 88; feast day of, see General Index: feasts (specific, fixed); liturgical typikon of, see General Index: synaxaria (specific); monastery of, see General Index: monasteries (specific) and Nikon of the Black Mountain, 427-28; office of, 86

Sabbas (11th c. monk of Patmos), 596

Sabbas (12th c. gatekeeper at St. Mamas), 1031

Sabbas (12th c. monk and priest at St. Mamas), 1030

Sabbas (14th c. superior of Patmos), 567

Sabbas the Serbian, St. (12th c. founder), 456, 457, 1300, 1331, 1333, 1389; typikon of, see General Index: monastic foundation documents, (44) Karyes

Sabel, St. (4th c. martyr), icon of. See General Index: icons (specific)

Sabinos (father of apa Abraham), 57

Sagoudaous (market in Thrace), 829

PEOPLE AND PLACES

- St. Akindynos (field near Skoteine), 1188
- St. Anne (site), 1280
- St. Barbara (field in theme of Philippoupolis), 524
- St. Blasios (Thracian estate), 769
- St. Demetrios (estate), 770
- St. Eustathios (field near Skoteine), 1187
- St. Galaktere (estate in Thessalonike), 771
- St. George: field near Skoteine, 1187; garden in CP, 1568
- St. George of Melos (estate), 770
- St. Helen (Thracian estate), 367
- St. John Chalkeus (landed property), 770
- St. Leontios (estate at Daphnoudion), 1292
- St. Luke, 1396
- St. Marina (site on Patmos), 584
- St. Myrope (Thracian estate), 341, 360, 367
- St. Nicholas (promontory of Patmos), 584
- St. Peter: estate near Phoberos, 939; field near Skoteine, 1188
- St. Theodore (estate), 769
- St. Tryphon (peninsula southeast of CP), 68
- Saints, All, feast day of. See General Index: feasts (specific, movable)
- Saints, Forty. See Forty Martyrs
- Sakkoudion (site in Bithynia), 67, 85, 86
- Salibaria (site), houses in, 772
- Samia (river in Thrace), 827, 828
- Samonas (courtier of Leo VI), 121

PEOPLE AND PLACES

Samos (Aegean island), 135, 565

Sampson: ancient Priene near Miletos, 1181; site in Lakedaimon, 318

Sampson (magistrate of the stage) archon tes thymeles, 1279

San Marco (site of Norman court in Sicily), 622

Saracens: (Arabs), 630; (Turks), 362, 366, 579

Sarantenos, house of, 771

Saratzes (13th c. property owner near Skoteine), 1189

Sardis (city in southwestern Asia Minor), bishop of, 568

Sassanians, 1311

Saurai (territory of), 1636

Sava the Serbian, St. See Sabbas the Serbian, St.

Savatij (14th c. ecclesiarch of Rila), 128n. 1, 129

Scyths/Scythians: (Mongols), 1244; (Patzinaks), 355, 738. See also Attaroi, Massagetai and Patzinaks

Selim I (16th c. Ottoman sultan), 126

Selim II (16th c. Ottoman sultan), 1312

Seljuk Turks: conquest of Anatolia, 449, 452, 619; conquest of Antioch, 377, 378; conquest of Jerusalem, 564; depredations of, 569, 571, 574, 580, 595, 599, 872; leaders of, 507, 1408; serving as mercenaries, 209. See also Agarenes and Persians

Selokaka (Thrace): estate of, 341, 360, 367; vineyard at, 1557

Selymbria, 1492; estate at, 367; theme of, 1280

Serbians: Alexios I's campaign against, 167; defeat by Turks at Maritza (1371), 1492; in Jerusalem, 1312; as patrons, 126, 1410, 1422, 1426. See also Dalmatians and Triballians

Serbos, John, [vineyard of] (CP), 713

Sergios (10th c. Athonite monk and superior), 242

Sergios (10th c. monk of Athonite Lavra), 278

Sergios (12th c. Sicilian priest), 630

PEOPLE AND PLACES

Sergios, abba (10th c. monk of Lavra), 278

Sergios I (7th c. Monothelite patriarch of CP), 1400

Sergios II (11th c. patriarch of CP), 203

Sergios and Bakchos, Sts. (4th c. martyrs), feast day of. See General Index: feasts (specific, fixed)

Serres (city in Macedonia): guardians from, 1580; metropolitans of, 212, 1588, 1595; monasteries in/near, 1579, 1585; Ottoman conquest of, 1580; Serbian conquest of, 1580; theme of, 525

Seth, Symeon, magistros (11th c. scientist and writer), 369; house of in Rhaidestos, 769; rental property of, 769

Siba (village in southern Crete, modern Sivas), 143

Sicilians, 1244; revolt of, 1246, 1252n. 18

Sicily: Angevin and Aragonese rulers of, 624; Arab conquest of, 47, 59-60, 621, 628, 630, 631; Bourbon Kingdom of, 624; documents from, xiii, 18, 608, 609, 612, 621-36; Evergetian reform and, 84; Greek monasteries in, xi, 607, 613, 616, 621-26, 638, 644; Norman rulers of, 622-24m 1245; Studite tradition in, 90

Sikonion (village in theme of Philippoupolis), 556

Simon Magus (New Testament figure), 1401

Simon the Zealot (apostle), feast day of. See General Index: feasts (specific, fixed)

Simonis (daughter of Andronikos II), 1579, 1583

Sinai (Mount and peninsula), 378, 579, 582, 1237, 1396

Sinale, Tou (estate in Thrace), 829

Sinopoli (town in Sicily), 638

Sion (Zion), 540, 689

Sisinnios II (10th c. patriarch of CP), 202, 203, 973

Sisoje (14th c. ordained monk and superior of Hilandar), 1428

Sixtus V (16th c. pope), 639

Skenourios, Arsenios (11th c. monk and benefactor of Christodoulos of Patmos), 564, 572, 575, 581, 583, 595, 598, 602n. 12

Sketis (early monastic center of Wadi Natrun in Egypt), 541, 1217

PEOPLE AND PLACES

- Skleraina, Maria (mistress of Constantine IX), 149
- Sklerena: property of, 771; rights of, 772; in village, 771; in wharves, 771
- Skleros, Bardas (10th c. magistros), 321n. 12
- Skleros, Romanos (brother of Maria Skleraina), 149
- Skoteine (monastic site near Philadephia), 1176, 1180
- Skoteinon (village in Macedonia), 1280
- Skoutari. See Chrysopolis and General Index: convents (specific)
- Scribas, Basil (11th c. patrikos), 341, 342, 360
- Skrinas (13th c. property owner near Skoteine), 1189
- Skylitzes, George (12th c. hagiographer), 125
- Smolenoi (theme of), 556
- Smyrna: emir of, 452, 453, 565; katepanikion of, 1279; monasteries in, 566
- Smyrniaios, John. See John Smyrniaios
- Sodom (Old Testament site), 889, 933, 1281
- Solatos, house of (CP), 1563
- Solomon (Old Testament king), 472, 540, 579, 666, 882, 963, 1180, 1222, 1354, 1359, 1550
- Sophia (first wife of Attaleiates), 326, 341, 349
- Sophianos (rush mat maker), house of (CP), 712, 713
- Sophianos, Nicholas (14th c. ktetor), 975
- Sophous (village in Thrace), 829
- Sophronios (7th c. patriarch of Jerusalem), 76, 81n. 5
- Sophronios (10th c. monk of Lavra), 278
- Sophronios (12th c. superior of Philanthropos), 649
- Sophronios (14th c. monk of St. Euthymios), 1406
- Sophronios of Trebizond (14th c. superior), 1301

PEOPLE AND PLACES

- Soter ton Blachon (estate in Thrace), 829
- Soterichos (uncle of Presbyteros of Stroumitza), 1675, 1677n. 61
- Souka (Palestinian lavra), 1350
- Sourmes (13th c. property owner near Skoteine), 1189
- Souroumina, house of (CP), 712
- Sozopolis, 451
- Spain, 60; Arabs from, 566
- Spanopoulos, Constantine (12th c. bishop of Pyrgion), 1102, 1103
- Spasma (property of Pakourianos), 556
- Spelia (village in Crete), 144
- Sphrantzes, George (15th c. historian), 727, 1626
- Srabikion (village in theme of Serres), 525, 556
- Srédetz (Bulgaria, modern Sofia), 125
- Stagi (Thessaly, modern Kalambaka), bishopric of, 1455
- Stauriou (fields near Skoteine), 1187
- Stefan Nemanja (12th c. Serbian king), 456, 1331
- Stefan Uroš II Milutin (14th c. Serbian king), 1579
- Stefan Uroš IV Dušan (14th c. Serbian king), 126, 1580
- Stenimachos (village in theme of Philippoupolis), 508, 522, 524, 549, 557
- Stephaniana (in theme of Thessalonike), archontia of, 525. See also Glossary
- Stephen (7th c. partisan of Monotheletism), 1400
- Stephen (9th c. patriarch of CP), 120
- Stephen (10th c. Athonite monk), 241
- Stephen (10th c. Athonite protos), 251
- Stephen (10th c. superior of Athonite St. Andrew monastery), 263

PEOPLE AND PLACES

Stephen (11th c. patriarchal chancellor), 973

Stephen (12th c. Serbian king). See Stefan Nemanja

Stephen (13th c. abbot of Monte Cassino), 456

Stephen, St. (first martyr): church of, see General Index: churches (specific); feast day of, see General Index: feasts (specific fixed); icon of, see General Index: icons (specific)

Stephen Dušan. See Stefan Uroš IV Dušan

Stephen of Novgorod (14th c. Russian pilgrim), 650, 727, 1238

Stephen the Younger, St. (8th c. martyr), feast day of. See General Index: feasts (specific, fixed)

Sthlaboi (estate), 770

Sthlavochorion (place in Lakedaimon), 319

Stipi (site), 1673

Stoudios (5th c. consul), 48, 67

Strateges (13th c. property owner near Skoteine), 1187

Strobilos (port in southwestern Asia Minor), 564, 565, 581, 583, 597

Stroumitza (ancient Tiberiupolis, Macedonia, modern Strumiča): bishops of, 167, 168, 169, 174, 185, 188, 959, 1483; theme of, 174, 175, 187

Struma (river), valley of, 125

Stylos (monastic site on Crete), 566, 567

Stypeiotes, Michaelitzes (courtier of Alexios I), 743, 776n. 44

Sukaragi (estate in Thrace), 829

Suleiman (11th c. Seljuk sultan of Rum), 377

Suleiman I (15th c. Ottoman sultan), 1613

Suleiman the Magnificent (16th c. Ottoman sultan), 567, 1312, 1409, 1456

Suros (8th c. superior of St. Phoibammon), 52

Sykea (village in Thrace), 828

Syla (Sicily), bishopric of, 630

PEOPLE AND PLACES

Sylvester (16th c. patriarch of Alexandria), 213, 567

Symeon (10th c. Athonite monk and superior), 242

Symeon (another 10th c. Athonite monk and superior), 242

Symeon (another 10th c. Athonite superior), 242

Symeon (10th c. superior and successor of Paul the Younger), 135, 136, 137

Symeon (11th c. monk and superior of Athonite Galiagra monastery), 291

Symeon (12th c. monk of St. Mamas), 1031

Symeon (12th c. Norman count), 622, 626, 633, 634

Symeon, St. (identity uncertain), Life of. See General Index: books, hagiography and miracles

Symeon Metaphrastes (10th c. hagiographer), 358, 368, 369, 645, 1478. See also General Index: books, ascetic and patristic and books, hagiography and miracles

Symeon the Ancient, St. (5th c. ascetic), feast day of. See General Index: feasts (specific, fixed)

Symeon the (New) Theologian (11th c. mystic and author), 455, 973-74

Symeon the Receiver of God (Theodochos), St. (New Testament figure), feast day of. See General Index: feasts (specific, fixed)

Symeon the Wonderworker (Symeon the Stylite the Younger), St. (6th c. ascetic): feast day of, see General Index: feasts (specific, fixed); Life of, see General Index: books, hagiography and miracles; monastery of, see General Index: monasteries (specific); teachings and tradition of, 380, 396, 409, 938-39

Symeon Uroš Palaiologos (14th c. despot of Epiros), 1455-56

Symeoniou (Thracian estate), 341, 360, 367

Synadene, Theodora (monastic name Theodoule, 14th c. founder): background of, 1512, 1525-26; regulations of, xxxi, 32, 1483, 1484, 1485, 1487, 1488, 1489, 1491, 1513-21, 1584, 1585; typikon of, see General Index: monastic foundation documents, (57) Bebaia Elpis

Synadene, Theodora Komnene Doukaina Raoulaina Palaiologina (monastic name Theodosia, granddaughter of Theodora Synadene), 1561, 1570n. 63

Synadene, Thomais Komnene Doukaina Laskarina Kantakouzene Palaiologina (monastic name Xene, 14th c. patron), 1557, 1561, 1570n. 56

Synadenos, John Angelos Doukas, megas stratopedarches (monastic name Joachim, husband of Theodora Synadene), 1512, 1525, 1556, 1569n. 6

PEOPLE AND PLACES

Synadenos, John Palaiologos, megas konostaulos (14th c. guardian of Bebaia Elpis), 1525, 1529, 1556, 1561, 1569n. 10

Synadenos, Theodore Doukas, protostrator (14th c. guardian of Bebaia Elpis), 1525, 1529, 1556, 1561, 1563, 1569n. 10

Synadenos: aristocratic family of, 1512; estate of, 770; pronoia of, 769

Syracuse, 60

Syria, 298, 377, 425, 543

Syrians: liturgical privileges of, 1316; monastic offices of, 1317; monks, see General Index: monks (types of)

Syritianos, Angelos (13th c. property owner near Skoteine), 1190

Syropoulos: house of (CP), 712; [vineyard of] (CP), 712

Tabennisi (monastic settlement in Egypt), 1217, 1234n. 7

Tabor, Mount (Galilee), 938, 1350

Tais (Taiq in Armenia), district of, 555

Tamasia (alt.: Tamasos; Cyprus), 1107, 1117, 1130, 1159, 1166

Tancred (13th c. archbishop of Otranto), 1320

Tancred of Lecce (12th c. ruler of Sicily), 624

Taormina (Sicilian city), 60, 621

Taranto (city in Apulia), 1320

Tarasios (8th c. patriarch of CP), 76, 81n. 6

Tarchaniotes, Michael (14th c. superior of Anastasis), 1375

Tazinoi (region near Skoteine), 1187

Tchirpedji-Dere (district of Istanbul), 458

Temenion (estate on Leros), 583, 594, 595

Teofan (15th c. patron of Rila), 126

PEOPLE AND PLACES

Tetraditai. See General Index: dissidents, religious

Tetragonites, George (15th c. tax collector), 1674, 1677n. 60

Thalassios the African, St. (7th c. ascetic). See General Index: books, ascetic and patristic and books, hagiography and miracles

Thallelaios, St. (3rd c. martyr): church of, see General Index: churches and chapels (monastic); monastery of, see General Index: monasteries (specific)

Thasos (Aegean island), 253

Thebes (Greece), 313, 1245

Thekla, St. (first female martyr), feast day of. See General Index: feasts (specific, fixed)

Theocharistos the Cappadocian (12th c. patron), 865, 974, 981, 982, 984, 998, 1004, 1005, 1021, 1030, 1033, 1034, 1044

Theodore (11th c. doctor), 341

Theodore (11th c. monk and superior of Athonite Kaletze monastery), 291

Theodore (14th c. superior of St. Demetrios-Kellibara), 1238, 1490, 1505, 1507n. 1

Theodore (15th c. magistrate in Stroumitza), 1673

Theodore, St. (the Recruit, 4th c. martyr), feast day of. See General Index: feasts (specific, movable)

Theodore I Laskaris (Nicaean emperor), 1105

Theodore II Laskaris (Nicaean emperor), 566, 1199n. 6, 1231, 1243, 1244

Theodore Graptos, St. (9th c. confessor), 886, 946n. 1

Theodore of Edessa, St. See General Index: books, hagiography and miracles

Theodore of Mopsuestia (4th c. theologian), 1400

Theodore of Pharan (7th c. Monothelite bishop), 1400

Theodore of Sykeon (6th c. monk), 1311

Theodore the Commander (stratelates), St. (4th c. martyr), feast day of. See General Index: feasts (specific, fixed)

Theodore the Studite/Theodore Studites/Theodore of Stoudios (superior of St. John Stoudios): career of, 67-68, 84-85, 973; citation and influence of, 72, 88-90, 213, 247, 625, 631; correspondence of, 85, 87; death of, 89, 91; and Mar Saba monastery, 1312; reform program of, 85-88, 92, 93, 248; regulations of, 70-71; and Stoudios, 205, 214; style of governance, 152, 171; successors of, 68-69; tradition of, 629, 632; works of, see General Index: books, ascetic and patristic

PEOPLE AND PLACES

Theodoretos (11th c. monk of Patmos), 596

Theodoretos (12th c. ecclesiarch of St. Mamas), 1030

Theodoritzes (sthlabopolos of John II Komnenos): estate of, 770; house of, 771; vineyards of, 771

Theodosios (10th c. Athonite monk and superior), 241

Theodosios (11th c. patriarchal notary), 565, 572, 575, 595, 596, 597, 598, 599, 619

Theodosios (12th c. hagiographer and monk of CP), 566

Theodosios (12th c. monk of St. Mamas), 1031

Theodosios (12th c. steward of Stoudios), 1032

Theodosios (14th c. Athonite protos). See Alopas, Theodosios

Theodosios (15th c. monk of Eleousa), 1674

Theodosios (charistikarios of Christodoulos of Patmos), 595, 596, 597, 598, 599

Theodosios III (11th c. patriarch of Antioch), 377, 383n. 1, 425

Theodosios Boradiotes (12th c. patriarch of CP), 456

Theodosios of Villehardouin (13th c. superior of Pantokrator and patriarch of Antioch), 726

Theodosios Pétecherski (11th c. Slavic founder), 88

Theodosios the Koinobiarch (6th c. ascetic author), 88, 133; Life of, see General Index: books, hagiography and miracles; Testamentary Rule (diatyposis) of, see General Index: synaxaria (specific)

Theodosiupolis (Turkish Armenia, modern Erzerum), 525, 555, 556; doux of, 526

Theodotos (14th c. monk of Nea Mone), 1442

Theodotos II (12th c. patriarch of CP), 1374

Theodoule (nun, grandmother of superior of Phoberos), 927

Theodoulos (10th c. Athonite monk and superior), 242

Theodoulos (11th c. metropolitan of Thessalonike), 283n. 1

PEOPLE AND PLACES

- Theodoulos (11th c. monk and superior of Athonite Docheiariou), 291
- Theodoulos (12th c. monk of Peribleptos), 1032
- Theodoulos (14th c. novice of Nea Mone), 1435, 1443
- Theodoulos (14th c. superior of Vatopedi), 1428
- Theodoulos (14th c. superior-designate of St. Euthymios in Jerusalem), 1406
- Theognostos (14th c. monk of Nea Mone), 1435, 1442
- Theoktistos (12th c. monk and priest of Philanthropos), 1036
- Theoktistos (12th c. superior of Patmos), 566
- Theoktistos (14th c. monk of Nea Mone), 1440
- Theoleptos (14th c. metropolitan of Philadelphia), 1383, 1384
- Theopemptos (10th c. bishop of Lakedaimon), 314, 320n. 4
- Theophanes (10th c. monk and hagiographer), 206
- Theophanes (10th c. priest of Lavra), 278
- Theophanes (11th c. monk of Patmos), 600
- Theophanes (nephew of Christodoulos of Patmos), 89-90, 574, 596
- Theophanes (Thracian estate), 499
- Theophanes, son of Theodosios (11th c. priest of Euripos), 601
- Theophanes III (14th c. metropolitan of Nicaea). See General Index: books, ascetic and patristic
- Theophanes Graptos, St. (9th c. confessor), 886, 946n. 1
- Theophanes of Crete (16th c. patron), 212
- Theophano (first wife of Leo VI), 121
- Theophilos (4th c. archbishop of Alexandria), 394-95, 401, 417n. 34, 907-8, 947n. 44. See also General Index: books, law and typika
- Theophilos (10th c. Athonite monk and superior), 242
- Theophilos (10th c. eparch), 312n. 1

PEOPLE AND PLACES

Theophilos (12th c. steward of St. Mamas), 1036

Theophilos (emperor), 68, 886

Theophilos, Flavios (7th c. public defender of Hermonthis), 57, 58n. 20

Theophilos, John (14th c. patron of Bebaia Elpis), 1520, 1567

Theophylaktos (9th c. metropolitan of Nikomedeia), 60

Theophylaktos (11th c. archbishop of Bulgaria), 368

Theophylaktos (11th c. Athonite monk and protos), 285, 287, 290

Theophylaktos (12th c. superior of Stoudios), 90, 1032

Theotokos (village near Magnesia), 148

Thermene (13th c. property owner near Pergamon [?]), 1279

Thessalonike: building site in, 771; Byzantine recovery of, 1493, 1613; commerce in, 286; episkepsis in, 771; icon from, 725; metropolitans of, 1434, 1452n. 3; mills in, 771; monasteries in or near, xix, xxv, 208, 246, 1433; Norman attack on (1185), 566; old city of, 1434; Ottoman conquest of, 212, 1304, 1434, 1493; patronage by local nobility in, 1301; secularizations in, 1104; theme of, 525; visits to, 557, 1391, 1433, 1434; water conduit in, 771

Thessaly, 940, 1244, 1252n. 11, 1455, 1456

Thlabioi (Thracian property of Attaleiates), 367

Thomais, house of (CP), 713

Thomas (9th c. patriarch of Jerusalem), 88

Thomas (10th c. Athonite monk, priest and superior), 241

Thomas (another 10th c. Athonite monk and superior), 241

Thomas, St. (apostle), feast day of. See General Index: feasts (specific, movable)

Thomas of Nicaea (11th c. protospatharios), 341, 360

Thrace, 782, 783, 1245; theme of, 361, 363, 364

Thracesian theme, 1287, 1291

Thrymbakin (village): dependent peasants in, 769; estate in, 769

Tiberias (town in Galilee), 1350

PEOPLE AND PLACES

Tiberioupolis. See Stroumitza

Tima (site), 1251

Timothy, St. (disciple of St. Paul), 888; feast day of, see General Index: feasts (specific, fixed)

Timothy Evergetinos (11th c. founder): authorship of, 465-68; background of, 448, 454, 455; commemoration of, 463-64, 499; and foundation history, 472-73; personal contributions of, 473; reform sympathies of, 330, 445; regulations of, 461, 463, 464, 466, 512, 617; Synaxarion of, see General Index: synaxaria (specific), Evergetian; typikon of, see General Index: monastic foundation documents, (22) Evergetis; works of, 465-68

Timur (15th c. Mongol khan), 1493

Tmolos, Mount (near Lydian Philadelphia, modern Boz Dağ), 310

Topolinitza (site in theme of Philippoupolis), 524

Tornikes, Andronikos Komnenos Doukas Palaiologos, parakoimomenos (monastic name Antony, 14th c. patron), 1562, 1570n. 65

Tornikes, Constantine Komnenos (sebastokrator), sigillidion of, 1673, 1677nn. 42 and 43

Tornikes, Isaac Komnenos Doukas (monastic name Joasaph, 14th c. patron), 1561-62

Tornikina, Maria Komnene (wife of Constantine Akropolites), 1375, 1377n. 1, 1379, 1380

Tornikina, Maria Komnene Branaina Laskarina Doukaina Palaiologina (monastic name Mariamne, wife of Isaac Tornikes), 1561

Tornikios (estate of), 769

Tourtouros (13th c. man from vicinity of Skoteine), 1185

Traianoupolis (Thrace): farms in vicinity of, 829; metropolitan of, 800, 816, 819, 833

Trebizond, 205; emperor of, 1406, 1407n. 5; empire of (1204-1461), 1105, 1301

Tria Bouna (site near Skoteine), 1189

Triakontaphyllos (12th c. property owner in Thrace), 769

Triantaphyllos, house of (CP), 713

Triballians (Serbians), 1231, 1246. See also Dalmatians and Serbians

Trichas, John Doukas (14th c. logothetes ton oikeiakon), 1404, 1407 and n. 6

Tridseas, George (13th c. property owner near Skoteine), 1187

PEOPLE AND PLACES

- Triphylliou (estate in Thrace), 828
- Tritides (13th c. property owner near Skoteine), 1188
- Trullo, council in. See General Index: canon law (specific canons)
- Trypho, St. (3rd c. martyr), feast day of. See General Index: feasts (specific, fixed)
- Turkey, documents from, 18, 19
- Turks. See Achemenids, Agar (sons of), Ottoman Turks, Persians, Saracens, and Seljuk Turks
- Turnovo (seat of Bulgarian patriarchate), 126, 508
- Tuscany, 1245
- Tyrannina (13th c. patron of Skoteine), 1189
- Tyrannos, Rosseles (13th c. property owner near Skoteine), 1189
- Tzachas (11th c. emir of Smyrna), 452, 453, 565
- Tzachnistai, Hai (Thracian estate), 367
- Tzakalina (13th c. nun at Lips), 1262, 1280
- Tzampe (estate in Thrace), 829
- Tzankitzakes, Michael (12th c. imperial official), 168
- Tzanzes, Nicholas (11th c. judge of Cycladic islands), 565
- Tzatoi (Chalcedonian Armenians), 377, 425
- Tzechoba (village in Thrace), 829
- Tzegoudes, house of (CP), 713
- Tzerbena (village), 555
- Tzerkoubitzianes (village), 770
- Tzernikou, Tou (village in Thrace), 829
- Tzibitzoulos, [vineyard of] (CP), 712
- Tzignogoulina, [vineyard of] (CP), 712
- Tzintziloukes, Kosmas (11th c. emissary of Constantine IX Monomachos), 198, 200, 204, 210-11, 281, 282, 283 and n. 2, 284, 285, 290

PEOPLE AND PLACES

Tzitze, Tou (field in Thrace), 829

Tzochareia, Ta. See Constantinople, quarters of Tzoubakos, episkepsis of, 770

Tzoukena (stepmother of Thomais), 713

Tzoukis, house of (CP), 713

Tzourmere (Armenia), district of, 555

Tzykandyles, Lavrentes (13th c. man from the vicinity of Skoteine), 1188

Tzykanisteriotes (12th c. mystikos), 743

Tzympha (site), 1251

Tzyringes, Demetrios (14th c. patron of Nea Mone), 1433

Ungrovlachia (Wallachia), 1414, 1415

Urban II (11th c. pope), 622

Uroš Joasaph (15th c. patron and monk of Meteora), 1455-56

Vainia (village in Crete), 1462

Val Demone. See Demenna

Valona (town in Epiros), 1396

Vanskos, Gregory. See Baninos, Gregory

Varangians (mercenaries), 362, 366

Vardanes (11th c. agent of Pakourianos), 524, 556. See also under Bardanes

Varlaam (14th c. Bulgarian hermit), 129

Vassali, Romano (17th c. superior of San Salvatore), 639

Veljusa (village in Macedonia), 167, 169

Venetians: quarter of in CP, 726; rulers of the Argolid, 954; rulers of Crete, 144, 566, 1296, 1302, 1462; rulers of Thessalonike, 1493

PEOPLE AND PLACES

Venice: navy of, 1493; publication of typika in, 2, 1108, 1339; relics taken to, 1313

Victor (7th c. priest and superior of St. Phoibammon), 51, 52, 55, 58nn. 2 and 3

Victor (12th c. superior of St. Nicholas of Kasoulon), 1320

Victor II (8th c. superior of St. Phoibammon), 52

Villehardouin, Geoffrey (13th c. historian), 783

Vlachs: debt of, 1667, 1674; conditional acceptance of, 1416; as postulants, xxiii, 1409, 1415, 1417; regulations for, 1423; shepherds on Mount Athos, 212

Vladislav. See John Vladislav

Vladislav (16th c. patron), 212

Vucisano, Francesco (16th c. translator), 638

Vulk. See Branković, Vulk

Wallachia (Ungrovlachia), xxxi, 1409

West, the (Western Europe): claims of papal monarchy in, xi; foundation charters in, xi-xii; life of prayer in, xiv; monastic reform in, xiii, xxx; monastic rules and customs in, xii, xvi, xviii, xix, xxi, xxvii, xxx; monks and secular society in, xx, xxxiv; number of ordained monks in, xxiv; proprietary religious foundations in, xxviii; relations between male and female monasteries in, xviii; religious life in, xvi, xxiv; size of monasteries in, xvi, xxxii;

West Bank (Palestine), documents from, 18

William I (12th c. Norman king of Sicily), 1319

William II Villehardouin (13th c. prince of Achaia), 1244

Xantheia (village in Thrace, modern Xanthe), 555

Xanthopoulos, Nikephoros Kallistos (14th c. ecclesiastical writer). See General Index: books, hagiography and miracles

Xenophon (14th c. bishop of Stagi), 1455

Xenos, Emmanuel (19th c. owner of Areia monastery), 955

Xeradas, Bardas (11th c. charistikarios), 343

PEOPLE AND PLACES

Xylanthropos, Theodore (10th c. priest of Lakedaimon), 320

Xylokerkos. See Constantinople, gates of Yolanda-Irene of Montferrat (wife of Andronikos II Palaiologos), 1383. See also under Palaiologina, Irene

Zabalta (military district in theme of Serres), 525

Zachariah, St. (father of John the Baptist), 1552; feast days of, see General Index: feasts (specific, fixed)

Zacharias (10th c. Athonite monk and superior), 241

Zacharias (15th c. abbot of St. Nicholas of Kasoulon), 1320

Zachariou (village in theme of Philippoupolis), 557

Zagaras (priest), house of (CP), 713

Zakynthos (island in Ionian Sea), 566

Zaoutzes (estate in theme of Philippoupolis), 524

Zaoutzes, Stylianos (minister of Leo VI), 121

Zapechonion (estate), 769

Zeno (ancient Greek philosopher), 583

Zeno (emperor), 919

Zeus, peak of (site near Phoberos), 885

Zichna (town near Serres), bishopric of, 1579, 1588, 1593

Zikchia (east coast of the Black Sea), metropolitan of, 927

Ziyadat Allah I (9th c. emir of Sicily), 60

Zoe Carbonopsina (mistress of Leo VI), 121

Zoilos (11th c. monk of Patmos), 596

Zosima the Deacon (15th c. Russian pilgrim), 650, 727, 1255, 1383

PEOPLE AND PLACES

Zosimos (6th c. ascetic), 1468, 1469, 1480n. 3

Zosimos (11th c. supervisor of monastic dependency), 314

Zygos (10th c. Athonite monk), 206

Zygos (Athonite river), 238

General Index

This is a concept-based index, designed to facilitate research. Specific instances of most generic entries (e.g., particular canons, churches, fasts, feasts, foods, and monasteries) are as a general rule to be found in this index as subheadings under their generic (conceptual) entries. Specific entries requiring detailed treatment (e.g., patriarchal monasteries) are indexed separately, with cross-references from the corresponding generic entries. Many generic entries are subdivided, both for convenience and for greater analytic precision. Thus a reader seeking information on churches will find a general entry for churches and additional entries for churches (parts of), churches (specific), churches (types of), and churches and chapels (monastic). A reader seeking information on monasteries will find a general entry for monasteries and additional entries for monasteries (parts of), monasteries (specific), and monasteries (types of).

c. = canon, century; CP = Constantinople; f. = female; Gr. = Greek; Lat. = Latin; m. = male; Slav. = Slavonic abbas/apa. See titles and dignities and Glossary abbots. See superiors (types of): commendatory abbots abena (lamp chain). See lighting devices (specific) abstinences: ameliorated by superiors, 612, 746, 1006, 1008, 1063, 1065; definition of, 890; different from fasting, 400; and feasts, 111A, 140, 226, 395, 400, 401, 402, 480, 481, 692, 747, 813-14, 915, 1007, 1064, 1144, 1145, 1275, 1327, 1328, 1661; effect on mealtimes, 400, 1697; requirements for, 1697; self-imposed, 27 and n. 25, 34, 260-61, 512, 539-40, 694, 1006, 1063, 1143, 1198, 1204, 1210, 1227, 1714; total, 1322; unauthorized by superiors, 1518, 1535, 1558-59

abstinences (specific): from aromatic oils and spices, 1464, 1469; from cheese and eggs, xxvii, xxxi, 110AB, 140, 226, 401, 480, 533, 746, 843, 904, 905, 906, 914, 915, 917, 966, 1145, 1320, 1321, 1324, 1696, 1700-1702, 1709, 1710, 1712, 1715; from cooked/boiled food, 111A, 140, 226, 398, 401, 404, 480, 691, 692, 747, 813, 814, 900, 914, 915, 1006, 1007, 1063, 1064, 1143, 1145, 1146, 1598, 1661, 1710, 1711, 1713; exemptions from, 111A, 140, 226, 395, 401, 402, 480, 481, 692, 747, 813-14, 915, 1007, 1064, 1145, 1275, 1322, 1327, 1328, 1547, 1598, 1661, 1714, 1715; from fish, 110AB, 140, 226, 238, 402, 480, 481, 482, 535, 746, 813, 904, 905, 906, 914, 915, 917, 1144, 1145, 1321, 1322, 1324, 1325, 1547, 1701-3, 1709, 1710, 1715-16; from meat, xxxi, 92, 397, 626, 628, 631, 640, 644, 1112, 1155, 1696; from milk, 1145, 1146; from olive oil, 110AB, 140, 226, 395, 396, 401, 402, 403, 480, 535, 694, 747, 813, 1007, 1198, 1204, 1322, 1323, 1324, 1325, 1326, 1334, 1547, 1598, 1661, 1700-1702, 1704, 1705, 1707, 1709-12, 1714-16; from vegetables, 1326; from water, 499; from wine, 35, 38, 39, 111AB, 140, 226, 396, 401, 480, 481, 499, 535, 585, 1155, 1322, 1324, 1326, 1334, 1598, 1704, 1709-12, 1714, 1716

GENERAL INDEX

acclamations: “angelic” (of monastic life), xiv, 76, 586, 1469, 1527, 1583, 1593; “worthy,” 484, 646, 816, 962, 996, 1053

acheiropoietos (“not made by hand”). See icons (specific); monasteries (specific); and Glossary acquisitiveness. See vices, monastic actors. See professions and trades ad succurrendum. See tonsure addresses, hortatory: to all serving in the monastery, 492-93, 593-94, 683, 1010-11, 1023-24, 1067-68, 1165; to emperors, 1230-32, 1661; to monks, 79, 179-81, 487, 818, 819, 820, 920-21, 926-27, 944-48, 969, 1024, 1079-80, 1081, 1159-60, 1221-22, 1604, 1661; to nuns, 705, 1268, 1269, 1281, 1355, 1532, 1558-59, 1566; to patriarchs, 1207, 1232-33; to protectors, 1019-20, 1077, 1661; to a recluse, 1357-58; to superiors, 71, 77, 182-84, 487, 573, 588, 676, 820, 921-22, 968, 1022-23, 1028-29, 1078-79, 1084-86, 1114, 1160, 1220-21, 1256, 1390, 1392, 1518, 1531-33, 1558-60, 1604, 1664

adelphata. See fellowships

adelphopoiia. See social relations administrators (dioiketai, epitropoi): appointment of, 310, 1405; rights and duties of, 272, 312, 1343-44, 1352. See also trustees administrators (specific): (dioiketai), of Christ Panoiktirmon, 338, 339, 345; (epitropoi), of Lavra, 197, 209, 210, 211, 271, 275, 276, 277, 278, 297, 299, 300, 312, of Mother of God Petritzonitissa, 521, 531, 533, 540, of Neophytos’ Holy Cross monastery, 1343, 1352, of St. Euthymios (Jerusalem), 1301, 1405, 1406 administrators (types of): ecclesiastical, 1405, 1406; lay, 271, 272; local, 271-72, 310

admissions: ceremonies, xxi; consent for, xxi, 22, 26, 1198, 1203; control over, 444; gifts to secure (kaniskia), 302, 314, 315, 319, 1213, 1218, 1486, 1498, 1501; regulation of and qualifications for, xiv, 26-27, 26n. 22, 459, 570, 592, 640, 644, 728, 733, 748, 787, 823-24, 1340, 1352; requests for preferential admissions (parakalseis), xxi, 302, 315, 319, 444n. 2, 445, 611, 733, 748, 1099 advocates (antileptores): ecclesiastical, 275; at law, see professions and trades; Western medieval, xxviii, xxix, xxxv, xxxvi

aer. See cloths, liturgical (specific) aerikon. See taxes and fiscal obligations (specific) afterfeasts (metheortoi). See feasts (types of)

GENERAL INDEX

- agape* (memorial meal). See meals (specific)
- agents, fiscal (praktors). See imperial officials (specific)
- agrarian legislation. See imperial legislation (specific)
- agricultural tools. See tools (specific)
- agridion* (hamlet). See rural settlements
- agros*. See fields
- agrypnia*. See vigils
- ainoi* (lauds). See hymns (specific)
- Akathistos*. See hymns (specific)
- akedia*. See vices, monastic and Glossary
- akephaloi* (headless). See dissidents, religious
- akolouthia* (divine office). See hours, liturgical (specific)
- akoubiton* (dining table). See furniture
- All Merciful (Panoiktirmon). See churches and chapels (monastic); icons (specific); monasteries (specific); and Glossary
- allagai/allaximata* (vestments). See cloths, liturgical (specific)
- allagator*. See imperial officials (specific)
- Allelouiarion* (book of verses preceded by alleluia). See books, liturgical
- allowances, living: (diakonia), 1389, 1390, 1393; (diarion), 348; (eulogiai), 1510, 1584, 1600; (rogai), 327, 349, 350, 511, 512, 514, 534, 535, 699, 735, 767, 1210, 1225; (siteresia), 302, 329, 348, 694, 791, 840, 848, 864, 1117, 1162, 1491
- almaia*. See foods (particular kinds)
- almonds. See foods (particular kinds)
- alms. See charitable distributions
- almshouse (ptochotropheion), of Attaleiates (Rhaidestos), 298, 303, 311, 326, 335, 336, 339, 340, 344, 345, 364, 367, 449, 1696
- aloes. See fragrances

GENERAL INDEX

Alphabetical Admonitions Attributed to Aphrem (Syriac rule). See monastic rules (non-Byzantine) altar. See churches (parts of) altar cloth/covering. See cloths, liturgical (specific) ambo. See churches (parts of) amiantos (steatite). See icons (types of) ammoniakon. See supplies, medical Amomos (Blameless). See psalms (specific) amparateinos (made of elektron). See icons (types of) amygdale (almond-shaped stud). See book covers, decoration of anabathmos (gradual antiphon). See psalter (parts of) anadochos (sponsor). See tonsure anagnostes (reader). See ecclesiastical officials (specific) anagnostikon (lectionary). See books, liturgical anagrapheus (registrar). See imperial officials (specific) anabos (scapular). See clothing (articles of) Analepsis (Ascension). See feasts (specific, movable) anaphora. See commemorations, liturgical anaplion (bedspread). See bedding (specific kinds)

Anastasis (Resurrection). See feasts (specific, movable); icons (specific); and monasteries (specific) anchorites and anchoritism. See cells, monastic; kelliotai and kelliotic monasticism; and solitaries and solitary monasticism anelaioi (oil abstainers). See dissidents, religious anemomiliarion (cauldron). See utensils, household angareia (compulsory labor, corvée). See taxes and fiscal obligations (specific) anger. See vices, monastic

GENERAL INDEX

animals: all banned from monastic enclosure, 795, 843; compulsory labor of, 362, 366; females banned, xviii, 71, 76, 86, 247, 259, 303, 382, 383, 410, 436, 874, 879, 938-39, 944, 1343, 1359, 1615, 1622, 1631, 1652; males tithed, xxxv, 1166; on Mount Athos, 239-40; restrictions on ownership of, 39, 239, 303, 511, 527, 1353; sexual intercourse with, 866, 942-43; stabling of, 1342, 1360. See also livestock and property, animate animals (specific): birds, 410; buffalo, 362, 366, 554, 1190; bullocks, 554; calves, 554; cats, 303; cattle, 86, 286, 287, 362, 366, 843, 1178, 1179, 1190; cocks, xxiii; colts, 78; cows, 1190; dogs, hunting, 362, 366; donkeys, xxii, 554, 1190, 1343, 1359; dove, 834; foals, 554; goats, 264, 286, 362, 366, 554; grazing animals, 526; heifers, 554; horses, xxii, 77, 247, 595, 1190, 1390, 1392; jackasses, 362, 366; lion-griffin, 359 (see also cloths, liturgical [types of]); lions depicted on textiles, 1186; mares, 362, 366, 554, 1190; mice, 303, 436, 438n. 16; mules, 77, 247, 1190, 1343, 1359; mules, pack, 362, 366; oxen, draft, 362, 366; oxen, grinding, 938, oxen, plow, 554; oxen, team/yoke of, 286, 1190, 1416, 1417, 1422, 1423; pack animals, 362, 366; pigs, 362, 366, 1190; plow animals, 526, 1190; quadrupeds, 410; rams, 554; she-asses, 362, 366; sheep, 69, 264, 286, 287, 362, 366, 554, 938, 1187, 1190, 1416, 1422, 1600; stallions, 554

anise (anison). See flavorings annuities: of gold, 208; imperial pensions (rogai), 196, 212, 235, 242n. 4, (solemnia), 208, 211, 248, 260, 1043, 1047, 1051, 1107, 1116; monastic pensions (siteresia), see allowances, living

Annunciation. See dietary rules; feasts (specific, fixed); icons (specific); and liturgies (specific) anogeokatogon (two-storied). See buildings (types of) anthypatos. See titles and dignities antikaniskon. See taxes and fiscal obligations (specific) antilambanomenos. See protectors and the protectorate antileptor. See advocates antimitatikion. See taxes and fiscal obligations (specific) antiphon. See psalter

Antiphonetes (of Christ). See icons (specific) and Glossary

Antiphonetria (of the Mother of God). See monasteries (specific) and Glossary apaitetes. See imperial officials (specific) apathy. See vices, monastic aphegoumene. See superiors aphoristria (place of confinement). See monasteries (parts of)

GENERAL INDEX

- aphyprnistes* (waker). See monastic officials (specific)
- aplekton*. See taxes and fiscal obligations (specific)
- apodeipnon* (compline). See hours, liturgical (specific)
- Apodeipnon, Mega*. See books, liturgical
- apodekatosis* (tithe). See taxes and fiscal obligations (specific)
- apodosis*. See closures
- Apokreo* (Meatfare). See commemorations, liturgical (types of) and weeks of the liturgical year
- apokrissarios*. See imperial officials (specific)
- aposchideumos*. See immunities and exemptions
- apostolikoi*, 1161. See also Glossary
- apostolikon*. See monastic habit (specific kinds)
- Apostolos*. See books, liturgical
- aqueducts. See water supply systems
- Arabic. See languages
- arbitration. See disputes: resolution of
- archbishops: authentication of documents by, 792, 842; endowment of sees by, 299; judicial decision of, 168; quarrels of with monasteries, 639; of Serbian Orthodox church, 1331. See also archiepiscopal rights and metropolitans
- archiepiscopal rights: confirmation of institutional independence, 1455; granting of stauropugia, 1339; installation of superior, 794, 800, 816; ownership, 187, 200; reporting on disputes, 794, 800. See also metropolitans' rights
- archimandrites. See ecclesiastical officials (specific)
- architects. See professions and trades
- archivist (chartophylax). See monastic officials (specific)
- archontes thymeles* (magistrate of the stage). See imperial officials (specific)
- archontarikia* (quarters for official visitors). See monasteries (parts of)
- archontes*. See nobility, local

GENERAL INDEX

archontia. See territorial jurisdictions

arcosolium (apsis). See burial sites ariston (main/midday meal). See meals (specific)

Aristotelian argument, 1488

arkla (storage chest). See furniture armarion (cabinet). See furniture

Armenian. See languages

army, Byzantine. See military services aroula (brazier). See utensils, household arson. See crimes artist. See professions and trades artoklasia. See bread: blessing of artomeli (poultice). See supplies, medical artopoiros (baker). See laborers, monastic (specific) arts and crafts. See handicrafts and handiwork

Artzibourios (legendary dog), 401, 415, 418n. 66, 907. See also dissidents, religious and Glossary ascetic literature: citations from, 89, 132, 861, 876, 900; libraries of, 89, 133, 452, 1391, 1393-94; use of, 88, 127, 133

ascetic observances: cited, 1700; emphasis on, xxvi; excesses condemned, 27, 27n. 25, 28; tradition studied, 862

asekretissa. See titles and dignities asomata dikaia (unconditional rights). See rights

aspra. See coinage

assarion. See coinage assassins. See criminals

GENERAL INDEX

assemblies: Athonite, see consultative bodies; of monks at Lavra, 216, 228; of monks elsewhere, 310, 312, 640, 644; Sicilian parliament, 624 associations, sworn. See vices, monastic asteriskos. See sacred vessels (specific kinds)

Athonite tradition and rules, 208, 447; constitutional charter of 1924, 213; subsequent influence of, 571, 874, 1631. See also monastic foundation documents, (11) Ath. Rule, (12) Tzimiskes, (13) Ath. Typikon, (14) Ath. Testament, (15) Constantine IX, and (59) Manuel II

athoosis. See legal documents (specific): exoneration attendants. See servants (domestic) augusta. See titles and dignities aule. See buildings, secular (parts of) and Glossary autexousios. See independent and self-governing monasteries authoritarian rule. See monastic rule, styles of autodespotos. See independent and self-governing monasteries autodioiketos. See independent and self-governing monasteries autokrator. See titles and dignities axios. See acclamations: “worthy” baiophoros (Palm Sunday). See dietary rules and feasts (specific, movable) baker (artopoios, mankeps). See laborers, monastic (specific) bakeries: as endowment, see endowments (specific); established for profit, 1652; rent of, 713 baking: for charitable distributions, 1589, 1609; flour for, 742, 755, 756, 762; on Holy Thursday, 403, 1706

bacteria. See staffs balcony (heliakos, heliakon). See buildings, secular (parts of) bambykinon (of paper). See books (specific types)

bandon (military district). See territorial jurisdictions

GENERAL INDEX

baptism, monks as sponsors of laymen receiving, xx barley. See grains (specific kinds) basileus. See titles and dignities

Basilian tradition: citation of, 137, 215, 379; and Pachomian monasticism, 38; principles of, 21-30, 170; subsequent influence of, 247, 454, 458, 459, 874; and Syrian monasticism, 39, 40; works in, see books, ascetic and patristic: Basil of Caesarea and Ps.-Basil. See also Index of People and Places: Basil of Caesarea/Basil the Great, St.

basilikatou, tou (rights of). See rights basilike pyle (royal gate). See churches (parts of) basilissa. See titles and dignities bathing: of the aged, xxvii, 1364; of laymen, 576, 585, 788, 841, 1292; payments for, 865, 868, 980, 1014, 1045, 1046, 1071; permitted, xxvii, 447, 460, 491, 612, 653, 696, 729-30, 748, 788, 841, 847, 865, 957, 965, 980-81, 1011, 1014, 1046, 1071, 1258, 1276, 1516, 1550, 1552, 1584, 1601; prohibited, 35, 38, 466, 491, 654, 730, 748, 865, 875, 925, 1298, 1340, 1343, 1364; of the sick, xxvii, 460, 491, 653, 696, 788, 841, 875, 925, 1276, 1343, 1364, 1550, 1552 bathing articles, 653, 684, 730; basins (kaddaria), 745; ewers (epichytaria), 745; face towels (prosopsia), 1186; hair wipers (komoekmagia), 745, 760; hand towels (lentia), 745, 760; soap (sapon), 980, 1014; soap dishes (saponaria), 745; sponge, 762; towels (sabana), 745, 1186; wash basin and ewer (cherniboxeston), 764 baths and bathhouses: construction of, 974, 980, 1033; patronage of public, 980, 986, 1014, 1045, 1046, 1070; sexual segregation at, 841 baths and bathhouses (specific): of Alousianos, 770; at Barelina, 1292; at confraternity of Krambeas, 771; at Evergetis, 460, 491; in Galata, 1292; of Isaac Komnenos at Kosmosoteira (public), 788, 789, 793, 847, 848, 849, (private), 788, 847; at Kecharitomene, 653, 696, 707, 708; at Pantokrator hospital, 730, 760, 767; at Pantokrator monastery, 730, 748; at confraternity of Krambeas, 771; at St. Mamas monastery, 974 bead rolls. See legal documents (types of) bebaia elpis. See churches and chapels (monastic); monasteries (specific); monastic foundation documents, (57) Bebaia Elpis; and Glossary bebranon (of parchment). See books (specific types) bedding: monks', 92, 115AB, 170, 176, 1341, 1364; nuns', 653, 684, 1519, 1543; records of, see records (types of) bedding (specific kinds): bedcover (ephaploma), 684, 1281; bedspread (anaplion), 1186; blanket, fleece (pokrobion), 830, 850n. 40; blanket, fleece/woolen (malotarion), 115AB; blanket, goat's hair (losnikion), 757, 777n. 88, (sagion), 684, (sthlavonikon), 1186; cover, heavy, woolen (sagion), 830; coverlets (ephaplomata), 757; mat (charadrion), 1364; mat, Cician goat's hair (kilike), 115AB; mat, Cretan, woolen (kentouklon), 830, 850n. 38; mat, straw/rush (psiathion), 115AB; mats (tzolia), 757; mattresses (pilota), 757, (stromnai), 1281; pillow, cloth (proskephalaion branea), 830, 851n. 41; pillows (pillota, proskephalaia), 684, 757, 1186; quilt (ephaploma), 1186; rug (epeuchion), 1186; sheets (sindonia), 1186

GENERAL INDEX

beds. See furniture

bees. See insects

beggars. See professions and trades

Belial (Devil), 927

bells. See furniture; monasteries (parts of); and semantron bema (sanctuary). See churches (parts of) benefactions. See gifts and benefactions benefactors (private). See patrons benefices (monastic). See fellowships and incomes (monastic) beneficiaries (lay), supported by monasteries, 445, 785, 849 bestiality. See vices, monastic bibliophylax (keeper of books). See monastic officials (specific) billeting (mitaton). See taxes and fiscal obligations (specific) birds: parrots, 1673; peacocks, 360 bishops: authorizers of liturgies, 198; canonical prerogatives of, 314, 323, 324, 616, 1298; distrusted by founders, 298, 306, 513, 527, 963, 964; documents authored by, 53, 1588; opposition to the allelengyon, 203; relations with monasteries, xxxv, 566, 1338, 1343, 1352, 1396; utilizing charistike, 203, 306, 959, 964. See also episcopal (diocesan) monasteries; episcopal rights; and episcopal sees bishops (types of): absentee/resident in CP, 731, 751, 1520, 1567; expelled from Cyprus, 1108; founders, 43, 167, 859, 1093, 1588; monks promoted to be, 1314, 1316, 1579, 1588, 1593; retired, 1579; titular (topon epechon), 1424

Blameless (Psalm). See psalms (specific) blankets. See bedding (specific kinds)

GENERAL INDEX

blattion. See textiles: silk cloths blautai (shoes). See footwear (specific) blessing (eulogia): allowance, see allowances, living; of bread, 391, 394, 417nn. 17 and 32; of entrance gift, 1269; of gift of bread or food, 432, 585; of grain, 939; of grapes, 1009, 1065, 1326, 1714; of superior (sphragis), see episcopal rights (specific), metropolitan's rights (specific), patriarchal rights (specific), and superiors' rights; of a treat of wine, 1006, 1063, 1086, 1087, 1088, 1601; of waters, blessing of, 114B, 115A, 380, 416, 420n. 129 blood relationships. See family ties bloodless sacrifice. See Eucharist, Holy, and liturgies boats. See transportation systems book covers (gospels and typika), decoration of: with almond-shaped studs (amygdalai), 358, 1032; with busts of saints, 1672; with clasps (kombothekai, tzinothekai), 358, 1032, 1672, 1676n. 21; with crosses, 358, 1672; with crucifixion, 1672; with enamel (cheimeusis), 552; with gamma ornaments (gammatia), 358, 1672; with gold, 552; with images of the Evangelists, 1672; with leather, 1673; with pearls, 526; with precious stones, 552; with silk cloth, 1672; in silver-gilt, 552; with silver nails/studs (karphia), 358, 553, 1672 book station (topos biblion). See monasteries (parts of) books: abridgement of, 378; acquisition of, 326, 368-69; bequeathing of, 1477; care of, 1477; collections of, 727; donation of, 40, 144, 326, 329, 359, 367-68, 455, 473, 566, 567; extract from, 378; housing of, 567; inalienability of, see inalienability; lending of, xxviii, 93, 108AB, 1464, 1477; list of recommended, 379, 392-93; listed in inventories, see inventories (types of); owned by superior, 1464, 1477; price of, 370; protection and safekeeping of, 589, 599, 1043, 1345, 1355, 1477; register of, 1345, 1355, 1596; rescue of, 574-75, 599; restoration of; 1464, 1477

books (specific types): florilegia, 377, 454; with gold initials, 1672; ledger, see records (specific); miniscule (monokaira), 358, 1672; paper (bambykina), 359, 368, 1186, 1393, 1672, 1673, (kolyna), 1478, 1479, 1480n. 30; parchment (bebrana), 1186, 1393, 1394, 1478, 1479, 1672, 1673, (somatia), 359, 368; uncial (litographa), 358, 359, 368, 1672

For specific books, see the following nine categorical entries: ascetic and patristic; hagiography and miracles; law and typika; liturgical; miscellaneous; New Testament; Old Testament; secular; unspecified books, ascetic and patristic:

Alexander [the Monk]

[On the Cross], 359, 371n. 34

[Anastasios] the Sinaite

Erotemata, 1479, 1481n. 44

unspecified work of, 1479

Anonymous

Commentary on St. John the Theologian 359, 553

GENERAL INDEX

books (cont.)

- Logoi on the Translation of St. John Chrysostom*, 1479
[Antiochos]
Pandektes, 358, 378, 1185
Apophthegmata patrum, xii, 454
Athanasios, see below, Ps.-Athanasios
Basil of Caesarea
Antirrhetics against Eunomios, 368, 1478
Ascetic Treatises, 21-32, 33, 76, 87, 368, 379, 386, 390, 392, 395, 404, 405, 406, 407, 433, 435, 477, 538, 566, 694, 810, 1185, 1365, 1471, 1472, 1630, 1658, 1672
Commentary on the Prophet Isaiah, 368
Commentary on the Psalms, 1185
Hexaemeros, 358, 368, 1185, 1478
Homilies on the Psalms, 1185
Liturgy (see books, liturgical)
Moralia, 515, 553, 645
Treatises, 1479, 1480n. 38
Basil of Caesarea (attributed to)
Ascetic Discourses (Sermones ascetici I et II), 30
Discourse on Ascetic Discipline (Sermo de ascetica disciplina), 29-30 Discourse on Renunciation of the World (Sermo de renunciatione saeculi), 30 137
Introduction to the Ascetic Life (Praevia instituto ascetica), 29
(see also below, Ps.-Basil)
[Blastares], Matthew
Against Barlaam and Akindynos, 1479
Against the Jews, 1479
Blemmydes, Nikephoros
De anima, 1197, 1199n. 9
De fide, 1197, 1199n. 9
De virtute et ascesi, 1197, 1199n. 9
Cassian
De institutis coenobiorum, 392, 417n. 24 (see also Greek trans. in Ps.-Athanasios, Epistulae)
Dionysios of Alexandria
Letter to Basileides, 915-16
Dorotheos [of Gaza]
[Didaskaliai], 368, 1185, 1479, 1673
Ephraem
unspecified work of, 370, 1185, 1673
Epiphanius, St.
Panarion, 876, 900
Euthymios of Peribleptos
Oratio contra Armenios I, 411, 420n. 120, 918, 948n. 61
Gerontika/Gerontikon, 387, 400, 417n. 5, 418n. 58, 435, 438n. 14, 906, 1185, 1630, 1658
Gregory Nazianzen

GENERAL INDEX

books (cont.)

- Homilia 42*, 369, 371n. 43
Homilia in diem natalem Christi (see below, Gregory of Nyssa)
Panegyrikon, 1672
unspecified works of, 358, 553, 645, 1185, 1478
- Gregory of Nyssa
Homilia in diem natalem Christi, 400, 418n. 62, 433, 437n. 9
- Isaac [of Nineveh]
Asketika, 1474, 1475, 1480nn. 18 and 27
unspecified work of, 553
- John Chrysostom
Commentary on the Gospel according to Matthew, 368
Discourse on Philogonios, 413
Easter Sermon (see below Ps.-Chrysostom) Epistle to the Corinthians, 400
Epistle to the Philippians, 406
Hexaemeros, 358, 1479, 1672
Homilia in I Thess. 4:13, 368
[Homiliai in] Joannem, 358, 369
De incomprehensibili dei natura II, 904
De Lazaro concio I, 904
Liturgy (see books, liturgical)
Pearls (Margaritai), 368, 1185, 1190
Statues (Andriantes), 358, 1185, 1672
unspecified works of, 359, 645, 1185, 1479
- John Klimakos
Ladder of Heaven (Scala Paradisi), xiv, xv, xix, 76, 400, 433, 474, 478, 515, 553, 806, 810, 895, 899, 1139, 1185, 1393, 1469, 1470, 1474, 1475, 1478, 1672
(see also Index of People and Places: John Klimakos)
- John Moschos
Spiritual Garden, 1311
- John of Antioch
De monasteriis, 309, 425, 452
Tract and Memorandum of, 452
- John of Damascus
Sacra Parallela, 1479, 1481n. 42
unspecified work of, 358
- John of Nicaea, see above Euthymios of Peribleptos
- Mark [the Hermit]
De lege spirituali, 1477, 1480n. 29
[Opuscula], 1185, 1191n. 2, 1394, 1395n. 8
- Maximos the Confessor
Centuriae de caritate, 1468
Liber asceticus, 1468, 1479, 1480nn. 1, 2, 4, and 37
unspecified works of, 553
- Neilos Damilas
On the Procession of the Holy Spirit, 1462
- Neophytos the Recluse

GENERAL INDEX

books (cont.)

- Ascetic Chapters*, 1355
- Catechetical Instruction*, 1355
- Commentary on the Canons on the Twelve Feasts of the Lord*, 1355
- Commentary on the Hexaemeros*, 1355
- Commentary on the Lord's Commandments*, 1355
- Commentary on the Psalms*, 1355
- Commentary on the Song of Songs*, 1355
- Neptikon*, 1478, 1480n. 34
- Telonia*, 1355
- Nikon of Black Mountain
 - Interpretations of the Commands of the Lord (Pandektes)*, 377-78, 379, 380, 381, 393, 399, 400, 409, 411
 - Small Book*, 377, 378
 - Taktikon*, 5, 15, 377, 378
- Palamas, Gregory
 - Dogmatic Treatise*, 1479, 1481n. 40
- Palladios
 - Lausiac History*, 37, 876, 900
 - Rule of the Angel*, 37
- Paradeisos*, 1479, 1481n. 48
- Paul Evergetinos
 - Catechesis, Evergetinon, or Synagoge*, 89, 383, 454, 473, 500n. 4, 566, 806
- Paul Helladikos
 - Epistole*, 939-42
- Photios
 - unspecified work of, 1478
- Ps.-Athanasios
 - Epistula ad Castorem I*, 404, 406, 407, 408, 417n. 24, 419n. 91, 420nn. 109, 111, and 112
 - Epistula ad Castorem II*, 892, 946n. 6
 - Syntagma doctrinae ad monachos*, 896, 900, 947nn. 10 and 20
- Ps.-Basil
 - Ascetic Constitutions (Constitutiones asceticae)*, 30, 31, 32, 87, 90, 397, 406, 474, 487, 496, 586, 592, 676, 820, 874, 889, 895, 912-14, 930-33, 1022, 1079, 1133, 1160, 1167nn. 9 and 28
 - Penitential (Poenae in monachos deliquentes)*, 30, 31, 32, 38, 44, 60, 87, 90, 404, 1094, 1109, 1114, 1157-58, 1167nn. 23 and 24, 1296, 1368, 1373nn. [CB1]-[CB12], 1461n. 2, 1474, 1480n. 17
- Ps.-Chrysostom
 - Easter Sermon*, 100A
- Ps.-Makarios
 - unspecified work of, 1394, 1395n. 8, 1479
- [Ps.-] Clement of Rome
 - [The Acts] of the Apostle Peter*, 359
 - unspecified works of, 369, 1673
- [Ps.-] Dionysios
 - unspecified work of, 368

GENERAL INDEX

books (cont.)

- Symeon Metaphrastes
selection from the Ascetical Treatises of St. Basil, 368
unspecified work of, 645
- Thalassios the African unspecified work of, 1479, 1481n. 41
- Theodore the Studite
Antirrhetics, 87
Catechesis (unspecified), 87, 89, 106B, 113AB, 247, 358, 1185, 1702
Catechesis on the Friday of the First Week of Lent, 401, 419n. 70
Eulogy of Plato (see books, hagiography and miracles)
Great Catecheses, 85, 86, 454, 566
Iambics of, 85, 86
Hymns of (attrib.), 85
Penitentials of (attrib.), 85, 86
Rule of, (see monastic foundation documents (4) Stoudios)
Small Catecheses, 72, 85, 88–89
Testament of (see monastic foundation documents (3) Theodore Studites)
- Theophanes of Nicaea
Dogmatic Writings, 1478, 1480n. 33
- Theophylact of Bulgaria
Commentary on the Evangelists, 368, 371n. 42, 1185 unspecified books on the Mother of God, 553
unnamed, 645

books, hagiography and miracles:

- Athanasios of Patmos
Eulogy of Christodoulos, 564
Eulogy of St. Paul the Younger of Latros, 135, 137, 139–41
- Gabriel, metropolitan of Thessalonike
Enkomion of Makarios Choumnos, 1433
- George the Hagiorite
Life of John the Iberian and Euthymios, 205, 216n. 3
- Gregory II Kyprios
Life of St. Lazaros of Galesios, 150
- Gregory the Galesiote
Life of St. Lazaros of Galesios, 45, 148, 151, 155–65
- Job
Life of Neilos Erichiotes, 1396, 1397n. 2
- John of Rhodes
Life of Christodoulos, 564
- John Xenos
Autobiography (Bios kai politeia), 143–47
Life of Athanasios the Athonite, 205, 217n. 4
Life A, 205, 206, 209, 210, 249n. 2
Life B, 205, 210
Life of Athanasios the Meteorite, 1455, 1457
Life of Leontios of Patmos, 566

GENERAL INDEX

books (cont.)

- Life of Nicholas the Studite*, 69
Life of Nikon the Metanoeite, 313–14, 316n. 3
Life of St. Andrew the Fool, 368
Life of St. Antony, 127, 133
Life of St. Artemios, 359
Life of St. Chariton, 398
Life of St. Eustratios, 1042
Life of St. Euthymios (patriarch of CP), 120, 122, 123–24
Life of St. Euthymios the Great, 587
Life of St. Joannikios, 1042
Life of St. John Chrysostom, 1185
Life of St. John of Rila, 125, 129–33
Life of St. John the Merciful, 1185
Life of St. Mary of Egypt, 1185
Life of St. Pachomios, 379, 390, 392, 396, 397, 402, 405, 409, 587
Life of St. Stephen the Thaumaturge, 1312
Life of St. Symeon (identity uncertain), 369
Life of St. Symeon the Wonderworker, 417n. 36, 418n. 41, 876, 900, 905–6, 939
Life of St. Thalassios, 393
 [Life of] St. Theodore of Edessa, 1394, 1395n. 8
Life of Theodore the Studite
 Vita A, 84
 Vita B, 84
 Vita C, 84–85
 Vita D, 85
Life of Theodosios the Koinobiarch, 127, 133
Miracle at Pege, 368
Miracles of St. Symeon (identity uncertain), 553
 Neophytos the Recluse
 Divine Sign (theosemeia), 1355
 Nicholas of Methone
 Life of Meletios the Younger, 955
 Symeon Metaphrastes
 Metaphraseis, 358, 368, 369, 1185, 1186, 1478, 1672
 Theodore Prodromos
 Life of Meletios the Younger, 955
 Theodore the Studite
 Eulogy of Plato, 85
 Theodosios
 Eulogy of Christodoulos, 566
 Theophanes
 Life of Michael Maleinos, 206
Translation of Theodore the Studite's Relics, 85
 Xanthopoulos, Nikephoros Kallistos Synaxaria, 1479, 1481n. 49
 unnamed, 645

GENERAL INDEX

books (cont.)

books, law and typika:

- Apostolic Canons*, 403, 405, 900, 905, 1668-69, 1675nn. 2 and 3
- Apostolic Constitutions*, 388, 403, 916
- [Blastares], Matthew
 - Nomokanon*, 1478
- Gregory of Nyssa
 - Canons*, 1699, 1675n. 6
- Nikephoros of Constantinople
 - Canon*, 401
 - Nomokanon*, great, 1672
 - Nomokanons*, 359, 368, 1672
- Peter of Alexandria
 - Epistula canonica*, 905, 947n. 26
- Theophilus of Alexandria
 - Proshphonesis*, 394-95, 417n. 34, 907-8
- Tome of Union*, 411, 420n. 120, 918, 948n. 60
- typika*, 1185, 1186, 1190, 1355, 1478
- See also synaxaria*

books, liturgical:

- Apodeipnon Mega*, 1479
- Apostolos*, 100A, 104AB, 106AB, 305, 358, 416, 553, 1185, 1186, 1189
- book of canons for the feasts of the Lord, 359
- book of canons for saints, 1185
- book of four Gospels (tetraevangelon), 358, 552, 553, 1185, 1393, 1478, 1672
- [book of] Stichera (by Neophytos the Recluse), 1355
- book of theotokia, 1186, 1393
- book of troparia for matins (heothina), 1673
- book of verses preceded by alleluia (allelouiarion), 359
- Canons to the Virgin* (by John Mauropous), 1393, 1395n. 6
- Catholic Epistles*, 359
- Euchologion*, 553, 1186, 1189, 1393, 1672
- Exaposteilaria*, 1185
- Gospel lectionary (evangelion), 100A, 101A, 102AB, 103A, 106B, 358, 369, 552, 553, 1185, 1672
- Gospel readings for Sundays (Kyriakodromion), 1185, 1186, 1189
- Gospel synopsis, 359
- Heirmologion*, 359, 369, 1185, 1190, 1673
- Heortologion*, 1186, 1190
- Horologion*, 1673
- Kontakarion*, 359, 368, 1185, 1190, 1673
- Lectionary, 358
- Liturgy (kontakion) of St. Basil, 1185, 1190
- Liturgy of St. John Chrysostom, 1185, 1186, 1190, 1479
- Menaion*, 358, 385, 389, 553, 1185, 1186, 1190, 1393, 1478, 1479, 1673
- Menologion*, 1163
- Oktoechos*, 103A, 358, 385, 553, 1185, 1186, 1189, 1478, 1672

GENERAL INDEX

books (cont.)

Panegyrikai (by Neophytos the Recluse), 1355
Panegyrikon, 358, 368, 1394, 1672, 1673
Parakletike, 553, 1185, 1186, 1189, 1393, 1672
Paterikon, 368, 407, 410, 1673
Pentekostarion, 1185, 1478, 1479
Praxapostolos, 359, 1393, 1478, 1672
Propheteia, 106B, 1185, 1186, 1189, 1394, 1478
Prophetes, 358, 1672
Prophetologion, 416
Psalter, 358, 359, 553, 1185, 1186, 1189, 1393, 1478, 1672
Schematologion, 359, 368, 1185, 1190, 1672 service (general), 637 service for communion, 1479, 1481n. 46 service for funerals, 1185, 1672 service for patronal feast, 1185
sorrowful canon of the Mother of God, 1479, 1481n. 43
Sticherarion, 358, 389, 1186, 1672
 (with new notation), 1185, 1191n. 14
 (with old notation), 1189
Sticherokathistarion, 1190
Stichophon, 390, 391
Synaxarion, 370, 1186, 1393, 1672 (see also synaxaria [specific]) Triodion, 388, 1185, 1186, 1189, 1394, 1478, 1672
See also Glossary for Greek terms books, miscellaneous:

Blemmydes, Nikephoros
 Partial Account (Diegesis merike), 1196, 1199n. 9 Glykas, Michael
 unspecified work of, 1393, 1395n. 7
Lexicon, 1479
Melissa, 1673, 1676n. 28
Metochites, Theodore
 Funeral Oration (for Theodora Palaiologina), 1254, 1264n. 8
Neophytos the Recluse
 Letters, 1355
 Notebook, 1355
 Last Book, 1355
 Schedos, 1479, 1481n. 45

books, New Testament:

Acts [of the Apostles] with commentary, 1185
Apocalypse, 358
Gospel of John, 1185
Gospel of Matthew, 1672
Gospel of Matthew with commentary, 1185

GENERAL INDEX

books (cont.)

- John the Evangelist
 - [Acts and Epistles], 1672, 1676n. 25
- St. Paul
 - Epistles with commentary, 1185
 - Epistle to the Ephesians with commentary, 1185

books, Old Testament:

- Chronicles, 359
- Ecclesiastes, 359
- Ezra, 368
- Job, 359, 1478
- octateuch, 782
- psalter with commentary, 1181
- Sirach, 359
- Song of Songs, 359
- Tetrabasilion (Kings I–IV), 359
- Wisdom of Solomon, 359

books, secular:

- Achilles Tatius
 - Leukippe and Kleitophon*, 369
- Anonymous
 - Chronicle*, 369
 - Barlaam [and Joasaph]*, 1181
- Boethius
 - [De consolatione philosophiae], 1479, 1481n. 39
- book on earthquakes and thunders (seismobrontologion), 359
- Cato
 - [Origines], 1479, 1481n. 39
- [Flavius Josephus]
 - The Capture of Jerusalem*, 359
- Isaac Komnenos
 - [Book of] heroic, iambic and political verses, 844
 - Ekphraseis*, 844
 - Letters*, 844
- John Kantakouzenos
 - Historiai* (memoirs), 1625
- Manasses, Constantine
 - [Breviarium historiae], 1479, 1481n. 39
- Michael Attaleiates
 - History*, 326, 359
- unnamed, 645

books, unspecified, 596, 599, 993, 1019, 1076, 1162, 1307, 1334, 1596 bordonarios (muleteer). See laborers, monastic (specific) boubalion (buffalo). See animals (specific)

GENERAL INDEX

boution (casket). See reliquaries (types of) bow-slit (toxike). See buildings, secular (parts of) bows. See ritual observances boxes. See furniture

boys: accepted as novices, xx, 313, 1177, 1181, 1197, 1202-3; appointed superiors, 290; banned, 238, 240, 263, 447, 512, 541, 822, 874, 939, 1155, 1583, 1588, 1601; ordained uncanonically, 282, 290; reared from infancy, 596; as threat to moral probity, xviii, 939-42; tolerated in monasteries, xix, 35, 38, 40; trained for priesthood, 550-51; visiting nunnery, 710. See also orphans and youths bread: blessed (eulogia), 109AB, 113AB, 223, 226, 394, 395, 404, 743, 744, 1325, 1326, 1706, 1714; blessing of (artoklasia), 391, 394, 417nn. 17 and 32; eucharistic, 350, 545, 742, 755, 756, 1096; ordinary (see foods [particular kinds]); special (for sick and superior), 742 breeding, of cattle, 86

brevion. See inventories bridges. See transportation systems

brigands. See criminals

brother, adoptive. See social relations brotherhood: grants approval for alienations, 1305, 1308; notion of, 979, 1008; spiritual, 640, 644 (see also relationships); as substitute family, 1629, 1646 brothers. See family members (specific) brothers-in-law. See family members (specific) builder (dometor), new. See titles and dignities building materials: quality of, 793, 843; use of spolia as, 314, 318, 1043 building materials (specific): beams, 317; brick, 126; debris, 210; gold, 835; lead, 835; marble, 728, 835, 838, 844; masonry (rubble, enchoregos), 169, 703, 833, 841, 844, 849, 851n. 52; plaster, 624; scaffolding, 210; stone, 126, 127, 317, 509, 789, 849; tile, 677, 830, 835; whitewash, 624; wood, 288, 363, 366 buildings, secular: converted into churches, 1178, 1182; repair and maintenance of, 656, 677, 703, 708, 709, 828, 832-33, 842, 843, 1261, 1273; residence in, 1178, 1182; sites of (oikostasia), 524, 771, 772 buildings, secular (particular kinds): arcades, 1636; furnishings of, see furniture; houses/private residences, 542, 677, 707-9, 712, 713, 733, 743, 769, 788, 791, 847, 848, 1013, 1517, 1558, 1563, 1636; inn, 313, 771; kyklion, 343; mausoleum, 789, 849; perfumery, 341, 360; slaughterhouses, 314, 317; stalion (refuge), 542; taverns, 1364, 1652; warehouse (phoundax), 829, 850n. 37. See also endowments (specific); philanthropic institutions; and Glossary for Greek terms buildings, secular (parts of): aule, 341, 360, 367, 524, 769 (see also Glossary); balcony (heliakos, heliakon), 711; bow-slit (toxike), 703; chapel, 509; colonnade, 52; columns (spolia), 318; courtyard, 1636; door (thyra), 703; first story, 509; gate (porta), 703; portico (heliakon), 1360; second story, 509; side-gate (paraportion), 703; terraces, upper, 51; triklinos, 336 (see also Glossary); wall (toichos), 703; wall, retaining, 314; window (thyris), 703 buildings, secular (types of): three-storied (tripata), 357; two-storied (anogeokatoga), 360, 711

GENERAL INDEX

burial: (founders'), instances of, 725, instructions for, 53, 56, 122, 124, 149-50, 164, 460, 494, 523, 574, 601, 838-39, 1278, 1340, 1369, 1401, place of, 144, translation of remains of, 68, 150; (lay), permitted within monasteries, xxxv, 613, 837, 1099, 1182, 1379, not permitted, 658, 699, 705, 1048; (monks'), in cemetery, 789, 823, in chapel, 782, 849, as common responsibility, 34, 823, 837, 849, 1020, 1077, laity discouraged from attending, 39, in narthex, 135, 149, provisions for, 785, 789, 823, 850, 1020, 1046, 1077, 1261, 1278; reburial of, 135, 974, 1042 (see also relics, translation of), on right side of church, 981, 1020, 1077, services for, 93, 103B, 460, 464, 494; (nuns'), 649, 654, 655, 699, 704; (peasants'), 795, 837; (of poor), 465, 495; (of sick), 495, 534, 734, 762, 795, 831, 879, 936; (of strangers), 936

burial sites: arcosolium, 169, 844; coffins, 823, 844, 1369; crypt, 509; graves, 1020, 1046, 1077; tombs, 514, 536, 830, 838, 839, 1255, (founders'), 169, 509, 514, 536, 1254, 1278, 1312, 1313, (imperial), 697, 698, 704-5, 739, 743, 753, 754, 755, 756, 758, 973, 1277, (nuns'), 699, (recluses'), 1351, 1369, vaults, burial (*statarai*a), 699, (stoa), 823; wall, 509. See also burial cabinet (armarion). See furniture caesar. See titles and dignities caesarissa. See titles and dignities calamities: drought, 1107, 1128, 1129; earthquakes, 335, 466, 489, 657, 673, 792, 793, 821, 843, 922, 1312; famines, 1107, 1128; fires, 69, 126-27, 466, 489, 657, 726, 727, 792, 793, 821, 843, 922, 1255, 1410, 1580; harvest, poor, 1262, 1279; raids, enemy, 466, 489, 566, 657, 673, 792, 821, 872, 884, 922, 1262, 1279, 1311, 1312, 1313, 1626, 1637 calendars, liturgical, 381, 412-15, 876, 906-7; signs in (kentemata), 412, 901 (see also Glossary)

calligraphers. See professions and trades candles, Easter. See lighting devices (specific) canon law: citation of/appeal to, 328, 377, 379, 380, 400, 450, 512, 541, 570, 575, 593, 616, 728, 748, 861, 874, 875, 876, 896, 914-17, 929, 1094, 1197, 1202, 1305, 1308, 1321, 1326, 1462,

GENERAL INDEX

1464, 1470, 1629, 1657, 1705, 1706; condemns alienations, 657, 673, 1670; disrespect for, 172, 186, 314, 323, 730, 752, 788, 822; exemption from, 729, 746; importance of documents for, 9, 20; invoked to support testator's will, 328, 338, 1390, 1394; and monastic typika, 447, 1103-4, 1586, 1588, 1599; respect for, 70, 78, 127, 133, 446, 616, 731, 734, 751, 794, 980, 1006, 1048, 1080, 1101, 1118, 1130, 1322, 1466, 1492, 1614, 1616, 1620; revival of, 308, 1103; and traditional patronal rights, 328, 616, 1102, 1521, 1528; trial under, 1199, 1201; use against the charistike, 619

canon law (specific canons): Carthage, c. 26, 1669, 1675n. 5; c. 38, 1472, 1480n. 14; Chalcedon, c. 4, xxxv; Constantinople I et II, c. 1, 1668, 1675n. 1; c. 2, 1470, 1480n. 10; c. 3, 588, 603n. 39; c. 4, 1620, 1623n. 8; c. 5, 570, 593, 603n. 44; Constantinople VI, see below, Trullo; Gangra, c. 3, 1470, 1480n. 9; c. 12, 900, 947n. 18; Laodiceia, c. 50, 401, 402, 403, 414, 914, 1703; Nicaea I, c. 20, 896, 946n. 11; Nicaea II, c. 12, 1669, 1675n. 4; c. 20, 1471-72; c. 22, 1472, 1480n. 15; Trullo, c. 40, 1202, 1205n. 7; c. 42, 1472, 1480n. 15; c. 75, 388, 417n. 7, 1474, 1480n. 20; c. 89, 403, 419n. 88, 915, 948n. 52, 1326, 1329n. 8; c. 90, 896, 947n. 12, 1706 canons (hymns). See hymns (specific) canons, disciplinary: to be read to monks, 1344, 1354; to be read to postulants, 1342, 1344, 1366; without punishments, 1345-46, 1366

canons, disciplinary (specific): of "Basil of Caesarea," 1340 (see also monastic foundation documents, (45) Neophytos [CB1] - [CB12]); of Johannan bar Qursos, 40; of Luke of Messina, 638; of Neophytos the Recluse, 1296, 1340 (see also monastic foundation documents, (45) Neophytos [C1] - [C20]); for the Novices, 41; for the Nuns, 40; of the Monastery of Mar Mattai, 40; of Rabbula of Edessa, 39-40, 41; for the Solitaries, 41; of Theodore the Studite, 70 (see also monastic foundation documents, (3) Theodore Studites [1] - [24]). See also penitentials cardinal-legate. See ecclesiastical officials (specific) carpenters. See laborers, monastic (specific) cartularies (monastic), Athonite, 20; of Docheiariou, 1303, 1304; of Eleousa, 167, 168; of Iveron, 205; of Koutloumousi, 1409; of Latros, 136; of Lavra, 205, 210; of Menoikeion, 7, 1580; of Patmian dependency of Stylos, 566; of Protaton, 205

Catechesis. See books, ascetic and patristic catechetical instruction: for lay people, 1437, 1444; for monks, 35, 70, 78, 85, 89, 92, 106B, 107AB, 113AB, 247, 473, 500n. 4, 686, 805, 895, 1026, 1082, 1346, 1356 cattle byres (zeugelateia/zeugolateia). See endowments (specific) celibacy, lapses from. See vices, monastic cellarer (kellarites, m.; kellarea, f.). See hospitals and infirmaries, staff of (specific) and monastic officials (specific) cells, monastic (kellia): appropriate behavior in, 1515, 1566; associated properties of, 233, 237;

GENERAL INDEX

bands of monks in, 197, 208; bequeathing of, 233, 237, 1314, 1316; celebration of office in, 474, 964, 1111, 1133; collections of, 201; construction of, 206, 233, 239, 455, 473, 622, 628, 1107, 1117, 1128, 1130, 1178, 1190, 1352, 1375, 1392, 1636; conversation in, see conversation; cooking food in, 1385, 1387; demolition of, 1375; desire for, 1450; direction of, 236, 1460; donation of, 233, 237; eating in, 391, 511, 527, 965, 1364, 1542, 1607; entertainment of guests in, 427, 432, 512, 534, 1630, 1653; furnishing of, 1628, 1643; gathering in, 348; improvement of, 877, 884; individual, 201; inspection of, 459, 466, 491, 788, 823, 875, 925, 1009, 1060, 1156, 1340, 1342, 1364, 1658; keys and locks to, 434, 875, 924; at Lavra, 253; maintenance of, 1445, 1451; manual labor in, xxvi, 381, 408, 1320, 1328; mesoria in, 1133; new ones banned, 233, 247, 262, 264; not to be locked, 924; as nucleus of future monastery, 454; occupied by one monk, 261, 490, 1443, 1592; occupied by two monks, 170, 175, 176, 459, 490, 512, 788, 822, 980, 1332, 1333, 1343, 1368; occupied by three monks, 788, 875, 924, 1332, 1333; personal possessions in, 56, 152, 1658; prayer in, 1320, 1328, 1384, 1387; proprietary rights over, 435, 436, 1314, 1316; psalms in, 392; purpose of, 1332, 1333; reading in, see reading (times and places for); recitation of the office in, 156; recuperation from illness in, 729, 745; rent payments for, 1375; relation to monasteries, xxxii, xxxiii, 195, 253, 254, 261; repair, restoration, and renovation of, 1331, 1489, 1520, 1562, 1631, 1637; sale and purchase of, 233, 237, 248, 262, 1314, 1316; transfer of, 233, 237; unused, 978, 1000; visiting in, 489, 956, 967, 1157, 1202, 1327, 1542, 1607, 1628, 1643, 1660. See also kelliotai and kelliotic monasticism cells, monastic (specific): of Athanasios the Athonite (Melana, Mount Athos), 206; of John Chrysostom, St. (Mount Athos), 262; of John the Iberian (Mount Athos), 262; of Nikephoros II Phokas, 207, 262; of Sabbas the Serbian (Karyes, Mount Athos), 1331-37. See also churches and chapels (monastic) cenobiticism (communal life): abandonment of, 212; alternatives to, 729, 752-53, 1112, 1209-10, 1342, 1505, 1515, 1565, 1628, 1641; Athanasios the Athonite's conversion to, 207; Athonite, 194, 198, 207, 208, 232; Basilian, 23; defense/endorsement of, 46, 127, 131, 580, 585-86, 616, 658, 668, 978, 1012, 1183, 1209, 1228, 1288, 1292, 1297, 1384, 1386-87, 1411-12, 1421, 1496, 1500, 1515, 1566, 1628, 1633, 1642; exemption from requirements of, 611, 788, 824, 864, 1411, 1415, 1420, 1496, 1501, 1587, 1600, 1628, 1661; favored by the monastic reform movement, xiii, xxxii, 170, 444, 612, 613-14, 863, 870, 1094, 1097, 1300, 1302; hatred of, 209; inalterability of, 651, 653, 669-70, 694, 695-96, 784, 824, 788, 979, 1012, 1045, 1069, 1109, 1163, 1256, 1385, 1387, 1415, 1417, 1424; institution of, 1457, 1459; late Byzantine revival of, 1300, 1485, 1486, 1487, 1600; at Lavra, 232; observance of, 135, 136, 1000, 1057, 1460, 1600; Pachomian, 32, 33-34, 37; reform of, 199; regulation of, 175-76, 381-82, 459-60, 511, 527-28, 570, 638, 640, 646, 729, 788, 801, 956, 964, 965, 962, 1022, 1112, 1177, 1183, 1258, 1364, 1387, 1436, 1443, 1451, 1464, 1469, 1470, 1471, 1501, 1508, 1536; requirements of, 454, 1505; restoration/revival of, 213, 425, 457, 567, 1409, 1456, 1614, 1618; as "royal road," 162, 520, 530; Studite, 46, 85, 194; Syrian, 39; traditional features of, 303

censer (thymiaterion). See sacred vessels (specific kinds) censing. See ritual observances

Chalcedonian reform party, 450, 451, 452, 609

chalice. See sacred vessels (specific kinds)

GENERAL INDEX

chalkotzykion (copper pot). See utensils, household chancel screen. See churches (parts of) chanters of the office (psaltai). See monks (types of) charadrion (mat). See bedding (specific kinds) charcoal burner. See professions and trades charistikarioi: amends for damages caused by, 868, 869; appointment of, 426, 443, 446, 455, 565, 595, 596, 610, 869, 974; appointment as declined, 565; denounced by reformers, xxxvi, 282, 610, 862, 876, 918, 982; duties of, 575, 595; exclusion of relatives of, 572, 595, 596; expulsion of, 204; imperial diplomas awarded to, 618; imposition of postulants by, 444; individual, 306, 309, 343, 449; and kelliotic and idiorhythmic monasticism, 444; misdeeds of, 443, 444, 445, 862, 869, 870, 872, 874, 918, 927, 974, 992, 1032, 1033, 1048; prohibited, 302, 328, 338, 957, 963; with reform sympathies, xxix; restriction of rights of, xxix, 445, 446, 451, 572, 573, 586, 595, 598, 618; second, 306, 974; subordination to, 443, 599, 974; title of, 572; tonsuring of, 572, 595. See also Glossary

charistike: background to, xxviii, 49, 201-2, 237, 615; and Basil II, 203; and Christodoulos of Patmos, 595, 596, 597, 598, 599; convent in, 302; as a dowry, 870; and epidosis, 246, 299; establishment of prohibited, 330, 460, 482, 571, 586, 610, 654, 667, 789, 804, 815, 957, 963, 981, 999; and Evergetis, 449; exercised by a monastery, 331; fate of, 450, 619, 868; harm done by, xxviii, xxix, 860, 869, 870, 985; justification for, 659; impact on Lavra, 202; imperial monasteries administered under, 730; institutions escaping, 200, 203, 442; and Michael Attaleiates, 300, 306, 308; opposed by monastic reformers, xiii, 283, 309, 443, 444, 451, 452, 610, 611, 613, 651, 862; patriarchal attitudes towards, 202, 203, 305-6, 308-9, 443, 450, 451, 618, 619, 868, 869, 870; peril posed by, 144-45, 153, 171, 204, 246, 310, 314, 330, 458; precautions against, 153; and the protectorate, 298, 305; registry of grants in, 204, 451, 618. See also Glossary charitable distributions: alternatives to, 657; in Byzantine times, 29n. 30; at commemorations, 464, 494, 514, 545; in early monastic rules, 29, 30; enjoined, 72, 79; exclusion of women from, xviii, 447, 465, 496, 794, 824, 866, 936, 1156, 1366, 1460; inclusion of women in, 496, 824, 937; monks' reliance on, 39, 1004, 1049, 1061, 1117, 1127; recommended, 72, 201, 794, 837-38, 1100; regulation of, 575, 592, 735, 794, 801, 802, 803, 837-38; token nature of, 170, 794; to travelers, 1632, 1637; use of donations to increase, 658, 672 charitable distributions (specific kinds): annual, 879; of bread, 659, 698, 1118, 1156, 1521, 1555, 1565, 1585, 1588, 1597, 1599, 1609, 1631, 1660; of cooked food, 1631, 1660; daily, 465, 495, 659, 698, 747, 794, 801, 824, 1549; of entrance gifts, 248, 263; on fast days, 516, 535; on feast days, 184, 350, 536, 697, 741, 742, 766, 794, 802, 803, 804, 815, 824, 827, 918, 1132, 1230, 1277, 1292, 1489-90, 1660; of fish, 342, 803; of food (non-specific), 342, 343, 347, 350, 516, 535, 741, 742, 747, 801, 802, 803, 804, 936, 1004, 1061, 1087, 1088, 1277, 1292, 1565, 1609, 1660; at the gate, xxxv, 184, 342, 448, 464, 465, 494, 495, 496, 516, 535, 697, 698, 701, 702, 735, 741, 742, 747, 766, 801, 802, 815, 875, 879, 928, 936, 986, 1004, 1049, 1061, 1078, 1087, 1088, 1118, 1156, 1214, 1229, 1230, 1277, 1290, 1292, 1340, 1346, 1359, 1366, 1489-90, 1521, 1549, 1565, 1588, 1597, 1609, 1631, 1660; of grain, 697, 698, 701, 702; in honor of departed monks and superiors, 546, 550, 700, 1565, 1660; in honor of emperor, 1087; in honor of founders and their families, 184, 445, 545, 546, 494, 701, 702, 743, 766, 929, 1088, 1229, 1565, 1567; of leftover food, 1521, 1549, 1588, 1597; of meat, 342; of money, 342, 343, 350, 516, 517, 521, 535, 544, 545, 546, 550, 659, 697, 701, 702, 741, 742, 803, 804, 1087, 1088, 1228, 1229, 1230, 1277, 1292; of old clothing, 936, 1214, 1225; of surplus income, 1212, 1226; of wheat, 342, 1189; of wine, 1521, 1555, 1565, 1588, 1597, 1631, 1659, 1660 charters. See legal documents (specific) chartophylax (patriarchal chancellor). See ecclesiastical officials (specific) chartophylax, m.; chartophylakissa, f. (archivist). See monastic officials (specific) chartoularioi. See imperial officials (specific)

GENERAL INDEX

Cheesefare week. See commemorations, liturgical (types of); dietary rules; weeks of the liturgical year; and Glossary cheimeutos, chymeutos (enamel). See book covers, decoration of; icons (types of); reliquaries (types of); and sacred vessels (types of) cheirotomia (installation). See episcopal rights; metropolitan rights; monastic officials; patriarchal rights (specific); stewards; and superiors

chiaton. See coinage children: exclusion from Patmos, 570, 583; fathering of, 152, 155; foster, 791, 794, 845; instruction of, see education; of lay laborers, 571, 576, 585; of nuns, 1463, 1464, 1471; as postulants, 571, 579, 622, 623, 628, 629, 630, 632, 1197, 1202; postulants with, 570, 592; of priest, 574, 597; reared from infancy, 571, 596, 1263; “spiritual,” 873, 879, 946; visiting nunnery, 710; women with, 1463, 1471. See also boys; girls; and youths choir. See churches (parts of); monks (types of): serving in choir or church; and nuns (types of): serving in choir or church choir leader (domestikos). See monastic officials (specific) chorion (village). See rural settlements choros. See choir and lighting devices (specific) chouspa (broom). See utensils, household chreia (lavatory). See hospitals and infirmaries (parts of) chrysobulls, imperial. See imperial legislation (specific) chrysoklabarikon (embroidered with gold thread). See cloths, liturgical (types of) chrysoteleia. See taxes and fiscal obligations (specific)

GENERAL INDEX

churches: addition of monasteries to, 973; adornment of, 793, 835, 1130; assigned places in, 60, 62; built in Ottoman times, 458, 567; burial within, 523, 525, 530, 704-5, 756, 782, 838, 844, 1099, 1278-79, 1389; conduct in, 63-64, 1501; construction/foundation of, 126, 175, 206, 252, 314, 317-18, 324, 455, 473, 508, 519, 523, 524, 567, 622, 628, 873, 946, 954, 973, 1043, 1101, 1107, 1113, 1117, 1128, 1130, 1162, 1178, 1182, 1237, 1375, 1390, 1392, 1411, 1417, 1423, 1466, 1473, 1579, 1593; construction of deferred, 1345, 1360; conversion of into mosques, 725, 783; decoration of, 212, 1178, 1190; dedication of, 314, 317, 1254; demolition of, 127, 1375; enlargement of, 1456; furnishings (keimelia) of, 455, 473, 515, 869, 973; gifts suitable for use in, 1616, 1621; illumination of, 315, 320, 350, 521, 536, 644, 652, 680, 681, 696, 697, 698, 701, 702, 728, 740-42, 753-54, 756, 802, 803, 1086, 1111, 1131-32, 1257, 1277, 1389, 1393, 1555, 1565; inheritance of, 1375, 1379; maintenance of, 793, 835, 836, 843; model of, 509; parishioners' offerings in, 1491; purification of, 150; reconsecration/rededication of, 213, 1043; rent payments for, 1375; repair, rebuilding, reconstruction, and restoration of, 150, 169, 208, 209, 212, 213, 313, 624, 782, 789, 793, 795, 843, 845, 869, 973, 1102, 1106, 1239, 1247, 1378, 1456, 1494, 1520, 1568; replacement of, 1303; rights of, 306; sale of, 1636; shares of ownership in, 457, 1494; site of future, 314, 317, 318; staffed by monks, 315, 319, 326; structural additions to, 659, 703; subordination of to monasteries, 144; unification (henosis) with prohibited, 1516, 1528 churches (parts of): altar/holy table (thysiasterion, hagia trapeza), xxx, 185, 476, 484, 529, 587, 655, 674, 689, 697, 741, 751, 790, 808, 816, 996, 1027, 1053, 1117, 1132, 1133, 1137, 1140; ambo, 100A, 277; apse, 740, 753, 754, 1456; apse conch (myax), 698, 741, 753, 756, 1277; atrium, 70; bell tower, 802, 804, 1520, 1568; capitals (kephalides, kephalokionia), 357, 716; chapel, auxiliary, 137, 169; chancel screen (kinklis, kankela), 98AB, 221, 473, 476, 536, 587, 740, 805, 808, 816, 894, 1027, 1083, 1150; chapels, side, 210, 213, 214, 509; choir, xxxvi, 107AB, 113AB, 169, 212, 224, 536, 741, 1150, 1155, 1545; cistern, 70, 1383, 1384; colonnade, 213; corner bay (phournikon), 753; cross, 314, 317, 318; crucifix (for the holy table), 552; cupola, 212; dome (troullos), 509, 698, 740, 753, 1186; door, principal/main, 167, 783; entrance, 213; exonarthex, 169, 213, 566, 655, 669, 687, 688, 698, 699, 704, 740, 741, 844, 1020, 1077, 1255; exonarthex, preambulatory, 1254; facade, 169; floor, 793, 836; founder's burial chapel, 135, 566; fountain in atrium (louter), 114B, 115A, under church, 1383, in narthex, 702; katechoumeneion/katechoumenia, 272, 274, 1267, 1563; katholikon, 509, 566, 567, 1339, 1456, 1579; katholikon, gate of, 311n. 2, 749; lintel (of gate), 311n. 2; naos, 169, 1255; narthex, 98AB, 99A, 135, 149, 165, 169, 176, 221, 225, 478, 508, 566, 652, 687, 688, 689, 698, 702, 704, 739, 740, 741, 753, 754, 791, 802, 810, 837, 838, 839, 965, 1015, 1020, 1027, 1077, 1083, 1132, 1133, 1135, 1255, 1257, 1269, 1289, 1292, 1346, 1356, 1360, 1463, 1473, 1706; narthex, outer, 1020, 1046, 1077; narthex, second, 213; nave, see under naos; niches, 509; pavement, 728; phiale, 754; pillars, 716; porch, 62; portico, south, 169; prie-dieu (proseuchadion), 686; pterygia, 1277; right side of, 981, 1020, 1077; roof, 69, 624, 793, 835; royal gate (basilike pyle), 98AB, 100A, 221, 740; sacristy (diakonikon, skevophylakion), 352, 405, 406, 567, 656, 681, 682, 705, 732, 741, 751, 773, 792, 829, 835, 838, 845, 848, 975, 1036, 1048, 1059, 1076, 1209, 1360; sanctuary, 98AB, 99A, 100A, 221, 484, 536, 680, 698, 715, 716, 738, 739, 756, 816, 834, 1150, 1277, 1360, 1456; sanctuary doorposts (harmosphinia), 716; sanctuary doors (hagiai thyrαι, horaiai pylai), 357, 359, 716, 740, 741; subsidiary chapels, 120, 1304; synthronon, 740, 753; templon, 357, 359, 552, 554, 696, 697, 698, 741, 753, 756, 1186; tombs, 169, 728, 738, 782, 791, 838, 839, 1255, 1258, 1270; vault (epitholion), 741; vault, groin, 70; vestry (vestiarion, vestion), 599, 840; walls, 69, 567, 789, 849. See Glossary for Greek terms churches (specific): Ambaros (CP), 1636; Archangel Michael (Rhaidestos), 306, 343; Blachernitissa (CP), 1166; Christ (Lakedaimon), 324; of George Maniakes (Sicily), 626, 631, 633; Hagia Sophia

GENERAL INDEX

(on Lemnos), 1494; Hagia Sophia, “the Great Church” (CP), 76, 101A, 150, 341, 360, 515, 555, 556, 599, 656, 705, 726, 992, 993, 994, 1043, 1048, 1051, 1076, 1216, 1631, 1637, 1659, 1672; Holy Apostles (CP), 1668; Holy Mary (Lat., CP), 1279; Holy Sepulcher (Jerusalem), 955; Langres, cathedral of (France), 975; Mother of God Eleousa (CP), 617; Mother of God Eleousa (Rhaidestos), 343; Mother of God Gorgoepokoos (Istanbul), 458; Palace church, 754; St. Akakios (CP), 1563; St. Barbara (of Eustathios Boilas), 517n. 17; St. Barbara (Lakedaimon), 317; St. Demetrios (near Philadelphia), 1189; St. Epiphanius (Lakedaimon), 317; St. George of Kyparission (CP), 341, 370n. 12; St. John the Forerunner (Rhaidestos), 343; St. Luke (CP), 766, 777n. 83; St. Marina, oratory of (Galesios), 148; St. Nicholas Mesomphalos (CP), 1557; St. Onouphrios (CP), 1563; St. Prokopios (Bera, Thrace), 793, 795, 843; Sts. Kosmas and Damian (CP), 120, 122n. 3; unidentified ruined (Lakedaimon), 314; unnamed 5th c. parochial, 67; unnamed small basilica (Luxor), 52. See also churches and chapels (monastic) churches (types of): cathedral (katholikon), 314, 1048, 1304, 1631; dependent, 621, 789, 792, 793, 845; family, 516, 571n. 17; house, 1178, 1182; main, 1376; monastic (private), 39, 296, 298, 1102, 1176; mortuary, 658, 705, 725, 1254; peasants’, 793, 843, 1176; public/parochial (katholikai ekklesiai), 43, 61, 306, 450; roofless, 974; ruined, 314, 457, 789, 845, 1043; small, 1176; stone, 126; triple, 725, 727; village, 203 churches and chapels (monastic):

- Annunciation (Menoikeion), 1585, 1609
- Annunciation, chapel of (Mar Saba, near Jerusalem), 1313
- Annunciation of the Mother of God, katholikon of (Lavra, Mount Athos; subsequently Dormition of St. Athanasios the Athonite), 206, 209, 210, 212, 213
- Christ All-Merciful (Panoiktirmon, CP), 336
- Christ Pantokrator (Pantokrator monastery, CP), 725, 728, 738, 740-42
- Christodoulos, mortuary chapel of (Patmos), 566
- Forty Saints, chapel of (Lavra, Mount Athos), 210, 221, 229n. 1
- Great Church (Sabas, near Jerusalem), 1316
- Holy Anargyroi (Ta Agathou, CP), 124
- Holy Anargyroi, oratory (kellion, Menoikeion), 1592
- Holy Apostles, chapel of (Patmos), 567
- Holy Cross (Hermitage of Holy Cross, Cyprus), 1338, 1352
- Holy Cross, chapel of (Patmos), 567
- Holy Philadelphoi (Val Demone, Sicily), 631, 633
- Holy Trinity (Hermitage of Holy Cross, Cyprus), 1345, 1360
- Holy Trinity (Lavra, Mount Athos), 262
- Hosios Loukas (Phokis), 314
- Incorporeal (St. Leontios, Patmos), 566
- Metamorphosis, see below, Transfiguration
- Michael the Archangel (Pantokrator monastery, CP), 725, 756-57
- Mother of God (Areia), 967
- Mother of God (Bebaia Elpis, CP), 1555
- Mother of God (Eleousa, Stroumitza) 167, 169, 175, 176, 184
- Mother of God (Evergetis, CP), 473
- Mother of God (Galesios), 149
- [Mother of God] (Kecharitomene, CP), 696-97, 698, 702
- Mother of God (Kosmosoteira, Bera, Thrace), 802-4, 834, 835, 843
- Mother of God (Kouphou, Crete), 144

GENERAL INDEX

churches and chapels (cont.)

- Mother of God (Lips, CP), 167, 1254
- Mother of God (Machairas, Cyprus), 1130
- Mother of God (monastery of the Despot, Latros[?]), 1251
- Mother of God (Pelion, Kos), 581
- Mother of God (St. John the Forerunner, Mt. Menoikeion), 1609
- Mother of God (St. Philip, Val Demone), 631, 633
- Mother of God (Skoteine, near Philadelphia), 1182
- Mother of God (Stoudios, CP), 112AB
- Mother of God, the Consolation (Pausolype, Galesios), 149
- Mother of God, Dormition of (Petritzonitissa, Bačkovo), 500, 508, 509, 519, 521, 523, 525, 530
- Mother of God, [John Xenos'] oratory of (Spelia, Crete), 144
- Mother of God, oratory of (Kecharitomene, CP), 704
- Mother of God, oratory of (Machairas, Cyprus), 1107, 1128, 1332
- Mother of God Eleousa (Pantokrator, CP), 725, 728, 732, 738, 753-56, 759, 768
- Mother of God Meteoritissa (Transfiguration, Meteora, Thessaly), 1455
- Mother of God Nea Peribleptos (Charsianeites, CP), 1626, 1632n. 2
- Mother of God tou Stylou (Latros), 135
- Parorion (Lakedaimon), 319
- [Paul the Younger], burial chapel of (Latros), 135
- Prophet Elias (Thessalonike), 1434
- Resurrection (Anastasis, CP), 1374, 1378, 1380
- St. Aberkios (Ligmous), 1043
- St. Basil, chapel of (Patmos), 567
- St. Constantine (Skoteine, near Philadelphia), 1178, 1188
- St. Demetrios (Kecharitomene, CP), 707
- St. Demetrios of the Palaiologoi (St. Demetrios-Kellibara, CP), 1106, 1238, 1247
- St. George (Nazogeraia, Crete), 144
- St. George (Phlethra, loc. uncertain), 1251
- St. George, chapel of (Petritzonitissa, Bačkovo), 509, 523
- St. George Doubrikas (Rhoustika, Crete), 143
- St. George Opsaropiastes (Choromonasteri, Crete), 143
- St. Irene, chapel of (Lips, CP), 1267
- St. John Chrysostom (Cyprus), 1350
- St. John Damascene (Mar Saba, near Jerusalem), 1313
- St. John the Evangelist/Theologian (Patmos), 595
- St. John the Forerunner (Lips, CP), 1254, 1267
- St. John the Forerunner (Mt. Menoikeion), 1592
- St. John the Forerunner (Panoiktirmon, CP), 336
- St. John the Forerunner (Psamathia, CP), 120
- St. John the Forerunner (St. John the Forerunner, Mount Athos), 1392
- St. John the Forerunner (St. John the Forerunner, Serres), 1594
- St. John the Forerunner (St. Philip, Val Demone), 631
- St. John the Forerunner (Stoudios, CP), 101A
- St. John the Forerunner, chapel of (Machairas, Cyprus), 1113, 1115, 1162
- St. John the Forerunner, chapel of (Patmos), 567
- St. John the Forerunner, chapel of (Ta Agathou, Psamathia), 124

GENERAL INDEX

churches and chapels (cont.)

- St. John the Forerunner, funerary chapel of (Petritzonitissa, Bačkovo), 509, 516, 523, 548
- St. John the Forerunner, oratory of (Lavra, Mount Athos), 227, 231n. 27
- St. John the Merciful (Skoteine, near Philadelphia), 1178, 1182
- St. John the Theologian (Patmos), 565
- St. Lazarus, chapel of (Anastasis, CP), 1374, 1376, 1379, 1380
- St. Mamas (CP), 973
- St. Marina (Galesios), 148
- St. Mark (St. Mark, Val Demone), 631, 633
- St. Mary of Virgiotis (Evergetis, CP), 457
- St. Michael, funerary chapel of (Pantokrator, CP), 725, 728, 739, 753, 754, 756-57, 1254
- St. Michael the Archangel (Docheiariou, Mount Athos), 1303, 1307
- St. Michael the Archangel (Psamathia, CP), 120
- St. Michael the Archangel (Val Demone), 622, 628, 631, 633
- St. Michael the Archangel, oratory of (Latros), 135
- St. Nicholas (Bebaia Elpis), 1565
- St. Nicholas (Lavra, Mount Athos), 210, 227, 231n. 27
- St. Nicholas (Petritzonitissa), 551
- St. Nicholas (St. Nicholas, near Serres), 522, 551
- St. Nicholas, chapel of (Mar Saba, near Jerusalem), 1313
- St. Nicholas, oratory of (Skoteine, near Philadelphia), 1178, 1182
- St. Nicholas of Kasoulon (Apulia), 1320
- St. Onouphrios, chapel of (Patmos), 567
- St. Paul, oratory of (Aigialos, Crete), 144
- St. Peter the Apostle (St. Peter, Val Demone), 631, 633
- [St. Philip] (St. Philip, Val Demone), 628, 633
- St. Prokopios (Aulax, near Philadelphia), 1178, 1190
- St. Sabbas (kellion, Karyes), 1334
- St. Stephen of the Aurelian (CP), 620, 789, 792, 793, 843, 845
- St. Thallelaios (St. Thallelaios, Val Demone), 631, 633
- Sts. Eutychios and Eutychianos (Rethymno, Crete), 143
- Saints, The (Skoteine, near Philadelphia), 1178, 1189
- Savior (Christ Savior, Messina), 644
- Savior, Mother of God, and St. Kyriake (Lakedaimon), 313, 314, 317, 319
- Transfiguration (Rila, Bulgaria), 126, 128n. 7
- Transfiguration (Transfiguration, Meteora, Thessaly), 1455
- Vaste, chapel at (Apulia), 1319
- unnamed chapels
 - (Hermitage of Holy Cross, Cyprus), 1350
 - (Kosmosoteira, Bera), 789, 849
 - (Studios, CP), 70
- unnamed chapel in old age home
 - (Kosmosoteira, Bera), 795, 831
- unnamed oratory
 - (Kecharitomene, CP), 711
- unspecified churches
 - (Lemnos), 457

GENERAL INDEX

churches and chapels (cont.)

(Parorion, Lakedaimon), 319

(Sthlavochorion, Lakedaimon), 319

chytrokandela, kythrokandela (pot-shaped lamp). See lighting devices (specific) cisterns. See convents (parts of); monasteries (parts of); and water supply systems civil legislation. See imperial legislation claustration. See virtues, monastic clergy (local): churches staffed by, 326, 732, 756; distrusted by founders, 298; hired, 728, 729, 755; and monastic offices, 1165; patronage of foundations by, 1105; represent local residents, 51; tax exemptions in favor of, 1105. See also ecclesiastical hierarchy and ecclesiastical officials clergy (specific ranks of). See archbishops; bishops; deacons; ecclesiastical hierarchy; metropolitans; patriarchs; and priests clocks, water (clepsydra). See furniture closures. See feasts (types of) and Glossary: octave clothing: allowance for, xxxiii, 512, 514, 980, 1014, 1071; communal purchase/distribution of, xxxiii, 490, 512, 534, 653, 684, 729, 750, 788, 822, 956, 966, 980, 1013, 1110, 1112, 1152, 1210, 1222, 1288, 1292, 1506, 1507, 1509, 1510, 1516, 1543, 1551, 1583; desired qualities of, 25, 27-28, 303, 382, 406; donations of, 144, 936; equality in, 152, 160, 445, 459, 464, 490-91, 614, 653, 696, 788, 822, 875, 924, 956, 980, 1014, 1071, 1210, 1457, 1460, 1505; extra allotments of, 1209, 1225, 1583, 1586, 1600; gradations of monastic, 1198, 1202-3; inequality in, 513, 535, 1112, 1341, 1457, 1460; manufacture of, 652, 684, 1096, 1177, 1185, 1463, 1472, 1514; monks' possession of, 170, 176; old items of to be donated, 495; old items of to be returned, 490, 750, 826, 924, 1152, 1210, 1225, 1258, 1276, 1288, 1292; not to be sold, 1185; provided to solitaries, 1210, 1227; purchase of/allowance for, 511, 520, 534, 865, 868, 1014, 1045, 1071, 1584; quality of, xxii, 72, 79, 259, 398, 406, 1365, 1516, 1552; raw materials for, 652, 684; records of, see records (specific); regulation of, 25, 25n. 18, 27-28, 37, 92, 114AB-115AB, 151, 164, 382, 464, 511, 788, 822; sets of monastic, 144; specified by superior, 1650; storage of, 462, 491; symbolism of, 179; washing of, 1516, 1552 clothing (types of): dignified, 1516, 1552; durable, 1258, 1276; extra, 1209, 1225, 1583, 1586, 1600; heavier, 93; inexpensive, 1342, 1516, 1552; modest/modestly adorned, 1342, 1516, 1552; necessary, 446, 570, 590; new, 1288, 1292; old, 490, 495, 750, 826, 924, 936, 1152, 1210, 1225, 1258, 1276, 1288, 1292; secular, xxi; worn, 1214, 1225 clothing (articles of): apron (thorakisterion), 762; cap (kamelaukion), 406, 407; capes, 1281; cloak (mandyas, mandyon), xxii, 228, 406, 407, 490, 685, 694, 750, 757, 826, 831, 924, 966, 1152, 1225, 1276, 1510, 1543, 1551 (pallion), 647 and n. 9; cowl (koukoulion), 109AB, 113AB, 114AB, 179; headcloth (skepasma, skepe, magoulukion, phakiolion), heavy cloak (barymandy), 228, 406; maphoria, 554, 559n. 53; outer garment (epanophorion), 114AB, 1516; pectoral, 369; phakiolion,

GENERAL INDEX

1551; shifts (tzolia), 1281; shirts, 757; tunic (himation), 114AB, 179, 228, 406, 490, 694, 749, 826, 966, 1224, 1276, 1509, 1551; undergarment/undershirt (hypokamison), 114AB, 228, 826, 831, 1224; vest (epistethion, peristethion), 490, 750, 826, 924, 966, 1152, 1224, 1276, 1510, 1551. See also cloths, liturgical (specific); imperial garments; monastic habit (articles of); textiles; and Glossary for Greek terms cloths, liturgical: care of, 1272; donation of, 515, 526, 877, 884; inalienability of, see inalienability; sale of, 1412, 1426 cloths, liturgical (specific): aer, 1186; altar cloth (endyte), 359, 369, 462, 491, 554, 1186, 1667, 1673; cuffs (epimanikia, hypomanika), 1186, 1393, 1567; curtain (epiplon, katapetasma, peplon), 359, 360, 371nn. 35 and 36, 716, 751; epitrachelion, 1186, 1479, 1567; fans (phlamoula), 1673, 1677n. 49; hangings, 369; inner cover for the altar (sarkesin), 1186, 1192n. 29; koukoula, 1673, 1677n. 49; liturgical cloth (epiplon), 360, 473, 1307, 1308, 1673; podeai, 360, 369, 1393, 1562, 1667, 1673; veil (poterokalymma), 359, 369, 473, 993, 1019, 1186, 1393, 1479, 1562, 1673; vestments (allagai, allaximata), 554, 1185, 1186, 1190, 1334, 1393, 1673. See also Glossary for Greek terms cloths, liturgical (types of): with borders in style of Attaleia (peripharia attaleiotika), 369; with designs of forty bands (?) (tessarakontasemos), 1673, 1677n. 44, of vine-tendrils (ambelokladion), 360; embroidered with gold thread (chrysoklabarikon, syrmatinon), 993, 1186, 1562, 1570n. 66, with letters, 968, with pearls, 1562, 1567; with representations of animals, 359, 360, 369, 1673, of Christ, 1673, of emperors, 1673, of feasts, 1186; sprinkled with gold (chrysorantistos), 1673; woven with silver and gold thread (argyroun diachryson), 716, (chrysoun), 1186, 1393. See also textiles coal. See fuels

cobblers. See laborers, monastic (specific) coffins. See burial sites cohabitation (sexual). See vices, monastic coinage: aspra, 1406, 1420, 1422, 1423; assarion, 55, 58n. 4; chiaton, 595, 596, 600; of Constantine IX Monomachos (monomachaton), 526, 558n. 9, 928; of Constantine X Doukas, 526, 558n. 9; ducat (doukaton), 1415, 1417, 1421, 1600, 1610n. 15 (see also Glossary); folllis, 541, 759, 760, 764; gellion, 1674; gold, 544, 545, 741, 742, 760, 762-63, 928, 1267, 1279, 1281, 1378, 1379, 1555; gold with cross (stauraton), 928; grosso, 1471; hagiogeorgaton, 756; holokotinon, 395; hyperpyron, 595, 699, 712, 713, 755, 760, 761, 762, 764, 766, 767, 840, 1014, 1071, 1131, 1187, 1188, 1190, 1218, 1229, 1230, 1391, 1394, 1557, 1561, 1562, 1563, 1567, 1568, 1600, 1609, 1618, 1639; hyperpyron, new, 763, 764, 765; hyperpyron, old, 763, 771; hyperpyros litra, 761, 771, 840, 844; kokkion, 712, 713, 714; of Michael VII Doukas (michaelaton), 526, 558n. 9; nomisma, 168, 185, 211, 212, 260, 341, 343, 347, 350, 367, 370, 535, 546, 550, 589, 590, 712, 713, 714, 928, 1002, 1003, 1030, 1048, 1116, 1279, 1280, 1281, 1292, 1351, 1375, 1516, 1555, 1567; nomisma, preferred, 741, 760, 762, 763; noummia, 697, 701, 702, 741, 742, 760; of Romanos III Argyros (romanaton), 526, 558n. 9; with scepter (skeptraton), 526; tetarteron, 350, 741, 742, 760, 1087, 1088; theotokion, 761, 763, 764; trachy, aspron, 762; trachy, nomisma, 343, 350, 526, 697, 699, 701, 702, 759, 760, 761, 763, 764, 765, 803, 830, 840, 1277; trachy, standard, 535;

GENERAL INDEX

trikephalon, 762, 765, 1014, 1051, 1087, 1088, 1128, 1187, 1188; trikephalon, old, 1014; trimesion, 57, 58n. 14. See also Glossary for Greek terms coins, possession of prohibited, 459, 490 coins (types of): gold, 544, 545, 741, 742, 760, 762, 763, 928, 1267, 1279, 1281, 1378, 1379, 1555; small, 459, 490 collaborative government. See monastic rule, styles of collation. See meals (specific) colonnade. See buildings, secular (parts of) and churches (parts of) columns. See buildings, secular (parts of) and monasteries (parts of) commemorations, liturgical (anaphora [of the living], mnemosyna [of the departed]): contributions/endowments for (prosenexeis), 302, 329, 348, 515, 516, 548, 575, 581, 658, 672, 1514, 1561; designation of clergy for celebration of, 1096; as fund-raising devices, 428, 434, 448, 614, 1520; instructions for, 53, 56, 983, 1021, 1389; limits on, xxv, 458, 494; lists of, 658, 702, 872, 927-28; not to be neglected, 1514, 1562-63; prostheke regulating, 136, 705, 1376; in reform monasteries, 463, 516; times of, 184, 103AB, 222, 927, 1563, 1565, 1566 commemorations, liturgical (individual): of deceased (hospital) patients, 759, 762, 766; of departed monks and nuns, 39, 93, 103AB, 222, 427, 434, 458, 464, 493-94, 515, 546, 548, 700, 789, 849, 866, 867, 875, 928, 969, 977, 1020, 1046, 1077, 1111, 1114, 1136, 1163, 1209, 1213, 1229, 1274, 1305, 1308, 1392, 1519, 1565, 1627, 1659; of the emperor, xxv, 314, 575, 595, 701, 743, 867, 1047, 1086-87, 1114, 1116, 1136, 1390, 1392, 1639; of eparch of CP, 331, 352; of founders, patrons, and protectors, xxiv, 53, 56, 184, 300, 314, 315, 319, 341, 343, 428, 434, 445, 464, 468, 493, 499, 514, 515, 516, 521, 544-45, 548, 575, 595, 619, 655, 656, 669, 700-702, 730, 733, 742-43, 749, 755, 759, 774, 791, 839, 844, 866, 867, 872, 875, 927-28, 958, 962, 968, 983, 984, 985, 998, 999, 1005, 1021, 1047, 1048, 1056, 1062, 1087-88, 1099, 1114, 1115, 1117, 1131, 1133, 1136, 1162, 1163, 1178, 1182, 1184, 1199, 1201, 1209, 1212, 1213, 1214, 1228-29, 1261, 1278, 1287, 1289, 1292, 1319, 1332, 1344, 1355, 1375, 1376, 1380, 1390, 1391, 1392, 1412, 1426, 1486, 1488, 1514, 1518, 1519, 1556, 1567, 1568, 1627, 1630, 1660; of founders' descendants, 1375, 1380, 1514, 1518, 1561; of founders' families and relatives, 514, 515, 516, 521, 544-45, 656, 700-702, 743, 755, 759, 791, 823, 840, 866, 867, 927, 928, 958, 968, 983, 984, 1005, 1021, 1209, 1228, 1261, 1278, 1289, 1292, 1375, 1376, 1379, 1380, 1486, 1513, 1514, 1516, 1518, 1555-56, 1561-63; of imperial family members, 875, 927; of imperial officials, 733, 742-43; of local bishops, xxv, xxxv, 168, 959, 963, 1101, 1107, 1118, 1128, 1130, 1346, 1355; of other bishops, 1520, 1567; of local magistrates, 314-15; 1164; of metropolitans, 875, 927, 1101; of monastic brotherhood, 1390, 1392; of monks' parents and families, 1021, 1113, 1114, 1136; of non-Byzantine rulers, 1344, 1352; of patriarchs, 144, 866, 872, 875, 919, 927, 1406; of postulants, xxxv; of St. Auxentios, 1374; of St. Lazarus of Galesios, 1376, 1380; of superiors, 136, 464, 494, 514, 515, 521, 529, 546, 550, 875, 927, 969, 981, 984, 1005, 1020-21, 1077-78, 1390, 1392; of "the whole world," 575, 595 commemorations, liturgical (types of): annual, 493, 546, 550, 700-702, 823, 840, 867, 875, 927, 962, 968, 983, 1021, 1087, 1209, 1228, 1278, 1376, 1389, 1555-56, 1561-63, 1567, 1568; daily,

GENERAL INDEX

515, 548, 743, 983, 999, 1021, 1056, 1088, 1209, 1228; third-day, 184, 434, 546, 550, 700, 981, 1020, 1077, 1229; ninth-day, 184, 434, 700, 981, 1020, 1077, 1229, 1660; fortieth-day, 434, 546, 700, 928, 981, 1020, 1077, 1163, 1229, 1426; joint, 515, 548; multiple, 522, 548, 866, 928, 1020; on Fridays, 1392, 1393; on Saturday of Cheesefare, 700, 742, 759, 762, 981, 1020, 1077; on Saturday of Meatfare, 103B, 222, 700, 742, 759, 762, 981, 1020, 1077, 1563, 1565, 1566 (see also Glossary); on Saturday of Pentecost, 103B, 222, 700, 742, 759, 762, 981, 1020, 1077, 1563, 1565, 1566; on Saturdays, 1376, 1380; of translated relics, 150; parastasimon, 343, 700, 1021, 1555, 1659, 1660 (see also Glossary) commerce: attitudes toward, 25n. 16, 194, 196, 199-200, 304, 447, 1298; with laymen, 198; with neighboring monasteries, 28; pursued, 24-25, 194, 1302; restrictions on, 24, 39, 198. See also fundraising schemes communion: guidelines for reception of, xxv, 62, 92, 113B, 114B, 115A, 447, 459, 475, 511, 653, 687, 807, 865, 896-97, 956, 965, 979, 1016, 1045, 1073, 1112, 1134, 1257, 1342, 1360-61, 1434, 1448, 1583, 1602; reconciliation prior to, 1368. See also Eucharist, Holy compline. See hours, liturgical (specific) conduit, water. See water supply systems confession: discussion of, 956, 964; exhortation to, 979, 1015; of faith, see testaments, monastic, and typika; frequency of, xv, xxv, 447, 459, 476, 521, 875, 898-900, 1434, 1435, 1448, 1515, 1553-54; Great/First, 459, 478, 787, 810, 875, 900, 1112, 1139; importance of, xxv, 1514, 1553-54; introduction of, 640, 644; punishments for failing to confess, 477, 809, 899, 920, 1138, 1139, 1655; qualifications for hearing of, 1263, 1342, 1357, 1588, 1592; thoughts excluded from, 1269, 1282n. 14; time for, 92, 107AB, 459, 476, 1257, 1269. See also confessors confession of faith. See faith confessors: deacons, 459, 476; monks (for nuns), 1314, 1316; priests, xxv, 29, 459, 476, 1014, 1112, 1139; recluse, 1357; spiritual fathers, xxv, 679, 875, 1257, 1263, 1269, 1463, 1473, 1514, 1554, 1583, 1588, 1600, 1602, 1628, 1634; superiors, xxv, 24 and n. 14, 107AB, 215, 228, 456, 459, 476-77, 478, 511, 537, 729, 750, 759, 787, 808-10, 875, 898-900, 920, 956, 965, 978, 979, 1014, 1015, 1045, 1071, 1110, 1112, 1137, 1139, 1159, 1340, 1342, 1366, 1628, 1634, 1654; superiors' assistants/designees, 458, 478, 729, 750, 1340, 1342, 1360, 1366, 1435, 1443; others, xxv, 459, 476, 808, 865, 898, 900, 979, 1014, 1110, 1112, 1137-38, 1045, 1071, 1137, 1342, 1360, 1435, 1443, 1448, 1581 confinement (monastic). See monasteries (parts of) and punishments (specific kinds) confraternity (diakonia), 771, 777n. 92 conscience (syneidesis), xv consultative bodies: administrative council, Athonite, 1614, 1615, 1620; assemblies, Athonite, 197-98, 199, 204, 233, 235, 236, 282, 283, 289, 290, 1614; council of elders, Athonite, 197; of Wallachian voivode's ecclesiastical officials, 1410, 1411, 1415, 1420 consultative government. See monastic rule, styles of contemplation. See virtues, monastic convents (female; monai, phrontisteria, semneia): access to, 1515, 1528, 1544; and the charistike, 306, 331, 343; construction of, 659; documents written for, xviii, 954, 649-724, 1093, 1295, 1484; endowments of, 954, 956, 958, 960, 961; elections in, 674, 1488; financial support of, 656-58, 712-14, 1107, 1117, 1166; hearing of confessions in, 1463, 1473; inheritance of, 1516-17, 1557-58; liturgical performances in, 652, 686-87, 688-89; manual labor in, 652, 671, 684, 704; priests serving in, xix, 652, 704; relations of with neighboring monastery, 957, 961-62, 1465-66, 1473; relocation of, 954, 961; repair, restoration, and maintenance of, 655, 657, 659, 703, 710, 1287, 1289, 1290, 1512, 1520, 1568; sacramental life in, 653, 687; sharing customs and cooperating with one another, 1289, 1292; spiritual renewal of, 1288, 1291; subordination of, 1289, 1292; in Syriac monasticism, 40; unification (henosis) with prohibited, 1516, 1528 convents (parts of): bathhouse, 653, 696, 707, 708; bow-slit, 703; cell for gatekeepers, 1464, 1476; cell for the sick, 653, 696; circuit-wall, 703; court, 707, 708; courtyard, 1464, 1476; doorway, 656, 710; dormitory, 652, 653, 671-72, 687, 688, 703; funerary/mortuary chapel, 619, 649, 654, 699; garden, 707, 708, 1463, 1476; gate, 654, 679, 697, 698, 701, 702, 703, 1290, 1292; gate, inner, 679, 1515, 1546; gate, outer, 679, 1464, 1476, 1515, 1546; gate, side, 703; gate house, 1258, 1270; granary, 682; guesthouse, 1257, 1269; kitchen, 1384, 1387; lavatories (parakellia), 670, 711; omphaitos, 711 (see also Glossary); orchard, 708; private cell (tropike), 653, 670, 671 (see also Glossary); private residences, 655, 656, 704, 710; quarters for official visitors (archontarikia), 654, 680; refectory, 653, 690; refectory apse, 653, 670-71; roof, 659, 703; storehouse/storeroom (vestion), 652, 657, 682, 684, 1258, 1276, 1514, 1516, 1521, 1549, 1551; vineyard, 1463, 1476; wall, 703, 1289, 1290; window, 703; workshop (ergodiosion), 711, 1516, 1551 convents (specific): Aristenai (CP), 1032, 1038n. 36; of Basil of Caesarea, 26, 28, 32; Christ Philanthropos (CP), 650, 1383-88, 1493n. 21; Constantine Lips (CP), 1097, 1100, 1104, 1254-86, 1301, 1493 n. 20; Eupraxia (Galesios), 149; Glabaina the protostratorissa, 1563; Holy Anargyroi, see below, Sts. Kosmas and Damian; Mother of God (Areia, Peloponnesos), 954, 955, 960, 961; Mother of God (Bouze, Peloponnesos), 954, 957, 961; Mother of God Bebaia Elpis (CP), 32, 1486, 1487, 1488, 1489, 1493n. 21, 1512-78; Mother of God Kecharitomene (CP), 617, 649-724, 976, 1255, 1493n. 21, cf. 89; Mother of God Pantanassa (Baionaia), xiii, 1297, 1302, 1462-82; Petria (CP), 362, 367; St. Anna of Deuteron (CP), 710, 719n. 63; St. George Trapeza (Skoutari), 1262, 1280, 1283n. 34; St. John the Forerunner (Menoikeion), 1580; St. Mark (Val Demone), 626, 631, 633; St. Mary of the Mongols (CP), 1491; St. Nicholas (CP), 711, 719n. 64; St. Prokopios (Rhaidestos), 306, 343; Sts. Kosmas and Damian (CP), 1097, 1100, 1104, 1287-94, 1301; Ta Kellaraias (CP), 619, 649, 654, 699, 704, 718n. 30; Trapeza, see above, St. George Skoutari); unidentified (CP?), 89; unnamed (CP), 650, 1563; unnamed (Tamasia, Cyprus), 1107, 1113, 1116, 1117, 1166 convents (types of): ancestral, 1517, 1568; cenobitic, 1097, 1462; dependent, 302; idiorhythmic, 1297, 1302, 1462; imperial, 1255, 1263; offered as entrance gift, 1262, 1280; patriarchal, 619, 649, 654, 699; ruined, 1104 conversation: conversatio morum, xviii; idle chatter, see vices, monastic; in journeys, 1018, 1074, 1607; in manual labor, 1018, 1074, 1602; in private/in cells, 62, 684, 1017, 1075, 1157, 1542, 1607, 1660; restriction of, 24n. 13, 1515, 1542; whispering, 64

GENERAL INDEX

converts: from Islam, 1408; from Judaism, 791, 840 cook. See laborers, monastic (specific)

GENERAL INDEX

cooking, private: condemned, 527; special concessions, 528

cooking oils and fats: goat fat, 762; goose fat, 762; olive oil, 110AB, 111A, 112AB, 140, 226, 350, 395, 397, 401, 746, 747, 691, 901, 914, 917, 1006, 1007, 1008, 1063, 1064, 1144, 1146, 1275, 1321, 1322, 1324, 1325, 1326, 1328, 1598, 1660, 1698–1710, 1712–16; pig fat, 762; sesame oil, 1144, 1703–4. See also cooking techniques and seasonings cooking techniques: boiling, 110AB, 111AB, 226, 915, 1006, 1007, 1063, 1144, 1275, 1326, 1598, 1698–1700, 1702–5, 1709–12; soaking, 900, 914, 1006, 1007, 1063, 1064, 1144, 1326, 1660, 1699, 1702–4, 1706; with olive oil, 110AB, 111A, 112AB, 140, 226, 350, 395, 397, 401, 746, 747, 691, 901, 914, 917, 1006, 1007, 1008, 1063, 1064, 1144, 1146, 1275, 1321, 1322, 1324, 1325, 1326, 1328, 1598, 1660, 1698–1710, 1712–16; with sesame oil, 1144, 1703–4; without oil, 110AB, 226, 396, 400, 480, 691, 746, 747, 1146, 1324, 1325, 1326, 1598, 1660, 1702, 1709, 1713; with vinegar, 1326, 1598, 1660, 1699, 1702. See also flavorings and seasonings coppersmiths. See laborers, monastic (specific)

Coptic. See languages

copyists. See professions and trades

Corpus consuetudinum monasticarum, xii correspondence: preserved, 52, 378, 564; restricted or prohibited, 40, 444, 459, 490, 570, 594, 875, 923, 1157, 1316, 1340, 1368, 1628, 1653

correspondence (specific): of apa Abraham, 52; of Christodoulos of Patmos, 564; of Constantine IX Monomachos, 282, 284–85; of Gregory II Kyprios, 150; of Honorius III, 456–57; of Nicholas I Mystikos, 1042; of Nicholas Mesarites, 457; of Theodore the Studite, 85, 87

corrodies and corrodians. See pensions and pensioners council of elders, Athonite. See consultative bodies councils and synods: ecumenical councils, 68, 76, 140, 174, 1467, affirmation of same, 137, 140; local councils and synods, 326, 456, 618, 808, 1103, 1207 councils and synods (specific): Blachernai (council of, 1283), 1207, (synod of, 1094), 326, 456, 618, 867, 868, 1103; Chalcedon, 1399; Constantinople I (381), 1399, 1470, 1480n. 10; Constantinople II (553), 1311, 1400, 1470, 1480n. 10; Constantinople III (680–81), 1400; Constantinople VI (see below Trullo); Ephesus, 1400; Lyons II (1274), 1396; Nicaea I (325), 1399, 1405, 1467; Nicaea II (787), 76, 1400, 1471, 1472, 1669, 1675n. 4; Trullo (691–92), 388, 403, 896, 915, 1202, 1326, 1472, 1474, 1706; unnamed (809), 68. See also canon law (specific canons); icons (specific); and patriarchal synod (CP) court officials. See imperial officials (specific) courts (secular): appointment and deposition of superiors by, 281, 284; competence of restricted, 204; legal appeals in, xix, 53, 281, 284, 307, 427, 461, 463, 513, 542, 574, 596, 944, 1587, 1594, 1630, 1655–56; officers of, 282; testimony in, xix, 39

GENERAL INDEX

crafts. See handicrafts and handiwork craftsmen: lay, see professions and trades; monastic, see laborers, monastic crimes: arson, xxxi, 795, 842-43; heresy, 39, 401, 416; sorcery, 209 criminals: assassins, 126; brigands/robbers, 126; pirates, 600, 954, 961, 1245, 1304, 1409, 1455 crops, agricultural: dues paid from, 1390-91, 1394; gathering and safekeeping of, 1110, 1111, 1147, 1538-39; half-share of, 1390, 1394; surplus of, 1457, 1458, 1460. See also grain crops, agricultural (specific): grain, 1458, 1460; oil, 1458, 1460; from olive grove, 1390, 1394; from vineyard, 1390, 1394; wine, 1458, 1460. See also grain (specific kinds) and wheat cross: as architectural element, 314, 317, 318; greeting in form of, 107AB; Lenten veneration of, 112AB, 227 crosses (types of): with arched candlestands (kamarai), 716; with bosses (mela), 716; bread (stauria), 688, 981, 1020, 1021, 1077, 1078, 1274 (see also Glossary); with glass jewels, 716; of gold, 716; liturgical, 356, 552, 716, 968; military, 552; with pendants (kataseista), 716; with precious stones, 552; reliquary, 526; sanctuary, 552, 716, 827; of silver, 552, 716, 968; of silver-gilt, 356, 716; tzapotoi, 716, 719n. 70; of wood, 716; of wood covered with gold, 552 crucifix. See churches (parts of) Crusades. See wars (specific) crystal, rock (kryon). See stones, precious cumin. See flavorings and supplies, medical cupola. See churches (parts of) curators (kouratores), 297, 310, 312 and n. 3, 363, 367 curses, reliance on, 53, 310, 312, 315, 319, 324-25, 463, 492, 1390, 1394, 1397 curses (specific): on archbishops, 968; on archimandrites, 968; on bishops, 146, 337-38, 482, 668, 825, 918, 968, 999, 1609; on clergy, 482; on emperors, 146, 337-38, 482, 668, 825, 918, 968, 999, 1609; of the founder, 492; on founder's relatives, 513, 542; on metropolitans, 146, 298, 968; on monks, 482, 999, 1056, 1361, 1397, 1402, 1609; on nuns, 668; on patriarchs, 146, 298, 482, 668, 918, 968; on predators, 304; on priests, 146, 337-38, 482, 668, 825, 918, 968, 999, 1397, 1402, 1609; on senators, 482, 668, 918, 999, 1056; on stewards, 482, 999, 1056; on superiors, 482, 668, 968, 999, 1056, 1361; of the three hundred and eighteen fathers of Nicaea, 146, 187, 325, 344, 483, 513, 542, 597, 599, 668, 918, 957, 968, 999, 1056, 1190, 1361, 1397, 1402, 1405, 1406, 1478 (see also Glossary); on transgressors, 130, 151, 164, 296, 312, 319, 324-25, 352, 542, 597, 599, 630, 633, 634, 668, 825, 968, 1022, 1078, 1131, 1164, 1190, 1218, 1335, 1424, 1428, 1528

GENERAL INDEX

daily activities: sleeping, 93, 112AB; studying, 93, 112AB, 1378, 1379. See also bathing; catechetical instruction; charitable distributions; commemorations, liturgical; confession; diet; fasts; food; handicrafts and handiwork; hours, liturgical; liturgies; manual labor; prayers; psalmody; reading; travel; vigils daughters. See family members (specific) daughters-in-law. See family members (specific) day, length of, 91, 92, 93, 1363

days of the week:

Sunday: breaking fasting on, 916, 918; commemorations on, 546, 688, 1087; departure of lay laborers for monastery on, 585; diet on, 395, 396, 401, 402, 480, 691, 692, 813, 914, 915, 970, 1006, 1063, 1064, 1065, 1144, 1227; election of superior on, 674, 996, 1053; evening office on, 1087; fasting on, 1473; feast on, 317; garment worn on, 114AB; liturgy on, 386, 390, 393, 394, 533, 591, 687, 843, 956, 965, 1274, 1288, 1292, 1355, 1514, 1547, 1583, 1601; midnight office on, 388; night vigil on, 390, 1209, 1225; no all night office on, 1457, 1460; no fasting on, 388, 394, 401, 402, 416, 535; no founder's commemoration on, 1021; no genuflections on, 391, 412, 416, 1133; no private recitation of office on, 964; no prostrations on, 389; number of dishes/meals on, 110AB, 184, 480, 1146, 1258, 1275, 1321, 1325; omission of patronal feast on, 493; postponement of commemorations occurring on, 927; presence of solitaries on, xxxiii, 570, 580, 585, 591, 1162; reading on, xxviii, 104AB, 390; reading out of excommunication on, 1346, 1356; reception of Eucharist on, 1583, 1602; recitation of hours on, 386; recitation of stichera on, 390; ringing of bells on, 804; singing of canons on, 387; singing of kathisma on, 390; singing of odes on, 63; singing of troparia on, 387; superior to inspect the sick on, 831; supper on, 1144; timing of meal on, 399; vigils on, 478, 569, 537, 587, 689, 964, 970

Monday: consumption of Holy Broth on, 826; diet on, 395, 396, 399, 481, 691, 692, 1006, 1007, 1063, 1064, 1065, 1145, 1146, 1258, 1275, 1342, 1363; exemption from fasting on, 395, 400, 401, 403, 900, 1321, 1328; fasting on, 62, 227, 395, 396, 397, 399, 400, 401, 403, 480, 481, 691, 747, 813, 814, 914, 915, 916, 917, 1006, 1063, 1112, 1146, 1275, 1321, 1322, 1324-26, 1363, 1496, 1501; liturgy on, 1087; no liturgy on, 480, 1006, 1143; number of meals on, 184; performance of matins on, 897; prostrations on, 391, 1473; return of lay laborers on, 585; singing of kathismata on, 390, 391; singing/omission of psalms on, 394, 1145; timing of meal on, 397; use of wine on, 499

Tuesday: diet on, 395, 396, 397, 401, 403, 481, 691, 692, 813, 814, 917, 1006, 1008, 1063, 1064, 1144, 1145, 1146; exemption from fasting on, 900, 1064; liturgy on, 1514, 1547, 1583, 1601; number of dishes/meals on, 184, 481, 1146, 1258, 1275, 1323; performance of matins on, 897; singing of kathisma on, 390; use of wine on, 535

Wednesday: abstinence on, xxxi; commemorations on, 700; consumption of Holy Broth on, 826; diet on, 395, 396, 397, 399, 401, 403, 481, 691, 692, 700, 1006, 1007, 1008, 1063, 1064, 1065, 1145, 1146, 1198, 1258, 1275, 1322, 1342, 1363; exemption from fasting on, 400, 401, 415, 691; fasting on, 62, 110A, 140, 226, 395, 396, 397, 399, 400, 401, 402, 403, 411, 480, 481, 628, 631, 691, 746, 747, 813, 814, 876, 900, 901, 904, 905, 906, 914, 915, 917, 1006, 1063, 1112, 1146, 1198, 1204, 1275, 1321, 1324-26, 1328, 1363, 1496-97, 1501, 1598; liturgy on, 405, 533, 687; no

GENERAL INDEX

supper on, 1144; number of meals on, 184, 480; peasants' diet on, 843; performance of matins on, 897; performance of the ninth hour on, 110AB, 405; reading of catechesis on, 106B; singing/omission of psalms on, 1145; timing of meal on, 397; use of bath by women on, 841; use of wine on, 499

Thursday: diet on, 395, 396, 397, 401, 691, 692, 813, 917, 1006, 1008, 1063, 1064, 1144, 1146; fasting on, 914; liturgy on, 1514, 1547, 1583, 1586, 1601; number of dishes/meals on, 184, 481, 1146, 1258, 1275, 1323; performance of matins on, 897; triodion on, 388; use of wine on, 535

Friday: abstinence on, xxxi; commemorations on, 700, 1020, 1077, 1392, 1393; consumption of Holy Broth on, 826; departure of lay laborers for home on, 585; diet on, 395, 396, 399, 401, 402, 403, 700, 813, 1006, 1007, 1008, 1063, 1065, 1144, 1145, 1146, 1198, 1322, 1324, 1325, 1342, 1363; exemption from fasting on, 400, 401, 415; fasting on, 62, 110A, 111A, 140, 226, 395, 396, 397, 399, 400, 401, 402, 403, 480, 481, 628, 631, 691, 692, 746, 747, 813, 814, 876, 900, 901, 905, 906, 914, 915, 916, 917, 1006, 1063, 1112, 1146, 1198, 1204, 1258, 1275, 1321, 1324-27, 1328, 1363, 1497, 1501, 1598; liturgy on, 405, 533, 687; night office on, 700; number of meals on, 480; offering of kollyba on, 1390, 1392; peasants' diet on, 843; performance of matins on, 897; performance of ninth hour on, 110AB, 405; reading of catechesis on, 106B; singing/omission of psalms on, 1145; timing of meal on, 397; use of bath by women on, 841; use of wine on, 499

Saturday: bathing on, 965; breaking fasting on, 918; commemorations on, 546, 688, 700, 1021, 1376, 1380; diet on, 396, 401, 402, 691, 692, 700, 813, 914, 915, 1006, 1007, 1063, 1064, 1065, 1144, 1227; fasting on, 900, 914, 916, 1473; garment worn on, 114AB; liturgy on, 533, 591, 956, 965, 1355, 1363, 1376, 1380, 1514, 1547, 1583, 1601; no departures on, 1316; no fasting on, 394, 401, 402, 480, 535, 1064; no genuflections on, 391, 1133; no private recitation of office on, 964; no prostrations on, 389, 687; number of dishes/meals on, 110AB, 480, 1146, 1258, 1275; offering of little crosses (stauria) on, 1274; preparation for election of superior on, 674, 995, 1053; reading of Epistle on, 104AB; recitation of hours on, 386; recitation of stichera on, 106B, 391; return of solitaries on, xxxiii, 570, 591, 1162; singing of exaposteilaria on, 105AB; singing of kathisma on, 390; singing of psalms on, 387; slaughtering on, 317; supper/evening meal on, 399, 1144; vigils on, 390, 591, 803-4, 1316, 1332, 1335, 1546, 1547, 1555

For specific instances of days of the week, e.g., Holy Thursday, see commemorations, liturgical (types of); dietary rules; feasts (specific, movable); liturgies (specific); and meals (specific) deacons: assigned to churches, 978, 1000, 1045, 1057; liturgical duties of, 98A, 99A, 100A, 106B, 114B, 115A, 510, 1111, 1133; living allowance of, 755; number of, xxiv, 510, 531, 738, 749, 754, 1000, 1045, 1057; order of precedence of, 740; ordination of, 282; as testamentary witnesses, 57, 597, 1031. See also monks (types of) death: Lenten reminder of, 108AB, 224; reflection on, xiv, 133, 141, 169, 174, 594, 629, 631, 644, 874, 880-82, 1126, 1180, 1306, 1349, 1369, 1391, 1405, 1413-14, 1425, 1501 deceit. See vices, monastic decorations: frescos, 137, 144, 169; murals, 212; wall paintings, 1339

GENERAL INDEX

deeds of title. See legal documents (specific) deer marrow. See foods (particular kinds)

Deesis. See icons (specific) defection. See vices, monastic defrocking. See punishments (specific kinds) dekakeratoi (ten-horned). See dissidents, religious delimitation. See legal documents (specific) denigration. See vices, monastic dependents (lay), of monasteries, 791, 840, 844-45, 848

despoina. See titles and dignities despoteia (ownership). See patrons, rights of (specific) despotikai heortai (feasts of the Lord/dominical feasts). See dietary rules; feasts; feasts (specific, fixed); feasts (specific, movable); icons (specific); liturgies (specific); and Glossary deutereuon. See ecclesiastical officials (specific) diakainesimos (Renovation/Low Sunday/Sunday of the Apostle Thomas). See feasts (specific, movable) and weeks of the liturgical year diaklysmos (collation). See meals (specific) diakonetai (monastic officials). See monastic officials diakonetai (monks in menial service). See laborers, monastic (specific) diakonia (course, dish). See meals diakonia. See confraternity diakonikon (sacristy). See churches (parts of) diakrasis (special fare/treat). See meals (specific) diarion (allowance). See allowances, living diataxis (rule). See monastic foundation documents, (10) Eleousa, (19) Attaleiates, (34) Machairas, and (41) Docheiariou

GENERAL INDEX

diatheke (testament). See testaments, lay and testaments, monastic diatyposis (testament). See testaments, monastic diblattion. See textiles, colors of diet: in Byzantine times, 25n. 17; caloric value of, xxvii; donations to increase, 121, 499; donations not to increase, 658, 672; in early monastic rules, 25, 37; in Pachomian tradition, 37; regulation of, 46, 90, 91, 151, 164, 170, 183–84, 214, 215, 226, 296, 378, 379, 382, 460, 467, 478–80, 481–82, 512, 533–34, 570, 691, 729, 743–46, 788, 801, 812–15, 826, 955, 962, 1005–9, 1046, 1062–66, 1112, 1143–46, 1198, 1204, 1210, 1227, 1258, 1274, 1275, 1297, 1298, 1299, 1320, 1321–23, 1332, 1334, 1495, 1496–97, 1501, 1506, 1516, 1547, 1548, 1584, 1597, 1696–1716; superior's discretion in setting or changing, see superiors' rights. See also dietary rules; drinks and beverages; foods; and meals diet (types of): abundant/bounteous, 612, 788, 794, 801, 1112; bread and water, 34, 138, 140, 396, 397, 398, 1322, 1705, 1709, 1716; dry food and water, 978, 1009; Evergetian, 612, 977, 1198, 1210, 1321, 1322, 1497; for aged and infirm, 111A, 140, 226, 395, 401, 402, 480, 481, 499, 692, 747, 813–14, 915, 1007, 1064, 1145, 1275, 1327, 1328, 1547, 1548, 1598; for guests, 433, 481, 1335; for nobly born, 670, 1278, 1550; for the sick, 1259, 1276, 1457, 1460, 1506, 1509; frugal, 1198, 1204; lenient, 382, 446, 612, 1112, 1144; moderate, 1516, 1548; spare, 1631, 1648; stricter/rigorist/ascetic/austere, 382, 383, 405, 512, 539, 1112, 1144, 1321, 1340, 1342, 1363, 1497, 1699, 1701; Studite, 92, 96n. 49; unequal, 1412, 1423 (see also vices, monastic: dietary inequality); vegetarian, 92. See also meals (types of) dietary inequality. See vices, monastic dietary rules, general, xxvii, 91, 1696–98; during Cheesefare Week, 226, 401, 747, 905, 907, 1008, 1065, 1146, 1198, 1327, 1329n. 15, 1598–99, 1716; during Christmastide, 226, 401, 401, 534, 1146, 1327, 1715; for Easter, 92, 109AB, 1145; for evening meal, 109AB, 226, 480, 534, 691, 693, 729, 745, 746, 747, 812, 814, 1006, 1063, 1143, 1144, 1325, 1700–1701; for fast days, 110AB, 140, 226, 395, 691, 729, 746, 788, 813, 814, 980, 1006, 1063, 1210, 1227, 1275, 1321–22, 1324, 1325, 1516, 1547, 1584, 1598, 1629, 1660–61, 1699–1700; for feast of the Annunciation, 92, 112AB, 140, 238, 402, 481, 692, 747, 813–14, 915, 1007, 1064, 1144, 1145, 1322, 1328, 1707–8; for Good Friday, 111B, 226, 403, 481, 692, 747, 814, 915, 965, 1007, 1064, 1145, 1322, 1497, 1598, 1705–6; for Holy Saturday, 111AB, 226, 403, 692–93, 747, 814, 876, 915, 916, 1007, 1064, 1145, 1322, 1326, 1598, 1706; for Holy Thursday, 111AB, 114AB, 115A, 226, 380, 403, 692, 747, 814, 914, 915, 1007, 1064, 1145, 1326, 1598, 1705; for Lent, 93, 110AB–111AB, 140, 226–27, 401–4, 460, 480–81, 535, 653, 691–93, 813, 814, 1006–7, 1063–64, 1143–45, 1322, 1324–26, 1334, 1342, 1363, 1584, 1598, 1701–9; for other fasts, 109AB–110AB, 226, 396, 401, 410–11, 460, 482, 535, 653, 693, 814, 900, 1008, 1064, 1065, 1145–46, 1325, 1326, 1334, 1584, 1598, 1700–1712; for Palm Sunday, 111A, 747, 1144; for regular (non-fast) days, 109AB, 226, 395, 534, 653, 691, 729, 746, 788, 826, 977, 1006, 1063, 1210, 1227, 1275, 1321, 1324, 1325, 1516, 1547, 1598, 1698–99; for Saturday of Lazarus, 111A, 116n. 22, 401–2, 965, 1321, 1322, 1327, 1328; from Christmastide to Cheesefare Week, 401, 1715–16; from Easter to Sunday after Pentecost, 109AB, 394, 396, 534, 917, 1326, 1712; from feast of All Saints to feast of Holy Apostles, 1326; from feast of Holy Apostles to feast of St. Philip, 110AB, 226, 396, 534, 1710, 1712–13; from Sunday of Orthodoxy to Palm Sunday, 1326; on dominical feasts, 140, 226, 395, 399, 482, 746, 747, 814, 831, 980, 1006, 1063, 1132, 1210, 1227, 1258, 1275, 1325, 1327, 1584, 1598, 1713–15; on various feasts, 91, 970, 1210, 1227, 1258, 1275, 1326, 1327, 1328, 1584, 1598; historical development of, 1697-98; as special, 227, 1653, 1716. See also seasons (liturgical) and weeks of the liturgical year dikaiophylax, of the Great Church. See ecclesiastical officials (specific) and Glossary dikaiou, Ho (representative). See monastic officials (specific) dioiketes (tax collector). See imperial officials (specific) diorthosis. See reformation, spiritual Diospolis. See supplies, medical diptychs: registration in, 1240, 1249; sets of, 1209, 1229; use of for commemorations, 52, 343, 345, 350, 494, 669, 688, 700, 702, 743, 823, 929, 999, 1021, 1047, 1056, 1077, 1163, 1209, 1213, 1229 diseases. See illnesses and injuries disciples: adolescent, 71, 78, 235, 259 (see also youths); founder's, 135, 210, 246, 510, 637, 1107, 1311, 1338, 1352, 1397, 1401, 1433, 1443; superior's, 983, 1022-23, 1305, 1308, 1625 disciplinary official (epistemonarches). See monastic officials (specific) discipline and disciplinary legislation, 24 n. 12, 28, 34, 46, 296, 611, 612, 1298, 1313-14, 1317, 1340, 1366. See also punishments and penitentials dishypatos. See titles and dignities diskopoterion (paten and chalice). See sacred vessels (specific kinds) disobedience. See vices, monastic disputes: avoidance of, 862; settlement of, 40, 792, 844; resolution of (by Athonite council), 1410, 1411, 1416, 1421; (by the patriarch of CP), 618, 620, 800, 846, 1433, 1433-34; (by the emperor), 89, 1099, 1222; of monasteries with metropolitans, 150; with neighboring monasteries, 136, 792, 844 dissidents, religious, 47; Armenians, 401, 415, 905, 907, 918; Artzibourians, 980, 1008, 1037n. 17, 1065, 1109, 1146, 1198 (see also Artzibourios); Bogomils, 1401, 1403n. 13; Chatzitzarii, 1401, 1403n. 14; Eustathianoï, 402, 419n. 74; Headless, 76, 81n. 3; Lapetianoï, 402, 419n. 74; Markianistai, 402, 419n. 74; Medenistai, 1401, 1403n. 14; Messalianoi, 402, 419n. 74; oil abstiners (anelaioi), 397; Paulianists, 1401, 1403n. 14; ten-horned (Monophysites), 76, 81n. 4; Tetraditai, 401, 418n. 68, 905, 907, 947n. 27, 1401. See also Index of People and Places: Apollinaris, Arius, Cyrus, Didymos, Dioskoros, Eutyches, Evagrius, Honorius, Makarios (of Antioch), Makedonios, Nestorios, Origen, Paul (of CP), Peter (of CP), Polychronios, Pyrrhos (of CP), Sergios (of CP), Stephen (Monothelite), Theodore of Mopsuestia, and Theodore of Pharan

GENERAL INDEX

GENERAL INDEX

district, military (bandon). See territorial jurisdictions district, territorial (petiton). See territorial jurisdictions docheiarios, m.; docheiaria, f. (cellarer or treasurer). See monastic officials (specific) doctors: attitude of, 1518, 1532; caring for monks, 497, 745, 825, 830, 937, 1506, 1509, 1628, 1643; caring for nuns, 696, 1258, 1259, 1274, 1516, 1549-50; payment for, 1516, 1550; rental properties of, 341; serving in hospitals, see hospitals and infirmaries, staff of (specific) documents. See legal documents dodeka heortai (Twelve Feasts). See icons (specific) dodekaameron (Twelve days of Christmas). See seasons (liturgical) domestikoi. See imperial officials (specific) dominion (kyriotes). See patrons, rights of (specific) donations, pious (psychika): acceptability of, 382, 410; administration of, 339, 340, 344; alienation of by patron, 328, 349; anticipated, 426, 430, 431; to clergy (paramythiai), 730, 766; in exchange for burial, 658, 705; in exchange for commemoration, 329, 348, 733, 743; mistreatment of, 341; pressure for, 427, 434; recorded in inventories, see inventories (types of); refused, 127, 130, 383, 410; solicitation of, 1117, 1129; use of, 343, 345, 349; welcomed, 315, 319, 658, 672. See also endowments and gifts and benefactions donkey mill. See mills

donors. See patrons doorkeeper. See monastic officials (specific)

Dormition (koimesis tes Theotokou). See dietary rules; feasts (specific, fixed); icons (specific); liturgies (specific); and Glossary doukaton (ducat). See coinage doulos. See titles and dignities doux. See imperial officials (specific) dove. See animals (specific) dowries. See women: dowries of doxology, 98AB, 99AB, 106B, 113AB, 114B, 115A, 227, 349, 390, 586, 1009, 1066, 1131, 1137, 1308, 1546, 1547

GENERAL INDEX

drakontarion (dragon-shaped bracket). See lighting devices (specific) drinking (excessive and secret). See vices, monastic drinks and beverages: brewed, 1704; customary, 1696; equality in, 183, 445, 459, 464, 490-91, 511, 527, 614, 653, 696, 788, 822, 875, 924, 956, 962, 980, 1017, 1045, 1073, 1112, 1117, 1153, 1342, 1457, 1460, 1487, 1496, 1501, 1506, 1508; quantities of, 480, 1696-97; use of water to dilute, 140, 479, 811, 1699, 1701, 1704 drinks and beverages (specific): barley-water, 1281, 1283n. 36; hot water (cumin-flavored) (eukraton, thermon, kyminaton), 111AB, 214, 481, 499, 691, 692, 813, 900, 914, 915, 1144, 1145, 1198, 1204, 1322, 1698, 1699, 1701, 1702, 1703, 1704, 1707-8, (fennel-flavored), 1198, 1204, (honey-flavored), 1145; juice, 761, (unsweetened), 396, 1713; milk, 1712, 1714, 1715; water, 401, 403, 980, 1006, 1699, 1702, 1709-11, 1716; water, sip of (diaklysmos), 113B, 115A, 116n. 27, 404. See also wine dromos, mandator of. See imperial officials (specific) drought. See calamities droungarios. See imperial officials (specific): megas droungarios droungarokometes. See imperial officials (specific) ducat. See coinage earthquakes. See calamities ecclesiarch. See monastic officials (specific) ecclesiastical hierarchy: imperial support of, 1106; promotion of charistike by, 49, 144, 200, 202; relations with founders and patrons, 122, 171, 185, 298, 299, 300, 337-38, 341, 344, 867, 869, 1098, 1103-4, 1290, 1298, 1346, 1489, 1629; relations with independent monasteries, 986, 1049; relations with reformers, 616, 618, 867, 1101, 1103; rights of, 365, 1101, 1102, 1214, 1466, 1492, 1588 (see also episcopal rights, metropolitans' rights, and patriarchal rights); subordination of private religious foundations to, 47, 377, 382. See also archbishops; bishops; deacons; ecclesiastical officials; metropolitans; and patriarchs ecclesiastical officials: allowed to worship at monastery, 959, 964; banned from premises, 324, 959, 964; visitations and interference by, 137, 144, 622 ecclesiastical officials (specific): (episcopal): canons, 1374; notary, 597, 598, 601, 1346, 1370; primate (protothronos), 1126, 1159, 1166; sakellarios, 597; synkellos, 55, 58n. 2; (papal): apostolic visitor, 1320; cardinal, 1320; cardinal-legate, 456; (parish): anagnostes (reader), 382, 408, 456, 735, 739, 759, 763, 767; archpriest (archipresbyteros), 57, 58n. 17; deutereuon, 1675; lamplighters, 1111, 1133; notary, 53, 57; protopapas, 630, 1675; subdeacons (hypodiakonoi), xxiv, 510, 531; (patriarchal): chancellor, 204, 973; delegate (topoteretes), 1200; dikaiophylax of the

GENERAL INDEX

Great Church, 1415; exarchs (proexarchontes), 377; inspector (epiteretes), 1199, 1200; koubouklesios, 242 and n. 9; notaries, 565, 572, 595, 619; protosynkellos, 369; (other): archimandrites and archimandritical authority, 616, 617, 623, 624, 638, 639, 641, 643, 644, 646, 647, 968, 1032, 1043, 1200, 1237. visitor (periodeutes), 1199, 1200; See also archbishops; bishops; deacons; ecclesiastical hierarchy; metropolitans; patriarchs; and priests

echos. See modes economy (oikonomia). See virtues, monastic education: elementary (hieragrammata), 550; of future monks and priests, see monasteries (parts of): schools; of future nuns, 1514, 1564; of lay children, xix, xxi, 28 and n. 27, 40, 41, 447, 1343, 1353, 1458, 1460, 1521, 1564, 1588, 1601; of nuns, 1464, 1470, 1477. See also teaching

Egyptian. See languages eidikos. See imperial officials (specific) eikonostasion. See iconostasis eisagogikoi. See novices

Eisodia (Entry of the Virgin into the Temple/Presentation in the Temple). See feasts (specific, fixed) and icons (specific) ekklesiarches (ecclesiarch). See monastic officials (specific) ekklesiarchissa (ecclesiarchissa). See monastic officials (specific) ekklesiastikoi (church/choir monks). See monks (types of), serving in choir or church ekphrasis. See books, secular ektenes. See litanies (specific) ekzestos (boiled). See cooking techniques elections: of monastic officials, see monastic officials: election of; of patriarchs of CP, see patriarchs of CP: election of; of priests, see priests: election of; of stewards, see stewards: election of; of superiors, see superiors: election/internal selection of; use of lots in, xxx, 617, 655, 675, 731, 751, 862, 982, 995, 1052, 1053 elektron. See icons (types of) and lighting devices (specific) elements, consecrated. See Eucharist, Holy Eleousa. See churches (specific); churches and chapels (monastic); icons (specific); monasteries (specific); and Glossary

GENERAL INDEX

eligma (lozenge). See supplies, medical embraces. See ritual observances and vices, monastic emperors and the imperial government: appeals by monks to, 210, 232, 789, 815; attend services in convent, 1257, 1277; cash grants from, 144, 168, 427, 870, 1108, 1116, 1131, 1212, 1230; dedicatory offerings (solemnia) of, 127, 203, 208, 211, 248, 260, 871, 1043, 1047, 1051; deputations to, 153, 163; documents authored by, 607, 1093, 1483; grants of exemption by, xxix, 361-67; grants for illumination (photapsiai) by, 203; grants of incomes by, 208 (see also annuities); grants of monasteries by, 120; grants of property by, 90, 121, 1128, 1262, 1279; patronage, oversight (pronoia), and control of monasteries by, xxxv, 47, 48, 49, 71, 86, 136, 149, 195, 196, 197, 200, 203, 207, 233, 245, 281, 299, 323, 324, 460, 463, 571, 582-83, 584, 607, 608-10, 625, 870, 878, 927, 1097, 1107, 1110, 1128, 1300, 1345, 1433, 1487-88, 1507, 1508, 1579, 1584, 1587, 1593-94, 1605; rebuilding of churches and monasteries by, 1106; serving as protectors, xxix, 306, 1232, 1249, 1259, 1266, 1276, 1352, 1605; serving as trustees, 1108, 1163-64; signature of, 233, 241, 727, 1181, 1193n. 61; sponsors of charistike, 49, 200, 202, 204; on visits to convents, 1258, 1270; on visits to monasteries, 121, 167, 783. See also imperial legislation (specific) and Index of People and Places under names of particular emperors emperors and the imperial government, rights of: appointment of administrator, 211; appointment of superior, 196, 1433; bestowment of superior's staff of office, 1584, 1585, 1607; choice of superiors, 1099, 1211, 1219; conducting inquests, 208, 210, 211, 232, 281-83; confirmation of chrysobulls, 209, 211, 281, 981, 999, 1108, 1131; confirmation of donations, 1213, 1232; confirmation of institutional independence, 153, 163, 170, 211, 365, 448, 513, 515, 555-56, 860, 871, 1113, 1128, 1579, 1584, 1595, 1600, 1629, 1661; confirmation of property, 212, 566, 575, 581, 1107; confirmation of typika, 283n. 4, 1579; donation under epidosis, 211, 246; expulsion of monks, 208, 233, 248; grant of institutional independence, 246; imposition of guests or postulants (katapemptoi), 44, 659, 695, 1435, 1447, 1627, 1661; installation of superiors, xxx-xxxi, 212, 1099, 1211, 1218, 1219, 1240, 1259, 1267; legislate for monasteries, 281; making laws, 734, 772; mastery over personal possessions, 734, 772; mediation of disputes, 208, 232, 281, 1099, 1211, 1215, 1222; requisition of ecclesiastical property, 444, 448-49, 450, 451, 515, 651, 871, 878, 1584, 1609; resolution of disputed elections, 1240; subordination of one monastery to another, 1259, 1265; unification (henosis) of two monasteries, 1259, 1265

emphyteusis, 344. See also Glossary emplastron (plaster). See supplies, medical emporion. See markets

empress: prerogatives of, 1260, 1269, 1588, 1601; wardrobe of, 711 enamel (enkausis, cheimeutos, chymeutos) decoration. See book covers, decoration of; icons (types of); reliquaries (types of); and sacred vessels (types of) enchoregos (rubble, masonry). See building materials (specific) endowments: absence of, 870, 1301, 1436, 1451; acquisition of prohibited, 1340, 1344, 1353; alienation not permitted, see inalienability; alienation permitted, 1099, 1116, 1154; confiscation of, 327, 1211, 1223, 1409, 1490, 1491, 1492, 1587, 1594, 1625, 1637; and dependencies, 1178, 1182; diversity of, 1411, 1416; donation of, xxxiv, 48, 50, 302, 329, 462, 493, 672, 791, 804, 1107, 1129-30, 1182, 1190, 1230, 1247, 1414, 1416; exchange of, 565, 582; growth of restricted, 201, 304, 436, 870; increase in, 1520, 1564, 1626, 1637; inventories of, see inventories; leasing of not permitted, 515, 551; loss of, 212, 1042, 1108, 1289, 1291, 1303, 1304, 1339, 1520, 1580; management of, see financial management; payment of taxes on, 1489; productivity of, 172; purchase of, 143, 167, 170, 175, 233, 253, 515, 516, 548, 614, 793, 844, 872, 928, 1045, 1520, 1567; reconstitution/restoration/recovery of, 1047, 1051, 1287, 1288, 1289, 1304, 1580, 1626, 1639; revenues from, 149, 164, 566, 1102; size of, 712, 713; sources of, 329, 341, 871; support derived from, 1099

GENERAL INDEX

endowments (specific): animals, 526, 1140, 1190, 1417, 1423; aulai, 769; bakeries, 341, 360; bathhouses, 771; books, 326, 329, 1393-94, 1465, 1478-79 (see also below, service books); cash, 313, 872, 928, 1261, 1262, 1271, 1272, 1507, 1508, 1518, 1520, 1561, 1562, 1567; cattle byres (zeugelateia/zeugolateia), 600, 1178, 1179, 1190, 1279, 1416, 1422; entrance gifts, xxv, 626, 628, 658, 672, 1117, 1140, 1262, 1280, 1435, 1447, 1489, 1600, 1616, 1621; episkepseis, 770; estates, 149, 212, 341, 360, 367, 454, 583, 594, 595, 600, 657, 677, 768-71, 782, 800-801, 828-29, 1280, 1292, 1557; fairs (panegyreis), 793, 828, 829, 1292; field hands, 201; fields, 524, 525, 526, 769, 1187, 1188, 1189, 1190; fisheries/fish ponds, 769, 772, 793, 827, 1262, 1279; ford (perama), 770; fortification, 1433; gardens, 524, 641, 645, 1108, 1116, 1131, 1178, 1188, 1279, 1280, 1292, 1558, 1563; granaries, 641, 645; hostels, 768, 769; houses, 677, 733, 743, 769, 1158; housing for laborers, 641, 645; icons, 877, 884, 1019, 1518, 1562 (see also icons [specific]); ironworker's shop, 1186, 1192n. 35; landed (immovable) property, 125, 143, 144, 149, 247, 259, 329, 341, 348, 426, 430, 455, 462, 473, 493, 514, 525, 581, 631, 638, 639, 733, 743, 770, 794, 824, 872, 878, 927, 958, 962, 985, 1000, 1107, 1117, 1128, 1129-30, 1131, 1140, 1163, 1182, 1187-90, 1212, 1230, 1237, 1262, 1271, 1279-80, 1289, 1290, 1291-92, 1303, 1319, 1339, 1344, 1353, 1411, 1417, 1423, 1507, 1508, 1519, 1557, 1561, 1562, 1580, 1587, 1600, 1625, 1639; liturgical cloths, 515, 526, 877, 884, 968, 1019, 1465, 1479 (see also cloths, liturgical [specific]); livestock, 1178, 1190, 1345, 1360; maritime rights, 772; markets, 769, 770, 793, 829; mills, 526, 549, 770, 771, 1187, 1188, 1262, 1279, 1280, 1588, 1609; monasteries, 1433, 1456; olive groves, 641, 645, 1178, 1188, 1262, 1280, 1391, 1392, 1394; pastures, 69, 524, 526, 1188, 1292; peasants, dependent, 167, 208, 499, 1108, 1113, 1116, 1131, 1280, 1292; perfumery, 341, 360; pier (skala), 1262, 1280; pronoia, 769 (see also Glossary); rental properties (enoikika), 341, 342, 344, 360, 361, 708, 713, 770, 771, 1262, 1280, 1563; sacred vessels, 144, 329, 356, 455, 473, 637, 877, 884, 968, 985, 1019, 1178, 1262, 1271, 1289, 1291, 1465, 1479, 1518, 1561; salt marsh (halmikon), 1188; salt works (halikai), 770; service books, 637, 869n. 11, 877, 884, 1019, 1178, 1393-94; ships, 793, 829; taxes, 771; tithes, 770, 1166; urban real estate, 329, 341, 1433; villages, 125, 315, 320, 524, 525, 542, 555-57, 768-71, 793, 795, 828-29, 844, 846, 1188, 1212, 1230, 1262, 1280, 1433, 1519, 1557, 1625, 1636; vineyards, 121, 144, 465, 499, 524, 526, 551, 626, 628, 631, 641, 645, 712, 713, 714, 769, 771, 792, 843, 1178, 1182, 1188, 1189, 1190, 1262, 1279, 1280, 1292, 1344, 1360, 1391, 1394, 1397, 1401, 1416, 1417, 1423, 1518, 1557, 1558, 1562, 1563, 1568, 1636; wharves, 771; workshop, 1433, 1434 endowments (types of): given by Bulgarian rulers, 125; given by founders, 622, 628, 631; given by local officials, 315; given by metropolitans, 148; of imperial monasteries, 149, 768-72, 1098, 1217, 1279-80, 1291-92, 1509; of independent monasteries, 48, 49, 201, 203, 303, 451, 508, 612, 614, 616, 733, 768-72, 871, 1300, 1489, 1639; for lighting (photapsia/photaugeia), 203, 641, 642n. 26, 644; memorial, 149; of metropolitan see (autourgia), 619; for performance of hymnody, 641, 644; of private monasteries, 71; royal, 641, 644; tax-exempt, xxxiv, 864, 962, 966, 1116, 1131

GENERAL INDEX

endyte (altar cloth). See cloths, liturgical (specific) enkainia. See feasts (specific, movable) and Glossary enkausis (enamel). See book covers, decoration of; icons (types of); reliquaries (types of); and sacred vessels (types of) enkleistra (hermitage). See monasteries (types of) enkleistos. See recluses enkolpion, 802, 838, 1426. See also Glossary enoikika. See property, rental entrance gifts/offerings: acceptability of, 248, 263, 464, 658, 672, 878, 929-30, 958, 966, 985, 1117, 1495, 1627; allocation of, 1616, 1621; ban on, xvii, xxxv, 302, 463, 495, 1434, 1448, 1587, 1630, 1647-48; concessions in exchange for, 152, 161; do not create presumption of acceptability, 1332, 1334; donation of, 248, 263, 1187, 1189; effects of on community, 248, 733, 748, 1616, 1618; handling of, 1621; irretrievability of, see inalienability; restricted, 1498, 1502; solicitation of, 1437, 1448; as source of endowment, xxxv, 1489, 1588, 1600 entrance gifts/offerings (types of) (apotage, eulogia, prosenexis, synetheia, trapeziatikon): free-will, xxxv, 23, 161, 463, 495, 612, 618, 672, 748, 793, 824, 864, 930, 966, 985, 1000, 1010, 1048, 1057-58, 1117, 1140, 1262, 1269, 1271, 1280, 1298; mandatory, 27, 262, 263, 347, 348, 445, 463, 495, 520, 614, 618, 658, 672, 732, 748, 793, 824, 864, 878, 929-30, 1010, 1048, 1057, 1067, 1100, 1117, 1140, 1262, 1269, 1334, 1448, 1486, 1489 epanophorion (outer garment). See clothing (articles of) eparch. See imperial officials (specific) epeixis (levy). See taxes and fiscal obligations (specific) epereia (imposition). See taxes and fiscal obligations (specific) epeuchion (rug). See bedding (specific kinds) ephaploma (bedcover, quilt). See bedding (specific kinds) ephoreia (protectorate). See protectors and the protectorate ephoros (imperial). See imperial officials (specific) ephoros (private). See protectors and the protectorate epidosis: condemned, 613, 667, 815, 962; establishment of prohibited, 188, 610, 654, 667, 789, 815, 981, 992, 999, 1056, 1098, 1217, 1249, 1516, 1528; patriarchal attitudes toward, 202, 203; threat from ignored, 1113; tolerated by Leo of Chalcedon, 451; use of, 209, 211, 299, 307, 772, 860, 870, 958, 962. See also Glossary

GENERAL INDEX

epilorikon (over-tunic). See imperial garments epimanikia/hypomanika (cuffs). See cloths, liturgical (specific) epiplon (curtain, liturgical cloth). See cloths, liturgical (specific) episcopal (diocesan) monasteries: independent monastery mistaken as, 957, 958; not founded by bishops, 43; possible instance of, 1338, 1343; revenues of diverted, 860 episcopal rights: accepted, 172, 185, 1455; adjudication of, 1688; canonical basis for, xxxv; imperial support of, 1102, 1199; maximal statement of, 1103; rejected, xxxvi, 187, 616, 731, 867, 958-59, 1094, 1197, 1199, 1200, 1456; restricted, 954, 1107, 1128, 1588, 1595 episcopal rights (specific): alteration of typikon, 1588, 1595; appointment and expulsion of monks, 1588, 1595; bestowal of permission to hear confessions, xxx, xxxvi, 729, 734, 750, 759, 1298, 1342, 1346, 1357, 1588; blessing (sphragis) of superior, xxi-xxii, xxx, xxxvi, 49, 172, 185, 616, 731, 751, 959, 961, 1101, 1118, 1159; confirmation of typika, 1343, 1346, 1361; consecration of churches, 314; correction (diorthosis) of spiritual faults, xxxvi, 168, 1199, 1200; demand for financial accounting, 1588, 1595; exercise of authority over monastery, 1588, 1595; grant in charistike, 959, 964; granting of permission to celebrate liturgy, 233, 238; granting of stauropugia, 1101, 1102, 1105, 1107, 1118, 1130; honoraria, xxx, 1218; imposition of guests (katapemptoi), 959, 964; installation (cheirotonia) of superior, xxx, xxxvi, 731, 957, 1101, 1107, 1114, 1118, 1130; institutional oversight, 1094; investigation (anakrasis) of spiritual faults, xxxvi, 959, 963, 1199, 1200; liturgical commemoration (anaphora, mnemosynon), see commemoration, liturgical (individual); participation in election of superior, 959, 964; permission to rent property, 1455; receipt of kanonikon, 169, 1588, 1595 episcopal sees (episkopeia): endowments of, 299; kept out of the charistike, 306; relocation of, 51

episkepsis. See territorial jurisdictions and Glossary epistekon (chief pharmacist). See hospitals and infirmaries, staff of (specific) epistemonarches, m.; epistemonarchissa, f. (disciplinary official). See monastic officials (specific) epistethion (pectoral vest). See clothing (articles of) epitaphios. See hymns (specific) epiteretes (overseer). See monastic officials (specific) epi ton hippodromon. See imperial officials (specific) epi ton oikeiakon. See imperial officials (specific) epi tou hippodromou. See imperial officials (specific) epi tou kanikleiou. See imperial officials (specific)

GENERAL INDEX

epi tou stratou. See imperial officials (specific) epitrachelion. See cloths, liturgical (specific) epitropos (administrator). See administrators; monastic officials (specific); and protectors and the protectorate epomion/epomis (scapular). See clothing (articles of) equality, monastic (isonomia): in earlier monastic rules, 30 and n. 35, 34, 36; in the Evergetian tradition, xix, 445, 459, 490-91, 614, 784, 788, 875, 1487; in post-Byzantine times, 1384; qualifications of, 1100, 1101; recommended by individual founders, 152, 160, 170, 1263; rejected, 1411, 1417, 1423 eremitism. See kelliotai and kelliotic monasticism and solitaries and solitary monasticism ergocheiron. See handicrafts and handiwork ergodotria (work organizer). See monastic officials (specific) esokouros (tonsured at home monastery). See monks (types of) esomonitai (“internal monks”). See monks (types of) and Glossary

Ethiopic. See languages

Eucharist, Holy: chapter concerning, 1027, 1083; daily celebration of, 545, 1142, 1145, 1155, 1162; disposal of elements of, 836; purity of elements in, 1096, 1112, 1135, 1197, 1201, 1620; reception of, 29, 29n. 31, 160, 533, 591, 687, 729, 743, 787, 807, 965, 1274, 1583, 1601-2. See also communion

Euchologion. See books, liturgical eukraton. See drinks and beverages (specific) eulogetarion. See hymns (specific) eulogia. See blessing

eunuchs (eunouchoi, thladiai): anomalous status of, xxii; banned, xix, 233, 238, 263, 282, 285, 447, 512, 521, 541, 570, 583, 787, 800, 1314, 1316, 1615, 1621-22; as doctors, xix, 653, 696; as monks, see monks (types of); as postulants, xix, 248, 263, 327, 348, 612-13, 824; as priests, xix, xxii, 653, 656, 678; as spiritual fathers, xix; as stewards, 656, 577; and “transvestite” nuns, 1621 evangelion (gospel lectionary). See books, liturgical

Evangelismos. See Annunciation

Evergetian canon and reform tradition: and Attaleiates, 330-31; and Christodoulos, 570, 575; and

GENERAL INDEX

Gregory Pakourianos, 509; and lay protectors, 789, 815, 865; and Lazaros of Galesios, 152; and Nikon of the Black Mountain, 303, 309, 377, 382-83, 425, 428; and patriarchal rights, 879, 1199; and Stoudios, 69, 84, 89, 90, 465; alliance with the ecclesiastical hierarchy, 618, 867, 1103; anticipation of, 32, 36, 38, 40, 47, 272, 302-03, 314, 330, 382; Basilian sources of, 31, 32, 570; comparison with Western medieval reform tradition, xii, xiii; contemporary impact of, 167, 210, 211-12; dietary provisions of, see diet (types of); egalitarian aspects of, 464, 479, 491, 733, 734, 784, 793, 977, 1263; endorsements and developments of, 862-64; first generation of, 610, 611, 860-61, 864, 1110; influence on the aristocracy, 464, 613, 861; influence on the imperial family, 464-65, 650, 728; influence on the protectorate, 307, 309; influence on Mount Athos, 198-99, 281-83; influence outside Byzantium, 609, 613, 625, 638, 640; institutional philanthropy, 465, 495-96, 497, 516; later influence of, 468, 651, 784, 873, 955, 956, 960n. 20, 975, 984, 985, 986, 1043, 1108, 1109-10, 1214n. 10, 1297, 1298-99, 1300, 1302, 1305, 1331, 1340, 1384, 1436, 1485, 1488, 1490, 1505, 1515, 1580, 1588, 1627; intensification of concerns of, 614-15, 860; liturgical typikon of (see synaxaria [specific]); Maman recension of, 456, 861, 975, 1044, 1094, 1109-10, 1581-82, 1583, 1723; misogynist tendency, 465, 1213; neo-Evergetian revival, 457, 1299, 1486, 1494; qualification of principles of, 610-613, 860; refectory procedures, 478-80, 861, 980, 1097; reuse of typikon, 784-85, 859, 860-65, 866, 867, 868, 873, 1094, 1263, 1581; routes of dissemination, 861, 1094; second generation of, 650, 651, 861, 958, 977-78, 1581; and sexual segregation, 465; study of the ascetic tradition, 862; third generation of, 859, 978; triumph of, 308, 309, 978; use and adaptation of, 613-14, 864, 1094, 1095, 1100, 1297, 1485, 1513, 1718-21

Evergetian canon and reform tradition, principles of, 442-45, 609; advocacy of cenobitic life, 444, 458, 459-60, 490, 613, 863, 1457, 1582; ameliorations in lifestyle, 865; concern for peasantry, 330, 448; consultative government, 447, 861; control over admissions, xx, xxi, 444, 459, 463, 494-95, 613; emphasis on liturgical duties, 170; exclusion of women, 382-83, 730; hostility to commercial activity, 200, 211; hostility towards alternative forms of monasticism, 428, 432, 870, 958, 1096, 1112, 1209, 1581, 1584; hostility towards ownership of property by monks, 428, 436, 626; hostility towards privileges, 458, 464, 479, 487-88, 516, 659, 676, 1117, 1262; inalienability of consecrated property, 282, 328, 330, 365, 428, 434, 462, 463, 488-89, 613, 675, 862-63, 1099, 1109, 1340, 1375, 1614, 1667; increased attention to commemorative observances, 463; increased emphasis on sacramental life, 447, 459, 474-75, 476-78, 861, 864; importance of patristic precedents, 199, 204, 283, 575; independent and honest financial management, 458, 462, 515, 614, 650, 792, 863-64, 877, 958, 978, 1115, 1212; internal selection of the superior, 461, 573, 790, 862; institutional independence and self-governance, 136, 442, 443, 460, 482-83, 509, 568, 613, 861, 862, 876; lenient regulations for fasting, 460; monastic equality, 445, 459, 490-91, 614, 733, 788, 956, 1177, 1342, 1384, 1487, 1496, 1515; no mandatory entrance gifts, xvii, 463, 495, 614, 732, 864, 1100, 1262; not anti-aristocratic, 464-65, 494, 496, 878-79; not concerned with homoeroticism, 512; opposition to the charistike, 283, 309, 425, 443, 619; rejection of externally imposed appointments, 615, 658, 791; rejection of fund-raising schemes, 329, 614-15; restriction of patronal privileges, 445, 609; stress on unanimity, 461, 485; use of canon law, 575, 616, 1103; use of inventories, 658, 1094, 1485-86, 1667

Evergetis. See churches and chapels (monastic); monasteries (specific); monastic documents; and Glossary

exagion. See measures (surface and weight) exaleimmatike (abandoned land). See land (types of)

GENERAL INDEX

- Exaposteilaria* (book of). See books, liturgical
- exaposteilarion*. See hymns (specific)
- excommunication. See punishments (specific kinds)
- exemptions. See immunities and exemptions
- exhortations. See addresses, hortatory
- exkoubitor* (ward watcher). See hospitals and infirmaries, staff of (specific)
- exkousseia*. See immunities and exemptions
- exodiastikon biblion* (book of the funeral service). See books, liturgical
- exokouritides* (nuns tonsured at other monasteries). See nuns (types of)
- exomonitai* (external/non-resident monks). See monks (types of) and Glossary
- exomonitides* (external/non-resident nuns). See nuns (types of)
- exonarthex. See churches (parts of)
- exoneration (athoosis). See legal documents (specific)
- expansion (institutional): disallowed, xxxiv, 247, 253, 1353; favored, 248, 281, 612; by territorial acquisition, 194, 204
- expenditures (monastic): records of, see records (specific); superior kept informed of, 1212, 1226. See also obligations, fixed (monastic)
- expropriations. See requisitions
- external relations: hostility to, 36, 39; in Pachomian tradition, 35, 38; for settlement of disputes, 40, 618, 620, 862; in Syriac tradition, 39, 40; with dependents' relatives, 791, 845; with founders' relatives, 26, 171, 181, 445, 1263; with monks' relatives, 25, 29, 34, 36, 39, 71, 77, 258, 462, 485, 654, 679, 730, 766, 788, 822, 1343, 1365, 1496, 1502, 1588, 1601; with nuns' relatives, 1258, 1270, 1463, 1464, 1471, 1515, 1545; with neighboring monasteries and convents, xviii, 28, 32, 1462, 1466, 1473; with people outside the monastery, 912-14; with public authorities, 28, 1466, 1472, 1477; with secular society, xix. See also typika: regulation of external relations in
- fairs (panegyreis), 512, 535, 557. See also endowments (specific)
- faith: preservation of, see virtues, monastic; professions of, see testaments, monastic and typika
- families and relatives: accompanying nun to convent, 1261, 1278; and burial of monks, 730; care

GENERAL INDEX

of, 261; commemorations of, see commemorations, liturgical (individual); correspondence with, see correspondence; favors for, 488, 658, 677, 983, 986, 1023, 1047, 1048, 1079; gifts to, 1471; preferential privileges of, 327, 348, 1263; threat to monasteries from, 53, 56, 171, 181, 247, 258, 328, 513, 527, 542, 572, 574, 1177, 1184; visits from, see guests and visitors. See also external relations and family members family members: collateral, 328, 340; female, 328, 338-39; of monks and nuns, 488, 512, 534, 654, 679-80, 787, 822, 959, 960n. 25, 967, 968, 1270, 1365, 1439, 1471, 1502, 1627; of superiors, 77, 258, 443, 512, 531, 532, 922, 967, 1023, 1079, 1161, 1502 family members (specific): brothers, 331, 355, 679, 959, 968, 1514, 1561; brothers-in-law, 679, 1514, 1562, 1610n. 20; daughters, 726, 1258, 1259, 1260, 1262, 1278, 1383, 1464, 1470, 1476, 1512, 1517, 1518, 1519, 1520, 1521, 1556, 1566, 1579, 1610n. 20; daughters-in-law, 1514, 1561; fathers, 679, 959, 968, 1375, 1520, 1562; fathers-in-law, 1514, 1562; grandfathers, 1176, 1181, 1207, 1212; granddaughters, 1258, 1259, 1260, 1261, 1262, 1278, 1512, 1518, 1520, 1561, 1568; great-granddaughter, 1520, 1568; grandmothers, 1180, 1610n. 20; grandson, 1579; husbands, 331, 355, 1464, 1470, 1512, 1513, 1518, 1556; mothers, 654, 679, 959, 968, 1259, 1270, 1375, 1380, 1383, 1464, 1476; nephews, 623, 1339, 1344, 1358, 1518, 1562, 1588; niece, 1512; parents, 622, 633, 654, 679, 1021, 1198, 1203, 1514, 1515, 1518, 1562, 1579; second cousin, 1610n. 20; sisters, 959, 968, 1259, 1270, 1514, 1561, 1610n. 20; sons, 1375, 1512, 1517, 1518, 1519, 1529, 1556; sons-in-law, 710, 1042, 1207; spouses, xxi, 22; sympentheros, 1562 (see also Glossary); uncles, 67, 85, 86, 659, 968, 973, 1177, 1181, 1304, 1307, 1579, 1583, 1586, 1588, 1591; wives, 570, 571, 683, 1375, 1376, 1379, 1380, 1383, 1520, 1567, 1579, 1610n. 20. See also children and families family ties: appointments due to, 282, 290, 512, 513, 529, 657, 685, 1498, 1502; discounted, 1344, 1358; in Basilian monasticism, 25, 29; in Pachomian monasticism, 34, 36; in Syriac monasticism, 39, 40, 41; inheritance rights due to, 53, 56, 90, 144, 339-40, 350-351, 354, 541, 1375; renunciation of, 1496, 1500, 1629, 1646, 1647; regulation of, 26n. 20. See also relationships: spiritual famine. See calamities famuli. See servants (domestic) fare (transportation), price of, 1351

farmers: laymen as, see peasants; monks as, see laborers, monastic fasts (nesteiai, tessarakostai): basis for regulation of, 137, 138; breaking for dominical feasts, 110AB, 226, 227, 395, 482, 747, 813-14, 901, 1146, 1197, 1204, 1363, 1495, 1496, 1501, 1598, 1700, 1711, 1713-15; breaking of for major/great feasts, 399, 901, 905, 1006, 1007, 1063, 1064, 1146, 1496, 1713-14; breaking of for medium feasts, 399, 1713; breaking of for minor feasts, 399-400, 1713-14; breaking forbidden, 1204, 1501; days for, 110AB, 140, 226, 395, 691, 746, 813, 814, 1006, 1063, 1112, 1146, 1275, 1324, 1325, 1699-1700; day-long, 63, 1697, 1702; during Holy Week, 110AB, 226, 403, 814, 1007, 1064, 1145, 1598, 1705-6; dispensations from, 111A, 112AB, 402, 481, 499, 876, 901, 917, 1007, 1064, 1144, 1363, 1598, 1706-9, 1716; effect on mealtimes, 917, 1697; forbidden on weekends, 402, 691, 914, 918, 1006, 1063, 1144, 1699, 1715; how to determine, 482, 814, 917, 1008, 1065, 1145, 1711; importance of, 60; lenient regulations for, 460; moderation of for friend's visit, 1332, 1335; rejection of sectarian, 401, 402, 907,

GENERAL INDEX

1112, 1146, 1701, 1715-16, cf. 1197, 1204; regulation of, 380, 382, 400, 460, 480-81, 729, 746-47, 788, 812-15, 1513, 1546; requirements for, 63, 140, 416, 1697; self-imposed, 653, 694; strict regulations for, 460

fasts (specific): Monday, 63, 227, 395, 396, 397, 399, 400, 401, 403, 480, 481, 691, 747, 813, 814, 914, 915, 917, 1006, 1063, 1146, 1275, 1324-26, 1363, 1501; Wednesday, 63, 110A, 140, 226, 395, 396, 397, 399, 400, 401, 402, 403, 480, 481, 628, 631, 691, 746, 747, 813, 814, 900, 901, 904, 905, 906, 914, 917, 1006, 1063, 1146, 1204, 1275, 1324-26, 1363, 1501, 1598; Friday, 63, 110A, 111A, 140, 226, 395, 396, 397, 399, 400, 401, 402, 403, 480, 481, 628, 631, 691, 746, 747, 813, 900, 901, 905, 906, 914, 917, 1006, 1063, 1146, 1204, 1275, 1324-27, 1363, 1501, 1598; Cheesefare/Cheesefast, 1323, 1327, 1329n. 15, 1716; Lenten, xxviii, 64, 91, 92, 106B-107AB, 108AB, 110AB-112AB, 224, 226, 227, 233, 238, 401-4, 460, 465, 499, 480-81, 535, 587, 628, 631, 691, 730, 744, 747, 748, 813-14, 876, 900-907, 914, 915, 966, 1006-7, 1063-64, 1112, 1143-45, 1258, 1259, 1276, 1322, 1324-26, 1334, 1363, 1497, 1547, 1598, 1660, 1701-6; of the Holy Apostles, 91, 92, 104AB, 109AB-110AB, 223, 396, 401, 411, 460, 482, 628, 631, 693, 744, 746, 814, 917, 966, 980, 1007-8, 1064-65, 1145-46, 1276, 1323, 1325, 1326, 1363, 1497, 1598, 1661, 1709-10, 1713; of the Holy Cross, 412, 1326; of the Mother of God, 380, 410-11, 876, 917-18, 1276, 1497, 1661, 1711-12, 1713; of St. Philip (Holy Nativity), 64, 91, 92, 110AB, 223, 226, 401, 411, 460, 482, 628, 631, 693, 744, 746, 814, 917, 1008, 1065, 1146, 1276, 1323, 1325, 1326, 1363, 1497, 1598, 1661, 1710-11, 1713; private, 27. See also Glossary fathers. See family members (specific) fathers-in-law. See family members (specific) feasts: charitable distributions on, 184, 350, 536, 659, 697, 741, 742, 766, 794, 802, 803, 804, 815, 827, 918, 1132, 1230, 1277, 1292, 1489-90, 1660; concelebration of, 1111, 1132; in conjunction with commemorations, 983, 1021; dietary dispensations for, 110AB, 111A, 112AB, 226, 227, 395, 399-400, 402, 481, 482, 1007, 1064, 1144, 1325-28, 1706-9; lighting arrangements for, 652, 696-98; liturgies on, 956, 965; personal designation of, 400; regulation of, 459, 787, 827, 843; use of donations for, 658, 672, 1516, 1554-55. See also feasts (specific, fixed); feasts (specific, movable); and feasts (types of) feasts (specific, fixed):

of the angels (see below, Archangels)

Annunciation (Evangelismos, March 25), 101A, 112AB, 140, 238, 402, 414, 481, 692, 697, 741, 742, 747, 755, 813-14, 836, 907, 915, 965, 1007, 1064, 1144, 1145, 1322, 1328, 1354, 1497, 1609, 1703, 1704, 1707-8

Archangel Gabriel (July 13), 415, 907

Archangel Michael (September 6), 412, 906

Archangel Michael, Miracle in Chonai (November 6), 1214, 1230

Archangels Michael and Gabriel (November 8), 413, 907, 1229, 1305, 1308, 1309, 1325;

Beheading of St. John the Baptist (August 29), 386, 393, 399, 412, 415, 907, 1162, 1268, 1292

Birth of the Mother of God (Genethlion tes Theotokou, September 8), 105AB, 224, 412, 697, 741, 755, 836, 906, 1257, 1268, 1276, 1277, 1292, 1354

Birth of St. John the Baptist (June 24), 222, 350, 386, 393, 399, 412, 415, 481, 907, 1162, 1257, 1268, 1276, 1277, 1292, 1325, 1326, 1351, 1700, 1713, 1714

Blessed Hilarion (October 21), 413

GENERAL INDEX

feasts (cont.)

- Christmas/Nativity of Christ (December 25), 105AB, 107AB, 222, 224, 235, 350, 391, 401, 413, 474, 491, 534, 535, 545, 599, 697, 741, 804, 826, 907, 1258, 1276, 1325-27, 1354, 1586, 1700, 1714
- Commemoration of the Mother of God (December 26), 1132
- Commemoration (synaxis) of St. John the Baptist (January 6), 414, 804, 907
- Conception of St. Anne (December 9), 413, 907
- Consecration of the Church of the Holy Resurrection (September 13), 412
- Daniel the Prophet (December 17), 413, 970
- Discovery of the Head of St. John the Baptist (February 24), 67, 111A, 116n. 24, 222, 402, 414, 481, 692, 813, 907, 915, 1007, 1064, 1144, 1700, 1703, 1706-8, 1710
- Discovery of the relics of the Apostle Bartholomew (August 24), 415
- Dormition of the Mother of God (Koimesis, Metastasis, August 15), 105AB, 224, 235, 240, 242n. 3, 350, 380, 391, 411, 415, 433, 447, 474, 482, 491, 511, 535-36, 687, 696-97, 742, 755, 787, 794, 803, 804, 806, 814, 827, 833, 836, 876, 907, 1008, 1045, 1065, 1070, 1086, 1111, 1118, 1132, 1257, 1258, 1276, 1277, 1322, 1326, 1327, 1514, 1554-55, 1627, 1631, 1659, 1711, 1714-15
- Dormition of St. Anne (July 25), 415
- Elijah the Prophet (July 20), 415, 970
- Elisha the Prophet (June 14), 415, 970
- Entry of the Virgin into the Temple/Presentation in the Temple (Eisodia, Hagia ton Hagion, November 21), 184, 224, 411, 693, 697, 741, 907, 1111, 1132, 1184, 1325, 1711, 1714
- Epiphany (Phota, Theophania, January 6), 105AB, 222, 224, 350, 380, 391, 394, 401, 414, 416, 534, 554, 697, 702, 741, 900, 907, 1277, 1326, 1327
- Exaltation of the Holy Cross (September 14), 105AB, 222, 224, 412, 689, 697, 741, 758, 906, 1009, 1066, 1181, 1320, 1321, 1322, 1326, 1351, 1714-15
- Forty Martyrs/Forty Saints (March 9), 111A, 116n. 23, 226, 402, 414, 481, 692, 747, 813, 915, 1007, 1064, 1144, 1703, 1707
- Holy Anargyroi (Sts. Kosmas and Damian, November 1, July 1), 413, 415, 761, 765, 907, 1292
- Holy Apostles (Sts. Peter and Paul, June 29), 110AB, 222, 386, 393, 396, 399, 412, 415, 599, 689, 691, 697, 742, 826, 907, 970, 1207, 1258, 1276, 1325, 1709
- Holy Father Pachomios (May 15), 415
- Holy Fathers [of Raithou] (January 14), 414
- Holy Innocents (hagia nepia, December 26), 1673, 1676n. 27
- Holy Maccabees (August 1), 411, 415
- Holy Twelve Apostles (June 30), 415, 689, 691, 697, 907, 1146
- Presentation of Christ in the Temple (Hypapante, February 2), 105AB, 224, 402, 414, 697, 744, 755, 765, 814, 907, 1709
- St. Ananias (October 1), 412
- St. Andrew the Apostle (November 30), 413, 907, 970
- St. Anthimos (September 3), 412
- St. Antony (January 17), 414
- St. Arethas (October 24), 413
- St. Athanasios [translation of relics of] (May 2), 414
- St. Barbara (December 4), 413
- St. Basianos (October 10), 1045, 1086, 1089n 31

GENERAL INDEX

feasts (cont.)

- St. Basil, martyr (November 28), 1673
- St. Basil the Great (January 1), 31, 391, 970
- St. Basil the Great, St. Gregory the Theologian, and St. [John] Chrysostom (January 30), 741-42
- St. Chariton (September 28), 412
- St. Clement of Ankyra (January 23), 414
- St. Clement of Rome and St. Peter (November 25), 413
- St. Cyprian (October 2), 412
- St. Demetrios (October 26), 413, 697, 907, 1660
- St. Dionysios (October 3), 412
- St. Ephraem (January 28), 414
- St. Euphemia (July 11 and September 16), 412, 415
- St. Eustathios (September 20), 412, 544
- St. Eustratios (December 13), 413
- St. George (April 23), 157, 414, 907
- St. Gregory of Armenia (September 30), 412
- St. Gregory the Theologian (Nazianzen, January 25), 414, 550, 907
- St. Helen (see below, Sts. Constantine and Helen)
- St. Ignatios (December 20), 413, 907
- St. James the brother of God (October 23), 413, 907
- St. James the son of Alphaios (October 9), 413
- St. James the son of Zebedee (April 30), 414, 907
- St. John Chrysostom (November 13), 413, 907
- St. John Chrysostom, deposition of his relics (January 27), 414
- St. John the Baptist and Forerunner (see above, Beheading of, Birth of, Commemoration of, and Discovery of the Head of)
- St. John the Merciful (November 12), 413
- St. John the Theologian (Evangelist, September 26, May 8), 412, 414, 906
- St. Kyriake (July 7), 318, 415
- St. Lazarus of Galesios, translation of his head (October 25), 1374
- St. Luke the Apostle (October 18), 413, 907
- St. Mamas (September 2), 412, 995
- St. Mark the Apostle (April 25), 414, 907
- St. Martin (April 13, September 20), 1672
- St. Mary Magdalene (July 22), 415
- St. Matthew the Apostle (November 16, August 9), 413, 415, 907
- St. Meletios of Antioch (February 12), 129
- St. Menas (October 11), 413
- St. Nicholas (December 6), 413, 804, 907, 1325, 1565, 1598, 1711, 1714
- St. Niketas (September 15), 412
- St. Panteleemon (July 27), 415, 907, 1673
- St. Paul the Confessor (November 7), 413
- St. Peter [the Hesychast] (November 25), 413
- St. Philip (November 14), 110AB, 396, 413, 631, 742, 907, 1710
- St. Prokopios (July 8), 415, 1672
- St. Sabas (December 5), 413
- St. Simon the Zealot (May 10), 414

GENERAL INDEX

feasts (cont.)

St. Stephen, deposition of his relics (August 2), 123, 415
St. Stephen the Younger (November 28), 1672
St. Symeon the Ancient (September 1), 412
St. Symeon the Receiver of God (February 3), 414, 814, 907
St. Symeon the Wonderworker (the Younger, May 24), 415, 907, 1709
St. Thekla (September 24), 412
St. Theodore the Commander (June 8), 415
St. Thomas the Apostle (October 3), 412, 907
St. Timothy (January 22), 414
St. Trypho (February 1), 414
Sts. Athanasios and Cyril (January 18), 414
Sts. Bartholomew and Barnabas the Apostles (June 14), 415, 907
Sts. Constantine and Helen (May 21), 415
Sts. Joachim and Anne (September 9), 412
Sts. Kyrikos and Iulitta (July 15), 415
Sts. Sergios and Bakchos (October 7), 412
Transfiguration (Metamorphosis, August 6), 105A, 350, 415, 640, 644, 697, 741, 755, 761, 765, 804, 1277 venerable chain of the Apostle Peter (January 16), 414 venerable girdle of the Mother of God (timia zone, August 31), 415 venerable robe of the Mother of God (timia esthes, July 2), 415, 907 Zachariah the Prophet (September 5), 412, and silence of (siope Zachariou, September 23), 412, 420n. 125 feasts (specific, movable): All Saints (Sunday of, Kyriake ton hagion panton, first Sunday after Pentecost), xxvi, 109AB, 226, 390, 391, 1326, 1700, 1709, 1712; Ascension (Analepsis), 103AB, 222, 394, 697, 917; Easter/Paschal feast, 98AB-100A, 103B, 109B, 235, 350, 390, 394, 491, 512, 534, 535, 599, 697, 741, 787, 843, 1261, 1272, 1586, 1599, 1601, 1700, 1712 (see also below, Radiant Sunday); Enkainia, 1268, 1282n. 11, 1380; Good/Holy Friday, 111B, 224, 391, 403, 481, 1705-6, 1708; Holy Saturday (Holy Easter Eve), 106B, 107AB, 111AB, 222, 226, 391, 394, 403, 481, 1698, 1706, 1708; Holy Thursday, 111AB, 114B, 115A, 222, 224, 226, 394, 403, 481, 652, 697, 702, 742, 762, 765, 767, 804, 1705, 1708; Low Sunday (first Sunday after Easter), 102B, 222, 390 (see also Sunday of Renovation); Mid-Pentecost, 394; Palm Sunday (Kyriake tes Baiophorou), 111A, 113A, 697, 704, 741, 747, 1326; Passover, 1354; Pentecost Sunday, 102B, 103AB, 104B, 222, 223, 388, 390, 394, 401, 534, 599, 697, 741, 917, 1325, 1564, 1712; Radiant Sunday (lamprophoros Kyriake, Easter Sunday), 99A, 101A, 1326, 1712; Resurrection (Anastasis), 98B, 390, 896, 1268, 1277 (see also above, Easter/Paschal Feast); St. Lazarus (Saturday before Palm Sunday), 111A, 116n. 22, 402, 965, 1327, 1328, 1380, 1708-9; St. Theodore (Saturday of the first week of Lent), [111A], [226], 401, 480, 499, 747, 813, 914, 1322, 1326, 1702, 1703, 1708; Saturday of Meatfare, 103B, 222 (see also Glossary); Saturday of Pentecost, 103B, 222; Saturday of Renovation (Saturday of Easter Week), 101AB, 221; Sunday of Orthodoxy (Kyriake tes Orthodoxias, first Sunday of Lent), 111A, 1326; Sunday of Renovation (diakainesimos, Nea Kyriake, Antipascha, first Sunday after Easter), 102A, 227 (see also above, Low Sunday) feasts (types of): afterfeasts (metheortoi), 105AB, 224, 413, 415, [481], 803, 813, 915, 918; of the angels, 1700; with closures, 414, 1268; dominical/feasts of the Lord (despotikai heortai), 140, 226, 315, 320, 350, 395, 399, 478, 482, 521, 535, 587, 689, 691, 741-42, 746, 747, 762, 814, 901,

GENERAL INDEX

feasts (cont.)

979, 1009, 1016, 1045, 1066, 1072, 1257, 1274, 1322, 1325, 1326, 1332, 1335, 1376, 1380, 1495, 1699, 1700, 1713-15 (see also Glossary); forefeasts (proeortia), 412, 413, 414, 415; inauguration of a chapel, 1376, 1380; major/great, 381, 399, 411, 1257, 1274, 1322, 1713-14; medium, 381, 399, 411, 412-15, 1713; minor, 381, 399-400, 411, 412-15, 1713-14; of the Mother of God, 399, 482, 696-97, 729, 755, 787, 794, 802, 804, 831, 1007, 1008, 1064, 1065, 1070, 1086, 1111, 1132, 1144, 1145, 1177, 1184, 1268, 1276, 1322, 1325-28, 1700, 1713, 1714; with octaves, 1325, 1327, 1700, 1714; of patron saints, 184, 482, 511, 521, 535, 640, 644, 654, 659, 696-97, 710, 803, 874, 896, 918, 1045, 1086, 1113, 1132, 1184, 1209, 1229, 1230, 1257, 1261, 1268, 1292, 1305, 1308, 1358, 1380, 1514, 1516, 1554-55, 1565, 1586, 1627, 1631, 1659; of other saints, 91; of patrons, 464, 467, 493, 1516, 1555, 1631-32, 1660; of the Twelve Apostles, 901, 1146, 1276, 1700, 1714 fellowships (adelphata), 309 and n. 25, 515, 551, 1491, 1557, 1587, 1600, 1628, 1648, 1652, 1661. See also monks (types of): external/non-resident (exomonitai) and internal/imposed (esomonitai) fennel. See drinks and beverages (specific) and supplies, medical fields (agroï): development of, 247, 264; irrigated, 1187; price of, 1187, 1188; purchase of, 233, 253; size of, 1187, 1188, 1190; speculative activity in, 233, 238; waterless, 1187, 1188. See also endowments (specific) fighting. See vices, monastic financial accounts: auditing of, 444, 574, 589-90, 641, 646, 657, 678; receipts for, 444, 574, 589, 678, 682, 985, 1003, 1060; reconciliation of, 1100, 1115, 1116, 1132, 1152, 1212, 1226; record-keeping for, see records; register of, 682, 1003, 1060, 1100, 1148, 1271-72, 1289, 1292 financial management: anticipated benefits of, 427, 978, 985, 1000, 1019, 1045, 1048, 1057, 1076; carelessness in condemned, 444, 485, 488, 515, 547-48, 589, 677, 792, 922, 997, 1055, 1149, 1587, 1607; difficulties in, 1514, 1562-63; disinterest in, 997, 1055, 1149, 1297-98; expertise in, 1211, 1224; of fiscal emergencies, 462, 488-89, 1099; honest and independent, 614, 863, 1100; interest in, 1488; procedural safeguards in, 444, 491, 590, 785, 792, 825, 842-43, 863, 962, 1003, 1060, 1100, 1152, 1489; review of, 301, 312, 344; superior's role in, see superiors, rights of fines. See punishments (specific kinds) and taxes and fiscal obligations (specific) fire. See calamities firewood. See fuels firmans. See legal documents (specific) first hour (prote). See hours, liturgical (specific) fisc. See imperial offices fish: mussels, 747, 1699, 1701; octopus, 485, 1110; oysters, 747, 1699, 1701; scallops (neura), 747, 776n. 51, 1701; shellfish, 480, 481, 691, 692, 700, 701, 813, 814, 914, 915, 1006, 1007,

GENERAL INDEX

1063, 1064, 1258, 1275, 1696, 1698, 1700, 1702, 1708 fishery. See endowments (specific) fishing: grounds (epochai), 769, 772; places for (opsarotopia), 525; pond (vivarion), 1279; rights over, 828 fishing boats (sandalia). See transportation systems flatulence. See illnesses and injuries (specific) flavorings: anise, 111A, 1701; cumin, 111A, 480, 747, 1144, 1145, 1198, 1204, 1698, 1701, 1708; fennel, 1198, 1204; honey, 532, 747, 761, 1145, 1598, 1708; sugar, 761. See also seasonings florilegia. See books (specific types) flour (wheat). See baking: flour for flowers: lilies (krina), silver gilt, 716; palm tree flower (halation), 901 fodder, requisition of. See taxes and fiscal obligations (specific) follis. See coinage food: benefactors' gifts of, 395, 396, 397, 480, 482, 1696, 1698–99, 1701, 1702–3, 1709–10, 1712–1713, 1715; brought to hospitalized monks, 981, 1017; communal provision of, xxxiii, 1210, 1222, 1342; complaints about, 17n. 25, 497, 696, 937, 1017, 1074, 1153, 1364–65; cost of, 1516, 1549, 1555; equality in, 152, 160, 175, 183, 445, 464, 490–91, 511, 516, 527, 614, 696, 733, 788, 822, 875, 924, 956, 962, 980, 1017, 1045, 1073, 1112, 1117, 1153, 1177, 1183, 1225, 1274, 1327, 1342, 1439, 1451, 1457, 1460, 1487, 1496, 1501, 1506, 1508, 1515, 1547, 1628, 1653; individual diets, 25, 27; inspection of by superior, 878, 921; must be tasted, 25; no special, 25, 1101; preparation of, 875, 944; purchase of, 1516, 1549; quantities and qualities of, 397–98, 1506, 1508, 1696–97; sharing of, 479, 689, 811, 909, 1094; should be easily procured, 25, 398, 1696; storage of in cells, 511, 527, 1342, 1364; supply and preparation of, 1261. See also foods (particular kinds) and foods (types of) foods (particular kinds): almaia, 110AB, 111AB, 116n. 20, 226, 398, 747, 762, 1144, 1702, 1704, 1705; almonds, 761, 825; barley meal, 762; barley water (chylos ptisanes), 762; bean flour (phabatinon aleuron), 762; beans, 110AB, 111AB, 226, 398, 759, 812, 814, 915, 1006, 1063, 1144, 1322, 1326, 1696, 1702–5, 1714; beets, 762; bran, 762; bread, 36, 92, 111A, 140, 227, 287, 396, 397, 398, 401, 480, 482, 495, 511, 527, 691, 693, 729, 733, 746, 752, 812, 814, 912, 916, 1006, 1063, 1065, 1118, 1146, 1156, 1326, 1585, 1599, 1609, 1631, 1632, 1660, 1697–1706, 1709, 1710, 1714, 1716; bread, dry (for penitents), 585; cheese, xxxi, xxxv, 109AB, 110AB, 111B, 226, 342, 395, 396, 399, 401, 416, 533–34, 691, 699, 747, 766, 767, 803, 826, 907, 917, 1006, 1008, 1063, 1065, 1145, 1146, 1258, 1275, 1320, 1324, 1334, 1696, 1698, 1699, 1700, 1701, 1706, 1709, 1712–16; chestnuts, 110AB, 226, 1702, 1705; chickpeas, 110A, 226, 398, 418n. 48, 762, 1696, 1702, 1705; dates (phoinikes), 762; deer marrow (myelos elaphon), 762; eggs, xxxi, 109AB, 110AB, 226, 395, 399, 401, 762, 907, 917, 1008, 1065, 1145, 1146, 1320, 1324, 1696, 1698–1700, 1706, 1709, 1712, 1713, 1716; figs, dry, 110AB, 398, 762, 1007, 1009, 1063, 1066, 1702–5, 1714;

GENERAL INDEX

fish, 92, 109AB, 110AB, 111B, 112AB, 140, 184, 226, 238, 287, 342, 395, 399, 480, 481, 482, 692, 693, 697, 700, 701, 733, 746, 752, 757, 803, 813, 814, 826, 827, 831, 915, 917, 965, 970, 1006, 1007, 1008, 1063, 1064, 1065, 1132, 1144, 1258, 1275, 1321, 1323, 1324–28, 1334, 1516, 1549, 1557, 1598, 1696, 1698–1702, 1706, 1708–16; fruits, 110A, 111A, 226, 286, 315, 319, 397, 398, 401, 403, 404, 459, 480, 481, 490, 691, 729, 746, 812, 814, 831, 912, 1006, 1007, 1063, 1064, 1065, 1144, 1145, 1146, 1322, 1464, 1471, 1661, 1696, 1699, 1700, 1702–11, 1713; grapes, 761, 1009, 1065, 1066, 1132, 1326, 1714; gruel (groute), 481, 501n. 22, 813, 915, 1144; “holy broth,” 826, 850n. 33, 1699; kollyba, 111A, 700, 742, 743, 759, 761, 765, 981, 1020, 1077, 1087, 1229, 1322, 1326, 1392, 1555, 1557, 1601, 1702, 1703 (see also Glossary); legumes (ospria), 109AB, 110AB, 111AB, 184, 226, 362, 366, 395, 399, 401, 402, 480, 481, 495, 691, 692, 699, 746, 759, 901, 1003, 1063, 1145, 1258, 1268, 1275, 1322, 1324, 1321, 1325, 1598, 1696, 1698–1706, 1708–10, 1712, 1714–15; legumes soaked in water, 747, 813, 814, 826, 900, 914, 1006, 1007, 1063, 1064, 1144; lentils, 398, 418n. 48, 762, 1696; meat, xxxi, 92, 342, 362, 366, 397, 626, 631, 640, 644, 1112, 1155, 1696; melons, 1009, 1066, 1714; milk, 1145, 1275; mussels, 747, 1699, 1701; nuts, 398, 1326, 1702, 1704; oats, 362, 363; olives, 93, 110A, 398, 1146; olives, black, 111A, 1006, 1063; olives, crushed, 762; olives, green (prophaia kokkoelaia), 111A, 116n. 25; olives, pickled (kolymbades), 762; olives, white, 111A, 1696, 1702–4, 1706, 1710; onions, 759; oysters, 747, 1699, 1701; pears (cooked), 110AB, 1702, 1705; peas, 759; plums, 762; pomegranates (roiai), 377, 425, 761; prunes, 110AB, 1702, 1705; raisins, 398, 762, 1696; rice, 398, 418n. 48, 761, 1696; scallops (neura), 747, 776n. 51, 1701; shellfish, 480, 481, 691, 692, 700, 701, 813, 814, 914, 915, 1006, 1007, 1063, 1064, 1258, 1275, 1696, 1698, 1700, 1702, 1708; soup of legumes (mageiria), 398, 399, 401, 402, 403, 418n. 49, 1698, 1705, 1708, 1709; squash, 1326, 1715; vegetables, 691, 729, 746, 759, 900, 914, 915, 1006, 1258, 1275, 1321, 1324, 1325, 1328, 1696, 1700, 1701, 1703, 1704, 1710, 1714; vegetables, boiled/cooked, 109AB, 110AB, 111A, 226, 395, 396, 398, 402, 901, 916, 1006, 1007, 1063, 1064, 1065, 1322, 1698, 1699, 1702, 1705, 1706, 1708–9, 1712–15; vegetables, fresh/raw, 398, 401, 403, 404, 480, 481, 691, 692, 693, 813, 1006, 1007, 1063, 1064, 1065, 1145, 1322, 1326, 1702, 1704–6, 1708, 1710; vetches (orobinos), 762; walnuts, 1007, 1063. See also drinks and beverages (specific); flavorings; and seasonings foods (types of): cooked, 986, 1004, 1112; dry (uncooked) (xerophagia), 110A, 111A, 140, 226, 396, 397, 399, 401, 570, 591, 1006, 1063, 1065, 1137, 1157, 1322, 1342, 1363, 1497, 1598, 1699, 1661, 1700, 1701–5, 1709–11, 1713; favorite, 1628, 1653; harmful, 27; leftover, 92, 109AB, 226, 481, 735, 746, 794, 801, 986, 1004, 1521, 1549, 1697, 1700, 1708, 1712; salty, 1628, 1653; sweet, 1628, 1653

footstools. See furniture footwear (hypodysis): equality in, 491, 696, 822, 924; manufacture of, 1463, 1472; old to be donated, 495; provision of to monks, 92, 115AB, 491, 822, 924, 966, 1013, 1070, 1152, 1225, 1584, 1600; provision of to nuns, 696, 1258, 1276, 1557; provision of to solitaries, 1210, 1227; purchase of, 1507, 1509; return and repair of, 1276, 1516, 1551; storage of, 462, 491 footwear (specific): boots (kalegia), 228, 750, 1584, 1600, (mouzakia), 490, (tzangia), 826; leggings (kaltsai), 115A, (toubia), 826; long-legged boots (makrotzangia), 115AB; sandals (sandalia), 534, (podorgyroi), 406; shoes (kalegia), 115B, (blautai), 1276, (hypodemata), 228, 490, 534, 1510, (papoutsia), 1584, 1600; shoes for church, 836; shoes for winter (ortaria), 826, 850n. 31; short-legged boots (kondotzangia), 115AB ford (perama). See endowments (specific)

GENERAL INDEX

forefeasts. See feasts (types of) forts (kastra) and fortifications: compulsory provisioning of, 366; construction of, 524, 584, 639, 783, 1303, 1412, 1414; donation of, 524, 525, 526, 542, 770, 771; financing of, 1409, 1410; reasons for, 1492 forts and fortifications (specific): Kosmosoteira, 783, 795, 846; Koutloumousi, 1410, 1414, 1415, 1416, 1419, 1420, 1422; Lakedaimon, 324; Menoikeion, 1585, 1609; Panion, 769; Patmos, 584; Petritzos, 519; Stenimachos, 524; Zichna, 1579 forts and fortifications (types of): citadel, 783; fortress, 1585, 1609; forts (kastra), 1411, 1417, 1422; towers, 52, 126, 127, 628, 630, 631, 1303, 1410, 1419, 1460, 1609, 1637, 1639; town, 1579; walls, 524, 584, 1303, 1417, 1419 founders (ktetores, ktitores): documents authored by, 510, 520, 558n. 3; entitlement to status of, 1375, 1410, 1512, 1518, 1556, 1585, 1606; justification for rights of, 1466, 1473; legal representation by, 975; portraits of, 509, 791, 835, 1512, 1521n. 3; title of, 121, 136, 207, 455, 1630, 1636. See also patrons founders (types of): ancient/original/first, 464, 499, 867, 1044, 1047, 1088, 1287, 1288, 1289, 1630; heavenly, 1517, 1527, 1629, 1662; new, 508, 568, 1044, 1339, 1412, 1423, 1520, 1568; second, 464, 499, 872, 878, 927-28, 1288, 1303, 1331, 1404; "true," 1411, 1421 fountain (in the atrium). See churches (parts of) fragrances: aloes, 697, 741, 1277; rose essence, 697. See also incense freedom (eleutheria): institutional, 1332, 1335; from interference by ecclesiastical officials, 185, 324, 335, 338, 341, 344, 365, 520, 527, 543, 586, 667, 773, 804, 815, 918, 957, 960, 961, 963, 999, 1056, 1130, 1184, 1200, 1249, 1265, 1528, 1595; from interference by imperial government, 199, 337, 338, 341, 344, 365, 520, 527, 543, 586, 667, 773, 804, 815, 918, 960, 999, 1056, 1184, 1265, 1595. See also institutional independence and self-governance frescos. See decorations friends: correspondence with, 459, 490; entertainment of, 512, 534, 1332, 1335, 1436, 1439 friendships: forbidden, 1496, 1628, 1643; private, 1536, 1643, 1652; special, see vices, monastic fuels: charcoal, 1176, 1180; coal, 762; firewood, 240, 247, 761, 762, 764, 830; lamp oil, 531, 696, 761, 827 fundraising schemes, 448, 614-15. See also commerce funds, private (pekoulia). See private property funerals: canon for, 494, 670; provisions for, 641, 646, 762, 789, 823; service books for, 1185, 1672. See also burial funerary chapels. See convents (parts of) and monasteries (parts of) furniture: beds (klinai, krabbatoi), 35, 63, 516, 549, 729, 745, 1254, 1364; bells, 225; cabinets (armaria), 830, 984, 1002, 1047, 1059; cash/money boxes (kibotia), 657, 682, 792, 825, 984, 1002, 1060, 1115, 1151, 1152; clocks, water (clepsydra), xxiii, 98AB, 221, 223; document boxes, xxxi, 1036, 1260, 1261, 1267, 1272; footstools, 214, 225; hospital beds, 1281; seat, wooden (xylosellion), 762; storage chests, 1186; stoves, 516, 549; table bell (kontion, kondy), 1186, 1192n. 34; tables (akoubitōa), 109AB, (trapezia), 1118, 1156, 1186, 1496, 1501

GENERAL INDEX

gammation (gamma-shaped ornament). See book covers, decoration of and Glossary gardeners. See laborers, monastic (specific) gardens: in convents, see convents (parts of); as endowment, see endowments (specific); entertainment in, 1653; garden plots, 1188; inalienability of, see inalienability; in monasteries, see monasteries (parts of); vegetable gardens, 645, 1712 gate (pyle; Lat.: porta). See churches (parts of); convents (parts of); and monasteries (parts of) gatekeeper. See monastic officials (specific) gathering, idle. See vices, monastic gazing (at each other's face). See vices, monastic gellion. See coinage

genuflections (gonyklisiai). See ritual observances

Georgian. See languages gephyrosis (building of bridges). See taxes and fiscal obligations (specific) gerokomeion. See old age homes gerokomites. See old age homes: residents in Gerontikon. See books, ascetic and patristic gerotrophos (tender of the old). See monastic officials (specific) gifts and benefactions: acceptability of, 26-27, 27n. 23, 40, 49, 303, 445, 1262; cancellation of, 282, 288; continuing obligation to honor, 1208, 1232; donation or reception of, 1368; as entrance gifts, see entrance gifts/offerings; irrevocability of, see inalienability. See also donations, pious and endowments gifts and benefactions (types of): for admissions (apotage), see entrance gifts/offerings (types of);

GENERAL INDEX

for appointments (kaniskia), 302, 314, 315, 319, 1213, 1218, 1486, 1498, 1501; to the eparch of CP, 331, 352; of fish, 481, 482, 1696, 1709, 1710; of other food, 1515, 1548. See also endowments (specific) girls (reared in convent), xix, 671, 1257, 1263, 1271, 1464, 1470, 1514, 1520, 1521, 1564, 1568 glass (lamp). See lighting devices (specific) godfathers. See relationships: spiritual gold. See precious metals (specific) gonyklisia (genuflections). See ritual observances gorgoepekoos. See monasteries (specific) and Glossary

Gospels. See books, liturgical and books, New Testament governor (toparches). See imperial officials (specific) governors (military) (strategoï). See imperial officials (specific): strategos graffiti. See inscriptions grain (sitos): blessing of, 939; charitable distribution of, 697, 698, 701, 702; compulsory purchase of, 362, 366; donation of, 261; export of, 567; speculation in condemned, 39; used to make bread, 1588-89, 1609; yearly allowance of, 699, 763, 764, 765 grain (specific kinds), 763, 764, 765; barley (krithe), 286, 340, 362, 366, 761, 764, 1272, 1281, 1292; barley, husked (gymnokrithon), 762; millet (kenchrion), 762; rice, 398, 418n. 48, 761, 1696; spelt (zeai), 761. See also wheat grammistos (shown in profile). See icons (types of) grandfathers. See family members (specific) grandmothers. See family members (specific) graptai. See monastic officials (specific) and Glossary graves. See burial sites gravestone. See monasteries (parts of) Great Canon. See hymns (specific) and vigils (specific) grief. See vices, monastic griffins. See cloths, liturgical (types of) and textiles

GENERAL INDEX

grooms. See professions and trades

grosso. See coinage grotto. See monasteries (parts of) groute (gruel). See foods (particular kinds) grudges, bearing of. See vices, monastic grumbling. See vices, monastic guardians: ephors, 1239, 1250; epitropoi, 1211, 1212, 1233; heavenly, 1517, 1527; lay, 1512, 1580; patriarchal, 1211, 1212, 1233; phrontistai, 298, 1097; prostates, 1259, 1266, 1629; of widows, 1629, 1657. See also protectors and the protectorate guestmaster. See monastic officials (specific) guesthouses. See hospices and hostels guests and visitors: ban on overnight stays of, 1259, 1270; entertainment of, xxxv, 303, 432, 905, 1345, 1346, 1353, 1466, 1477, 1631, 1653, 1715; escaping from, 149; at feasts and commemorations, 1113, 1343, 1366; feeding of, xxxv, 342, 432, 1653, 1696; lodging of, 654, 679; meeting with, 1258, 1270, 1464, 1471. See also hospitality

Hagia. See Eucharist, Holy

hagiogeorgaton. See coinage hagiography: citation of in documents, 446, 575; importance of documents for, 20; literature of, xxxii, xxxvi, 14; lost, 873; reference to documents in, 206, 213; source of documents, 44, 45, 90, 144, 151, 296, 1296; study of, 564, 1303, 1515, 1531, 1560, 1569n. 17. See also books, hagiography and miracles

hagiography (specific texts). See books, hagiography and miracles hagiozomion (holy broth). See foods (particular kinds) hair, facial, as mark of maturity, xxii. See also youths: “beardless” haircuts, xxii, xxvii, 1011, 1158. See also tonsure halation (palm-tree flower). See flowers hamlets (agridia). See rural settlements handicrafts and handiwork: assignment of monks to, 381, 408–9, 447; given as gifts to children and relatives, 1464, 1471; monastery’s entitlement to, 1342, 1365; not for gain, 447, 569, 590,

GENERAL INDEX

591, 1365; practiced by monks and nuns, xxvi, 161, 347, 381, 408, 409, 447, 492, 671, 684, 704, 817, 925, 965, 1133, 1156, 1227, 1328, 1341-42, 1357, 1365, 1463, 1464, 1471, 1514, 1551; private practice of prohibited, 170, 511, 1111, 1156, 1385, 1387, 1514, 1542; produced for children and relatives, 1463, 1471; profiteering in banned, 1342, 1365, 1385, 1387; prohibited in church, 1514, 1540-41; sale of, 1463, 1471; supplies of materials for, see supplies, storeroom handicrafts and handiwork (specific): baskets (margounia), 1156; monks' habits, 1472; nuns' habits, 1472, 1551; plaited work (ploke), 1162; shoes, 1472. See also professions and trades harvests, poor. See calamities

hay. See supplies, stabling headless ones (akephaloi, Monophysites). See dissidents, religious healing. See medicine and medical assistance and supernatural phenomena hegoumene/hegoumenos. See superiors

Heirmologion. See books, liturgical hekte hora (sixth hour). See hours, liturgical (specific) heliakon/heliakos. See buildings, secular (parts of) Heortologion. See books, liturgical hepsema (must concentrate). See supplies, medical heptapappadon (sacrament of unction). See sacraments and sacramental life and unction heresy. See crimes hermitage (enkleistra). See monasteries (types of) heroon. See monasteries (parts of) and Glossary hesperinos (vespers). See hours, liturgical (specific) hesychast controversy. See religious controversies hesychasts and hesychastic monasticism, xvi, xxxiii, 1096, 1257, 1269, 1297, 1313, 1331, 1433, 1455, 1462

Hetoimasia. See icons (specific)

Hexameros. See books, ascetic and patristic: Basil of Caesarea and John Chrysostom hexagion (exagion). See measures (surface and weight)

GENERAL INDEX

hexapsalmos (Six Psalms). See psalms (specific) hexapteryga. See sacred vessels (specific kinds) and Glossary hiera nosos (leprosy). See illnesses and injuries (specific) hieromonachos (ordained monk). See monks (types of) highways. See transportation systems hilasterion (sanctuary). See churches (parts of) himation (tunic). See clothing (articles of) hippodromon, epi ton (judge). See imperial officials (specific) hippodromou, epi tou (judge). See imperial officials (specific) hoarding. See vices, monastic

Hodegetria. See icons (specific) and Glossary hodostrōsis (paving of roads). See taxes and fiscal obligations (specific)

Holies. See Eucharist, Holy

holmos (mortar). See supplies, medical holokotinon. See coinage

Holy Cross, veneration of, 112, 215, 227. See also churches and chapels (monastic); fasts (specific); feasts (specific, fixed); and monasteries (specific) homosexuality and homoerotic associations. See vices, monastic honey (meli). See flavorings and supplies, medical honor, seat of, claiming. See vices, monastic horai. See hours, liturgical hōraia pyle (sanctuary door). See churches (parts of) hōreiarīos. See imperial officials (specific) hōreiarīos (provisioner). See monastic officials (specific)

Horologion. See books, liturgical

GENERAL INDEX

hospices (xenodocheia): attendants in, 426; replacement of, 428, 437; support of, xxxv, 426, 516, 549-50, 641, 644; unification (henosis) with prohibited, 1516, 1528 hospices (specific): Evergetis, 495-96; Galesios, 158; Lavra, 225, 260; Machairas, 1102, 1118, 1156; Marmarion (Petritzonitissa), 522, 549-50; of Petritzonitissa, 516; Roidion, 303, 309, 311, 426, 428, 430, 432, 434, 435-36, 437; St. Nicholas (Petritzonitissa, Prilonkos), 522, 550; San Salvatore (Messina), 615, 641, 644, 645; Stenimachos, 522, 549; Stoudios, 108AB hospital supplies. See supplies, medical hospitality: to Franks, 432; to pilgrims, 207, 343, 426, 427, 432, 1118, 1314, 1317, 1339; to officials and dignitaries, 432, 1117, 1118, 1156, 1314, 1477; to Venetian officials, 1466, 1472, 1477; to visiting friends, 534; to visiting monks, 158, 432, 1156, 1628, 1650; to poor, 495, 516, 549, 575, 592, 1156, 1317; to sick, 432, 495, 534, 549, 879, 936; to shipwrecked, 592; to strangers, 158, 186, 278, 1184, 1450, 1650; to travelers, 260, 278, 516, 549, 791, 793, 827, 848, 868, 879, 936; limits on, 432, 534, 1118, 1156, 1317, 1650; obligations of, 34, 39, 158, 448; risks of, 433, 1628, 1650; upgrading of, 516, 550. See also guests and visitors hospitals and infirmaries (nosokomeia, xenones): (lay), patronized by monks, 28, 981, 986, 1017, 1046, 1074; (monastic), clothing of, 1281; supplies of, see supplies, medical; support of, xxxv, 641, 644, 645, 1263, 1279-80; unification (henosis) with prohibited, 1239, 1249 hospitals and infirmaries (parts of): bakery, 760; bath, 760; beds, 460, 497, 876, 937, 1281; cemetery, 766; church for men, 734, 761, church for women, 761; dining room, 762; lavatories (chreiai), 761; mill, 759, 760, 764; storehouse, 1259, 1275; wards (ordinoi), xxvii, 734, 746, 757, 762, 764; wards for men, 734, 757; wards for women, 734, 757, 760, 762 hospitals and infirmaries (specific): Evergetis (CP), 448, 460, 465, 497, 615, 876; Lips (CP), 1102, 1254, 1256, 1263, 1265, 1275, 1279, 1280, 1281; Ospedale Grande (Palermo), 624; Pachomian (Egypt), 34; Phoberos, 876, 937; San Salvatore (Messina), 615, 641, 644, 645; unnamed katagoge (Anastasis[?], CP), 1374. See also old age homes (specific) and Pantokrator hospital (CP) hospitals and infirmaries, staff of: listing of, 617; obligations of, 732; promotion of, 760; salaries of, see salaries hospitals and infirmaries, staff of (specific): attendants (optiones), 757, 763, 765, 1263, 1281; auxiliary assistants (perissoi hypourgoi, m.; perissai hypourgissai, f.), 757, 758, 760, 763, 765; bakers, 759, 764; bloodletter (phlebotomos), 1263, 1281; caterer (opsoniator), 759, 764; cellarer, 734, 761, 763; certified assistants (embathmoi hypourgoi, m.; embathmoi hypourgissai, f.), 757, 758, 759, 763, 765; cooks, 759, 764, 1263, 1281; cooper (kaddaras), see below, coppersmith; coppersmith, 765, 765; doctor treating fractures (klasmatikos), 830; doctors (iatroi, m.; iatrainai, f.), xix, 460, 497, 653, 696, 730, 734, 745, 757, 758, 759, 760, 763, 765, 789, 794-95, 825, 830, 937, 1276, 1281, 1549; doorkeeper, 759, 764; drain cleaner (kanaloplytes), 759, 764; druggists (pementarioi), 734, 759, 763, 1263, 1281; druggists, auxiliary, 759, 763; druggists, certified, 759, 763; gatekeeper, 759, 764; groom (strator), 759, 764; hernia doctor (kelotomos), 764, 765; infirmarian (nosokomos), 734, 758, 760, 761, 763, 765; laundress, 1263, 1281; man who heats water (lebetarios), 759, 764; miller, 759, 764; nurse, 1281; orderlies (hyperetai, m.; hyperetriai, f.), 460, 497, 757, 759, 760, 761, 763, 787, 826, 831; pharmacist, chief (epistekon), 734, 759, 763,

GENERAL INDEX

1281; physicians (diaitetikoí iatroí), 757, 763; priests, 734, 1281; primikerioi, 757, 758, 762-63; protomenítai, 757, 763, 765; protos, 743; servants, 788, 826, 1263, 1281; sharpener (akonetes), 764; steward, 768; superintendent (meizoteros), 734, 758, 760, 761, 762, 763; surgeons (traumatikoi iatroi), 734, 757, 763; surgeons, assistant, 763; teacher of medicine, 734, 757, 765; undertakers (nekrothaptai), 759, 764; ward watchers (exkoubitores), 757, 759, 765; washerwomen (saponistriai), 759, 764. See Glossary for Greek terms hostels: of Attaleiates (Rhaidestos), 343; of Kottabos, 768; of Kypsella, 770; of Nestongos, 769; of Pakourianos (Bačkovo), xxxv, 311 hours (horai), daily: for awakening, 98B, 787, 828; for eating, 112AB, 386, 393, 399, 403, 404, 482, 693, 814, 915, 916, 917, 1008, 1064, 1146; for work, 112B, 381, 408 hours, daily (specific):

first hour (of the day, sunrise): breaking fasting at, 916; brings light, 473, 686, 894, 1026, 1082, 1131; confession at end of, 897; departure for cells or work at end of, 474, 979, 1026, 1132; genuflection to superior at end of, 808, 1026, 1027, 1082, 1083; singing of psalms at, 473. See also hours, liturgical (specific): first hour second hour (of the day, approximately 8:00 a.m.): procession at, 101A third hour (of the day, approximately 9:00 a.m.): assembly in narthex at, 1015, 1072, 1133; gift of Holy Spirit occurred at, 917; liturgy at, 109AB, 393; reminder of death at, 109AB; work until, 408. See also hours, liturgical (specific): third hour fourth hour (of the day, approximately 10:00 a.m.): liturgy at, 393; meal after, 399; meal at, 393

fifth hour (of the day, approximately 11:00 a.m.): liturgy at, 393; meal at, 393, 399

sixth hour (of the day, approximately noon): akedia occurring at, 890; assembly in narthex at, 1015, 1072; conclusion of liturgy at, 393; consumption of blessed bread at, 394; hunger at, 890; liturgy at, 108AB-109AB, 405, 1133; meal at, 109AB, 110AB, 393, 399; meal during, 112AB; striking of semantron at, 1015; work until, 113AB, 408. See also hours, liturgical (specific): sixth hour seventh hour (of the day, approximately 1:00 p.m.): meal at, 482, 693, 814, 917, 1008, 1064, 1146; rest until, 113B; return to work at, 112A eighth hour (of the day, approximately 2:00 p.m.): return to work at, 112B ninth hour (of the day, approximately 3:00 p.m.): assembly in narthex at, 1027; confession to superior during, 1135; dismissal to cells after, 1135; fasting until, 396, 900; meal at, 110AB, 386, 393, 394, 396, 397, 399, 401, 416, 482, 693, 814, 900, 917, 1008, 1065; meal concludes at, 1135; rest until, 113A; striking of semantron at, 1027; work until, 112AB. See also hours, liturgical (specific): ninth hour eleventh hour (of the day, approximately 5:00 p.m.): meal at, 386; office of lamplighting at, 111AB

GENERAL INDEX

third hour (of the night, approximately 9:00 p.m.): meal at, 403, 404 fourth hour (of the night, approximately 10:00 p.m.): completion of offices at, 404 sixth hour (of the night, approximately midnight): meal at, 915 seventh hour (of the night, approximately 1:00 a.m.): rise from bed at, 98B ninth hour (of the night, approximately 3:00 a.m.): rise from bed at, 98A

See also watches (of the night) hours, liturgical: absence from, 1009, 1066, 1137, 1473; attendance of, 787, 835, 1009, 1066, 1137, 1443, 1449, 1501; dietary concessions for, xxvii, 1702; exemption from attendance at, 787, 835, 978, 1009, 1111, 1137, 1463, 1473; importance of, 978-79, 1109, 1496, 1501; neglect of, 1457, 1460; omission of, 102B, 103AB, 104B, 109AB, 110AB, 112AB, 222, 223, 1709, 1713; participation by laymen in, 1313, 1316, 1376, 1380; performance and regulation of, xxv, 24, 62, 91, 92, 98AB-105AB, 106AB, 112AB, 170, 221-24, 296, 327, 349, 381, 385-90, 412, 442, 458-59, 473-76, 482, 569, 586-87, 652, 686-87, 738-39, 787, 805-8, 874, 894-98, 964, 978, 980, 987, 1006, 1015, 1072, 1082-84, 1111, 1132-33, 1135-36, 1177, 1256, 1267, 1332, 1334-35, 1341, 1354, 1363, 1376, 1380, 1435, 1443, 1449, 1514, 1547, 1566, 1583, 1601, 1660; proper deportment during performance of, 1496, 1501; punishment for failure to attend, 63, 978, 1009, 1066, 1137, 1298, 1463, 1473; symbolism of, 177; synchronized performance of, 1376, 1380 hours, liturgical (specific):

first hour (prote hora, prime): mesoria of, 687; performance of, 92, 104A, 106B, 107B, 112AB, 113A, 177, 223, 224, 227, 389, 473-74, 686, 687, 805-8, 894, 896, 897, 979, 1026, 1027, 1082, 1083, 1114, 1133, 1334 third hour (trite hora, terce): mesoria of, 687; performance of, 92, 106B, 109AB, 177, 223, 224, 386, 394, 399, 408, 474, 686, 687, 743, 806, 895, 978, 1015, 1027, 1072, 1083, 1133, 1267, 1334

sixth hour (hekte hora, sext): mesoria of, 687; performance of, 92, 106B, 109AB, 110AB, 113AB, 177, 223, 224, 386, 394, 408, 474, 686, 687, 743, 806, 895, 978, 1015, 1027, 1072, 1083, 1133, 1267, 1334; and timing of meal, 393, 1713

ninth hour (enate hora, none): mesoria of, 688; performance of, 92, 104A, 106B, 108AB, 112AB, 113A, 177, 223, 224, 386, 405, 475, 688, 743, 807, 814, 895, 896, 897, 1008, 1027, 1083, 1135, 1334, 1475, 1501; and timing of meal, 394, 396, 399, 400, 401, 416, 482, 744, 881, 900, 1008, 1083, 1135 1711-13, 1715

compline (apodeipnon): performance of, 92, 101AB, 102B, 104AB, 106B, 107AB, 221, 222, 223, 227, 385, 386, 388, 390, 475, 476, 536, 688, 746, 807, 897, 1027, 1083, 1115, 1135, 1155, 1267, 1326, 1501, 1607; and timing of confession, 459, 476 lamplighting (lychnikon), office of: performance of, 100AB, 101A, 102AB, 104B, 105AB, 106B, 108AB, 111AB, 112AB, 221, 223, 227, 385, 386, 591, 700, 743, 745, 746, 896, 1027, 1083;

GENERAL INDEX

and timing of meal, 386, 746, 1711. See also Glossary

matins (orthros): on fast days, 482, 693, 814, 917, 1008, 1065, 1711; performance of, 62, 92, 99AB, 100A, 102AB, 104AB, 105AB, 106AB, 107AB, 176-77, 221, 222, 223, 224, 227, 385, 387, 388, 389, 390, 416, 473, 476, 532, 536, 537, 544, 686, 688, 689, 693, 698, 700, 738, 740, 741, 743, 756, 761, 804, 805, 807, 827, 831, 843, 894, 897, 898, 1021, 1026, 1082, 1083, 1087, 1132, 1137, 1155, 1163, 1277, 1334, 1335, 1355, 1501; and timing of confession, 459, 476

mesoria: in cells, 1133; performance of, 177, 385, 386, 687, 688, 895, 1133, 1135, 1661; at vespers, 1661, 1711; See also Glossary midnight office (mesonyktikon), 92, 385, 387, 388, 390, 476, 688, 739, 808, 1027, 1083, 1136, 1267, 1335, 1341, 1362-63, 1501; sung in cells, xxvi, 898 night office (pannychis), 222, 277, 475, 494, 688, 700, 743, 756, 766, 807, 808, 897, 928, 1087, 1163, 1457, 1460. See also Glossary vespers (hesperinos): outdoor procession before, 215, 227; performance of, 92, 221, 223, 385, 416, 475, 536, 688, 698, 700, 740, 741, 743, 756, 761, 766, 803, 804, 807, 831, 839, 897, 1135, 1155, 1163, 1267, 1475, 1501, 1601, 1661; timing of, 62, 226, 227, 475, 897, 1027, 1083, 1087, 1277, 1334, 1335, 1355, 1706; and timing of meal, 111AB, 226, 397, 402, 403-4, 481, 693, 747, 1007, 1064, 1699, 1706, 1708, 1711, 1712

housemaster (oikokyrios; superior of kellion). See monastic officials (specific) humility. See virtues, monastic hunger. See illnesses and injuries (specific) husbands. See family members (specific) hydrorosaton (rose water). See supplies, medical hyelia (glass jewels). See crosses (types of) and icons (types of) hyelion (small glass lamp). See lighting devices (specific) hylographia (painting on wood). See icons (types of) hymnody: assignments to, 1095, 1486; for the departed, 93, 103B; excessive variety in, 1463, 1474; importance of, 828, 1096; neglect of, 787, 828; regulations for, xxv, 510, 531, 536, 569, 586-87, 787, 800, 828, 1205; uninterrupted performance of, 447, 531, 569 hymns (specific): Akathistos, 226, 1144, 1661; alleluia (on fast days), 482, 693, 814, 897, 917, 1008, 1065; canons, 63, 99B, 102AB, 105AB, 113AB, 222, 224, 1660-61; canon of the cross, 111A, 116n. 21; canon for the dead, 103AB, 222, 1020, 1046, 1077, 1229, 1319; canon of Easter, 1475; canons of the Mother of God, 386, 1335, 1479, 1660; epitaphios hymn, 789, 823, 840; eulogetaria, 1335, 1336n. 6; exaposteilaria, 103B, 105AB, 222; funeral canon, 494, 670; Great Canon, 111A, 226, 402, 480, 689, 691, 1006, 1063, 1144, 1322, 1328, 1708; hypakoe, 470; inter-

GENERAL INDEX

cessory canon, 803; kathismata, 1205; kontakion, 99A, 221, 388; lauds (ainoi), 106B, 113AB, 1475; ode, 64, 99A, 107AB, 221, 385, 1087, 1155, 1463, 1474; oikos, 388; prosomoia, 1475; stichera, 102A, 103AB, 385, 388, 389, 390, 391, 1380; stichera of the Crucifixion, 103A, idiomela, 388; stichera of the Resurrection, 106B, stichera of the Saints, 223, 908; theotokion, 156, 739, 801, 849; trinitarian canon, 386, 388; triadion, 103A, 104A, 106B, 224; trisagion, 101AB, 103A, 106B, 107AB, 176, 221, 222, 385, 386, 387, 389, 473, 474, 476, 689, 801, 805, 806, 808, 1027, 1083, 1114, 1116, 1133, 1135, 1137, 1149, 1335; troparion, 64, 98A, 99B, 102A, 105AB, 113B, 115A, 221, 222, 387, 388, 389, 674, 687, 689, 739, 808, 1026, 1053, 1082, 1083, 1087, 1136; of vigil service, 1376, 1380. See also Glossary for Greek terms hypakoe. See hymns (specific) hyperpyron. See coinage hyperpyros litra. See coinage hypertimon. See taxes and fiscal obligations (specific) hypertimos. See titles and dignities hypodiakonos (subdeacon). See ecclesiastical officials (specific) hypokamison (undergarment/undershirt). See clothing (articles of) hypomanika (cuffs). See cloths, liturgical (specific) hypomnema. See memoranda, official hypotyposis (Rule). See monastic foundation documents, (4) Studios, (11) Ath. Rule, (24) Christodoulos, (30) Phoberos, (43) Kasoulon, (52) Choumnos, and (55) Athanasios I hypourgos, m.; hypourgissa, f. (assistant). See hospitals and infirmaries, staff of (specific); monks (types of); nuns (types of); and servants, domestic iatros diaitetikos (physician). See hospitals and infirmaries, staff of (specific) iatros klasmatikos (doctor [having experience with] fractures). See hospitals and infirmaries, staff of (specific) iatros traumatikos (surgeon). See hospitals and infirmaries, staff of (specific)

Iconoclastic controversy. See religious controversies iconostasis (eikonostasion), in hospital ward, 831 icons: appeal to for financial support, 1375, 1379; collections of, 568, 725, 1456; donation of, 144, 455, 473, 515, 526; inalienability of, see inalienability; list of, 574, 596; owned by monks,

GENERAL INDEX

152, 156, 170, 176; parading of, 726; patronal, 462, 491, 654, 710; pilgrimages to see, 727; protection of, 1345, 1355; reception of pastoral staff from, xxx, 752, 967; recorded in inventories, see inventories (types of); repository for, 726, 727; restoration of, 791, 845, 887; survival of, 869n. 11; use in installation of officials, 1116, 1149, 1261, 1273; veneration (proskynesis) of, 357, 444, 654, 696, 698, 710, 741, 753, 756, 802, 805, 1229, 1674 icons (specific): Annunciation, 715; Archangels, 1186; Ascension, 1671; Baptism of Christ, 715; Birth of the Mother of God, 715; Christ, 462, 491, 526, 738, 802, 805, 839, 877, 925, 1149, 1186, 1379; Christ (in chapel of St. Lazarus, Anastasis monastery, CP), 1375, 1379; Christ (in convent of Christ Philanthropos, CP), 1383; Christ the All-Merciful (Panoiktirmon), 357; Christ Antiphonetes, 715; Christ appearing to the Marys, 754; [Christ] greeting [the Marys] (to chairete), 714; Christ and Mother of God, 715; Christ, Mother of God, and Archangel Michael, 596; Christ and Sts. Peter and Paul, 1671; Christ Pantokrator, 739, 740, 741, 752, 754; Christ the Savior, 357, 741, 756, 1671; Crucifixion, 552, 714, 715, 740, 741, 754, 1671; Crucifixion with St. John the Theologian (Evangelist), 596; Deesis, 357, 1671; Descent from the Cross, 714; Dormition, 715, 740, 1186, 1393, 1562; Ecumenical councils, 740; Emmanuel the Savior, 1671; Entombment, 714; Entrance into the Holy of Holies (Presentation of the Virgin in the Temple), 1671; Evangelists, 714; Feasts of the Lord, 596; Forty Martyrs, 715, 1671; Hetoimasia, 357 (see also Glossary); Holy Anargyroi, 357, 1671; [Holy] Sepulcher, 1186, 1192n. 31; Incorporal, see below; St. Michael; Last Supper, 740, 741; Military Saints, 1671; Mother of God, 357, 462, 491, 552, 714, 1150, 1261, 1273, 1561, 1562, 1567, 1671, 1676n. 16; Mother of God Acheiropoietos, 1237, 1248; Mother of God with Child, 357, 715, 1671; Mother of God Hodegetria, 726, 756; Mother of God the Intercessor (presbeia), 1671; Mother of God Kecharitomene, 654, 710; Mother of God Kosmosoteira, 798, 801, 802, 805, 827, 828, 830, 839; Mother of God the Merciful (Eleousa), 753, 754, 755, 1671; Nativity of Christ, 715, 1186, 1626, 1632n. 2, 1671; Presentation of Christ in the Temple, 715; Prophet Daniel, 715; Resurrection, 714, 740, 741, 754, 1671; St. Akindynos, 357; St. Artemios, 357; St. Auxentios with St. Stephen the Younger, 1671; St. Basil, 715; St. Blasios, see below; St. Eleutherios, St. John Chrysostom, and St. Blasios); St. Catherine, 357; St. Demetrios, 714, 725, 726, 1671; St. Eleutherios, St. John Chrysostom, and St. Blasios, 1671; St. Eupraxia, 715; St. George, 357, 536, 552, 1186; St. Helen, see below; Sts. Constantine and Helen; St. Ismael, see below; St. Manuel, St. Sabel and St. Ismael); St. John Chrysostom, 714, 715, 1671; St. John the Forerunner and Baptist, 357, 536, 754, 873, 877, 887, 925, 1393, 1671; St. John the Theologian (Evangelist), 714, 715; St. Loukilianos, 357; St. Manuel, St. Sabel, and St. Ismael, 1671, 1676n. 17; St. Mary Magdalene, 714; St. Menas, 1671; St. Methodios, 357; St. Michael the Archangel, 357, 756, 1186, 1561; St. Nicholas, 357, 714, 1671; St. Onouphrios, 1562; St. Panteleemon, 357; St. Paul, 714; St. Peter, 714, 1671; St. Sabel, see under; St. Manuel, St. Sabel, and St. Ismael); St. Stephen, 714; St. Stephen the Younger, see above, St. Auxentios with St. Stephen the Younger); St. Theodore, 357, 552; Sts. Constantine and Helen, 1671; Sts. Kosmas and Damian, see above, Holy Anargyroi; Sts. Peter and Paul, 357; Saints Theodore, 715; Scourging of Christ, 714; Second Coming [of Christ], 1671; Three Hierarachs, [St. Basil], St. John Chrysostom and St. Gregory, 715; Transfiguration, 552; Twelve Feasts, 536, 552, 1186; Washing of the Feet (nipter), 740, 741, 767; unnamed, 473, 884, 993, 1019, 1162, 1165, 1182, 1186, 1190, 1307, 1358, 1369, 1370; unnamed new, 715; unnamed old, 715 icons (types of): adorned, 1667; banner (signon), 753, 754, 1671; bronze (sarout), 357, 552, 1186, 1671; bronze gilt, 1561; on bridges, 828; bust (laimin, laimion, laimos), 356, 357, 1671; carved in ivory, 1186; diptych, 596; of elektron (amparateinos), 716, 719n. 73; enameled (cheimeutos), 552; with figure in profile (grammistos), 1671, 1676n. 13; with figure seated (kathisma), 1671; with figure standing (stasidion), 357, 1671; with frames (peripheria), 357, 715, 1671; glass-jeweled

GENERAL INDEX

(hyelia), 357, 371n. 32, 715; of gold, 552, 1562, 1567; with haloes/nimbuses (petala), 552, 559n. 42, 1672, (phengia), 1671; miracle-working, 807, 1383; monopetalos, 1671, 1676n. 13; in mosaic, 753, 754, 798, 827, 838; patronal, 658, 677, 877, 1237; with pearls, 554, 1567; with picture of founder, 1671; with precious stones, 552, 1562, 1567; reliquary, 552; with rings (krikellia), 715, 716; in shape of shield (skoutarion), 1167, 1676n. 18; of silver, 347, 370, 716; of silver-gilt, 357, 714; silver-mounted, 508; of steatite (amiantos), 1671; of stone, 552, 828; with studs (karpbia), 716; on textiles, 554, 714; on tombs, 791, 830, 839, 845; triptych, 1671; unadorned, 1667, 1671; with wings (thyrāi), 356, 552, 715, 1671; of wood (hylographia), 257, 526, 552, 596, 715, 1671

idiodespotos. See independent and self-governing monasteries idioktesia (private ownership). See private religious foundations idiomela (stichera). See hymns (specific) idorhythmic monks and monasticism: critique of, 958, 967, 1384, 1457, 1628, 1653; establishment of, 212, 1304, 1580; lifestyle of, xxxiii, 213, 309, 641, 1409, 1411, 1487, 1614, 1616, 1618, 1628, 1644, 1646; permitted, xxxiv, 1297, 1300, 1302; restricted or prohibited, 609, 640, 644, 967, 1302, 1487, 1649, 1650 idleness. See vices, monastic illnesses and injuries: acute, 757; care for, xxxvii; of founder, 785, 830, 1409; remedies for, 1260, 1268, 1518, 1526, 1650 illnesses and injuries (specific): ear illness, 623; flatulence, 1198, 1204, 1698; fractures, 757; gangrene, 585; hunger, 1458, 1460; leprosy (hiera nosos), 738, 767, 777n. 84, 1118, 1166, 1167n. 37; ophthalmia, 757; pestilence, 585; plague, 314, 317, 1255, 1312, 1409, 1412, 1425; stomach sickness, 757, 1436, 1451; swellings, inflamed, 1650; wounds, 757 immunities and exemptions, xxxiv, 344, 449, 499, 584, 600, 793, 829, 958, 962; from customs duties, 565, 566; from ecclesiastical taxation, 144; from fiscal obligation, 575, 583, 962; from interference by lay officials, 144; from interference or visitations by ecclesiastical officials, 137, 144, 622; from new taxes or services, 330; from personal and property taxes, 1580; from property taxes, 1108, 1131, 1626, 1639; from public charges, 167; from secular taxation (exkousseia), xxix, 125, 127, 344, 449, 499, 829; from secularization, 1098; from seizure (aposchideumos), 556, 560n. 67; from servitudes, 575, 583; from taxation generally, 313, 1116; "total," 329, 330, 344 imperial garments: of Alexios I and his brother Isaac, 526; belted outer garments (sphinktouria), 553, 559n. 49; over-tunics (epilorika), 553; silk garments (blattia), 553; skaramangia, 553. See also Glossary for Greek terms imperial legislation: circulation of, 575; citation of, 328, 338, 573, 575, 587, 657, 673, 1198, 1203, 1669; original copies of, 211, 232, 234n. 2, 565, 566, 568, 1580; patristic precedent preferred to, 282; quotation of prior, 330, 365-67 imperial legislation (specific): agrarian legislation, 200-201, 203, 298, 330; chrysobulls: of Alexios I Komnenos, 167, 168, 170, 187, 450, 452, 466, 565, 575, 583, 594, 1408, 1673; of Alexios III Angelos, 1116, 1131; of Andronikos II Palaiologos, 150, 1279, 1280, 1374, 1589n. 6, 1594, 1610n. 8; of Andronikos III Palaiologos, 1584, 1589nn. 1 and 8, 1594, 1610n. 8; of Basil II, 281; of Basil

GENERAL INDEX

II and Constantine VIII, 209; of Constantine VII Porphyrogennitos, 211; of Constantine IX Monomachos, 211, 281, 460; of Constantine X Doukas, 211, 297; of John I Tzimiskes, 208, 209, 211, 248, 260, 263, 275; of John III Doukas Vatatzes, 168, 1673; of John VI Kantakouzenos, 1636; of Manuel I Komnenos, 870, 981, 984, 993, 999, 1036, 1046, 1056, 1113, 1118, 1128, 1131; of Manuel II Palaiologos, 1622; of Michael VI Stratiotikos, 211; of Michael VII Doukas, xxix, 329, 330, 361-63, 555; of Nikephoros II Phokas, 195-96, 207, 208, 209, 245, 253-54, 255, 256-57, 260, 261-62, 272, 274, 275, 1615; of Nikephoros III Botaneiates, 168, 303, 308, 326, 329, 330, 363-67, 462, 565, 575, 581, 600; of Romanos III Argyros, 144; of unspecified emperors, 200, 272, 281, 284, 313, 329, 354, 449, 455, 467, 482, 483, 501n. 27, 513, 515, 523, 524, 525, 527, 543, 555, 556, 564, 568, 575, 860, 871, 1232, 1557, 1580, 1584, 1588, 1595, 1667; Codex of Justinian, 1669, 1675n. 8; decrees (prostaxeis) of Manuel I Komnenos, 168, 1673, 1676nn. 33 and 34; horismoi of unspecified emperors, 1610n. 8; Institutes of Justinian, 587, 603n. 37, 1669, 1675n. 8; Novels of Justinian, 1198, 1203, 1462-63, 1466, 1473, 1476, 1480nn. 16 and 28, 1670, 1675nn. 7 and 9-12; ordinance of Manuel I Komnenos, 168; prostigmata: of Andronikos III Palaiologos, 1584, 1589n. 7, 1595, 1600; of John II Komnenos, 168, 1673, 1676n. 30; of John [III] Doukas [Vatatzes], 1673, 1676n. 41; of Manuel I Komnenos, 1673, 1676nn. 31 and 32; of Manuel II Palaiologos, 1622; of union (1439), 727; rescript (epilysis) of Manuel I Komnenos, 168. See also Glossary for Greek terms imperial monasteries: in 12th c., 607-17, 864; and the charistike, 730; early, 47n. 6; endowment of, 149; features of, 1255; patronage of, 48-49; origins of, 195, 207, 1487; patrons' rights in, 1208; royal analogues of, 625, 638; seizure of, 1098; structure of, 1259; use of, 783, 973 imperial monasteries (specific): Bessai, 153; Christ Pantokrator (CP), 725; [Christ] Philanthropos (CP), 974, 975; Elegmoi (Kurşunlu), 1042; Kolobou, 232; St. Andrew of Peristerai, 211; St. Demetrios-Kellibara (CP), 1238, 1490; St. John the Forerunner of Phoberos, 872; St. Mamas (CP), 973; St. Michael of Docheiariou, 1304; St. Michael at Kataskepe, 870; Sts. Sergios and Bakchos, 120; Stoudios (CP), 69 imperial offices: oikeiaka, 361, 363, 367, 771; oikonomion, 361, 363; praetorium, 56, 58n. 7; sakelle, 341, 362, 363, 367; sakellion, 255; sekretion, 1655; treasury (fisc), 574, 583, 770, 1212, 1230, 1656-57; vestiarion, 362, 367. See also Glossary for Greek terms imperial officials: as authors of typika, 859, 871; demands of on monasteries, 211; hospitality to, see hospitality; as investigators of rights and privileges, 792, 829, 1587, 1594; as patrons, 206, 314, 1301; as protectors, 299, 300; retirement of, 206, 207; threat posed by, 513, 527, 985, 1019; as upholders of typika, 1104, 1118, 1130 imperial officials (specific): allagator, 1182, 1190, 1191n. 6; ambassadors/envoys, 727; apokrisiarios, 1407; chartoularios, 363, 367, 927; chartoularios of the dromos, 263, 367; chartoularios of the themes, 363, 367; count of the court, 363, 367; domestikos of the themes, 363, 367; domestikos ton scholon, 363, 367; doux, 362, 363, 366, 367, 526; dromos, mandator of, 362, 367; droungarokometes, 363, 367; eidikos, 363, 367; eparch of CP (urban prefect), 331, 352; ephoros of the imperial curatories, 363, 367; epi ton oikeiakon, 311, 363, 367, 771; epi tou kanikleiou, 202, 209, 211, 271, 275, 297, 300, 301; epi tou stratou, 1562; fiscal agents, 361, 362, 364, 365, 366; general, 326, 377, 1238; governor (toparches), 524; horeiarios, 363, 367; judges (kritai), 297, 315, 319, 320, 323, 324, 326, 363, 364, 365, 366, 367; judges of the army, 1280, 1283n. 33; judges of the Velum, 363, 366; judges of the Velum and epi ton hippodromon, 1035; judges of the Velum and epi tou hippodromou, 333, 366, 455, 1035; katepano, 362, 363, 366, 367;

GENERAL INDEX

logariastes, 363, 367; logothetes, 633, 1415; logothetes genikos, 361, 362, 363, 367; logothetes ton oikeiakon, 1407 and n. 6; logothetes tou dromou, 1287, 1292; logothetes stratiotikos, 361, 362, 363, 367; magistrate of the stage (archon tes thymeles), 1279; mandator, 362, 366, 367; meas domestikos, 523, 555, 725, 742, 1228, 1242, 1580, 1605, 1606; meas domestikos of the West, 507, 519, 557; meas doux, 742, 1228, 1242; meas doux ton scholon in the East, 702; meas droungarios, 773; meas logariastes, 1035; meas stratopedarches, 1416, 1512, 1525, 1556; merarches, 362, 267; mystikos, 743, 865, 869, 870, 871, 982, 991, 998, 999, 1004, 1021, 1028, 1032, 1033, 1034, 1036, 1042, 1043, 1050, 1055, 1088; mystographos, 337, 338; nomophylax, 335, 336, 974, 1032, 1035; notary, 146, 337, 338, 347, 351, 352, 363, 365; oikistikos, 363, 367; orthotes, 361, 363, 364, 365, 367; parakoimomenos, 1562; pinkernes, 829; praipositos, 357, 358, 360; proeleusimaios, 362, 363, 366, 367; protasekretis, 455; protekdikos, 597; protoallagator, 1189; protokentarchos, 362, 363, 366, 367; protokometes (village headman), 57; protonotarios, 773, 1035, 1436, 1437, 1445; protostrator, 1556, 1557, 1561; ptochotrophos, 298, 339, 340; public defender (ekdikos), 57, 58n. 20; quaestor, 336, 1032, 1034, 1035; registrar (anagraphheus), 361, 364, 365, 367; sakellarios, 362, 363, 367; senator, 326, 482, 668, 918, 1056; steward of imperial treasury, 974; strategos, 146, 206, 298, 314, 315, 319, 320, 321n. 12, 323, 324, 363, 366, 367, 369, 463; strateutes, 363, 364, 365, 367; tax collectors (dioiketai), 313, 319, 1176, (phorologoi), 361, 362, 364, 365, 366, 958, 962, (praktores), 1667, 1674; tax gatherers (apaitetai), 362, 366, 1630, 1656; taxiarches, 363, 367; topoteretes, 362, 367; tourmarches, 362, 363, 367; treasurer, 1042; treasury officials, 1259, 1265; tribounos, 699; vestiarites, 743. See also Glossary for Greek terms imposed guests (katapemptoi, m.; katapemptai, f.): disciplinary concessions for, 1301; entitlements of, 426, 430, 458, 574; failure to persevere, 1412, 1422; permitted, 611, 791, 1301, 1410; political prisoners as, xxii, xxxiv, 726; prohibited, xix, xxxiv, 611, 613, 615, 619, 648, 658, 659, 694, 695, 868, 959, 964, 978, 986, 1012, 1013, 1048, 1069, 1070, 1297, 1434, 1447, 1583, 1599-1600, 1627, 1661

inalienability: of all consecrated properties, 307, 308, 330, 365, 452, 453, 463, 488-89, 613, 792, 821, 825, 862, 922, 1019, 1076, 1109, 1299, 1305, 1308, 1340, 1355, 1375, 1389, 1390, 1392; of all donations, 282; of books, 792, 844, 1019, 1076, 1332, 1334, 1335; canon law and, 463, 657, 673, 1669-70; of endowments, 328, 329, 349, 466, 614, 673, 1000, 1155, 1279; of entrance donations, 495, 672, 792, 824, 930, 966, 985, 1000, 1057, 1141, 1262, 1271, 1614, 1618, 1621, 1630; of gardens, 551; of icons, 1332, 1335; of landed (immovable) properties, 344, 444, 450, 462, 467, 488, 515, 551, 574, 619, 657, 658, 673, 785, 792, 820, 825, 863, 985, 1000, 1048, 1057, 1099, 1116, 1154, 1212, 1233, 1262, 1279, 1308, 1492; of liturgical cloths, 1332, 1334; of movable properties, 444, 450, 462, 466, 488, 515, 552, 574, 657, 658, 673, 820, 825, 863, 985, 1000, 1048, 1057, 1110, 1150, 1151, 1308; of sacred vessels, 488, 573, 820, 922, 1019, 1076, 1086, 1150, 1308, 1355 incense: safekeeping of, 1003, 1060; supplies of, 350, 531, 538, 546, 551, 697, 756, 761, 762, 766, 1332, 1334; types of, 1201; use of, 546, 1555 incomes (ecclesiastical): confiscation of, 448; diversion of, 860 incomes (monastic): anticipated increase in, 985, 1000, 1212, 1224; confiscation of, 427, 434, 1490; deposit of into treasury, 1507, 1508; drawn by laity (siteresia), see allowances, living; drawn by monks, 233, 239, 240, 302, 303, 304, 329, 345, 426, 430, 865, 870, 1013-14, 1045, 1070, 1487; drawn by priests, 1585, 1609; in-kind, 1212, 1226; management of, 657, 677, 1212, 1226; and philanthropic activities, 795, 841; records of, see records (specific); reliance on, 1630, 1656; sharing of, 40; shortfalls in, 1587, 1607; surplus of, 329, 345, 463, 657, 682, 1212, 1214, 1226-27, 1261, 1272; termination of, 1212-13, 1232. See also annuities incomes (private): monks', 614; from villages, 791, 846. See also fellowships independent and self-governing monasteries (autexousios, autodespotos eleuthera, idiodespotos, autodioiketos): conditional entitlement to status of, 122, 171, 303, 308, 326, 328, 340, 342, 351, 449, 791, 804, 974, 981, 994; constitutions of, 204, 246, 450, 509, 510, 513; designation as, 527, 542, 571, 586, 623, 638, 667, 668, 730, 732, 773, 789, 804, 815, 862, 876, 918, 954, 957, 968, 977, 981, 994, 999, 1046, 1049, 1056, 1113, 1130-31, 1177, 1184, 1199, 1200, 1208, 1210, 1217-18, 1239, 1249, 1259, 1265-66, 1288, 1291, 1299, 1487, 1488, 1505, 1516, 1527-28, 1581, 1584, 1595, 1661; and the ecclesiastical hierarchy, xxxv, 153, 955, 1103; and founders of, 197, 509, 513, 541; historical development of, 49-50, 441-48, 859-68, 1093-1102; imperial confirmation of, see emperors and the imperial government, rights of; imperial patronage of, 245, 568, 1044, 1086-87; in late Byzantine times, 1208, 1483-90; longest surviving, 568, 569; loss of status as, 150, 1097, 1106, 1197, 1238, 1487, 1490, 1491, 1505, 1629; maintenance of, 1629, 1661; and monastic reform movement, 442, 443; origins of, 195-96, 297; patriarchal confirmation of, see patriarchal rights (specific); and patriarchal stauropegia, 144, 1102, 1105; and the protectorate, 309; as rebuilders of churches, 1102; status of, 149, 167, 197, 202, 211, 271, 299, 327, 448, 452, 460, 482-83, 572, 597, 610, 650, 1496. See also institutional independence and self-governance inebriation. See vices, monastic: drunkenness infants, reared in convent, 1257, 1263, 1271

GENERAL INDEX

infidels (Ottoman Turks), 1636, 1637

infirmaries. See hospitals and infirmaries innovation: fiscal (kainotomia), 361, 366; religious, xiii inns. See buildings, secular (particular kinds) inscriptions: dedicatory, 126, 167, 783, 954, 959n. 1, 1389; epitaphial, 782, 1043; Georgian, 508; graffiti, 52; Greek, 509; on icon mount, 508; on sacred vessels, 52; monumental, documents preserved as, 13, 14, 295, 305, 311, 323

insects: bees, 834; wasps, 318, 320n. 9 institutional autonomy: and financial security, 194-95; grant of, 622; notion of, 44, 45, 46, 71, 296; threats to, 47, 302 institutional independence and self-governance: assertion of, 136, 171, 186, 188, 442, 467, 957, 963, 1584; attenuation of meaning of, xxix, 1097, 1487-88; benefits of, xxix; confirmation of, 153, 163, 168, 323, 324, 455, 860, 861; demonstration of, 138n. 6; desire for, xxviii, 233; exercise of, 443; imperial grants of, 167, 208, 313, 1101, 1107, 1128; incompatible with unrestrained patronal privilege, 445, 1098; justification for, 1210, 1218; limited understanding of, 171, 246, 1584; model for, 211; patriarchal grants of, 974; praised, 1097; preservation of, 272, 274, 275; recognition of,

GENERAL INDEX

446, 613, 619, 862, 867, 1097, 1487; reluctant acceptance of, 171, 308, 327, 330; requirements for, 1098; restored, 1491; threats to, 862, 1097

insubordination. See vices, monastic inventories (brevia): chrysobulls transcribed in, 330, 361-67; copies of, 984, 1035; earliest, 329; forbidden, 172, 186; preservation/safekeeping of, 790, 792, 835, 842, 974, 1036, 1047; recording of alienations in, 462, 489; use of, xxviii, 307, 450, 451, 618, 658, 878, 984, 1001, 1002, 1048, 1076, 1094, 1151, 1261, 1271, 1485, 1668, 1670, 1675 inventories (specific): (19) Attaleiates [INV], 303, 329, 355-70; (22) Evergetis (lost), 462, 489; (23) Pakourianos [33], 515, 552-57; (27) Kecharitomene [Appendix A], [Appendix B], 608, 656, 658, 712-17; (28) Pantokrator [65], 608, 731, 732, 768-72; (31) Areia [T11], 859, 958, 968; (35) Skoteine [24]-[45], 1094, 1176, 1178, 1185-90; (37) Auxentios [17] (lost), 1094, 1234; (39) Lips [43]-[49], 1094, 1279-80; (40) Anargyroi [4], 1094, 1289, 1291-92; (48) Prodromos [14], 1296, 1389, 1391, 1393-94; (54) Neilos Damilas [Inventory], 1296, 1462, 1465, 1477, 1478-79, 1484; (61) Eleousa Inv., 5, 14, 168, 1483, 1484, 1485, 1486, 1487, 1667-78; of Christodoulos (lost), 596; of Evergetis (lost), 473, 489, 500n. 2; of Galesios monastery (lost), 151, 164; of Heliou Bomon monastery (two, both lost), 1048, 1051, 1076; of Kosmosoteira (lost), 835, 844; of Machairas monastery (lost), 1094, 1113, 1117, 1150, 1151, 1162; of Mamas monastery (lost), 984, 993, 1019, 1035; of Menoikeion monastery (lost), 1595; of Neophytos the Recluse (lost), 1345, 1360; of Patmos, 566; of Phoberos monastery (lost), 877, 884, 923 inventories (types of): of animate property, 190, 1178, 1190; of books, xxviii, 358-59, 367-69, 515, 552-53, 566, 596, 877, 884, 1048, 1076, 1162, 1185, 1189-90, 1393-94, 1462, 1464, 1465, 1478-79, 1667, 1672-73; of icons, 356-57, 714-16, 1076, 1162, 1185, 1667, 1670-71; of immovable (landed) property, 303, 360, 451, 768-72, 1178, 1187-89; of imperial chrysobulls, 361-67, 555-56, 1667, 1673; of lighting devices, 554, 1667, 1674; of liturgical cloths, 359, 369, 553-54, 1186, 1190, 1667, 1673; of movable property, 303, 984, 985, 1001, 1019, 1048, 1076, 1116, 1150, 1151, 1178, 1185, 1393, 1465, 1587, 1596, 1667, 1671-74; of pious donations, 329, 357, 358, 359, 360, 515, 1162; of sacred vessels, 357, 369, 552, 716-17, 968, 1048, 1076, 1190, 1668

ironworker's shop. See endowments (specific) irrigation. See water supply systems isokodikon. See legal documents (specific) isonomia. See equality, monastic ithmos. See sacred vessels (specific kinds) ivory, 1186

jasper. See stones, precious judges. See imperial officials (specific)

GENERAL INDEX

jugerum. See measures (surface and weight)

kaballarios. See titles and dignities kaddaras (cooper). See hospitals and infirmaries, staff of (specific) kaddarion (bucket). See bathing articles kainotomia. See innovation: fiscal kakkabion (kettle). See utensils, household kaldaropolion (basin). See sacred vessels (specific kinds) kalegia (boots/shoes). See footwear (specific) kalliphonoi. See professions and trades kaltsai (leggings). See footwear (specific) kamara (arched candlestand). See crosses (types of) and lighting devices (specific) kamelaukion (cap). See clothing (articles of) kampanos (steelyard). See measures (surface and weight) kamprion (casket). See sacred vessels (specific kinds) kandela (lamp). See lighting devices (specific) kandela, kathiste (standing lamp). See lighting devices (specific) kandelaptes (lamplighter). See monastic officials (specific) kaniskia. See admissions, gifts to secure; taxes and fiscal obligations (specific); and Glossary kankele (chancel screen). See churches (parts of) kanon. See canons kanonarches (precentor). See monastic officials (specific) kanonikon. See taxes and fiscal obligations (specific) and Glossary kapnikon (hearth tax). See taxes and fiscal obligations (specific) kaprilingas. See royal officials (specific) and Glossary

GENERAL INDEX

- karyon tripton* (ground nutmeg). See seasonings
- kastrision*. See textiles
- kastrisios*, 595, 596, 598, 599. See ecclesiastical officials (specific) and Glossary
- kastroktisia* (construction of fortresses). See taxes and fiscal obligations (specific)
- kastron*. See forts and fortifications
- katablattion* (silk cloth of the highest quality). See textiles
- katapemptos*. See imposed guests
- kataplasma* (plaster). See supplies, medical
- kataseista* (pendants). See crosses (types of)
- katastaton* (starch). See supplies, medical
- katechoumeneion*. See churches (parts of)
- katapanikion*. See territorial jurisdictions and Glossary
- katepano*. See imperial officials (specific) and Glossary
- kathegetes*. See superiors
- kathegoumenos*, m.; kathegoumene, f. See superiors
- kathisma*. See hymns (specific); psalter (parts of); and Glossary
- kathisma* (of icon showing a seated figure). See icons (types of)
- kathiste/kandela* (standing lamp). See lighting devices (specific)
- katholike ekklesia* (public church). See churches (types of)
- katholikon*. See churches and chapels (monastic)
- katovlia*. See reliquaries (types of)
- katzion/katzior* (standing censer). See sacred vessels (specific kinds)
- kaukion* (cup). See utensils, household
- kaukopinakia* (cups and plates). See utensils, household
- Kecharitomene*. See churches and chapels (monastic); icons (specific); monasteries (specific);

GENERAL INDEX

monastic foundation documents, (27) Kecharitomene; and Glossary kellarites, m.; kellarea, f. (cellarer). See monastic officials (specific) kellia. See cells, monastic and Glossary kelliotai and kelliotic monasticism: entitlements of, 426, 430, 729; held in disfavor, 729, 752-53, 1581, 1631; lifestyle of, 197, 232, 234, 239, 304, 309, 430, 619, 620, 730, 733, 752-53, 1300, 1493; on Mount Athos, 235, 238, 1615; permitted, 198, 201, 303, 617, 730, 752-53, 1297, 1302; property rights of, 233, 239; relations with, 260-61, 1043, 1342, 1358; restricted or prohibited, xxxiv, 427, 432, 730, 870, 978, 986, 1012-13, 1044, 1048-49, 1069-70, 1096, 1177, 1183, 1457, 1460, 1487, 1583, 1587, 1599-1600, 1628, 1630, 1648-50; stipends of, 260, 261

kelotomos (hernia doctor). See hospitals and infirmaries, staff of (specific) kentarchos. See imperial officials (specific): protokentarchos

kentemata. See calendars, liturgical and Glossary kentenaarion. See measures (surface and weight) kentenaarion (of gold). See coinage kentouklon (Cretan woolen mat). See bedding (specific kinds) kephalides (capitals). See churches (parts of) kephalokionia (capitals). See churches (parts of) kerastikon (wine pitcher). See utensils, household keys and locks: of monastic offices, 444, 462, 491, 492, 680, 817, 877, 925, 1001, 1058, 1114, 1116, 1150; to cabinet for documents, 984, 1002, 1047, 1059; to monastic cells, 434, 875, 924; to reliquary, see reliquaries (types of) kilike (Cilician goat's hair mat). See bedding (specific kinds) kinklīs (chancel screen). See churches (parts of) kinship ties. See family ties kisses. See ritual observances kitchens: care of cooking vessels in, 36; restricted entry into, 1157; staff of, 866; work assignments in, 381, 407. See also convents (parts of) and monasteries (parts of) klimakes (hospices), 548. See also hospices (specific) and Glossary klokion (chamber pot). See utensils, household

GENERAL INDEX

klyster (enema). See supplies, medical koimesis (Dormition). See feasts (specific, fixed); dietary rules; icons (specific); and liturgies (specific) koinobia. See monasteries (types of) kokkion. See coinage and measures (surface and weight) kokkoelaia prophaia (green, beanlike olives). See foods (particular kinds) kollyba. See foods (particular kinds) and Glossary kolymbades (olives, pickled). See foods (particular kinds) kolynon (of paper). See books (specific types) kombotheke (clasp). See book covers, decoration of komes tes cortes (count of the court). See imperial officials (specific) komodromikion. See taxes and fiscal obligations (specific) komoekmagion (hair wiper). See bathing articles

Kontakarion. See books, liturgical kontakion. See hymns (specific) and Glossary kontakion (liturgy). See books, liturgical kondotzangia (short-legged boots). See footwear (specific) kontion, konti. See bells

Kosmosoteira. See churches and chapels (monastic); icons (specific); monasteries (specific); monastic foundation documents, (29) Kosmosoteira; old age homes (specific); and Glossary koubouklesios. See ecclesiastical officials (specific) koudai, 756. See also Glossary koukoulion (cowl). See clothing (articles of) koukoulon. See cloths, liturgical (specific) koukoumion (kettle). See utensils, household

kouratores. See curators

GENERAL INDEX

kouropalates. See titles and dignities koutroubin (boats). See transportation systems and Glossary kraktai. See professions and trades krasobolion (measure). See measures (cups of wine) krater (crater lamp). See lighting devices (specific) kreophagos (Meatfare). See weeks of the liturgical year and commemorations, liturgical (types of) krikellion (ring). See icons (types of) krina. See flowers

kritai. See imperial officials (specific); judges kryon (rock crystal). See stones, precious kyklion. See buildings, secular (particular kinds) kyminatōn (hot water flavored with cumin). See drinks and beverages kyminon (cumin). See flavorings and supplies, medical Kyriake ton hagion panton (Sunday of All Saints). See feasts (specific, movable)

Kyriakodromion (Gospel readings for Sundays). See books, liturgical Kyrie eleison. See prayers (specific) kyriotes (dominion). See patrons, rights of (specific) labis (spoon). See sacred vessels (specific kinds) laborers, lay: hiring of, 1435, 1437, 1451, 1463, 1466, 1476, 1615, 1619; housing for, 615, 645, 1466, 1473; living allowances of, 1113, 1147; married, 570, 571, 583, 584, 645; unmarried, 571, 576, 583; use of, 447, 583, 584, 641, 1434, 1448, 1451, 1471, 1472 laborers, lay (specific): agricultural workers, 1209, 1212, 1224, 1225; construction workers, 240, 846, 1615, 1622; farmers, 1113, 1154; field hands, 201; herdsman, 1113, 1154; hirelings, 517, 545. See also peasants, dependent and professions and trades laborers, monastic: assignments to serve as, 1095, 1208, 1223; attendance at meals by, 979, 1008; attendance at services by, 1208, 1223; dietary concessions for, 62, 901, 1065, 1328, 1697, 1716; doing favors for other monks, 1213, 1223; expulsion of, 576, 585, 1213, 1223; extra clothing for, laborers, monastic (specific): baker (artopoiios, mankeps), 492, 511, 532, 728, 749, 817, 926, 1111, 1154, 1209, 1225, 1240, 1250, 1506, 1508, 1517, 1543, 1583, 1600; bakery workers, 215, 227, 511, 532, 1111, 1154, 1716; bath attendants, 728, 749; beekeeper, 1667, 1675; carpenters, 215, 227, 1111, 1154, 1716; clothing manufacturers, 1096; cobblers, 1111, 1153, 1154; construction workers, 1422; cook (mageiros, opsopoios), 492, 511, 532, 569, 590, 728, 749, 817, 926, 979, 1003, 1045, 1209, 1225, 1517, 1543, 1583, 1597, 1600; coppersmiths, 1111, 1153, 1154; cowhands, 1209, 1224; farmers (georgoi), 866, 1045, 1065, 1071, 1096, 1099, 1209, 1224, 1225; fishermen, 866, 1045, 1065, 1071, 1321, 1328, 1667, 1675, 1716; food servers, 729, 745, 980, 1006, 1517, 1543; gardeners, 728, 749, 866, 979, 1008, 1031, 1045, 1065, 1146, 1158, 1209, 1225; kitchen staff, 866; meal servers, 653, 691; metal workers, 215, 227, 1716; muleteers, 215, 227, 492, 818, 926, 1716; shepherds, 1209, 1224; shipwrights, 215, 227, 1716; shoemakers, 1435, 1441, 1453n. 8, 1506, 1508; smiths, 1154; tailor, 1667, 1675; teamsters, 1667, 1675; vine-dressers and other vineyard workers, 215, 227, 866, 979, 1008, 1014, 1031, 1045, 1065, 1096, 1146, 1158, 1209, 1224, 1341, 1350, 1583, 1600, 1716; water carriers, 1113, 1155

GENERAL INDEX

1600; rotation of, 381, 407, 1213, 1225, 1257, 1270

laimin/laimion/laimos (bust). See icons (types of) lamna. See lighting devices (specific) lampas (taper). See lighting devices (specific) lamplighting, office of. See hours, liturgical (specific) lamprophoros Kyriake (Radiant Sunday/Easter Sunday). See feasts (specific, movable) lamps. See lighting devices (specific) land. See endowments (specific): landed (immovable) property land (types of): abandoned (exaleimmatike), 1280; arable, 1279, 1280, 1292; common (ho tou koinou topos), 282, 288 languages: Arabic, 51, 378, 425; Armenian, 557, 560n. 71; Bulgarian, 125; Coptic, 51, 52, 53, (Egyptian), 55, 57; Ethiopic, 378; Georgian, 552, 557; Greek, 125, 624, (Hellenike), xiii, 53, 55, 57, 1216, (Romaïke), 552, 557; Italo-Calabrian, 638; Latin, xiii, xxiii, 624, 975; Slavonic, 61, 125, 378, 425, 457; vernacular, xxiii laosynaktai. See monastic officials (specific) lashane (village headman). See imperial officials (specific): protokometes lathrophagia (secret eating). See vices, monastic

Latin. See languages

laughter. See vices, monastic lavatories. See hospitals and infirmaries (parts of) and monasteries (parts of) lavras. See monasteries (types of) laymen: resident, xix, 1013, 1070; as superintendents of dependencies, 1154; as bestowers of investiture on superiors, xxx learned societies: American Byzantine Institute, 1255; British School at Athens, 314; Egypt Exploration Society, 52; Ephorate of Antiquities, Dodekanese, 568; Greek Ministry of Education, 568; Russian Archaeological Institute (CP), 15, 70, 783, 784; Soci  t   d' Arch  ologie Copte, 51

GENERAL INDEX

lectionaries. See books, liturgical: Apostolos, Evangelion, and Propheteia lector, ecclesiastical (anagnostes). See ecclesiastical officials (specific) ledger. See records (specific) legal documents: authentication of, 169; borrowing of, 984, 1035-36, 1047, 1076; collections of, 213, 568, 623; forgery of, 145, 622; interpolations in, 622; lending of, 1260, 1272; list of, 515, 555; loss of, 168, 792, 829; preservation of, 311, 329, 352-53, 515, 564, 681, 860, 974, 1002, 1035-36, 1047, 1261, 1272; receipts for, 984, 1035-36, 1047, 1076; storage of, see furniture; transcriptions of, 792, 829; translations of, 622

legal documents (specific): charters, 125, 234n. 2, 622; codicils, 568, 598, 1412, 1428; confirmations of liberties and concessions, 624; concession of legatine authority, 622; deeds of title, 120, 353, 589, 792, 829, 840, 842, 984, 1036, 1100; delimitation (periorismos), 524, 557, 710, 1563; depositions, 1117, 1140; diplomas, 624, 637; document of abdication, 1304, 1307; exoneration (athoosis), 555; firmans, 126, 567, 1312, 1409, 1580; gift and grant ordinance, 792, 848; grant and dedication document, 1117, 1140; judicial confirmation, 975, 984, 1031-32; judicial decision, 168; list, enrollment (katastichon), 730, 752; list of valuation (praktikon), 658, 673; lysis, 984, 993, 1036; memorandum, voivode's, 1411, 1416; "officially registered," 1465, 1477; papal bull, 622; papal confirmations and directives, 456-57; pittakion, 555, 556, 731, 751; praktika, 168, 556, 565; promissory note, 600, 791, 840; rescript, 168, semeioma, xxix, 90, 599, 860, 975, 981, 984, 1031, 1032-34, 1035, 1036-37; semeiosis, 555; sigillidion, 1673, 1677n. 43; sigillion, 181, 185, 286, 1352; sigillon, 1589n. 7; synodical letter, 1339; survey, cadastral (isokodikon), 556; visitation report, 624. See also cartularies; imperial legislation (specific); inventories; memoranda, official; and Glossary for Greek terms legal documents (types of): authenticated copies, 568, 792, 829, 1047, 1059; bead roll, 508; bilingual, 624; chancery, 624; forged/inauthentic, 1404, 1408; original, 568, 984, 1036-35, 1047, 1076

Lent, Great. See fasts (specific); dietary rules; seasons (liturgical); and Glossary lention (hand towel). See bathing articles lepers' sanatorium, Pantokrator (CP), 615, 725, 735, 738, 767-68 leprosy (hiera nosos). See illnesses and injuries (specific)

GENERAL INDEX

lepton. See measures (surface and weight)

Lexicon. See books, miscellaneous libellikon. See taxes and fiscal obligations (specific) libellos, 555. See also Glossary librarian. See monastic officials (specific) libraries: ecclesiastical, 727; monastic, see monasteries (parts of); private, 727 libraries (specific): of Docheiariou monastery, 1304; of Evergetis monastery (CP), 452; of Fragala monastery, 624; of Galesios monastery, 150; of Geromeri monastery, 1396; of Iveron monastery (Mount Athos), 1613; of John Mavrocordato, 727; of Kellibara monastery, 1237; of Latros monastery, 619; of Lavra monastery (Mount Athos), 151, 213, 216; of Mar Saba (near Jerusalem), 1313; of Mega Spelaion monastery, 727; of Patmos monastery, 566, 568; Patriarchal Library (Istanbul), 727, 973; of Petra monastery (CP), 1043; of Petritzonitissa monastery (Bačkovo), 507; of San Salvatore monastery (Messina), 641; of Seraglio (Istanbul), 782; of Stoudios monastery (CP), 93, 108AB; of Theological School, Halki, 727, 973 lighting devices: donation of, 515, 526; at grave, 983, 1921; listed in inventories, see inventories (types of) lighting devices (specific): candelabra (manoualia), 554, 697, 702, 1186, 1277, 1393, 1555, 1561, 1567, 1674; candelabra, large (statarei), 1674, 1677n. 53; candelabra with eight candleholders (manoualia oktaphota), 802; candelabra with twelve candleholders (manoualia dodekaphotia), 697, 698, 741, 742, 1087, 1229; candles, 531, 536, 546, 551, 590, 680, 681, 696, 697, 698, 702, 741, 743, 753, 754, 756, 761, 762, 805, 843, 1277, 1332, 1334, 1555; candles, Easter, 98A, 100A, 221A; candlestands (manoualia tou templou), 554, 559n. 55; candlestands, arched (manoualia kamarai), 554, 716, 719n. 79, 1674, 1677n. 56; candlesticks (manoualia), 526, 536, 697; chandeliers (polykandela), 526, 552, 554, 696, 702, 741, 754, 1555; choros, 698, 740, 753, 1132; glass (lamp), 615; lammnai, 698, 802, 1186, 1190, 1393, 1674; lamps (kandelai), 152, 156, 514, 526, 536, 698, 705, 740, 743, 753, 756, 761, 802, 831, 1132, 1277, 1561, (thryallides), 802, 827; basket-shaped lamps (kaniskia), 554, 1674; crater lamps, (krateres), 696, 698, 740, 753, 754; glass lamps, small (hyelia), 350, 370n. 21, 615, 702; night lamps, 741; pot-shaped lamps, (chytrokandelai, kythrokandelai), 357, 369, 1277; standing lamps (kathistai), 740, 753, 754; triple lamps (thryallides triphyeis, trikandela), 740, 741, 753, 756, 761, 802; lamp-brackets, dragon-shaped (drakontaria), 554, 559n. 58; lamp chains (abenai, halysidia, bastagia, kremastaria), 357, 554, 1674; lamp glasses (mouchroutia), 554, 559n. 62; lanterns (phanaria), 754; “skewer-lights” (manoualia), 1277; tapers (lampades), 1132, 1229, 1555, 1567; torches (phatlia), 759; torch, pine, 762; wicks (cotton), 696, 697. See Glossary for Greek terms lighting devices (types of): of bronze, 554, 702, 802, 1674; of bronze-gilt, 1674; of elektron, 1674, 1677n. 57; of glass, 1277; of silver, 526, 552, 696, 802, 1277, 1561; of silver-gilt, 357, 369 lilies (krina). See flowers linen. See textiles

GENERAL INDEX

lions. See animals (specific)

Lips hospital (CP). See hospitals and infirmaries (specific) list, enrollment (katastichon). See legal documents (specific) list of valuation (praktikon). See legal documents (specific) litanies: on commemorations, 756; on Easter, 227, 843; on feast of the Annunciation, 112AB, 227; on feast of the Dormition, 827; on Fridays, 753-55; on Saturday of Meatfare, 103; on Saturday of Pentecost, 103 103B; unspecified, 704

litanies (specific): ektenes, 101A, 277, 360, 385, 389, 494, 674, 704, 754, 755, 756, 801, 803, 827, 929, 962, 1021, 1053, 1087, 1137, 1218; synapte, 114B, 115A, 221, 385, 527, 1218, 1601. See also Glossary for Greek terms literacy: examples of, 53; ignored, xxviii, 47; promoted, xxviii, 28, 35 and n. 55, 38, 39, 41; in Studite tradition, 46; in Western medieval orders, xiii, xxviii. See also reading literature: profane/secular, 640, 645 (see also books, secular); sacred, 640, 645 (see also books, New Testament and books, Old Testament)

litographon (in uncials). See books (specific types)

litra. See measures (surface and weight) liturgical offerings: for emperors, 687, 742, 743, 755, 756, 1261, 1274; for founders, 687, 1261, 1274, 1355, 1563, 1566; for founders' ancestors, 1261, 1274; for founders' families, 687, 743, 755, 756, 1261, 1274, 1563, 1566; for monks, 494, 928, 1020, 1077, 1163; for nuns, 687, 700, 1274, 1565, 1566 liturgies: assignments to perform, 730, 766, 1095, 1486; coordination of, 1380; deportment at, 1197, 1205, 1496, 1501; disinterest in regulation of, 1486, 1506, 1507; effect on mealtimes, 393, 478, 1697; frequency of, xxv, 381, 393, 447, 459, 474-75, 482, 533, 687, 730, 742, 756, 762, 766, 807, 865, 896, 956, 965, 979, 1015, 1045, 1072, 1096, 1112, 1134, 1257, 1274, 1288, 1292, 1340, 1341, 1355, 1375, 1380, 1463, 1475, 1486, 1514, 1547, 1583, 1601, 1659; importance of, xxiii, 24n. 15, 447, 807, 866, 896, 1016, 1072, 1096, 1134, 1496, 1501; Latin, 975; lay participation in, 1437; private, 28, 956, 964; proper of, 91; public performance of, 1197, 1205; punishment for absence or lateness, 60, 532; regulation of, 46, 90, 91, 151, 164, 170, 184, 214, 215, 221, 296, 378, 381, 459, 467, 474-75, 511, 533, 569, 638, 640, 646, 728, 755-56, 756-57, 864, 865, 955, 956, 962, 964, 978, 979, 1015-16, 1045, 1057, 1072-73, 1094, 1112, 1134, 1197, 1299, 1332, 1335, 1463; silence during, 537; simultaneous celebration of, 1257; sitting during lections, 1197, 1205; timing of, 108AB-109AB, 223, 393; unauthorized celebration of, 198, 233, 238. See also calendars, liturgical and liturgies (specific) liturgies (specific): on afterfeasts, 105AB, 224; on commemorations, 494, 544, 742, 743, 755, 756, 1020, 1077, 1087, 1156, 1229, 1426, 1561, 1562, 1566, 1567; on dominical feasts, 315, 320, 393, 532, 533, 738, 965, 1016, 1072, 1274, 1335; on Easter Sunday, 91, 98AB-100A, 215, 221, 545; during fast of the Holy Apostles, 393, 482, 693, 814, 917, 1008, 1064; during fast of St.

GENERAL INDEX

Philip, 223, 393, 482, 814, 917, 1008, 1065, 1711; for departed monks, 1583, 1601; in honor of emperor, 1583, 1601, 1627, 1639; in honor of emperor's family, 1627, 1630; of founder, 533, 545, 546, 1583, 1601; of Hagiopolites (St. Andrew), 728, 754, 777n. 63; of the Presanctified Gifts, 401, 907, 1716; on feast of the Annunciation, 393, 455, 545, 1132; on feast of the Ascension, 545; on feast of the Birth of the Mother of God, 393; on feast of the Dormition, 393; on feast of the Epiphany, 545; on Holy Saturday (Easter vigil), 393, 915, 1326, 1706; on Holy Thursday, 393, 546; on feasts of important saints, 965; on medium feasts, 393; on minor feasts, 393; on patron saint's feast, 536, 545, 1538, 1601; on Pentecost, 545; on vigil of feast of the Epiphany, 394 livestock: ban on importation of, 233, 239; care of, 37; donations of, 201, 1190. See also animals (specific) loans: cancellation of, 1411, 1417; made by monasteries, 1630, 1656; made by patrons to monasteries, 1410, 1411, 1417; from patrons, 1410, 1411, 1417; security for, 1411, 1417 locks. See keys and locks lodging (compulsory). See taxes and fiscal obligations (specific) logariastes. See imperial officials (specific) logisima. See property, tax-free

Logos (of Christ), 1594. See also Glossary logothetai. See imperial officials (specific) lots, use of. See elections louter (fountain in atrium). See churches (parts of) loyalty. See virtues, monastic lumber. See supplies, shipbuilding lychnikon (lamplighting office). See hours, liturgical (specific) lysis. See legal documents (specific) mageiria (cooked food, vegetable soup). See foods (particular kinds) mageiros (cook). See monastic officials (specific) magistrate of the stage. See imperial officials (specific) magistros. See titles and dignities

GENERAL INDEX

magnates. See nobility, local magoulikon. See clothing (articles of) and Glossary makrotzangia (long-legged boots). See footwear (specific) malagma (pure gold). See precious metals (specific) malaratoi. See soldiers (types of) malotarion (woolen blanket). See bedding (specific kinds) mandator. See imperial officials (specific) mandyas/mandyon (cloak). See clothing (articles of) mankeps/mankips (baker). See monastic officials (specific) mankipeion (bakery). See monasteries (parts of) manoualia (candelabra, candlestands, candlesticks). See lighting devices (specific) manual labor: commendation of, 383, 492-93, 683, 818, 875, 926, 944, 1011, 1068, 1340, 1363, 1450, 1453, 1514, 1550, 1599; compassion for those unaccustomed to, 1450, 1451; as cure for akedia, 1450; effect on mealtimes, 1697; everyone to perform, 1208, 1209, 1223, 1341, 1363, 1435, 1448, 1450; exemption from, 981, 1017; heavy, 381, 408-9, 1209, 1225, 1435; idle talking during, 980, 1018; ignored, 172, 1257, 1313; importance of, xxvi, 46, 61, 215, 409, 447, 1384, 1387, 1434, 1435, 1448, 1450, 1451; in Basilian tradition, 22, 24-25, 28, 29, 32, 61, 92; in Bulgarian monasticism, 127, 133; in Byzantine times, 24n. 15, 47, 61; in cells, xxvi, 381, 408, 1133, 1148; in monastic reform movement, 303, 865, 866, 1581; in Pachomian tradition, 34, 35, 37, 38, 47, 61, 92; not allowed in church, 652, 704; place for, 1342, 1359; practice of, 569, 590, 1111, 1133; praying during, 1514, 1540; psalmody during, 521, 538; readings during, see reading (times and places for); regulation of, 62, 65, 137, 141, 215, 227, 381, 408, 409, 459, 511, 531-32, 538, 569-70, 590-91, 787, 826, 835, 979, 1010-11, 1026, 1045, 1067-68, 1082, 1148, 1156, 1177, 1185, 1463, 1474, 1583, 1599; rest from, 137, 140, 228, 628-29, 631; revival of in late Byzantine times, 1095, 1096, 1298, 1486; rotation of assignments to, 1209, 1225, 1228; sale of, 1339; in Studite tradition, 46, 48, 71, 86, 88, 92, 108AB, 112AB, 133A; supervised by treasurer, 1209, 1224; in Syriac tradition, 39, 41, 61; times for, 92; years of service in, 1435, 1450 manuscripts: chronological distribution of, 14; collections of, 727; colophons of, 649; destruction of by fire, 727; donation of, 726; folia in, 1034, 1256; loss of, 1320; scholiast on, 1321; scribal notes in, 150, 168, 213, 455, 457-58, 623, 625, 1264n. 6, 1320, 1391n. 2; verso of, 623 manuscripts (of particular works): Arethas ms. of Plato, 568; of John Xenos' Autobiography (Bios C and Bios K), 143; of Nikon of the Black Mountain's Pandektes, 378; of Nikon of the Black Mountain's Taktikon, 378; of Paul Evergetinos' Evergetinon, 454; of Pseudo-Dionysios the Areopagite, 1256; of Studite Catecheses, 90; of Studite typikon, 88; of typikon of Kosmosoteira, 782, 784, 796n. 1

GENERAL INDEX

manuscripts (specific):

- Ambrosianus H. 81 sup., 1374
- Atheniensis (National Library) 788, 454, 455, 456, 458
- Atheniensis (National Library) 2587, 1579
- Bačkovovo ms. gr. 50 and 143, 517n. 11
- Berlin, State Library, graecus fol. 55, 120, 122n. 2
- Berlin, State Library, Phillippicus 1489, 1512
- British Library Additional 22748, 1254, 1287, 1263n. 2
- Bucharest 694, 560n. 71
- Chios Koraes 1598, 507, 517n. 1
- Cisamensis, 143, 145 and n. 13
- Constantinopolitanus Metochii Sancti Sepulchri 375, 326
- Docheiariou I, 1389
- Edinburgh University, Ms. Laing 811, 1338
- Graecus bibliothecae Taurinensis 326, 954
- Grottaferrata Cryptensis 401, 642n. 14
- Halki 85, nunc 79, 326, 725, 727, 973, 1207
- Iveron (1096), 281, 283n. 1
- Iveron 754, 205, 216n. 2, 245, 271
- Jenensis Bibliotheca universitatensis graecus G.B. q. 6a, 638, 642n. 14
- Koutloumousiacus 210, 316n. 3
- Lavra, unnumbered ms., 245, 271
- Lavra lambda 99, 151, 154n. 26
- Lavra ms. E 194, 216n. 2, 249n. 2
- Lavrioticus I.127, 148
- Messinensis gr. 115, 637
- Messinensis gr. 159, 643
- Monacensis gr. 225, 1196
- Monacensis gr. 467, 85, 94n. 4
- Moscow, Hist. Mus. 363, 1237
- Moscow, Hist. Mus. 369/353, 148, 153n. 4
- Oxford, Baroccianus 59, 1462
- Oxford, Baroccianus 69, 1466n. 2
- Oxford, Bodleiana 995-92, 59, 62
- Oxford, Lincoln College, ms. graecus 35, 1512
- Oxford, Clarke 39, 568
- Parisinus, supplément grec 855, 323
- Parisinus, supplément grec 92, 973, 987n. 1
- Parisinus, supplément grec 1090, 959n. 7
- Parisinus, supplément grec 1222, 167, 172n. 2, 1667
- [Parisinus] Coislirianus [graecus] 243, 1625
- Parisinus Coislirianus graecus 295, 1314n. 2
- Parisinus graecus 301, 1346n. 4
- Parisinus graecus 384, 649
- Parisinus graecus 389, 725, 727
- Parisinus graecus 891, 67
- Parisinus graecus 1295, 1462
- Patmos 265, 1042, 1043
- Patmos 267, 564

GENERAL INDEX

Romanus Vallicellianus graecus 30 (olim C 4), 1196
Sainte-Croix 57, 660n. 2
Shuwaïr 165, 384n. 12
Sinaiticus 1096, 1311
Sinaiticus graecus 441, 377, 378, 384n. 12, 425
University of Turin, gr. 216, 1319, 1320
Vaticanus arabicus 76, 383n. 3, 384n. 12
Vaticanus Barberini graecus 583, 316n. 3
Vaticanus graecus 704, 135
Vaticanus graecus 1787, 1256, 1264n. 6
Vaticanus graecus 2029, 84, 91
Vaticanus graecus 2219, 1495
Vaticanus latinus 8201, 642nn. 1, 6, 8, 11
Vatopedi 3:106, 1176, 1179n. 1
Vatopedi 322, 84, 91
Vindobonensis historicus graecus 55, 1625
Vindobonensis philologicus graecus 95, 1264n. 8 unnamed, of Theodore the Studite's Small Catecheses, 89 unnamed Muscovite, 59, 62

manuscripts (types of): authenticated copy, 13-14; autograph, 13, 14, 19, 273n. 7, 564, 637, 649, 727, 880n. 2, 987n. 1, 1043, 1107, 1179n. 1, 1389, 1408, 1613; bilingual, 508; Georgian, 507; Greek, 566, 1319; illuminated, 1512; isotypes, 13, 19, 126, 128n. 1, 168, 189, 283n. 1, 305, 329; Italian, 566; miniatures in, 1512, 1521n. 3; modern copies, 14, 128n. 1; Old Church Slavonic, 14, 45, 59, 61 manuscripts, location of: Archivio de Stato (Catania), 621; Bačkovo monastery, 508; Berlin, 1512; Bibliotheca Marciana (Venice), 1320; Bibliothèque Nationale (Paris), 378, 1320, 1339; Bodleian Library (Oxford), 59, 62, 143, 144, 1462; British Library, 13; Crete, 143; Docheiariou monastery (Mount Athos), 18; Edinburgh University, 13; Escorial library, 1199n. 9, 1320; Esphigmenou monastery, 649; Evergetis scriptorium, 455; Galesios monastery, 150, 151; Geromeri monastery, 1396; Greek patriarchate of Jerusalem, 1313; Historical Library (Moscow), 1462, 1466n. 4; Historical Museum (Moscow), 148; Holy Martyrs monastery (Lakedaimon), 313; Iveron monastery (Mount Athos), 13, 18, 172n. 2, 1613; Kutlumus monastery (Mount Athos), 13, 18; Latros, 136, 137; Lavra monastery (Mount Athos), 151, 213; Lincoln College (Oxford), 13; Mar Saba (Jerusalem), 1312, 1313; Meteora (Thessaly), 1456; National Library (Athens), 19, 326; Patmos monastery, 564, 566, 567, 568; Patmos' Stylos dependency (Crete), 566; Patriarchal Library (Istanbul), 973; Public Library, St. Petersburg, 872, 880n. 2; St. Catherine's monastery (Mount Sinai), 378; St. Gerasimos monastery (Cephalonia), 15, n. 48; University of Jena, 638; University of Messina, 637; University of Turin, 1319; Vatican Library, 1320; Vatopedi monastery (Mount Athos), 19

maphoria. See clothing (articles of) and Glossary marble. See building materials (specific) margounia (baskets). See handicrafts and handiwork markets (emporia): of Brachionion, 769; of Koila (in Chersonesos), 770; of Lakedaimon, 315, 320; of Madytos, 770; Sagoudaous, 829

GENERAL INDEX

martyrs. See relics and relics (specific) masonry, rubble (enchoregos). See building materials (specific) mastic oil (schinelaion). See oils (specific kinds) mastrapas (water container). See utensils, household masturbation. See vices, monastic matins. See hours, liturgical (specific) matzoukation. See taxes and fiscal obligations (specific) meals: abandonment of common, 426; absence of superior and officials from, 1005, 1496, 1501; equal portions at, 34, 490-91, 1508, 1547; frequency of, 110AB, 226, 482, 535, 691, 693, 729, 814, 901, 917, 1008, 1065, 1198, 1204, 1325, 1326, 1334, 1547, 1598, 1661, 1700, 1701, 1704, 1708, 1710, 1711, 1712, 1713; number of courses/dishes at, 110AB, 111AB, 395, 396, 512, 533-34, 691, 692, 693, 741, 742, 744, 813, 814, 914, 965, 970, 1006, 1008, 1063, 1064, 1086, 1087, 1112, 1144, 1204, 1275, 1321, 1322, 1323, 1325, 1326, 1497, 1598, 1698-1715; punishment for lateness or absence at, 27, 34, 478, 479, 480, 956, 965, 811, 812, 909, 914, 1009, 1066, 1142, 1143; rations in place of, 227, 1716; readings at, see reading (times and places for); secret eating and drinking, see vices, monastic; served to the sick, 653, 696; silence at, 478-79, 533, 744, 811, 909, 1005, 1062, 1142, 1210, 1227, 1274, 1327, 1501, 1508, 1548; timing of, 108AB-109AB, 223, 394, 396, 399, 482, 535, 693, 814, 917, 1008, 1064, 1145. See also diet; food; meals (specific); meals (types of); and refectories meals (specific): collation (diaklysmos), 116n. 27, 350, 405, 406, 478, 481, 693, 759, 810, 814, 915, 965, 1005, 1007, 1062, 1064; common, 46, 152, 158, 956, 962, 965, 1177, 1183; Easter Sunday, 535, 1712; evening or “supper,” 92, 109AB, 121, 226, 394, 399, 401, 480, 691, 693, 729, 735, 745-46, 812, 814, 901, 912, 1006, 1063, 1065, 1143, 1144, 1146, 1197, 1204, 1320, 1321, 1322, 1325, 1697-1710, 1712, 1714-15; memorial (agape), 56, 58n. 9, 435, 521, 544; midday, “dinner,” or “main,” 92, 109AB, 110A, 225, 226, 399, 480, 482, 653, 691, 693, 729, 735, 743-45, 746, 901, 980, 1006, 1063, 1065, 1143, 1198, 1204, 1261, 1273, 1325, 1697-1716; refreshments and snacks, 395, 396, 397, 480, 482, 534, 691, 692, 693, 744, 747, 813, 814, 914, 1006, 1007, 1008, 1063, 1064, 1144, 1561, 1562, 1598, 1697, 1701, 1702, 1704, 1709, 1710, 1713; special fare/treat (diakrasis), xxvii, 156, 165n. 4, 183, 184, 481, 701, 702 meals (types of): bountiful, 729; costly, 1516, 1555. See also diet (types of) measures (cups of wine, exagia/krasobolia), 512, 533, 534, 535, 544, 840, 901, 1696; customary, 110AB, 111AB, 226, 395, 396, 398, 914, 1006, 1063, 1144, 1145, 1146, 1699, 1702-4, 1708, 1709; greater/larger, 480, 481, 482, 691, 692, 812, 813, 840, 915, 917, 1006, 1007, 1008, 1063, 1064, 1065, 1697, 1698, 1700, 1702, 1703, 1705, 1706, 1708-10; “greater than customary,” 746, 1713; monastic, 826, 1698; two-thirds, 1007, 1064, 1704; smaller (half), 691, 692, 693, 813, 915, 917, 1006, 1063, 1064, 1697, 1702-5, 1708; usual, 747, 1701, 1704 measures (liquid, metra), 343, 350, 353, 962, 1267, 1272, 1292, 1562; annonika, 756, 765, 766; maritime, 761, 766, 1087. See also Glossary measures (surface and weight): cubit (pechys), 707, 711; exagion/hexagion, 394, 395, 716, 742, 1600; jugerum, 55, 58n. 4; kentnarion, 556, 681; kokkion, 1188, 1189; lepton, 712; litra, 342, 350, 357, 369, 548, 600, 699, 716, 717, 741, 761, 762, 766, 764, 1277, 1334, 1562; modios (surface), 712, 713, 1187-89, (weight), 260, 286, 340, 549, 550, 697, 698, 699, 702, 741, 742, 756, 762, 763, 764, 766, 829, 840, 962, 1087, 1267, 1277, 1279, 1280, 1292, 1557, 1562, 1660; modios, local (choritikos), 803, 830; modios, maritime (thalassios), 699, 747, 755, 766, 767, 1281, 1555; modios, monastic, 759, 761, 764, 766; modios, small (modopoulion), 713; modios annonikos, 343, 763, 764, 765, 766, 1272, 1281, 1555, 1565; ounce (oungia), 357, 717, 968, 1415, 1417, 1421 (see also Glossary); peisa, 761, 762, 764, 766; plinthion, 266n. 17; pseudo-cubit, 1671; span (spithame), 369, 1671; steelyard (kampanos), 761, 777n. 70; tetartion, 1555; zeugarion, 1639. See also Glossary for Greek terms meat. See foods (particular kinds)

GENERAL INDEX

Meatfare (Apokreo/Kreophagos), week of. See weeks of the liturgical year and commemorations (specific) medical supplies. See supplies, medical medicine and medical assistance: hostility towards, 39; and medical supplies, see supplies, medical; regulation of use, xv, 25, 28, 460, 497, 729, 745, 830-32, 1506, 1509; use of external providers for, 868, 1516, 1550, 1628, 1642-43. See also hospitals and infirmaries megale Paraskeve (Good/Holy Friday). See feasts (specific, movable) and dietary rules megale Pempte (Holy Thursday). See feasts (specific, movable); dietary rules; and liturgies (specific) mega Sabbaton (Holy Saturday). See feasts (specific, movable); dietary rules; and liturgies (specific) megas domestikos. See imperial officials (specific) megas domestikos of the West. See imperial officials (specific) megas doux. See imperial officials (specific) megas doux ton scholon in the East. See imperial officials (specific) megas droungarios. See imperial officials (specific) megas konostaulos. See titles and dignities megas logariastes. See imperial officials (specific) megas primikerios. See titles and dignities megas stratopedarches. See imperial officials (specific)

GENERAL INDEX

meizoterós (superintendent). See hospitals and infirmaries, staff of (specific)

Melissa. See books, miscellaneous

memoranda, official (hypomnemata): countersigning of, 1043; episcopal, 860, 954, 957, 960, 961, 963, 964, 968, 1673 (see also monastic foundation documents, (31) Areia, Memorandum [M]); patriarchal, 599, 619, 860, 867, 868, 869, 870, 876, 879 and n. 1, 919, 955, 974, 981, 986, 992, 993, 994, 999, 1036, 1043, 1046, 1048, 1049, 1050, 1051, 1054, 1102; of superiors, 1352, 1416 memorial donations and services. See commemorations, liturgical mena (pitcher, green). See utensils, household

Menaion. See books, liturgical

Menologion. See books, liturgical merarches. See imperial officials (specific) mercenaries. See soldiers (types of) mesaplekton. See taxes and fiscal obligations (specific) mescid (mosque without pulpit). See mosques mesonyktikon (midnight office). See hours, liturgical (specific) mesoria. See hours, liturgical (specific)

Metamorphosis (Transfiguration). See feasts (specific, fixed), icons (specific), and monasteries (specific) metanoia. See obeisance and prostrations

Metastasis. See Dormition and Glossary metheortoi (afterfeasts). See feasts (types of) metochia (dependent monasteries). See monasteries (types of) metochiarios (superintendent of the dependencies). See monastic officials (specific) metron. See measures (liquid) metropolitans: abandonment of see, 137; disputes with monasteries, 150; endowment of monasteries by, 148; endowment of sees, 299; honoraria of, 1218; promotion of monks as, 1314, 1316; relations with patrons, 49, 148, 149, 298, 513, 527, 1101, 1179

metropolitans' rights: conceded, 1240; rejected or restricted, 149, 200, 211, 1199, 1200, 1213, 1218, 1396

GENERAL INDEX

metropolitans' rights (specific): blessing (sphragis) of the superior, 1101, 1179, 1184, 1213-14, 1219; correction (diorthosis) of spiritual faults, 1101, 1179, 1184, 1199, 1200, 1213, 1218; counsel superior, 794, 819; financial oversight, 1099, 1178, 1179, 1184; gift of wax, 1213, 1218; honoraria (kaniskia), 1213, 1218; installation (cheirotonia) of superior, xxx, 800, 816, 1101, 1184, 1179, 1184; investigation (anakrasis) of spiritual faults, 1199, 1200; kanonikon, 169, 1588, 1595; liturgical commemoration (anaphora), 513, 527, 1101, 1179, 1184, 1213, 1218, 1595; mediation of disputes, xxxvi, 800, 819, 1179, 1184; overlordship, 1489; oversight/supervision (epiteresis), 1210, 1217

miara (mice). See animals (specific) midnight office. See hours, liturgical (specific) military services: army, Byzantine, 377; navy, Byzantine, 60, 1493 millet. See grain (specific kinds) mills: animal-driven, 526; donkey-driven, 836; on estates, 770, 771; horse-driven, 759, 760, 764; owned by monasteries, see endowments (specific); two-eyed (dyophthalmos), 1279; water, 526, 1178, 1182, 1187, 1188, 1190; winter, 1280

ministeriales. See peasants (types of) minos (course/dish). See meals miracles. See supernatural phenomena misogyny. See women

mitaton (billeting). See taxes and fiscal obligations (specific)

Mithridate. See supplies, medical mnemosynon. See commemorations, liturgical (types of) mochlion (pestle). See supplies, medical mochthera (pigs). See animals (specific) modes (echoi): first, 102AB, 222; grave, 102A, 222; plagal, 98A, 99B, 102AB, 114B, 115A, 116n. 4, 221, 388, 908 modioi. See measures (surface and weight)

Moechian controversy. See religious controversies monarchs (non-Byzantine): issuance of chrysobulls by, 1580; patronage of monasteries by, 125, 126, 456, 508, 566, 622, 622-24, 625, 628, 633, 638, 641, 644, 1343, 1352, 1409, 1410, 1456, 1580; protection of monasteries by, 954, 1113, 1164, 1319, 1409

GENERAL INDEX

monasteries (monasteria, monai, phrontisteria, semneia):

abandonment of, 126, 955 access to, 1654
artisanal activity at, 86
capital improvement of, 869 commercial/entrepreneurial activities of, 215, 232, 233, 238, 239-40, 247, 248, 253, 281, 282, 285-86, 289, 567, 1463, 1465, 1472, 1630, 1656
concession of prohibited, 196 confiscation of, 71, 639, 783, 1097, 1106, 1114, 1127, 1210, 1238, 1289, 1290 construction of, 126, 507, 514, 565, 637, 1338, 1352, 1636 costs of maintaining, 48 destruction of, 144, 150, 153, 378, 1238, 1247 dispersal of, 377
donations of monks to, 427, 435-36 economic base of, 47 economic development of, 248 endowment of, see endowments episcopal rights over, see episcopal rights friendly relations between, 28, 128, 209 historical continuity of, 45, 135 imperial patronage and protection of, see emperors and the imperial government: patronage, oversight, and control of monasteries imperial rights over, see emperors and the imperial government, rights of inalterability of, 702-3 independent financial management of, 315, 319-20 inheritance of, 1579, 1586, 1593 inheritance of property by, 331, 355 internal disputes in, 463 landed endowments of, see endowments leadership of, 461, 483-85 legal status of, 43
maintenance of, 615, 865
metaphoric representation of, xv movable properties of, see endowments (specific) as mystical bodies, 86 not to store up wealth, 72, 247, 1208, 1229 origins of, 135
papal protection of, 639
patriarchal rights over, see patriarchal rights patrons' rights in, see patrons, rights of physical descriptions of, xv, 833 private ownership of (idioktesia), see private religious foundations (types of) purchase of site for, 1625, 1636 relations of with kelliotai and solitaries, 247, 248, 260-61, 570, 580, 590-91 repair, rebuilding, reconstruction, restoration, and renovation of, 69, 126, 201, 202, 378, 508, 622, 624, 702, 727, 833, 973, 974, 1207, 1254, 1304, 1313, 1339, 1374, 1375, 1378, 1405, 1406, 1412, 1426, 1437, 1451, 1585, 1594 retirement to/refuge in, 975, 1042

GENERAL INDEX

monasteries (cont.)

rivalries between, 208, 209, 210, 232 sacking of, 278
sale, donation, and bequeathing of, 45, 46, 47, 52, 55, 198, 233, 237, 296, 456, 708, 955, 1305, 1308, 1312, 1313
size and scale of, xvi-xvii, 34, 38, 48, 164, 176, 196, 198, 200, 287, 304, 311, 346, 612, 869, 1296-97, 1486
size limitations on, 172
subordination of, 144, 377, 1320 suppression of, 639 wealth of, xxxiv, 72, 1226

monasteries (parts of):

auxiliary buildings, 869
bakery (mankipeion), 641, 645, 735, 760, 1178, 1182, 1342, 1360 bath/bathhouse, 460, 491, 730, 748, 788, 841, 847 bell towers, 802, 804, 1568 book station (topos biblion), 108AB cave, 1207
cell, superior's, 1489, 1631, 1637 cell for sick, 460, 497 cells for lay servants, 645 cemetery, 766, 789, 823, 973 chapel, see churches and chapels (monastic) chapel, funerary, 516, 548, 730, 753, 766, 782, 849 circuit-wall, 581, 645, 703, 799, 843, 849 cistern, 137, 728, 782, 793, 833, 847 column (stylos), 137, 149, 152 confinement, places of (aphoristria), xxii, 60, 108AB, 121, 225, 455, 973 court, 645 court, divine, 645
courtyard, 1342, 1359 dormitory, 135, 793, 832
fortifications, 565, 1303, 1414, 1415, 1416, 1422, 1492, 1585, 1609 garden, 1342, 1358-59, 1563, 1653
gate (pyle; Lat.: porta), xxxv, 184, 228, 342, 448, 482, 494, 495, 496, 535, 741, 747, 749, 766, 801, 802, 815, 827, 936, 1003-4, 1045, 1060-61, 1078, 1087, 1088, 1118, 1156, 1229, 1230, 1277, 1292, 1360, 1366, 1489-90, 1546, 1588, 1589, 1597, 1609 gate, inner, 679 gate, outer, 679
granaries, 645, 799 gravestone, 126
grotto, 137
hegoumeneion, 1107 heroon, 753 (see also Glossary) kitchen, 1003, 1045, 1060, 1178, 1182, 1342, 1360 latrines (soteria), 847 lavatories (parakellia), 670, 711

GENERAL INDEX

monasteries (cont.)

libraries, 31, 93, 108AB, 150, 151, 213, 216, 452, 508, 566, 568, 619, 624, 641, 727, 1209, 1229, 1237, 1304 lodging facilities, 568 mill, 641, 645, 836 museum, 568
ossuary, 509
palisade, 1117, 1130
philanthropic institutions, 1311 private residences, 1013, 1631, 1637 quarters for official visitors (archontarikia), 609, 641, 644, 645 sanatorium (triklinarion), 729, 730, 745 schools, 447, 516, 550, 568 scriptorium, 455, 1237, 1312 stables, 1342, 1360
storehouse/storeroom (docheion), 490, 491, 512, 822, 924, 925, 1151, 1274, 1275, 1276, 1342, 1360, 1539, 1543, 1628, 1643 strangers' burial place (xenotaphion), 465, 495 tetrakrikoxylon, 711 (See also Glossary) towers, 126, 127, 622, 628, 630, 631, 1303, 1304, 1419, 1460, 1609, 1639; treasury, 213, 785, 958, 962, 1212, 1507, 1508 wall, enclosure, 137, 641, 787, 789, 795, 837, 841, 843, 1303 wall, fortified, 565 wall, outer periphery, 794, 830 wall, perimeter, 1043
wall, S-shaped, 843 wardrobe, (vestiarion), 817, 822, 826
wine cellar, 799
See also cells, monastic; churches and chapels (monastic); convents, (parts of); furniture; kitchens; refectories; and semantron monasteries (specific):

Agathou, Ta (CP), 121, 122, 123 of the Akapniou (Thessalonike), 1433, 1434
Alessano (Apulia), 1319
Alypiou (Mount Athos), 1409
Amalfitans (Mount Athos), 287
Anargyroi (CP), 283n. 2
Anargyroi (Mount Athos), 291
Anthemiou (CP), 730, 752, 753, 771, 776n. 57
Archangel Michael (Mount Auxentios), xii, 1097, 1098, 1099, 1106, 1207-35, 1301 Archangel Michael (Val Demone), 633 (see also below, Archistrategos and St. Michael) Archistrategos (Mount Athos), 291
Berroiotou (Mount Athos), 291
Bessai, see below, Mother of God (Bessai)
Black Mountain (Luke of Anazarbos', near Antioch), 377, 378, 383n. 1
Black Mountain (Nikon's, near Antioch), 377, 378, 383n. 1
Blakserai (CP), 727

GENERAL INDEX

monasteries (cont.)

- Bordai (Opsikion), 731, 772, 777n. 95
 Castro (Apulia), 1319
 Caves (Kiev), 88
 Chachou (location uncertain), 556
 Charsianites, see below, Mother of God Nea Peribleptos
 Chenolakkos (near Bursa), 1251
 Chilandar (Mount Athos), see below, Hilandar
 Chora (CP), 782, 790, 838, 839, 840
 Christ All-Merciful (Panoiktirmon, CP), 326-76
 Christ All-Seeing (Pantepoptes, CP), 1280
 Christ Pantokrator (CP), 611, 617, 649, 725-81, 843, 870, 1104, 1493n. 20, 1626
 [Christ] Philanthropos (CP), xix, 89, 649, 699, 705, 707, 861, 974, 975, 993, 1030, 1032, 1034, 1035, 1036, 1037, 1384
 Christ Philanthropos (possibly another, also CP), 1383, 1384
 Christ Savior of Koutloumousi (Mount Athos), 13, 18, 1408-32
 Christ the Savior (Christos Soter, CP), 1251
 Christ the Savior (Latroi), 135
 Christ the Savior (Oulas, location uncertain), 1291
 Christ-Who-Is (Ematha), xxi, 150, 1097, 1106, 1196-1206
 Chryse Petra (Pontos/Paphlagonia), 313
 Cîteaux (France), xii
 Cluny (France), xii, xvii of the Despot [John Palaiologos] (near Latroi [?]), 1251
 Divine Mother (Patriarch Alexios Studites), 16n. 49, 88
 Docheiariou (Mount Athos), 18, 291, 1303-10, 1391, 1392, 1394, 1428
 Dorotheos of Gaza (Palestine), 87
 Doupiane, skete of (Thessaly), 1455, 1456
 Elegmoi (Kurşunlu), see below, Mother of God ton Heliou Bomon
 Elusa (Idumaea), 948n. 77
 Epiphanius (Upper Egypt), 52
 Esphigmenou (Mount Athos), 291
 Forty Martyrs (Lakedaimon), 313
 Fulda (Germany), xvii
 Galakrenai (near Chalcedon), 730, 752, 753, 772, 776n. 59
 Galesios (confederation of), 150, 1097, 1106
 Galiagra (Mount Athos), 291
 Golgotha (Wallachia), 1456
 Gomatou (near Hierissos), 209
 Gouverneto (Akrotiri, Crete), 144
 Heptastomos, lavra of (Sabaitic, near Jerusalem), 1311
 Hexapterygon (Bursa), 1251
 Hilandar (Mount Athos), 126, 456, 457, 1331, 1332, 1428
 Holy Anargyroi (near Stroumitza), 1673
 Holy Cross (Ktima, Cyprus), 1298, 1338-73 (see also hermitage)
 Holy Cross “of the Iberians” (location uncertain), 1301, 1406
 Holy Philadelphoi (Val Demone), 633
 Holy Trinity (Nicaea), 1251

GENERAL INDEX

monasteries (cont.)

- Horaiozele (location uncertain), 772, 777n. 96
 Iannoba (Thrace), 524
 Iasites (CP), 1032
 Ivan Shishman (Bulgaria), 125
 Iveron (Mount Athos), 13, 18, 168, 172n. 2, 205, 209, 210, 285, 289, 291, 507, 1384, 1428;
 Jeremias, lavra of (Sabaitic, near Jerusalem), 1311
 Jumièges, xvii
 Kabalos (near Bursa), 1251
 Kaletze (Mount Athos), 291
 Kanchres (location uncertain), 769 ton Karkasion (Hierapetra, Crete), 1462, 1463, 1465
 Karya (Latros), 135, 137
 Karyes (Mount Athos), 206, 208, 232, 285, 289, 1331
 Kaspakos (Mount Athos), 291
 Kellia (Egypt), 942, 949n. 81
 Kellia (Thessaly), 582
 Kolobou (near Hierissos), 195, 198, 232
 Kosmidion, (CP), 1287, 1557, 1570n. 54, 1625, 1636
 Koula/Koulas (near Serres), 1435, 1585, 1609, 1610n. 24
 Kounion (Lydia), 1182, 1191n. 5
 Koutloumousi, see above, Christ Savior of Koutloumousi
 Kykko (Cyprus), 1108
 Kyriotissa (CP), 1251, 1563
 Lady Euphrosyne (Libadion, Macedonia/Thrace [?]), 555
 Latros (confederation), 135-42, 452, 564, 574, 575, 599, 619, 1237, 1338, 1351
 Lavra, Great (Mount Athos), 48, 88, 151, 193-99, 205-31, 232-34, 237, 239, 240, 241, 245-70, 271-80, 283, 285, 286, 287, 289, 290, 291, 299, 567, 568, 1237, 1303, 1311, 1428, 1434, 1495, 1615, 1618, 1619
 Lérins (France), xvii
 Life-Giving Cross (Jerusalem), 1405, 1406
 Lips (CP), 1254
 Lord Athanasios (Mount Athos), 291
 Loutrakiou (Mount Athos), 291
 Makariotissa (near Vizye), 1251
 Mangana (CP), 363, 367
 Manikophagos (location uncertain), 1251
 Manuel (CP), 455
 Mar Mattai (West Syria), 40
 Mar Zakkai (Syria), 41
 Mathaia (Galesios), 157
 Medikariou (Chalcedon ?), 730, 752, 766, 771, 776n. 58
 Mega Spelaion (Peloponnesos), 13, 727
 Melendugno (Apulia), 1319
 Mese (Mount Athos), 239, 242n. 8 (see also below, Protaton)
 Metanoia (Alexandria), 33
 Meteora/Great Meteoron, see below, Transfiguration
 Minervino (Apulia), 1319
 Monokastanon (Asiatic coast), 730, 752, 753, 771, 776n. 56

GENERAL INDEX

monasteries (cont.)

- Monte Cassino (Italy), xii, 456, 457, 1104
 Mosele (CP), 1563, 1570n. 72
 Mother of God (Areia, Peloponnesos), 954-72
 Mother of God (Bessai), 149, 150, 153, 164
 Mother of God (Galesios), 149, 152, 164
 Mother of God (Hilandar, Mount Athos), 1333, 1428
 Mother of God (Mount Athos), 291
 (another) Mother of God (Mount Athos), 291
 Mother of God (Mount Tmolos), 296, 297, 310-12
 Mother of God (Myriokephala, Crete), 143-47
 Mother of God (Pelion, Kos), 564-65, 575, 581, 600, 601
 Mother of God (Skoteine, near Philadelphia), 1096, 1176-95
 Mother of God (Val Demone), 633
 (another) Mother of God (Val Demone), 633
 Mother of God Acheiropoietos (Kellibara), 1106, 1237-38
 Mother of God of Alexios Studites, see above, Divine Mother
 Mother of God Antiphonetria (Myriokephala, Crete), 143, 144
 Mother of God of Daphne (Rhaidestos), 343
 Mother of God Eleousa (Stroumitza), 167-91, 1487, 1688, 1675
 Mother of God Evergetis (CP), 9, 31, 89, 211, 448, 449, 452, 454-506, 869, 1104, 1493n. 21, 1494
 Mother of God of Gomatou (Mount Athos), 203
 Mother of God Gorgoepekoos (CP), 1563, 1570n. 73
 Mother of God ton Heliou Bomon (Kurşunlu), 865, 869, 870, 1042-91
 Mother of God Hodegetria (Geromeri, Epiros), 1396-1403
 Mother of God ton Hodegon (CP), 726
 Mother of God Kosmosoteira (Bera, Thrace), 620, 782-856
 Mother of God of Machairas (Cyprus), 457, 1104, 1107-75, 1299
 Mother of God Nea Peribleptos (Monastery of Charsianeites) (CP), 90, 1043, 1462, 1487, 1489, 1492, 1493n. 20, 1625-66
 Mother of God the “New Hodegetria” (Rossano), 637
 Mother of God Pantanassa (Hagia Glykeria), 726
 Mother of God Petrizonitissa/Petriziotissa/Petritsoni (Bačkovo), 89, 450, 507-63
 Mother of God Psychosostis (CP), 770
 Mother of God ton Roidiou (Roidion), 309, 377, 425-39
 Mother of God ton Stylou (Stylos, at Latros), 135-42, 564, 1237, 1238, 1239
 Mount Kyminas (Mount Olympos, Bithynia), 206, 250, 251
 Myrelaion (CP), 973
 Nea Gephyra (Lakedaimon), 296, 323-25
 Nea Mone (Chios), 1179, 1181, 1190
 Nea Mone (Thessalonike), 1301, 1433-54
 New Lavra (Sabaitic, near Jerusalem), 1311
 New Sion, see above, Holy Cross
 Nossiai (Asiatic coast), 730, 752, 753, 771, 776n. 55
 Panagios (CP), 205, 210, 441, 442, 445, 446, 450, 510, 519, 520, 534, 536, 539, 557, 609
 Panteleemon (Mount Athos), 1331, 1408
 Parorion (Lakedaimon), 319
 Patir (Italy), 7n. 49

GENERAL INDEX

monasteries (cont.)

- Patras (Pylopithia, location uncertain), 1251
Pausolyte (Galesios), 164
Peribleptos (CP), 845, 1032
Petra (CP), 16n. 49, 1043
Petra (hermitage on Kos), 600
Petrizos (of Empress Maria, location uncertain), 507
Phakenou (Mount Athos), 291
Phalakrou (Mount Athos), 291
Philadelphou (Mount Athos), 291
Philotheou (Mount Athos), 1428
Piperatos (location unknown), 202, 299
Policastro (Apulia), 1319
Prémontr  (France), xii
Protaton (Mount Athos), 205, 208, 232, 241, 1331
Psamathia (CP), 120-24
Raiktor (Chalcedon), 1251
Requier (France), xvii
Resurrection (Anastasis) (CP), 150, 1301, 1374-82, 1493n. 20
Resurrection (Galesios), 149, 151, 152, 164
Rila, the "Old Hermitage" (western Bulgaria), 125-34, 168
St. Andrew (Evergetis, CP), 457
St. Andrew of Peristerai (near Thessalonike), 195, 208, 211, 246, 248, 249n. 8, 263-64, 270n. 51
St. Antony (Mount Auxentios), 405, 406
St. Auxentios (Chalcedon), 167, 174
St. Bartholomew of Trigona (near Sinopoli), 638
St. Basianos (CP), 870, 1043, 1044, 1045, 1046, 1049, 1056, 1086
St. Catherine (Mount Sinai), 377, 378, 425, 1237, 1396
St. Constantine (near Philadelphia), 1188
St. Demetrios of the Palaiologoi-Kellibara (CP), 1097, 1104, 1106, 1237-53, 1301, 1489, 1490, 1493n. 20, 1505-11
St. Dimiter (Bulgaria), 125
St. Diomedous (CP), 121, 122n. 4
St. Ephraem (Mount Athos), 291
St. Eustathios (Mount Athos), 248, 252-53
St. Eustratios (Mount Athos), 291
St. Eustratios (Mount Olympos), 1042
St. Euthymios (monydrion of Jerusalem), 148, 1301, 1404-7
St. Euthymios the Great (near Jerusalem), 1404
St. George (hermitage of, Mt. Pappikion, Thrace), 524, 556
St. George (Phlethra, near Latros [?]), 1251
St. George (Rhaidestos), 343
St. George Kouperiotos (location uncertain), 1251
St. John Chrysostom (CP), 1369, 1371n. 19
St. John Chrysostom (Cyprus), 1338, 1345, 1350, 1351, 1370n. 1
St. John the Forerunner (Mount Athos), 1389-95
St. John the Forerunner (Palestine), 782

GENERAL INDEX

monasteries (cont.)

- St. John the Forerunner (Pantelleria), 59-66
- St. John the Forerunner (Petra, CP), 89
- St. John the Forerunner (Val Demone), 633
- St. John the Forerunner (Serres), 1585, 1594
- St. John the Forerunner on Mount Menoikeion (near Serres), xii, 7, 1487, 1488, 1489, 1490, 1491, 1493, 1579-1612
- St. John the Forerunner of Phoberos (Bosphorus), 619, 869, 872-953, 978
- St. John the Merciful (near Philadelphia), 1182
- St. John Stoudios (CP), 48, 67-119, 120, 121, 122, 198, 205, 214, 232, 331, 351-52, 379, 449, 574, 596, 609, 1032, 1104, 1433, 1493n. 20, 1637
- St. John the Theologian (Patmos), 90, 136, 452, 564-606, 619, 1299
- St. Luke (Bulgaria), 125; St. Mamas (CP), 865, 869, 870, 973-1041, 1043
- St. Marina (Chrysopolis), 974
- St. Marina (Galesios), 148, 149
- St. Mark (Val Demone), 633
- St. Michael (Kataskepe, CP), 870
- St. Nicholas (Daphne), 1303
- St. Nicholas (Mount Athos), 291
- St. Nicholas (location uncertain), 1251
- St. Nicholas (Petritzonitissa, Prilonkos), 550
- St. Nicholas (near Philadelphia), 1182
- St. Nicholas (near Serres), 551
- St. Nicholas (Val Demone), 633
- St. Nicholas of Kastellon (Val Demone), 630
- St. Nicholas of Molibotos (CP, outside the Golden Gate), 771
- St. Nicholas Phalkon (Rhaidestos), 343
- St. Nikephoros (Mount Athos), 291
- St. Onouphrios (Mount Athos), 291
- St. Panteleemon (Mount Athos), 126, 1043
- St. Peter (Mount Athos), 291
- St. Peter (Val Demone), 633
- (another) St. Peter (Val Demone), 633
- St. Philip of Fragala (Val Demone), 613, 621-36
- St. Phoibammon (Upper Egypt), 51-58
- St. Photios (Thessalonike), 1433
- St. Prokopios (Aulax, near Philadelphia), 1182, 1186, 1187, 1188, 1189, 1190
- St. Sabas, Great Lavra of (Arabic Mar Saba, near Jerusalem), 45, 86, 148, 378, 380, 426, 430, 437, 1298, 1299, 1300, 1311-18
- St. Symeon the Wonderworker (also “the Younger”; in Syria), 377, 378, 380, 426, 431, 437
- St. Thallelaios (Val Demone), 633
- Sts. Peter and Paul (Rila, Bulgaria), 126
- Sts. Sergios and Bakchos (CP), 120
- Saints (Cyprus), 207
- Saints (near Philadelphia), 1189
- Sakkoudion (Mount Olympos), 67, 68, 85, 86
- San Salvatore dell’ Acroterio (Messina), 609, 613, 615, 616, 623, 624, 637-48, 1299
- San Talleleo (Sicily), 624

GENERAL INDEX

monasteries (cont.)

Sant'Ippolito (Sicily), 624
Satyros (on the Asiatic coast of Marmara), 620, 730, 752, 753, 771, 776n. 60
Savior (Mount Athos), 291
Savior (Soter, Galesios), 149, 152, 164
Savior, the Mother of God, and St. Kyriake (Lakedaimon), 313-22
Sisoos (Mount Athos), 291
Skenouriou (Strobilos, Asia Minor), 564, 565, 581, 583, 597
Sthlavochorion (Lakedaimon), 319
Stylos (Crete), 566, 567
Theoktistos (Mount Athos), 242
Theologian (Vizye), 1251
Theologian (location uncertain), 1251
Tima (location uncertain), 1251
Transfiguration (Metamorphosis, Meteora, Thessaly), 18, 1302, 1455-61
Trulazzo (Apulia), 1319
Tzympha (location uncertain), 1251
Vaste (Apulia), 1319
Vatopedi (Mount Athos), 13, 19, 91, 199, 210, 285, 289, 291, 1331, 1428
Xenophon (Mount Athos), 1304
Xerokastrou (Mount Athos), 291
Xeropotamou (Mount Athos), 291, 1303
Zagora (see above, Kellia in Thessaly)
Zoodochos Pege (CP), 368, 712, 714
Zygou (Mount Athos), 290, 291 future dependency of Lavra (CP), 247, 248, 259 unknown monastery dedicated to a martyr saint, 93 unnamed dependency of Eleousa, 170, 186, 189n. 10
unnamed dependency of Lavra (Mount Athos), 276 unnamed dependency of St. Demetrios-Kellibara near Manias (location uncertain), 1251 unnamed dependency of St. George of Mount Pappikion (Mosynopolis), 524 unnamed monastery (Western), xiv unnamed monastery near Attaleia, 148 unnamed monastery near the Jordan River (Mar Saba?), 1396 unnamed monastery in Thessalonike, 1422 monasteries (types of):

abandoned/deserted, 69, 508, 622, 628, 630, 639, 955, 1303, 1304, 1312, 1331, 1580 administrative headquarters, 208 ancestral, 1405, 1406
Arab, 940
archimandral, 623
aristocratic, 327
Basilian, 21-30, 624, 639
Benedictine, 456, 457, 624
Bulgarian, 125-27
Cappadocian, 1311
cenobitic, 752, 753, 1237, 1304, 1311, 1410 (see also cenobiticism)

GENERAL INDEX

monasteries (cont.)

- in charistike, 331, 343
- Cisterican, xxxv
- communal, 1097
- confederations of, 70, 84, 86, 136, 150, 452, 574, 575, 599, 619, 1043, 1097, 1106, 1237
- dependent (Gr.: metochia; Slav.: metoh)/daughter, xxii, xxxv, 49, 68, 121, 122, 123, 126, 144, 168, 169, 170, 209, 210, 211, 213, 247, 248, 252-53, 259, 272, 276, 302, 313, 315, 319, 456, 457, 458, 462, 492, 516, 550, 566, 616-17, 620, 621, 622, 624, 625, 633, 634, 638, 640, 641, 646, 726, 727, 728, 729, 730, 731, 733, 751, 752-53, 771, 772, 863, 870, 958, 962, 1043, 1044, 1045, 1046, 1048, 1049, 1056, 1069, 1086, 1096, 1099, 1102, 1148, 1154, 1176, 1178, 1182, 1186-90, 1237, 1238, 1239, 1240, 1250, 1251, 1259, 1265, 1295, 1300, 1301, 1303, 1304, 1314, 1316, 1319, 1331, 1339, 1389, 1390, 1405, 1434, 1456, 1557, 1561, 1562, 1585, 1594, 1609, 1615, 1619, 1621, 1673
- depository, 1047, 1076
- dilapidated, 209
- double, xviii, 649, 652, 861, 1383, 1466, 1470-71, 1473
- dual nationality, 1313, 1317
- episcopal, see episcopal (diocesan) monasteries
- expanding/expansionist, 247, 248, 281, 983, 1004
- fortified, 783
- Georgian, 205, 507, 522, 1405, 1406
- great, 210, 283
- Greek (Sicilian), 622, 624, 638, 639
- hermitage (enkleistra), 455, 483, 1351-52, 1358, 1360, 1369, 1370
- imperial, see imperial monasteries
- independent and self-governing, see independent and self-governing monasteries
- kelliotic, 753, 1331-37
- kephalika*, 623, 638
- koinobia*, xxxii, 201
- large/larger, 211, 234, 282, 728, 1408
- lavras, xxxii, xxxiii, 201, 206, 207, 1311
- main/mother houses, 144, 1045, 1048, 1239, 1300, 1331, 1332, 1389, 1390
- mixed/hybrid, 136, 570, 580, 1237, 1311
- model, 253
- named after founder, 1630
- neighboring, xviii, 23, 28, 958, 969, 1209, 1229, 1409, 1433, 1462, 1463, 1465
- Pachomian, 34-37
- patriarchal, see patriarchal monasteries
- patrimonial, 564
- poor/mendicant, xxxiv, 1588, 1597
- post-Byzantine, 126-27, 144, 212-13, 1300
- principal/head, 622, 628, 641, 646, 726, 1319
- priorities, xxxii
- private/family, see private religious foundations (types of)
- provincial, 859
- ranking, 737
- rich, 208, 212

GENERAL INDEX

monasteries (cont.)

royal, 638
ruined/destroyed, 49, 310, 728, 869, 872, 974, 982, 992, 1106, 1207, 1239, 1287, 1320, 1389, 1404, 1406, 1437, 1451
Russian, 126
Serbian, 1304, 1331
skete, 213, 1455, 1636 (see also Glossary) small (monydriou), 208, 282, 1389, 1404, 1408, 1433 stauropegial, 1108, 1396
subdependent, 1239, 1240, 1250 subordinated, 623
surviving, 1409
Trapezuntine, 1405, 1406

monastic foundation documents:

(1) Apa Abraham, 2, 4, 13, 17, 18, 21, 36, 44, 45, 47, 51-58, 70, 71, 144, 232, 328, 1297, 1304

(2) Pantelleria, 3, 7, 14, 17, 21, 33, 37, 41, 44, 45, 46, 47, 59-66, 92, 1697

(3) Theodore Studites, xx, 2, 14, 15, 16, 17, 31, 44, 45, 46, 48, 67-83, 84, 86, 88, 89, 90, 127, 137, 138, 169, 193, 194, 208, 215, 246, 247, 248, 303, 378, 379, 382, 460, 461, 512, 570, 571, 640, 862, 984, 1214

(4) Stoudios, xi, xxii, 2, 4, 11, 15, 17, 21, 40, 44, 45, 46, 48, 60, 70, 84-119, 127, 169, 170, 171, 193, 194, 198, 210, 213-14, 215, 246, 247, 296, 380, 381, 382, 425, 442, 458, 459, 464, 465, 625, monastic foundation documents (con't.)

631, 640, 657, 956, 1320, 1345, 1582, 1697-98, 1700-1703, 1705-12, 1715; Version [A], 4, 11, 14, 15, 88, 91, 92, 93, 94n. 1, 97-115, 193, 213-14, 247, 382, 466, 1698, 1700-1703, 1705-12, 1715;
Version [B], 2n. 6, 11, 15, 16, 85, 88, 91, 92, 93, 94n. 1, 97-115, 193, 213-14, 382, 465-66, 1698, 1700-1703, 1705-12, 1715

(5) Euthymios, 7, 14, 16, 17, 44, 45, 48, 49, 52, 120-24, 144, 151, 169, 198, 296, 299, 608, 1239, 1627

(6) Rila, 6, 14, 17, 44, 45, 49, 125-34, 169, 245, 248, 296

(7) Latros, 5, 14, 16, 44, 45, 46, 49, 70, 135-42, 144, 151, 169, 296, 310, 569, 1237, 1312, 1497, 1697, 1699, 1701, 1707

(8) John Xenos, 5, 6, 8, 14, 44, 45, 49, 52, 143-47, 151, 169, 245, 296, 298, 304, 310, 328, 442, 1691

(9) Galesios, 5, 14, 17, 44, 45, 46, 49, 145n. 5, 148-66, 169, 170, 199, 204, 245, 281, 296, 298, 303, 304, 306, 426, 448, 460, 463, 465, 511, 512, 879

(10) Eleousa, xx, xxii, 5, 14, 15, 17, 45, 47, 49, 70, 71, 122, 167-91, 245, 304, 307, 308, 310, 328,

GENERAL INDEX

monastic foundation documents (cont.)

329, 442, 443, 511, 512, 513, 575, 610, 625, 654, 859, 957, 959, 982, 1485, 1588, 1667

(11) Ath. Rule, xxii, xxvi, 3, 4, 14, 15, 31, 60, 84, 88, 89, 90, 122, 171, 193, 194, 205-31, 232, 246, 247, 249n. 2, 272, 296, 379, 381, 442, 458, 461, 567, 568, 640, 956, 1044, 1345, 1485, 1582, 1613, 1614, 1615, 1696, 1698-1701, 1703, 1705-6, 1709-16

(12) Tzimiskes, xx, xxi, xxxiii, 3, 8, 13, 16, 20, 69, 89, 193, 194, 197, 198, 199, 205, 208, 210, 211, 215, 232-44, 247, 281, 282, 425, 609, 1484, 1485, 1613, 1615, 1616, 1696, 1701

(13) Ath. Typikon, xvi, xix, xxi, xxxii, 3, 4, 14, 15, 17, 70, 71, 84, 88, 89, 121, 127, 145n. 5, 193, 194, 196, 197, 205, 206, 207, 208, 216, 232, 245-70, 271, 272, 273, 296, 297, 299, 302, 303, 327, 379, 441, 442, 443, 444, 459, 460, 465, 466, 510, 512, 514, 568, 570, 571, 608, 609, 867, 874, 879, 1615, 1616

(14) Ath. Testament, 3, 4, 14, 52, 171, 193, 194, 196, 197, 202, 205, 208, 216, 249n. 2, 271-80, 282, 297, 299, 300, 301, 305, 310, 442, 568, 572, 1434, 1613, 1614, 1615

(15) Constantine IX, xvi, 3, 8, 13, 16, 20, 31, 89, 149, 153, 163, 193, 196, 197, 198, 199, 200, 202, 204, 205, 210, 211, 232, 281-93, 304, 307, 377, 425, 448, 461, 463, 512, 609, 1484, 1613

(16) Mount Tmolos, xvii, 8, 13, 17, 295, 296, 297, 299, 301, 303, 304, 305, 310-12, 426, 465, 734

(17) Nikon Metanoieite, 2, 8, 31, 295, 296, 297, 298, 299, 300, 301, 302, 304, 305, 313-22, 323, 463

(18) Nea Gephyra, 3, 8, 13, 14, 16, 17, 295, 296, 297, 298, 299, 300, 301, 302, 303, 304, 305, 306, 310, 311, 323-25, 463, 959

(19) Attaleiates, xvii, xix, xxix, xxxiii, 3, 4, 8, 11, 13, 15, 16, 19, 53, 89, 127, 171, 295, 296, 297, 298, 300, 301, 302, 303, 304, 305, 306, 307, 308, 311, 326-76, 426, 443, 448, 449-50, 460, 461, 462, 463, 465, 509, 512, 513, 571, 572, 573, 575, 610, 611, 612, 654, 656, 785, 870, 982, 984, 1239, 1299, 1696; imperial chrysobulls, 11, 326, 329, 330, 361-67, 393, 449, 513; Inventory [INV], xxix, 11, 31, 89, 303, 308, 326, 329, 355-70, 425, 462, 513

(20) Black Mountain, xiv, xix, xxii, xxv, 5, 15, 17, 31, 37, 89, 295, 296, 297, 298, 303, 377-424, 426, 428, 446-47, 454, 460, 465, 466, 512, 516, 570, 575, 876, 1103, 1120, 1299, 1312, 1321, 1322, 1342, 1462, 1497, 1696-99, 1701-3, 1705-9, 1711-13, 1715-16

(21) Roidion, 5, 11, 15, 17, 20, 40, 169, 295, 296, 298, 301, 302, 303, 309, 310, 311, 425-39, 454, 458, 459, 512, 515, 730, 870, 1299, 1312, 1313, 1314, 1462, 1484; Typikon [A], 11, 304, 378, 382, 426-27, 429-31, 444, 515, 730; Treatise [B], 11, 303, 304, 425, 426, 427-28, 459, 431-37, 512, 1299, 1313, 1314

(22) Evergetis, xi, xv, xvi, xix, xx, xxi, xxii, xxiii, xxiv, xxv, xxvi, xxvii, xxviii, xxx, 4, 8, 12, 14, 15, 16, 31, 34, 40, 88, 89, 90, 91, 127, 169, 170, 211, 248, 307, 308, 310, 330, 383, 425, 441-50, 452-53, 454-506, 509-15, 568, 571, 573, 575, 607, 609, 610, 612, 614-18, 650-55, 657-59, 729-32, 784, 785-86, 787, 788, 789, 790, 792, 793, 861-68, 873-79, 955-58, 975-76, 877, 978-82, 985-87,

GENERAL INDEX

monastic foundation documents (cont.)

1044, 1048, 1094-97, 1100, 1109-18, 1208-9, 1211, 1213, 1255-58, 1260, 1262-63, 1289, 1297, 1321-22, 1331, 1340-42, 1344, 1346, 1410, 1436-37, 1457-58, 1486, 1496, 1498, 1506, 1513, 1515, 1517-18, 1581-83, 1587, 1614-16, 1627-28, 1630-31, 1700-1711, 1713-14, 1718-21; Appendix, 658

(23) Pakourianos, xxii, xxiii, xxiv, xxv, xxxiii, xxxv, 3, 4, 5, 8, 14, 15, 16, 17, 31, 89, 169, 170, 171, 210, 307, 308, 310, 311, 329, 382, 383, 441-51, 465, 507-63, 568, 569, 571, 573, 574, 575, 609, 610, 614, 654, 656, 657, 731, 958, 984, 1212, 1518, 1698, 1701, 1709, 1711-12, 1715-16

(24) Christodoulos, xiv, xxi, xxxi, xxxiii, 2, 3, 11, 14, 31, 37, 89, 136, 442-48, 452-53, 564-606, 608, 610, 875, 1112, 1299, 1300, 1312, 1314, 1412; Rule [A], xiv, xxi, xxxi, xxxiii, 2, 11, 16, 136, 306, 442, 443, 444, 445, 446, 447, 452, 453, 564, 565, 568, 569, 570, 571, 572, 573, 574, 576, 578-94, 619, 654, 875, 1048, 1112, 1299, 1300, 1314; Testament [B], 11, 13, 89, 442, 443, 444, 446, 453, 565, 568, 569, 571, 572, 573, 574, 594-98, 610, 619, 654; Codicil [C], xxxiii, 11, 13, 442, 453, 565, 568, 569, 571, 572, 573, 574, 598-601, 1048, 1412

(25) Fragala, 2, 8, 11, 32, 90, 195, 607, 608, 609, 613, 617, 621-36, 640, 641, 1296, 1297, 1314, 1696; First Testament [A], 8, 11, 13, 16, 609, 616, 617, 621, 622, 625, 626, 628-30, 1696; Second Testament [B], 2, 11, 13, 15, 90, 609, 617, 621, 622, 623, 625, 626, 630-33, 640, 1314, 1696; Third Testament [C], 2, 11, 13, 609, 617, 621, 622, 623, 625, 626, 633-34, 640

(26) Luke of Messina, xiii, xv, xx, 5, 13, 16, 32, 90, 607, 608, 609, 613, 615, 616, 617, 623, 637-48, 1299, 1696

(27) Kecharitomene, xvi, xix, xxi, xxvi, xxx, 2, 3, 8, 12, 13, 15, 16, 53, 89, 441, 456, 460, 467, 570, 607, 608, 609-17, 619, 640, 641, 649-724, 729, 730, 731, 732, 733, 784, 785, 789, 791, 792, 793, 859, 860, 861, 862, 863, 864, 865, 866-67, 867-68, 873, 879n. 1, 956, 958, 976, 977, 979, 980, 981, 982, 983, 984, 985, 986, 987, 1044, 1093, 1095, 1212, 1213, 1255, 1256, 1257, 1259,

1261, 1262, 1297, 1321, 1322, 1344, 1376, 1384, 1385, 1410, 1514, 1515, 1516, 1519, 1521, 1581, 1584, 1631, 1696, 1698-1711, 1722; Appendix A, 608, 658, 712-14; Appendix B, 31, 608, 656, 658, 714-17

(28) Pantokrator, xvi, xxii, xxiii, xxvii, xxx, xxxii, xxxiii, xxxiv, 1, 3, 4, 8, 11, 13, 14, 15, 16, 31, 311, 441, 456, 460, 607, 611-17, 619, 652, 725-81, 789, 859, 860, 865, 866, 955, 957, 958, 981, 1048, 1113, 1300, 1321, 1322, 1340, 1344, 1434, 1457, 1697-1708, 1710-11, 1713, 1716

(29) Kosmosoteira, xi, xiv, xv, xviii, xix, xx, xxii, xxx, xxxi, xxxiv, xxxv, xxxvi, 5, 14, 15n. 48, 17, 34, 53, 127, 311, 314, 323, 331, 441, 466, 468, 456, 508, 607-18, 620, 641, 782-858, 859, 860, 861, 864, 865, 866, 868, 873, 956, 958, 975, 978, 980, 981, 986, 1044, 1095, 1112, 1113, 1117, 1179, 1212, 1213, 1300, 1321, 1341, 1434, 1626, 1631, 1696, 1698-1703, 1707-11, 1713

(30) Phoberos, xv, xvi, xvii, xviii, xxii, xxv, xxvi, xxvii, xxviii, xxx, 5, 13, 15, 17, 32, 34, 37, 382, 441, 456, 460, 466, 467, 468, 607, 610, 612, 616, 619, 650, 653, 654, 731, 785, 789, 859-70, 872-953, 955, 976, 1044, 1102, 1321, 1322, 1497, 1582, 1696-97, 1699-1709, 1711-16

(31) Areia, xv, xviii, xxvi, xxvii, xxx, xxxvi, 2, 3, 8, 11, 14, 31, 60, 90, 456, 859-67, 954-72, 979,

GENERAL INDEX

monastic foundation documents (cont.)

1116, 1178, 1262, 1340, 1588, 1701, 1710-11; Memorandum [M], xv, xviii, xxx, xxxvi, 2, 11, 16-17, 860, 862, 863, 864, 867, 870, 954, 955, 956, 957, 958, 959, 960-64, 1116, 1262; Typikon [T], xxvi, xxvii, xxx, 11, 859, 861, 862, 864, 865, 866, 867, 870, 954, 955, 956, 957, 958, 959, 964-70, 979, 1116, 1178, 1262, 1701, 1710-11

(32) Mamas, xi, xv, xvi, xix, xxi, xxiii, xxiv, xxvii, xxix, xxx, xxxii, xxxiii, xxxiv, xxxvi, 3, 4, 6, 14, 15, 17, 38, 40, 90, 441, 456, 457, 468, 610, 611, 649, 650, 652, 653, 657, 789, 791, 859-70, 956, 973-1041, 1043, 1044, 1045, 1046, 1047, 1048, 1049, 1094, 1095, 1102, 1109-15, 1117, 1210-13, 1257, 1261, 1321, 1322, 1342, 1344, 1345, 1485, 1487, 1489, 1490, 1496, 1506, 1518, 1520, 1581-88, 1696, 1698-1702, 1704-8, 1710-11, 1713-16, 1723; Addition, 975, 1035-36; First Semeioma, xxix, 90, 860, 975, 981, 984, 1032-35, 1036; Judicial Confirmation, 974, 975, 984, 1031-32; Second Semeioma, 860, 975, 984, 1036-37, 1047

(33) Heliou Bomon, xi, xv, xxiv, xxv, 4, 13, 15, 17, 90, 456, 610, 640, 649, 651, 652, 859-71, 956, 974, 987, 1042-91, 1095, 1096, 1102, 1109, 1111, 1112, 1211, 1288, 1300, 1344, 1345, 1457, 1581, 1630, 1696, 1698-1702, 1704-8, 1710-11, 1713, 1716

(34) Machairas, xviii, xix, xxi, xxii, xxiii, xxv, xxvi, xxvii, xxx, xxxiii, xxxv, 2, 3, 7, 12, 13, 17, 32, 38, 60, 457, 468, 987, 1093, 1094, 1095, 1096, 1097, 1098, 1099, 1100, 1101, 1102, 1103, 1104, 1107-75, 1178, 1209, 1211, 1213, 1260, 1299, 1300, 1313, 1314, 1322, 1332, 1340, 1341, 1344, 1345, 1457, 1518, 1696, 1700-1701, 1703-8, 1710-12, 1714-16

(35) Skoteine, xx, xxxii, xxxvi, 6, 13, 15, 19, 31, 145n. 5, 1093, 1094, 1095, 1096, 1097, 1099, 1100, 1101, 1105, 1110, 1176-95, 1208, 1211, 1332, 1397, 1458

(36) Blemmydes, xx, xxi, xxv, xxxvi, 4, 8, 14, 17, 150, 1093, 1094, 1095, 1096, 1097, 1105, 1179, 1196-1206, 1208, 1210, 1463, 1496, 1698, 1700, 1714, 1716

(37) Auxentios, xii, xv, xxiii, xxv, xxix, xxx, xxxi, xxxiii, xxxiv, xxxvi, 3, 4, 14, 17, 1093, 1094, 1095, 1096, 1097, 1098, 1099, 1100, 1101, 1102, 1105, 1106, 1207-36, 1238, 1240, 1256, 1257, 1288, 1299, 1301, 1384, 1457, 1485, 1497, 1498, 1505, 1506, 1512, 1517, 1518, 1584, 1631, 1697, 1698

(38) Kellibara I, xxiii, xxxv-xxxvi, 3, 4, 7, 11, 14, 16, 1093, 1094, 1096, 1097, 1098, 1099, 1101, 1104, 1106, 1211, 1237-53, 1259, 1263, 1289, 1301, 1485, 1487, 1505, 1507, 1512, 1513, 1630

(39) Lips, xxi, xxiii, xxiv, xxxi, xxxvi, 3, 5, 11, 13, 14, 650, 1093, 1094, 1095, 1096, 1097, 1099, 1100, 1101, 1102, 1104, 1106, 1208, 1209, 1254-86, 1287, 1288, 1289, 1299, 1301, 1384, 1457, 1465, 1498, 1506, 1513, 1514, 1515, 1516, 1517, 1518, 1519, 1520, 1521, 1584, 1585, 1692, 1697, 1700, 1714

(40) Anargyroi, xxiii, 5, 11, 13, 14, 1093, 1094, 1095, 1096, 1097, 1098, 1099, 1100, 1104, 1106, 1287-94, 1301, 1486, 1630, 1691, 1692

(41) Docheiariou, 6, 8, 13, 52, 1295, 1296, 1297, 1299, 1303-10, 1389

GENERAL INDEX

monastic foundation documents (cont.)

(42) Sabas, xvi, xx, xxii, xxxiii, 4, 14, 16, 71, 640, 1296, 1297, 1298, 1299, 1300, 1311-18

(43) Kasoulon, 4, 5, 13, 16, 382, 460, 1296, 1297, 1298, 1299, 1319-30, 1497, 1696-97, 1699-1701, 1703-12, 1714-16

(44) Karyes, xiv, xvi, 3, 14, 17, 52, 456, 1295, 1296, 1300, 1301, 1331-37, 1389

(45) Neophytos, xv, xvi, xvii, xxii, xxiv, xxvii, xxxiii, xxxiv, 2, 7, 11, 13, 17, 18, 37, 60, 1096, 1111, 1208, 1209, 1212, 1260, 1295, 1296, 1297, 1298, 1313, 1314, 1338-73, 1497, 1518, 1700, 1701, 1710-1711; Canons [C], xvii, xxii, xxvii, 11, 1298, 1340, 1341, 1342, 1345, 1362-67, 1710; "Basilian" Canons [CB], 11, 32, 1298, 1340, 1341, 1342, 1345, 1367-70, 1497, 1518

(46) Akropolites, xxiii, 6, 14, 516, 658, 1262, 1295, 1296, 1298, 1374-82, 1518

(47) Philanthropos, xviii, 3, 14, 16, 650, 1255, 1295, 1296, 1297, 1298, 1299, 1300, 1383-88, 1484

(48) Prodromos, xxii, xxv, 6, 8, 13, 52, 1295, 1296, 1300, 1304, 1389-95, 1405, 1457

(49) Geromeri, xxxvi, 2, 7, 14, 15, 70, 1296, 1298, 1299, 1301, 1396-1403, 1584

(50) Gerasimos, xvi, xxxvi, 3, 5, 14, 15, 52, 1296, 1298, 1299, 1404-7

(51) Koutlounousi, xxiii, xxxi, xxxiv, 6, 8, 11, 13, 126, 195, 608, 1295, 1296, 1297, 1298, 1299, 1301, 1408-32, 1453, 1457; First Testament [A], xxxi, 126, 1297, 1298, 1299, 1410-11, 1412, 1413-18, 1456, 1457; Second Testament [B], xxiii, 1410, 1411-12, 1418-24, 1457; Third Testament [C], 11, 1409, 1412, 1424-28

(52) Choumnos, xix, xxv, xxvi, 7, 14, 1296, 1297, 1298, 1299, 1301, 1412, 1433-54, 1463, 1497, 1498, 1628; Rule [A], xix, 1298, 1412, 1433, 1434, 1435, 1436, 1437, 1438-45, 1497, 1628;

Testament [B], xxv, xxvi, 1297, 1298, 1434, 1435, 1436, 1437, 1446-52, 1463, 1498

(53) Meteora, xviii, 5, 14, 1296, 1297, 1298, 1299, 1302, 1455-61, 1521, 1588

(54) Neilos Damilas, xiii, xv, xviii, xx-xxi, xxv, xxvi, xxviii, 5, 13, 14, 15, 17, 22n. 8, 1103, 1295, 1296, 1297, 1298, 1302, 1457, 1462-82; Inventory, 31, 1478-79

(55) Athanasios I, xix, xxii, xxxi, 8, 14, 17, 20, 193, 212, 1214, 1299, 1384, 1436, 1457, 1483-90, 1495-1504, 1627, 1700, 1714

(56) Kellibara II, 3, 11, 14, 1238, 1239, 1240, 1258, 1259, 1299, 1384, 1457, 1483-87, 1489, 1490, 1505-11, 1513, 1584, 1697

(57) Bebaia Elpis, xiv, xv, xx, xxiii, xxvi, xxx, xxxi-xxxii, xxxvi, 5, 13, 14, 17, 57, 1256-57, 1258, 1299, 1436, 1457, 1483-89, 1491, 1498, 1512-78, 1584, 1585, 1587, 1691, 1697-98, 1701-2; Second Typikon of Euphrosyne Palaiologina, 1483, 1484, 1487, 1513, 1521n. 1, 1564-68

GENERAL INDEX

monastic foundation documents (cont.)

(58) Menoikeion, xii, xv, xxx, xxxi, xxxiv, xxxvi, 3, 6, 7, 14, 987, 1299, 1384, 1397, 1483-89, 1491, 1493, 1496, 1497, 1498, 1579-1612, 1614, 1615, 1627, 1628, 1699-1701, 1703-6, 1710, 1714, 1716

(59) Manuel II, xx, xxx, xxxii, xxxiv, 3, 8, 13, 16, 193, 281, 1483-89, 1493, 1496, 1613-24, 1667

(60) Charsianeites, xx, xxvi-xxvii, xxix, xxx, xxxiii, xxxiv-xxxv, 3, 8, 11, 14, 17, 32, 38, 90, 1210, 1297, 1299, 1320, 1457, 1462, 1483-89, 1493, 1496, 1497, 1498, 1507, 1616, 1625-66, 1702, 1710-12, 1714; Autobiography [A], xxix, xxxv, 11, 60, 90, 1488, 1493, 1494, 1625, 1626, 1627, 1629, 1630, 1631, 1632, 1633-40; Rule of Mark and Neilos [B], xxvi-xxvii, xxxiii, 11, 1210, 1484, 1485, 1486, 1487, 1488, 1489, 1496, 1497, 1498, 1507, 1616, 1626, 1627, 1628, 1629, 1630, 1631, 1640-51; Subsequent Chapters [C], xx, xxix, xxx, xxxiv, 11, 1484, 1485, 1486, 1488, 1489, 1490, 1626, 1627, 1628, 1629, 1630, 1631, 1632, 1651-62, 1702, 1710-12, 1714

(61) Eleousa Inv., 5, 14, 169, 172, 1483, 1484, 1485, 1486, 1487, 1667-78

monastic habit: bestowal of, 148, 653; classes of, 78, 155, 653, 685; emphasis on, xxii, 1117; manufacture of, 1463, 1472; no distinctions permitted in, 78, 155, 1203. See also handicrafts and handiwork; monastic habit (articles of); and monastic habit (specific kinds) monastic habit (articles of): cap, xxii, 406; cowl, sacred, 179; girdle (monastic), 56, 58nn. 12 and 13; headcloth (skepasma, skepe, magoulikion, phakiolion), 694, 1276, 1551; introductory robe (eisagogikon esthema), 592; novice's rags (rake), 494, 823, 929, 1010, 1067, 1140, 1203; pallium, 647 and n. 9; raso, 407 (see also Glossary); raso braids (seiradia), 407; robe of renunciation (apotaktikon endyma), 570, 592; robe of submission (hypotages himation), 685; scapular (epomion, epomis), 114AB, 115AB, 179, 647n. 9; scapular, cruciform (stauroeides analabos), 179; shoes, 406. See also clothing (articles of) and footwear (specific) monastic habit (specific kinds), 78, 155; of the angels, 152, 155, 653, 685; of the apostles (apostolikon), xxii, 152, 155, 1114, 1117, 1152, 1161, 1167n. 21; great (mega schema), xxii, 101A, 148, 247, 653, 685, 699, 1112, 1114, 1117, 1137, 1161, 1341, 1342, 1357; little/small, 78, 178-79, 247; of the martyrs, 152, 155

monastic laborers. See laborers, monastic monastic offices (liturgical). See hours, liturgical and synaxaria monastic officials (diakonetai): accountability of, 310, 312, 444, 515, 522, 863, 967, 1001, 1003, 1058, 1060, 1262, 1272, 1539, 1596; appointment of, xxxi-xxxvii, 447, 484, 589, 638, 680, 817, 966, 1001, 1058, 1224, 1251, 1271, 1488, 1501, 1502, 1619, 1621; cooperation of with other, 1287, 1293; definition of, xxiii, 617; distribution of food and clothing by, xxxiii-xxxiv; election of, xxxi, 1465, 1476, 1517, 1544-45; examination of, 1586, 1607; exhortation of, 85; foolish expenditure by, 515, 548; "hands and eyes" of the community, 86; installation/investiture of, 462, 491, 680, 790, 817, 925, 977, 984, 1001, 1047, 1058, 1116, 1149-50, 1517, 1545; list of, 790; misconduct by, 462, 543, 573, 574, 650, 651, 658, 1110; proper deportment towards, xxii; qualifications of, 1211, 1224; removal of, 444, 462, 485, 492, 514, 515, 543, 548, 818, 1114, 1150-51, 1211, 1225, 1271-72, 1582, 1587, 1596, 1607; replacement of through co-option, 1586, 1607,

GENERAL INDEX

1615, 1620; responsibilities of, 86, 462, 489, 491-92, 531-32, 589-90, 614, 615, 651, 655, 680-85, 817-18, 821, 925-27, 962, 978, 983, 1001-4, 1058-61, 1100, 1148, 1151, 1224-25, 1271-73, 1538-39, 1543, 1544, 1582, 1596-97; review of, 1615, 1620; role of in governance, xxxi, 443, 485, 529, 589, 919, 967, 995, 1052, 1211, 1226; tenure of, 272, 276-77, 302, 315, 319, 492, 655, 677, 790, 817-18, 1114, 1150, 1211, 1225, 1262, 1272, 1332, 1333, 1587, 1607 monastic officials (specific):

- administrator, property (epitropos), 511, 514, 531, 535
- archivist (chartophylax, m.), 749, 773, 983, 984, 1002, 1047, 1059, 1508, (chartophylakissa, f.), 681
- building superintendent (oikologos), 678
- caretaker (pronoetes), 678
- cellarer (docheiarios, m.), 878, 921, 957, 966, 979, 983, 1003, 1045, 1047, 1060, 1261, 1262, 1591, 1597, (docheiaria, f.), 1272, 1517, 1543, (kellarites, m.), 79, 151, 161, 259, 492, 532, 534, 535, 569, 590, 817, 926, 1003, 1004, 1060, 1111, 1149, 1151, 1154, 1155, 1185, 1209, 1225, 1240, 1250, 1582, 1586, 1597, 1667, 1675, (kellarea, f.), 682, 1543, (tanouteres, m.), 532
- cellarer, assistant (parakellarites), 569, 590, 979, 983, 1003, 1045, 1047, 1060
- choir leader (domestikos), 755
- councillors (Athonite), xxx, 1607, 1608, 1615, 1616, 1619, 1620, 1693
- disciplinary official (epistemonarches, m.), xxii, 93, 107AB, 216, 224, 492, 790, 806, 817, 895, 925, 1111, 1136, (epistemonarchissa, f.), 655, 684, 1517, 1542
- doorkeeper (thyroros), xix, 216, 225, 228
- ecclesiarch (m.), 98A, 106B, 225, 242, 272, 274, 327, 339, 426, 430, 473, 494, 510, 514, 531, 535, 569, 573, 574, 589, 739, 740, 746, 749, 756, 773, 805, 808, 836, 894, 898, 922, 957, 958, 962, 966, 967, 978, 980, 983, 984, 1001-2, 1005, 1019, 1026, 1030, 1047, 1059, 1062, 1075, 1083, 1111, 1116, 1149, 1150, 1151, 1177, 1178, 1185, 1209, 1212, 1224, 1226, 1229, 1313, 1316, 1507, 1508, 1509, 1583, 1596, 1667, 1674
- ecclesiarch, assistant (parekklesiarches, m.), xxiv, 984, 985, 1002, 1341, 1350, 1583, 1596
- ecclesiarchissa (f.), xxxi, 655, 673, 680, 681, 686, 688, 1256, 1260, 1272, 1514, 1517, 1537
- ecclesiarchissa, assistant (parekklesiarchissa, f.), 655, 673, 1256, 1261, 1272
- first brother (protos adelphos), 1436, 1439
- food buyer, 655, 681
- four brothers, 1586, 1587, 1597, 1607, 1615
- gatekeeper (pyloros, pyleonarios), 216, 228, 232, 511, 532, 655, 684-85, 979, 983, 1003-4, 1045, 1047, 1060-61, 1209, 1225, 1256, 1271, 1434, 1442, 1464, 1465, 1476, 1505, 1508, 1517, 1520, 1544, 1586, 1588, 1597
- graptai*, 754, 755 (see also Glossary)
- guestmaster (xenodochos), 158, 426, 427, 430, 511, 532, 749, 1111, 1156
- housemaster (oikokyrios), 1332, 1334
- infirmarian (nosokomos), 511, 532, 749, 1281
- keeper of books (bibliophylax, epi ton bibliion), 93, 108AB
- keeper of incense, olive oil, and wax, 1003, 1060
- kitchen helper, 728, 749
- lamplighter, 531, 755, 1133, 1136
- laosynaktai*, 754, 755 (see also Glossary)
- librarian, 466

GENERAL INDEX

monitor of choir and refectory (taxiarches), 93, 100A, 107AB, 109AB notary (notarios), 547 overseer (epiteretes), 93, 107AB, 216, 225, 511, 532, (pristavniki), 62, 64 precentor (kanonarches), 63, 98A, 99A, 100A, 101A, 382, 408, 749, 754, 755, 1011, 1068, 1380, 1586, 1597 property manager/administrator, see property managers/administrators protos (Athonite), 197, 209, 233, 235, 236, 238, 240, 251, 272, 276, 281, 282, 283, 285, 286, 288, 289, 290, 291, 1303, 1305, 1306, 1308, 1331, 1332, 1334, 1390, 1392, 1408, 1411, 1412, 1414, 1417, 1418, 1423, 1424, 1425, 1426, 1455; (of Latros), 452, 564, 580, 619 (see also Glossary) provisioner (horeiarios, m.), 749, 1111, 1149, 1153, 1209, 1225, 1261, (horeiaria, f.), 655, 682 refectorian (trapezarios, m.), 426, 430, 492, 511, 532, 569, 590, 744, 745, 747, 790, 817, 925, 1327, 1329n. 13, 1582, 1586, 1597, 1628, 1653, (trapezaria, f.), 655, 682, 1543 representative [of the superior], 1428, 1430n. 28 sacristan (skevophylax, m.), 317, 318, 462, 491, 511, 514, 531, 535, 749, 817, 825, 877, 925, 983, 984, 1002, 1036, 1047, 1059, 1100, 1586, 1587, 1596, (skevophylakissa, f.), 655, 657, 658, 673, 680-81, 1256, 1260, 1261, 1272
 sacristan, assistant, 1272
 secretary, 1615-16, 1620 spiritual father, see spiritual fathers steward (oikonomos), see stewards storehouse/room manager/supervisor, 1111, 1153, 1514, 1516, 1517, 1519, 1530, 1543, 1551 superintendent of dependency (metochiarios, metochites), 272, 276-77, 314, 492, 818, 1148, 1154, 1167n. 22, 1585, 1609, 1615, 1619 superior, see superiors tender of the old (gerotrophos), 532 thurifer (thymiatos [sic]), 385 treasurer (docheiarios/docheiarios ton nomismaton, m.), xxii, 462, 466, 489, 491, 511, 515, 531, 548, 574, 589, 749, 785, 790, 792, 817, 825, 877, 925, 957, 958, 962, 966, 984, 985, 1002, 1030, 1047, 1060, 1086, 1100, 1111, 1114, 1115, 1149, 1151, 1152, 1178, 1185, 1209, 1212, 1224, 1226, 1240, 1250, 1314, 1317, 1344, 1353, 1507, 1509, 1615, (docheiaria, f.), 655, 657, 678, 682, 1256, 1260, 1271-72 treasurer for linen/textiles (docheiarios ton panion/hyphasmaton), 462, 491, 590, 790, 792, 817, 877, 925, 1111, 1114, 1152, (docheiaria tou vestiou), 655, 657, 682, 684 treasurer [of the workshop], 1111, 1115, 1153 waker (aphypnistes), 93, 98AB, 99A, 107AB, 186, 216, 225 wine-pourer/steward (oinochoos), 511, 532, 569, 590, 655, 682 work organizer (ergodotria), 652, 655, 684 work supervisor, 382, 408
See also laborers, monastic (specific) monastic poverty: implications of, 1486, imposition of, 490, 612, 653, 693-94, 879, 910-11, 1009, 1066, 1353, 1385, 1388, 1426, 1427, 1646-47; not to lead to expulsion, 1499, 1502; not required, xxxiii, 612; preservation of, 1412, 1426 monastic property: anticipated acquisitions of, 329, 354; ban on further acquisitions of, 247, 264; communal ownership of, 78, 247, 259; defense of rights to, 1630, 1655-56; management of for profit, see profit; privatization of, xxix, 36, 307, 443, 512, 515, 959; punishment for theft of, 171,

GENERAL INDEX

186, 330, 331, 345, 462, 490, 877, 923, 1670. See also endowments (specific) and property, movable monastic reformers and the reform movement (11-12th c.). See Evergetian canon and reform tradition monastic rule, styles of: arbitrary/autocratic/authoritarian, xxxi, 34, 60, 88, 152, 171, 283, 290, 447, 461, 464, 514, 538, 573, 866, 1011, 1023, 1047, 1068, 1079, 1098, 1099, 1114, 1184, 1208, 1226, 1260, 1268, 1305, 1309, 1488, 1518, 1532, 1535, 1536, 1586, 1630, 1644; collaborative, 1178, 1184, 1390, 1392, 1488, 1498, 1502, 1585-86, 1607, 1615; collective/communal, 121, 461; by consensus, 1260, 1273; consultative, xxxi, 23n. 11, 71, 72, 164, 247, 283, 290, 464, 617, 732, 768, 790, 861, 866, 957-58, 967, 1099, 1211, 1226, 1240, 1251, 1614, 1619, 1620, egalitarian, 464, 516, 1178, 1183; Evergetian, 447, 485, 617, 861; “manly,” xxxi, 1531; paternalistic, 1211, 1221 monastic rules (non-Byzantine): Alphabetical Admonitions Attributed to Aphrem, 41; Basil of Caesarea: Longer Rules [LR], 21, 22-26, 44, 899, 947n. 13, 1139, 1167n. 10, Shorter Rules [SR], 21, 26-29, 31; Coptic, 32-38; of Hilandar monastery (Mount Athos), 457; of the Later Roman Empire, 10, 21-41; of medieval Serbia, 10, 17; of Norman Italy, 10; of Norman Sicily, 10, 18, 608, 609, 612; Old Church Slavonic translations, 10, 14, 16n. 49, 17, 61, 88, 457; Pachomios: excerpts of, 33, 37, Precepts, xii, 33, 34, 35, 36, 37, 41, 44, 46, 1109, Precepts and Institutions, 33, 35, Precepts and Laws, 33, 35, Precepts and Penal Statutes, 33, 35, Preface of Jerome, 33, Rule of, 10, 33, 34-35, 37, 38; Philoxenos of Mabbug, Rules from the Letter of, 41; Rabbula, Canons of, 39-40; Regula IV Patrum, xiii; Rule of the Angel, 37; Rule of Benedict, xii, xiii, xv, xviii, xxi, xxviii, xxxi, xxxiv; Rule of the Master, xiii; Rules for the Monastery of Mar Zakkai, 41; Russian, 10; Syriac, 10, 38-41; typon for the Monastery of the Caves (Kiev), 88 monastic stability. See virtues, monastic monasticism, Byzantine. See convents; monasteries; monks; and nuns monasticism, non-Byzantine: Basilian, 21-32; Bulgarian, 125-34; Egyptian, 247; Latin (medieval Western), xi-xxxvii; Pachomian, 32-38; Syrian, 38-41 money: donation of, see endowments (specific): cash; love of, see vices, monastic monks:

appointment of, 301, 302, 315, 319

assignment to fixed duties, 1095 attempted assassination of, 208 care of aged, 278, 1016, 1075

see commemorations (liturgical, individual) conspiring to flee, 1157, 1368

as contract workers, 239

definition of, 1501

dietary concessions for, 111AB, 140, 184, 226, 227, 228, 287, 396, 481, 491

documents authored by, 859, 1093, 1295, 1299, 1483 expulsion of, see punishments (specific) as “feet” of the community, 86

GENERAL INDEX

monks (cont.)

form electoral college, 272, 277 foundation of monasteries by, 206, 298, 1093 and going out alone, 1502
inheritance of property by, 1390, 1391
and invitations to festivals, 1366 liturgical responsibilities of, 640, 644-45 massacres of, 1311, 1312, 1313 mercenary pursuits of, 238 military activities of, 1043 minimum age of, xix, 787, 800, 822, 1177, 1198, 1203 (see also novices) missionary work of, 313 monastic names of, 148, 206, 974, 1043, 1512, 1625, 1662n. 15 moral supervision of, 301, 338-39, 429-30 number of, xvi-xvii, 48, 121, 149, 151, 164, 172, 175, 196, 209, 211, 213, 304, 310, 311, 315, 320, 327, 329, 346, 377, 444, 458, 490, 510, 520, 531, 569, 612, 617, 624, 626, 630, 727, 728, 749, 786-87, 800, 821, 838, 872, 874, 875, 918, 923, 956, 961, 978, 1000, 1046, 1052, 1057, 1095, 1107, 1108, 1111, 1128, 1165, 1177, 1181, 1182, 1208, 1223, 1239, 1250, 1304, 1312, 1313, 1339, 1340, 1341, 1345, 1352, 1365-66, 1390, 1392, 1408, 1410, 1434, 1455, 1456, 1627 as nuns' confessors, 1316
orders of, 513, 514, 535
as owners of landed property, xxxiii, 239, 253, 258 pastoral work of, xxiv, 795, 843 personal decorum of, 137, 141 personal freedom of, 1345 preferential treatment of, 1101, 1183, 1221, 1652 private resources of, 427, 432 promotion of, 1314, 1316 ranks of, 152, 158, 460, 591, 1094, 1101, 1161, 1167nn. 22 and 29, 1197, 1203 ransoming of, 1409, 1412, 1426 readmission of, 1497, 1502
recruitment of, 69
relocation of, 150
replacement of, 1627, 1646
seizure of property of, 427, 434 sharing cells with other monks, see cells, monastic shortage of, 870
unnecessary traveling by, 640, 644, 1436, 1444 visits of to convents, 1316 vows of, 178

monks (types of):

ambassadors, 69, 198, 200, 204, 240, 251, 252, 284, 285, 290, 616
arbiters of disputes, 89
aristocratic, see below, noble bearded, xxvii, 1111, 1113, 1155 beggar/mendicant, xix, xxii, 1004, 1061

GENERAL INDEX

monks (cont.)

beneficed, 427
better, 513, 529 brothers, 1044, 1045, 1062, 1072, 1080
Bulgarian, 508, 1409
cave-dwelling, xxxiii, 1338, 1339, 1351
cenobitic, 1237, 1257, 1269 (see also cenobiticism) chanters of the office (psaltai), xxvii, 704, 754, 755, 800, 1006, 1011, 1063, 1068, 1086, 1144, 1277, 1702, 1708 child, 571, 579, 622, 623, 628, 629, 630, 632, 1177, 1198 Cilician, 940
conversi, xxiv, xxviii courtroom witnesses, 1657
deceased, 458, 493-94, 739, 766, 785 of dependent monasteries, 617, 752-53, 1148, 1154, 1251 disgruntled, 216
distinguished, 790, 792, 816, 878, 929, 979, 1010, 1045, 1048, 1067, 1075, 1140 disobedient/rebellious, 170, 181, 490, 569, 1179, 1183, 1397, 1401 disorderly, 211
domestic servants, xxxiii, 236, 282, 289, 327, 353, 490, 528, 611-12, 924, 1012, 1070, 1600 Dominican, 975 educated, 459, 490, 492, 818, 874, 878, 923, 1099, 1199, 1201 elders, see below; older/elderly eunuch, xix, xxii, xxxiii, 302, 327, 348, 512, 653, 656, 678, 787, 800, 824, 974, 1313, 1316 external/non-resident (exomonitai), xix, xxxiv, 618-19, 730, 752, 753, 776n. 62, 869, 974, 1013, 1628, 1661 factious, 170, 181
fathers, 1044, 1045, 1062, 1072, 1080 foremost (proechontes), 71, 79, 461 former soldiers, 509, 1512 formerly married, xx
fratres laici, xxiv
fugitive, 1338, 1345, 1351, 1368, 1497, 1502
Georgian, xxii, 508, 510, 521, 547, 557
Grandmontine, xx
Greek ("Roman"), xxii, 508, 510, 521, 547, 726, 940, 954, 975, 1314, 1317, 1319, 1409, 1411, 1417 healthy, 460, 654, 730, 745, 981, 1017, 1507, 1509 hermit, 125, 208, 232
hermit, iconodule, 67
hesychasts, see hesychasts and hesychastic monasticism idorhythmic, see idorhythmic monks and idorhythmic monasticism illiterate/unlettered, xxiii-xxiv, xxviii, 152, 159, 161, 216, 408, 458, 459, 492, 641, 731, 751, 818, 926, 981, 1016, 1075, 1341, 1350 from imperial family, 456, 499 independent (Lat.: sarabaitae), xxxiv internal/imposed (esomonitai), xix, xxxiv, 302, 314, 315, 319, 611, 619, 730, 752, 753, 776n. 61, 791, 844, 864, 964, 1012, 1013, 1069, 1070, 1297, 1410, 1628, 1661

GENERAL INDEX

monks (cont.)

- kelliotai*, see kelliotai and kelliotic monasticism
- laboring, see laborers, monastic
- learned, 513, 529, 981, 1016, 1075, 1211, 1215, 1218
- literate, xxiii-xxiv, 93, 152, 159, 216, 347, 459, 476, 640, 641, 645, 646, 1239, 1250, 1320, 1328
- martyr, 1311
- Mesopotamian, 22
- “more eminent,” 790, 816, 1046, 1052
- “more important,” 790, 816
- “more pious,” xxxi, 458, 462, 729, 750, 1211, 1218, 1488, 1498, 1502
- “more prominent,” 589
- “more prudent and spiritual,” 272, 277
- “more reverent,” 476, 927, 1112, 1137
- “more virtuous,” 513, 529
- noble, 787, 872, 873, 875, 878, 879, 946, 986, 1024, 1043
- non-resident, see above, external/non-resident
- nutriti*, xxiv
- oblati*, xxiv
- older/elderly, 170, 175, 459, 462, 490, 512, 516, 528, 729, 750, 788, 822, 878, 927, 957, 958, 962, 966, 980, 980, 985, 1016, 1018, 1019, 1046, 1048, 1075, 1197, 1205, 1210, 1211, 1218, 1227, 1496, 1501, 1507, 1509, 1619, 1628, 1646
- oratores*, faithful, xxiv
- ordained (hieromonachoi), xxiii, xxiv, 143, 148, 150, 235, 241, 242, 292, 315, 319, 455, 520, 531, 532, 535, 623, 629, 653, 678, 795, 831, 1030, 1031, 1111, 1113, 1114, 1115, 1147, 1159, 1165, 1166, 1212, 1226, 1238, 1239, 1250, 1338, 1346, 1352, 1390, 1392, 1405, 1406, 1462, 1463, 1475, 1505n. 1, 1588, 1629, 1661, 1667, 1674
- Origenist, 1311
- Palestinian, 1107, 1311-12
- parakelliotai*, 1457, 1459, 1460 (see also Glossary)
- of peasant background, 1435, 1443
- Persian, 940
- poor/indigent/impooverished/suppliant, 39, 167, 986, 1004, 1049, 1061, 1338, 1350, 1627, 1630
- preeminent/leading (ekkritoi, prokritoi), xxx, xxxi, 171, 185, 255, 272, 277, 290, 310, 443, 461, 464, 484, 587, 589, 617, 641, 646, 655, 790, 792, 794, 816, 818, 821, 835, 866, 877, 919, 922, 958, 967, 986, 1019, 1044, 1052, 1099, 1115, 1117, 1152, 1211, 1212, 1218, 1222, 1298, 1342, 1364, 1436, 1447, 1498, 1518, 1614, 1615, 1620
- psaltai*, see above, chanters of the office
- recalcitrant, 1586
- refugee, 567, 1237, 1238, 1239, 1374
- relatives of founder, 510, 515, 547
- Roman (Byzantine), 1417, 1423
- Sabaite, 88, 1312
- select (logades), 340
- self-sustaining, 1412, 1423
- senior (Lat.: seniores), xxxi, 514, 529, 543, 573, 1117
- serving in choir or church (ekklesiastikoi), xxiii, 46, 152, 159, 458, 476, 510, 532, 640,

GENERAL INDEX

monks (cont.)

644-45, 728, 749, 800, 835, 875, 898, 978, 1006, 1177, 1183, 1208, 1209, 1223, 1226, 1239, 1250-51, 1341, 1352 serving in menial services (diakonetai, hypourgoi), xxiii, 152, 159, 458, 476, 511, 531-32, 728, 749, 800, 842, 875, 898, 979, 1010, 1117, 1208, 1223, 1239, 1250, 1341, 1352 sick/infirm, 111AB, 140, 184, 227, 228, 278, 460, 465, 491, 497, 516, 528, 729, 731, 745, 750, 788, 789, 795, 823, 825, 841, 865, 876, 925, 937, 962, 981, 1007, 1016-17, 1046, 1064, 1074, 1111, 1112, 1137, 1145, 1153, 1197, 1205, 1210, 1227, 1436, 1451, 1457, 1460, 1496, 1497, 1501, 1505, 1507, 1509, 1628, 1642-43, 1646, 1653, 1699, 1700, 1701, 1703, 1716 sleepless (akoimetoï), 67, 68, 72n. 5, 87 solitaries, see solitaries and solitary monasticism stronger, 1112, 1144
stylite, 40, 135, 148, 156, 163
Syrian, xxii, 425, 1207, 1313, 1314, 1316, 1317
Thessalian, 940
thieves, 462, 490
tonsured at home monastery (esokouroi), 257 tonsured in other monasteries (see xenokouritai)
troublemakers, 956, 967
undisciplined, 211, 490, 787, 795 uneducated/unlearned, 458, 459, 476, 490, 787, 795, 898, 923, 1137 upper-class, 787
used to luxurious living, 512, 528, 1412, 1421 very exalted, 512, 516, 528, 571, 1587, 1600 violent, 1298
virtuous, 787, 795, 957, 962, 1583, 1602
Vlach, 1409, 1411
vulgar, 787, 795
wandering (Lat.: gyrovagi), xxxiv, 158, 233, 237, 283, 287-88 weaker, 1112, 1144
western, 726
young/younger, 170, 175, 459, 490, 512, 788, 822, 980, 981, 1017, 1018, 1343, 1363, 1383, 1627, 1634 monks' rights: admonish superior, 1199, 1201, 1211, 1215; expel superior, 377, 514, 543; indict superior, 543, 1099, 1178, 1184, 1201; select superior, see superiors: election/internal selection of; share governance with superior, 1607, 1608, 1619, 1620

monokairon (in miniscule). See books (specific types) monopetalos. See icons (types of) months of the year: April, 1258, 1276; November, 1258, 1276 mosques: Eski Saray Camii (possibly former church of Nea Mone) (Thessalonike), 1434; Fenari Isa Camii (formerly church of St. John at convent of Lips) (CP), 1255, mescid of; Imrahor or Mirahor Camii (formerly St. John of Stoudios) (CP), 69-70; Zeyrek Kilise Camii (formerly Pantokrator monastery church) (CP), 725, 727; unnamed (formerly Kosmosoteira monastery church), 783 mouchroution (lamp glass). See lighting devices (specific) murals. See decorations museums: British Museum, 51; Coptic Museum (Cairo), 52; Egyptian Museum (Berlin), 51, 52; Episcopal Museum (Alexandroupolis), 782; Metropolitan Museum (New York), 52 music, church: ability to sing, 1514, 1537; as aid to hymnody, 645; new notation (neophonos), 1185, 1191n. 14; old notation (palaiophonos), 1189; unadorned, 1475; unsuitability of, 1197, 1204, 1205 music, secular: attitudes towards, xix, xxv, 1298, 1463, 1474-75 myax (apse conch). See churches (parts of) mydia (mussels). See foods (particular kinds) mysteria. See sacraments and sacramental life mystery, divine. See liturgies mystikos. See imperial officials (specific) mystographos. See imperial officials (specific) narthekoton. See textiles narthex. See churches (parts of) navy, Byzantine. See military services neophonos (new notation). See music, church nephews. See family members (specific)

GENERAL INDEX

Neptikon. See books, ascetic and patristic nesteia. See fasts

neura (scallops). See foods (particular kinds) night office. See hours, liturgical (specific) nimbus. See icons (types of)

GENERAL INDEX

ninth hour (enate). See hours, liturgical (specific) nipter (washing of the feet). See ritual observances and Glossary nitre. See supplies, storeroom nobility, local (archontes): as patrons, 314, 623, 1176, 1182, 1301, 1397, 1401, 1402, 1520, 1567; as predators, 313-14; as preservers of testament, 315, 320; as protectors, xxxvi, 299, 300, 319, 324, 1397; restrictions on, 200, 203; as threats to monasteries, 985, 1019; as upholders of a typikon, 1104; as visitors to monasteries, 464, 496, 1466, 1477, 1631, 1653

nomisma. See coinage

Nomokanon. See books, law and typika nomophylax. See imperial officials (specific) nosokomeion. See hospitals and infirmaries nosokomos (infirmarian, nurse). See monastic officials (specific) notaries. See ecclesiastical officials (specific); imperial officials (specific); and monastic officials (specific) notarios (notary). See notaries

noummia. See coinage novices (eisagogikoi, rakendytountes): age of, 787, 788, 800, 822, 1202, 1270, 1271, 1464, 1470, 1583, 1601, 1627, 1634; assignment of sponsors to, 1463, 1471; compassion for, 1435, 1448; disciplinary concessions to, 733, 748; dismissal of, 407; instruction and training of, 92, 108AB, 1448; not to be sought out, 1298; punishment of, 474; rags (rake) of, see monastic habit (articles of); rank of, 591; reception of, 108AB, 225, 494, 592, 685, 929, 1010, 1067; rules for, 24, 41, 1010, 1067, 1203; servile duties of, 494, 593, 823, 929, 1010, 1067, 1101, 1111, 1140, 1209, 1213, 1228, 1270; supervision of, 1435, 1447 novitiate (rakendysia): accelerated, 1096; discussion of, 1486; length of, xxi, 92, 108AB, 214, 225, 233, 236, 248, 258, 459, 464, 494-95, 570, 575, 592-93, 629, 632, 653, 685, 728, 748, 787, 824, 878, 929, 979, 1010, 1045, 1067, 1111, 1140, 1177, 1198, 1202-4, 1209, 1228, 1257, 1270, 1271, 1463-64, 1470, 1627, 1652; probationary, 444, 613, 787, 864

nunneries. See convents nuns:

- commemoration of deceased, 700, 866, 867, 1565
- commercial transactions of, 1302, 1463, 1464, 1465, 1471, 1472
- consumption of wine by, 691, 692, 693, 1543, 1697
- grounds for expulsion of, 1477
- household duties of, 1096, 1540

GENERAL INDEX

internal recruitment of, 1257 lifetime seclusion of, 1258, 1270 monastic names of, 1254, 1383, 1512 number of, 652, 658, 671, 672, 956, 960, 1095, 1256, 1266, 1267, 1288, 1292, 1486, 1513, 1520, 1529-30, 1564 permission required to leave, 1268 permission required to receive anything, 1268 protected from expulsion, 611, 655, 669, 1465, 1476 punishment for missing offices, 1298, 1473-74 relations with monks, xviii, 78, 961-62 responsibilities of, 1095
in Syriac tradition, 40
tonsure of, 335, 685, 1269-70 visitation regulations for, 679-80, 1270, 1288, 1292, 1471, 1545-46 nuns (types of):

attendants, 1278
cenobitic, 1302, 1464, 1471
chanters, 704, 1474-75
chaperones, 654, 679
cloistered, 1261
contemplative, xxiv of distinguished families, 1258, 1278 domestic servants, 611-12, 670, 671, 1258, 1259, 1260, 1278 external (exomonitides), 615, 619, 658, 659, 694 fugitive, 1465, 1477
girls, 652, 671
healthy, 653, 696
idiorhythmic, 1297, 1464, 1471
illiterate, 1514, 1540-41 from the imperial family, 611, 614, 654, 656, 669, 694, 1278 literate, 1477, 1515, 1542 mothers (form of address for older nuns), 1269 noble/aristocratic, xxxiii, 360, 652, 653, 659, 670-71, 1101, 1176, 1180, 1262, 1263, 1278, 1489, 1515, 1520, 1521, 1550 novices, 1463, 1471 old/older/elderly, 654, 679, 1258, 1276, 1463, 1464, 1471, 1473, 1515, 1546 preeminent/leading, xxiv, 1257, 1260, 1261, 1268, 1271, 1272, 1273, 1275, 1277, 1278, 1488, 1517, 1519, 1530, 1538, 1539, 1542, 1543 relatives of founder, 1513, 1566-67 serving in choir or church, xxiii, 662, 686, 688-89, 1256, 1259, 1266, 1267, 1288, 1292, 1486, 1513, 1517, 1530, 1538, 1539, 1545 serving in menial services, xxiii, 653, 691, 1256, 1257, 1267 sick/infirm, 653, 690, 693, 696, 1258, 1259, 1270, 1274, 1276, 1288, 1292, 1463, 1473, 1513, 1515, 1516, 1521, 1539, 1548, 1549-50 sponsors, 1463, 1464, 1471 stewards, 1488, 1538-39 tensored in other convents (exokouritides), 615, 659, 695, 867, 1257, 1271, 1288, 1292
troublemakers, 1465, 1477

GENERAL INDEX

nuns (cont.)

widows, 1257, 1271

young/younger, 1258, 1276, 1515, 1546

nuns' rights: elect superior, 674; financial oversight, 1488, 1538-39; indict superior, 1260, 1268; seek redress for alienations, 657, 673 oars, transport of. See taxes and fiscal obligations (specific) obedience and submission (eupeitheia, hypotage): amenability to, 1631, 1648; benefits of, 1534; to elders, 41; ideal of, 1614, 1619; justification of, 1540; means to achieve, 1208, 1223; and original sin, 1535; to patron, 328, 339, 349, 1585, 1606; to superior, xviii, xxii, 77, 79, 80, 86, 248, 260, 262, 277, 487, 514, 532, 538, 588, 594, 629, 644, 676, 774, 820, 920, 957, 967, 983, 996, 1011, 1114, 1159-60, 1222, 1223, 1260, 1273, 1282, 1305, 1309, 1436, 1447, 1474, 1496, 1500, 1517, 1518, 1526, 1527, 1532, 1558, 1629, 1644, 1650, 1651

obeisance (metanoia, proskynesis). See ritual observances obligations, fixed (monastic), payments on, 1212, 1226

octateuch. See books, Old Testament octaves. See feasts (types of) and Glossary octopus. See fish odes. See hymns (specific) odontagra (forceps for drawing teeth). See supplies, medical offices, monastic. See hours, liturgical oikeiaka. See imperial offices oikistikos. See imperial officials (specific) oikomodion. See taxes and fiscal obligations (specific) oikonomion. See imperial offices

oikonomos. See stewards oikos. See hymns (specific) oikostasion (building site). See buildings, secular oil: bulk purchase of, 788, 826; with healing grace, 927; for lighting, 531, 696, 761, 827; manufacture of, 1434; miraculous exudation of, 840, 1246, 1247; supplying of, 1332, 1334; yearly allowance of, 350, 581, 590, 699, 714, 1334 oil abstainers. See dissidents, religious oil-press (tzymilareion). See tools (specific) oils (specific kinds): aromatic, 1464, 1469; cooking, see cooking oils and fats; flax-seed oil (linelaion), 1281; lamp oil, 761; mastic oil (schinelaion), 827; vine oil (oinanthion), 761, 777n. 71

GENERAL INDEX

oinochoos (wine steward). See monastic officials (specific) oinokolle (wine syrup). See supplies, medical Oktoechos. See books, liturgical oktoemera (octaves). See feasts (types of) and Glossary old age homes (gerokomeia): allowances for, 766, 767; clergy in, 735, 766; directors of (gerokomoi), 363, 367, 735, 767; repair of, 793, 832; residents in (gerokomitai), 310, 311, 735, 766, 795, 825; staff of, 304, 310, 311, 735, 766, 795, 826; support of, xxxv; unification (henosis) with prohibited, 1239, 1249, 1516, 1528

old age homes (specific): Kosmosoteira (Bera), 311, 615, 788, 789, 793, 794, 825-26, 830-31, 832, 850nn. 38 and 40, 851n. 41; Mother of God Petritzonitissa (Bačkovo), 522, 548-49; Pantokrator (CP), 311, 615, 725, 730, 732, 738, 764, 766-67, 768; of Romanos I Lekapenos, 767, 777n. 85; Ta Derma (Philadephia), 296, 297, 303, 304, 310-12; of Theodora Kathare, 712 old age homes (types of): imperial, 363, 367, 615, 735, 766-67; private, 296, 297, 303, 304, 310-12, 522, 548-49

olive groves. See endowments (specific) omphaitos. See convents (parts of) and Glossary omphakomeli (sour grape juice with honey). See supplies, medical opsoniator (caterer). See hospitals and infirmaries, staff of (specific) option (assistant). See hospitals and infirmaries, staff of (specific) oratories. See churches and chapels (monastic) ordinon (ward). See hospitals and infirmaries (parts of) orphans: acceptability of, 22, 32; education of, 1198; guardianship of, 1629, 1657; as lamplighters, 754, 755; as novices, 135, 1486, 1514, 1526, 1579; support of, xxxv, 1102, 1214, 1227

GENERAL INDEX

ortaria (shoes for winter). See footwear (specific) orthomilion (plate). See utensils, household orthotes. See imperial officials (specific) orthros (matins). See hours, liturgical (specific) ospria (legumes). See foods (particular kinds) ossuary. See monasteries (parts of) ostraca. See writing materials

ostria/strakoderma (shellfish). See foods (particular kinds)

Ottoman officials: grand vizier, 1456; Phanariote Greeks, 1456; relations with monasteries, 126, 1456 ounce (oungia). See measures (surface and weight) ownership (despoteia, ktetoreia, somatike despoteia). See patrons, rights of (specific) oxy (purple). See textiles, colors of oxykastoron (violet purple). See textiles, colors of oxymeli (oxymel). See supplies, medical painters. See professions and trades palaiophonos (old notation). See music, church pallion (cloak). See clothing (articles of)

Panagia (raising of). See refectories

Pandektes. See books, ascetic and patristic

Panegyrikon. See books, liturgical panhypersebastos. See titles and dignities pannychis (night office). See hours, liturgical (specific)

Panoiktirmon. See All Merciful and Glossary

GENERAL INDEX

pansebaste sebaste. See titles and dignities pansebastohypertatos. See titles and dignities pansebastos Sebastos. See titles and dignities

Pantanassa. See convents (specific) and Glossary

Pantokrator, xvi. See also hospitals and infirmaries (specific); icons (specific); monasteries (specific); monastic foundation documents, (28) Pantokrator; and Glossary

Pantokrator hospital (CP), 611, 617, 725-81; bathing of the sick in, 760; bedding and clothing in, 757; beds of, 734, 757, 758, 762; burials at, 766; cash distributions to patients and staff of, 759, 765; clergy assigned to, 759, 762, 763, 764; female patients of, xix, 734, 757, 762; food and beverage supplies of, 759-63; funerals at, 762; medical supplies of, see supplies, medical; miscellaneous supplies of, 761-64, 766; outside patients of, 757, 758, 763, 765; parts of, 734, 757, 759-62, 764; patients' allowances at, 759-760; staff of, 734, 757-65; utensils of, 760, 762-64, 777nn. 72 and 82

panyoikeiotatos. See titles and dignities papa ("father"). See titles and dignities and Glossary paper. See writing materials papoutsia (shoes). See footwear (specific) papyrus. See writing materials

Paradeisos. See books, ascetic and patristic parakellarites (assistant cellarer). See monastic officials (specific) parakellion (lavatory). See monasteries (parts of) parakelliotai. See monks (types of) paraklesis (refreshment). See meals (specific) Parakletike. See books, liturgical parakoimomenos. See imperial officials (specific) parangareia (additional compulsory labor). See taxes and fiscal obligations (specific) paraoikonomos. See stewards (types of): assistant parastasimon. See commemorations, liturgical (types of) parchment. See books (specific types) and writing materials parekklesiarches, m.; parekklesiarchissa, f. (assistant ecclesiarch). See monastic officials (specific) parents. See family members (specific) parrots. See birds

GENERAL INDEX

Pascha (Easter). See feasts (specific, movable); dietary rules; and liturgies (specific)

Paschalia. See seasons (liturgical)

Passover. See feasts (specific, movable) pastures. See endowments (specific)

Paterikon. See books, patristic and ascetic patriarchal monasteries: books in, 574; concessions of, 202, 450, 620, 860, 868, 974, 1046, 1052; conversion into, 212, 327, 1491; designation as, 1433, 1584, 1588, 1595; and imperial monasteries, 730, 752, 1238, 1487, 1490; and independent monasteries, 1487; instances of, 135, 574; privatization of, xxix, 200, 868, 869, 981, 986, 994; regulation of, 1495; restorations of, 868, 869 patriarchal offices: sakelle, 992, 993, 994; sekreton, 599

patriarchal rights: assertion of, 1214, 1495-96, 1521; conceded/respected, 734, 751, 794, 800, 986, 1014, 1049, 1054; definition of, 959; ignored, 879; rejected, 618, 794, 846, 1199, 1200, 1240, 1249; release from, xxix, 1033; restricted, 1521, 1528; support for, 1199, 1488 patriarchal rights (specific): abolition of institutional independence, 150; appointment of superior, 136, 973; bestowal of blessing (sphragis) required to hear confession, xxx, 979, 986, 1014, 1049, 1071, 1263; bestowal of pastoral staff, xxx, 1489, 1521, 1530; blessing (sphragis) of the superior, xxx, 616, 619, 876-77, 879, 919, 920, 986, 996, 1049, 1054, 1489, 1521, 1530; confirmation of administrative union (henosis), 1409; confirmation of institutional independence, 144, 153, 163, 566, 567, 860, 867, 986, 1033, 1456, 1629, 1661; confirmation of typika, 1579; correction (diorthosis) of spiritual faults, xxxvi, 618, 1101, 1199, 1200, 1240, 1249, 1263, 1266; donation of monasteries (epidosis), 209; excommunication, 212; granting of institutional independence, 876, 919, 1339; granting of monasteries for improvement (beltiosis) and maintenance (systasis), 1410, 1585; granting of stauropedia, 144, 1043, 1102-3, 1105, 1185, 1396, 1409, 1456, 1584; imposition of guests (katapemptoi), 659, 695, 1048, 1070, 1627, 1661; imposition of postulant (esomonites), 444, 618-19, 864; inquest into property rights, 1237; installation (cheirotonia) of superior, xxx, 212, 731, 867, 870, 1102, 1530; interpretation of typika, 456; investigation (anakrasis) of spiritual faults, 1199, 1200; issue binding legislation, 1495; liturgical commemoration after death (mnemosynon), 1263, 1266, 1405, 1406; liturgical commemoration while living (anaphora), xxxvi, 144, 872, 879, 919, 1101, 1240, 1249, 1263, 1266, 1406; mediation of disputes, 794, 800, 846, 1396; notification, 732, 773; overlordship, 1485, 1489; overriding of typika, 870, 1495; oversight (epiteresis), 618; proclamation (ekphonesis), 1101; receipt of reports on transgressors of Rule, 1503; removal of superior, 1497; subordination of one monastery to another, 1259, 1265;

GENERAL INDEX

unification (henosis) of two monasteries, 150, 1259, 1265; visitation, 137

patriarchal synod (CP): adjudication of disputes between monasteries and ecclesiastical hierarchy by, 168; adjudication of founders' rights by, 457, 1491, 1494; adjudication of other disputes by, 1375; memoranda of, 599; participation in, 1409; and regulation of the charistike, 619, 868, 870; trial of individuals by, 451, 1099, 1199, 1201, 1238, 1375, 1505; upholding of episcopal rights by, 619, 868

patriarchs of Antioch: commission of, 298; designation of, 726; exarchs (proexarchontes) of, 377; individual, 564, 726; interregnum of, 377, 425; patrons' relations with, 299, 309, 870

patriarchs of CP: acts of, 137; appeals to, 136; as benefactors, 872, 927; bequest to, 1426; candidates for, 726; canonical and legal responsibilities of, 657, 673; canonical prerogatives of, 616; and the charistike, 202, 203, 204, 308-9, 618, 981-82, 992; claimant to, 457; communion with, 1489; concession of church by, 789, 845; correspondence of, 564; distrusted by founders, 513, 527, 879; documents authored by, 120-24, 1483, 1627; election of, 150, 456, 1625, 1626; exile of, 121; as guardians, see guardians; imperial support for, 1106; installation of, 457; as monastic protectors, see protectors; monks promoted to be, 1625, 1626, 1629, 1637; papal monarchist claims of, 1495, 1498; and patrons' rights, 49, 1301, 1488, 1490-91, 1493-94; resignation of, 456; retirement of, 213, 1580; support for episcopal rights, 1102; support for monastic reform, 879. See also patriarchal rights patriarchs of Jerusalem, 557, 1312-13, 1314, 1406

patriarchs of Turnovo (Bulgaria), 126, 508

patrikios. See titles and dignities patristic authority: for acceptability of offerings, 382, 410; citation and endorsement of, 70, 78, 90, 137, 139, 215, 247, 377, 379, 446, 512, 541, 570, 573, 587, 592-93, 874, 876, 896, 915, 1094, 1197, 1204, 1305, 1308, 1321, 1326, 1328; for confession, 228, 459, 477-78; for dietary observances, 390, 403, 411, 901, 1497, 1501, 1699; for having all possessions in common, 1457, 1460; knowledge of, 1497, 1501; for practice of manual labor, 127, 133; for reading, 1464, 1475; revival of, 199, 204; on theft as sacrilege, 1498, 1502; on unauthorized departures, 228, 283, 287

patronage. See patrons patrons: accountability of, 328, 338-39, 349; attitudes towards canon law, see canon law; charistikarioi as, 200; correspondence of, 85, 378, 564; families and family lines of, 45, 47, 298, 302, 303, 328, 330, 331, 340-41, 351, 513, 866, 867, 1486, 1513; family properties of, see property, non-consecrated; hereditary/intergenerational obligations of, 1098, 1213, 1232, 1239, 1485; list of, 508; liturgical commemoration of, see commemorations (specific); loans of to monastery, see loans; monks' relations with, 1345, 1360, 1436-37, 1443-44, 1445; and patriarchal stauropugia, see patriarchal rights (specific); portraits of, see portraits; provide for self-governance, see independent and self-governing monasteries; rejection of patriarchal rights, see patriarchal rights; relations with ecclesiastical hierarchy, see ecclesiastical hierarchy: relations with founders; relations with holy men, 245; reprimanding of, 328, 349; response to charistike, 49; role of, 27n. 23, 47, 197; signatures of, 188, 560n. 71, 594, 598, 601, 651, 706, 1088, 1126, 1166, 1180, 1305n. 2, 1306, 1411, 1412, 1416; spiritual advisors of, 1383, 1384; visits by, 456, 457

GENERAL INDEX

patrons (types of): charistikarioi, 200; former military officers, 377, 507, 1238, 1247; heavenly, 462, 658, 677, 1240, 1250, 1629, 1662; hereditary, 1239, 1376; intergenerational, 1209, 1228; late antique, 43; late Byzantine, 1299; local, 1097; noble, 872, 927; non-resident, 40; peasants, 203; restorer (anakainistes), 1375; traditional private, 47, 272, 1584, 1585; villagers, 314; who become monks, 974, 1456 patrons, rights of: acknowledged, 1044, 1088; definition of, 197, 1304, 1307; denied, 122, 172, 1491, 1494, 1497; entitlement to, 1518, 1519, 1556, 1561; extraordinary, 982, 1255; financial aspects of, 1376; justification of, 1466, 1473; redefinition/restriction of, 201, 445, 616, 619, 1099, 1298, 1301, 1344, 1488, 1491, 1519, 1627; traditional, 609, 1296; transferral of, 181, 1304, 1307. See also protectors, rights of patrons, rights of (specific): administration, 654, 667; appointment of imposed guests, xxxiv; appointment of monks, 1410, 1411, 1415, 1420; appointment of steward, 328, 339, 346, 347, 655, 677, 791, 801; appointment of superior, xxix, 55-56, 71, 75, 170, 181, 195, 246, 328, 344-46, 347, 461, 484, 513, 514, 529, 550, 613, 617, 623, 625, 629, 632, 655, 674, 726, 727, 731, 732, 751, 790, 791, 804, 805, 957, 961, 977, 994, 1114, 1159, 1211, 1219, 1304, 1307, 1392, 1397, 1401, 1406, 1436, 1439, 1488, 1497, 1629, 1630, 1636; appointment of other officials, 732; be honored with charitable donations, 733, 743; burial within monastery, 514, 525, 574, 601, 658, 705, 725, 726, 730, 733, 743, 749, 789, 791, 792, 823, 837, 838, 844, 845, 985, 1013, 1178, 1182, 1238, 1254, 1255, 1261, 1278, 1344, 1369, 1397, 1401, 1518, 1519, 1562; changing typikon/making new rules, 658, 672-73; composition of typikon, 983, 994; confirmation of superior, xxxi, 1411, 1412, 1417, 1423; dominion (kyriotes), 253, 254, 255, 265n. 9, 278, 339, 344, 351, 352, 555, 595; exercising personal rule, 328, 345-46; installation of superior, 1211, 1219; maintenance of residence in/near monastery, 649, 655, 656, 704, 710, 732, 772, 791, 792, 824, 848, 1178, 1182, 1263, 1466, 1473, 1625, 1631, 1637; mediation of disputes, 328, 348, 1211-12, 1222; nomination of candidates for superiority, 731, 751; ownership (despoteia, somatike despoteia), 168, 253, 265n. 2, 339, 353, 364, 524, 542, 595, 667, 828, 829, (ktetoreia), 330, 1376, 1397, 1581; preferential admissions for relatives of, 327, 348, 510, 515, 547, 574, 595, 650, 655, 656, 659, 670-71, 1255, 1260, 1278; preferential admissions for themselves, 793, 824, 983, 1030, 1254, 1456, 1513, 1561-62; presiding over community reconciliations, 328, 348; primogeniture, 339; private profit, 302, 329, 330, 345, 443, 513, 542; receiving commemorative services, see commemorations, liturgical (individual); receiving financial accounts, 328, 344; receiving liturgical offerings, 656, 687-88; rendering of unappealable judgments, 328, 348; resolution of disputes, 328, 348

peacocks. See birds peasants (types of): dependent, see peasants, dependent; entered on tax rolls, 168; free, 330, 352; hereditary, 168; landowning, 143; leaseholding, 551; serving in monastic hostel (Lat.: ministeriales), xxv; tax-exempt, 167, 208; zeugaratoi, 499 (see also Glossary) peasants, dependent (paroikoi): charitable distributions to, 517, 545; concern for welfare of, 151, 164, 303-4, 320, 330, 352, 448, 517, 524, 545, 615, 659, 685, 795, 829, 832, 834, 865; considered necessary, 571; defending monastery, 783; diet regulated by superior, xxxi, 843; freedoms of, 304; as gift, see endowments (specific); leasing of land to, 515, 551; ministry to, xxiv, 795, 843; not to be disturbed, 315, 320; as patrons, 203; property of protected, 200, 551; tax status of, 168, 208; working on monastic lands, xxxv, 167, 320, 499, 526, 549, 769, 770, 832, 1099, 1673

pechys (cubit). See measures (surface and weight)

GENERAL INDEX

peisa. See measures (surface and weight) pekoulia. See private property pepentarios (druggist). See hospitals and infirmaries, staff of (specific) penalties. See punishments (specific kinds) penance. See punishments (specific kinds) pendants. See crosses (types of) penitentials: attributed to Theodore the Studite, 85; pseudo-Basilian, 30, 31, 32, 33, 38, 44, 60, 1298, 1343, 1345; of St. Nicholas of Kasoulon, 1319; Western, xxii. See also canons, disciplinary pensions (siteseis) and pensioners (of monasteries), xxxii, xxxiv, 327, 331, 348, 351, 353, 611

Pentekostarion. See books, liturgical perama (ford). See endowments (specific) perfumery. See buildings, secular (particular kinds)

Peribleptos (of the Mother of God). See monasteries (specific) and Glossary periorismos (delimitation). See legal documents (specific) peripherion (frame). See icons (types of) peristethion (vest). See clothing (articles of) personal possessions. See private property petalon (nimbus). See icons (types of) petiton (territorial district). See territorial jurisdictions

Petritziotissa/Petritzonitissa. See churches and chapels (monastic); monasteries (specific); and Glossary phaba (beans). See foods (particular kinds) phakiolion. See clothing (articles of) and Glossary phengion (halo/nimbus). See icons (types of) phiale. See churches (parts of) philanthropic institutions: associated with a monastery, 311; ban on construction of, 201; directors of, 200; renewed interest in, 303; servants in, 729, 762-65, 767, 789, 826, 831. See also almshouse; confraternity; hospices; hospitals and infirmaries; lepers' sanatorium; and old age homes

GENERAL INDEX

Philanthropos (of Christ). See monasteries (specific) and Glossary philanthropy (institutional): commitment to, xxxv, 448, 516-17, 615, 1049, 1061, 1101-2; disinterest in, 865, 868, 986, 1489, 1521. See also charitable distributions phlamoulon (fan). See cloths, liturgical (specific) phlebotomon sideron (lancet). See supplies, medical phlebotomos (bloodletter). See hospitals and infirmaries, staff of (specific) phorologos. See imperial officials (specific) phoundax (warehouse). See buildings, secular (particular kinds) phournikon (corner bay). See churches (parts of) physicians. See doctors pier (skala). See endowments (specific) pilgrims and pilgrimages: to CP, 727; donations from, 1345; foundations on routes for, 1298; to the Holy Land, 195, 425, 1107, 1128, 1313, 1314, 1317; hostel for, xix, 343, 425, 427; monks as/on, xviii, 207, 427, 457, 508, 564, 623, 632, 1107, 1128; to Neophytos' Holy Cross monastery, 1339

pillows (pillota). See bedding (specific kinds) pinkernes. See titles and dignities pirates. See criminals pitch (pissa). See supplies, shipbuilding pitchmaker. See professions and trades pittakion. See legal documents (specific) plague. See illnesses and injuries (specific) platidion. See boats (particular kinds) and Glossary plinthion. See measures (surface and weight) plot (stichos). See territorial jurisdictions

GENERAL INDEX

podea. See cloths, liturgical (specific) podorgyroi (sandals). See footwear (specific) poems: in commemoration of superiors, 1320; dedicatory, 1207 poet. See professions and trades pokrobion (blanket, fleece). See bedding (specific kinds) polyeleos. See psalms (specific) polykandelon (chandelier). See lighting devices (specific) portico (heliakon). See buildings, secular (parts of) portraits (specific): of apa Abraham, 52; of Georgi and Constantine, 508; of Manuel of Stroumitza, 169 portraits, donor, 52, 169, 508, 509 postulants: disqualifications of, 22, 521, 547, 570, 592, 867, 1470; entrance gifts of, 151, 161, 1269, 1448, 1647-48; examination of, 1647; expectations/qualifications of, xxviii, 615, 638, 1434, 1435, 1447, 1498-99, 1502, 1627; and family, 1646; imposition of, 44, 547, 1447; married men as, 22; minimum age of, xix, 787, 822; and poverty, 1498, 1502, 1630-31, 1648; reading of typikon or canons to, see reading (subjects for); reception of, 748, 1366, 1447; renunciation (apotage) of property of, see private property; rotation of through work assignments, 1096; and secular considerations for admission of, 1498, 1502, 1631, 1648; vows of, 1500, 1502; wealth of, xvii, 1648; who is to admit, 824, 867; women as, 1470. See also novices poterokalymma (veil). See cloths, liturgical (specific) poverty: lay, 570, 592; monastic, see monastic poverty praetorium. See imperial offices praipositos. See imperial officials (specific) praitorion (inn). See buildings, secular (particular kinds) praktika. See legal documents (specific) praktor (fiscal agent). See imperial officials (specific) Praxapostolos. See books, liturgical prayers: appropriate conduct during, 536, 537, 1514, 1541; avoiding carelessness in, 1514, 1539; correct performance of, 1514, 1537; efficacy of, 1260, 1273; importance of, xxiv, 493; private, 1515, 1542; punishment for lateness at, 34, 478, 811, 909, 1142, 1143, 1157; recitation versus singing of, 1197, 1204; seasoning work with, 1513, 1540; times for recitation of, 63

GENERAL INDEX

prayers (specific): Kyrie eleison, 101AB, 104AB, 176, 177, 221, 223, 224, 277, 385, 387, 389, 391, 476, 484, 674, 739, 746, 755, 756, 759, 801, 803, 804, 808, 816, 833, 839, 898, 996, 1027, 1087, 1601; "Lord Jesus Christ, Son of God, have mercy upon me," 1474; Lord's Prayer, 62; trisagion, 160, 185, 343, 349, 354, 360, 484, 491, 674, 677, 680, 739, 743, 756, 839, 895, 967, 996, 1053, 1087, 1136, 1228, 1356, 1545. See also Glossary for Greek terms prayers (types of): for all Christians, xxv, 1260, 1273, 1392; for the army, 136, 511, 542, 1086, 1402; for bishops, 1344, 1355; for emperor, 511, 542, 595, 600, 706, 739, 767, 768, 774, 1081, 1086, 1131, 1136, 1344, 1355, 1406, 1412, 1427-28, 1586, 1601; for founders, 1136, 1260, 1261, 1273, 1586, 1601; for local nobility, 1397, 1402; for magistrates, 1344, 1355; for monks, 1344, 1355; for nuns, 1260, 1273; for patrons and benefactors, 1397, 1401; for patriarch, 1406; for rulers, 1397, 1401, 1402, 1412, 1427; for one's soul, 511, 542; hypocritical, 521; in refectory, 478, 744, 810, 908, 1005, 1075, 1142; private, xxvi, xxxii, 474, 806, 1261, 1274, 1463, 1474. See also commemorations, liturgical (individual) precious metals: hoarding of, 72, 79, 82n. 21, 130, 590; ownership of disclaimed, 53, 57 precious metals (specific): gold, decorative, 552, 716, 993, 1186, 1562, 1672, 1673; gold, lust for, 1210, 1225; malagma (pure gold), 1561; silver, objects and decorations, 52, 347, 356, 357, 358, 369, 370, 526, 552, 553, 696, 714, 716, 902, 968, 1277, 1393, 1561, 1562, 1672. See also coinage

Presanctified Gifts (prohegiasmena dora). See liturgies (specific) pride. See vices, monastic prie-dieu (proseuchadion). See churches (parts of) priests: allowances/salaries of, see salaries; appointments of, 301, 302; assigned to burials, 460, 464, 494, 699; assigned to churches, 978, 1000, 1045, 1057, 1116, 1166, 1239, 1250, 1313, 1316, 1375, 1380, 1585, 1609; assigned to funerary chapel, 516, 548, 729, 766; duties of, 510, 511, 658, 673, 1514, 1547; election of, 1475; income of, 729, 766; installation of superior by, 1259-60, 1267; liturgical instructions for, 98AB, 99AB, 100A, 101A, 114B, 115A; may not be stewards, xxxii, 264, 744; order of precedence, 740; ordination of, 282, 285, 377, 1588; preferential seating of, 986, 1019, 1048, 1075, 1143; and rank among the "more prominent" monks, 573, 589; role in elections, 655, 674; selection of, 1463, 1475-76, 1514, 1547; serving as singers in church, 652, 704, 1463, 1475; tenure of, 302, 319, 1463, 1475; training for, 447, 516, 1673 priests (types of): beggar, 1597; eunuch, xix, 653, 678, 1514; Greek, 521, 547; Latin, 1320; married, xix, 1514, 1547; mature/old/older, 514, 516, 551, 1514, 1585, 1609; mendicant, 1588, 1597; oldest, 1259, 1267; replacement, 1257, 1267; resident, 264, 319, 320, 520, 531, 532, 535, 551, 589, 704, 738, 749, 754, 1000, 1057, 1267, 1292, 1380; secular, 1475-76, 1547; stationed in hospitals, 759, 762, 764; stationed in old age home, 735, 767; stewards, 677; vagabond/migratory, 198, 233, 238 primate (protothronos). See ecclesiastical officials (specific) primikerios. See hospitals and infirmaries, staff of (specific)

GENERAL INDEX

primogeniture. See patrons, rights of (specific) priories. See monasteries (types of) prisoners: monks as, 1343, 1351; political, xxii, xxxiv, 726, 783; of war, xxv, 600, 628, 630, 1102, 1214, 1226-27, 1426, 1427 prisons: lay, 1343, 1351; monastic, see monasteries (parts of): confinement, places of private church system. See private religious foundations private monasteries. See private religious foundations private ownership (idioktesia), of religious institutions. See private religious foundations private property (pekoulia): acquisition of discouraged, 427, 436; allowed to monks, xxxiii, 40, 46, 53, 151, 161-62, 228, 233, 239, 240, 614, 1304, 1614, 1619; allowed to nuns, 1464, 1468; bequeathed to lay people, 1616; confiscation of, 120, 459, 491; desire for, xxxii; donation of to poor, xxxv, 57, 1437, 1448, 1631, 1648; donation of to relatives, 1631, 1648; lifetime usufruct of, 1614, 1619; prohibition of, 23, 27, 34, 36, 39, 77, 78, 152, 161, 170, 215, 247, 258, 303, 427, 432, 444, 446, 459, 466, 490, 511, 530, 570, 590, 626, 632, 634, 640, 644, 653, 694, 875, 923, 956, 965, 1094, 1112, 1148, 1157, 1210, 1222, 1340, 1342, 1356, 1364, 1366, 1436, 1451, 1457, 1460, 1496, 1502, 1505, 1515, 1536, 1618, 1628, 1643, 1646, 1650, 1651; redistributed at death, xxxiv, 40, 434, 1619; renunciation (apotage) of, 23, 1448, 1496, 1502, 1614, 1618, 1629, 1646; respect for, 1492; restriction of, 170, 176; retained for illness/old age, 1496, 1497, 1507, 1587, 1600, 1616, 1628, 1646; retention of, 879; sold by peasants to founder, 143; treatment of, 23n. 9

private religious foundations: and alternative forms of monasticism, 1300; and the charistike, 246, 283, 327; condemned, 513, 542; confiscations of, 49, 120, 204, 299, 307, 444, 616; conservative usages of, 170, 1297; contrasted unfavorably to independent foundations, 1210, 1218; conversion into imperial foundations, 609; decay of monastic life in, 46, 151; examples of, 1436, 1465; family rights in, 45, 53, 171, 181, 327; legal framework of, 46, 122; model for large monasteries, 199; mores of, 170, 198, 199, 233, 282, 327, 794; needs of, 298; perils to, 323; problems endemic in, 330; property rights in, 303, 380; and the protectorate, 298, 302; reliance on cash incomes, 48; rights of, 1495; sale and purchase of, 120; secularization of, 45, 68, 71, 313, 328; state support of, 1212; transformation into independent monasteries, 1177; transmission of, 328, 1304, 1305, 1308 private religious foundations (types of): late Byzantine, 1295-1302; medieval Western, xxviii; private churches, 39, 296, 1102, 1176; private monasteries, 43, 44, 46, 47, 48, 51-52, 53-57, 67, 71, 170, 181, 184, 186, 187, 201, 202, 245, 246, 1176; private nunnery, 1465; Syriac, 40; traditional, 43-50, 330, 654 privileges, aristocratic: accepted, xix, xxxiv, 516, 733, 748, 784, 793, 844-45, 1489, 1550, 1587-88; ambivalence towards, 1100; defense of, 785, 848, 1101, 1221, 1269, 1412, 1423; equality of (isotimia), 1263, 1269; hostility towards, xxii, 153, 199, 282, 464, 487-88, 659, 676, 793, 811, 819-20, 1012, 1069, 1631; rationalization of, 1213, 1221; restriction of, 445 privileges, aristocratic (specific): access for worship, 788, 847; better diet, 656, 670, 733, 752,

GENERAL INDEX

1412, 1421; entitlement to servants, 526, 656, 670, 1258, 1259, 1278, 1515, 1520, 1550, 1587, 1600; exemption from cenobitic rules, xxxiii, 653, 670-71, 1258, 1260, 1278, 1410, 1411, 1417, 1423, 1424; exemption from common meals, 1258, 1260, 1278; exemption from monastic equality, 614, 733, 1213, 1221; exemption from novitiate, 494, 878, 929; exemption from sexually based exclusion, 71, 447, 878, 937, 1258, 1270, 1588, 1601; lighter regimen, 1587, 1600; meals at special times, 1631, 1653; preferential admissions, 615, 659, 670, 794, 824; retention of private property, 152, 161; shorter novitiate, 494, 1010, 1045, 1067, 1096; special living quarters, 656, 659, 670; special treatment generally, 1410, 1423; special visitation privileges, 654, 679; use of bathhouse, 788, 847 privileges, patronal. See patrons, rights of and protectors, rights of proasteia (estates). See rural settlements processions, liturgical: commemorative, 732, 759; at dedication of church, 314, 317; at funerals, 789, 823; before vespers, 215, 227 processions, liturgical (specific): Feast of Annunciation, 101A; Easter, 93, 101A, 704, 787, 843; Epiphany, 114B, 115A; Palm Sunday, 101A; feast of Dormition, 787, 827, 843

procheirisis (appointment). See superiors

procuress. See professions and trades

Prodromos (of St. John the Baptist). See Index of People and Places: John the Baptist and Forerunner, St. and Glossary

proedros. See titles and dignities: protoproedros proleusimaios. See imperial officials (specific) proestos, m.; proestosa, f. See superiors professions and trades: actors, 1463, 1475; advocates, 1629, 1657; architects, 725; artist, 1515, 1531; beggars, 1004, 1049, 1061, 1588, 1597; calligraphers, 163, 215, 242, 278, 569, 590, 640, 645; charcoal burner, 1176, 1180; copyists, 93, 112AB, 216, 640, 645, 1319, 1478; craftsmen, 787, 841; grooms, 759, 764, 843, 979, 1031; kalliphonoi, 1257, 1277, 1376, 1380; kraktai, 1376, 1380; painters, 241, 1182; pitchmaker, 1279; poet, 367; procuress, 1465, 1477; retainers, 791, 804, 844, 845; rush mat maker, 712, 713; scribes, 163, 597, 599, 630, 633, 634n. 7; seaman, 595; secretary, 791, 804, 844; shepherds/herdsmen, 212, 1110, 1115, 1116, 1148, 1154; singers, professional, 652, 704; teacher, 1370; tenant farmers, 1110, 1116, 1148, 1154; tutors, 848. See also hospitals and infirmaries, staff of (specific); laborers, monastic (specific); and Glossary for Greek terms profit: management for, 657, 667, 1458, 1460, 1630, 1652, 1656; patron's right to, see patrons, rights of (specific); rejected, 792, 825, 1342, 1357, 1365 prohegiasmena dora. See liturgies (specific): presanctified gifts prohegoumenos. See superiors (types of): former prokeimenon. See psalms (specific) promiscuity. See vices, monastic promissory note. See legal documents (specific) pronoia. See endowments (specific) and Glossary prooimion. See psalms (specific) property, animate, gifts of, 526, 1140, 1190 property, ecclesiastical. See monastic property property, immovable. See endowments (specific) property, movable: emergency alienations of, 461, 488-89, 657, 673, 784, 790, 792, 820-21, 863, 877, 922, 985, 1262, 1279; gifts of, 631, 1117, 1140; increase of, 1305, 1308; inventories of, 356-60, 368-70, 552-54, 714-17, 859, 958, 968; purchased with income from immovable property, 658, 673; storage of, 869; survival of despite structural ruination, 869n. 11 property, non-consecrated, 329, 336, 342, 431, 656, 706-9, 1517, 1519, 1557-58 property, rental (enoikika). See endowments (specific) property, tax-free: eleuthera, 1639; logisima, 524, 594 property managers/administrators: accountable to patron, 328, 329, 344; accountable to steward, 1148, 1212, 1224; accountable to superior, 657, 678, 1154; appointed by stewards, 1272; appointed by superiors, see superiors' rights; and cultivation of landed properties, 1099; laymen banned from serving as, 1116, 1154; laymen serving as, 749, 958, 1212, 1226; monks serving as, 1110, 1154, 1212, 1226; and peasantry, 615; qualifications and duties of, 493, 657, 659, 685, 790, 818, 878, 927, 1116, 1147, 1148, 1153, 1154; spiritual risks of, 1116, 1154

GENERAL INDEX

Prophetologion/Prophetes/Propheteia. See books, liturgical proprietary churches and monasteries. See private religious foundations proseuchadion. See churches (parts of): prie-dieu and reliquaries proskephalaion (pillow). See bedding (specific kinds) prosodion. See taxes and fiscal obligations (specific) prosomoia. See hymns (specific) prosphora (eucharistic bread). See bread; Eucharist, Holy; and liturgical offerings prostagmata. See imperial legislation (specific) prostates. See protectors and the protectorate prostaxeis (decrees). See imperial legislation (specific) prostrations (metanoiai). See ritual observances protectors (ephoroi, epitropoi, prostatai, antilambanomenoi) and the protectorate (ephoreia), 295-309; abolition of, 271, 1491; absence of, 1629, 1637; acceptance of, 975; appointment/establishment of, xxxvi, 271, 272, 275, 310, 312, 315, 319, 323, 324, 326, 327, 339, 426, 568, 572, 595, 598, 619, 650, 654, 655, 669-70, 709-10, 731, 732, 773, 865, 981, 998, 1043, 1046, 1055-56, 1097, 1104, 1211, 1233, 1239, 1250, 1259, 1266, 1298, 1517, 1528, 1529, 1581, 1582, 1585, 1605; concept of, 330; consolation for deposed, 331, 350-51; deposition of, 302, 331, 345, 350-51; discredited by the charistike, 306; establishment of prohibited, 331, 338, 352, 571, 586, 610, 613, 654, 667, 789, 804, 815, 957, 963, 981, 992, 999, 1034, 1056, 1098, 1210, 1217, 1249; financial compensation for, 301, 302; gifts to, 301, 315, 319; given copy of typikon, 656, 705; historical antecedents of, xxxvi, 297, 1584; influence of reform movement on, 611; justification of, 1259, 1266; over Lavra, 197, 202, 210, 300; privatization of, 300, 610; reform of, 978; responsibilities and duties of, xxxvi, 272, 296, 301, 315, 320, 426, 428, 657, 669, 673, 703, 710, 790, 804, 981-82, 998, 1019-20, 1046, 1052, 1053, 1056, 1077, 1113-14, 1344, 1385, 1397, 1401, 1517, 1529, 1582, 1584, 1585, 1587, 1605-6; restrictions on, 443, 611, 613, 655, 669, 671, 703, 710, 731, 773, 865, 978, 999, 1056; revival of, 211, 271, 610-11, 865, 866; serve without pay, 998, 1047, 1056; signature of, 974, 1034, 1088; succession to, 326, 328, 731, 773, 982, 998; titles of, 297-98, 315, 331, 610, 1488. See also administrators; curators; and guardians protectors (types of): of convents, 957, 961-62, 1113, 1166, 1517; dishonest, 331, 345, 350-51, 985, 1019; dual, 209, 301; external (outside), 328, 331, 338; female, 300, 328, 331, 338-39, 351, 355, 654, 655, 669, 709-10; future, 983, 999; heavenly, xxxvi, 311, 317, 329, 337, 341, 354, 427, 437, 492, 515, 552, 681, 790, 804, 805, 818, 926, 995, 999, 1002, 1053, 1056, 1084, 1163, 1465, 1478, 1517, 1527, 1629, 1662; hereditary, 655, 709-10, 1240, 1250, 1259, 1266, 1505; imperial, 324, 1097, 1113, 1163-64, 1232, 1249, 1259, 1266, 1605-6, 1607; local nobility, 1397; nuns, 655, 710; patriarchal, xxxvi, 1211, 1233, 1626, 1629, 1637; private (internal), 572, 654; public office-holders, 314, 654, 1046, 1055; regional, xxxv; self-perpetuating, 271 protectors, rights of: description of, 978, 998-99; exercise of, xxix; financial aspects of, 300-301, 302; spiritual aspects of, xxxvi, 1585, 1608; and traditional patronal powers, 865. See also patrons, rights of protectors, rights of (specific): act as overseer and corrector, 272, 277; appoint/enroll monks and nuns, 315, 319, 655, 669, 982, 999, 1056; appoint priests, 315, 319; appoint superior, 272, 277, 300, 301, 310, 315, 320, 323, 324, 656, 1629, 1661; appropriate assets, 655, 669, 982, 999, 1056; assist in spiritual matters, 1585, 1608; be buried within monastery, 655, 704, 983, 999; be listed in diptychs after death, 669, 999, 1047, 1056; change/revise typikon, 655, 669, 865, 982, 998, 999, 1004, 1056; control property, 655, 669; designate successor, 300; exempt from sexually based exclusion, 1257, 1258, 1270, 1277; expel monks and nuns, 655, 659, 669, 671, 999, 1056; informed of emergency alienations, 658, 673; install superior, 272, 277; issue typikon, 1043, 1046, 1049, 1052, 1084, 1613; liturgical commemoration, 655, 669, 983, 999, 1047, 1056; maintain residence in/near monastery, 654, 655, 656, 669, 704; oversee monastic discipline, 1585, 1606; preside at/intervene in elections, 655, 674, 982, 995, 1024, 1046, 1053, 1054; provide for ascetics, 272, 278; receive financial accounts, 310, 312, 655, 669, 982, 999, 1056; remove steward, 657, 678; remove superior, 272, 278, 323, 324, 655, 669, 982, 983, 998, 999, 1056, 1113, 1161; uphold monks' moral character, 315, 320 protekdikos. See imperial officials (specific) protoallagator. See imperial officials (specific) protokentarchos. See imperial officials (specific) protokometes (village headman). See imperial officials (specific) protomenites. See hospitals and infirmaries, staff of (specific) protonotarios. See imperial officials (specific) protopapas. See ecclesiastical officials (specific) protoproedros. See titles and dignities protos. See hospitals and infirmaries, staff of (specific) and monastic officials (specific) protospatharios, m.; protospatharissa, f. See titles and dignities protostrator. See imperial officials (specific) protostratorissa. See titles and dignities protosynkellos. See ecclesiastical officials (specific) prothronos (primate). See ecclesiastical officials (specific) protovestiaros, m.; protovestiarica, f. See titles and dignities psalmody: clarity of, 1224; exemption from performance of, 93, 112AB; on Holy Wednesday, 390; for Lent, 1627, 1660, for other periods of fasting, 1627, 1660; and manual labor, 511, 538, 1474; participation by laymen in, 1313, 1316; performance of, 24; private recitation of, 392, 474, 866; recitation of at first hour, 473-74, at third hour, 1710, at sixth hour, 1710; regulations for, 91, 104-5, 1209, 1225-26, 1474-75; sleeping during, 1368; and "unadorned" music, 1475. See also hymnody psalms (specific): Blameless (Amomos, Psalm 118 [119]), 102B, 104AB, 105AB, 222, 385, 387, 739, 898, 918, 1335; "God is the Lord" (Psalm 117 [118]) (sung on non-fast days), 402, 403, 411, 414, 473, 475, 535, 686, 688, 740, 805, 806, 807, 894, 895, 897, 1006, 1008, 1063, 1065, 1083, 1135, 1137, 1145, 1335; Polyeleos, 160, 1146; prokeimenon, 100A, 101A, 102AB, 106AB, 222, 389; prooimion (Psalm 103 [104]), 100A, 101A, 103A, 104B, 105AB, 223; refectory psalm (Psalm 144 [145]), 394, 478, 689, 743, 810, 908, 965, 1005, 1062, 1142; Six Psalms (hexapsalmos), 99AB, 102AB, 105AB, 113AB, 177, 221, 222, 224, 386, 389, 474, 532, 689, 740, 806, 808, 898,

GENERAL INDEX

GENERAL INDEX

GENERAL INDEX

1028, 1083, 1137, 1155; typika, 687. See Glossary for Greek terms psalter: memorization of, 1350; reading of, see reading (subjects for); recitation of, 104A, 112AB, 227, 866, 895, 1475, 1515, 1542; study of, 93, 113B, 216, 1111, 1113, 1155 psalter (parts of), 103B; antiphon, 100A, 106AB, 1335; gradual antiphon (anabathmos), 102B, 222; kathisma, 64, 102AB, 103B, 104AB, 106B, 113AB, 222, 223, 224, 387, 388, 390, 391, 739, 740, 898, 1334, 1335, 1660; verses from (typika), 109AB. See Glossary for Greek terms psaltes (chanters of the office). See monks (types of) psomozemia. See taxes and fiscal obligations (specific) psychikon. See donations, pious

Psychosostis. See monasteries (specific) and Glossary psychrokauter (cauterizer, cold). See supplies, medical pterygia. See churches (parts of) and Glossary ptisane (barley water). See drinks and beverages (specific) ptochotropheion. See almshouse ptochotrophos. See imperial officials (specific) punishment, instruments of: rods, 171, 183; straps, 171, 183; whips, 108AB punishments: corporal, 93, 108AB, 183, 216, 957; emphasis on, 60; humane, 1366; instruments of, 171, 183; moderate, 216, 224, 1366; moderation of, 331; not too severe, 171, 183; spiritual, 171, 183; symbol of, 1211, 1219 punishments (specific kinds): blinding, 726, 783; capital, 1516, 1520, 1527; confinement/imprisonment, xxii, 93, 108AB, 121, 171, 215, 225, 862, 866, 955, 956, 967, 1042, 1314, 1317, 1345; defrocking, 65, 382, 406-7; deposition, 331, 345, 350-51; deprivation of blessed bread, 1368; deprivation of food/fasting, 60, 141, 479, 585, 978, 1009, 1066, 1157, 1366, 1518, 1542; dry food diet, 1137, 1359; excommunication, 63, 477, 821, 1137, 1157, 1343, 1345, 1346, 1356, 1361, 1366, 1368, 1457, 1460, 1465, 1477; expulsion, xv, xviii, 60, 62, 63, 141, 171, 183, 185-86, 348, 382, 407, 456, 459, 462, 464, 477, 479, 490, 514, 537, 570, 585, 592, 956, 957, 967, 973, 1115, 1117, 1139, 1148, 1149, 1179, 1183, 1213, 1223, 1314, 1317, 1340, 1343, 1364, 1366, 1385, 1387, 1397, 1401, 1435, 1450, 1465, 1476, 1497, 1499, 1502, 1586, 1596, 1603, 1604, 1628, 1630, 1643, 1644, 1649, 1654; genuflections, 1142, 1518, 1542; humiliation, 93, 113AB, 348; lying face down, 60, 64; manual labor, 511; performance of service, 1117, 1143; prostrations, 1157, 1158, 1473; reduction in rank, 570, 591; restitution, 302, 330, 345, 490, 842, 877, 923; vigils, standing, 1518, 1542; water-only diet, 1518, 1542; whipping, xxii, 108AB, 171, 183 purchases: in bulk, 788, 826; compulsory, see taxes and fiscal obligations (specific)

GENERAL INDEX

pyleonarios/pyloros. See monastic officials (specific): gatekeeper pyria (poultice). See supplies, medical pyrromaches/pyrrostia (tripod for cooking pot). See utensils, household quaestor. See imperial officials (specific) quarreling. See vices, monastic rabdos, poimantike. See staffs raids, enemy. See calamities rake ([novice's] rags). See novices rakendysia ([period of] novitiate). See novitiate rakendytountes. See novices raso. See clothing (articles of) reader (ecclesiastical). See ecclesiastical officials (specific) reading: aloud, 1464, 1475; endorsed, 28, 35, 93, 216, 1463, 1464, 1475; list of works for, 379, 392, 1515, 1531, 1556-57, 1560; preferred to psalmody, xxviii, 1464, 1475; proficiency in, 653, 678; teaching of, 1464, 1477

reading (subjects for): Ascetic Treatises of Basil of Caesarea, 1630, 1658; catechesis, 106B; Epistles, 104AB; Holy Scripture, 28, 261, 408; Gerontika, 1630, 1658; Gospel, 1185, 1186, 1189; hagiography, 1515, 1531, 1560, 1569n. 17; monastic vows, 178, 1500, 1502; psalter, 1354, 1515, 1542; typikon, (to monks and nuns), xiii, 216, 228, 353, 446, 461, 466, 498, 640, 644, 646, 656, 698, 792, 825, 876, 946, 978, 984, 1005, 1047, 1062, 1115, 1165, 1212, 1229, 1251, 1261, 1268, 1340, 1344, 1354, 1498, 1500, 1502, 1519, 1556, 1599, 1658, (to postulants), 875, 929, 1111, 1115, 1141, 1342, 1344, 1366. See also literacy reading (times and places for): in cells, 156, 1320, 1328, 1384, 1387, 1515, 1542; in the evening, 391, 1464, 1475; during manual labor, 652, 671; in refectory, 27, 32, 92, 109AB, 215, 225, 394, 478, 533, 690, 744, 811, 909, 1005, 1062, 1133, 1142, 1227, 1274, 1496, 1501, 1508, 1515, 1519, 1548, 1556, 1597, 1630, 1658; during rest period, 108AB, 215, 227, 228, 1328, 1643

readings (liturgical). See books, liturgical recluses (enkleistoi): of Neophytos' Holy Cross monastery, 1338, 1339, 1342, 1344; superior of Evergetis, 483; Theodore Studites' successor, 76. See also Index of People and Places: Neophytos the Recluse

GENERAL INDEX

reconciliations (community): by patriarch of CP, 800, 846; by protectors, 301, 347 records: countersigning of, 1616, 1620; keeping of, 657, 825, 877, 1003, 1060, 1110, 1115, 1148, 1151, 1152, 1375, 1378, 1488-89, 1519, 1539, 1616, 1620 records (specific): cartularies, 7, 20, 136, 167, 168, 205, 210, 566, 1303, 1304, 1409, 1580; inventories (brevia), see inventories; ledgers, 985, 1003; registers, 1100, 1494, 1615, 1620; tabularies, xiii, 623, 624, 1477 records (types of): of alienations, 462, 489; of bedding, 1519, 1543; of clothing, 1519, 1543; of crops, 1519, 1539; of expenditures, 462, 489, 657, 682, 792, 817, 821, 877, 1115, 1151, 1212, 1226, 1616, 1620; of incomes, 462, 489, 657, 682, 792, 817, 821, 877, 1115, 1151, 1212, 1226, 1616, 1620; of property, 1100; of supplies, 1519, 1543

refectories (aristeterion, trapeza): assignment of seating in, see superiors' rights; books read in, 1658; common meals in, 135, 152, 158, 459, 653, 694, 956, 979, 1008, 1045, 1065, 1112, 1146, 1258, 1260, 1274, 1384, 1387, 1436, 1443, 1515, 1536; construction of, 206, 508, 974, 1107, 1117, 1130, 1178, 1182, 1304, 1411, 1417, 1423, 1456, 1579, 1593; decoration of, 212, 1190; eating with guests in, 427, 432, 433, 1630, 1653; eating outside of, 391; elimination of, 426, 430; equality in, see food, equality in; exemptions from eating in, 512, 528, 653, 690; lateness at, 478, 811, 909, 1142, 1143, 1157; poor invited to, 342, 430; prayer in, 478, 744, 810, 908, 1005, 1062; procedures for, 25, 27n. 26, 30, 34, 37, 92, 394, 478-79, 533, 689-90, 744, 810-12, 861, 908-10, 965, 980, 1005, 1062, 1097, 1258, 1274, 1451, 1496, 1501, 1506, 1508, 1515, 1548, 1566, 1584, 1597-98; psalm recited on the way to, 394, 478, 689, 743-44, 810, 908, 965, 1005, 1062, 1142; raising of Panagia, 394, 747, 1327 (see also Glossary); raising of toasts in, 1327; reading in, see reading (times and places for); reconstruction and rehabilitation of, 212, 566; second sitting at, 480, 691, 653, 691, 729, 745, 812, 914, 980, 1006, 1062, 1157, 1274; silence in, 394, 478, 690, 811, 909, 1142, 1274, 1501, 1508, 1548, 1597; superior not to leave table in, 1496, 1501; superior to inspect food in, 878, 921; when to open, 1706

refectories (parts of): dome, 566; semantron, 478, 810, 908, 965, 1005, 1062, 1142; vault, 566

refectories (specific): Lavra, 206, 212; Mar Saba, 1313; Patmos, 566; Petritsoni, 508 reformation, spiritual (diorthosis), xiii, 640, 644 registers. See records (specific) registrar (anagrapheus). See imperial officials (specific) relationships: blood, see family ties; spiritual, with lay people (synteknia), xix, 78, 81n. 11, 233, 238, 259, 1314, 1316, 1389, 1616, 1621, 1652 (see also brotherhood: spiritual) relatives. See families and relatives relics: collections of, 568, 725, 1456; donation of, 207, 515, 526, 975; of founder, 566; listed in inventory, 1345, 1355; loss of, 69; miraculous, 566; pilgrimages to see, 727, 1346; repository for, 726, 727; translation of, 85, 126, 150, 1374 relics (specific): of Christ's burial slab, 725-26; of Christodoulos of Patmos, 566; of "Emperor Laskariasaf," 1238; fragments of the Holy Cross, 207, 216n. 1, 714, 1339, 1351, 1358; head of St. Basil of Caesarea, 207; head of St. Blasios, 726; head of St. John the Baptist, 67; head of St. Lazarus of Galesios, 150, 1374; head of St. Mamas, 975; of St. John Damascene, 650; of Luke of Mesembria, 927; of Neophytos the Recluse, 1339; of St. Demetrianos, 716; of St. Sabas, 1313; of unnamed martyrs, 714, 1360 religious controversies: hesychast, 212, 1491; Iconoclastic, 47, 59, 68, 71, 91, 1312; Moechian, 68; Origenist, 1311; Unionist, 212

GENERAL INDEX

reliquaries: proseuchadion, 67, 369, 371n. 45; syrtarion, theke, 552, 714, 717, 1671

reliquaries (types of): with caskets (?), 714, 719n. 69; with enamel, 369; in gold, 714; with katovlia, 714; with key, 714; with lock, 714, 719n. 72; with ring, 714, 719n. 71; silver-gilt, 714; tzapotos, 714, 719n. 70; wood, 716. See also Glossary for Greek terms rent: of houses, 713, 771; of mills, 1609, 1610n. 25; of workshops, 713 renunciation (apotage). See family ties and postulants representative (ho dikaiou/ho dikaio). See monastic officials (specific) requisitions (of ecclesiastical property). See emperor and the imperial government, rights of restitution. See punishments (specific kinds) restorer (anakainistes). See patrons (types of) retainers (personal). See soldiers (types of) reunification, church: efforts at, 150, 212, 1207, 1396, 1485; Union of Lyons, 1397 revenues (monastic). See incomes (monastic) rice. See grains (specific kinds) rights: basilikatou, tou, 829, 850n. 36; conditional (somatika), 771, 772, 777n. 94; of departure, 22; maritime, 769, 772; unconditional (asomata), 771, 772, 777n. 94. See also episcopal rights; metropolitans' rights; patriarchal rights (specific); patrons, rights of (specific); and superiors' rights rings, 714, 715, 716, 719n. 71. See also icons (types of) and reliquaries (types of) ritual observances: bows, as mark of respect, 983, 1011, deep (proskynemata, proskyneseis), 61, 62, 100A, 103A, 473, 805, 895, 1026, 1082; censing, 98AB, 221, 385, 387, 476, (in form of cross), 739, 740, 808, 898, 1027, 1083, 1137; embraces (Easter), 99AB, 221; genuflections (gonyklisiai), as punishment, see punishments (specific kinds), performance of, xxvi, 60, 104AB, 185, 223, 389, 390, 391, 412, 413, 473, 474, 475, 674, 686, 688, 805, 807, 894, 895, 897, 900, 1025, 1026, 1082, 1083, 1133, 1513, 1546, 1547, 1702, omission of in cells, 412, 474, 806, 874, 895, 896, 907, 1026, 1083, 1133, omission of in church, 103AB, 222, 391, 412, 413, 473, 686,

GENERAL INDEX

805, 806, 894, 895, 896, 907, 1026, 1083, 1133, 1547, replaced by bows, 473, 805, 895, 1026, 1082; kisses, of peace, 62, of steward-elect, 484, 1001, 1058, of superior-elect, 587, 675, 816, 967, 996, 1053; obeisance (metanoia, proskynesis) to superior, 476, 478, 484, 587, 689, 748, 808, 908, 1011, 1027, 1068, 1142; prostrations (metanoiiai), performance of, xxvi, 104B, 106B, 222, 223, 277, 389, 391, 686, 687, 1335, 1463, 1473, omission of, 102B, 110AB, 111A, 222, 385, 389, 687, as punishment, see punishments (specific kinds); washing of the feet (nipter), xxvi, 114B, 115A, 652, 702, 762, 765, 767 (see also icons [specific] and Glossary)

road (public). See transportation systems robbers. See criminals rods: disciplinary, see punishment, instruments of; of office, xxx, 1211, 1219

roga. See allowances, living and annuities rose essence. See fragrances and seasonings rose water. See supplies, medical royal legislation: bull of confirmation of Roger II, 624; diploma of Roger II (1131), 637; diplomas of Queen Margaret, 624; donations and confirmations, 623; foundation charter of Roger I, 22; golden bull of Roger II, 623, 624; of Tancred of Lecce, 624; of William II, 624

royal officials: Greek-speaking, 623; privileges of, 641 royal officials (specific), kaprilingas, 633. See also Glossary

“royal road” (of Rule of Jerusalem), 1274, 1546. See also cenobiticism (communal life)

Rule of the Angel. See monastic rules (non-Byzantine)

Rule of Jerusalem. See synaxaria (specific)

Rule of St. Athanasios/of the Holy Mountain. See synaxaria (specific)

Rules. See typika

Rules for the Monastery of Mar Zakkai. See monastic rules (non-Byzantine)

“rules of the Mountain (Mount Athos).” See typika (specific, lost) rural settlements: estates (proasteia), 149, 212, 341, 360, 367, 454, 507, 572, 583, 594, 595, 600, 657, 677, 768-71, 782, 828-29, 1280, 1292, 1557; hamlets (agridia), 525, 542; villages (choria), 524, 525, 542, 555-57, 769-71, 795, 828-29, 843, 846, 1043, 1188, 1280, 1557, 1625, 1636, relocation of, 795, 829, 843, shares of, 1519, 1557

rush mat maker. See professions and trades

GENERAL INDEX

Sabas, St., liturgical typikon of. See synaxaria (specific) sacraments (mysteria) and sacramental life: bestowed by eunuch priests, 653, 678; emphasized, 447; regulation of, 92, 215, 459, 467, 474-75, 476-78, 511, 537-38, 729, 743, 750, 787, 807, 808-09, 810, 861, 864, 956, 965, 1015-16, 1045, 1072-73, 1112, 1316, 1463. See also communion; confession; Eucharist, Holy; and unction sacred disease. See illnesses and injuries (specific): leprosy sacred vessels: acquisition of, 884, 993; care of, 462, 491; deposit of as security (pawning), 1099, 1411, 1417, 1422; donation of, see endowment (specific); inalienability of, see inalienability; emergency alienation of, 488-89, 673, 820-21; listing of in inventories, see inventories (types of); procedure for alienation of, 821, 1262, 1279, 1670; protection and safekeeping of, 869n. 11, 1043, 1345, 1355; purchase of, 313, 1262, 1279; theft of, 1668-69, 1670; treasure of, 52; upgrading of, 1262, 1279 sacred vessels (specific kinds): asteriskos, 357, 369, 716, 717, 1479; basin (kaldaropolion, lekane), 369, 554; basin and ewer (cherniboxeston), 554; casket (kamprion), 357, 552; casket (part of reliquary, boution), 714; censer (thymiaterion), 98AB, 99A, 221, 476, 500n. 12, 552, 689, 739, 1186, 1393, 1674; censer, standing (katzion, katzior), 357, 1674; chalice, 526; chalice and paten (diskopoterion), 357, 369, 552, 716, 717, 968, 1393, 1479; hexapteryga, 716; ithmos, 357, 358, 369, 716, 717; oil vessel, 1561; paten, 717, 1190; spoon, 357, 369, 552, 716, 717, 968, 1190, 1479; unnamed, 473, 884, 1190, 1307, 1308, 1354, 1355, 1358. See also Glossary for Greek terms sacred vessels (types of): bronze, 968, 1150; gold, 1561; jasper, 552, 1561; silver, 52, 552, 716, 968, 1150, 1190, 1308; silver-gilt, 552, 716, 717, 993; with enamel, 357; with gold enameling, 552; with precious stones, 552 sacrilege (hierosylia): alienation of monastic property as, 303, 308, 330, 365, 428, 434, 450, 462, 488, 820, 863, 878, 985, 1019, 1058, 1116, 1154, 1232, 1498, 1502, 1669; careless management as, 1165; holding back handicrafts as, 1514, 1550; in canon law, 1670; in the Old Testament, 1669; leaving monastery as, 22; monastic inequality as, 1457, 1460; punishment for, 1670; reclamation of entrance donations as, 463, 495, 658, 672, 878, 930, 1000, 1048, 1057-58, 1141, 1616, 1618; sin of, 434; terminology of, 452, 466

sagion (blanket). See bedding (specific kinds) saints: female, 1515, 1531, 1560; patron, xxxvi, 169, 304, 311, 317, 337, 354, 437, 492, 681, 818, 926, 995, 1002, 1053, 1084, 1131, 1150, 1164, 1266, 1273, 1394, 1527, 1588, 1601, 1662. See also feasts (specific, fixed) and Index of People and Places: Mother of God sakellarios. See ecclesiastical officials (specific); imperial officials (specific); and Glossary sakelle: of the Great Church, see patriarchal offices; imperial, see imperial offices and Glossary sakellion. See imperial offices salaries: of clergy, 728, 755, 1289, 1292; of hospital employees, 729, 734, 759, 762-65, 767, 1263, 1281; of priests, 699, 714, 755, 1116, 1257

GENERAL INDEX

salt marsh (halmikon). See endowments (specific) salt works (halikai). See endowments (specific) salvation, 1498, 1502, 1503

samite (hexamiton). See textiles sandalion (fishing boats). See transportation systems

Saracen cloth. See textiles sarkesin (inner cover for the altar). See cloths, liturgical (specific) schedos. See books, miscellaneous schema. See monastic habit

Schematologion. See books, liturgical schideumos. See sequestration schisms. See vices, monastic schools. See monasteries (parts of) scribes. See professions and trades

Scripture, Holy: appeals to and citations from, 12, 446, 876, 910, 916-17, 1198, 1204, 1506, 1509; exegesis of, 26, 39; reading of, see reading (subjects for); training in, 516, 551, 1111, 1155; use of, 379, 380. See also books, New Testament and books, Old Testament seals, lead: on box of legal documents, 1036; on testament, 320

seaman. See professions and trades seasonings: nutmeg, ground (karyon tripton), 110AB, 111AB, 226, 1703, 1705; olive oil, 110AB, 111A, 112AB, 140, 226, 286, 350, 362, 366, 480, 481, 482, 535, 691, 692, 693, 747, 766, 813, 814, 826, 901, 914, 917, 1003, 1006, 1060, 1198, 1204, 1268, 1275, 1324-26, 1334, 1547, 1598, 1660, 1661, 1702-3, 1704, 1705, 1712, 1715; 1713; pepper, 111A, 1701; rose essence, 741; salt, 1281; spices, 1334; vinegar, 761, 1598, 1660, 1702, 1704, 1710, 1715; of legumes, 691, 692, 1006, 1063, 1701, 1704; of shellfish, 1699, 1701; of squash, 1326, 1715; of vegetables, 691, 692, 1006, 1063, 1699, 1701, 1703, 1710, 1715; of wine, 1706. See also flavorings seasons (annual), effects of: on availability of produce, 729, 746; on choice of clothing, 826, 1276; on cost of commodities, 788, 826; on harvest, 829; on hour of awakening, 787, 828; on liturgical performances, 91, 494, 928; on manual labor, 92; on number and timing of meals, 110B, 482, 693, 814, 1008, 1065, 1697, 1709, 1710, 1711; on timing of vigils, 689 seasons (annual, particular): summer, 91, 92, 109A, 482, 689, 693, 787, 814, 826, 828, 829, 833, 1008, 1065, 1232, 1710; winter, 91, 92, 109A, 494, 689, 787, 826, 828, 850n. 31, 928, 1276 seasons (liturgical): Eastertide (Paschalia), 91, 105A, 109AB, 224, 226, 386, 474, 1027, 1083, 1145, 1321, 1325, 1631, 1659; Lent, 64, 106B-112AB, 138, 140, 224-27, 401-4, 480-81, 865, 900-907, 957, 966, 1006-7, 1143-45, 1627, 1631, 1659, 1660, 1701-9 (see also fasts [specific]); Pentecost, 874, 896, 1027, 1083, 1133, 1145; Twelve Days of Christmas (dodekaemeron), 226, 401, 687, 874, 896, 907, 1027, 1083, 1133, 1146, 1598, 1715 seat, wooden (xylosellion). See furniture sebastokrator, m.; sebastokratorissa, f. See titles and dignities sebastos, m.; sebaste, f. See titles and dignities secular law. See imperial legislation security deposits: deeds as, 984, 1036-37; sacred vessels as, 1099, 1411, 1417, 1422

GENERAL INDEX

Seismobrontologion (book of earthquakes and thunders). See books, secular sekretion: imperial, see imperial offices; patriarchal, see patriarchal offices self-governing. See independent and self-governing monasteries self-reliance (self-sufficiency). See virtues, monastic semantron, 62, 64, 65n. 1, 108, 474, 689, 739, 806, 1015, 1027, 1083, 1133, 1183; big, 1137; bronze, xxiii, 476, 688, 689, 808, 1027, 1083; great, xxiii, 476, 739, 808, 1027, 1083; heavy, 1136; iron, 1136; large, xxiii, 1133; in refectory, 478, 743, 744, 745, 810, 908, 965, 1005, 1062, 1142; small, xxiii, 688, 804, 1027, 1083; wooden, 98AB, 107AB, 108AB, 109AB, 112AB, 221, 223, 224, 804, 1224, 1363, 1540. See also Glossary semeioma. See legal documents (specific) semeiosis. See legal documents (specific)

Septuagint, version employed, 12

sepulcher (holy), icon of. See icons (specific) sequestration (schideumos), 770, 777n. 88 servants (domestic): acceptability of as novices, 1464, 1470; as monks, 749, 835, 842; entering or leaving monasteries, 1615, 1619-20; famuli, xxxiv; housing for, 615, 645; of female protectors, 300, 331, 355, 656; of monks, xxxiii, 247, 259, 302, 327, 353, 444, 447, 460, 490, 512, 516, 528, 570-71, 611-12, 641, 730, 753, 788, 789, 800, 826, 831, 864, 866, 875, 924, 980, 1012, 1017-18, 1069, 1073, 1074, 1113, 1148, 1155, 1213, 1223, 1392, 1489, 1584, 1587, 1600, 1615, 1619, 1620, 1652; of nuns, 670, 671, 699, 1258, 1259, 1260, 1278, 1489, 1515, 1550; lodging of, 1464,

GENERAL INDEX

1470; of superiors, 199, 233, 236, 282, 289, 1390, 1392, 1630, 1652; supplied by convent, 1258, 1259, 1260, 1261, 1278 service books. See books, liturgical and endowments (specific) services, breakaway, 705

sexual misconduct. See vices, monastic sexual segregation, xviii, 26, 28n. 28, 40, 71, 303, 465, 1515. See also virtues, monastic: claustration sexual temptation, xviii, xix, 70, 447, 465, 576, 879

shaving. See haircuts shepherds. See professions and trades shipbuilding supplies. See supplies, shipbuilding shipping. See transportation systems ships. See endowments (specific) and transportation systems sick, the: attitudes towards, 25n. 19, 28; care of, 432, 495, 497, 696, 734, 762, 795, 825, 868, 937, 981, 1007, 1016-17, 1064, 1074, 1145, 1153, 1275, 1501, 1509, 1549-50, 1659; monks, see monks (types of); nuns, see nuns (types of); obligations of, 732, 759; special concessions to, 653, 690, 956, 965. See also hospitals and infirmaries and old age homes sigillidion. See legal documents (specific) sigillion. See legal documents (specific) sigillon. See legal documents (specific) signon (banner icon). See icons (types of) silence, practice of. See virtues, monastic and women silk cloth (blattion). See book covers; cloths, liturgical; imperial garments; and textiles silver. See precious metals (specific) simony. See admissions: gifts to secure sin: examples of, see vices, monastic; frequency of, 1514-15, 1553 singers, professional. See professions and trades singing. See music, church

GENERAL INDEX

- siteresia*. See allowances, living and incomes (monastic)
- sitesis*. See pensions and pensioners
- sixth hour (hekte). See hours, liturgical (specific)
- skala* (pier). See endowments (specific)
- skaramangion*. See cloths, liturgical (specific); imperial garments; and textiles
- skepasma/skepe* (nun's headcloth). See clothing (articles of)
- skeptraton* (coin with scepter). See coinage
- skete*. See monasteries (types of)
- skevophylakion* (sacristy). See churches (parts of)
- skevophylax*, m.; skevophylakissa, f. (sacristan). See monastic officials (specific)
- skoutarion* (in shape of shield). See icons (types of)
- skoutelion* (bowl). See utensils, household
- slaughterhouse. See buildings, secular (particular kinds)
- slavery, condemned, 1208, 1210, 1218
- slaves: monks cannot own, 71, 76, 77, 86, 247, 259; of nuns, 670; unacceptability of as postulants, 22
- sleeping. See daily activities
- social relations: adoptions of lay brothers or sisters (adelphopoiiai), xix, 78, 81n. 11, 238, 259, 644, 1312, 1616, 1621, 1652
- soldiers: land holdings of (pronoiai), 1490; in service of monasteries, xxxvi, 574, 599, 846; as patrons, 314; as monks, 509
- soldiers (types of): malaratoi, 362, 366; mercenaries (Turkish), 209; retainers (personal), 611, 804, 823, 829, 837, 844, 845, 846, 848, 1630, 1652; stratiotai, 795, 846; tagmata, 362, 363, 366, 367; vestiaritai (imperial bodyguards), xxxvi, 795, 846. See also Glossary for Greek terms
- solemnion*. See annuities; emperors and the imperial government; and Glossary
- solitaries and solitary monasticism: cells of, xxxiii, 1162, 1227; diet of, 398, 591, 1162; coexistence with, 1237, 1313, 1316, 1317; instances of, 125, 250; lifestyle of, 46, 86, 131, 143, 144, 148, 152, 160-61, 197, 206, 208, 234, 461, 483, 580, 590-91, 1112, 1162, 1227-28, 1301, 1332, 1333, 1338, 1350, 1493, 1641; manual labor by, 569, 591; not favored, xxxii; number of, 570, 592; permitted, 132-33, 135, 232, 250, 272, 278, 445, 1096, 1112, 1209, 1227, 1300, 1301; preference for, 152, 207; prestige of, 85; provisions provided to, xxxiii, 591, 1112, 1162, 1210, 1227; regulations for, 198, 235, 237, 261, 262; relations with, 127, 132-33; rejected, 1177, 1183; restricted, 39, 592; as a reward for virtue, 1210; risks of, 162; rules for, 41, 261, 591, 1162, 1316; in Western medieval monasticism, xiii solitude. See virtues, monastic somatika dikaia. See rights, conditional somation (parchment). See books (specific types) sorcery. See crimes

GENERAL INDEX

soteria (latrines). See monasteries (parts of) spatharokandidatos. See titles and dignities sphinktourion (belted outer garment). See imperial garments sphragis (blessing). See episcopal rights; metropolitans' rights; patriarchal rights (specific); superiors; superiors' rights; and Glossary spices. See abstinences (specific); flavorings; and seasonings spiritual directors, 228, 236, 359, 368, 750; assignment to new, 216, 228; eunuchs serving as, 679 spiritual fathers: cannot alter founder's instructions, 1465, 1473; cannot expel nuns, 1465, 1476; death of, 564; determine frequency of communion, 1583, 1602; eunuchs as, xix; examples of, 1390, 1520, 1567; inexperience of, 1554; must be priests, 1545; qualifications of, 1554; remove superiors, 1099, 1268; role of, 1257, 1259, 1260, 1261, 1263, 1268, 1271, 1272-73, 1288, 1292, 1463, 1464, 1473, 1476, 1517, 1583, 1588, 1600, 1602; selection of, 1288, 1292, 1465, 1475-76, 1514, 1554; special visits of, 1257, 1269, 1515, 1554; superiors to consult with, 1099, 1268-69, 1292. See also confessors spithame (span). See measures (surface and weight) spouses. See family members (specific) squatters, 974, 1292 stability: institutional, 39; monastic, see virtues, monastic stabling supplies. See supplies, stabling staffs: episcopal, 962; for support, 156, 214, 225; pastoral (bakteriai, poimantikai rabdoi), xxx-xxxi, 185, 484, 587, 675, 752, 790, 816, 957, 967, 996, 1053, 1211, 1219, 1259, 1267, 1411, 1412, 1417, 1427, 1521, 1550, 1584, 1585, 1607

GENERAL INDEX

stalion (refuge). See buildings, secular (particular kinds) star(s): miraculous appearance of, 318; timekeeping by, xxiii stasidion (with standing figure). See icons (types of) *statarai*a (burial vault). See burial sites statarea (large candelabra). See lighting devices (specific) stauraton (coin with cross). See coinage stauria. See crosses (types of) and Glossary stauropedia (foundation charters): archiepiscopal, see archiepiscopal rights; episcopal, see episcopal rights (specific); patriarchal, see patriarchal rights (specific) steel yard (kampanos). See measures (surface and weight) stewards (oikonomoi): accountable to patron, 329, 353; accountable to superiors, 522, 547, 574, 589, 678, 967, 1001, 1058; allowed to meet with women, 576, 585; chosen by founders or patrons, see patrons, rights of (specific); chosen by superiors, see superiors' rights; deposition/removal of, 462, 485, 790, 792, 794, 818-19, 877, 1115, 1149; diet of, 1508; election of, 300-301, 484, 790, 816, 1465, 1477, 1544; elevation of to superiorship, 340, 461, 462, 484, 616, 818, 862, 876, 877, 919, 1344, 1358; installation/investiture of, 484, 491, 589, 658, 677, 790, 816-17, 919, 983, 984, 1001, 1047, 1058, 1115, 1147, 1261, 1273; not to be absent overnight, 730, 768; number of, 732, 768; promotion to office of, 656, 678; qualifications of, xxii, 484, 1115, 1146-47, 1519, 1538; rank of among "more prominent" monks, 573, 589, 641; removal of, 444, 445, 484-85, 657, 678, 818-19, 919-20, 1149; salaries of, 1272, 1288, 1292; work of under superior's supervision, 79, 259, 264, 1100, 1147, 1224, 1539 stewards (specific): of Athonite Mese, 239, 240, 264, 286; of church of Eleousa, 768; of convent of Petria (CP), 362, 367; of Latros, 599; of Philanthropos monastery, 861 stewards (types of): assistant (paroikonomoi), 89-90, 547, 574, 596, 656, 678; of chief monastery, 732, 768; of convents, 362, 367, 958, 961-62; of dependent monasteries, 731, 753, 768; dual, 732, 738, 1148, 1465, 1477; eunuchs, 656, 677-78, 1260, 1261, 1272, 1289, 1292, 1519; heavenly, 801, 1629, 1662; lay, 1100; of monastic church, 732, 768; non-resident, 1261, 1273, 1288, 1292; nuns, 1488, 1519, 1538; ordained, 1115, 1147; of pious (philanthropic) institutions, 362, 367, 732, 768; priests, 1147; second, 1110, 1115, 1148; Syrian, 1314, 1317 stewards, duties of, 651, 656, 657, 677-78, 985, 1256, 1260, 1273; administer/visit estates, 149, 589, 677, 678, 1100, 1147, 1261, 1273, 1519, 1538; appoint property managers, 1212, 1224, 1261, 1273; building maintenance, 677, 1261, 1273; examine accounts, 1115, 1148; govern in association with superior, 1465, 1477; handle charitable distributions, 29; handle distributions to monks, 426, 430; hold superior financially accountable, 515, 548; keep careful records, 1519, 1539; look after visitors and the sick, 1115, 1148; preside over meals, 980, 1005; prevent theft and damage, 1261, 1273; regulate monks' diet, 1112, 1151; return favors to benefactors, 27; share in financial management, 958, 962, 1115, 1147-48, 1212, 1226; substitute for superior, 1100, 1115, 1148,

GENERAL INDEX

1586; supervise dependent stewards, 731, 753; supervise kelliotai, 430; supervise property managers and laborers, 1147, 1148, 1209, 1212, 1224, 1538

sthlabopolos. See titles and dignities sthlavonikon (blanket). See bedding (specific kinds) stichera. See hymns (specific)

Sticherarion. See books, liturgical

Sticherokathistarion. See books, liturgical

Stichophon. See books, liturgical stipend (roga). See allowances, living stones, precious: crystal, rock (kryon), 554; jasper, 1561 storage chests (arklai). See furniture storeroom supplies. See supplies, storeroom straps. See punishment, instruments of strategoï. See imperial officials (specific) strateia. See taxes and fiscal obligations (specific) strateutes. See imperial officials (specific) strator (groom). See hospitals and infirmaries, staff of (specific)

Studite monastic reform, rules and tradition, 84-90; later development of, 214; principles of, 46, 47, 85-87, 612, 862, 1198; sources for studying, 84-85; sources of, 87-88, 215, 247, 1312; subsequent influence of, 31, 88-90, 151, 152, 194, 211, 213, 214-15, 233, 247, 248, 382, 383, 447, 458, 465, 571, 631, 632, 640, 865, 874, 879, 955, 964, 967, 984, 1047, 1214, 1226, 1631. See also monastic foundation documents, (3) Theodore Studites and (4) Stoudios.

studs, 716. See also book covers, decoration of and icons (types of) studying. See daily activities stylites. See monks (types of) sugar. See flavorings and supplies, medical superiors (hegoumenoi, kathegetai, kathegoumenoi, proestotes, m.; aphegoumenai, hegoumenai, kathegoumenai, proestosai, f.):

GENERAL INDEX

superiors (cont.)

- absences of from monastery, 78, 247, 259, 1363, 1392
- accountable to brotherhood, 522, 547
- accountable to God, 1260, 1268
- admonitions to, see addresses, hortatory
- appointment (procheirisis) of by archimandrite, 646
- appointment of by courts, 284
- appointment of by current superior, see superiors' rights
- appointment declined, 207, 1390, 1392
- appointment of by emperor, see emperors and the imperial government, rights of
- appointment of by eparchs of CP, 331, 352
- appointment of by founders or patrons, see patrons, rights of
- appointment of by preeminent monks, xxx, 1619
- appointment of by protectors, see protectors, rights of
- appointment of by others, 282, 288
- assumed to be fallible, 1518
- authority of, 60, 427, 655, 667-68
- auto-investiture of, xxx
- blessing (sphragis) of, see episcopal rights (specific), metropolitans' rights (specific), and patriarchal rights (specific)
- cannot change typika, 127, 130, 247, 258, 446, 514, 529
- cell assigned to, 1489, 1637
- choice of officials restricted, 512, 529
- compared to artist's model, 30, 30n. 35
- corruption of cenobitic discipline by, 589
- as donors of books, 267-68, 326, 359
- election/internal selection of, xiv, xxix-xxx, 71, 77, 121, 123, 133, 151, 164, 171, 185, 196, 254-55, 331, 351, 461, 484, 485, 513, 514, 529, 573, 587, 613, 616, 617, 632, 641, 646, 655, 674, 731, 751, 790, 815-16, 835, 862, 865, 919, 957, 967, 977, 982, 986, 996, 1024, 1046, 1052, 1054, 1098, 1114, 1118, 1130, 1177, 1184, 1211, 1218, 1219, 1240, 1251, 1256, 1259, 1267, 1289, 1292, 1340, 1344, 1356, 1411, 1412, 1417, 1423, 1426, 1427, 1465, 1477, 1488, 1495, 1497, 1517, 1530, 1585, 1603, 1607, 1608, 1615, 1619
- epithets of, xxxi, 135, 1220
- excluded from financial management, 72, 79, 247, 259, 862, 863-64, 866, 984, 1029, 1047, 1085
- excluded from mercenary pursuits, 1652
- financially accountable, 515, 548
- funeral service for, 641, 646
- as "head" of the community, 86
- as imperial emissaries, 69
- installation/investiture of, xiv, xxx-xxxi, 171, 185, 196, 212, 272, 277, 351, 463, 484, 529, 587, 616, 620, 646-47, 674-75, 731, 751-52, 790, 794, 800, 816, 867, 877, 920, 957, 962, 967, 996-97, 1052, 1053, 1101, 1102, 1130, 1218, 1219, 1267, 1340, 1356, 1530, 1607, 1615, 1619
- jurisprudential teaching of, 151
- lists of, 508, 1319, 1320
- must consult with spiritual fathers, 1099, 1268-69, 1292

GENERAL INDEX

superiors (cont.)

nomination of, 617, 646, 674, 751, 994, 995, 996, 1052, 1184 not necessary, 426, 430, 431, 436 not to have private property, 511, 530 not to live luxuriously, 79, 247, 259 not to seek higher office, 78, 247, 259 not to spend wealth improperly, 488, 1113, 1161 not to travel unnecessarily, 78, 138, 141, 259, 461, 483, 1363, 1390, 1392 offering of money or property by prospective, 464, 488 opposition to the allelengyon, 203 ordination of, 641, 647
pastoral duties of, xxxi, 638, 1220-21 personal service of to monks, 24, 487, 676, 820, 921, 1022, 1079 political activities of, 144 property of, 51, 237 provide for monastery's prosperity, 1437, 1451
qualifications of, 171, 184-85, 253, 254, 255, 256, 324, 346, 793-94, 819-20, 867, 962, 967, 995, 1044, 1046, 1052, 1054, 1096, 1161, 1211, 1218, 1251, 1390, 1393, 1397, 1423, 1497, 1500-1501, 1517, 1530, 1588, 1603, 1631, 1645
recruitment of, 974, 993, 1625, 1636 reformers uphold authority of, 443, 485, 613 relations of with charistikarios, 572, 598 relations of with imperial officials, 168 relations of with monks, 487, 516, 531, 983, 1022, 1047, 1078, 1086, 1101, 1652 relations of with patrons and protectors, 328, 349, 982, 993 removal of, xxxi, 171, 186, 272, 278, 282, 288, 301, 324, 328, 346, 444, 485-86, 521, 543, 572, 573, 574, 589, 598, 655, 658, 669, 676-77, 920, 983, 997-98, 1047, 1054-55, 1099, 1184, 1199, 1201, 1238, 1268 responsible for building maintenance, 615, 659, 703, 828, 832-33, 835, 840, 842, 843 retirement/resignation of, 127, 133, 136, 726, 790, 805, 1584, 1608 rules of conduct for, 71, 77-79, 477-78, 530, 587-88, 820, 987, 1022, 1028-30, 1183-84, 1652 (see also addresses, hortatory) seclusion of, 466, 467, 483 signatures of, 233, 241, 1030, 1034, 1036, 1348, 1370, 1667, 1675 style of rule of, see monastic rule, styles of subject to penalties, 985, 1019, 1161 teaching reading, 1464, 1477 teaching typikon, 1519, 1559 tenure of, 513, 529, 1495, 1497 theft and misappropriation by, 77, 171, 186, 258, 330, 345, 444, 488, 573, 589, 655, 658, 677, 1023, 1079, 1161 title of, 1456
to visit patriarch annually, 1631, 1659 wills and testaments of, 282, 288, 290

superiors (types of):

bad, 461, 463
collaborative, 1607

GENERAL INDEX

superiors (cont.)

collective, 121, 123 commendatory abbots, xxxvi, 624, 1320 consultative, 1619, 1620 corrupt, 655, 677
deposed, 461, 486, 1260, 1268 designee, 623, 625, 629, 632, 1114, 1159, 1314, 1389, 1390, 1392, 1393, 1397, 1401, 1405, 1406 enclosed, 455
eremitic, 461, 483
former (prohegoumenoi), 1035 heavenly, 1629, 1662 hereditary, 290
heretical, 1199, 1201 imposed, 246, 256
joint, 1390, 1392, 1405
male, 1518, 1532
manly (f.), 1518, 1531
nobly born, 71, 464, 487-88, 793, 820, 1024, 1048, 1080, 1588, 1603, 1631, 1645 ordained (hieromonachoi), 241, 242, 641, 647, 1211, 1218, 1390, 1393 orthodox, 1211, 1218, 1497, 1501 patriarchs, 1626, 1637
recently tonsured, 464, 488 senior, 1390, 1392
sequential, 1405, 1406
spiritually destroyed, 426, 429
unconfined, 455
uneducated/unlearned, 239, 464, 488
unfit/unworthy/worthless, 272, 461, 483, 655, 677, 983, 997-98, 1332, 1334 unordained, 241, 242, 456, 979, 986, 1014, 1071, 1518, 1532 unreformed, 486, 610
unworldly, 464, 488
virtuous, 1390, 1393, 1631, 1645 wealthy, 1631, 1645 “young,” 209
youths, 290, 1344, 1358
See also xenokouritai superiors' rights (pronomia):

absolute rule, 171, 181, 272, 278 allow bequeathing of cells, 1314, 1316 appointment of solitaries, 570, 591 assignment of monks to cells, 459, 490 assignment of monks to manual labor, 24, 381, 407, 569, 590, 1011, 1208, 1209, 1223, 1486, 1627, 1650 assignment of seating in refectory, 464, 479, 486, 516, 533, 659, 690, 733, 745, 793, 811, 878, 909, 956, 965, 980, 985-86, 1018, 1019, 1048, 1075, 1117, 1143, 1191, 1274, 1412, 1423

GENERAL INDEX

superiors (cont.)

- audit accounts, 657, 678
- blessing (sphragis) of another superior, 331, 351-52, 491, 817, 925, 1001, 1058
- cancellation of benefactions, 282, 288
- cannot be investigated or examined by monks, 785, 790, 835
- cannot be removed from office, 1304, 1307
- change liturgical procedures, 731, 733, 750
- choose property managers, 462, 493, 614, 657, 677, 678, 685, 818, 927, 958, 966, 1154
- choose stewards, 72, 121, 123, 151, 164, 461, 484, 569, 589, 614, 655, 656, 677, 732, 768, 790, 792, 816, 919, 957, 962, 1001, 1058, 1147, 1209, 1224, 1260, 1272, 1292
- choose other officials, xxxi-xxxii, 573, 589, 616, 655, 657, 680, 682-83, 732, 756, 790, 817, 957, 962, 966, 983, 1001, 1002, 1003, 1004, 1047, 1061, 1098, 1114, 1151, 1211, 1224-25, 1240, 1250, 1260, 1268, 1271, 1332, 1334, 1465, 1488, 1498, 1502, 1517, 1530, 1542, 1586, 1597, 1615, 1619
- choose their own successors, 51-52, 55-56, 71, 76-77, 123, 133, 171, 181, 246, 254-55, 282, 290, 461, 484, 513, 529, 655, 674, 731, 751, 790, 805, 816, 995, 1052, 1098, 1099, 1107, 1114, 1129, 1159, 1177, 1184, 1307, 1339, 1344, 1358, 1392, 1405, 1406, 1417, 1488, 1629, 1630, 1635, 1645, 1661-62
- confiscate unauthorized possessions, see below, inspect monks' cells
- consecrate other superiors, 89
- consult with property managers, 657, 679
- decide acceptability of gifts, 27
- determine frequency of reception of communion, 459, 475, 787, 807, 956, 965, 979, 1016
- determine lighting in church, 1257, 1260, 1277
- discipline monks, 24, 170, 181, 1541-42, 1603, 1650
- distribute extra clothing, 1583, 1586, 1600, 1629, 1650
- enforce attendance at choir, 787, 835
- enjoy special diet, 733, 752
- exercise honorary prerogatives, 199
- govern dependent monasteries, 731, 753
- govern independently (without outside interference), 731, 752, 790, 805, 876, 919, 957, 1098, 1099, 1114, 1199, 1200, 1211, 1218, 1240, 1250, 1465, 1476, 1477, 1585, 1595
- hear monks' confessions, see confessors
- inspect monks' cells, 459, 466, 491, 788, 823, 875, 925, 980, 1009, 1060, 1156, 1364, 1628, 1658
- instruct novices, 92, 108AB, 1435, 1447
- interrogate monks after journeys, 26, 26n. 21, 1546, 1619
- introduce (tonsure) and remove monks, 92, 108AB, 170, 171, 181, 377, 514, 543, 653, 685, 790, 815, 867, 868, 979, 1010, 1067
- make disciplinary concessions, 1520, 1521, 1550
- nominate their successors, 207
- not be financially accountable, 463, 488, 752, 790, 835, 922, 983, 1023, 1079, 1114, 1436, 1447, 1630, 1660
- not be removable, 40, 170, 181, 661, 669, 1307
- ordain monks, 148
- oversee care of supplies, 1114, 1151
- own property, xxxiii, 170, 181, 237, 1464, 1477

GENERAL INDEX

superiors (cont.)

permit handicrafts to be given as gifts, 1464, 1471 permit monks to leave, xvii, 39, 211, 237, 283, 288, 728, 734, 748, 868, 1345, 1368, 1616, 1620 permit monks to own personal property, 459, 490 permit monks to pursue solitary life, 135, 233, 237 permit visitors, see visitation privileges regulate bathing, see bathing regulate conversation, 1515, 1542 regulate travel, see travel remove officials, 681, 1002, 1059, 1114, 1150 remove steward, 675, 678, 794, 819 set or change diets, 25, 140, 215, 227-28, 481, 512, 534, 612, 691, 729, 731, 733, 734, 746, 866, 965, 980, 981, 1006, 1008, 1017, 1063, 1065, 1112, 1145, 1151, 1210, 1227, 1260, 1275, 1321, 1322, 1327, 1328, 1584, 1598, 1628, 1650, 1653, 1697-1701, 1703, 1709, 1710, 1716 share in financial management, 50, 488, 515, 548, 574, 589-90, 732, 792, 825, 863, 922, 958, 962, 1098, 1100, 1110, 1114, 1147-48, 1178, 1184, 1212, 1224, 1226, 1344, 1488, 1498, 1502, 1517, 1538, 1615, 1620, 1621 supervise convent, 961, 962, 1113, 1166 supervise officials, 71, 79 supervise officials of neighboring convent, 958, 961-62 supervise peasants' diet, xxxi, 843 supernatural phenomena: cult, healing, 314; miracles, healing, 623, posthumous, 566 (see also icons [types of]: miracle-working); stars, miraculous, 318; visions, 143, 207, 1351, 1352; voices, 1351, 1352; waters, healing, 1189 supplies, medical: bandages, 1259, 1275; catheter, 764; cauterizer, cold, 761, 777n. 73; cumin, 1204; Diospolis, 761, 777n. 69; enema (klyster), 761; fennel, 1204; forceps (odontagra), 764; gum ammoniac (ammoniakon), 762; herbs (medicinal), 763; honey (for medicinal preparations), 761; jelly (tremousa), 762, 777n. 81; lancets, 764; linseed (linokkokos), 761; lozenges (eligma), 761, 777n. 77; mastic, 762; mithridate, 761, 777n. 75; must concentrate (hepsema), 761, 777n. 78; myrrh, 762; olive oil (for medicinal preparations), 761; oxymel, 761, 777n. 69; plaster (emplastron, kataplasma), 760, 761; poultice (pyria), 761, 777n. 74; poultice, dry, 762; poultice, hot, 761, 777n. 76; purgative, 762; rose water, 761, 762, 777n. 69; salves, 1259, 1275; sour grape juice, 761, 777n. 69; starch, 762, 777n. 80; sugar, 825; theriac, 761, 777n. 75; vine oil, 761, 777n. 71; vinegar (for medicinal preparations), 761; wine syrup, 761, 777n. 79 supplies, shipbuilding: lumber, 287; pitch (pissa), 287; planks, thin, 287 supplies, stabling: fodder, 362, 366; hay, 763, 764, 1342, 1360; saw dust (prisma), 762; straw, 764 supplies, storeroom: agricultural implements, 1110; clothing, 590, 1152, 1288, 1292; coverings, 590; materials for handicrafts, 569, 591, 1112, 1162, 1209, 1514, 1551; nitre (for washing), 1552; oil, 590; wax, 590; work tools, 1110 survey, cadastral (isokodikon). See legal documents (specific) sympentheros. See family members (specific) and Glossary sympepathemenon. See property, tax-free synapte. See litanies (specific) synaxaria (liturgical typika): as dietary guides, 88, 92, 402, 403, 404, 405, 482, 965, 1227, 1701, 1702, 1714; endorsement of, 1208, 1225, 1227; instruction to draw up, 569, 587, 600; as sources of biographical information, 59. See also books, liturgical synaxaria (specific): of Charsianeites monastery (lost), 1627, 1629, 1660; continuous 24-hour, 87; Evergetian, 88, 90, 455, 460, 467, 469n. 6, 473, 475, 476, 478, 482, 499, 687, 688, 689, 693, 702, 801, 805, 808, 810, 814, 815, 862, 865, 895, 898, 900, 908, 917, 975, 987, 1002, 1008, 1024, 1025, 1028, 1044, 1045, 1133, 1145, 1299, 1581; of Grottaferrata, 639; of Hagia Sophia, 87, 455; of Luke of Messina for San Salvatore, 637, 638, 639, 640; of Machairas monastery (lost), 1111, 1132, 1137, 1145; of monasteries on Mount Olympos (lost), 455; Rule of Jerusalem, 45, 46, 137, 138, 140, 142n. 8, 385, 387, 389, 391, 392, 393, 403, 404, 414, 416, 646, 1145, 1146, 1225, 1227, 1274, 1275, 1507, 1546, 1547, 1596, 1598, 1601, 1604, 1697; Rule of St. Athanasios/of the Holy Mountain (lost), 390, 393, 394, 401, 402, 403, 404, 408, 411, 646, 901, 1319, 1326, 1485, 1613, 1614, 1615, 1619, 1620, 1622nn. 3, 4, 5, 7, 1714; of St. Lazarus of Galesios (lost), 150; of St. Nicholas of Kasoulon (unpublished), 1319; of St. Sabas (Sabaitic), 140, 379, 380, 381, 566, 587, 600, 1094, 1111, 1208, 1209, 1225, 1227, 1256, 1258, 1274, 1299, 1312, 1313, 1314n. 2, 1315n. 11, 1319, 1457, 1485, 1486, 1495, 1506, 1507, 1513, 1516, 1546-47, 1583, 1584, 1596, 1597, 1601 (see also above, Rule of Jerusalem and Index of People and Places: Sabas, St., liturgical typikon of); of Skoteine monastery (lost), 1177, 1183, 1185; Studite, 87, 385, 389, 390, 391, 392, 393, 402, 404, 405, 411, 416, 646, 862, 865, 955, 956, 964, 965, 966, 1044, 1045, 1059, 1064, 1065, 1081, 1082, 1083, 1084 (see also monastic foundation documents, (4) Stoudios); of Theodosios the Koinobiarch, 88, 95n. 29, 1314n. 2 synaxis (commemoration of saint). See feasts (specific, fixed) synkellos. See ecclesiastical officials (episcopal) synone. See taxes and fiscal obligations (specific) synteknia. See relationships: spiritual synthronon. See churches (parts of) syrmatinon (embroidered with gold thread). See cloths, liturgical (types of) table bell (kontion). See furniture tables. See furniture tabularies (tabularia). See records (specific) tagmata. See soldiers (types of) tanouteres (cellarer). See monastic officials (specific) tavern. See buildings, secular (particular kinds) tax collectors (dioiketai, phorologoi). See imperial officials (specific) tax gatherers (apaitetai). See imperial officials (specific) taxation. See taxes and fiscal obligations (specific) taxes and fiscal obligations: arrears of, 1320; donations of receipts of, 201; exemption/immunity from, see immunities and exemptions; forms of, 362, 366; grants paid from local, 168; liability for defaults of (allelengyon), 203; monks' arrears of, 28; payment of by diocese, 771; payment of by monasteries, xxxiv, 1613, 1630, 1657; property donations exempt from, 864; property liable for, 1489; receipts from, 714, 771; to the Roman church, 1320 taxes and fiscal obligations (specific): aerikon, 362, 366; antikaniskon, 362, 366; antimitatikion, 362, 366; aplekton, 362, 366; billeting (mitaton), xxix, 364, 366; building of bridges (gephyrosis), 362, 366; cargo, 792, 829; chrysoteleia, 712, 713, 719n. 67; compulsory labor (angareia), 361, 362, 364, 366, 367, 517, 524; compulsory labor, additional (parangareia), 361, 362, 364, 366, 367; construction of fortresses (kastroktisia), 362, 366; dues, agricultural, 1301; fine, 56; fodder, requisition of, 362, 366; hearth (kapnikon), 362, 366; hypertimon, 364, 366, 367; imposition (epereia), 186, 361, 362, 363, 364, 366, 367, 520, 549; imposition, exceedingly abusive (hyperepereia), 517, 524; kaniskion, 362, 366; kanonikon, 169, 1595; komodromikion, 362, 366; levy (epeixis), 260, 266n. 13; libellikon, 556; lodging of armies, 362, 367, of officers, 362, 367; matzoukation, 362, 366; mesaplekton, 362, 366; oars, transport of, 362, 366; oikomodion, 362, 363; paving of roads (hodostrosis), 362, 366; prosodion, 362, 366; provisioning of fortress, 366; psomozemia, 846, 847, 851n. 58; purchase of livestock, compulsory, 362, 366; requisitions, additional (parolke), 517, 524; self-taxation, 567; strateia, 362, 365, 769; synone, 362, 363, 366, 367; taxation, 362, 366; tithe (apodekatosis) of crops, 1639, of male animals, xxxv, 1117, 1166, of vineyards, 712, of wheat harvest, 1656, of wine harvest, 770, 1656; tolls, highway, 795, 848; tribute (Ottoman), 212. See also Glossary for Greek terms taxiarches. See imperial officials (specific) taxiarches (monitor of choir and refectory). See monastic officials (specific) teaching: of medicine, 734, 757, 765; of reading, 1464, 1477; of typikon, 1519, 1559. See also education tears (of repentance), 1470, 1531

GENERAL INDEX

GENERAL INDEX

Telonion. See books, ascetic and patristic templon. See churches (parts of) ten-horned [ones] (dekakeratoi, Monophysites). See dissidents, religious tenants (ekleptores), 330, 352

GENERAL INDEX

territorial jurisdictions: archontia, 525; district, military (bandon), 524, 524; district, territorial (petiton), 769, 770, 777n. 87; episkepsis, 770, 771, 846, 847; katepanikion, 1279; plot (stichos), 188, 1192n. 47; theme, 174, 175, 187, 313, 361, 363, 364, 499, 523, 524, 525, 531, 555, 556, 772, 1050, 1051, 1279, 1287, 1291. See also Glossary for Greek terms tessarakoste (fast). See fasts (specific) tessarakoste, megale. See fasts (specific) and Lent, Great testaments (diathekai), lay: preservation of, 732, 773, 1288; sanctity of, 328, 338, 1098, 1485, 1492; secret, 209, 274, 608, 609, 773, 799, 841, 848, 1434, 1439, 1446-52

testaments (diathekai, diatyposeis), monastic: author free to revise, 1411, 1417; confirmation of, 1396, 1397, 1402; creation of, 151, 153; dating of, 145, 146; denial of originality in, 137; distinguished from typika, 6, 7, 10; folklore elements in, 314; in form of a typikon, 137, 296; overall philosophy of, 1178-79; pairing of with typika, 36, 44, 90, 122; preservation of, 89, 272, 274, 305, 315, 320, 848; professions of faith in, 70, 71, 75-76, 137, 139-40; prototypes of medieval, 36; recopying of, 126, 128n. 1, 129; regulation of constitutional matters in, 71, 127, 152-53, 625, 1177-78, 1390, 1436-37; regulation of external relations in, 1179, 1437; regulation of financial matters in, 71-72, 127, 626, 1178, 1390-91, 1437; regulation of monastic life in, 70-71, 127, 137-38, 151-52, 625, 1177, 1390, 1434-36; revision of, 625; signatures to, 57, 134, 146, 594, 598, 601; summary of contents of, 151, typology of, 44; 164; use of prior, 1340, 1349; use of to designate successor, 127, 133, 625, 1303, 1307, 1390, 1392, 1397, 1401, 1405, 1406, 1436, 1439; use of to set up a protectorate, 271; use of to transmit foundation, 51, 55, 137, 455, 472, 1389, 1390, 1394 testaments (specific): of Apa Abraham, 51-58; of Apa Jacob, 51-52; of Cardinal Bessarion, 1320; of Eustathios Boilas, 517n. 17; of Germanos of Patmos, 567; of Ignatios of Machairas (lost), 1094, 1107, 1109, 1114, 1129, 1130; of Irene Komnene, 654, 669; of Isaac Komnenos, 608, 799, 841; of John II Komnenos (lost), 609, 732, 756, 773, 777n. 67; of John Xenos, 143, 144, 145 and n. 13; of Lazarus of Galesios, 148, 151, 152; of Manuel II Palaiologos (lost), 1626; of Neilos Damilas, 1462, 1467, 1478; of Neilos Kerameus (lost), 1626, 1635; of Neophytos the Recluse, 1340 (see also monastic foundation documents, (45) Neophytos [1]-[22]); of Neophytos the Recluse (earlier, lost), 1338, 1340, 1343, 1344, 1349, 1352, 1353; of Nikephoros Blemmydes, 1197; of Nikephoros Choumnos, 1383; of Paul Evergetinos (lost), 455, 472; of Paul of Latros, 137; of Peter, 51; of Sabbas of Patmos, 567; of Theodore the Studite (first), 68, 70; of Theodosios the Koinobiarch, 88, 1314n. 2; of Theoktistos of Patmos, 566. See also monastic foundation documents, (1) Apa Abraham, (3) Theodore Studites, (5) Euthymios, (7) Latros, (8) John Xenos, (9) Galesios, (14) Ath. Testament, (41) Docheiariou, (44) Karyes, (48) Prodromos, (49) Geromeri, (50) Gerasimos, and (52) Choumnos testaments (types of): autograph, 273n. 7, 1389, 1408; Coptic, 10, 36; secret, 272, 274, 732, 773, 1412, 1428; superiors,' 282, 288, 290

tetarteron. See coinage

tetartion. See measures (surface and weight)

Tetrabasileion. See books, Old Testament

GENERAL INDEX

Tetraditai. See dissidents, religious Tetraevangelon (book of four Gospels). See books, liturgical tetrakarikoxylon. See monasteries (parts of) textiles (pania): of the highest quality (katablattia), 1672, 1676n. 22; kastrision, 359; linen, 359; Maurianites, 553, 554; narthekoton, 1673, 1677n. 47; reversible? (diphoton), 369, 371n. 48; samite (hexamiton), 554; Saracen, 369; silk cloths (blattia), 369, 371nn. 35, 36, and 44, 968, 1086, 1186, 1190, 1672, 1673, 1677; skaramangion, 359; wool fleece (pokarion), xxxv, 826, 850n. 31, 1166. See also cloths, liturgical (types of); imperial garments; and Glossary textiles, colors of: gold, 1186; green, 359; pistachio (pistakeon), 360; purple, 369; purple in two shades (oxyn diblattia), 360, 371n. 35; scarlet, 1186, 1673; tricolored (blattia triblattia), 553; violet-purple (oxykastoron), 553, 559n. 50, 1573, 1677n. 46; white, 360, 554, 1186, 1673; white in three shades (leukotriblatton), 369; yellow in three shades (kitrinotriblatton), 369, 1673

theft (of monastic property): condemned, 330, 345, 449-50, 462, 463, 466, 490, 498, 570, 573, 589, 594, 878, 923, 944, 1018, 1075, 1148, 1498, 1502, 1514, 1520, 1527, 1550; of monastic income, 302; penalty for, 658, 677; prevention of, 44, 216, 228, 1110, 1115, 1140, 1152, 1261, 1273, 1520, 1544; use of inventories to deter, see inventories themes. See territorial jurisdictions theotokion. See coinage and hymns (specific)

Theotokos. See Index of People and Places: Mother of God theriake (theriac). See supplies, medical third hour (trite). See hours, liturgical (specific) thladii. See eunuchs thorakisterion (apron). See clothing (articles of) three hundred and eighteen fathers of Nicaea. See curses (specific) thryallis. See lighting devices (specific) thurifer (thymiatos). See monastic officials (specific) thyrai (wings). See icons (types of) thyroros (doorkeeper). See monastic officials (specific) thysiasterion (altar). See churches (parts of) titles and dignities: abba(s)/apa, 51, 52, 53, 55, 57, 278, 407, 435; anthypatos, 333, 361, 362;

GENERAL INDEX

asekretissa, 336; augusta, 664; autokrator (of the Romans), 361, 363, 1622; basileus, 701, 731, 742, 743, 755, 773; basilissa, 1397, 1401, 1403n. 17; builder, new (neos dometer), 981, 991, 998, 1013, 1021, 1030, 1034; caesar, 701, 742, 743; caesarissa, 701, 707, 742, 743; despoina, 701, 927, 1274, 1278, 1557, 1562; despot, 727, 1237, 1251, 1301, 1383, 1397, 1401, 1416, 1422; dishypatos, 365; doulos, 1030, 1034, 1088, 1269, 1274, 1278, 1407; hypertimos, 1407, 1415, 1424; kaballarios, 1402; kouropalates, 742, 1032, 1035; magistros, 278, 363, 364, 365, 366, 367, 523, 525; megas konostaulos, 1556, 1561, 1563; megas primikerios, 1436, 1444; panhypersebastos, 701, 742; pansebaste sebaste (f.), 702; pansebastohypertatos, 701; pansebastos sebastos (m.), 499, 702, 743, 1280; panyoikeiotatos, 1036; papa ("father"), 1675; patrikios, 271, 275, 333, 341, 354; Prince of Princes (title of Pakourianos' father), 507, 519, 523; protoproedros, 702; protospatharios (m.), 146, 311, 320; protospatharissa (f.), 335, 336, 364; protostratorissa, 1563; protovestiararia (f.), 742, 1563; protovestiararios (m.), 702, 837; sebaste (f.), 927; sebastokrator (m.), 526, 701, 774, 778n. 102, 798, 927, 1556; sebastokratorissa (f.), 701; sebastos (m.), 499, 519, 523, 557, 643, 742, 743, 770, 927, 1188, 1190; spatharokandidatos, 367; vestarches, 600; vestes, 336; vestiaritissa, 1190; vitizes, 1415, 1420, 1429n. 7; voivode, 1414-17, 1419-26, 1429n. 3, 1456; zupan, 1415, 1420. See also Glossary for Greek terms

tombs. See burial sites tonsure: age for, 1257, 1263, 1270, 1583, 1593; agreement to bestow, 1411, 1416, 1422; before marriage, xx, 1338, 1349; bestower of, 377; confession at, 459, 478; on deathbed, 649, 1198, 1203, 1513; donations at, 626, 631; emphasis on, xxii; gifts not required for, 302, 495; immediate (ad succurrendum), xxi; of charistikarios, 572, 595; of novices brought up in convent, 1257, 1271, 1520, 1568; requirements for, 236, 258, 263, 347, 494, 1096, 1629, 1646; as second baptism, xv, 1452, 1658; sponsors at, 1470-71; symbolism of, 178. See also xenokouritai tools: care for, 28, 1110, 1115, 1148; considered common property, 24 tools (specific), agricultural: oil-press (tzymilareion), 1652; plowshares (hynia), 1186; pruning hooks (kladeuteria), 1186; spades (lisgaria), 1014, 1186; troughs (gournai), 1189; tzieron, 1186 (see also Glossary); wine-press, 1562

toparches (governor). See imperial officials (specific) topon epechon (titular bishop). See ecclesiastical officials (specific) topoteretes. See imperial officials (specific) tourmarches. See imperial officials (specific) towers (monastic). See forts and fortifications trachy, aspron. See coinage trachy, histamenon (standard). See coinage trades. See professions and trades

Tragos (billy goat) affair, 208, 232-34, 248. See also monastic foundation documents, (12) Tzimiskes

GENERAL INDEX

transportation systems: boats: fishing (sandalia), 827, 970, koutroubin, 595, platidion, 595; of Areia, 970; of Kosmosoteira, 827; of Mount Athos, 285, 286, 287; of Patmos, 565, 566, 567, 595, 599, 600; bridges, xxxv, 296, 303, 323, 324, 362, 363, 549, 793, 827, 828; highways, imperial, 795, 848, 1187, 1189; pier (skala), 1280; road, public, 710, 711, 1563; shipping, regular (hemera ploia), 582, 602n. 18; ships, as endowment, see endowments (specific), capacity of, 829, owned by monastery, 567; wagons, 1190, wharves, 771. See also Glossary for Greek terms

trapeza. See refectories trapezarios, m.; trapezaria, f. (refectorian). See monastic officials (specific) traumatikos iatros (surgeon). See hospitals and infirmaries, staff of (specific) travel (monks' and nuns'): regulation of, 29n. 29, 35, 38, 980; restricted, 46, 78, 259, 484, 644, 1343, 1363, 1436, 1444, 1629, 1647; superior's permission required for, 29, 521, 538, 585, 1157, 1260, 1268, 1313, 1316, 1345, 1436, 1444, 1515, 1518, 1526, 1546, 1619 treasury (building). See monasteries (parts of) treasury (imperial). See imperial offices tremousa (jelly). See supplies, medical triblattion. See textiles, colors of tribounoi. See imperial officials (specific) trikandelon (triple lamp). See lighting devices (specific) trikephalon. See coinage triklinos. See buildings, secular (parts of) trimesion. See coinage

Triodion (book). See books, liturgical triodyon (hymn). See hymns (specific) tripaton (three-storied). See buildings, secular (particular kinds) trisagion (hymn). See hymns (specific) trisagion (prayer). See prayers (specific) troparion. See hymns (specific) tropike. See convents (parts of) and Glossary

GENERAL INDEX

trough, kneading (skaphidion). See utensils, household troughs (gournai). See tools (specific) troullion (cooking pot). See utensils, household troullos (dome). See churches (parts of) and refectory (parts of) trustees (epitropoi): of convent, 1113, 1166; of monastery, 1108, 1113, 1163-64. See also protectors and the protectorate tutors. See professions and trades typika (verses from the psalter). See psalter (parts of) typika:

accidents of preservation of, 45 additions to, 467, 655, 709-10

alteration of, 1340, 1361

appendices to, 456, 464, 465, 467, 468, 499-500, 1287, 1513

authentication of, 860, 974, 975, 1034-35 authoritative status of, 240, 283n. 1, 443, 496, 656, 1103, 1465, 1476, 1517, 1527 autobiographical detail in, xiv, 151, 164, 174-75, 250-54, 327, 333-34, 377, 442, 543, 579-83, 665, 1215-17, 1231-32, 1242-46, 1338, 1349-51, 1414, 1419, 1420, 1426, 1449, 1525-26, 1592-94, 1633-40

blank pages in, 329, 354 boundary descriptions in, 710-11, 1513, 1517, 1563

cancellation of, 120

chapter division in, 466, 785, 1256

chapter headings in, 465, 467

chapter numeration in, 465-66, 873, 977, 987, 1044

chronological distribution of, 19

citation of canon law in, see canon law commentaries on, 17-18

compositional breaks in, 214, 467, 786, 1581

copies of chapters in, 657, 677

cross-references in, 467, 1357 cross-references to, 213, 245, 272, 274, 281, 284-85, 1287, 1292, 1340, 1352, 1353, 1362, 1366

dictation of, 135 different versions of, 91, 93, 214 disregard of, 281, 284

dissemination of through synopsis, 861

drawing up/issuance of, 163-64, 204, 206, 208, 211

editions of, 14-16, 1108

editorship of, 785, 986-97, 1256

encapsulated in hagiographic texts, 44, 45, 90, 144, 151, 296, 1296, 1457 encapsulated in other works, 378 foundation histories in, 129, 164, 169, 206, 245, 250-52, 296, 314, 317-18, 252-54, 442,

GENERAL INDEX

typika (cont.)

- 467, 468, 472-73, 522-24, 568, 583-95, 873, 884-87, 975, 991-94, 1032-33, 1051-52, 1127-30, 1217, 1239, 1247-48, 1333-34, 1351-52, 1378-79, 1391-92, 1581, 1591-94, 1635-39
- geographic distribution of, 18-19
- ghostwriter of, 1254, 1256, 1287, 1288
- historical development of, 45, 91, 169
- how to use, 1697
- imperial confirmation of, see emperors and the imperial government, rights of
- inalterability of, 77, 130, 240, 258, 328, 349, 496, 551-52, 655, 669, 969, 984, 1004, 1005, 1022, 1031, 1034, 1061, 1078, 1164, 1335, 1361, 1387, 1606, 1608, 1622
- incorporation of by reference, 1094, 1485
- incremental change in, 210, 465-66, 786, 861, 1044
- interpolations in, 467, 1314n. 1, 1581, 1582
- introductions to, 466, 468, 472, 981, 991-94, 1042, 1047, 1050-52
- judicial confirmation of, xii, 90, 860, 974, 975, 1031-32
- lengthiest, 607, 859
- and oral tradition, 151, 640, 646, 1109
- overall philosophy of, 464-65, 516, 733-34, 793-94, 878-79, 985-96, 1048-49, 1117, 1213, 1262-63, 1290, 1345-46, 1520-21, 1587-88, 1631
- paragraph numberings in, 93
- patriarchal rights regarding, see patriarchal rights (specific)
- patristic precedent preferred to, 283, 383
- preservation/safekeeping of, xiii, 14, 164, 169, 305, 329, 353, 466, 496, 510, 514, 522, 550, 551-52, 639, 656, 705, 732, 792, 842, 860, 974, 984, 1036-37, 1047, 1076, 1109, 1113, 1164, 1261, 1267, 1288, 1292, 1465, 1473
- previous translations of, 16-17
- principles for inclusion of in collection, 9-10, 1526-27
- quotation of prior, xi, 213-14, 246, 248, 455, 468, 784, 873, 1255, 1321, 1340, 1485, 1614, 1616, 1621, 1626
- quotation and summarization of chrysobulls in, 245, 253-54, 255, 256-57, 260, 261-62
- ratification of, 1103
- reading of, see reading (subjects for)
- reasons for drawing up, 153, 163, 1114, 1126-27, 1513, 1556-57, 1587, 1594-95
- re-edition of, 465, 466, 467, 468, 873, 879n. 1
- reference to prior, 378, 392, 399, 400, 456, 784, 1312
- regulation of administrative and constitutional matters in, 93, 170-71, 216, 315, 328-29, 382, 460-61, 513-15, 571-74, 641, 654-56, 730-32, 789-92, 876-77, 957-58, 981-84, 1046-47, 1113-15, 1210-12, 1239-40, 1256, 1259-61, 1288-89, 1343-44, 1465, 1507, 1516-19, 1584-86, 1629-30
- regulation of external relations in, 172, 315, 382, 465, 516-17, 575-76, 641, 659, 734-35, 794-95, 879, 958-59, 986, 1049, 1118, 1213-14, 1240, 1263, 1346, 1465-66, 1521, 1588-89, 1631-32
- regulation of financial matters in, 172, 315, 329-30, 382, 462-64, 515-16, 574-75, 641, 656-59, 732-33, 792-93, 877-78, 958, 984-85, 1047-48, 1115-17, 1212-13, 1240, 1261-62, 1289-90, 1344-45, 1465, 1507, 1519-20, 1587, 1630-31
- regulation of monastic life in, 91-93, 170, 214-16, 314-15, 327, 381-82, 458-60, 510-13, 569-71, 638, 640-41, 652-54, 728-30, 786-89, 874-76, 956-57, 978-81, 1045-46,

GENERAL INDEX

typika (cont.)

1111-13, 1208-10, 1239, 1256-59, 1288, 1341-43, 1384-85, 1463-64, 1506-07, 1513-16, 1583-84, 1627-29 reliance on external, 1208, 1225, 1227, 1298, 1342, 1363, 1457, 1495, 1506, 1507, 1711 repetitious treatments in, 245, 331, 466, 786, 788, 797n. 28, 1321 rescinded provision of, 331, 355 reuse of, 40, 72, 88, 89, 379, 455, 465, 468, 650, 987, 1093, 1384 revision of by founder, see patrons, rights of (specific) revision of by protector, see protectors, rights of (specific) right to issue, 609, 860, 869, 983, 994, 1043, 1046, 1049, 1052, 1084 setting aside of, 171, 186, 379, 411, 416 signatures to, 188, 233, 241, 354, 355, 651, 706, 1030, 1034, 1036, 1088, 1126, 1166 sources and prototypes of, xi, 30, 32, 34, 36, 37, 39, 40, 41, 44, 88, 209, 246, 296, 640, 646, 650, 784-85, 976-77, 1044, 1109-10, 1255 stages of composition, 34, 45, 245, 331, 332n. 9, 441, 465-68, 785-86, 1320 subsequent influence/utilization of, 45, 455-56, 468, 987 supplements to, 1484; tables of contents in, 441, 520-22, 1122-26, 1296, 1348, 1484, 1522-23, 1581, 1582, 1583
topical interrelationships of, 468, 1717-23 topographical information in, 93, 127, 129 transcription of, 639, 955 transitional statements in, 467, 488, 489, 493, 1582 translation of, 509, 638, 1331 typology of, 640
use of boilerplate in, 45, 151, 164, 304, 1582 use of in installation ceremonies, 463, 484, 790, 816, 877, 957, 967 use of precedents in, 379-81 utility of for Byzantine monastic history, 19-20, 650-51, 977-78, 1044, 1110
For specific documents, see also monastic foundation documents and typika (specific, lost) typika (specific, lost):

Anargyroi (prior, of the logothetes tou dromou), 1094, 1288, 1289, 1291, 1292 “ancient regulation” of Machairas, 1109, 1127 of Attaleiates, 327, 349
of Basil II, 281, 286 of Charsianeites (liturgical), 1660 of Euthymios’ Psamathia monastery, 44, 121, 122, 123 of George Akropolites for Anastasis monastery (CP), 1376, 1381 of the “Holy Mountain,” 1714, 1715 of Joachim of Zichna for Menoikeion (first version), 1484, 1579, 1582 of Latros, 136, 138n. 6 of Lazarus of Galesios, 45 “Lost” [Evergetian], 652, 663, 785 of Luke of Messina (1133), 638, 640, 641, 644, 646 of Meletios the Younger, 862, 864, 955, 956, 962 of Michael Maleinos for Kyminas, 206 “of the monasteries of the East and the West,” 515, 551, 559n. 38 of Neilos Damilas’ male monastery, 1463

GENERAL INDEX

typika (cont.)

of Neilos of Tamasia's (unnamed) convent, 1113, 1166 of Neophytos the Recluse (first), see testaments (specific) of Neophytos the Recluse (liturgical), 1340, 1341, 1354, 1363, 1710, 1711 of Nossiai, 730, 752
of the Panagios monastery, 210, 441, 442, 445, 446, 450, 509, 510, 511, 512, 516, 520, 534, 539, 557n. 2, 609 of Patriarch Alexios Studites, 16n. 49 of Petritzonitissa monastery (liturgical), 510-11 of the Philanthropos monastery, 649, 652, 784, 861, 976, 977, 1384
rule (kanon) of Gregory of Fragala, 625, 628, 631
"rules of the Mountain" (Mount Athos), 1304, 1308 of St. Symeon the Wonderworker, 380, 409-10
"vulgate" version of (22) Evergetis, 785

typika (specific, preserved): Evergetis (liturgical), see Synaxaria (specific); Jerusalem/Palestine, see Rule of Jerusalem; Lincoln College Typikon, 1512 (see also monastic foundation documents, (58) Bebaia Elpis); of Patir or Bartholomew of Semeri, 638. For all others, see monastic foundation documents and monastic rules (non-Byzantine) typika (types of): Arabic translation of, 378, 425; Armenian, 510; authoritative, 510, 1587, 1594; bilingual, 508; with chrysobulls attached, 329, 361-67; copies for safekeeping, 510, 656, 705, 984, 1036; Evergetian family of, 15; excerpts of, 1384; founders' (typika ktetorika), 6, 7, 9, 10, 44, 91, 296-97, 1093, 1239, 1498, 1513; fragmentary, 650; Georgian, 508, 510, 517n. 1; Greek, 510; hybrid, 296, 442; imperial, 607-17, 859; in situ, 18-19; intermediary, 652; interpolated, 210; lengthiest, 607, 859; liturgical (typika leitourgika), 2, 9, 10, 44, 45, 91, 151, 215, 296, 378, 608, 1094, 1183, 1299, 1460, 1546, 1547, 1660 (see also synaxaria [specific]); model, 207, 210, 213-14, 215, 216, 379, 456, 510, 640, 649, 651-52, 784-85, 788, 793, 873, 955, 976-77, 1043, 1044, 1045, 1046, 1047, 1048, 1049, 1255, 1256, 1385, 1513, 1581-82, 1583, 1613-14, 1627; monastic, 2, 3, 9; neo-Evergetian, 1208, 1256, 1384, 1457, 1627; normative, 20, 46, 151, 197, 1484-85; non-normative, 151, 425, 569, 1484; older/prior, 380, 1614; original texts and isotypes of, 13-14, 19, 189, 232, 234n. 2, 283n. 1, 329, 456, 508, 649, 727, 732, 735n. 1, 880n. 2, 1042, 1043, 1107, 1263n. 2, 1303, 1305n. 2, 1338, 1512, 1613; post-Byzantine texts and collections of, 1300, 1484; prefaces to liturgical, 455, 640; re-edited, 210, 441, 1484; reform, 307, 785; second, 1512, 1521n. 1, 1579, 1580, 1582; Serbian, 1331; Slavic, 457; Slavonic translations of, 10, 14, 16n. 49, 17, 61, 88, 378, 425, 457; supplementary, 1238, 1512, 1626; unedited, 16n. 49; unoriginal, 1044; working copies of, 656, 705, 1287

Tyrophagos (Cheesefare week). See commemorations, liturgical (types of); dietary rules; weeks of the liturgical year; and Glossary tzangia (boots). See footwear (specific) tzapotos. See crosses (types of) and reliquaries (types of) tzieron. See tools (specific) tzinotheke (clasp). See book covers, decoration of

GENERAL INDEX

tzolion (shift, mat). See bedding (specific kinds) and clothing (articles of) tzounganion (game), 317. See also Glossary tzykalion (cooking pot). See utensils, household uncles. See family members (specific) unction (heptapappadon), 704

unification, institutional (henosis): carried out, 150, 1106, 1238, 1239, 1240, 1248, 1409, 1585, 1594; prohibited, 1098, 1210, 1217, 1239, 1249, 1259, 1265, 1289, 1291, 1516, 1528 union. See unification, institutional utensils, household: basins, 745, 1186; baskets (kaniskia), 743; bowls (skoutelia), 554, 831; brazier (aroula), 762; broom, 762, 777n. 82; buckets (kaddaria), 762, 1186; cauldron (lebes), 760, 762, (anemomiliarion), 1186; chamber pot (klokion), 762; comb, 762; cups (kaukia), 831; cups and plates (kaukopinakia), 761, 777n. 72; ewers (epichytaria), 745; jugs (xestai), 749; jugs, copper (chalkostamnai), 1186; kettles (kakkabia), 762, (koukoumia), 1186, (tzykalina), 1186, 1192n. 38; kneading trough (skaphidion), 764; pestle (mochlion) and mortar (holmos), 760; pitcher, green (mena), 555; pitchers (xestia), 554; pitchers, wine (kerastika), 1186; plates (orthomilia, pinakes), 745, 749, 831; pots (chytrai), 749; pots, cooking (troullia, tzykalia), 760, 762; pots, copper (chalkotzykia), 1186; pots, standing (kakabia), 1186; sieves (koskina), 763, 764, 1186; spoons (kochliaria), 745; trays (apallareai), 1186, 1192n. 32, (chotteai), 1567, 1571n. 81; tripod for cooking pot, (pyrhomaches, pyrhostia), 1186; vessel, earthenware (ostrakinon), 93, 113AB, metal (sidereon), 113AB; water containers (mastrapades), 1186. See also bathing articles varnish (on painting), 1362, 1370n. 14

vassals, 126, 457

vault, burial. See burial sites vegetable gardens. See gardens veils. See cloths, liturgical (specific) veins, opening of (bloodletting, phlebotomia), 1011, 1068, 1158

Velum, judges of. See imperial officials (specific) vessels. See sacred vessels and utensils, household vestarches. See titles and dignities

GENERAL INDEX

vestes. See titles and dignities vestiarion. See imperial offices vestiaritai (imperial bodyguards). See soldiers (types of) vestiarites. See imperial officials (specific) vestiaritissa. See titles and dignities vestments, ecclesiastical. See cloths, liturgical (specific) vices, monastic:

acquisitiveness, xxxii

akedia, xvi, 159, 261, 262, 474, 591, 806, 890-91, 895, 1133, 1162, 1450, 1461, 1537 anger, 475, 807, 897, 1016, 1073, 1602

apathy, 1542

appropriation/alienation of monastic property, 462, 463, 485, 498 associations, sworn, 1501 attachments, unreasonable, 485 bestiality, 866, 942-43, 1343

carelessness and indifference, 462, 485, 792 carnal sin, 1343, 1364

celibacy, lapses from, 155

chatter/conversation/talking, idle, 24n. 13, 63, 141, 474, 570, 594, 895, 923, 967, 1018, 1074, 1133, 1542, 1586, 1602

cheating, 1314, 1317

cohabitation (sexual), 46, 152, 155

concubinage, practice of, 152, 155

deceit, 475, 807, 897, 1016, 1073, 1602 demands for better/favorite foods, 1263, 1274, 1342, 1364, 1628, 1653

denigration, 475, 807, 897, 1016, 1073, 1602

departures, unauthorized, 216, 228, 930-36

dietary inequality, 1436, 1451, 1506, 1508, 1547 dishonesty, 462, 492, 1211, 1225 disobedience, xxxii, 585

disputing over places at table, 497, 705, 824, 944, 1018, 1025, 1045, 1075, 1109, 1117, 1143, 1164, 1258, 1263, 1274

disruptive associations and unions, 1314, 1317, 1496, 1501 doing favors for relatives, 462, 463, 485 drinking (bouts and parties), 1496, 1501, 1506, 1508

drunkenness, 1314, 1317

embracing or kissing (one another), 63, 1343, 1363 fathering of children, 152, 155

fighting, 1313, 1317

fraternization, private, 1628, 1643

fraternization with lay people, 1630, 1652 friendships, improper ("special"), 497, 705, 824, 875, 944, 1025, 1064, 1081, 1164, 1213, 1223, 1317, 1496, 1501

GENERAL INDEX

vices, monastic (cont.)

gathering, idle, 489, 923, 1602 gazing (at each other's face), 941, 942 gluttony, 1436, 1451, 1628, 1653 grief, 475, 807, 897, 1016, 1073, 1602 grudges, bearing of, 475, 807, 897, 1016, 1073, 1602 grumbling, 475, 807, 897, 1016, 1073, 1602 hoarding, 46, 79, 138, 141 homosexuality and homoerotic associations, 30, 35, 41, 46, 60, 62, 63, 65, 78, 152, 162, 512, 788, 822, 866, 879, 939-43, 1343, 1621, 1622 idiorhythmism, 609, 967, 1302, 1487, 1649 idiorhythmism, tendency towards, 1506, 1508 idleness, xxvi, 891, 1514, 1550 inequality (general), 1457, 1460 insubordination (to superior), 514, 537-39 laughter, 24n. 13, 474, 570, 594, 806, 895, 897, 1026, 1082, 1133, 1501, 1602 luxury and indulgence, 463, 498 masturbation, 41
money, love of, 498, 705, 824, 1025, 1081 pride, 24
private cooking, 527
promiscuity, 644
quarreling, 497, 705, 944, 956, 965, 1025, 1064, 1164, 1211, 1223, 1628, 1643 riding beasts of burden together, 63 schisms, 497, 705, 944, 1025, 1064, 1164 secret eating and drinking, 30, 34, 391, 404, 405, 479, 511, 527, 528, 570, 594, 640, 644, 653, 693, 729, 743, 745, 812, 821, 875, 878, 910, 923, 956, 965, 977, 980, 1009, 1066, 1258, 1274, 1340, 1342, 1356, 1364, 1506, 1508, 1515, 1548, 1628, 1653 sexual misconduct, xviii, 41, 46, 47, 170, 247, 259, 939-43 talking, idle/frivolous, 141, 474, 895, 923, 967, 980, 1018, 1045, 1074, 1075, 1133, 1515, 1542, 1583, 1602 theft/stealing, see theft (of monastic property) unnecessary travelling, 78, 138, 141, 259, 461, 483, 1363, 1392 unsuitable attachments, 282, 290 violence, 1314, 1317
willfulness, xxxii

vigils (agrypniai): behavior during, 160; exemption from genuflections during, 474, 687, 896, 1083; exemption from participation in, 978, 1009; hymnody of, 1376, 1380; importance of keeping, 261; occasions for, 478, 689, 908, 964; participation of solitaries in, xxxiii, 570; in Sabaitic typon, 587, 1225, 1513, 1546 vigils (specific) (paramonai): on burial of superior, 529; of Christmas, 197AB, 222, 394, 907, 1325, 1326, 1601, 1715; in commemoration of departed monks, 548; of Dominical feasts, 478, 689, 810, 908, 995-96, 1053, 1146; of Easter, 481, 705, 1064, 1706, 1712; of Epiphany, 394, 907, 1325, 1326, 1715; of feast of Dormition, 803, 1086; of feast of Exaltation of Holy Cross, 689; of feast of St. Mamas, 995-96; of feast of Sts. Peter and Paul, 689; for founder/patron, 729, 754, 803-4, 1313, 1316; on Friday, 729, 754, 755, 756; of Great Canon, 689; of great/important feasts,

GENERAL INDEX

746, 908, 964, 1146; of Holy Week, 689; Lenten, 569, 587; of Marian feasts, 689, 964, 1053, 1086; on Saturday, 390, 537, 591, 803-4, 1053, 1316, 1332, 1335, 1546, 1547, 1555; on Sunday, 390, 478, 569, 587, 689, 908, 964, 970, 1209, 1225 villages (choria). See rural settlements vine-dressers. See laborers, monastic (specific) vinegar (oxos). See seasonings and supplies, medical vineyards: abandoned, 1401, 1639, 1663n. 24; ancient, 1397, 1401; dispute over, 792, 843; establishment of, 144, 247, 264; monks working in, xxiv, 227, 1181, 1401, 1463, 1476; planting of, 253, 645, 826, 1392, 1394, 1435, 1443; procession around, 101A; purchase of, 233, 253; restoration of, 1397, 1401; tax on, 712; yield of, 319. See also endowments (specific) violence. See vices, monastic virginity. See virtues, monastic virtues, monastic, 638, 733, 748, 1500, 1501

almsgiving, 879, 910-11

claustration, 40, 138, 140, 748, 1007, 1064, 1203, 1269-70 (see also sexual segregation)

contemplation, 1450 economy (oikonomia), 1411, 1416

good order, 640, 644

humility, 640, 644, 705, 893-94, 1203, 1274, 1440, 1470 loyalty (to superior), 497, 705, 943, 1024, 1081 obedience, see obedience and submission poverty, see monastic poverty respect/deference, 328, 339, 349, 978, 1011 righteousness, 733, 748

self-reliance (self-sufficiency), 35, 41, 47, 48, 86, 127, 151, 194, 427, 434 silence, practice of, xvi, 24, 537, 682, 684, 821 solitude (hesychia), xxxii, 1614, 1618 (see also hesychasts and hesychastic monasticism) stability, xviii, 22 and n. 8, 23, 29, 31, 874, 930-36, 1497

virginity, 1469, 1470

visions (miraculous). See supernatural phenomena visitation privileges, 25, 29 and n. 29, 35, 38, 39, 158, 670-71, 679, 730, 750, 1113, 1258, 1270, 1313, 1316, 1471, 1496, 1502, 1545-46

visitors (to convents and monasteries). See guests and visitors viticulture, monks practicing, 208, 1096, 1177, 1189. See also vineyards and wine vitizes (title of Wallachian dignitary). See titles and dignities voices (miraculous). See supernatural phenomena

GENERAL INDEX

voivode. See titles and dignities vows, monastic. See monks: vows of and postulants: vows of wagons. See transportation systems walls. See buildings, secular (parts of); churches (parts of); forts and fortifications; and monasteries (parts of)

ward (thremma), 791, 844 wardrobe (vestiarion). See monasteries (parts of) warehouse (phoundax). See buildings, secular (particular kinds) wars, divine assistance in, 1240, 1250, 1586, 1594, 1601 wars (specific): civil war between Andronikos II and Andronikos III, 1579, 1582; civil war between John V Palaiologos and John VI Kantakouzenos, 1580; First Crusade, 378, 565; Fourth Crusade, 566, 1304 (see also Index of People and Places: Constantinople: Latin conquest of); Sicilian Vespers, 1240n. 1, 1245-46 washing of the feet (nipter). See icons (specific); ritual observances; and Glossary wasps. See insects watches (of the night): second, 98AB; third, 98AB, 1145, 1706; fourth, 916, 1145, 1706 water clocks. See furniture: clocks water mills. See mills water supply systems: aqueducts, xxvii, 699, 782, 783, 833; cisterns, 70, 137, 699, 728, 782, 793, 833, 847, 1383, 1384; conduit, 699, 771, 1187; irrigation, 47; springs, xxvii; wells, 1189, 1392 waters: blessing of, 114B, 115A, 380, 416, 420n. 129; healing, 1189; running, 699, 707, 833, 993, 1020 wax: expenditure on, 714; as honoraria, 1213, 1218; manufacture of, 681; receipts of, 590, 680, 761, 766; safekeeping of, 1003, 1060; sale of, 681; yearly allowance for, 350 weeks of the liturgical year: of Apostle Thomas, 1145; of Cheesefare, 226, 401, 402, 416, 599, 747, 905, 907, 1008, 1065, 1146, 1198, 1323, 1327, 1598, 1701, 1715-16; Easter, 93, 109AB, 226, 394, 474, 806, 1027, 1070, 1083, 1133, 1598, 1659, 1701, 1712 (see also below, Renovation); of Holy Spirit, 1145; Holy Week, 93, 106B, 111A, 403-4, 481, 692, 747, 814, 914, 916, 1007, 1064, 1145, 1326, 1598, 1705-6, 1708; first of Lent, 111A, 226, 227, 401, 481, 691, 692, 747, 813, 914, 916, 1006, 1063, 1143-44, 1326, 1598, 1702-3, 1708, 1709; second of Lent, 110AB, 224, 1703;

GENERAL INDEX

third of Lent, 110AB, 224, 1703; fourth (Great or middle) of Lent, 111A, 226, 227, 402, 480-81, 691, 747, 813, 1006, 1063, 1703; fifth of Lent, 110AB, 224, 813, 914, 1006, 1063, 1144, 1703, 1708; sixth of Lent, 110AB, 224, 1703; before Meatfare, 401, 415, 1008, 1146, 1598, 1715-16; of Meatfare, 1198, 1598, 1701; after Pentecost, 1598, 1701; Renovation, 101AB-102AB, 227, 394, 1145, 1712; of Tax Collector and Pharisee, 1659 wharves. See transportation systems wheat: charitable distribution of, 342, 1281; compulsory purchase of, 362, 366; for eucharistic offering, 350, 353; tax on harvest of, 1656; yearly allowance of for bread, 350. See also grain whips. See punishment, instruments of widows. See nuns (types of) and women (types of) wilderness, as site of monasteries, 127, 129, 798, 799, 884, 1200, 1592 willfulness. See vices, monastic wine: blessing of (extra treat), 1006, 1063, 1086, 1087, 1088, 1132, 1163; compulsory purchase of, 362, 366; consumption of permitted, 41, 46, 61, 92, 109AB, 110AB, 111AB, 112AB, 140, 226, 465, 480, 481, 482, 499, 532, 533, 534, 535, 544, 585, 691, 692, 693, 699, 747, 813, 901, 914, 915, 917, 980, 1006, 1007, 1008, 1063, 1064, 1065, 1132, 1144, 1146, 1163, 1204, 1229, 1230, 1321, 1325-28, 1334, 1598, 1601, 1696-1716; consumption of prohibited, 35, 38, 39, 111AB, 400, 401, 480, 481, 499, 585, 1704, 1709-12, 1714, 1716; consumption of restricted, 121, 395, 396, 1324, 1326, 1334; gifts of to protectors, 301, 315, 319; and manual laborers, 63, 227; for medicinal purposes, 396, 830, 1698; purchase of, 788, 826; quality of, 121; sale of, 238, 285, 286; for the sick, 745, 760, 763; substitute for, 214; for superior, 752; supplies of, 1261, 1272, 1281; surplus of, 1460; tax on harvest of, 1656; varieties of, 511, 531; yearly allowances of, 350. See also viticulture wine (specific kinds): better, 1436, 1451; Eucharistic (nama), 253, 350, 531, 756, 761, 766; fermented, 832, 1508; mulled (eukras), 761 wine-press. See tools (specific) wings (of icons). See icons (types of) witnesses: to alienations, 658, 673; in court, 1657; to financial accountings, 985, 1003; to meetings between the sexes, 28; to monastic testaments, 53, 57, 145, 146, 1404; to opening of testament, 732, 773 wives. See family members (specific) women:

allowed restricted access, 496, 511, 546, 730, 749, 794, 836, 937, 986, 1013, 1070, 1086, 1113

aversion to, 41, 410, 447

banning of, 39, 46, 78, 82n. [16], 137, 141, 303, 382, 410, 447, 511, 521, 546, 585, 878, 936, 978, 1013, 1048, 1070, 1113, 1155, 1156, 1213, 1228, 1314, 1316, 1359, 1460, 1501,

GENERAL INDEX

women (cont.)

1588, 1601, 1631, 1652
characterization of, 1259, 1266, 1517, 1518, 1529, 1531 dowries of, xxxv, 870, 1102, 1214, 1227 and emulation of male temperament, 1531 excluded from charitable distributions, xviii, 447, 496, 824, 866, 878, 936, 1110, 1118, 1156, 1340, 1346, 1359, 1366, 1460 excluded from burial in monastery, 1213, 1229, 1631, 1652 excluded from worship, 1213, 1228 frail nature of, 1528
as guests, xix, 35
included in commemorations, 1229 included in festal distributions, 496, 824, 937 male protection of, 1528
and misogyny, xix, 35n. 53, 38, 41, 53, 383, 410, 465, 1458 rationale for exclusion of, xix, 496 relations with, xviii, 71, 78, 82n. [9], 247, 640, 644, 1314, 1316 role of in monasticism, 29 and silence, 1266
threat to moral probity posed by, 46, 879 women (types of): ascetic, 40; childless, 1470; with children, 1470; imperial and noble, 496, 1013, 1213, 1228, 1601; married, 447, 585, 1470; postulants, 1470; protectors, 338, 351, 355; transvestite, 1615, 1621; widows, 1629, 1657

wood. See building materials (specific) and fuels wood (specific kinds): Carian (karikoxylon), 702; of the Holy Cross, 714 wool fleece (pokarion). See textiles workshops (ergodosia): in convent, 711; for manufacturing oil, 1434; as part of endowment, see endowments (specific); in monastery, 1153; owned by convent, 713, 714, 1279; owned by monastery, 1178, 1182, 1188; rental income of, 713, 714; used by treasurer, 1153; with watermills, 1182, 1188

“worthy.” See acclamations wounds. See illnesses and injuries (specific) writing materials: ostraca, 51, 52; paper, 622, 656, 705, 1261, 1272; papyrus, 13, 45, 52, 555; parchment, 208, 232, 234n. 2, 705

xenodocheion. See hospices xenodochos (guest master). See monastic officials (specific)

GENERAL INDEX

xenokouritai (alt.: xenokouroi; monks tonsured in other monasteries): acceptability of, 22n. 8, 256, 258, 459, 495, 653, 685, 728, 734, 748, 867, 868, 979, 1010, 1067, 1096, 1111, 1141, 1181, 1435, 1445, 1600, 1614, 1616, 1620; appeal to, 983, 1022-23, 1047, 1079; banned, xviii, 327, 875, 929, 967; can become superior, 246, 256-58, 655, 675, 982, 997, 1046, 1054, 1161, 1177, 1184, 1211, 1219-20, 1305, 1308, 1616, 1629, 1645-46; cannot become superior, 196, 246, 323, 324, 790, 816, 957, 967, 1114, 1161; cannot change typikon, 1211, 1220; careers of, 1177, 1181, 1182; examination of, 257, 444, 495; example of, 974; must assent to typikon, 1257, 1271; procedures for acceptance of, 1115, 1141, 1620; as threats to institutional independence, 867, 957, 967. See also nuns (types of): tonsured in other convents (exokouritides)

xenon (hospital). See hospitals and infirmaries xerophagia (dry food). See foods (types of) and punishments (specific kinds) youths: accepted, 1627, 1634; banned, 46, 186, 570, 794, 822, 874, 939, 1314, 1316, 1583, 1588, 1601, 1631, 1652; “beardless,” xviii, 35 and n. 54, 137-38, 141, 238, 282, 285, 583, 874, 939, 1313, 1316, 1615, 1621, 1622, 1652; danger posed by, 512; education of, 1198, 1203; hostility towards, 170, 186; longing for, 152, 162, 939-42; not to be educated, 1111, 1155; not to be tonsured, 233, 238; promoted to superiorship, 290, 1344, 1358; raised in monastery, 1344, 1358; studying to become monks, 170, 186, 939, 1155; working for monastery, 571, 599. See also boys and disciples: adolescent zeugaratoi. See peasants (types of) zeugarion. See measures (surface and weight) zeugelateion/zeugolateion (cattle byres). See endowments (specific) zupan. See titles and dignities